MEMORANDUM

TO: Rep. Charles B. Neely, Jr., Chairman,
House Judiciary II Committee

FROM: Tim Hovis, Committee Counsel

RE: Senate Bill 855-Court Information Remote Access (Ballance)

Senate Bill 855 originated as a recommendation of the North Carolina Courts Commission. The Commission, in its report to the 1997 General Assembly, found that public access to court information is cumbersome. For example, statewide criminal record checks are not available from a centralized source to the public and information which is centrally available is often not in user-friendly format.

To alleviate this problem, the bill gives discretion to the Director of the Administrative Office of the Courts to contract with third parties to provide remote electronic access to court records by the public. These contracts could not include records for which public access is prohibited.

Senate Bill 855 is effective when it becomes law.

A BILL TO BE ENTITLED

AN ACT TO AMEND THE SEXUAL OFFENDER REGISTRATION PROGRAM TO COMPLY WITH FEDERAL LAW.

The General Assembly of North Carolina enacts:

Section 1. Article 27A of Chapter 14 of the General Statutes reads as rewritten:

"ARTICLE 27A.

~~"Sexual Offender Registration Program.~~

Sex Offender and Public Protection Registration Programs.

"Part 1. Registration Programs, Purpose, and Definitions Generally.

"§ 14-208.5. Purpose.

The General Assembly recognizes that sex offenders often pose a high risk of engaging in sex offenses even after being released from incarceration or commitment and that protection of the public from sex offenders is of paramount governmental interest. The General Assembly also recognizes that persons who commit certain other types of offenses against minors, such as kidnapping, pose significant and unacceptable threats to the public safety and welfare of the State's children and that the protection of those children is of great governmental interest. Further, the General Assembly recognizes that ~~local~~ law enforcement officers' efforts to protect ~~their~~ communities, conduct investigations, and quickly apprehend offenders who commit sex offenses or certain offenses against minors are impaired by the lack of information available to law enforcement agencies about convicted ~~sex~~ offenders who live within the agency's jurisdiction. Release of information about ~~sex~~ these offenders will further the governmental interests of public safety so long as the information released is rationally related to the furtherance of those goals.

Therefore, it is the purpose of this Article to assist ~~local~~ law enforcement agencies' efforts to protect ~~their~~ communities by requiring ~~sex offenders~~ persons who are convicted of sex offenses or of certain other offenses committed against minors to register with ~~local~~ law enforcement ~~agencies and~~ agencies, to require the exchange of relevant information about ~~sex~~ those offenders among law enforcement ~~agencies~~ agencies, and to authorize the access to necessary and relevant information about ~~sex~~ those offenders to others as provided in this Article.

"§ 14-208.6A. Registration requirements for criminal offenders and for criminal offenders determined to be sexually violent predators.

It is the objective of the General Assembly to establish a 10-year registration requirement for persons convicted of certain offenses against minors or sexually violent offenses. It is the further objective of the General Assembly to establish a more stringent set of registration requirements for a subclass of highly dangerous sex offenders who are determined by a sentencing court with the assistance of a board of experts to be sexually violent predators.

To accomplish this objective there are established two registration programs: the Sex Offender and Public Protection Registration Program and the Sexually Violent Predator Registration Program. Any person convicted of an offense against a minor or of a sexually violent offense as defined by this Article shall register as an offender in accordance with Part 2 of this Article. Any person determined to be a sexually violent predator shall register as such in accordance with Part 3 of this Article.

The information obtained under these programs shall be immediately shared with the appropriate local, State, federal, and out-of-state law enforcement officials and penal institutions. In addition, the information designated under G.S. 14-208.10(a) as public record shall be readily available to and accessible by the public. However, the identity of the victim is not public record and shall not be released as a public record.

Registration shall be maintained for a period of 10 years following release from a penal institution. If no active term of imprisonment was imposed, registration shall be maintained for a period of 10 years following each conviction for a reportable offense.

(b) The Division shall provide each sheriff with forms for registering persons as required by this Article. The registration form shall require:

(1) The person's full name, each alias, date of birth, sex, race, height, weight, eye color, hair color, drivers license number, and home address;

"§ 14-208.9. Change of address.

If a person required to register changes address, the person shall provide written notice of the new address not later than the tenth day after the change to the sheriff of the county with whom the person had last registered. ~~Not later than the third day after~~ Upon receipt of the notice, the sheriff shall immediately forward this information to the Division. If the verification form is returned to the sheriff as undeliverable, the sheriff shall make reasonable attempts to verify that the person is residing at the registered address. If the person cannot be found at the registered address and has failed to report a change of address, the person is subject to the penalties provided in G.S. 14-208.11, unless the person reports in person to the sheriff and proves that the person has not changed his or her residential address.

Internet, allowing members of the public to locate and access the public record of sex offender registration information. The Division of Criminal Statistics shall be responsible for the on-line maintenance of current information regarding each registered sex offender.

Section 3. This act becomes effective April 1, 1998.

S 676. SEX OFFENDER LAWS/FED. COMPLIANCE. TO AMEND THE SEXUAL OFFENDER REGISTRATION PROGRAM TO COMPLY WITH FEDERAL LAW. Revises Art. 27A of GS Ch. 14 regarding registration of persons convicted of sexually violent crimes to extend law's application to persons who commit offenses of kidnapping of minor child, abduction of minor child, felonious restraint of minor child, or false imprisonment of minor child, to revise registration procedures and requirements, and to impose more stringent registration requirements on highly dangerous sex offenders who are determined by court and experts to be sexually violent predators.

Criminal registration program. Procedures and requirements specified in current law (GS 14-208.7 through 14-208.13) apply to criminal registration program, which applies to persons, other than sexually violent predators, convicted of sexually violent offenses and to persons convicted of specified offenses against minors, with the following changes: (1) requires sheriff to send registration information to Div'n of Criminal Statistics immediately upon registration or notice of change of offender's address (now, within three days of registration or notice); (2) adds provisions requiring verification of registration information in county registry; (3) rewrites GS 14-208.10 to provide that name, sex, address, physical description, picture, conviction date, offense for which registration was required, sentence imposed, and registration status of offenders in county registry is a public record and is available for public inspection; (4) authorizes sheriff to release additional information necessary to protect public from specific offender but prohibits release of identity of victim of offense; (5) amends GS 14-208.11 to make failure to register, failure to provide notice of change of address, or other violations of statute a class F felony (now, failure to register is a class 3 misdemeanor or class I felony); (6) requires law enforcement officers to immediately seek order for arrest of persons who violate requirements of statute; (7) repeals GS 14-208.12 (exemptions from registration); (8) adds new GS 14-208.12A to terminate registration requirement 10 years after date of initial registration if offender has not been convicted of subsequent offense requiring registration; (9) adds new GS 14-208.14 requiring Div'n of Criminal Statistics to compile central statewide sex offender registry; and (10) adds new GS 14-208.15 regarding public access to information in statewide sex offender registry.

Sexually violent predator registration program. Adds new GS 14-208.20 through 14-208.25 imposing more stringent registration requirements on sexually violent predators. Defines "sexually violent predator" as a person who has been convicted of sexually violent offense (as specified in act) and who suffers from a mental abnormality or personality disorder (as defined by act) that makes the person likely to engage in predatory sexually violent offenses. Defines "predatory" as an act directed at a stranger or at a person with whom a relationship has been established or promoted for primary purpose of victimization. Requires district attorney, in cases involving sexually violent offenses, to give notice of intent to seek classification of defendant as sexually violent predator. Before sentencing person as sexually violent predator, court must order presentence investigation including study of whether defendant is, in opinion of board of experts selected by Dep't of Correction (at least two of whom are experts in field of behavior and treatment of sexual offenders), a sexually violent predator, and make written findings as to whether defendant should be classified as sexually violent predator. Procedures and provisions for registration of sexually violent predators are the same as those specified for criminal registration program except as otherwise specified. Requires that additional information (identifying features, anticipated future residence, offense history, and documentation of treatment for mental abnormality or personality disorder) be obtained from sexually violent predators. Registration requirement for sexually violent predators continues beyond 10 years until court determines that person no longer suffers from mental abnormality or personality disorder that would make person likely to engage in predatory sexually violent offense.

Effective Dec. 1, 1997.

MEMORANDUM OF DIFFERENCES BETWEEN SB676 AND HB930 (3RD COM SUB

SB 676	HB 930	Comments
p. 3, lines 35-40 The definition of "Sexually violent predator contains the definition of what is a predatory act.	p. 3, lines 14-17 Has a separate definition for the term "predatory". The definition of "sexually violent predator" on p. 4, lines 27-31 does not contain the some of the Senate language.	The Senate felt that it was more grammatically correct to include this definition within the definition of "sexually violent predator".
p. 4, line 27 The senate bill does not contain the amendment adopted by this committee.	p. 5, lines 28-29 New underline language added by this committee further defining when a person who moves to this State must register.	The amendment to the House version could easily be inserted into the Senate version with no conflict with other provisions of the Senate Bill and no effect on whether or not the bill complies with Federal Law.
p. 6, lines 5-14 The Senate bill adds language requiring the Sheriff to make reasonable attempts to verify the residence of the registered offender when the address verification form is returned to the Sheriff as undeliverable	p. 7, lines 26-31 The House bill does not have similar language.	The language in the Senate version simply clarifies further the process of address verification and has no effect on whether or not the bill complies with Federal Law.

Also allows any citizen to obtain a copy of all or part of the county registry by submitting a written request to the Sheriff.	p. 7, lines 32-44 through p. 8, lines 1-19 The house version retains the existing law with the exception of providing that the Sheriff shall release any other relevant information necessary to protect the public concerning a specific person. The existing law allows certain groups, upon written request, to obtain a copy of the entire registry except the photograph which may be viewed only. individuals may obtain certain information regarding an offender's registration status by providing the Sheriff with the name and physical description of the offender and any other relevant information known to the requester.	Both the House and Senate version would comply with Federal Law. The Federal Law only requires that "The designated State law enforcement agency and any local law enforcement agency authorized by the State agency shall release relevant information that is necessary to protect the public concerning a specific person required to register under this section, except that the identity of a victim of an offense that requires registration under this section shall not be released". The Federal Law provides no direction to the States as to how this is to be done, and the various States have chosen different methods of complying.
p. 9, lines 1-13 The Senate bill provides for the release of copies of photographs of the offender as well as access to the directory via the internet.	p. 10, lines 35-44 through p. 11, lines 1-6 The House version does not allow the release of copies of photographs or provide for the placement of the directory on the internet	Either version would comply with Federal Law.

Either version would comply with Federal Law.
p. 10, lines 41-44 through p. 11, lines 1-4 This section provides for the development of a program for electronic access to the registry via the internet to be funded by funds currently available in the Department of Justice's budget.	The House version has no corresponding section.

HOUSE BILL 1229

Short Title: Darker Vehicle Window For Lupus. (Public)

Sponsors: Representatives Culpepper; and Culp.

Referred to: Judiciary II, if favorable, Finance.

A BILL TO BE ENTITLED

AN ACT TO ALLOW A PERSON WHO SUFFERS FROM LUPUS TO HAVE A DARKER VEHICLE WINDOW THAN IS ALLOWED UNDER THE WINDOW TINTING LAWS.

The General Assembly of North Carolina enacts:

Section 1. G.S. 20-127 reads as rewritten:

"§ 20-127. Windows and windshield wipers.

(a) Windshield Wipers. -- A vehicle that is operated on a highway and has a windshield must have a windshield wiper to clear rain or other substances from the windshield in front of the driver of the vehicle and the windshield wiper must be in good working order. If a vehicle has more than one windshield wiper to clear substances from the windshield, all the windshield wipers must be in good working order.

(b) Window Tinting Restrictions. -- A window of a vehicle that is operated on a highway or a public vehicular area must comply with this subsection. The windshield of the vehicle may be tinted only along the top of the windshield and the tinting may not extend more than five inches below the top of the windshield or below the AS1 line of the windshield, whichever measurement is longer. Any other window of the vehicle may be tinted in accordance with the following restrictions:

(1) The total light transmission of the tinted window must be at least thirty-five percent (35%). A vehicle window that, by use of a light meter approved by the Commissioner, measures a total light transmission of more than thirty-two percent (32%) is conclusively presumed to meet this restriction.

(2) The light reflectance of the tinted window must be twenty percent (20%) or less.

(3) Tinted film or another material used to tint the window must be nonreflective and must be a color other than red, yellow, or amber.

(c) Tinting Exceptions. -- The window tinting restrictions in subsection (b) of this section apply without exception to the windshield of a vehicle. The window tinting restrictions in subdivisions (b)(1) and (b)(2) of this section do not apply to any of the following vehicle windows:

(1) A window of an excursion passenger vehicle, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(27)a.

(2) A window of a for-hire passenger vehicle, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(27)b.

(3) A window of a common carrier of passengers, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(27)c.

(4) A window of a motor home, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(27)d2.

(5) A window of an ambulance, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(27)f.

(6) The rear window of a property-hauling vehicle, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(31).

(7) A window of a limousine.

(8) A window of a law enforcement vehicle.

(9) A window of a multipurpose vehicle that is behind the driver of the vehicle. A multipurpose vehicle is a passenger vehicle that is designed to carry 10 or fewer passengers and either is constructed on a truck chassis or has special features designed for occasional off-road operation. A minivan and a pickup truck are multipurpose vehicles.

(10) A window of a vehicle that is registered in another state and meets the requirements of the state in which it is registered.

(11) A window of a vehicle for which the Division has issued a medical exception permit under subsection (f) of this section.

(d) Violations. -- A person who does any of the following commits a misdemeanor of the class set in G.S. 20-176:

(1) Applies tinting to the window of a vehicle that is subject to a safety inspection in this State and the resulting tinted window does not meet the window tinting restrictions set in this section.

(2) Drives on a highway or a public vehicular area a vehicle that has a window that does not meet the window tinting restrictions set in this section.

(e) Defense. -- It is a defense to a charge of driving a vehicle with an unlawfully tinted window that the tinting was removed within 15 days after the charge and the window now meets the window tinting restrictions. To assert this defense, the person charged must produce in court, or submit to the prosecuting attorney before trial, a certificate from the Division of Motor Vehicles or the Highway Patrol showing that the window complies with the restrictions.

(f) Medical Exception. -- A person who suffers from systemic lupus erythematosus may obtain a medical exception permit. To obtain a permit, an applicant must complete an application form provided by the Division, pay the application fee, and give the Division a statement of the applicant's medical condition that is signed by a physician. The application fee is twenty dollars ($20.00). A permit issued under this subsection must be carried in each vehicle to which it applies when the vehicle is driven on a highway."

A BILL TO BE ENTITLED

AN ACT TO ALLOW A PERSON WHO SUFFERS FROM LUPUS OR OTHER MEDICAL CONDITIONS REQUIRING TINTING TO HAVE A DARKER VEHICLE WINDOW THAN IS ALLOWED UNDER THE WINDOW TINTING LAWS.

The General Assembly of North Carolina enacts:

Section 1. G.S. 20-127 reads as rewritten:

"§ 20-127. Windows and windshield wipers.

(a) Windshield Wipers. -- A vehicle that is operated on a highway and has a windshield must have a windshield wiper to clear rain or other substances from the windshield in front of the driver of the vehicle and the windshield wiper must be in good working order. If a vehicle has more than one windshield wiper to clear substances from the windshield, all the windshield wipers must be in good working order.

(b) Window Tinting Restrictions. -- A window of a vehicle that is operated on a highway or a public vehicular area must comply with this subsection. The windshield of the vehicle may be tinted only along the top of the windshield and the tinting may not extend more than five inches below the top of the windshield or below the AS1 line of the windshield, whichever measurement is longer. Any other window of the vehicle may be tinted in accordance with the following restrictions:

(1) The total light transmission of the tinted window must be at least thirty-five percent (35%). A vehicle window that, by use of a light meter approved by the Commissioner, measures a total light transmission of more than thirty-two percent (32%) is conclusively presumed to meet this restriction.

(2) The light reflectance of the tinted window must be twenty percent (20%) or less.

(3) Tinted film or another material used to tint the window must be nonreflective and must be a color other than red, yellow, or amber.

(c) Tinting Exceptions. -- The window tinting restrictions in subsection (b) of this section apply without exception to the windshield of a vehicle. The window tinting restrictions in subdivisions (b)(1) and (b)(2) of this section do not apply to any of the following vehicle windows:

(1) A window of an excursion passenger vehicle, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(27)a.

(2) A window of a for-hire passenger vehicle, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(27)b.

(3) A window of a common carrier of passengers, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(27)c.

(4) A window of a motor home, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(27)d2.

(5) A window of an ambulance, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(27)f.

(6) The rear window of a property-hauling vehicle, as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(31).

(7) A window of a limousine.

(8) A window of a law enforcement vehicle.

(9) A window of a multipurpose vehicle that is behind the driver of the vehicle. A multipurpose vehicle is a passenger vehicle that is designed to carry 10 or fewer passengers and either is constructed on a truck chassis or has special features designed for occasional off-road operation. A minivan and a pickup truck are multipurpose vehicles.

(10) A window of a vehicle that is registered in another state and meets the requirements of the state in which it is registered.

(11) A window of a vehicle for which the Division has issued a medical exception permit under subsection (f) of this section.

(d) Violations. -- A person who does any of the following commits a misdemeanor of the class set in G.S. 20-176:

(1) Applies tinting to the window of a vehicle that is subject to a safety inspection in this State and the resulting tinted window does not meet the window tinting restrictions set in this section.

(2) Drives on a highway or a public vehicular area a vehicle that has a window that does not meet the window tinting restrictions set in this section.

(e) Defense. -- It is a defense to a charge of driving a vehicle with an unlawfully tinted window that the tinting was removed within 15 days after the charge and the window now meets the window tinting restrictions. To assert this defense, the person charged must produce in court, or submit to the prosecuting attorney before trial, a certificate from the Division of Motor Vehicles or the Highway Patrol showing that the window complies with the restrictions.

(f) Medical Exception. -- A person who suffers from systemic lupus erythematosus or other medical conditions requiring tinting may obtain a medical exception permit. To obtain a permit, an applicant must complete an application form provided by the Division, pay the application fee, and give the Division a statement of the applicant's medical condition that is signed by a physician. The application fee is twenty dollars ($20.00). A permit issued under this subsection must be carried in each vehicle to which it applies when the vehicle is driven on a highway."

Section 2. This act is effective when it becomes law.

RE: Senate Bill 741 - Charlotte Photo Enforcement

Senate Bill 741 would allow the City of Charlotte to adopt a local ordinance to enforce traffic offenses such as speeding and running a red light through the use of a "traffic control photographic system". A traffic control photographic system is an electronic system consisting of a photographic, video or electronic camera and a vehicle sensor which works in conjunction with a traffic control device to automatically produce photographs, video or digital images of vehicles violating these types of statutes or ordinances.

The owner of a vehicle photographed would be responsible for the violation, unless they can furnish evidence that at the time of the offense, the vehicle was under the care, custody or control of another person. The violation is noncriminal and a civil penalty of $50 shall be assessed. The citation will be mailed to the owner, with no personal service required. If the owner fails to provide evidence or pay the civil penalty, they waive the right to contest the responsibility and will be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $100. The City must institute a nonjudicial administrative hearing to review objections to citations or penalties issued.

This act applies only to the City of Charlotte and is effective when it becomes law.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Representative Charles B. Neely, Jr., Chairman
House Judiciary II Committee

FROM: Susan L. Hayes and Brenda J. Carter, Staff Attorneys

RE: SENATE BILL 228 - CHILD ABUSE/NO REPORT MISDEMEANOR - 2nd Edition
Senator Winner

Senate Bill 228 is a recommendation of the Child Fatality Task Force.

Under current law, any person or institution who has cause to suspect that any juvenile is abused, not receiving proper care or supervision, or has died as the result of mistreatment, is required to report that fact to the DSS where the juvenile resides. Senate Bill 228 would make it a Class 3 misdemeanor for a person who has actual knowledge that a child has been physically abused to fail to report the abuse. It would also be a Class 3 misdemeanor for a person who has a custodial, caregiving or professional relationship with a juvenile to fail to report actual or suspected physical abuse or death due to maltreatment. Any person who knowingly and willfully prevents another person from making a required report would be guilty of a Class 3 misdemeanor.

A Class 3 misdemeanor, assuming no prior convictions, is punishable by a fine up to $200 and/or 1-10 days community punishment.

The bill would become effective when it becomes law.

(a) A traffic control photographic system is an electronic system consisting of a photographic, video, or electronic camera and a vehicle sensor installed to work in conjunction with an official traffic control device to automatically produce photographs, video, or digital images of each vehicle violating a standard traffic control statute or ordinance.

(b) Any traffic control photographic system or any device which is a part of that system, as described in subdivision (a) of this section, installed on a street or highway which is a part of the State highway system shall meet requirements established by the North Carolina Department of Transportation. Any traffic control system installed on a municipal street shall meet standards established by the municipality and shall be consistent with any standards set by the Department of Transportation.

(c) Municipalities may adopt ordinances for the civil enforcement of G.S. 20-158 by means of a traffic control photographic system, as described in subsection (a) of this section. Notwithstanding the provisions of G.S. 20-176, in the event that a municipality adopts an ordinance pursuant to this section, a violation of G.S. 20-158 at a location at which a traffic control photographic system is in operation shall not be an infraction. An ordinance authorized by this subsection shall provide that:

(1) The owner of a vehicle shall be responsible for a violation unless the owner can furnish evidence that the vehicle was, at the time of the violation, in the care, custody, or control of another person. The owner of the vehicle shall not be responsible for the violation if the owner of the vehicle, within 21 days after notification of the violation, furnishes the officials or agents of the municipality which issued the citation:

a. The name and address of the person or company who leased, rented, or otherwise had the care, custody, and control of the vehicle; or

(2) A violation detected by a traffic control photographic system shall be deemed a noncriminal violation for which a civil penalty of fifty dollars ($50.00) shall be assessed, and for which no points authorized by G.S. 20-16(c) shall be assigned to the owner or driver of the vehicle.

(3) The owner of the vehicle shall be issued a citation which shall clearly state the manner in which the violation may be challenged, and the owner shall comply with the directions on the citation. The citation shall be processed by officials or agents of the municipality and shall be forwarded by personal service or first-class mail to the address given on the motor vehicle registration. The municipality may establish procedures for the collection of these penalties and may enforce the penalties by civil action in the nature of debt.

RE: Senate Bill 667- Amend Stalking Law

Senate Bill 667 amends G.S. 14-277.3 to redefine the criminal offense of stalking as "willfully on more than one occasion following or being in the presence of another person without legal purpose and with the intent to cause emotional distress by placing that person in reasonable fear of death or bodily injury."

The bill removes the current requirements that the actions occur after reasonable warning to desist and that the actions constitute a pattern of conduct over a period of time evidencing a continuity of purpose.

The bill makes the offense a Class 1 misdemeanor (currently Class 2), or if a court order is in effect prohibiting similar behavior, a Class A1 misdemeanor (currently Class 1).

This act is effective December 1, 1997 and applies to offenses committed on or after that date.

RE: Senate Bill 992 (NC Boxing Commission)

Senate Bill 992 amends the laws governing the North Carolina Boxing Commission and the regulation of boxing in this State.

The bill gives the Boxing Commission the authority to regulate amateur matches and "toughman" events and provides that the Commission's jurisdiction over boxing and boxing-related activities applies to events where admission is charged of spectators or a purse of $25.00 or more is involved. The bill redefines a "professional" boxer as a boxer licensed under the Federal Professional Boxing Safety Act of 1996. The bill also defines sanctioned amateurs, sanctioned amateur matches, toughman events, and toughman contestants.

All of the Boxing Commission members must meet the requirements for membership under the Professional Boxing Safety Act of 1996. The Commission is also authorized to adopt rules that include procedures and requirements for compliance with the federal Boxing Safety Act. The bill authorizes the Executive Director to contract for carrying out monitoring of events and certain other duties. The bill also clarifies that the bond required to be filed by an applicant for a boxing promotor's license is issued for the benefit of any person damaged by the promoter's failure to comply with the boxing laws or by the promoter's failure to fulfill its contractual obligations relating to holding a boxing event.

The bill also authorizes the Executive Director (currently, the Commission) to issue orders for civil penalties and to apply for injunctive relief against those violating the boxing laws.

The bill takes effect upon becoming law.

A BILL TO BE ENTITLED

AN ACT TO AMEND THE SEXUAL OFFENDER REGISTRATION PROGRAM TO COMPLY WITH FEDERAL LAW.

The General Assembly of North Carolina enacts:

Section 1. Article 27A of Chapter 14 of the General Statutes reads as rewritten:

"ARTICLE 27A.

~~"Sexual Offender Registration Program.~~

"Sex Offender and Public Protection Registration Programs.

"Part 1. Registration Programs, Purpose, and Definitions Generally.

"§ 14-208.5. Purpose.

The General Assembly recognizes that sex offenders often pose a high risk of engaging in sex offenses even after being released from incarceration or commitment and that protection of the public from sex offenders is of paramount governmental interest.

The General Assembly also recognizes that persons who commit certain other types of offenses against minors, such as kidnapping, pose significant and unacceptable threats to the public safety and welfare of the State's children and that the protection of those children is of great governmental interest. Further, the General Assembly recognizes that ~~local~~ law enforcement officers' efforts to protect ~~their~~ communities, conduct investigations, and quickly apprehend offenders who commit sex offenses or certain offenses against minors are impaired by the lack of information available to law enforcement agencies about convicted ~~sex~~ offenders who live within the agency's jurisdiction. Release of information about ~~sex~~ these offenders will further the governmental interests of public safety so long as the information released is rationally related to the furtherance of those goals.

Therefore, it is the purpose of this Article to assist ~~local~~ law enforcement agencies' efforts to protect ~~their~~ communities by requiring ~~sex offenders~~ persons who are convicted of sex offenses or of certain other offenses committed against minors to register with ~~local~~ law enforcement ~~agencies and~~ agencies, to require the exchange of relevant information about ~~sex~~ those offenders among law enforcement ~~agencies~~ agencies, and to authorize the access to necessary and relevant information about ~~sex~~ those offenders to others as provided in this Article.

"§ 14-208.6A. Registration requirements for criminal offenders and for criminal offenders determined to be sexually violent predators.

It is the objective of the General Assembly to establish a 10-year registration requirement for persons convicted of certain offenses against minors or sexually violent offenses. It is the further objective of the General Assembly to establish a more stringent set of registration requirements for a subclass of highly dangerous sex offenders who are determined by a sentencing court with the assistance of a board of experts to be sexually violent predators.

To accomplish this objective, there are established two registration programs: the Sex Offender and Public Protection Registration Program and the Sexually Violent Predator Registration Program. Any person convicted of an offense against a minor or of a sexually violent offense as defined by this Article shall register as an offender in accordance with Part 2 of this Article. Any person determined to be a sexually violent predator shall register as such in accordance with Part 3 of this Article.

The information obtained under these programs shall be immediately shared with the appropriate local, State, federal, and out-of-state law enforcement officials and penal institutions. (2) Innocent Party. -- A vehicle owner who:

a. Did not know and had no reason to know that the defendant's drivers license was revoked; or

This lien shall have priority over perfected and unperfected security interests. Storage fees subject to this lien shall not exceed five dollars ($5.00) per day.

If the judge determines that the requirements of subsection (a) and (b) of this section exist but that notice as required by subsection (c) has not been given, the judge shall continue the forfeiture proceeding until adequate notice has been given. In no circumstance shall the sentencing of the defendant be delayed as a result of the failure of the prosecutor to give adequate notice.

~~(e) Sale of Forfeited Vehicle Required. -- If the judge orders forfeiture of the vehicle pursuant to this section, he must order the sale of the vehicle. Proceeds of the sale must be paid to the school fund of the county in which the property was seized.~~

~~(f) Innocent Party May Intervene. -- At any time before the forfeiture is ordered, the property owner or holder of a security interest, other than the defendant, may apply to protect his interest in the motor vehicle. The application may be made to a judge who has jurisdiction to try the impaired driving offense with which the motor vehicle is associated. The judge must order the vehicle returned to the owner if he finds that either the owner or the holder of a security interest is an innocent party. An owner or holder of a security interest is an innocent party if he:~~

~~(1) Did not know and had no reason to know that the defendant's driver's license was revoked; or~~

~~(2) Knew that the defendant's driver's license was revoked, but the defendant drove the vehicle without his consent.~~

~~If an innocent party applies after the forfeited motor vehicle has been sold and the judge finds no laches in the innocent party's delay, the judge may order a payment to the innocent party from the net proceeds of the sale equal to his equity or security interest in the vehicle.~~

(e) Return of Vehicle to Innocent Vehicle Owner. -- If a nondefendant vehicle owner establishes by the greater weight of the evidence that: (i) the vehicle was being driven by a person who was not the only vehicle owner at the time of the underlying offense and (ii) that vehicle owner requesting release is an 'innocent party', a judge shall order the vehicle returned to the owner.

This release shall only be ordered upon satisfactory proof of:

(1) The identity of the person as a vehicle owner;

(2) The existence of financial responsibility to the extent required by Article 13 of this Chapter;

(3) The payment of towing and storage fees; and

(4) The execution of an acknowledgment as defined in subdivision (a1)(1) of this section.

No vehicle subject to forfeiture under this section shall be released to a vehicle owner if the records of the Division indicate the vehicle owner had previously signed an acknowledgment, as required by this section, and the same person was operating the vehicle while that person's license was revoked unless the innocent vehicle owner shows by the greater weight of the evidence that the vehicle owner has taken all reasonable precautions to prevent the use of the vehicle by this particular person and immediately reports, upon discovery, any unauthorized use to the appropriate law enforcement agency.

(f) Release to Lienholder. -- The trial judge shall order a forfeited vehicle released to the lienholder if the judge determines, by the greater weight of the evidence, that:

(1) The lienholder's interest is equal to or greater than the fair market value of the vehicle;

(2) The lienholder agrees not to sell, give, or otherwise transfer possession of the forfeited vehicle to the vehicle owner who owned the vehicle immediately prior to forfeiture, or any person acting on the vehicle owner's behalf;

(3) The forfeited vehicle had not previously been released to the lienholder; and

(4) The lienholder pays, in full, any towing and storage costs incurred as a result of the seizure of the vehicle.

(g) Possessory Lien. -- The entity that tows or stores the motor vehicle, other than the county school board, shall be entitled to a possessory lien as defined in G.S. 28.2(a1)(5)."

Section 1.2. Article 2 of Chapter 20 of the General Statutes is amended by adding a new section to read:

"§ 20-28.3. Seizure, impoundment, forfeiture of vehicles for offenses involving impaired driving while license revoked.

(a) A motor vehicle that is driven by a person in violation of G.S. 20-138.1 or G.S. 20-138.5 is subject to seizure if at the time of the violation the drivers license of the person driving the motor vehicle was revoked as a result of a prior impaired drivers license revocation. The revocation of a person's drivers license is an impaired drivers license revocation for purposes of this section if the revocation is pursuant to:

(1) G.S. 20-13.2, 20-16(a)(8b), 20-16.2, 20-16.5, 20-17(a)(2), 20-17(a)(12), or 20-17.2; or

(2) G.S. 20-16(a)(7), 20-17(a)(1), or 20-17(a)(9) if the offense involved impaired driving.

(b) Duty of Officer. -- If the charging officer has probable cause to believe that a motor vehicle driven by the defendant may be subject to forfeiture under this section, the officer shall seize the vehicle and have it impounded. Probable cause may be based on the officer's personal knowledge, reliable information conveyed by another officer, records of the Division, or other reliable source. The officer shall cause to be issued written notification of impoundment to any vehicle owner who was not operating or present in the vehicle at the time of the offense. This notice shall be sent by first-class mail to the most recent address contained in the Division records. This written notification shall inform the vehicle owner(s) that the vehicle has been impounded, shall state the reason for the impoundment and the procedure for requesting release of the vehicle. The seizing officer shall notify the Division of the seizure in accordance with procedures established by the Division. Within 72 hours of the seizure of the vehicle the officer shall also cause notice of the impoundment and intent to forfeit the vehicle to be given to any lienholder of record with the Division.

(c) Review by Magistrate. -- Upon seizing a vehicle, the seizing officer shall present to a magistrate within the county where the vehicle was seized an affidavit of impoundment setting forth the basis upon which the motor vehicle has been seized for forfeiture. The magistrate shall review the affidavit of impoundment and if the magistrate determines the requirements of this section have been met, shall order the vehicle held. The magistrate may request additional information and may hear from the operator if the operator is present.

(d) Custody of Vehicle. -- The seized vehicle shall be towed to a location designated by the county school board for the county in which the operator of the vehicle is charged and placed under the constructive possession of the school board pending release or sale. Each county school board may elect to have seized vehicles stored on property owned or leased by the school board and charge no fee for storage. In the alternative, the county school board may contract with a commercial storage facility for the storage of seized vehicles, and a storage fee of not more than five dollars ($5.00) per day may be charged.

(e) Release of Vehicle Pending Trial. -- A vehicle owner, or a lienholder of a vehicle, other than the driver at the time of the underlying offense resulting in the seizure, may apply to the clerk of superior court in the county where the charges are pending for pretrial release of the vehicle.

The clerk shall release the vehicle to a qualified vehicle owner or a lienholder under the following conditions:

(1) The vehicle has been stored for not less than 24 hours;

(2) All towing and storage charges have been paid;

(3) Execution of a good and valid bond with sufficient sureties in an amount equal to twice the value of the seized vehicle, as determined in accordance with the schedule of values adopted by the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles pursuant to G.S. 105-187.3, payable to the county school fund and conditioned on return of the vehicle, without any new or additional liens or encumbrances, on the day of trial of the operator;

(4) If a qualified vehicle owner, execution of an acknowledgment as described in G.S. 20-28.2(a1); and

(5) A check of the records of the Division indicates that the requesting vehicle owner has not previously executed an acknowledgment naming the operator of the seized vehicle.

(f) Duty of Trial Judge. -- The trial judge at the sentencing hearing on the operator's charge of violating G.S. 20-138.1 or G.S. 20-138.5 shall determine if the vehicle is subject to forfeiture pursuant to the provisions of G.S. 20-28.2.

(g) Possessory Lien. -- The entity that tows and stores the vehicle, other than the county school board, shall be entitled to a possessory lien as defined in G.S. 28.2(a1)(5)."

Section 1.3. Article 2 of Chapter 20 of the General Statutes is amended by adding a new section to read:

"§ 20-28.4. Release of impounded vehicles by judge.

(a) Release to Innocent Vehicle Owner. -- A vehicle owner who was not the operator of the vehicle at the time of the offense may petition the court for return of the vehicle pursuant to the provisions of G.S. 20-28.2(e).

(b) Acknowledgment Required. -- The vehicle owner seeking release under this section or pretrial release under G.S. 20-28.3 shall sign an acknowledgment as described in G.S. 20-28.2(a1)(1).

(c) Release to Lienholder. -- A district court judge may order a forfeited vehicle released to a lienholder if the judge determines, by the greater weight of the evidence, that the lienholder satisfies the criteria as set out in G.S. 20-28.2(f).

(d) Release Upon Conclusion of Trial. -- If the driver of a motor vehicle seized pursuant to G.S. 20-28.3:

(1) Is subsequently not convicted of either G.S. 20-138.1 or G.S. 20-138.5 due to dismissal or a finding of not guilty; or

(2) The judge at the sentencing hearing fails to find the grossly aggravating factor described in G.S. 20-179(c)(2), the seized vehicle shall be returned to the vehicle owner.

If the court finds that probable cause did not exist to seize the motor vehicle, the court shall order the vehicle released.

A determination which results in the return or release of the seized vehicle under this section authorizes the driver, vehicle owner, or lienholder to recover towing or storage fees paid in order to obtain pretrial release of the motor vehicle. Towing or storage fees recovered pursuant to this subsection shall be paid by the county school board from forfeitures paid into the county school fund."

Section 1.4. Article 2 of Chapter 20 of the General Statutes is amended by adding a new section to read:

"§ 20-28.5. Forfeiture of impounded vehicle.

(a) Sale. -- Unless a judge orders the vehicle returned to an innocent party or a lienholder pursuant to G.S. 20-28.2 or G.S. 20-28.4, the vehicle shall be ordered forfeited and sold or transferred to the school board in the county where the charges were filed. The sale of the vehicle shall be a judicial sale conducted in accordance with the provisions of Parts 1 and 2 of Article 29A of Chapter 1 of the General Statutes and shall be conducted by the county school board or a person acting on its behalf. In addition to the notice requirements of Part 2 of Article 29A of Chapter 1 of the General Statutes, notice of sale shall also be given by certified mail, return receipt requested, to all vehicle owners at the address shown by the Division's records and at any other address of the vehicle owner as may be found in the criminal file in which the forfeiture was ordered. Notice of sale shall also be by certified mail, return receipt requested, to all lienholders on file with the Division. Notice of sale shall be given to the Division in accordance with the procedures established by the Division.

(b) Proceeds of Sale. -- Proceeds of any sale conducted under this section shall first be applied to satisfy towing and storage liens and the cost of sale. The balance of the proceeds of sale, if any, shall be used to satisfy any other existing liens of record that were properly recorded with the Division prior to the date of initial seizure of the vehicle. Any remaining balance shall be paid to the county school fund in the county in which the vehicle was ordered forfeited. Vehicles sold pursuant to this section shall be transferred free and clear of any liens.

(c) Retention of Vehicle. -- The county board may, at its option, retain any forfeited vehicle for its use. If the vehicle is retained, any valid lien of record at the time of the initial seizure of the vehicle shall be satisfied by the school board relieving the vehicle owner of all liability for the obligation secured by the motor vehicle.

(d) If there is more than one school board in the county, then the fair market value of the vehicle shall be used to determine the share due each of the school boards in the same manner as fines and other forfeitures.

(e) Order of Forfeiture - Appeals. -- An order of forfeiture is stayed pending appeal of a conviction for an offense that is the basis for the order. When the conviction of an offense that is the basis for an order of forfeiture is appealed from district court, the issue of forfeiture shall be heard in superior court de novo. Appeal from a final order of forfeiture shall be to the Court of Appeals."

Section 1.5. Article 2 of Chapter 20 of the General Statutes is amended by adding a new section to read:

"§ 20-28.6. Forfeiture of right of registration.

(a) A person convicted of violating G.S. 20-138.1 or G.S. 20-138.5 while the person's drivers license is revoked as a result of a prior impaired drivers license revocation as defined in G.S. 20-28.3 forfeits the right to register or have registered a motor vehicle in the person's name until the person's drivers license is restored. The trial judge at the sentencing hearing on the person's charge of violating G.S. 20-138.1 or G.S. 20-138.5 shall order the defendant's rights of registration forfeited for the period the defendant's drivers license is revoked. The defendant shall be ordered to surrender the registration on all motor vehicles registered in the defendant's name to the Division within 10 days of the date of the order. Information in the order pertaining to the registration of motor vehicles shall be transmitted electronically or otherwise by the clerk of superior court to the Division. The Division shall not thereafter register a motor vehicle in the defendant's name until the defendant's drivers license has been restored.

(b) A registered owner other than the operator of the vehicle that is seized pursuant to G.S. 20-28.3 who is not an innocent party pursuant to G.S. 20-28.2 forfeits the right to register or have registered in the person's name the motor vehicle seized, until the drivers license of the person whose driving violation resulted in the motor vehicle being seized is restored. The trial judge on the person's charge of violating G.S. 20-138.1 or G.S. 20-138.5 shall order the registered owner's rights of registration for the seized motor vehicle forfeited for the period the defendant's drivers license is revoked after an opportunity for a hearing and a determination that the requirements of subsections (a) through (c) of G.S. 20-28.2 exist. The registered owner shall be ordered to surrender the registration on the motor vehicle seized to the Division within 10 days of the date of the order. required by G.S. 20-139.1(b). The request constitutes the person's consent to be transported by the law-enforcement officer to the place where the chemical analysis is to be administered. Before the chemical analysis is made, the person ~~must~~ shall confirm the request in writing and ~~must~~ shall be notified:

(1) That the test results will be admissible in evidence and may be used against the person in any implied-consent offense that may arise;

(2) That the person's license will be revoked for at least ~~10~~ 30 days if:

a. The test reveals an alcohol concentration of 0.08 or more; or

b. The person was driving a commercial motor vehicle and the test results reveal an alcohol concentration of 0.04 or more.

(3) That if the person fails to comply fully with the test procedures, the officer may charge the person with any offense for which the officer has probable cause, and if the person is charged with an implied-consent offense, the person's refusal to submit to the testing required as a result of that charge would result in revocation of the person's driver's license. The results of the chemical analysis are admissible in evidence in any proceeding in which they are relevant."

Section 3.4. G.S. 20-16.5 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

"(p) Limited Driving Privilege. -- A person whose drivers license has been revoked under this section may apply for a limited driving privilege if:

(1) At the time of the alleged offense the person held either a valid drivers license or a license that had been expired for less than one year;

(2) Does not have an unresolved pending charge involving impaired driving except the charge for which the license is currently revoked under this section or additional convictions of an offense involving impaired driving since being charged for the violation for which the license is currently revoked under this section;

(3) The person's license has been revoked for at least 10 days if the revocation is for 30 days or 30 days if the revocation is for 45 days; and

(4) The person has obtained a substance abuse assessment from a mental health facility and registers for and agrees to participate in any recommended training or treatment program.

Except as modified in this subsection, the provisions of G.S. 20-179.3 relating to the procedure for application and conduct of the hearing and the restrictions required or authorized to be included in the limited driving privilege apply to applications under this subsection. Any district court judge authorized to hold court in the judicial district is authorized to issue such a limited driving privilege. A limited driving privilege issued under this section authorizes a person to drive if the person's license is revoked solely under this section. If the person's license is revoked for any other reason, the limited driving privilege is invalid."

Section 3.5. G.S. 20-16.5(e) reads as rewritten:

"(e) Procedure if Report Filed with Judicial Official When Person Is Present. -- If a properly executed revocation report concerning a person is filed with a judicial official when the person is present before that official, the judicial official ~~must,~~ shall, after completing any other proceedings involving the person, determine whether there is probable cause to believe that each of the conditions of subsection (b) has been met. If he determines that there is such probable cause, he ~~must~~ shall enter an order revoking the person's driver's license for the period required in this subsection. The judicial official ~~must~~ shall order the person to surrender his license and if necessary may order a law-enforcement officer to seize the license. The judicial official ~~must~~ shall give the person a copy of the revocation order. In addition to setting it out in the order the judicial official ~~must~~ shall personally inform the person of his right to a hearing as specified in subsection (g), and that his license remains revoked pending the hearing. Unless the person is not currently licensed, the revocation under this subsection begins at the time the revocation order is issued and continues until the person's license has been surrendered for ~~10~~ 30 days and the person has paid the applicable costs. If the person is not currently licensed, the revocation continues until ~~10~~ 30 days from the date the revocation order is issued and the person has paid the applicable costs. If within five working days of the effective date of the order, the person does not surrender his license or demonstrate that he is not currently licensed, the clerk ~~must~~ shall immediately issue a pick-up order. The pick-up order ~~must~~ shall be issued to a member of a local law-enforcement agency if the charging officer was employed by the agency at the time of the charge and the person resides in or is present in the agency's territorial jurisdiction. In all other cases, the pick-up order ~~must~~ shall be issued to an officer or inspector of the Division. A pick-up order issued pursuant to this section is to be served in accordance with G.S. 20-29 as if the order had been issued by the Division."

Section 3.6. G.S. 20-16.5(f) reads as rewritten:

"(f) Procedure if Report Filed with Clerk of Court When Person Not Present. -- When a clerk receives a properly executed report under subdivision (d)(3) and the person named in the revocation report is not present before the clerk, the clerk ~~must~~ shall determine whether there is probable cause to believe that each of the conditions of subsection (b) has been met. If he determines that there is such probable cause, he ~~must~~ shall mail to the person a revocation order by first-class mail. The order ~~must~~ shall direct that the person on or before the effective date of the order either surrender his license to the clerk or appear before the clerk and demonstrate that he is not currently licensed, and the order ~~must~~ shall inform the person of the time and effective date of the revocation and of its duration, of his right to a hearing as specified in subsection (g), and that the revocation remains in effect pending the hearing. Revocation orders mailed under this subsection become effective on the fourth day after the order is deposited in the United States mail. If within five working days of the effective date of the order, the person does not surrender his license to the clerk or appear before the clerk to demonstrate that he is not currently licensed, the clerk ~~must~~ shall immediately issue a pick-up order. The pick-up order ~~must~~ shall be issued and served in the same manner as specified in subsection (e) for pick-up orders issued pursuant to that subsection. A revocation under this subsection begins at the date specified in the order and continues until the person's license has been revoked for the period specified in this subsection and the person has paid the applicable costs. The period of revocation under this subsection is:

(1) ~~Ten~~ Thirty days from the time the person surrenders his license to the court, if the surrender occurs within five working days of the effective date of the order; or

(2) ~~Ten~~ Thirty days after the person appears before the clerk and demonstrates that he is not currently licensed to drive, if the appearance occurs within five working days of the effective date of the revocation order; or

(3) ~~Thirty~~ Forty-five days from the time:

a. The person's ~~driver's~~ drivers license is picked up by a law-enforcement officer following service of a pick-up order; or

b. The person demonstrates to a law-enforcement officer who has a pick-up order for his license that he is not currently licensed; or

c. The person's ~~driver's~~ drivers license is surrendered to the court if the surrender occurs more than five working days after the effective date of the revocation order; or

d. The person appears before the clerk to demonstrate that he is not currently licensed, if he appears more than five working days after the effective date of the revocation order.

When a pick-up order is issued, it ~~must~~ shall inform the person of his right to a hearing as specified in subsection (g), and that the revocation remains in effect pending the hearing. An officer serving a pick-up order under this subsection ~~must~~ shall return the order to the court indicating the date it was served or that he was unable to serve the order. If the license was surrendered, the officer serving the order ~~must~~ shall deposit it with the clerk within three days of the surrender."

Section 3.7. G.S. 20-16.5(i) reads as rewritten:

"(i) Effect of Revocations. -- A revocation under this section revokes a person's privilege to drive in North Carolina whatever the source of his authorization to drive. Revocations under this section are independent of and run concurrently with any other revocations. No court imposing a period of revocation following conviction of an offense involving impaired driving may give credit for any period of revocation imposed under this section. ~~A person is not eligible for a limited driving privilege under any statute while his license is revoked under this section.~~ A person whose license is revoked pursuant to this section is not eligible to receive a limited driving privilege except as specifically authorized by G.S. 20-16.5(p)."

Section 3.8. G.S. 20-16.5(k) reads as rewritten:

"(k) Report to Division. -- Except as provided below, the clerk ~~must~~ shall mail a report to the Division within 10 working days of the return of a license under this section or of the termination of a revocation of the driving privilege of a person not currently licensed. The report ~~must~~ shall identify the person whose license has been revoked and specify the dates on which his license was revoked. No report need be made to the Division, however, if there was a surrender of the driver's license issued by the Division, a ~~ten-day~~ 30-day minimum revocation was imposed, and the license was properly returned to the person under subsection (h) within five working days after the ~~10-day~~ 30-day period had elapsed."

PART IV. MAKE ALCOHOL SCREENING TEST ADMISSIBLE TO PROVE OFFENSE OF DRIVING AFTER DRINKING BY A PERSON UNDER 21.

Section 4. G.S. 20-138.3 reads as rewritten:

"§ 20-138.3. Driving by person less than 21 years old after consuming alcohol or drugs.

(a) Offense. -- It is unlawful for a person less than 21 years old to drive a motor vehicle on a highway or public vehicular area while consuming alcohol or at any time while he has remaining in his body any alcohol or in his blood a controlled substance previously consumed, but a person less than 21 years old does not violate this section if he drives with a controlled substance in his blood which was lawfully obtained and taken in therapeutically appropriate amounts.

(b) Subject to Implied-Consent Law. -- An offense under this section is an alcohol-related offense subject to the implied-consent provisions of G.S. 20-16.2.

(c) Odor Insufficient. -- The odor of an alcoholic beverage on the breath of the driver is insufficient evidence by itself to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that alcohol was remaining in the driver's body in violation of this section unless the driver was offered an alcohol screening test or chemical analysis and refused to provide all required samples of breath or blood for analysis.

(d) Alcohol Screening Test. -- Notwithstanding any other provision of law, an alcohol screening test may be administered to a driver suspected of violation of subsection (a) of this section, and the results of an alcohol screening test or the driver's refusal to submit may be used by a law enforcement officer, a court, or an administrative agency in determining if alcohol was present in the driver's body. No alcohol screening tests are valid under this section unless the device used is one approved by the Commission on Health Services, and the screening test is conducted in accordance with the applicable regulations of the Commission as to its manner and use.

~~(c)~~ (e) Punishment; effect when impaired driving offense also charged. -- The offense in this section is a Class 2 misdemeanor. It is not, in any circumstances, a lesser included offense of impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1, but if a person is convicted under this section and of an offense involving impaired driving arising out of the same transaction, the aggregate punishment imposed by the court may not exceed the maximum applicable to the offense involving impaired driving, and any minimum punishment applicable ~~must~~ shall be imposed.

~~(d)~~ (f) Limited driving privilege. -- A person who is convicted of violating subsection (a) of this section and whose drivers license is revoked solely based on that conviction may apply for a limited driving privilege as provided in G.S. 20-179.3.

This subsection shall apply only if the person meets both of the following requirements:

(1) Is 18, 19, or 20 years old on the date of the offense.

(2) Has not previously been convicted of a violation of this section.

The judge may issue the limited driving privilege only if the person meets the eligibility requirements of G.S. 20-179.3, other than the requirement in G.S. 20-179.3(b)(1)c. G.S. 20-179.3(e) shall not apply. All other terms, conditions, and restrictions provided for in G.S. 20-179.3 shall apply. G.S. 20-179.3, rather than this subsection, governs the issuance of a limited driving privilege to a person who is convicted of violating subsection (a) of this section and of driving while impaired as a result of the same transaction."

PART V. ALLOW DRUG TESTING FOR DRIVING WHILE IMPAIRED.

Section 5.1. G.S. 20-4.01(3a) reads as rewritten:

"(3a) Chemical Analysis. -- A test or tests of the ~~breath or blood~~ breath, blood, or other bodily fluid or substance of a person to determine ~~his~~ the person's alcohol ~~concentration,~~ concentration or presence of an impairing substance, performed in accordance with ~~G.S. 20-139.1.~~ G.S. 20-139.1, including duplicate or sequential analyses. ~~The term "chemical analysis" includes duplicate or sequential analyses when necessary or desirable to insure the integrity of test results.~~"

Section 5.2. G.S. 20-138.3(a) reads as rewritten:

"(a) Offense. -- It is unlawful for a person less than 21 years old to drive a motor vehicle on a highway or public vehicular area while consuming alcohol or at any time while he has remaining in his body any alcohol or ~~in his blood a~~ controlled substance previously consumed, but a person less than 21 years old does not violate this section if he drives with a controlled substance in his ~~blood~~ body which was lawfully obtained and taken in therapeutically appropriate amounts."

Section 5.3. G.S. 20-139.1(a) reads as rewritten:

"(a) Chemical Analysis Admissible. -- In any implied-consent offense under G.S. 20-16.2, a person's alcohol concentration or the presence of any other impairing substance in the person's body as shown by a chemical analysis is admissible in evidence. This section does not limit the introduction of other competent evidence as to ~~a defendant's~~ a person's alcohol ~~concentration,~~ concentration or results of other tests showing the presence of an impairing substance, including other chemical tests."

Section 5.4. G.S. 20-139.1 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

"(b5) Subsequent Tests Allowed. -- A person may be requested, pursuant to G.S. 20-16.2, to submit to a chemical analysis of the person's blood or other bodily fluid or substance in addition to or in lieu of a chemical analysis of the breath, in the discretion of the charging officer. A person's willful refusal to submit to a chemical analysis of the blood or other bodily fluid or substance is a willful refusal under G.S. 20-16.2."

Section 5.5. G.S. 20-139.1(e1) reads as rewritten:

"(e1) Use of Chemical Analyst's Affidavit in District Court. -- An affidavit by a chemical analyst sworn to and properly executed before an official authorized to administer oaths is admissible in evidence without further authentication in any hearing or trial in the District Court Division of the General Court of Justice with respect to the following matters:

(1) The alcohol concentration or concentrations or the presence or absence of an impairing substance of a person given a chemical analysis and who is involved in the hearing or trial.

(2) The time of the collection of the ~~blood or breath~~ blood, breath, or other bodily fluid or substance sample or samples for the chemical analysis.

(3) The type of chemical analysis administered and the procedures followed.

(4) The type and status of any permit issued by the Department of Environment, Health, and Natural Resources that he held on the date he performed the chemical analysis in question.

(5) If the chemical analysis is performed on a breath-testing instrument for which regulations adopted pursuant to subsection (b) require preventive maintenance, the date the most recent preventive maintenance procedures were performed on the breath-testing instrument used, as shown on the maintenance records for that instrument.

The Department of Environment, Health, and Natural Resources ~~must~~ shall develop a form for use by chemical analysts in making this affidavit. If any person who submitted to a chemical analysis desires that a chemical analyst personally testify in the hearing or trial in the District Court Division, he may subpoena the chemical analyst and examine him as if he were an adverse witness."

Section 5.6. G.S. 20-179.3(h) reads as rewritten:

"(h) Other Mandatory and Permissive Conditions or Restrictions. -- In all limited driving privileges the judge ~~must~~ shall also include a restriction that the applicant not consume alcohol while driving or drive at any time while he has remaining in his body any alcohol or ~~in his blood a~~ controlled substance previously consumed, unless the controlled substance was lawfully obtained and taken in therapeutically appropriate amounts. The judge may impose any other reasonable restrictions or conditions necessary to achieve the purposes of this section."

PART VI. HABITUAL IMPAIRED DRIVING.

Section 6. G.S. 20-138.5(b) reads as rewritten:

"(b) A person convicted of violating this section shall be punished as a ~~Class G~~ Class F ~~felon.~~ felon and shall be sentenced to a minimum active term of not less than 12 months of imprisonment, which shall not be suspended. Sentences imposed under this subsection shall run consecutively with and shall commence at the expiration of any sentence being served."

PART VII. EFFECTIVE DATES.

Section 7. This act becomes effective December 1, 1997, and applies to offenses committed on or after that date. Sentencing for an offense committed before the effective date of this act is governed by the laws in effect at the time of the commission of the offense.

A BILL TO BE ENTITLED

AN ACT TO AMEND LAWS GOVERNING CONDEMNATION TO AUTHORIZE AWARD OF ATTORNEYS' FEES AND INTRODUCTION OF ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE OF PROPERTY VALUE IN CERTAIN CONDEMNATION ACTIONS.

The General Assembly of North Carolina enacts:

Section 1. G.S. 40A-8 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

"(d) In addition to the other costs allowed under this Chapter, in any action brought under Article 3 of this Chapter in which the judgment, including a consent judgment, awarded to the owner is an amount greater than the amount of the deposit under G.S. 40A-41, the court with jurisdiction over the action may, in it discretion, after making appropriate findings of fact, award each owner of the property sought to be condemned a sum that, in the opinion of the court based upon its findings of fact, will reimburse the owner for reasonable costs, disbursements, and expenses, including reasonable attorneys', appraisal, and engineering fees."

Section 2. Article 4 of Chapter 40A of the General Statutes is amended by adding a new section to read:

"§ 40A-71. Evidence of value.

In any proceeding to determine the value of property condemned under Article 3 of this Chapter, the amount deposited pursuant to G.S. 40A-41 shall be admissible into evidence."

Section 3. G.S. 40A-48(d) reads as rewritten:

"(d) A copy of the report shall at the time of filing be mailed certified or registered mail by the clerk to each of the parties or to their counsel of record. Within 30 days after the mailing of the report, either the condemnor or the owner, may except thereto and demand a trial de novo by a jury as to the issue of compensation. Upon the receipt of such demand the action shall be placed on the civil issue docket of the superior court for trial de novo by a jury as to the issue of compensation, provided, that upon agreement of both parties trial by jury may be waived and the issue determined by the judge. The report of commissioners shall not be competent as evidence upon the trial of the issue of compensation in the superior ~~court, nor shall evidence of the deposit by the condemnor into the court be competent upon the trial of the issue of compensation.~~ court. If no exception to the report of commissioners is filed within the time prescribed, final judgment shall be entered by the judge upon a determination and finding by him that the report of commissioners plus interest computed in accordance with G.S. 40A-53 of this Chapter, awards to the property owners just compensation. In the event that the judge is of the opinion and, in his discretion, determines that the award does not provide just compensation, he shall set aside the award and order the case placed on the civil issue docket for determination of the issue of compensation by a jury."

Section 4. G.S. 136-119 reads as rewritten:

"§ 136-119. Costs and appeal.

(a) The Department of Transportation shall pay all court costs taxed by the court. Either party shall have a right of appeal to the Supreme Court for errors of law committed in any proceedings provided for in this Article in the same manner as in any other civil actions and it shall not be necessary that an appeal bond be posted.

The court having jurisdiction of the condemnation actio instituted by the Department of Transportation to acquire real property by condemnation shall award the owner of any right, or title to, or interest in, such real property such sum as will in the opinion of the court reimburse such owner for his reasonable cost, disbursements, and expenses, including reasonable attorney fees, appraisal, and engineering fees, actually incurred because of the condemnation proceedings, if (i) the final judgment is that the Department of Transportation cannot acquire real property by condemnation; or (ii) the proceeding is abandoned by the Department of Transportation.

The judge rendering a judgment for the plaintiff in a proceeding brought under G.S. 136-111 awarding compensation for the taking of property, shall determine and award or allow to such plaintiff, as a part of such judgment, such sum as will in the opinion of the judge reimburse such plaintiff for his reasonable cost, disbursements and expenses, including reasonable attorney, appraisal, and engineering fees, actually incurred because of such proceeding.

(b) In addition to the other costs allowed under this Article, in any action brought under this Article in which the judgment, including a consent judgment, awarded to the owner is an amount greater than the amount of the deposit under G.S. 136-103, the court with jurisdiction over the action may, in its discretion, after making appropriate findings of fact, award each owner of the property sought to be condemned a sum that, in the opinion of the court based upon its findings of fact, will reimburse the owner for reasonable costs, disbursements, and expenses, including reasonable attorneys', appraisal, and engineering fees."

Section 5. Article 9 of Chapter 136 of the General Statutes is amended by adding a new section to read:

"§ 136-121.2. Evidence of value.

In any proceeding to determine the value of property condemned under Article 3 of this Chapter, the amount deposited pursuant to G.S. 136-103 shall be admissible into evidence."

Section 6. G.S. 136-109(d) reads as rewritten:

"(d) A copy of the report shall at the time of filing be mailed to each of the parties.Within 30 days after the filing of the report, either the Department of Transportation or the owner, may except thereto and demand a trial de novo by a jury as to the issue of damages. Whereupon the action shall be placed on the civil issue docket of the superior court for trial de novo by a jury as to the issue of damages, provided, that upon agreement of both parties trial by jury may be waived and the issue determined by the judge. The report of commissioners shall not be competent as evidence upon the trial of the issue of damages in the superior ~~court, nor shall evidence of the deposit by the Department of Transportation into the court be competent upon the trial of the issue of damages.~~ court. If no exception to the report of commissioners is filed within the time prescribed final judgment shall be entered by the judge upon a determination and finding by him that the report of commissioners, plus interest computed in accordance with G.S. 136-113 of this Chapter, awards to the property owners just compensation. In the event that the judge is of the opinion and, in his discretion, determines that such award does not provide just compensation he shall set aside said award and order the case placed on the civil issue docket for determination of the issue of damages by a jury."

Section 7. This act becomes effective October 1, 1997 and applies to pending litigation.

CONDEMNATIONS AND ATTORNEY FEE AWARDS ARE UNRELATED
(South Carolina Right of Way Statistics)

According to Mr. Rucker -- the Head of Right of Way at the Department of Transportation (DOT) in Colombia, South Carolina -- the percent of DOT condemnations were not compiled until 1992-1993. The percentages are as follows:

Years	Percent of Condemnations is South Carolina
- 1992-93	15%
- 1994-95	24%
- 1995-96	11%

Mr. Rucker said that the percentage of condemnations in South Carolina was not a function of the 1987 attorney fee legislation, but that it was a function of the type of improvement and perhaps more importantly the location of the improvement under consideration.

Type of improvement: interstates are highly controversial and contested improvements; the paving of a country dirt road is rarely contested.

Location: urban environments involve much more condemnation than non-urban environments. The widening of a street through a business area often displaces businesses and their amenities and are highly controversial and contested improvements.

Please support HB 1081.

A BILL TO BE ENTITLED

AN ACT TO AMEND LAWS GOVERNING CONDEMNATION TO AUTHORIZE AWARD OF ATTORNEYS' FEES AND INTRODUCTION OF ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE OF PROPERTY VALUE IN CERTAIN CONDEMNATION ACTIONS.

The General Assembly of North Carolina enacts:

"(d) In addition to the other costs allowed under this Chapter, in any action brought under Article 2 or Article 3 of this Chapter in which the judgment, including a consent judgment, awarded to the owner is an amount greater than the amount of the deposit under G.S. 40A-28 or G.S. 40A-41, the court with jurisdiction over the action may, in its discretion, after making appropriate findings of fact, award each owner of the property sought to be condemned a sum that, in the opinion of the court based upon its findings of fact, will reimburse the owner for reasonable costs, disbursements, and expenses, including reasonable attorneys', appraisal, and engineering fees."

Section 2. Article 4 of Chapter 40A of the General Statutes is amended by adding a new section to read:

"§ 40A-71. Evidence of value.

Section 3. G.S. 40A-48(d) reads as rewritten:

"(d) A copy of the report shall at the time of filing be mailed certified or registered mail by the clerk to each of the parties or to their counsel of record. Within 30 days after the mailing of the report, either the condemnor or the owner, may except thereto and demand a trial de novo by a jury as to the issue of compensation. Upon the receipt of such demand the action shall be placed on the civil issue docket of the superior court for trial de novo by a jury as to the issue of compensation, provided, that upon agreement of both parties trial by jury may be waived and the issue determined by the judge. The report of commissioners shall not be competent as evidence upon the trial of the issue of compensation in the superior ~~court, nor shall evidence of the deposit by the condemnor into the court be competent upon the trial of the issue of compensation.~~ court. If no exception to the report of commissioners is filed within the time prescribed, final judgment shall be entered by the judge upon a determination and finding by him that the report of commissioners plus interest computed in accordance with G.S. 40A-53 of this Chapter, awards to the property owners just compensation. In the event that the judge is of the opinion and, in his discretion, determines that the award does not provide just compensation, he shall set aside the award and order the case placed on the civil issue docket for determination of the issue of compensation by a jury."

Section 4. G.S. 136-119 reads as rewritten:

"§ 136-119. Costs and appeal.

(a) The Department of Transportation shall pay all court costs taxed by the court. Either party shall have a right of appeal to the Supreme Court for errors of law committed in any proceedings provided for in this Article in the same manner as in any other civil actions and it shall not be necessary that an appeal bond be posted.

The court having jurisdiction of the condemnation action instituted by the Department of Transportation to acquire real property by condemnation shall award the owner of any right, or title to, or interest in, such real property such sum as will in the opinion of the court reimburse such owner for his reasonable cost, disbursements, and expenses, including reasonable attorney fees, appraisal, and engineering fees, actually incurred because of the condemnation proceedings, if (i) the final judgment is that the Department of Transportation cannot acquire real property by condemnation; or (ii) the proceeding is abandoned by the Department of Transportation.

The judge rendering a judgment for the plaintiff in a proceeding brought under G.S. 136-111 awarding compensation for the taking of property, shall determine and award or allow to such plaintiff, as a part of such judgment, such sum as will in the opinion of the judge reimburse such plaintiff for his reasonable cost, disbursements and expenses, including reasonable attorney, appraisal, and engineering fees, actually incurred because of such proceeding.

(b) In addition to the other costs allowed under this Article, in any action brought under this Article in which the judgment, including a consent judgment, awarded to the owner is an amount greater than the amount of the deposit under G.S. 136-103, the court with jurisdiction over the action may, in its discretion, after making appropriate findings of fact, award each owner of the property sought to be condemned a sum that, in the opinion of the court based upon its findings of fact, will reimburse the owner for reasonable costs, disbursements, and expenses, including reasonable attorneys', appraisal, and engineering fees."

Section 5. Article 9 of Chapter 136 of the General Statutes is amended by adding a new section to read:

"§ 136-121.2. Evidence of value.

In any proceeding to determine the value of property condemned under Article 3 of this Chapter, the amount deposited pursuant to G.S. 136-103 shall be admissible into evidence."

Whereupon the action shall be placed on the civil issue docket of the superior court for trial de novo by a jury as to the issue of damages, provided, that upon agreement of both parties trial by jury may be waived and the issue determined by the judge. The report of commissioners shall not be competent as evidence upon the trial of the issue of damages in the superior ~~court, nor shall evidence of the deposit by the Department of Transportation into the court be competent upon the trial of the issue of damages.~~ court. If no exception to the report of commissioners is filed within the time prescribed final judgment shall be entered by the judge upon a determination and finding by him that the report of commissioners, plus interest computed in accordance with G.S. 136-113 of this Chapter, awards to the property owners just compensation. In the event that the judge is of the opinion and, in his discretion, determines that such award does not provide just compensation he shall set aside said award and order the case placed on the civil issue docket for determination of the issue of damages by a jury."

A BILL TO BE ENTITLED

AN ACT TO ADD "DIVISIBLE PROPERTY" AS A CATEGORY OF PROPERTY SUBJECT TO EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION, TO CREATE A REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION THAT AN IN-KIND DISTRIBUTION OF PROPERTY IS EQUITABLE, TO ENCOURAGE INTERIM DISTRIBUTION OF PROPERTY OR DEBT, AND TO ALLOW CERTAIN EVIDENCE OF THE VALUE OF MARITAL PROPERTY, AS RECOMMENDED BY THE FAMILY LAW SECTION OF THE NORTH CAROLINA BAR ASSOCIATION.

The General Assembly of North Carolina enacts:

Section 1. G.S. 50-20 reads as rewritten:

"§ 50-20. Distribution by court of marital property upon divorce.

(a) Upon application of a party, the court shall determine what is the marital property and divisible property and shall provide for an equitable distribution of the marital property and divisible property between the parties in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(b) For purposes of this section:

(1) 'Marital property' means all real and personal property acquired by either spouse or both spouses during the course of the marriage and before the date of the separation of the parties, and presently owned, except property determined to be separate property or divisible property in accordance with subdivision (2) or (4) of this subsection. Marital property includes all vested pension, retirement, and other deferred compensation rights, including military pensions eligible under the federal Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act. It is presumed that all property acquired after the date of marriage and before the date of separation is marital property except property which is separate property under subdivision (2) of this subsection. This presumption may be rebutted by the greater weight of the evidence.

(2) 'Separate property' means all real and personal property acquired by a spouse before marriage or acquired by a spouse by bequest, devise, descent, or gift during the course of the marriage. However, property acquired by gift from the other spouse during the course of the marriage shall be considered separate property only if such an intention is stated in the conveyance. Property acquired in exchange for separate property shall remain separate property regardless of whether the title is in the name of the husband or wife or both and shall not be considered to be marital property unless a contrary intention is expressly stated in the conveyance. The increase in value of separate property and the income derived from separate property shall be considered separate property. All professional licenses and business licenses which would terminate on transfer shall be considered separate property. The expectation of nonvested pension, retirement, or other deferred compensation rights shall be considered separate property.

(3) 'Distributive award' means payments that are payable either in a lump sum or over a period of time in fixed amounts, but shall not include alimony payments or other similar payments for support and maintenance which are treated as ordinary income to the recipient under the Internal Revenue Code.

The distributive award of vested pension, retirement, and other deferred compensation benefits may be made payable:

a. As a lump sum by agreement;

b. Over a period of time in fixed amounts by agreement;

c. As a prorated portion of the benefits made to the designated recipient at the time the party against whom the award is made actually begins to receive the benefits; or

d. By awarding a larger portion of other assets to the party not receiving the benefits, and a smaller share of other assets to the party entitled to receive the benefits.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, the court shall not require the administrator of the fund or plan involved to make any payments until the party against whom the award is made actually begins to receive the benefits unless a plan under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) permits earlier distribution. The award shall be determined using the proportion of time the marriage existed, (up to the date of separation of the parties), simultaneously with the employment which earned the vested pension, retirement, or deferred compensation benefit, to the total amount of time of employment. The award shall be based on the vested accrued benefit, as provided by the plan or fund, calculated as of the date of separation, and shall not include contributions, years of service or compensation which may accrue after the date of separation. The award shall include gains and losses on the prorated portion of the benefit vested at the date of separation. No award shall exceed fifty percent (50%) of the benefits the person against whom the award is made is entitled to receive as vested pension, retirement, or other deferred compensation benefits, except that an award may exceed fifty percent (50%) if (i) other assets subject to equitable distribution are insufficient; or (ii) there is difficulty in distributing any asset or any interest in a business, corporation, or profession; or (iii) it is economically desirable for one party to retain an asset or interest that is intact and free from any claim or interference by the other party; or (iv) more than one pension or retirement system or deferred compensation plan or fund is involved, but the benefits awarded may not exceed fifty percent (50%) of the total benefits of all the plans added together; or (v) both parties consent. In no event shall an award exceed fifty percent (50%) if a plan prohibits an award in excess of fifty percent (50%).

In the event the person receiving the award dies, the unpaid balance, if any, of the award shall pass to the beneficiaries of the recipient by will, if any, or by intestate succession, or by beneficiary designation with the plan consistent with the terms of the plan unless the plan prohibits such a designation. In the event the person against whom the award is made dies, the award to the recipient shall remain payable to the extent permitted by the pension or retirement system or deferred compensation plan or fund involved.

The Court may require distribution of the award by means of a qualified domestic relations order, as defined in Section 414(p) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986. To facilitate the calculation and payment of distributive awards, the administrator of the system, plan or fund may be ordered to certify the total contributions, years of service, and pension, retirement, or other deferred compensation benefits payable.

The provisions of this section and G.S. 50-21 shall apply to all pension, retirement, and other deferred compensation plans and funds, including military pensions eligible under the Federal Uniform Services Former Spouses Protection Act, and including funds administered by the State pursuant to Articles 84 through 88 of Chapter 58 and Chapters 120, 127A, 128, 135, 143, 143B, and 147 of the General Statutes, to the extent of a member's accrued benefit at the date of separation, as determined by the court.

(4) 'Divisible property' means all real and personal property as set forth below:

a. All appreciation and diminution in value of marital property and divisible property of the parties occurring after the date of separation and prior to the date of distribution, except that appreciation or diminution in value which is the result of postseparation actions or activities of a spouse shall not be treated as divisible property.

b. All property, property rights, or any portion thereof received after the date of separation but before the date of distribution that was acquired as a result of the efforts of either spouse during the marriage and before the date of separation, including, but not limited to, commissions, bonuses, and contractual rights.

c. Passive income from marital property received after the date of separation, including, but not limited to, interest and dividends.

d. Increases in marital debt and financing charges and interest related to marital debt.

(c) There shall be an equal division by using net value of marital property and net value of divisible property unless the court determines that an equal division is not equitable. If the court determines that an equal division is not equitable, the court shall divide the marital property and divisible property equitably. Factors the court shall consider under this subsection are as follows:

(1) The income, property, and liabilities of each party at the time the division of property is to become effective;

(2) Any obligation for support arising out of a prior marriage;

(3) The duration of the marriage and the age and physical and mental health of both parties;

(4) The need of a parent with custody of a child or children of the marriage to occupy or own the marital residence and to use or own its household effects;

(5) The expectation of pension, retirement, or other deferred compensation rights, which is separate property;

(6) Any equitable claim to, interest in, or direct or indirect contribution made to the acquisition of such marital property by the party not having title, including joint efforts or expenditures and contributions and services, or lack thereof, as a spouse, parent, wage earner or homemaker;

(7) Any direct or indirect contribution made by one spouse to help educate or develop the career potential of the other spouse;

(8) Any direct contribution to an increase in value of separate property which occurs during the course of the marriage;

(9) The liquid or nonliquid character of all marital property;

(10) The difficulty of evaluating any component asset or any interest in a business, corporation or profession, and the economic desirability of retaining such asset or interest, intact and free from any claim or interference by the other party;

(11) The tax consequences to each party;

(11a) Acts of either party to maintain, preserve, develop, or expand; or to waste, neglect, devalue or convert such marital property, during the period after separation of the parties and before the time of distribution; and

(12) Any other factor which the court finds to be just and proper.

(c1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a second or subsequent spouse acquires no interest in the marital property of his or her spouse from a former marriage until a final determination of equitable distribution is made in the marital property of the spouse's former marriage.

(d) Before, during or after marriage the parties may by written agreement, duly executed and acknowledged in accordance with the provisions of G.S. 52-10 and 52-10.1, or by a written agreement valid in the jurisdiction where executed, provide for distribution of the marital property in a manner deemed by the parties to be equitable and the agreement shall be binding on the parties.

(e) Subject to the presumption of subsection (c) of this section that an equal division is equitable, it shall be presumed in every action that an in-kind distribution of marital or divisible property is equitable. This presumption may be rebutted by the greater weight of the evidence, or by evidence that the property is a closely held business entity or is otherwise not susceptible of division in-kind. In any action in which the ~~court determines that an equitable distribution of all or portions of the marital property in kind would be impractical,~~ presumption is rebutted, the court in lieu of ~~such~~ in-kind distribution shall provide for a distributive award in order to achieve equity between the parties. The court may provide for a distributive award to facilitate, effectuate or supplement a distribution of marital or divisible property. The court may provide that any distributive award payable over a period of time be secured by a lien on specific property.

(f) The court shall provide for an equitable distribution without regard to alimony for either party or support of the children of both parties. After the determination of an equitable distribution, the court, upon request of either party, shall consider whether an order for alimony or child support should be modified or vacated pursuant to G.S. 50-16.9 or 50-13.7.

(g) If the court orders the transfer of real or personal property or an interest therein, the court may also enter an order which shall transfer title, as provided in G.S. 1A-1, Rule 70 and G.S. 1-228.

(h) If either party claims that any real property is marital property, that party may cause a notice of lis pendens to be recorded pursuant to Article 11 of Chapter 1 of the General Statutes. Any person whose conveyance or encumbrance is recorded or whose interest is obtained by descent, prior to the filing of the lis pendens, shall take the real property free of any claim resulting from the equitable distribution proceeding. The court may cancel the notice of lis pendens upon substitution of a bond with surety in an amount determined by the court to be sufficient provided the court finds that the claim of the spouse against property subject to the notice of lis pendens can be satisfied by money damages.

(i) Upon filing an action or motion in the cause requesting an equitable distribution or alleging that an equitable distribution will be requested when it is timely to do so, a party may seek injunctive relief pursuant to G.S. 1A-1, Rule 65 and Chapter 1, Article 37, to prevent the disappearance, waste or conversion of property alleged to be marital property or separate property of the party seeking relief. The court, in lieu of granting an injunction, may require a bond or other assurance of sufficient amount to protect the interest of the other spouse in the marital or separate property. Upon application by the owner of separate property which was removed from the marital home or possession of its owner by the other spouse, the court may enter an order for reasonable counsel fees and costs of court incurred to regain its possession, but such fees shall not exceed the fair market value of the separate property at the time it was removed.

(i1) ~~For good cause shown, including, but not limited to, providing for the subsistence of a spouse while an action is pending,~~ Unless good cause is shown that there should not be an interim distribution, the ~~Court~~ court may, at any time after an action for equitable distribution has been filed and prior to the final judgment of equitable distribution, enter orders declaring what is separate property and may also enter orders dividing part of the marital ~~property~~ property, divisible property or debt, or marital debt between the parties. The partial distribution may provide for a distributive ~~award.~~ award and may also provide for a distribution of marital property, marital debt, divisible property, or divisible debt. Any such orders entered shall be taken into consideration at trial and proper credit given.

Hearings held pursuant to this subsection may be held at sessions arranged by the chief district court judge pursuant to G.S. 7A-146 and, if held at such sessions, shall not be subject to the reporting requirements of G.S. 7A-198.

(j) In any order for the distribution of property made pursuant to this section, the court shall make written findings of fact that support the determination that the marital property has been equitably divided.

(k) The rights of the parties to an equitable distribution of marital property are a species of common ownership, the rights of the respective parties vesting at the time of the parties' separation."

Section 2. G.S. 50-21(b) reads as rewritten:

"(b) For purposes of equitable distribution, marital property shall be valued as of the date of the separation of the ~~parties.~~ parties, and evidence of preseparation and postseparation occurrences or values is competent as corroborative evidence of the value of marital property as of the date of the separation of the parties. Divisible property and divisible debt shall be valued as of the date of distribution."

Section 3. The amendments to G.S. 50-20(i1) made by this act become effective October 1, 1997, and apply to motions for interim distribution filed on or after that date but shall apply to divisible property and divisible debt only in actions for equitable distribution filed on or after October 1, 1997. The remainder of this act becomes effective October 1, 1997, and applies to actions for equitable distribution filed on or after that date.

H 533. EQUIT. DISTR./DIVISIBLE PROP. TO ADD "DIVISIBLE PROPERTY" AS A CATEGORY OF PROPERTY SUBJECT TO EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION, TO CREATE A REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION THAT AN IN KIND DISTRIBUTION OF PROPERTY IS EQUITABLE, TO ENCOURAGE INTERIM DISTRIBUTION OF PROPERTY OR DEBT, AND TO ALLOW CERTAIN EVIDENCE OF THE VALUE OF MARTIAL PROPERTY, AS RECOMMENDED BY THE FAMILY LAW SECTION OF THE NORTH CAROLINA BAR ASSOCIATION. Amends GS 50-20 to make "divisible property" subject to the equitable distribution procedure when spouses divorce. Defines divisible property as (1) all appreciation and diminution in value of marital property occurring after separation and before distribution (except appreciation or diminution resulting from post separation activities of spouse); (2) property rights, commissions, bonuses, and contractual rights received after separation but before date of distribution and acquired as result of efforts of either spouse during the marriage and before separation; (3) passive income, interest, and dividends from marital property received after separation; and (4) increases in marital debt and financing charges and interest related to marital debt. Creates rebuttable presumption that in-kind distribution of marital or divisible property is equitable. Divisible property and divisible debt are valued as of date of distribution. Amends GS 50-20 (i1) to provide that court may order interim distribution of marital property, divisible property or debt, or marital debt unless there is good cause for not making an interim distribution. Amends GS 50-21(b) to provide that post separation occurrences or values are competent as corroborative evidence of value of marital property as of date of separation. Effective Oct. 1, 1997. Applies to equitable distribution actions filed on or after that date.

MEMORANDUM:

To: House Judiciary II Committee

From: General Statutes Commission

Re: Supplemental Memorandum on Senate Bill 157 (Corporate Amendments)

As a result of a request by the House Finance Committee, the General Statutes Commission reviewed an amendment to G.S. 55-11-04 that was made to SB 157 in that Committee. The amendment was added as Section 29 of the bill and was a recommendation of the Commission on Business Laws and the Economy. The General Statutes Commission concluded that there was no substantive problem with the amendment. The Commission, however, was of the opinion that G.S. 55-11-04 should be further amended in light of the ratification of SB 892 (Dissenters' Rights) to clarify that the limitation on dissenters' rights in public corporations made in Section 1 of that bill does not apply to the minority shareholders of a subsidiary corporation in a merger under G.S. 55-11-04.

In the General Statutes Commission's review, the Commission noted first that it is not clear from the text of Section 1 of SB 892 whether or not it applies to mergers under G.S. 55-11-04 ("short form mergers"). The Commission concluded that shareholders of subsidiaries in short form mergers should have dissenters' rights, even if the subsidiary is a public corporation, because these shareholders do not receive as much information as shareholders in standard mergers and because of the vastly superior position of the 90% or greater shareholder. Noting that SB 892 was also a recommendation of the Commission on Business Laws and the Economy, the Commission contacted two individuals on this body, including the individual who originally proposed SB 892 to it, and both agreed that it was appropriate to have dissenters' rights for minority shareholders of the subsidiary in a short form merger, even if the subsidiary is a public corporation.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Rep. Charles B. Neely, Jr., Chairman
House Judiciary II Committee

FROM: Tim Hovis, Committee Counsel

RE: SENATE BILL 264-LIABILITY FOR JOB REFERENCES - Senator Horton Proposed Committee Substitute

Senate Bill 264 would grant qualified immunity to an employer who gives a job reference on a current or former employee to a prospective employer.

The bill provides that an employer or former employer who discloses information about a current or former employee's job history or performance at the request of a prospective employer or the employee is immune from civil liability for the disclosure of the information or the consequences of the disclosure. The immunity does not apply when the employee shows by a preponderance of the evidence that the information disclosed was in fact false, and that the employer knew or should have known that the information was false. "A preponderance of the evidence" has been held to mean the same as the "greater weight of the evidence" which means that considering all of the evidence, the necessary facts are more likely than not to exist.

"Job performance" under the bill includes the employee's suitability for future employment and the reason for the employee's separation.

Under the bill this qualified immunity also extends to employees and agents of the employer authorized to give this information. Employer also includes a job placement service.

The bill states that it does not affect any privileges or immunities from civil liability under other statutes or available under common law.

The bill becomes effective when it becomes law and applies to causes of action arising on or after that date.

A BILL TO BE ENTITLED

AN ACT TO IMPROVE CHILD PROTECTION BY ALLOWING DISCLOSURE OF CERTAIN RECORDS AND TO APPROPRIATE $100,000 FOR THIS PURPOSE.

The General Assembly of North Carolina enacts:

Section 1. Chapter 7A of the General Statutes is amended by adding the following new section to read:

"§7A-675.1. Disclosure in child fatality or near fatality cases.

(a) The following definitions apply in this section:

(1) 'Child fatality' means the death of a child from suspected abuse, neglect or maltreatment.

(2) 'Near fatality' means a case in which a physician determines that a child is in serious or critical condition as the result of sickness or injury caused by suspected abuse, neglect, or maltreatment.

(3) 'Public agency' means any agency of State government or its subdivisions as defined in G.S. 132-1(a).

(4) 'Findings and information' means a written summary, as allowed by subsections (c) through (f) of this section, of actions taken or services rendered by a public agency following receipt of information that a child might be in need of protection. The written summary shall include any of the following information the agency is able to provide:

a. The dates, outcomes and results of any actions taken or services rendered;

b. The results of any review by the State Child Fatality Prevention Team, a local child fatality prevention team, a local community child protection team, the Child Fatality Task Force, or any public agency.

c. Confirmation of the receipt of all reports, accepted or not accepted by the county department of social services, for investigation of suspected child abuse, neglect, or maltreatment, including confirmation that investigations were conducted, the results of the investigations, a description of the conduct of the most recent investigation and the services rendered, and a statement of basis for the department's decision.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law and subject to the provisions of subsections (c) through (f), a public agency shall disclose to the public, upon request, the findings and information related to a child fatality or near fatality if:

(1) A person is criminally charged with having caused the child fatality or near fatality, or;

(2) The district attorney has certified that a person would be charged with having caused the child fatality or near fatality but for that person's prior death.

(c) Nothing herein shall be deemed to authorize access to the confidential records in the custody of a public agency, or the disclosure to the public of the substance or content of any psychiatric, psychological, or therapeutic evaluations or like materials or information pertaining to the child or the child's family unless directly related to the cause of the child fatality or near fatality, or the disclosure of information that would reveal the identities of persons who provided information related to the suspected abuse, neglect, or maltreatment of the child.

(d) Within five working days from the receipt of a request for findings and information related to a child fatality or near fatality, a public agency shall consult with the appropriate district attorney and provide the findings and information unless the agency has a reasonable belief that release of the information:

(1) Is not authorized by subsections (a) and (b);

(2) Is likely to cause mental or physical harm or danger to a minor child residing in the deceased or injured child's household;

(3) Is likely to jeopardize the State's ability to prosecute the defendant;

(4) Is likely to jeopardize the defendant's right to a fair trial;

(5) Is likely to undermine an ongoing or future criminal investigation; or,

(6) Is not authorized by federal law and regulations.

(e) Any person whose request is denied may apply to the appropriate district court for an order compelling disclosure of the findings and information of the public agency. The application shall set forth, with reasonable particularity, factors supporting the application. The district court shall have jurisdiction to issue such orders. Actions brought pursuant to this section shall be set down for immediate hearing, and subsequent proceedings in such actions shall be accorded priority by the appellate courts. After the court has reviewed the specific findings and information, in camera, the court shall issue an order compelling disclosure unless the court finds that one or more of the circumstances in subsection (d) exists.

(f) Access to criminal investigative reports and criminal intelligence information of public law enforcement agencies, and confidential information in the possession of the State Child Fatality Prevention Team, the local teams, and the Child Fatality Task Force, shall be governed by G.S. 132-1.4 and 143-578 respectively.

(g) Any public agency or its employees acting in good faith in disclosing information pursuant to this section shall be immune from any criminal or civil liability that might otherwise be incurred or imposed for such action.

(h) Nothing herein shall be deemed to narrow or limit the definition of 'public records' as set forth in G.S. 132-1(a)."

Section 2. G.S. 7A-675(h) reads as rewritten:

"(h) ~~Nothing in this section shall preclude the necessary sharing of information among authorized agencies.~~ The chief district court judge in each district shall designate by standing order certain agencies in the district as 'agencies authorized to share information'. Agencies so designated shall share with one another, upon request, information that is in their possession that is relevant to any case in which a petition is filed alleging that a juvenile is abused, neglected or dependent, and shall continue to do so until the juvenile is no longer subject to the juvenile jurisdiction of the court. Agencies that may be designated as 'agencies authorized to share information' include local mental health facilities, local health departments, local departments of social services, local law enforcement agencies, local school administrative units, the district's district attorney's office, the Division of Juvenile Services of the Administrative Office of the Courts, and the Office of Guardian ad Litem Services of the Administrative Office of the Courts. Any information shared among agencies pursuant to this subsection shall remain confidential, shall be withheld from public inspection, and shall be used only for the protection of the juvenile. Nothing in this section or any other provision of law shall preclude any other necessary sharing of information among agencies."

Section 3. There is appropriated from the General Fund to the Department of Human Resources the sum of one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000) for the 1997-98 fiscal year for implementing the provisions of this act.

Section 4. This act becomes effective October 1, 1997.

RE: HB949 - Improve Child Protection/Records - Subcommittee PCS

Section 1 of the proposed committee substitute for HB949 would allow the public disclosure of findings and information regarding child fatalities or near fatalities. Upon request, the findings and information would be released unless the public agency believes that one of several exceptions exists. If the records are withheld by the agency, the person making the request may apply for a court order releasing the records.

Section 2 requires the chief district court judge in each judicial district to designate certain agencies that may share information among themselves regarding juveniles under the jurisdiction of the juvenile court in abuse, neglect, and dependency cases.

Section 3 appropriates $100,000 to implement this act.

This bill is effective October 1, 1997.

State: DSS didn't ask right questions

Investigators missed 'certain critical findings'

BY MARK WINEKA
SALISBURY POST

In examining the abuse deaths of two Rowan children, a special state review team found extensive evidence of limited investigative work, miscommunication, failed documentation, poor after-hours coverage and inadequate supervision by the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

The review team also provided numbers showing that Social Services workers who investigate child abuse and neglect are terribly overloaded, far exceeding the state's recommended standards of cases per month.

In response, a report delivered by the team this morning recommends changing procedures as well as adding staff, resources and training for local Social Services employees and the community at large.

The report also takes the state to task for its initial review of the deaths of Budde Lee Clark, Christopher Jones and Trola Miller.

The report delivered this morning said the first review of those deaths "missed certain critical findings."

Complaints about the findings of the state's first investigation of the deaths led N.C. Human Resources Secretary David Bruton, at the direction of Gov. Jim Hunt, to appoint of a second special review team.

Overall, the team found the state has "some unsuspected holes in our safety net for protecting children," said Kevin FitzGerald, state director of Social Services.

Fitzgerald called it "the greatest lesson we have learned" from this second investigation into the deaths of the Rowan County children.

Conducted during the same time period, a separate review by the American Humane Association into North Carolina's fatality review procedure found the state process "too" the important issues.

The American Humane Association calls on the state to design a more comprehensive child fatality review process — something which FitzGerald promised to do.

The review team's report was prepared by Chuck Harris and JoAnn Lamm of the N.C. Division of Social Services, Marcia Herman-Giddens of the N.C. Medical Examiner's Office, Rowan County Health Director John Shaw and Jennifer Tolle of Prevent Child Abuse North Carolina.

The state report found major deviations between the caseload Rowan social workers carry and the state standard of 12.

The number of abuse and neglect investigations being conducted by Rowan investigators ranged from 16 to 27 cases. In March, child protective services investigators received 22 new cases each.

Likewise, Rowan exceeded the state standard for the ratio of supervisors to front-line social workers. The recommended ratio is 1 to 5; Rowan's was 1 to 8 and 1 to 9.

Today's report recommends that Rowan officials give Social Services the resources to meet state-recommended ratios.

In its 10-page report, the six pages to findings related to the Rowan County child fatalities — deaths that occurred in a five-day period from Jan. 31 to Feb. 4. In all three cases, the local Social Services department had investigated earlier allegations of abuse or neglect.

Problems and recommendations identified included:

■ The report cited both a lack of communication and miscommunication between hospital and other medical providers and the Social Service staff. Pertinent information was lost in some cases.

The team suggests that Social Services and local medical providers develop a protocol "to ensure accurate sharing of information and appropriate response times by DSS workers."

The report also calls on Social Services investigators to consistently request and review all pertinent medical records. The report encourages all medical professionals in Rowan County to pursue training in identifying and reporting child abuse and neglect.

■ The review team found evidence that "a number of community members" had reason to suspect abuse and neglect in the children's cases but failed to make a report to Social Services.

The report does not identify team encourages better community training for professionals who consistently work with children and families. It calls on the Community Child Protection Team to develop a plan to enhance public awareness of the N.C. law requiring anyone who suspects child abuse or neglect to report to Social Services.

■ Social Services should develop a better system for on-call, after-hours coverage.

"Back-up, relief and supervision must be readily available and able to assist in overload situations," the report says.

It may require a special position or compensatory time for Social Services workers who must work daytime hours as well, the report adds.

A written procedure for after-hours reporting should be shared with the individuals and agencies who often make child abuse reports outside of normal agency operating hours, according to the report.

■ Some areas of the intake process in Child Protective Services must be improved.

Rowan Social Services intake forms must be expanded "to ensure the collection of all pertinent information."

■ The focus of the Social Services investigations and assessments were too narrow.

The team says the staff should focus on all aspects of investigations and assessments, "and not just on the reported incident."

■ Social Services' investigations and assessments were too narrow.

The team says the staff should focus on all aspects of a case, "and not just on the reported incident."

It calls on the Social Services investigators to "frequently utilize the expertise of medical, psychological and law enforcement resources in conducting investigations."

■ Social Services investigations failed to interview several key people in the abuse deaths of Budde Lee Clark and Christopher Jones.

■ There's a need for additional resources to support Social Services investigators.

The report recommends that Child Protective Services be given additional clerical support, better computer resources and access to cellular telephones.

■ Social Services staff needed additional training. The report says staff members need to be retrained in the use of risk assessment, child development and discipline techniques.

■ The review found numerous examples of inadequate documentation by Social Services staff. The case record did not clearly document services and activities provided by workers.

In this regard, supervisors need to be held accountable for the thoroughness of records, the report says.

■ Supervision needs to be improved.

The report recommends that supervisors meet regularly with caseworkers and should require frequent status reports. It calls on close daily supervision of case workers with little work experience or record of questionable performance.

On the state review level, the report says that for each of the three cases, one or more standards had not been met and were not identified in the initial review.

The report recommends broadening state reviews beyond the last 12 months of agency involvement, including someone with medical expertise and at least one person outside the Social Services division.

The report also suggests exploring ways to loosen confidentiality restrictions to satisfy the public need for accountability.

Child fatality bills on hold

As May 1 deadline looms in General Assembly, efforts to open records to public sit in committee

BY MARK WINEKA
SALISBURY POST

Local lawmakers intent on opening up child fatality records face an approaching May 1 deadline and a backlog of other bills languishing in committees.

The General Assembly refers to the May 1 deadline as the "crossover" date. If a bill does not affect the state budget and fails to pass either the N.C. Senate or N.C. House by May 1, it dies and would have to be reintroduced no earlier than January 1999.

"Reality is setting in," Rep. Charlotte Gardner, R-Rowan, acknowledging time constraints and a tough legislative fight ahead. "The same questions are going to be raised, no matter what the committee. It's very difficult to find time to talk to people. The pace is so incredible and will be."

Both Gardner and Sen. Betsy Cochrane, R-Davie, introduced legislation in their respective houses last week seeking to improve child protection by requiring better disclosure of records in child fatalities.

"The instances reported in Salisbury and Rowan County have indicated to us that this needed to be done," says Cochrane, who submitted Senate Bill 946. "... We are going to have to work (to beat the deadline)."

For confidentiality reasons, state and local records in the separate deaths of three Rowan County children have been withheld from public inspection, frustrating some local officials and citizens looking for accountability.

The children had been subjects of Rowan Department of Social Services investigations before their deaths.

Post reporting, independent of the initial DSS review into the child fatalities, relied on anonymous sources to document prior abuse in at least two of the cases. The reporting revealed evidence that the DSS failed to act on or seek out critical medical and law enforcement information before the deaths occurred.

In the cases of 6-year-old Budde Lee Clark and 19-month-old Christopher Jones, care givers have been charged with murder. In the other case, 16-year-old Trola Miller was shot and killed during a neighborhood argument.

"There's certainly merit to opening up the process even further to public inspection," says Sen. Roy Cooper, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee and a leading legislative voice in opening records of public agencies. "Anything we can do to prevent future child fatalities is important.

"I think public scrutiny would help in that endeavor. The bottom line is that open government inspires more trust from the people and operates more effectively — maybe not as efficiently as it could behind closed doors — but more effectively."

The companion bills would require better disclosure of records only after a child fatality occurs. Those documents that would be made available for public scrutiny would include medical, hospital, law enforcement, emergency medical service, medical examiner, health, mental health, education and, in particular, social services records.

Cochrane's version says an investigation into the deaths must be complete before the records are opened.

Both bills allow a public agency to seek a court order blocking disclosure of records if they are judged to be a threat to the mental or physical health or safety of a deceased child's family member, or if that information would compromise a criminal investigation.

Gov. Jim Hunt ordered Human Resources Secretary David Bruton to authorize a second, more extensive state review into the Rowan children's deaths after public complaints about an initial DSS review.

The second state investigation acknowledged evidence of limited investigative work, miscommunication, failed documentation, poor after-hours coverage and inadequate supervision by the Rowan DSS.

It also revealed an overloaded caseload for the local DSS employees who investigate child abuse and neglect reports. And it showed serious shortcomings in the way DSS reviewed child fatalities statewide.

Part of the second review team's recommendations called for the loosening of confidentiality restrictions in child fatalities "to satisfy the public's need for accountability."

The bills from Cochrane and Gardner soon followed, with the help of the N.C. Press Association.

The House bill has been forwarded to the Human Resources Committee, to which Gardner belongs.

The Senate bill has gone to the Child and Human Resources Committee, of which Cochrane is a member. She likes its chances of at least being heard in that committee. Earlier in the week, she expressed concern that it would go to the more cumbersome Judiciary Committee, which faces a bigger backlog. In anticipation of that possibility, Cochrane had Judiciary chairman Cooper sign on.

Cooper also is a sponsor of Senate Bill 799, called the Discipline Disclosure Act. It would open public employees' personnel files and make public employees' resumes and letters of recommendation open, as well as records relating to commendations, separation, suspension, demotion, reprimands, warnings and performance evaluations. The files would be open in cases of disciplined employees.

"I think they definitely will be heard," Cooper says of both bills. He notes that his bill faces stiff opposition from the N.C. Association of County Commissioners, the N.C. League of Municipalities and state employees.

"Certainly, both bills will be given a hearing, if they're in my committee," Cooper says from his Rocky Mount office Friday. "When I get back to Raleigh, I'll do what I can to push it (Cochrane's bill) along. It was introduced late, which is somewhat of a problem."

Cochrane says if the bill can't make the crossover deadline she will look for ways to fit it to other bills, possibly as a committee substitute.

Ken Eudy, a lobbyist for the N.C. Press Association, says many legislators often frown on that maneuver, "and someone would jump up and down and say it's a circumvention of the rules."

"It's difficult for that to happen," Eudy adds.

Noting the backlog of legislation, Eudy says the public disclosure bills "have a chance, but it's rough."

"Bills that have a potential for controversy are a lot less likely to pass," he says. "The margins here are so narrow. That also makes it an interesting process."

In the House, the Judiciary II Committee already is considering a bill that would give the Child Fatality Task Force access to the same kind of records.

"I think both of them need to be together," Gardner says of her bill and the one sponsored by Ruth Easterling, D-Mecklenburg.

Gardner's bill ties into that bill but is much broader in scope. The Child Fatality Task Force's bill has been referred to a subcommittee headed by Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange.

Gardner has spoken with Hackney, an attorney who has reservations about Easterling's more narrow proposal. Gardner says she explained the need for the law and how the Post's investigation revealed "how folks fell through the cracks in the system."

As of Thursday when the Post contacted Hackney, he was not yet familiar with the Gardner bill.

Gardner plans to ask local attorney Mary Beth Smith to speak with Hackney about the importance of the bill, in case it would end up in Judiciary II. Meanwhile, Easterling supports Gardner's bill.

Gardner questions whether Human Resources is an easier committee than Judiciary II would be for having the bill being reported out.

"I could try and get the bill heard, and that's fine, but that's a tough committee, too," Gardner says.

Gardner suspects her bill promotes an openness concept that many of her fellow legislators, especially attorneys, don't like.

"I will tell you, it's always a fight to open up more of government," says Eudy, the Press Association lobbyist. "Nobody wants to give up that closed door and that cloak easily."

Readers share opinions on money for Social Services

More than 20 readers with widely varying positions called the Salisbury Post last week to talk about funding for the Department of Social Services.

In the wake of the abuse deaths of two Rowan County children, a special state review team determined that the Social Services agency needs more child protective workers and equipment to keep up with the cases they have.

We asked readers if they support spending more tax money for the local child abuse investigation unit, even if that might mean increasing taxes.

Here are some of the responses we received. (The Post does not print responses it cannot verify through follow-up phone calls.)

Denise Jacobs, Salisbury: Yes, I agree with spending more money, even if it means an increase in our county taxes, to support DSS if they need more workers and equipment to protect these children. Because you can't put a price on a child's life.

Rae Boger, China Grove: Yes, I do support more money for Social Services. And yes, I would go along with a tax increase for that purpose, but I do not think that money should be given to Social Services under the present director. I believe he has mishandled funds as it is apparent with the deaths of three children this past winter. I don't think he is using common sense.

Carolyn Casey, Salisbury: Yes, I would most definitely support anything that would save a child's life. they are more important than anything. To not provide the money to take care of the little children of Rowan County is terrible. I think the Rowan County commissioners should be ashamed of themselves.

Kay VanKampen, Salisbury: I don't know if I can stand any more taxes. I'm retired. But I'd love to volunteer. If they can use a volunteer, I'd be glad to help them.

Readers

Angela Gillespie, Salisbury: I do feel like we do need to spend more money to protect our young people, even if it means increasing our taxes and hiring more people for the Department of Social Services. I think our county commissioners were very eager to .spend money to renovate an old building so they could have nice new offices, but they can't see to spend more money to hire more people for the Department of Social Services.

Ken Walton, Rockwell: I do support spending more money for the children because I have this problem with my ex-wife, to a certain extent. I've had to deal with Social Services. They're overworked and understaffed, and if nobody takes care of the children, what have we got left? The children need to be helped. They're little enough that they can't do it on their own. All they do is cry. Nobody realizes the fact that children don't cry because they're happy. They cry because they hurt and we're the ones doing the hurting. And we're supposed to be setting an example for them. They need all the help they can get at Social Services. They really do.

Jeff Warren, Salisbury: Certainly, I support spending more money for DSS. It seems that we citizens of Rowan County and Salisbury should certainly be willing to assume our responsibility in what has happened in the recent past. We have not done what many of us knew needed to be done, which is listen to the request and then do something. Doing nothing just perpetuates. Yes, I would support money for DSS, even if it means a tax increase. It's time that we accept our responsibility in the tragedies that have happened, not just the commissioners.

Jane Ketchie, Salisbury Yes, I do support spending more tax money for our local unit to protect our children. Yes, even if it would mean increasing taxes.

Troy R. Elliott, China Grove: No, we do not need to spend more money. We need to fire the department heads. They're not doing their jobs. There isn't any management in that department. They need to get to work or replace them all. Just throwing tax dollars at the problem won't help. You can see that in other county agencies. Remember Tri-County Mental Health?

John Smith, Salisbury: I have a bone to pick with Social Services. I've almost lost a child because of them. I would support spending tax dollars for them, but I think some of the tax dollars should be moved from some of these projects around Salisbury that are useless and put the money toward Social Services. But most of the things wrong with Social Services right now is no communication and no guidelines and the people who work there do not know what they are doing. I point blank asked one of the representatives a couple months ago what his role was in Social Services, and he said there was a variety of things but he wouldn't pinpoint any one. I asked him if he were investigating a case and saw a child being abused or neglected, what would you do? He said, 'It's not my position to tell anybody there. That's not my department.' That really upset me. That's why I almost lost my child, but I would support it if money would be shifted from some of the other projects around here and given to Social Services. But they also need a lot of training.

Christine Smith, Salisbury: I think there's no option of spending more money to equip the Social Services department to fight child abuse. What kind of dollar amount do you put on a child's life or safety? If it means increasing taxes, so be it. I don't think there's a price tag you can put on a child's life. There's no reason an innocent child should be abused or neglected for whatever reason. Whatever we can do to help to protect those children is absolutely necessary. We need to train society first off, but there's going to be instances where things are going to happen and children are going to be abused or neglected. No matter how hard you try to better society,it's always going to be there. it's always been there, and it's always going to be there.

Bradley Eagle, Salisbury: No, I don't support more money for (Social Services) because there's going to be child abuse no matter what. What they need to do is start doing something to the people to start with. No matter how much tax money they get, it's not going to knock out child abuse.

Carole Young, Salisbury: Yes, I would definitely support higher taxes, not only for additional DSS employees but also for the health department and other county agencies. I have worked for DSS for 22 years, and it is time that commissioners took responsibility for their abysmal record of underfunding county agencies. Money that should have been spent for the needs of our all our citizens has been misdirected to frivolities such as our famous baseball stadium. Both Mr. Rowland and Mr. Cohen have demonstrated ignorance beyond belief in how jobs and programs at a social service agency are funded and would be well advised to spend time on the job with us rather than calling for heads to roll.

Jim Christy, China Grove: Yes, I support it.

Don Hamilton, Salisbury: When an organization of paid professionals is responsible for handling a phase of government and they know their duties, this is their job. When there are shortcomings with responsibility, this responsibility then is appalling management. Good management controls the organization. If they cannot control, we now need new management, not more money to continue bad management. I think what these people are paid for is the job they should do. If they don't, then we need new people to do it. But it all relies on good management.

Richard Spires, Faith: My question is this: Would more money spent have made the DSS worker realize there was a problem when he saw bite marks on the child's scrotum and then take different steps instead of just sending him back to his parents where he eventually died. Would money have made a difference? Then, of course, I would (favor more for DSS). The fact of the matter is when you have 146 employees and only 7 investigators, something's wrong. The money is not being spent in the proper direction. So DSS needs to look at how it's doing its job and how it can do it more efficiently and get rid of the fat and then spend the money on people who actually investigate and can make the changes.

Peggy Hoffner, Landis: I think we, as Rowan County citizens, need to do whatever we have to do to make sure we never let another child die. If it takes more taxes, then so be it. We use tax dollars for everything else. What can be more important than our children? County Commissioners, put our money where your mouths are and get the Department of Social Services the staff they need so this never, ever happens again.

Catherine Robinson, Gold Hill: I would support spending more tax money to bring in more staff to the Department of Social Services. You've got people out there killing the next generation of this country. If there's not going to be a stop put to it, then this country is going to be worse off. Yes, I would support that and I hope it goes through.

Burnie Hudsteth, Rockwell: No, I do not agree that more money for Social Services will be effective. I've had dealings with members of the Child Protection Unit when I reported some parents who were using crack cocaine while their children were in the home.

It's almost hopeless for a grandparent or a father to get custody of children even when they're in an unsafe environment with two crack cocaine parents, with the attitude of Social Services. They need a shakeup over there. Grandparents or neighbors or anyone else who turn in people for abuse, they're just labeled as trouble makers by Social Services.

They just don't want to deal with it. They said their job was to keep parents together, that being a crack addict didn't matter, the children didn't matter. Even if they had to put parents on welfare, their job was to keep families together, I wrote a lengthy letter to the Salisbury Post several years ago. Nothing came of it.

Freeman: Let's fix process

Medical community wants to work with DSS

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

A task force on child abuse can't meet soon enough for Jim Freeman.

As director of Rowan Regional Medical Center, he's used to looking for ways to heal people.

And he didn't need a state report to tell him that the medical community and Social Services need to find ways to talk to each other more clearly if they're going to heal abused children and save lives.

Abuse killed two Rowan County children — 6-year-old Budde Clark and 19-month-old Christopher Jones. That's evidence enough.

If medical providers and the Department of Social Services had communicated better, says a state report, investigators could have known the children were at risk for further abuse. And if they had known, would the children still be alive?

Nobody knows the answer.

But a lot of people are worrying about the question — and want to do everything possible to save the lives of the Budde Clarks and the Christopher Joneses of the future.

"We need to educate all the players as to what the process is," says Freeman. "To educate them about what each of our responsibilities are to improve our service. What's the law? What we can and cannot do. How to improve communications.

"And then, quite frankly, we need to hold each other accountable, all the players — the emergency room, DSS, whoever. We need to know what each player is, what we can and can't do — and hold each other accountable."

John Shaw, director of the Rowan County Health Department, also focuses heavily on the word accountable.

The state team's first recommendation in review and recommendations following the Rowan County child fatalities presented here two weeks ago says Social Services and medical providers should develop a procedure — they call it a "protocol" — to make sure Social Services

END CHILD ABUSE: "Let's do it. Let's move ahead," says Dr. Jack Dribbs of the hospital's emergency medicine department gets accurate information quickly and responds appropriately.

"When you put together a protocol," Shaw explains, "you basically set out how each agency will do its job, so putting together the protocol really becomes critical."

Once established, the procedure "spells out what we agree to do — what the hospital agrees to do, what the doctors agree to do, what DSS agrees to do — and that becomes the document of accountability."

Positive force

And a document of accountability, he adds, is a positive force for everyone.

Shaw was on the special state review team appointed when public outrage erupted over the deaths of Clark, Jones and 16-year-old Trola Miller. The questions were loud enough to grab the attention of Gov. Jim Hunt, who asked for the special review.

Shaw's also been asked to be a member of the Rowan County Child Abuse Task Force. He thinks the task force should focus on the state report and reach consensus among all the people and agencies responsible on how each of the recommendations in the report should be carried out.

When he saw the list of people named to the task force, he says, his first thought was, "Each one of these people has a share, a responsibility for protecting children." The task force should help each of them understand where his responsibility starts and ends and where someone else's starts.

"And," he adds, "how we make sure there won't be gaps in the future."

He's as anxious to start moving toward that future as Freeman.

So far no one from the Department of Social Services has contacted either Dr. Jack Kribbs, chairman of the hospital's department of emergency medicine, or Dr. Mark Lins, chairman of the department of pediatrics, or provided them with copies of the state report.

"But I would assume it will happen, and I put in my vote for it," Kribbs says. "Let's do it. Let's move ahead.

"It's too bad it takes bad experiences to do this. But it's more on our minds as a result of these tragedies."

Plan due May 10

Rick Travis, director of the local Social Services department, would not comment personally. In a faxed statement, he said: "Our Improvement Plan is due May 10. We are consulting with the N.C. Division of Social Services and community representatives as we develop the plan. The plan will respond to each recommendation contained in the state's April 10 report.

"We will share the plan with all interested parties when it is finalized. I anticipate that the plan will be released the week of May 5-9."

Kribbs' dealings with Social Services have all been good.

"I have had absolutely no negative interactions at all. I think those folks are overburdened and underpaid."

Most recently he evaluated a child in the emergency department and was troubled because the mother, still an adolescent herself, "paid no attention to the child. She had no interest." She almost dragged the child down the hall for an X-ray.

Kribbs and a nurse decided to call Social Services, they had no evidence the child was physically abused. Someone at Social Services took the report and let him know continued intervention was recommended.

"That's the kind of interaction for the most part — a phone call, verbal interaction, and a report," he says. "Maybe there should be some follow-up, a flag system, maybe a month down the road. I don't have an answer. I can't solve the problem.

"But there clearly needs to be a more effective system — a system of checks and balances."

But he faults no one for that.

"I don't know anybody in the system that doesn't want to do what's right for the child, the patient," he says. But doctors and nurses who see cases like Budde Clark and Christopher Jones might want to meet periodically with Social Services to discuss them or cases like them.

"You can always communicate more effectively if you've met people in person, if you've shook hands. I think that would be a constructive thing to do and I would love to be a part of it."

Dealing with abuse

Doctors have continuous training in dealing with victims of abuse, but "if you keep it on the front burner, you become more aware of it. Child abuse is life threatening. It's a critically important topic."

And in a busy emergency department, he says, "you worry about it. You worry that things are slipping through. You don't hit 100 percent, but you want to hit as close as possible."

Lins, head of the pediatric department, has had no discussions with Social Services either, but he has always been able to contact a Social Services worker for a report and has always received feed back.

"I have not felt any lack of communication or miscommunication," he says. "From what I've read and heard, it does sound like there was some miscommunication or lack of notifying the correct people and follow up from DSS, the medical community and the lay community as well."

He feels the system probably needs someone who tracks reported cases and how they're handled.

"It was a tragedy," he says. "I don't know if it could have been avoided but hopefully it won't occur again."

Says pediatrician Dr. Joe Corpening: "We definitely see more (child abuse) than we saw years ago.

"But we're probably looking for it more than we did years ago. Even if we have one case, we're concerned. The child suffers and you can see death ....

"We call Social Services, and they go from there."

Corpening says he has a great deal of compassion for the Social Services department. "They have a tremendous responsibility and a tremendous overload. They have always worked with us in the past."

The medical community anticipates that will happen now, though none of them has been contacted or provided with copies of the state report.

"Let's fix the process," says Rowan Regional's Jim Freeman. "We need to get in the same room and talk about how to improve this thing. I think all the players are willing to do that. I know the medical people are willing, and I think the DSS people are. It's just a matter of happening, I think.

"It's a real tragic issue and it needs to be dealt with and it's going to take all of us.

"We're ready."

Child abuse task force to meet May 28

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

The Rowan County Child Abuse Task Force will meet for the first time Wednesday, May 28, at 7 p.m in the county administrative building at 130 W. Innes St.

Commissioners Steve Blount and Dave Rowland met with Rick Travis, director of Rowan County Social Services, and County Manager Tim Russell this morning to set a date for the first meeting of the group appointed about five weeks ago.

Commissioners named the task force March 17, following a two-hour closed session with state and local representatives of the social services system. At that time, public outrage had motivated Gov. Jim Hunt to appoint a special team to review the deaths of 6-year-old Budde Clark, 19-month-old Christopher Jones and 16-year-old Trola Miller.

Originally, Blount said in a letter asking seven local people to serve on the task force, commissioners thought it "important to capitalize on the high state of public awareness" surrounding the cases and move quickly.

He asked members to respond as soon as possible with ideas on how the group should be managed, how often it should meet, what subjects should be discussed and other people to add to the group.

However, that decision was changed.

"We were sort of holding off until the state brought back its report," Blount said. "We want to use (the report) as a guideline for things we want to accomplish quickly. Then the task force will live on beyond that to assure we have a high quality child protective service in Rowan County."

The meeting will be open to the public.

"We want the people to come to it," Blount said.

The seven asked initially to serve were: Travis, Sheriff Bob Martin, Salisbury Police Chief Jeff Jacobs, Rowan-Salisbury Schools Superintendent Joe McCann, Rowan Helping Ministries Director Dianne Scott (who's also on the Social Services board), Rowan Regional Medical Center Director Jim Freeman and District Attorney Bill Kenerly.

Others who have been asked, or will be asked include John Shaw, director of the Rowan County Health Department; Chief District Court Judge Anna Mills Wagoner; Elizabeth Cress Poston, Family Crisis Center; Janet McCuley-Blue, Domestic Violence Task Force; Elizabeth Withers Smith, Mary Beth Smith and Police Chiefs Steve Schenk of Spencer, Leon Scales of East Spencer, H. F. Jones of Landis, David Miller of China Grove, Paul Brown of Kannapolis, Danny Kurfees of Cleveland and Clyde Adams of Granite Quarry.

"Others may still be added," Blount said. "We want it to continue to live on. We don't conceive of monthly meetings forever and ever, but initially it would be that active. As we're trying to accomplish those things in the state report, I would think they'd need to meet at least once a month until those things are accomplished. I don't want to determine too much myself. I want this group to determine how to set it up."

Blount said more details of the first meeting will be made public when speakers are confirmed and other details are verified.

Ministers at vigil pray to keep children safe

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

If you're in the middle of a community prayer vigil for abused children — and care deeply about their welfare — you barely hear the long whistle as a train lumbers through town.

Or the music pulsating from the big-wheel truck pausing for a light at the corner of Main and Council streets.

If you're in the middle of an outdoor community prayer vigil on the steps of the Community Building and wind whips hair and coat tails and clouds are full of rain, you smile when the setting sun breaks through — was that a sign? — and keep on praying.

The Rev. Johnson K. Asibuo, pastor of Soldiers Memorial AME Zion Church, convened the vigil, he says, "because I have a love of children. I see children as God's gifts to the world, and I think the community has a responsibility in raising the children. I have realized that some of these children need mentors, and the parents themselves, since so many are so young, need parenting skills. And when I kept seeing child abuse in the news, I couldn't take it any more."

He worried, he says, that when the state finished investigating the deaths of three Rowan children, nothing more would be done to prevent more deaths if the local Department of Social Services doesn't get what it needs to do a better job.

Members of his church worried also, and the idea came during a weekly meeting of the church-community relations committee.

"We have walked to raise awareness," he says, "but only God can change the hearts of people, and only God can put love back into families to prevent child abuse. So we decided to follow up the walk with prayer to God for the community and for the child abuse situation."

So five ministers responded to his call. The Rev. Martha Starks of New Testament Word of Faith, prayed for peace and love in the family. The Rev. Nilous Avery of Mt. Zion Baptist prayed for the families of children who died of abuse. The Rev. Charles Tillett of Sills Creek AME Zion Church in Mooresville asked God to give county commissioners courage and boldness to find the money for Social Services, for more staff and the equipment they need to automate the system. Finally, the Rev. David William Turner of Tower of Power prayed for the Social Services agency and its staff.

Rick Travis, the local Social Services director, was there to thank them all — and clear up a misunderstanding.

"I feel like I need to lean on someone," he said, "and I can't tell you how it has made me feel."

He thanked people in the community who care enough about children that they are willing to speak out.

And Asibou spoke out.

He has heard, he said, that sometimes when people report abuse and neglect to Social Services, someone at Social Services tells those accused of abuse who reported them.

That should not happen, Travis responded. Names are held in confidence.

"If that in fact happens, please tell me," Travis said.

Essie Hogue, a staff member at the Salisbury VA Medical Center, spoke from the crowd to urge people to ask lawmakers to impose stiffer penalties on child abusers and the media to publicize warning signs of abuse. She also volunteers with the guardian ad litem program, which advocates for children in trouble in the courts.

And when it was all over, Asibuo was happy about the vigil.

"We all agree that Salisbury is a beautiful place to live," he says, "and we don't want our name tarnished as a child abuse city."

In his native Ghana, he says, "children are very precious and valuable. We all say it takes a village to raise a child. I was raised in that system and I know it's true.

"I want Salisbury to be a village that cares about all its children."

How DSS can improve child protection

Some families may need to be split up, and more DSS workers hired, says former N.C. Human Resources secretary

BY PHILLIP J. KIRK JR.
SPECIAL TO THE POST

I am writing this article as a two-time secretary of the Department of Human Resources and as a native of Rowan County who cares deeply about what happens in my home county.

Kirk

As a longtime daily subscriber of the Salisbury Post, I read each and every article about the tragic and sad deaths of three of our county's children. More than once my eyes filled with tears.

Tears for the children who died. Tears for the parents and grandparents and other family members whose relatives died. Tears for the friends who lost children they loved.

But, in all honesty, I also grieved for the overworked and underappreciated social workers and other social services employees whose job responsibilities and results were being challenged.

On the other hand, I have high praise for the reporters at the Salisbury Post. Were it not for their investigative, insightful and honest reporting, these three unfortunate incidents would have been forgotten.

I also experienced concerns for the state employees who did the first "investigation" of Rowan's handling of the tragic abuse and neglect cases. Their work was not as thorough as we expect of state employees. I believe that Secretary David Bruton and Governor Hunt, prodded by well-meaning, sincere citizens of Rowan County, were committed to seeing that a thorough, objective review was done by the appropriate officials.

Obviously, the first review and the ensuing comments by local officials almost completely missed the mark. And the report contributed to the lack of confidence on the part of local citizens in the state's role of policy itself.

Central problem

Equally disturbing was the attitude of secrecy, much of it because of current privacy laws and regulations. Area legislators, especially Reps. Charlotte Gardner and Eugene McCombs and Sen. Betsy Cochrane, are now addressing this deficiency in state law. The public is entitled to know the facts, not rumor, in child abuse and neglect cases, especially when they end up in deaths.

I do, however, share Sen. Jim Phillips' initial concern that this release of all information should not result in unfair criticism of well-meaning DSS employees. I believe the proposed legislation will provide the information the public needs.

What can be learned from these cases?

First and foremost, the report misses the central problem, based upon what I have read in the media. The central problem is the attitude of state and local social services employees that results in too much emphasis being given to keeping families together rather than protecting children. This is due to current state law and regulations and training of social workers which seem to say, "keep families together despite evidence to the contrary." Until this liberal philosophy is changed, I am afraid more tragedies will result.

Second, the Rowan DSS is woefully understaffed, thus causing mistakes to be made. I would urge the board and commissioners to look carefully at providing more front-line workers and very few additional supervisors.

Prevention efforts

Third, we need to look at more prevention programs, especially in the areas of parenting skills training, substance abuse, early childhood education and others.

Fourth, in a general way, I would say careful consideration should be given to implementing the recommendations of the state panel. Action must occur before public interest is lessened too much. More resources need to be devoted to this area. Taxes should be raised as a last resort, but should not be ruled out of the question. Economic growth and small reductions in other areas may provide the necessary funds to do the job.

Finally, I would make a strong pitch for an idea I have been advocating for at least 20 years. Abolish the local departments of social services, mental health, public health and possibly others and create a local department of human services. Do away with the expensive, multiple department heads and all the individual boards which support each department. Replace this expensive and duplicative structure with one human services director and one human services board composed of representatives of all the special interests.

Getting the whole story

While this should not be done solely for financial reasons, it will result in better, more coordinated, more efficient delivery of services to those who need them. Eventually, one common eligibility application could be the result, as could all human services functions being located at one place, thus saving transportation problems for the poor. One case manager could work with a disadvantaged family in order to address all their needs rather than having to deal with so many government employees who often do not have access to the whole story.

Let's be positive about what has happened in Rowan County in the past several months, quit criticizing each other, and take action which will result in tremendous improvements for real people. Good luck.

'COMMITTED TO EXCELLENCE'

Rowan's test of leadership

Salisbury Post
4/23/97

Signs along Interstate 85 welcome travelers to Rowan County, a county "committed to excellence." Rowan leaders now face the job of living up to that pledge at a time when several county services have fallen well below excellence.

Before county commissioners decide yea or nay on a tax increase, they must consider the scope of need faced by the departments they fund. And they must consider the impact on the county's human capital if they don't turn the situation around.

What's hurting Rowan now is triage's failure to take care of other needs in the meantime.

This is not just about child-abuse deaths. Budde Clark, Christopher Jones and Trola Miller are the most visibly tragic examples of children falling through society's safety net, but they are not the only ones whose potential will never be realized.

Think of those who have not been able to get mental health services at the soon-to-be-dismantled Tri-County Mental Health. Think of the children whose needs are not being fully addressed in our public school system, which ranks 62nd in per-pupil spending statewide and compares even less favorably on some test scores.

Rising tide?

Commissioners in recent years have taken a "triage" approach, investing heavily where they believe county dollars can have the most impact over time. They invested in the Fieldcrest Cannon Stadium (a disappointing gamble so far) and the Summit Corporate Center (a success). Believing that a rising tide lifts all boats, commissioners expect new industry to put more money in county coffers to deal with problems, and put more money into citizens' pockets so they have fewer problems for government to solve.

What's hurting Rowan now is triage's failure to take care of other needs in the meantime. Until economic development starts reaping benefits, other departments have been left with low funding and less-than-standard staffing. And the casualties are mounting up: a tragically overworked Social Services staff, a school system in danger of losing its momentum toward improvement, a mental health system in disarray. The impact reverberates in thousands of Rowan households.

This is not a matter of simple belt-tightening and living without luxuries. It borders on neglect.

Into a new era

So should commissioners approve all the requests from Social Services, even though it could raise the tax rate by 2 cents? Should they rubberstamp the 7-cent bite the school board's budget request would gobble up of the tax rate? Should they give mental health services and the health department a blank check?

No, not automatically. But neither should they go into budget-making season with the attitude that keeping the tax rate steady is the top priority. The interstate signs say "excellence," not "cheapness." The growth Rowan is enjoying should boost tax revenues and make some improvements possible, and many citizens earnestly hope commissioners and the county manager will study other ways to bolster the services that mean so much to so many lives. There are worse things that could happen than a tax increase.

Citizens look to county commissioners to lead — to make logical decisions at crucial turning points, and to move the county forward. The people who bravely take on the responsibilities of public office know that's part of the deal. Commissioners, led by Chairman Jim Neely, now face the opportunity to steer Rowan through a period of crisis and into what could be a new era of strength and potential. They should embrace that commitment to excellence and make the most of this moment. The public is behind them.

Child deaths

Area residents in Raleigh to ask for records to be open

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

Four area residents went to Raleigh this morning to ask state legislators to open child fatality records to help save lives.

Dave Rowland, Mary Beth Smith, Lisa Coley and Elizabeth Cook were scheduled to testify before the Human Relations Committee of the House of Representatives just before noon today.

They were to speak on behalf of a bill titled "An act to improve child protection by requiring better disclosure of child fatality records."

Rep. Charlotte Gardner, a Rowan Republican, introduced the bill in the House last week. Sen. Betsy Cochrane, a Davie County Republican, introduced a similar bill in the Senate last week.

Fighting end-of-the-session deadlines, both women introduced the bills in the wake of the deaths of three Rowan County children — 6-year-old Budde Clark, 19-month-old Christopher Jones and 16-year-old Trola Miller.

All three had been subjects of Rowan County Department of Social Services investigations before their deaths, but local officials and citizens looking for accountability were frustrated when state and local records were

➤ See Child, Page 2C

withheld from public scrutiny because of confidentiality claims.

The bill calls for records to become public when a child dies if neglect or abuse had been reported about the child or the child's family to Social Services or if the child had gotten child protective services within the previous 12 months.

That would include medical and hospital records as well as any records maintained by state, county or local agencies, such as emergency medical services, police, medical examiners, health and mental agencies, schools or Social Services.

But the bill also allows an agency to get a court order to keep information confidential if it would pose a threat to the health or mental health or safety of a member of the family or compromise a criminal investigation.

The four area people were each asked to make an initial statement to the committee and then respond to questions from committee members or others attending the hearing.

Rowland's statement was to concern his role as a Rowan County commissioner responsible for voting on funding for local agencies, including the Department of Social Services.

Coley was to speak from her perspective as a nurse; Smith, an attorney, from her perspective within the legal system and as a concerned citizen who worked with her mother, Elizabeth Smith, to get the attention of Gov. Jim Hunt; and Cook, editor of the Salisbury Post, on how difficult it is to get information which reflects accountability of local agencies when it must come from anonymous sources.

The committee, co-chaired by Julia Howard, a Republican from Davie County, and Marvin Aldridge, a Republican from Pitt County, was scheduled to meet at 11 a.m.

DSS funding

On another call-in, The Post asked readers if they support more funding for the Department of Social Services to strengthen its child protection unit. We asked if readers support extra money even if means a tax increase. Here are two late comments from readers:

Ray Martin, Salisbury: I do not support spending additional money for this Child Protection Services, the Department of Social Services. They threw too much money down there for Fieldcrest Cannon Stadium and everything, threw it down in Cabarrus when they need it up here. This is coming back on David Treme, blowing our money down there when it should have been up here. He should take care of his home place before he thinks about a bunch of Kannapolis people or Fieldcrest Cannon people using our money.

I definitely do not think that we should spend more money. I do not want more taxes. I'm taxed too much because I'm a senior citizen now. Thousands of us in Rowan County can't afford to pay more taxes because he's already got his pockets full of money. Empty his pockets and use it where it's supposed to be used instead of elsewhere.

Editor's note: Salisbury City Manager David Treme has nothing to do with Fieldcrest Cannon Stadium or the Department of Social Services. Rowan County commissioners decided to build the stadium and control local spending for the Department of Social Services. The county manager is Tim Russell.

John Burns, Salisbury: Every time a social program raises its ugly head, the first and only solution suggested seems to be more tax dollars. Whether it's child abuse, drug abuse, more jails or poor performance in our schools, the only solution advanced is to give us more people and more tax dollars. I think it's time to learn to do more with less. Learn to set priorities. Learn to order priorities. Learn to suggest how to eliminate root causes of problems, deal with some cause-and-effect diagrams. Learn how to do the job right the first time, every time. Critically evaluate what is being done and how it can be improved. I'm not in favor of spending any more tax dollars on any government program until they become much more efficient in what they do and eliminate as much of the waste out of all these programs as can possibly be taken out of it.

Why didn't hospital keep bruised child?

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

The question surfaced first at a news conference at the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

Why didn't Rowan Regional Medical Center keep 19-month-old Christopher Jones on Jan. 2?

That was a month before he was beaten to death in his home.

But the bruises on his body, his lips, the blood blisters on his face, his head, his bloody nose, his black and blue and "bitten" scrotum disturbed the medical staff. They took pictures, called the social worker on duty that night twice to report suspected child abuse and sound an alarm.

But the social worker was busy on other cases and didn't go to the hospital that night.

A month later — in February — the baby's mother, Sheila Jones, and her boyfriend took him to another hospital. That time it was too late. The baby died of "blun trauma injuries," and th boyfriend, Jeremy Butcher, ha been charged with murder.

A month after that, at the pres conference reviewing socia workers' actions in the case Social Services Director Rich Travis said medical personnel a Rowan Regional Medical Cente could have refused to let Sheil

Jones take her son home in January. But they didn't, and social workers saw the baby within the legally required 72 hours, he said. By that time, social workers didn't consider his injuries severe enough to remove him from his home.

Could the hospital have held the baby?

Yes, the law allows it. But there are strings.

To do so, the doctor or the hospital administrator must get a court order from the chief district court judge and certify in writing that the child should remain for medical treatment or that it is unsafe for him to return to his parent or caretaker. Copies of the written certification must be attached to the child's record and given to his parent.

As soon as the doctor or hospital administrator gets the authority to keep the child, N.C. Statute 7A-549 says he must contact the Social Services director who should immediately begin an investigation of the case.

But hospital Chief Executive Officer Jim Freeman doesn't know of any time the hospital has used the law to keep a child.

"It's my understanding that the hospital can't do that without having the benefit of an investigation of the home issues and environment issues," he says. Hospital administrators and physicians need to be careful that they not accuse people without significant facts, he adds.

"If you know what the outcome is," he says, "you can always look back and guess this should have been done. But most of the time, we don't know the facts. It is a difficult issue."

And most of the time, doctors say, Social Services workers call back and work with the staff to protect the child.

Dr. Joe Carpening, a pediatrician in Salisbury since 1955, says he has put children with physical injuries in the hospital when he was worried about abuse.

"Then we immediately call Social Services," he says. "We expect them to pick it up. It's their legal hand."

He and his partners at the Salisbury Children's Clinic have had a couple of cases in the past few years in which children were brought to the hospital with fractures.

"We felt very strongly that abuse had occurred. We felt we had medical evidence there was abuse."

There have also been times they've decided the children should not go back to the person who's taken care of them, and they have never had problems working with Social Services.

But it's complicated, says Dr. Jack Kribbs, chairman of the emergency department.

Medical education itself is so overwhelming and the magnitude of information is increasing every day.

"What would probably be better," he says, "would be to have a consultant at your finger tips, a legal consultant who was available" who could advise the doctor on what to do.

Thursday, Lisa Coley, an emergency room nurse at Rowan Regional who is trained in detecting and documenting child abuse, was one of five Rowan County residents who went to Raleigh to tell lawmakers to open Social Services records when a child dies.

And she says she didn't know until after Christopher Jones died that the law gives the hospital the right to keep a child.

"Usually what the doctors do is tell Mom there's some medical reason to keep the child," Coley says, "and keep him on a medical basis."

But Freeman doesn't believe anything is gained by pointing fingers.

"There's enough blame to go around," he says. "I have never discounted that the medical facility does have more responsibility for working with the other team players to resolve this issue in the future. That doesn't help the past children and their families.

"But rather than try to fix blame as to why one person didn't do one thing or the other, let's look to the future as to how we can fix the problem. This law does not solve the problem. We just need to all get in the same room and make sure we know what each other's responsibility is and hold each other accountable and get on with it. We need to look to the future."

"It was a tragedy," says Dr. Mark Lins, chairman of Rowan Regional's pediatric department. "I don't know if it could have been avoided, but hopefully it won't occur again."

"Rather than try to fix blame as to why one person didn't do one thing or the other, let's look to the future as to how we can fix the problem. ... We just need to make sure we know what each other's responsibility is."

Death penalty sought in three murder cases

BY JASON WILLIAMS
SALISBURY POST

State prosecutors hope to send two women and one man to death row for their roles in three unrelated killings which took the lives of two children and a nursing home resident.

The deaths of Budde Lee Clark, 6, Christopher Lee Jones, 19 months, and Ina Mooney Smith, 81, were "heinous, atrocious and cruel" and occurred within a two-week period.

In a fourth and unrelated case, Rowan County Assistant District Attorney Bill Kenerly announced on Wednesday that Elizabeth White, 20, would be tried for second-degree murder in the Feb. 3 shooting death of 16-year-old Trola Miller.

Miller died after being shot outside a housing complex. White is scheduled to go on trial Aug. 11.

Thursday afternoon, accused murderers Robin Gosnell, 40, and Linda Mooney Smith, 30, appeared in Rowan County Superior Court — handcuffed together — for arraignment and to hear whether prosecutors would seek the death penalty.

Jeremy Butcher, 23, also appeared in court for the same reason.

During the hearings:

■ Smith pleaded not guilty to first-degree murder. She allegedly killed her grandmother, Ina Mooney, on Feb. 12. Mooney died in bed at Brian Center Health and Rehabilitation, 635 Statesville Blvd.

Mooney died of asphyxiation. During the arrest, authorities served Smith with a 1990 warrant for possession of stolen goods — a firearm. She pleaded not guilty to that charge, also. Court-appointed attorney Bob Davis is representing her.

■ Gosnell pleaded not guilty to felony child abuse and first-degree murder in the death of her 6-year-old stepson, Budde Clark. Kenerly said the boy died on Jan. 31 in Cleveland from "blunt trauma" and other injuries. He did not elaborate.

Court-appointed attorney Rick Locklear is representing Gosnell.

■ Butcher pleaded not guilty to felony child abuse and first-degree murder in the death of Christopher Jones. Investigators have said Butcher was watching the child of his girlfriend at her home near China Grove. Kenerly said the toddler died from "blunt trauma" injuries and did not elaborate in court.

Tom Thompson and Bays Shoaf are Butcher's court-appointed attorneys.

Smith, Gosnell and Butcher did not make any statements in

In the same hearing, Kenerly and Thompson about obtaining Department of Social Services records in Butcher's case.

Kenerly said Social Services was involved in some child protective complaints at the child's residence a year before the death. Kenerly told Superior Court Judge Henry E. Frye that he would give Thompson "exculpatory" information from those records, or information that might favor the defendant. Thompson said he wanted his own copy and he could decide what information might help his client.

Kenerly wanted a limited number of copies of the file because he did not want the information to find its way into "the newspaper." Kenerly said he's trying to avoid moving the trial outside Rowan County.

Thompson also said that he was interested in privacy and added that he would not be releasing any information.

Prosecutors and the defense have filed motions for the records, but Social Services officials have not responded in writing.

Judge Frye ruled that he would look at the documents next week in chambers and decide what to give each side.

Open child death records,

BY ERICA BESHEARS
SPECIAL TO THE POST

RALEIGH — Five Rowan County residents told members of the House Human Resources Committee Thursday that the state should let the public see records in child fatality cases involving the Department of Social Services.

The committee, which is considering a bill that would make the records public, heard Thursday from Rowan County Commissioner Dave Rowland; Lisa Coley, a nurse at Rowan Regional Medical Center trained in detecting child abuse; attorney Mary Beth Smith; her mother, Elizabeth, also a registered nurse; and Elizabeth Cook, editor of The Salisbury Post.

Opposition to bill

Kevin Fitzgerald, director of the state Division of Social Services, also appeared before the committee to oppose the bill, filed by Rep. Charlotte Gardner, R-Rowan. Fitzgerald worked with a special state review team that investigated the deaths of three Rowan children, all who were known to Social Services workers before they died.

Gardner said she filed the bill after the community expressed concern and outrage over the children's deaths. "This situation brought to light in a big way that we in the General Assembly need to take steps to save children's lives."

Rowan residents tell lawmakers

Rep. Julia Howard, R-Davie, chairwoman of the House committee, decided that the committee would resume debate next Tuesday morning on the records bill.

Gardner filed the bill on behalf of the N.C. Press Association. Social Services officials and other authorities released few details after the deaths of Budde Lee Clark, 6, Christopher Jones, 19 months, and Trola Miller, 16. Clark and Jones died from abuse, and the Post subsequently quoted sources saying Social Services knew of abuse complaints about the children before they died.

Getting the truth

The Rowan residents testified to how much easier the truth about the deaths could have been made known if the records were open.

"The county was turned upside down" by the controversy, Rowland told lawmakers. The inability of Social Services and other officials to publicly discuss how the agency handled the cases has unnecessarily drawn out the time needed to correct the situation.

Mary Beth Smith testified that it shouldn't have taken the work of a newspaper to bring the issue to light. "Had it not been for the persistence ... we would not have detected the areas that needed help," she said.

"... These children are dead. There is no protection issue for that child any more."

Nurse made photos

Coley, a nurse, testified that she had taken photos of one of the children at the hospital and notified the Department of Social Services a month before the child was killed.

The Post reported previously that Social Services workers never interviewed Coley and did not pick up the pictures until the child was beaten a second time and died.

Coley said that open records would show which agencies did their jobs and which did not.

"We can show the public that we are doing what is required," she said.

Elizabeth Smith pointed out that the only people who should object to opening records after the death of a child are those who were negligent in their duties.

"The only people who need to be concerned ... are the ones who are not doing their job," she said. "There's a difference between confidentiality and secrecy."

Elizabeth Smith implored the committee to pass Gardner's bill so child advocates would have another tool to combat child abuse. "We don't have the tools of law," she said. "In House Bill 949, you have the tools in front of you."

Cook spoke about why the Post dug deeper into the story and the roadblocks reporters ran into uncovering the story. She also said the newspaper normally will not use unnamed sources because their credibility is always suspect in readers' eyes. In this case, however, the newspaper allowed an exception because if the overriding question of whether public agencies properly protected those children.

Fitzgerald maintained that the records should stay closed. He said that if Gardner's bill passed, there was a chance North Carolina could lose about $600,000 annually in federal child abuse prevention money because the records would be more open than federal guidelines allow.

Gardner questioned Fitzgerald about the two separate reports on the child fatalities. He answered that the first review looked only at Social Services actions and records. After public pressure surfaced, the department launched a multi-disciplinary review that located problems with the "protection standards that are in place."

In the short discussion of the bill that followed testimony, legislators brought up concerns about when the records would be made public, what harm the records would do to families and what kind of trend the bill could start.

"We have got to be very cautious," said Rep. Joanne Bowie, R-Guilford, who said she was working on a similar bill in the judiciary committee. "It's just a really scary area. I know everyone wants to help

What did the DSS review team find? Here are the answers

Editor: Earlier this month, a state review team released its report on child protection efforts in Rowan County. Here is the complete text of the report:

The deaths of Christopher Jones, Budde Lee Clark and Trola Miller within a five-day period in January-February 1997 captured the attention and heart of the citizens of Rowan County and caused many in the community to question whether all was done to prevent these fatalities.

The North Carolina Division of Social Services conducts a review of the services provided to the family in the event of deaths of certain children who are known to the local Department of Social Services. After the Division reviewed these cases, elected officials, the general public and the media were dissatisfied with the findings, and it was clear the community wanted more information about what had happened and what could be done to prevent further deaths.

Gov. Hunt directed Dr. David Bruton, secretary of the Department of Human Resources, to coordinate the comprehensive review. Dr. Bruton appointed a multidisciplinary team to conduct this review and to make recommendations to improve the functioning of the Rowan County DSS and the Division's child fatality review process. The team was asked to not only review the DSS case records and interview appropriate DSS staff, but also to interview hospital and law enforcement personnel directly involved in the cases and related materials. Dr. Bruton took the additional action of engaging the American Humane Association in a formal analysis of the Division's child protection standards and child fatality review process.

The review team was charged with the following two objectives:

1) Assess the actions of Rowan County Department of Social Services' staff in the three cases; determine compliance with child protection and placement standards; and make recommendations for improved agency functioning; and

2) Evaluate the initial reviews conducted by the N.C. Division of Social Services' staff; determine the integrity of the initial review findings; and make recommendations for improving the review process.

It should be understood that the second review was distinctly different from the initial review in that the review team was comprised in part of professionals from outside of the social services system, looked beyond the Division's initial review, and therefore had the benefit of information and perspectives not incorporated in the Division's initial assessment.

The review team assembled in Rowan County on March 26 and 27, 1997 to respond to this challenge and to ask questions about the deaths of these three children. The team took the challenge seriously in recognition that an estimated 95,000 children are reported to be abused and neglected annually in the state and that there are currently over 12,300 children in the foster care system. The team reviewed reports and records, conducted interviews in person and by telephone, and identified key issues that needed to be addressed.

We acknowledge that the details of the estimated 25-30 children in North Carolina every year who die from child abuse at the hands of their parents and caretakers are all tragic and are all preventable. Many capture the attention and hearts of our citizens, just as the deaths of Christopher, Trola and Budde have done. We are all challenged to harness the energy and emotions generated by these deaths in a commitment to prevent child abuse and neglect before it escalates to the tragedy of a death.

We also want to acknowledge the open attitude of the staff of the Rowan County DSS during our review process. It was evident that the staff viewed this process as a learning opportunity and were eager to hear our feedback. It was also clear that they wanted us to be open and honest in our findings. We commend them for their dedication and commitment.

Objective One: Access the actions of Rowan County Department of Social Services staff in the three cases; determine compliance with child protection and placement standards; make recommendations for improved agency functioning.

The findings of the review team related to the actions of the Rowan County Department of Social Services encompass three major areas of practice: 1) reporting of suspected child abuse and neglect; 2) investigation/assessment of reported child abuse and neglect; and 3) issues of supervision, staffing and training. The findings are listed below.

Reporting of suspected child abuse and neglect

Finding No. 1: The review team found evidence of both a lack of communication and miscommunication between hospital and other medical providers and Rowan County DSS staff regarding pertinent case information.

Recommendations for No.1:

■ Rowan County Department of Social Services and medical providers should develop a protocol to ensure accurate sharing of information and appropriate response times by DSS social workers, as well as foster open and frequent communications.

■ In conducting protective service investigations, Rowan County DSS staff should consistently request and review all pertinent medical records as provided for in N.C.GS7A-544.

■ Medical professionals providing services to Rowan County families should be encouraged to pursue training in the identification and reporting of child abuse and neglect, becoming active partners in the investigative process.

Finding No. 2: The review team found evidence that a number of community members had reason to suspect abuse and neglect but did not make a report to the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

Recommendations for No. 2:

■ The Community Child Protection Team and/or other representative groups are encouraged to develop an action plan to enhance public awareness in Rowan County of the North Carolina law that requires anyone who suspects child abuse and/or neglect to report the suspected abuse or neglect to the Department of Social Services.

■ Community professionals who work with Rowan County children and families should be encouraged to participate in training on recognizing and reporting child abuse and neglect.

Finding No. 3: The review team identified concerns regarding after-hour Children's Protective Services coverage at the Department of Social Services.

Recommendations for No. 3:

■ The Rowan County DSS should develop a system for on-call, after-hours coverage that allows for adequate workload management and supervision. Back-up relief and supervision must be readily available and able to assist in overload situation. The agency should explore options to ensure sufficient after-hours coverage, including the establishment of a specialized position or compensatory time off for DSS staff who must work daytime hours as well.

■ A written procedure for after-hours reporting should be developed and shared with individuals and agencies who may have the occasion to make reports of child abuse and neglect outside of normal agency operating hours. This procedure should include the proper identification and response by Rowan County DSS staff to high risk situations.

Finding No. 4: The review team identified some areas to improve in the Children's Protective Services intake process used by the Rowan County DSS.

Recommendations for No. 4:

■ The intake forms used by Rowan County Department of Social Services need to be expanded to ensure the collection of all pertinent information. The Division of Social Services has samples for reference.

■ A structured format for the intake interview process needs to be utilized as described in policy.

Investigation/assessment of reported child abuse and neglect

Findings for No. 5: The review team found evidence that the focus of the child protective services investigations/assessments conducted by Rowan County DSS was too narrow.

Recommendations for No. 5:

■ Rowan County Department of Social Services' staff should be required to focus on all aspects of investigation/assessment and not just on the reported incident; DSS staff must conduct comprehensive assessments of family functioning, including safety issues, in both investigation and treatment cases.

■ Rowan County Department of Social Services' staff should more effectively utilize the risk assessment process to assist in service delivery.

■ Rowan County Department of Social Services' staff should frequently utilize the expertise of medical, psychological, and law enforcement resources in conducting investigations.

Finding No. 6: The review team determined that several key individuals were not interviewed by Rowan County DSS staff as part of the investigative process.

Recommendations for No. 6:

■ The Rowan County Department of Social Services should ensure that investigative staff interview all individuals who

➤ See Report, Page 5E

Report

provide care to the child and all individuals who have pertinent information about reported child abuse and neglect; DSS should follow up and utilize all information received at intake.

Finding No. 7: The review indicated a need for additional resources to support the work of front-line Rowan County DSS staff engaged in the demanding work of child protection.

Recommendations for No. 7:

■ The community should ensure Child Medical Examiner and Child Mental Health Evaluation Provider services in Rowan County.

■ Child Protective Services staff should have access to cellular phones to enlist needed assistance from the field.

■ Child Protective Services staff need additional clerical support to enhance documentation and expand service delivery time.

■ The Rowan County DSS should provide computer resources to enhance documentation and improve the transfer of information among agencies.

■ The Community Child Protection Team, Child Fatality Prevention Team, and/or other representative groups should assess the availability of effective abuse/neglect prevention services needed in Rowan County so DSS staff can refer at-risk families.

Supervision, staff and training issues

Recommendations for No. 8:

■ DSS staff need to be retrained on the use of risk assessment tools and processes to assist in making important decisions about the safety of children.

■ The DSS should ensure that all child welfare staff have ongoing access to training that promotes professional competence; this applies to all staff, but particularly to new and inexperienced staff members. This includes attending child protective services, foster care and adoption training provided by the Division of Social Services depending upon work assignments. Team training with representatives of other community agencies is particularly encouraged.

■ DSS staff need training on child development and appropriate discipline techniques.

Finding No. 9: The review team found numerous examples of inadequate documentation of services provided by agency staff. The case record must clearly document services and activities provided by the worker.

Recommendations for No. 9:

■ Training should be provided by the Division of Social Services on proper documentation and record keeping.

■ Supervisors must be held accountable for case documentation and thoroughness of records.

■ Materials contained in case records need to be dated, or date stamped, when received by the agency to facilitate documentation of receipt of critical information.

Finding No. 10: The review team identified some areas in staff supervision within DSS that need improvement.

Recommendations for No. 10:

■ Supervisors need to meet regularly with individual caseworkers for ongoing case planning and oversight of program areas. Supervisors should require frequent status reports on all cases.

■ There must be close, daily supervision of case workers with little work experience or with a record of questionable work performance.

■ DSS management should conduct periodic internal reviews of the agency's child welfare service program.

■ Supervisors need to ensure that documentation occurs in a timely, accurate manner.

■ DSS management needs to exercise leadership in establishing and maintaining interagency agreements, protocols and relationships.

Finding No. 11: Because missed steps, a narrow focus and inadequate documentation can result from work overload, the review team looked at caseworker and caseload ratios. At the time of the review, the caseload size and supervisor/worker ratios showed major deviations from the recommended state standards. The ratio of supervisors to front-line social workers was one-to-eight and one-to-nine as opposed to the recommended ratio of one-to-five. The number of abuse/neglect investigations being conducted by agency staff ranged from 16 to 27 cases. The state standard for investigative worker caseloads is 12. In March 1997, alone, child protective services investigators received approximately 22 new cases each.

Recommendations for No. 11:

■ It is crucial that Rowan County DSS achieve the recommended caseload ratios: No more than 12 investigations being conducted by investigative staff; and no more than 15 substantiated "treatment" cases per staff member; and no more than 15 families, containing no more than 20 children, in foster care and adoptions caseloads.

■ It is crucial that Rowan County DSS achieve the recommended supervisor/worker ratios: No more than five investigative or treatment social workers per supervisor, and no more than six foster care/adoptions social workers per supervisor.

■ Rowan County DSS should ensure that staff with insufficient training and experience have lower caseloads and greater supervision.

■ Rowan County DSS should closely monitor the number of reports of child abuse and neglect over time. It is important that staffing levels not fall behind patterns of increased reports.

Objective Two: Evaluate the initial review conducted by Division staff; determine the integrity of the previous review findings; make recommendations for improving the review process.

The N.C. Division of Social Services has been recognized for having a formal fatality review process in place since 1991. The current review process is a mechanism by which a county Department of Social Services and the Division identify management system and policy issues that inhibit effective child protection.

The current review process is not designed to be a comprehensive investigation of the fatality under study. It is a limited review that focuses on critical protection standards as defined in policy regarding child protective services and child placement services.

The more comprehensive review reported here is much more in depth than the initial Division review. It was anticipated that this review comprising professionals from multiple disciplines and conducting in-depth interviews with persons involved with the cases would provide more information than the initial reviews.

Findings

Our review of the Division's initial reviews on these three deaths found a number of strengths, including certain critical standards identified and useful information regarding the agency's strengths as well as areas for improvement of agency functioning. We found some critical issues to be appropriately identified. In addition to the Division's initial assessment, we found in each of the three cases one or more additional standards that had not been met and were not identified in the initial review. These included deficiencies in caseload ratios, the lack of interviews with certain persons associated with the child, interviews with the child, and utilization of medical or psychological resources.

In the case of Christopher Jones, the failure to interview all persons with pertinent information resulted in a high-risk situation not being recognized and the resultant lack of appropriate actions to protect the child. This was not detected by the initial state review.

In the case of Budde Clark, the initial review accurately points out that two critical protection standards and a number of other standards were not met. The report indicates that the scope of the agency involvement was far too narrow given the amount of evidence from the record indicating that the child might be jeopardized in aspects of his life other than the nose injury. However, the initial review did not identify the need for a comprehensive medical evaluation to address the broader issue of Budde's general health and safety.

In the case of Trola Miller, the initial review did not indicate the absence of critical information from school officials and foster family members nor the absence of appropriate medical and psychological evaluations.

These observations lead us to conclude that current state reviews are, themselves, too narrow. Because of the current design of the process, important issues were not identified. These included deficiencies in the level of supervision provided to the case workers, lack of attention of the medical information relating to the cases, and the dependence on what appears in writing in the record. The latter is especially important in that we find evidence that critical information in one record had still not been obtained by Rowan County DSS at the time of the initial review.

In summary, even in the limited scope of the current review process, we found the initial review of these three fatalities by the Division of Social Services missed certain critical findings.

Information was available to the Rowan County Department of Social Services that, if obtained and appropriately analyzed, indicated, at least with respect to Budde Clark and Christopher Jones, that these children were at risk of further abuse and neglect.

We recommend that a multi-disciplinary group including professionals outside of the Division of Social Services be appointed to design a more comprehensive child fatality review process. The review team acknowledges that a more comprehensive process will require a commitment of additional financial resources; however, we believe this to be an important investment in the state's efforts to prevent child fatalities. In designing the expanded review process, consideration should be given to the following:

- Broadening the scope of the reviews beyond the last 12 months of agency involvement.
- Broadening the scope of the reviews beyond those items specified on the standards to include any and all areas known to be needed for quality social work practice.
- Including someone with medical expertise and at least one person outside of the Division in the reviews.
- Interviewing certain critical parties such as the workers, their supervisors and others as needed.
- Exploring ways to loosen confidentiality restrictions in order to satisfy the public' need for accountability.
- Strengthening the review of an agency's accuracy in the assignment of risk and use of the risk assessment form as a tool in guiding appropriate service delivery.
- In certain cases, postponing the reviews until complete autopsy findings are available.
- Including important information about the role and involvement of the broader community in protecting children.

Rowan County continues to focus on these three recent tragedies. Mistakes have been identified.

We have learned and are continuing to learn. While conducting this review, the team was encouraged by the positive response in Rowan County. The Board of Social Services and the Department of Social Services' staff cooperated fully and supplied information critical to this review. The local media has responded by informing the community of the circumstances surrounding these tragic deaths. The Board of Commissioners responded by establishing the Child Abuse Task Force. A more informed public has already responded by reporting more suspected neglect and abuse cases.

Implementation of these recommendations must begin with a willingness to change our individual and collective behavior. We have already shown a willingness to re-examine how we have responded in the past and a receptivity to taking a fresh look at how we will respond in the future.

The review team hopes that this report will contribute to the development of both a long-range plan and an immediate action plan that will enhance the safety and well-being of all children in Rowan County and throughout our state.

Motley crew takes on N.C. Legislature

It wasn't exactly 'Mr. Smith Goes to Washington,' but Raleigh trip opened some eyes

Dave Rowland and I walked down a Raleigh sidewalk and approached an intersection. "Be careful," he warned. "If you trip and fall into traffic, I'll never convince people back home that I didn't push you."

ELIZABETH COOK

Politics does bring about strange alliances sometimes.

Last Thursday morning Rowland, a Rowan County commissioner, spoke along with Mary Beth Smith, Elizabeth Withers Smith, Lisa Coley and me to a legislative committee. The topic was opening up confidential records after a child has died under certain circumstances. The bill aims, in cases of fatal abuse and neglect, to allow the public to review how various agencies served the child, from Social Services to hospitals to schools.

We were a motley crew of the first order: two nurses, a lawyer, an entrepreneur/commissioner and a newspaper person. Rowland and I are not what you would call good friends; I once wrote a column about his politics that will forever make him leery of me (which is probably wise). The two Smiths, as I came to think of them, are as ardently Democratic as Rowland is Republican.

But we came together from different professions and ideologies to address an issue that has become very important to all of us: protecting children.

Controversy surrounding the deaths of three Rowan children in February shone a bright light on several problems, one of which is this: Confidentiality laws prevent the public from getting a clear understanding of how well agencies that protect children function. With child abuse and neglect rates up, and societal changes putting greater pressure on families, the need for a strong, accountable network of agencies to serve those families is greater than ever.

Opening up confidential records is just one facet of improving child protection. It doesn't kick in until after a child has died. And it would affect few children directly: Only a third of the 43 children who died last year of suspected abuse and neglect in North Carolina were known to their local social services department.

But this measure could be an important step towards increasing public accountability for the agencies which deal with children. And it could very well change the way child protective services workers think about the cases of all the children they serve.

The state has a system of Child Fatality Prevention Task Forces and Child Protection Review Teams to study these situations now, but they work under considerable delay. When the state-mandated Rowan Child Fatality Prevention Task Force next meets, it will be dealing with cases that happened a year ago.

Child fatalities deserve a quicker response.

Lobbying for this bill was a lesson in how the political system works. And right now in Raleigh that system is churning in overdrive as lawmakers push to get their favorite bills through at least one house by the May 1 deadline.

So there we were, determined though a bit disoriented, to explain to the House Human Resources Committee why we thought these records should be opened up.

The committee members had just spent several days debating partial birth abortions, so they were in a testy mood. They listened to us but directed most of their questions to Rep. Charlotte Gardner, R-Rowan, who is sponsoring the bill.

The meeting was over almost as soon as it started, adjourned until the committee is ready to take up the issue again at 7:30 a.m. Tuesday, April 29. Charlotte Gardner believes she can get a favorable vote then. I hope so.

The newspaper's job is to cover the legislature, not get involved in it. But the Post has had an unusual role in the debate following these deaths, and I went to explain to the committee how confidentiality laws had hindered our quest to explain to the public what had happened in the cases of 6-year-old Budde Clark, 19-month old Christopher Jones and 16-year-old Trola Miller.

I can recall their names and ages more easily than I can those of my own children — perhaps because these dead children's ages now are frozen in time.

Because of that sad fact, the five of us went to Raleigh and had our say. It was a lot of driving for a little bit of talking, but we did our part. Each of us knows we have a lot more to do to make children safer in Rowan County, each in our different roles.

Speaking of safety, I did make it across that Raleigh street without injury.

So did Dave Rowland.

TRYING TO COPE: Lisa Coley has attended a week-long Sexual Assault Nurse Examiner seminar to prepare.

It hurts to see child abuse up close

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

Child abuse infected Lisa Coley while she was working in the emergency department at Rowan Regional Medical Center where she's a nurse.

Like an incurable disease. Miserably painful at times. Frightening. Sometimes out of sight. But never gone.

A minute from now, or an hour, or tomorrow, someone could come through the big double doors and into an examining room and often, too often, if she had time, she would cry.

But she never has time for that.

Tears won't help a battered child. So she nurses — cleans a wound, gives a shot, starts an IV. And then she goes for her camera. Maybe that other moment will come when someone must have documentation.

Lisa Coley wasn't born with a passion to do something to ease the pain of abused or neglected children.

"It came from working in the emergency room and seeing the children come in," she says, "from seeing what was happening to them and how they were being treated. And it was completely different from how I thought they should be treated. We see a lot of it — children who have been physically abused, sexually abused, emotionally abused.

"We see everything from the simple things that somebody wouldn't call abuse or neglect — an unkempt child, with dirty clothes and sour milk in a bottle —to bruises, broken bones, burns."

Oh, yes, burns.

"We see cigarette burns. We see burns children suffered because they were immersed in hot water. But you have to look at the injury."

Usually the pattern of the burns themselves will reveal the telltale signs, will tell if it was an accident. Was the child kicking and splashing and something happened? Or was he held down in hot water?

Coley didn't know how much she could learn by looking at an injury until last fall when she took the Sexual Assault Nurse Examiner course, known as SANE.

"I had seen lots of sexual abuse," she says, but when she heard about a week-long seminar in Fredericksburg, Va., she went. "And it told me more than I expected. That really got me going as far as wanting to do something and really noticing more things. What the seminar did for me — and the training I've gotten since then — is improve what I've been doing for nine years."

The seminar — 40 hours of clinical work, a written test, several practical examinations and certification — went far beyond sexual assault.

Available in North Carolina for only a year, the training program started in Memphis, Tenn., in 1976 and has resulted in higher conviction rates, better evidence collection and better coordination between hospitals, law enforcement and social service agencies.

Starting the process

Coley knows the system doesn't always work smoothly.

Reports of suspected abuse can be made by anybody — doctor, nurse, patient advocate, secretary.

Social Services workers usually call doctors back if they make the report, but Coley rarely gets a return call.

"That's disheartening when you go to so much trouble in a specific case."

Coley has recommended that emergency room personnel begin calling law enforcement when they call Social Services, as they do now in sexual assault cases. At the moment, no policy or procedure says notify police if it's physical assault — on adult or child.

"Police may be able to do something if DSS can't," she says.

"I think the most important thing we can do is communicate more with each other, work together. It seems like in the past, all the agencies have been doing their own thing and we've been doing our thing, and nobody knows what the others are doing. It comes together as little as possible. It shouldn't be that way. It should be a team effort."

Right now, Coley is one of a handful of nurses who have earned the child abuse certificate in North Carolina. She is qualified to work closely with child and adult victims of physical and sexual assault, help gather medical evidence, take photographs, participate in legal investigations and serve as an expert witness in court.

Since then, she's worked closely with law enforcement officials, the district attorney's office and others involved with abuse issues. She voluntarily wears a pager 24 hours a day and responds quickly to the hospital's emergency department every time she can to help deal with suspected abuse cases.

The training, she says, made her aware that she still has work to do after she's dealt with the child's physical needs. Documentation is needed. And photographs.

"There are things that can be done that weren't done in the past that can help convict people and get these children out of the homes that are so uncomfortable for them," she says. "I'm all for keeping a child with his family. But they shouldn't suffer to stay there."

Problems with parents

Parents often hurt children because they don't know better, she says.

"If we can take a child out of his home and teach the parents how to parent and send him back, then that needs to be done. But if it's just a case of parents not wanting the child, then something has to be done about that."

Child abuse town meeting set

Prevent Child Abuse North Carolina will host a town meeting on Monday, May 5, from 7 to 10 p.m. at the Catawba Valley Community College Auditorium in Hickory. The public is invited to attend and share comments, concerns and suggestions on child abuse prevention with Prevent Child Abuse representatives.

Information gathered at several town meetings in different parts of the state will be used in the development of a state plan on the prevention of child abuse and neglect.

Prevent Child Abuse is working with Gov. Hunt's office and individuals across the state to develop this plan. Public input gathered at the town meetings is crucial for developing the plan's recommendations.

Prevent Child Abuse is the North Carolina Chapter of the National Committee to Prevent Child Abuse.

She's not the only person in Rowan County pleading for something to be done since news of the deaths of 6-year-old Budde Clark and 19-month-old Christopher Jones burst upon the community on the same winter day in February.

Both had been battered in their own homes.

Both had been the subject of earlier investigations by the Child Protective Services Unit of the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

And both deaths crack open the door on the social problems of this day — teen-age pregnancy, fatherless homes, drugs, school dropouts, fragmented and dysfunctional families.

"The system may have dropped the ball in these situations," says Dr. Jack Kribbs, chairman of the emergency department at Rowan Regional Medical Center, "but that doesn't mean any one individual was at fault. Unfortunately, people start to feel threatened. But this is a tragedy that constitutes a real challenge."

The medical staff in the emergency department sees fragmented and dysfunctional families all the time, he says. The mother's the adolescent. The grandmother is the mother.

"That's the background against which these situations occur," Kribbs says. "And that's a community issue. I think the family is really falling apart. I think the strength that used to be in the family is not there any more. There are exceptions but ... "

His thought hangs in midair.

"If we could get a renewed emphasis on the strength of the family and find a way as a community to address that, it would head us down the road at least. In a limited sense, it's a medical issue, but in a much broader sense it's a family issue and that's a community issue."

Growing problem

"We definitely see more (child abuse) than we saw years ago," says Dr. Joe Corpening, a pediatrician who founded the Salisbury Children's Clinic. "We're probably looking for it more than we did years ago. We probably didn't think those things existed. Now we all associate it with family breakdown."

Everybody has become accustomed to babies in the hospital's newborn nursery with unmarried mothers who don't know if the boyfriend is going to let the baby have his name, he says.

And he's convinced that the engine driving up the number of abused children — and bring death — is the breakdown in moral values and teen-age pregnancy.

Teen-age pregnancy gives young people responsibility they don't want, he says.

"Every time you have a young unmarried mother, you're creating two or three more strikes against her when she's got one already. It interferes with her education so she drops out of school, has financial problems, no father figure, no home situation. It just breaks down every aspect of moral fiber — and it costs society thousands of dollars every year."

Add drugs to the mix and you've got a prescription for pain. Maybe death.

Lisa Coley thinks drugs are the major culprit, and alcohol is almost as bad.

"Of course, I didn't know there was as much drugs around until I started working down there and seeing it," she says. Now she believes drugs lead parents to leaving their children on the street — or with anybody — while they go find a way to feed their addiction.

How often does the emergency room see injuries that are the result of child abuse?

"Probably a lot more than we actually know," Coley says. "We don't have a whole lot who come in and say, 'I want her checked for abuse. I think Mama's been hurting her' or 'I think Daddy's been hurting him' ... "

She believes she examines an average of about two women a month who might be rape victims and reports results to police. But she's afraid to guess how many child abuse cases come through the hospital a month.

"I would say we get two to three general assault cases a day" — adults and children, she says. "I've noticed a tremendous increase in the nine years I've been there."

She works three nights a week and figures she makes at least one call a month about child abuse to Social Services, but that's not necessarily the total even when she's at work because she's not called in on every suspected case. And three nights a week means she's not around all the other shifts that make up 24-hour days and seven-day weeks.

So is there a lot or a little?

One's too many, say the doctors, who agree the numbers are up.

The state estimates that 95,000 children are reported abused or neglected in North Carolina every year.

And the state team who reviewed how Social Services handled the deaths of the children here believe that the estimated 25 to 30 children who die in North Carolina each year at the hands of their parents or caretakers are not only tragic but preventable.

So Coley exults when she sees other members of the medical community going to training classes.

Three more nurses — Amy Webb, Donna Brown and Robin Moose — are enrolled in the next SANE course in September.

"I've already done some photographic things," she says, and the hospital plans to teach all nurses interested to use photographic documentation. "I can sit here all day and tell you how many wounds and bruises this child has, but if I show you a picture, I don't have to say anything. And I don't have to explain to a judge or a jury if it goes to trial."

Others in training

The beginning of this month, she attended a Sexual Assault Summit in Durham and discovered six other people from Rowan were also there — Linda Porter of the Rowan County Sheriff's Department; Karen Barbee and Rory Collins, from the Salisbury Police; Assistant District Attorney Karen Biernacki; Cindy Stevenson, of the Family Crisis Council; and Kathy Bryan, the victim's advocate in the district attorney's office.

The summit was aimed at setting up a county protocol — or procedure — for an interagency sexual and physical assault response team and get them working together.

"It was to set out who was going to call who when," she explains. "If they report to police, do they call me? Do the police take them to the Family Crisis Council? Just how do we work together?"

And they are working together, she says.

"Linda Porter is working on getting a grant for money to put cameras in all the patrol cars in the city and Rowan County. We would also like to have them on the EMS trucks. A lot of times they're the first to respond. They see the scene. Is the house nasty dirty with roaches running all over it? Or is it nice and clean and smells good when DSS visits because they know they're coming?

"And is there drug paraphernalia around or has it been put away? It's important to have cameras out there to get pictures of the initial event, or the place the child is in at the time."

Otherwise, how can Social Services go later and truly evaluate the scene?

Coley recently completed more training, a 40-hour class in Miami on police-medical investigations of deaths.

"It's really forensic nursing," she says. "Basically that means you're combining law and nursing, collecting and preserving evidence so it can't be thrown out because of some little thing and serving as an expert witness in court. It's all extensive documentation."

She's elated so many people are interested.

"You start out with sexual assault nursing and you kind of broaden from there. You go to children's physical assault, adult physical assault, domestic violence cases, but it's hard to expand when there is only one of me."

Now more people are getting training, including nurse Charlie McLaughlin who's interested in forensic nursing.

"The hospital has put a lot of money and support into the training required," Coley says. "By law we have to call DSS if we suspect anything. So if a child's injuries aren't consistent with the mother's story, if the mother says the child fell down and it doesn't look like that's what happened, then we notify DSS. An investigator comes to the hospital and does an initial assessment, which means talking to the family."

And if that's at night, it's not unusual for the social worker on call to ask, "Do I need to come now or can it wait until morning?" she says.

And Coley is sympathetic.

"I know it's because they're on call," she says, "and they don't get the next day off."

And everybody working with abuse needs training.

"A lot of times, we kind of tend to push things back because we don't want to open up a can of worms. But it's important we open up a can and handle it when the worms come out. Sometimes it's hard when they do."

OPEN RECORDS CHANGES

Taxpayers need to know

The General Assembly has made welcome progress this week in requiring public officials to open their records to appropriate public scrutiny.

One bill, sent by a committee to the full Senate, would obligate county and city officials to reveal information about economic incentives used to entice new industry. The second measure, approved by the House on Thursday, would provide public access to all mail going to and from the offices of state officials, except for personal letters.

The measure would provide officials with an incentive of their own — to act with appropriate restraint in offering advantages to industry.

The first bill arose in response to a troubling state Supreme Court ruling that packed a one-two punch: First, the court said, local government officials can vote behind closed doors on incentives such as tax breaks, roads and water line extensions. Second, the justices added, no record of the executive session deliberations need to be kept.

Law's failure

That ruling spoke volumes about the crying need to change the law. Voters are completely entitled to know the details of incentives arrangements, which can often be quite substantial, as well as the discussions that led up to them. It would be grossly unfair to allow a law to stand when it bars taxpayers from understanding how county commissioners or city council members came to offer such benefits.

Raleigh lawmakers are awakening to that concern by approving legislation that would remedy this glaring shortcoming in the law. Under a measure that's proceeded to the Senate floor, after public officials have approved or rejected an incentives package, the press and public would be entitled to know how the officials voted in executive session. In addition, it would become mandatory to keep records of the closed-session discussions and then release them to the press and public once a decision was reached on incentives.

By guaranteeing that secret votes and deliberations would eventually become public knowledge, the measure would provide officials with an incentive of their own — to act with appropriate restraint in offering advantages to industry. In addition, because information would be released only after an incentives package was approved, the proposed law would not short-circuit negotiations while they were in progress.

Sen. Fletcher Hartsell, R-Cabarrus, who is also attorney for the Cabarrus County government, serves on the committee that gave this measure a green light.

Correspondence

The other open records measure, approved 103-6 in the House, comes after an unusually raucous exchange between the state's editorial writers and C.D. Spangler, president of the University of North Carolina system. When the News & Observer of Raleigh asked last month to see Spangler's mail, citing his position as an employee of North Carolina taxpayers, Spangler vehemently rejected the request, saying it amounted to pointless snooping.

Under a compromise which the N.C. Press Association helped craft (the NCPA also helped shape the proposal on incentives), public officials would be allowed to remove personal correspondence from their mail before it is released as a public record. This measure would involve not only UNC officials but all state government employees and elected officials.

This change, which now goes before the Senate, rightly underlines the principle that North Carolina taxpayers have a right to know the actions and deliberations of the public employees and elected officials whose salaries they pay. Both of these needed measures throw light on government actions, which unquestionably serves the public interest.

N.C. House committee vote on opening child fatality records due Tuesday

SALISBURY POST

In New York, Elisa's Law wears a 6-year-old's face.

That's how old she was when her mother smashed her head against a concrete wall, killing her, even though many had warned the welfare system that she was being horribly abused by crimes too vile to tell.

But now Elisa's Law is opening records that legislators believe will make people who deal with abused children more accountable for what they do — and what they fail to do.

In Kansas, Cain Baker's grandmother pulls a picture of a smiling face from her wallet everywhere she goes. He was 2 when he was buried with a fat lip, 27 bruises, two broken ribs — and two holes in his small intestine. His mother's boyfriend got a life sentence, but his grandmother and a clinical professor of emergency medicine have aimed their wrath at the Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, who had records of his torture. They want to change the law.

Next door in Missouri a 5-year-old girl was murdered in 1993 after authorities failed to keep her safe.

Her story so outraged Missourians that changes were made in the way the state responds to reports of child abuse.

Will outrage over the deaths of 6-year-old Budde Clark and 19-month-old Christopher Jones of Rowan County open confidentiality laws in North Carolina?

At 7:30 a.m. Tuesday, the House Human Resources Committee will finish discussing a proposed bill to open confidentiality restrictions when children die. If it passes the committee, it will go directly to the floor of the House when it goes into session Tuesday afternoon, so action can be taken by Thursday.

Thursday is the deadline for any bill — not requiring money — to pass either the House or the Senate to remain viable for the rest of this year and next.

If the bill passes the House, "then it's alive and well until the end of the short session next year," she says. If it doesn't even get to the House, it can't be brought up again until January 1999.

"I had a feeling in the committee Tuesday," she says, "that the votes were there to pass the committee, but it will not be a simple bill to put through. Any time you're dealing with confidentiality bills, people get very nervous. It's a concept you have to sell, and it's not an easy sell."

Relatively few states have taken a step to loosen confidentiality restrictions, which were severely tightened after Congress passed the 1980 Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act. The federal law says states must make a reasonable effort to return a child to his or her family or risk losing federal money for foster care programs.

The contention is that — short of violent, intentional abuse — the child is better off in his own home. Most efforts to preserve the family include drug and alcohol treatment, parenting classes and anger-control programs.

That disturbs Richard Gelles, director of the Family Violence Research Program at the University of Rhode Island and author of "The Book of David," about a 15-month-old murdered by his mother, who also fractured the skull, leg, arm and ribs of her 6-week old daughter.

"But when David was born, nobody saw the risk," Gelles said.

More and more states are looking at loosening confidentiality restrictions to hold the child protection system accountable in situations like that, says Jane Kirtley, executive director of the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press in Arlington, Va.

"But there's a great deal of resistance," she says, "prompted in part by misunderstanding of federal requirements."

She spoke recently to a well-informed group involved with social services issues, but they all thought the federal government would take away their funding if confidentiality restrictions are eased.

It won't.

Congress amended confidentiality requirements in the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act last October, according to Howard Davidson, director of the American Bar Association's Center on Children and the Law in Washington.

Kristen Guillory, a master's degree candidate at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, worked closely with Janet Mason of the Institute of Government on a paper about the need for privacy and accountability.

Guillory says the federal rules have changed.

The federal law will now require states to have provisions which allow for public disclosure of the findings or information about the case of child abuse or neglect which has resulted in a child fatality or near fatality," she says.

In child fatality cases, the balance between privacy and accountability tips toward accountability, she says. "It is time for North Carolina to re-examine its statutes and rules concerning public disclosure of Child Protective Services records and information when a child ... dies," Guillory says.

Adds Kirtley, of the reporters' committee: "Conscientious professionals will tell you the system is broken in most states." The confidentiality law is intended to protect parents, but it's not doing its job.

"It primarily protects those within the system who are failing these children and letting them fall through the cracks. And there's an element of self-interest that comes into play here," Kirtley argues. "The caring professional will want it to be open. In the context of a fatality, privacy is minimal. The best way to keep a system honest is to keep it open."

If the system is working properly, that's no problem, she says. "It should be easily available for public scrutiny." If it's not working properly, "correct it. These are our children."

The less secret, the more protection is afforded to children, adds Leslie Reis, a legal fellow with the Reporters' Committee. "You won't see the kind of situation where there are repeated reports that are repeatedly ignored. If there's some system for a reporter to get the facts, that won't happen."

The Wall Street Journal quoted Jess McDonald, director of Illinois' state welfare department, where restrictions have been loosened.

"The system does better when exposed," he told the Journal. "It says to people, 'If you haven't done the right thing in a case, you can't hide behind confidentiality.' "

But Davidson, of the American Bar Association, says the amended federal law — which is moving states toward greater disclosure — won't solve anything.

The child death review team, known in North Carolina as the Child Fatality Prevention Team, "is more important because what you want is a group of professionals from different disciplines to review these cases and help form policy change," he says.

A team that meets at least once a month, he says, is "far more important than a law that opens up records to the media. A bunch of stories in the newspapers doesn't change the system, but a bunch of professionals that check on the problems and calls attention to them does."

The other thing that changes the system is that in many cases parents are criminally prosecuted. In 77 percent of the cases, parents are the perpetrators.

Any legislation that opens records has to be very carefully crafted to safeguard the privacy of surviving children, he says, but he says he's unaware of any opinion or decision from the federal government that says that states that pass a carefully crafted law opening records will have funds withheld.

Kevin FitzGerald, head of the N.C. Division of Social Services, raised the issue of possible loss of $600,000 in federal money with the House's Human Resources Committee last Thursday.

He says he's now researching other state laws and consulting with division attorneys because "there are implications to this (proposed law) we need to understand. To receive federal funds, there are guidelines we'd have to meet."

North Carolina gets 57,000 reports of abuse and neglect a year and obviously doesn't know which of those cases will result in death. Last year, 18 children died.

The reality, FitzGerald says, is that new laws would have some unintended consequences in the way records are kept, so quality could deteriorate if people who keep them believe they'll be available down the road.

"One of the things I want to understand is what those consequences would be," he says. "I think this is going to require a lot of discussion."

Accountability is built in with the Child Fatality Prevention and Community Child Protection teams, which include people from the various communities and professions and are working all over the state, he says. But the details of those teams' findings are not open to the public.

And he points out that a special team that reviewed the deaths of Budde Clark and Christopher Jones recommended better disclosure of death information and better communication to satisfy the public's need for accountability.

But, he says, "we've got to be sure that any improvements that we make improves how we protect children upstream."

Rowan County Health Director John Shaw was a member of the state review team and is on the Rowan County Child Fatality Prevention Team. The Rowan County team will meet in early May with the Child Protection Team and look at a draft of the response the Department of Social Services will send to the state following its report.

He believes people have a right to know more than they've known in the past, he says, but adds that accountability can be dealt with in a number of ways.

One way is with the kind of team that was brought into Rowan to review what happened when the children were killed here.

It has shown that it works, he says.

The statistics say something is needed.

The National Clearinghouse on Child Abuse and Neglect says about 2,000 infants and young children die each year of abuse and neglect. Another 18,000 are permanently disabled each year.

And like Budde Clark and Christopher Jones, half of those who die, says Richard Gelles, director of the family violence research council at the University of Rhode Island, "have previously been reported to child protection agencies."

Pitt DSS 'unacceptable'

GREENVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The director of the Pitt County Department of Social Services' child protection program blames a small staff for a state review that found its performance unacceptable.

The county scored 66.8 percent on its Child Protection Biennial Review, conducted between May and October 1996 by the state Division of Social Services. A preliminary report on the findings was presented to the Pitt County Board of Social Services Monday.

Scores below 74 percent are considered unacceptable, the state has said.

"We knew we did not have enough staff to do all the things the state requires us to do," Director Ed Garrison said. "With what we have to work with, we can't do much better than what we're doing. We're going to have some (additional) staff, and that's going to require the county to spend more money on the Department of Social Services."

The state recommends that an investigator have only 12 cases at a time. One Pitt County worker has 128 cases, said Peggy Chandler, social work program administrator. The recommended supervisor-to-worker ratio is 1 to 5, and of the three Child Protective Services supervisors in Pitt County, none have fewer than six.

In 1996, nine investigators were responsible for 1,039 new cases of child abuse and neglect.

Kevin FitzGerald, director the N.C. Division of Social Services, attended the local DSS meeting Monday and promised state support. Among that support will be a state worker to help Pitt County develop a plan for improvement, he said. State funding for child protective services has not increased in at least three years, he said.

The county's DSS board said it will also appeal to the Pitt County manager and Board of Commissioners for funding to hire additional staff.

Bill on child abuse records moves forward

RALEIGH (AP) — The deaths of two Rowan County children within a week earlier this year may change state law by requiring child protection agencies to open their records when child abuse is suspected in a fatality.

The House Human Resources Committee today approved a revised bill that would force records open if someone is charged in a child's death or if anyone reports to the agency that abuse or neglect may have caused the death.

The bill was filed earlier this month after the deaths of two Rowan County children — Budde Clark and Christopher Jones.

"When this bill kicks in, a child is dead as a result of abuse and neglect," bill sponsor Rep. Charlotte Gardner, R-Rowan, said.

The Department of Social Services is commonly barred from discussing child abuse cases because of state confidentiality laws, she said.

Medical, hospital, school, police investigative and other records would have to be open to public scrutiny under the bill.

Rep. Julia Howard, R-Davie, protested that the measure doesn't go far enough. It allows a child-protection agency to withhold records if it believes there is convincing evidence that their release would hurt the mental health or safety of a surviving child in the same household, she noted.

The agency also could keep records closed if their release would jeopardize prosecution or a defendant's right to a fair trial.

District attorneys, not a child-protection agency, should make that decision based on their professional judgement, said Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe.

"The cat's out of the box before the people in charge of the investigation know about it," he said.

The bill next heads to a second committee, which will review the measure's legal impact. The committee is chaired by Rep. Charles Neely, D-Wake. It must be approved by the full House by Thursday or risk being buried until 1999.

Clark, 6, died Jan. 31 of a blow to the back of the head and Jones, 19 months, died of a fractured skull a few days later. Murder charges were filed against their caregivers, and their deaths resulted in a state review of the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

N.C. child abuse and neglect cases top 30,000

ast year, 40 of those hildren were murdered y supervising adults

BY DR. JONATHAN P. SHER
SPECIAL TO THE POST

Your recent coverage of the ıild fatalities in Rowan County as helpful in focusing public tention on how common, and how agic, child abuse and neglect ıve become across our state.

Last year alone, there were ore than 30,000 confirmed vic- ns of child abuse and neglect in ɔrth Carolina. Last year, 40 of ese vulnerable children were murdered by the adults entrusted to raise them. Right now, more than 12,000 young North Carolinians have been forced into spending their childhoods in the custody of county departments of social services because of the inability, or unwillingness, of families to provide anything resembling a safe, good home.

Should DSS do a better job of investigating and intervening in situations where children are in danger? Absolutely. The system for protecting and assisting these vulnerable kids — as most social workers know all too well — is deeply flawed. But blaming DSS workers for family violence is like blaming forest rangers for fires caused by lightning or arson.

Ridiculously high caseloads across our state (in fact, more than twice the recommended level) guarantee that children will not be as well served as they need and deserve. Identifying at-risk kids is only the first step. The greatest challenge now — for all of us, not just DSS — is to quickly find good, permanent homes for abused and neglected children who cannot safely return to their birth parents.

Coincidentally, a potential silver lining in this particular dark cloud appeared earlier this month. A bill has been introduced in the N.C. General Assembly that advances a three-part strategy for solving both the immediate problem of DSS worker overload and the deeper problems within the child welfare system itself. If passed, this legislation would go a long way toward ensuring that tragedies like those in Rowan County become increasingly rare.

Further information on this important state legislation — and how you can help get it passed — is available by writing this address: North Carolina Child Advocacy Institute (Dept L) at 1318 Dale St., Raleigh, NC 27605. The telephone number is (919) 834-6623.

FINDING HOMES FOR CHILDREN

Some hope on horizon

Salisbury Post
4/29/97

Rowan County is not alone in its struggle to provide better child protective services, nor in its efforts to balance those needs with everything else county government has to consider.

Pitt County recently learned its child protection program scored so poorly on a biennial review that the state considers it unacceptable. While the state recommends that each investigator have only 12 cases at a time, one Pitt worker has 128 cases. The county Social Services director says he's not surprised by the finding; county government does not give the agency enough funding to meet state standards.

A bill now before the General Assembly could help counties with this problem, even though it addresses a different area of child welfare. Officially known as "Senate Bill 760/House Bill 943 Foster Care/Adoption Funds," it strives to pump more state funds into foster care and adoption services. That, in turn, could free up more county money for child protection.

Three ways to help

This is the bill that Dr. Jonathan Sher refers to in his column at the bottom of today's editorial page. The measure carries a price tag: $2.8 million in 1997-98 and $5.9 million in 1998-99. But it addresses a need that is crying out across the state: at-risk children who are hurting. Lawmakers should give it serious consideration.

The bill zeroes in on three ways the state can better serve children who have been taken out of their homes:

■ Increase the number of county foster care and adoption social workers: The Child Advocacy Institute says large caseloads hinder the ability of social workers to move children from foster care to safe, permanent homes. Foster care costs the children the turmoil of being in temporary placement, and costs the county money to keep them there.

Rowan County currently has a huge adoption backlog, and only one worker to do home studies on 50 families who are willing to adopt. Social Services has requested that county commissioners fund one more adoption worker and one more foster care worker, and has notified the county that its foster care tab will increase some $235,800 next year even without the new positions.

■ Expand the Families for Kids Initiative: The Post has written about this public-private partnership program in the past; a demonstration project is under way in Iredell County, funded with the help of the Kellogg Foundation. The program strives to find a permanent home for a child within one year, and also provides support for vulnerable families to prevent children from entering foster care in the first place. The bill would expand the initiative from eight to 16 counties.

■ Try subsidized guardianship/kinship care in selected counties: Sometimes when children are taken away from parents because of abuse and neglect, there are other relatives who would take the children in if only they could afford to. Existing guidelines rule out subsidies to relatives in most cases. This bill would allow a monthly subsidy of $220 to kin who have provided temporary but stable care and are willing to assume guardianship. This is a less expensive route than foster care, and a more settling arrangement for the child than being placed with strangers.

Living on the edge

This complex bill requires more thorough explanation than can be given here. But it clearly deserves the attention of citizens and lawmakers who are interested in helping children who live on the edge — insecure, shuffled around, not sure what the next day will bring.

Counties need the state's help serving children who are buffeted by rising poverty rates, increased alcohol and substance abuse, family isolation, community violence, homelessness and disease. The Foster Care/Adoption Funds Bill could greatly strengthen county agencies and change thousands of children's lives for the better.

Compromise saves child records bill

Move to open records of child fatalities survives with some last-second maneuvering

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

RALEIGH — Thanks to a last-minute compromise, a bill to open child fatality records will live to fight another day.

The bill, sponsored by N.C. Rep. Charlotte Gardner of Rowan County, came within seconds of dying in a House judiciary committee this morning. With time running out and the substitute committee chairman threatening to adjourn the meeting, Rep. Billy Creech of Clayton proposed a compromise: tack on a $100,000 price tag and turn it into a finance bill.

Finance bills can remain alive throughout a session.

The bill — which seeks to open records, particularly social services investigations following a child's death from abuse or neglect — will now go to the House Appropriations Committee, and will be debated before the House this summer.

Had it not been for Creech's proposal, the open records bill could not have resurfaced until January 1998.

Gardner sponsored the bill following the deaths earlier this year of Budde Lee Clark, Christopher Jones and Trola Miller — all Rowan County children who died and had been the subjects of child abuse investigations.

Clark, 6, died from severe head injuries. His stepmother, Robin Gosnell, has been charged with murder and felony child abuse.

Jones, an 19-month-old toddler, also died from head injuries. His mother's former boyfriend, Jeremy Butcher, has been charged with murder and felony child abuse.

Miller, 16, was shot and killed during a confrontation in a Salisbury neighborhood. Elizabeth White has been charged with second degree murder.

The families of all three children had been the subjects of investigations by the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

However, state law has prevented Social Services officials from releasing records and discussing the cases in detail.

Some lawmakers oppose opening records, saying it could make prosecution of criminal cases more difficult and violate families' rights to privacy.

Nonetheless, lawmakers seemed glad to have the opportunity to explore the bill further.

"In our review (of the Rowan cases), it was clear there needs to be improvement, and we're going to have the opportunity to make that improvement," Kevin FitzGerald, chief of the N.C. Division of Social Services said this morning. "My interest is that at the end of the day, we've improved our ability to help children."

Child-abuse measure gets out of committee

Clergymen and others with knowledge of child abuse would have to tell authorities what they know under a bill approved by a Senate committee. However, attorneys for child-abuse suspects would be exempt.

The bill, which now goes to the full Senate, makes it a misdemeanor for someone who knows about child abuse not to report it.

Supporters say the measure generally would affect teachers, health-care providers and others who have close contact with the child. The bill was modified to exclude passers-by who might witness suspected child abuse.

Governor, others support opening fatality records

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Hunt and key legislators in the North Carolina House of Representatives say they want to open child fatality records to protect children.

The legislators demonstrated their support during a tense, dramatic committee meeting Wednesday when they refused to let a bill introduced by Rep. Charlotte Gardner, R-Rowan, die a sudden death.

And an hour later the governor gave it immediate strong support when he was asked about the Gardner bill at the end of a press conference.

"I think that's a good idea," he said, "and I want to commend Rep. Gardner for coming up with it."

She has done a lot of work to protect children, he added.

Gardner sponsored legislation to crack down on deadbeat parents and is now working on a bill to finance treatment for substance abuse for people on public assistance.

Hunt noted that some of the professionals have reservations about opening records, but added, "I think that's a good idea and I look forward to making that the law of this state."

The bill, which got off to a late start in the current session of the General Assembly, would open records following a child's death from abuse or neglect.

Gardner introduced it after two Rowan County children — 6-year-old Budde Lee Clark and 19-month-old Christopher Jones — were beaten to death between Jan. 31 and Feb. 4. Both had been the subject of child abuse investigations by the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

But state and local officials would not discuss the cases until the Post quoted unidentified sources who knew of Social Services' involvement.

And Wednesday, momentum for the bill appeared to be growing among key legislators.

Majority Leader Leo Daughtry has supported Gardner's efforts from the outset committee, threw the life-preserver that saved the bill. Just as time was running out during its hearing by a House judiciary committee, he moved to add a $100,000 appropriation and refer it to a subcommittee for further study.

The surprise action provided a civics lesson to anyone not part of the General Assembly process.

Any bill that does not involve money must pass either the House or Senate and "cross over" to the other house by May 1. If it doesn't make that deadline, the bill dies and can't be proposed again until the next two-year session in January 1999.

Today is crossover day. Gardner's bill No. 949 had to pass two committees — Human Resources and Judiciary II — and the House of Representatives to live.

This week dawned wild with legislators fighting the deadline, negotiating to get their bills approved in quick conferences in the halls, running between committee meetings scheduled for an hour each, back to back. They negotiated from dawn until House and Senate sessions started in mid-afternoon.

Gardner's bill faced its first hurdle in a Human Resources Committee meeting at 7:30 a.m. Tuesday. She knew she had the votes there, but feared opposition in the Judiciary II commit-opened at 10:10 a.m. with 17 members around the big conference room table and Chairman Chuck Neely, R-Wake and a friend of the bill, in charge. Committee members discussed soil and water inspections, waterfront development in Wilmington, poured coffee, sipped orange juice and quietly went out into the hall for conferences. Charlotte Gardner and Julia Howard, R-Davie, a strong supporter of the bill, consulted at the corner of the big table — and the big clock said 10:27 a.m. when Gardner went to the podium to explain the intent of her bill and changes that had been made.

Important issue

"This is a most important issue in our county," she said. The deaths of the children had generated more public concern than any issue in her 12 years in the House, but the effort to look at the record turned up only a report that Social Services had met standards.

And the Social Services' director's response to questions, she said, was always, "I'd love to tell you but confidentiality won't let me do that."

"It was left up to the newspaper," she said, "to uncover the facts" from anonymous sources, which it deplored.

Records, she said, must be opened.

"Nothing will help those children," she said. "They are dead. But we must try to help others."

Discussion flitted from question to question. Who could keep records closed if a criminal action was imminent? What about the problems of a Social Services department with no back up for an on-call worker, no beeper, no cell phone? What about busybodies who have nothing else to do — could they get the records? What about false accusations?

Hugh Stevens, attorney for the N.C. Press Association, said supporters believe the bill will strengthen a system which already encourages people to report problems but often don't. The problem is not that people falsely accuse. The problem, he said, is that they avert their eyes.

"The system failed these children," he said. "We did not have in place a system to protect these children."

ANSWER FOUND: Billy Creech adds price tag and keeps bill alive.

Move to adjourn

The hands on the clock touched 10:50. Joe Kiser, R-Lincoln, a former sheriff concerned about law enforcement's role in the whole thing, had replaced Chuck Neely with the chairman's gavel. Time was running out. He wanted to adjourn.

Kevin Fitzgerald, chief of the N.C. Division of Social Services, who spearheaded a special review of the way Rowan Social Services handled the investigations here, spoke briefly.

"We're not against it," he said, "but it will have drastic implications" and needs study.

Tom Bennett, executive director of the State Fatality Task Force, spoke for the bill. Ruth Easterling, D-Mecklenburg, introduced a similar bill to open records to the Task Force but the bill remains in committee.

"No more time," Kiser repeated.

Joe Hackney, D-Orange, popped in a suggestion.

"Put a $10 fee on it," he said. That would buy time because it would make it a finance bill.

But Gardner, familiar with the finance committee and afraid it would die there like Easterling's bill, said she would resist the fee.

Fern Shubert, R-Union, said the bill needed study, but she didn't want it to die.

"We've got to get out," Kiser repeated.

And Creech offered a solution.

Add an appropriation of $100,000 to the bill, he moved, and send it to a subcommittee for study. That meant it would be a budget bill — and stay alive.

Other motions flew back and forth. But time was up, and Kiser was adamant. Creech's motion passed quickly. It was over. And suddenly everybody was a little shocked and smiling a lot.

Later in his office, Creech said he made his motion because he hadn't had time to look at the bill, "but it was Charlotte's bill." That gave it weight.

"I thought it was important enough to have a fair hearing," he said. "No one wants to see a child abused because we didn't do what we should have done."

It will be looked at in the Appropriations Committee and then sent to Julia Howard's Human Resources Committee again and studied with the Easterling bill.

"I think we could carry the day and have a pretty decent package," he said. "We want the best bill we can get out so we can get a good solid law we can live with."

Hackney, who's known to be concerned about privacy issues, was in his office polishing off lunch of one banana.

He's not against a reasonable solution, he said, and the appropriations committee is a good place for the bill because resources are a big factor in his own Orange County.

"You have to feel for child protection workers," he said. "They have a very hard job."

The recent tax cuts are a big problem, he added. "You have to go back and say, 'What would have saved a child?' and most often the response is, "If we'd had more resources, then the oversight wouldn't have occurred.' "

Howard pleased

Howard, House majority whip and ex-officio member of all committees, was running from one to the other too fast for talk, but she was happy that both bills will be considered together.

So was Tom Bennett.

"I'm very glad the bill has been saved," he said, "and saved in a way the other bill can be looked at."

"I think this is a very important discussion," FitzGerald said, "and this action will let the discussion take place."

Terry Saylor, executive director of the N.C. Press Association, which has worked with the bill, said she hopes everyone in the system will benefit. Social Services will be able to respond and meet needs better. The Child Fatality Task Force will have access to information. And the system will be held accountable for protecting children

Saylor said it was right for a newspaper to raise the issue. Newspapers are the traditional watchdogs of society, she said, "the voice of the voiceless. This is what newspapers are for."

And Gene McCombs, R-Rowan, left no doubt about where he stands.

"I want those records open if something happens to a child," he said. "There was no way for us to find out anywhere what was going on except by calling up (Raleigh). I'm in total support of that, and the way it looks now, it's going to be worked out."

But Charlotte Gardner didn't have time to savor making the deadline and considering the next step.

She hurried off. She had work to do on a day care bill.

Task force moves up meeting

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

The Rowan County Child Abuse Prevention Task Force will meet May 13 — two weeks earlier than originally scheduled.

County Commissioner Steve Blount says the date was changed because "we're trying to move as quickly as we can to address the issue."

Commissioners established the task force March 17 "in response to public concerns about our local child abuse prevention efforts," commissioners said in a memo announcing the meeting. Commissioners created the task force following a two-hour closed session with state and local representatives of the social services system.

At that time, public outrage had motivated Gov. Jim Hunt and his top Human Services administrators to appoint a special team to review the deaths of 6-year-old Budde Clark, 19-month-old Christopher Jones and 16-year-old Trola Miller.

Task force members — who represent various agencies and the public at large —will review how the system is supposed to work now, how agencies can communicate better and "how we as a community can be more closely involved with this very critical system."

The first meeting was scheduled for May 28 during the week of the State of the Child Conference, cosponsored by Livingstone College and the Rowan Partnership for Children.

That first meeting was set "to try to make it a full week of activities centered around children," says Blount. "But some folks felt like that was delaying things too long, so we moved it up as quickly as possible."

In a letter to task force members, he explained their roles in greater detail. They will first examine the existing child abuse prevention system, "including all of its complex parts so that we each can understand the tasks and restrictions placed on the others."

The first meeting will include an overview of child abuse in North Carolina and a discussion of the role of various county agencies, including:

- The Rowan County Department of Social Services, by Director Rick Travis and his staff;
- The Rowan County Sheriff's Department, by Sheriff Bob Martin;
- Rowan Regional Medical Center, by Chief Executive Officer Jim Freeman;
- The Rowan-Salisbury Schools, by Superintendent Joe McCann;
- The judicial system, by Chief District Court Judge Anna Mills Wagoner.

They will detail their current reaction to suspected abuse situations and how a case might flow through the system, Blount wrote. A question and answer session will follow.

The second purpose of the task force, which will be explored in future meetings, Blount wrote, "will be to find the weaknesses in the current system and develop suggested solutions to these problems. This may require several meetings and possibly even breaking into subcommittees to complete. At the conclusion of this process, you will be asked to make a public presentation to the board of county

"I'm sold on Pfeiffer," she said. "It has a great faculty and staff, and a beautiful campus."

The Pfeiffer faculty — especially criminal justice associate professor Lois Coram, sociology professor Anne Byrd and assistant sociology professor Jo Anne Clayton — earned high marks from Morrison.

"I think they challenge their students to do their best," she said. "I found them to be very supportive and encouraging."

Morrison recommends Pfeiffer as an institution for students who want to earn an associate degree.

"I like the small atmosphere of Pfeiffer," Morrison said. "I like the faculty-student ratio. Everybody is very friendly."

The faculty-student ratio at Pfeiffer is 1 to 12. Pfeiffer offers undergraduate programs and continuing education courses at its Misenheimer campus. Graduate studies and adult studies are offered at the university's Charlotte campus.

commissioners who hopefully will act quickly on your suggestions.

"The final job of this task force," he wrote, "will be to come together periodically to review the overall child abuse prevention system to insure that it continues to meet the high quality standards established by this process."

Commissioner Dave Rowland will lead the wrap-up, focusing on the next meeting, organization and a time frame.

The task force will include 14 members, who differ slightly from the list originally announced. Included are the speakers, Travis, Martin, Freeman, McCann and Wagoner, as well as Salisbury Police Chief Jeff Jacobs; Dianne Scott, executive director of Rowan Helping Ministries and a member of the Social Services board; District Attorney Bill Kenerly; John Shaw, director of the Rowan County Health Department; Elizabeth Cress Patton, Family Crisis Council; Janet McAuley-Blue, Domestic Violence Task Force; Dr. Greg Singer, Ministerial Association; Elizabeth Smith and Mary Beth Smith.

Blount and Rowland are liaisons from the County Commission.

The new group will meet at 7 p.m. in the second floor commissioners' meeting room of the old post office, 130 W. Innes St. The meeting is open to the public, and observers may comment at the end of the meeting.

Baby sitter goes on trial for burning child in hot water

Doctors in Concord gave the 4½-year-old boy morphine to ease his pain and quiet his screams as they treated him for severe burn injuries on the lower part of his body.

When the boy arrived at the emergency room, skin was peeling from his feet and ankles and he had other injuries to his buttocks and genitals.

This morning, the boy, now 6 and dressed in shorts, stood on a table in Rowan County Superior Court as District Attorney Bill Kenerly pointed to the scars. The prosecutor also picked the child up and walked with him in front of jurors so they could see the boy's bare feet.

The child's care giver, Denise Santos, 43, went on trial this morning, charged with felony child abuse in the December 1995 scalding.

The boy took the stand first and told jurors how he wet the bed that morning at his home on Jackson Park Road in Kannapolis. Santos lived at the home along with the boy, his twin sister and their paternal aunt and was baby sitting the children that morning.

The boy testified that Santos, after finding the wet clothing, told his sister to run some bath water. The girl apparently inadvertently made the water scalding hot.

The boy testified that he stuck his foot in but immediately jerked it out. Santos, whom the children called Aunt Dena, was somewhere else in the house, and he said he told her the water was too hot.

But, the boy testified, Santos came into the room and held him in the water.

The boy, playing Santos, also reenacted the scene with Kenerly. The child, a kindergarten student, testified for 30 minutes.

A paramedic and at least two nurses also testified that the boy told them Santos held him in the water.

Cabarrus County paramedic Mike Metcalf testified that he arrived at the home about 10:12 a.m. and saw the boy extremely agitated and his skin beginning to peel away in layers. He suffered second- and third-degree burns.

Dianne Kindley, an emergency room nurse, told jurors that the boy was screaming and crying when he arrived at the hospital, and she saw his burned feet immediately.

The boy was later transferred to the burn center at UNC Hospitals in Chapel Hill for treatment.

During the subsequent investigation, officials with the Department of Social Services tested the temperature of the water coming out of the hot tap at 142 degrees.

Santos' attorney, Robert Inge, told jurors in his opening statement that defense evidence will show the boy jumped into the bath water on his own.

Before court testimony, Santos smiled and wiggled her fingers in a wave at the boy.

In 1974, Santos was convicted of second-degree manslaughter in New York in the death of a child. She served less than three years in prison.

In 1986, she was convicted of manufacturing, distributing and dispensing an illegal substance in New Jersey. She spent less than three years in prison before she got paroled.

Santos remains free on a 10,000 bond.

Scalded in bathtub water, the 4½-year-old black child was left with pink skin on his feet, legs and buttocks.

The burns don't look like an accident, a Chapel Hill burn doctor told jurors Wednesday afternoon.

This morning, the boy's natural mother told jurors that Denise Santos loved the child as her own. However, she said her memory of what her son told her about the burning is a "blur."

"It's been awhile," testified the mother, who does not have custody of the boy, his twin sister or her two other children, 14 and 13.

Prosecutors say Santos, 43, the child's primary care giver, forced the boy to sit in the scalding water because he wet the bed.

The Kannapolis woman, who lived with the children and the children's aunt, is on trial on a charge of felony child abuse.

The boy, now 6, testified on Wednesday morning that Santos held him in the water.

Two weeks after the burning, however, Santos told a Kannapolis police detective that she "never physically held" the boy in the water and "would not hurt" the children on purpose. She said she was going through hell.

But using a slide projector and glossy photographs, Dr. H.D. Peterson, the former director at the UNC Hospital's burn center, testified that the boy's injuries were "forced emersion burns" and there was no evidence of accidental splash marks.

Relying on the burn patterns, Peterson said the boy was obviously restrained in the water. Otherwise, any child would have jumped around, causing splash patterns,

ON TRIAL: Denise Santos listens to testimony in child abuse trial.

Peterson said. Peterson described the injuries to the child's feet, ankles, calves, genitals, and buttocks and talked about the dead skin.

sat emotionless during the testimony. Peterson further explained that people have a "spinal reflex" to hot items, and the boy could not have consciously held his body in the water and sustain those burns.

Peterson added that no one in the courtroom could do that.

The doctor estimated the boy was immersed for six seconds to sustain those injuries. He was likely held in a compressed position, Peterson said.

Doctors in Chapel Hill used a skin graph from the boy's right thigh to repair his feet and ankles. He remained at the hospital for nearly a month.

Kenerly placed the projector screen to the back of Santos and showed about 15 pictures to jurors. Santos did not turn to see them.

Diane Priolo, a social worker who investigates child abuse complaints at the burn center, testified that the boy would throw temper tantrums and cry. Things grew worse as medical professionals tried to bathe him.

"The whole burn center knew when he was taking a bath," she said.

Priolo told the jury to imagine life in the mind of a 4-year-old child.

His mother was a drug addict. He was placed in foster care and then moved to the home of an aunt, she said.

Priolo said the aunt did not want the children and felt pressured by the Department of Social Services to take them.

After the state rested its case, defense attorney Robert Inge called the maternal aunt to the stand as Santos' first witness.

The 33-year-old aunt said she has known Santos for about 3½ years, and they are involved in a romantic relationship.

The children moved into the home in June 1995, or about 6 months before the Dec. 22 scalding. The aunt received about $232 a month through Aid to Families with Dependent Children and about $300 in food stamps, she said.

Santos cared for the children about 70 percent of the time, since the aunt was working two restaurant jobs and normally left the house on Jackson Park Road about 4:30 a.m. Santos never lost her temper, the aunt said.

The aunt said she spoke with the boy several times at the hospital in Chapel Hill, and he always told her he got into the water himself.

When the boy's natural mother testified, she admitted allowing Santos to see the child at the hospital in Chapel Hill. She said she was not aware that hospital officials had banned Santos from the child's room.

The natural mother said her son asked to see Santos, and Santos was the only person who could get the child to eat.

"My kids loved her like a mother," the 33-year-old natural mother said. She also admitted that she's had an addiction problem all her life. For awhile, she did not know who had custody of her children.

Meanwhile, nine character witnesses testified on behalf of Santos, saying she spent her own money to help the children, took them to church and hugged them. The witnesses never saw any evidence of violence.

About a week after the scalding, Santos gave a statement to Kannapolis Sgt. Jeff Tysinger, however she did not sign it.

Tysinger read the statement in court on Wednesday.

In part, Santos said, "I got a little belt and popped him on the butt and told him to go get ... in the tub. He ran into the bathroom and jumped in the tub. He got in the tub and cried. I told him to sit down and shut up before I gave him something to cry about. I was real stern with his about washing ... I was angry and stern with him ... I went upstairs to get some clothes and I heard him hollering real loud. I knew something was wrong and went back downstairs and found (the boy) laying in the floor peeling. I guess he couldn't take it anymore ..." She dialed 911.

Superior Court Judge Judson D. DeRamus Jr. of Winston-Salem ruled that prosecutors could not bring up Santos' 1974 second-degree manslaughter conviction from New York. In that case, Santos killed 3-year-old Malachi Jackson with a beating.

Kenerly said the boy was killed with an "ad-hoc weapon," though he didn't elaborate.

Santos, then 21, spent less than three years in prison.

DeRamus said he has problems with the New York court documents. For example, the indictment does not have a case number and the computer check police often use to find other cases normally carry disclaimers with them.

"Twenty-three years is pushing it a bit," defense attorney Inge said, adding that prosecutors did not find anyone to speak about the crime.

However, prosecutors can mention Santos's 1986 conviction in New Jersey for manufacturing, distributing and dispensing an illegal substance.

New Child Abuse Task Force sees problems and finds hope

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

No one said the names of 6-year-old Budde Clark and 19-month-old Christopher Jones Tuesday night.

But those two dead children were there in the thoughts and words of a sheriff, a judge, a district attorney, a hospital CEO, heads of state and local agencies, when the Rowan County Child Abuse Task Force met Tuesday night for the first time.

The brutal child abuse that killed the children earlier this year drew nearly 40 people representing almost every official and social agency in Rowan County together. Meeting in the County Administrative Offices, they told each other how they handle abuse, talked about changes already taking place and aimed at what must be done to keep it from happening again.

Among changes already occurring are:

■ Closer ties between law enforcement and social services.

■ Rowan County will be added to the national Families for Kids program which focuses on assigning one social work team to families in trouble so they won't be shifted from one case worker to another. The program will get a child into a permanent, stable home within a year.

■ Improved social services procedures for receiving and screening reports of abuse and neglect, better supervisory review and back-up services.

■ CEO Jim Freeman's announcement that recruiting or training a child medical evaluator will be a priority for Rowan Regional Medical Center.

■ State changes in the way it reviews local handling of child fatalities.

"I was afraid we'd spin our wheels. ... But I feel good about what we're going to do. I'm thrilled that changes are taking place."

— Commissioner Dave Rowland

"It's tragic that something like this has brought us closer together," Sheriff Bob Martin said, but the deaths spotlighted the lack of communication between local agencies.

"Since this has occurred," he said, "we have had very productive meetings" with Rick Travis, director of the Rowan County Department of Social Services. Three detectives trained in child abuse and sexual assault are meeting with social workers. "And we're developing a close relationship that's going to work."

Last month, the sheriff's department got 10 calls from Social Services, he said. "Not all resulted in cases of abuse, but it's better to be called" than not.

"We've had some good meetings," he said. "We've criticized them, they've criticized us." They've called a spade a spade, "and now we're all willing and ready to work together."

That was the continuing refrain for three hours as groups invited by commissioners to be part of the task force and interested individuals talked about the tragic increase in violence and what agencies do — and don't do — to protect children.

They want to work together. They've got to work together. And it was apparent they've got plenty to do.

Debbie Hirst, a third grade teacher at Overton Elementary School, sounded one alarm.

➤ See Abuse, Page 4A

Speaking from the audience, she made it clear that the best policies on handling abuse adopted by the board of education and presented last night by Superintendent Joe McCann don't always filter down.

Though Travis said Social Services responds to every report of child abuse, Hirst said she has personally called DSS seven times and has never received a response, a document, a thank you, a verification.

Instead, she said, she has been treated with great disrespect. "I was hysterical, and they said they were overloaded."

She has never received a call telling her whether the case was being investigated. That complaint reflects others made consistently, though Travis said Social Services responds to every report of child abuse.

If so, Hirst said, they must go to administrators, "not to us. There is a breakdown, a big gap. Teachers are treated like second class citizens."

She asked if confidentiality laws require that return calls go to principals rather than teachers and that teachers not be told?

JoAnn Lamm answered that teachers should get responses and information is not kept from them. Lamm is with the Children's Service Section of the N.C. Department of Social Services. She opened the meeting with an overview of the size of the abuse problem in the nation and the state.

"I would certainly set a top priority to checking out a teacher's concern," county commissioner Dave Rowland said. Neighbors may be vengeful and spouses spiteful, he said, but teachers don't report abuse for those reasons.

Dr. Jack Kribs, chief of the emergency room at Rowan Regional, also spoke from the audience.

"I'd like to see feedback about children who were abused," he said, "so we could look back and see what we could have done."

Elizabeth Smith said she'd like to see greater use of public health nurses in the schools.

Dianne Scott, executive director of Rowan Helping Ministries, noted the absence of a representative of mental health, "and we need someone.

"We need to educate, educate, educate," she said, both the public and each other. "The more we educate each other and work together, the better off we'll be."

And generally, she said, a family's financial situation is the basis of the trouble. "They are families in distress. They don't know what to do next. We need to look at a lot of different angles to know how to help them."

When all the talk was over, a somber but hopeful group was unwilling to leave until a second meeting was scheduled. They want to begin developing specific procedures to deal with child abuse together.

"We need one protocol that applies to all of us," Freeman said, and Judge Anna Mills Wagoner suggested that the next meeting be one to develop procedures together so all services will know what they are.

"We may have some resources to assist you," said Kevin Alexander, head of the N.C. Division of Social Services in Raleigh. "We each need to know the other's business."

The state division wants to help in any way it can, he said, "because the work you can do here is critical for the rest of the state." Every other county is watching. "The reality is Rowan is no better and no worse" than any other county in North Carolina. But what's happening now can become a model for the state.

Alexander also said he believes last week's reply from the Rowan County Department of Social Services to the report of the second state review of the deaths needs to be more specific.

The next meeting was finally scheduled for June 2 at 7 p.m.

"We've just scratched the system tonight," said Commissioner Steve Blount, who was asked by Chairman Jim Neely to call the meeting. "We had problems with communications which we all suspected. ... And now commissioners are looking for advice, to see what we can do."

"There's nothing we're going to do to save every child," Rowland said, "but if everybody comes up with guidelines, if everybody knows the procedures, we're not going to have obvious things slip through the cracks."

After the meeting, he said he was pleased.

"I was afraid we'd spin our wheels. ... But I feel good about what we're going to do. I'm thrilled that changes are taking place."

Presentations about the services offered in Rowan County were made by Tom Brewer, social work program manager at Social Services, on behalf of Director Rick Travis; Wagoner, chief district court judge; Martin, Freeman and McCann, who was accompanied by Linda Freeze, Rowan-Salisbury Schools health director.

Also on the Task Force and participating were Salisbury Police Chief Jeff Jacobs, Scott, District Attorney Bill Kenerly, Sharon Owen, representing Health Director John Shaw, Elizabeth Cress Patton of the Family Crisis Council, attorney Janet McAuley-Blue, attorney Mary Beth Smith, and Elizabeth Smith, a registered nurse. Beth Dixon, attorney with the guardian ad litem program, also described her program.

CONFRONTING CHILD ABUSE

Rowan's new beginning

Where happy endings are impossible, you resolve to prevent tragedy from striking again. You look for new beginnings.

So the news coming out of the Rowan County Child Abuse Task Force's first meeting Tuesday night offers hope. Nothing can bring back 6-year-old Budde Clark or 19-month-old Christopher Jones, both killed by child abuse after suspicions of danger were reported. Nor 16-year-old Trola Miller, who eluded the protective system and was felled by a bullet. But state and local officials are taking concrete action and implementing programs to strengthen Rowan's approach to protecting children.

The most exciting news may have come from JoAnn Lamm, head of state child protective services, who announced that Rowan would be added to the Families for Kids program spurred by a Kellogg Foundation grant. Families for Kids takes a team approach to dealing with families in trouble so they get consistent care and attention.

The Sheriff's Office has begun working more closely with Social Services. Hospital CEO Jim Freeman could not be more adamant about his intention to establish clear lines of communication between Rowan Regional Medical Center and Social Services, and to get the county a child medical evaluator. Area agencies will work on a common protocol. No one wants to wait.

As for Social Services itself, the agency has outlined its response to a critical state review-team report. Details about how it intends to improve procedures for receiving and screening abuse reports are yet to come.

The biggest detail, though, rests in county commissioners' hands as they head into the budget season. They question Social Services' need for more money — an awesome case of denial, considering the way understaffing has blown up in their faces. Social Services clearly needs more staff and better technology, in addition to improved procedures. If commissioners fail to own up to that part of the problem, they will hamper this entire process. They will also have an uprising on their hands.

Elected officials want to squeeze money out of Social Services. Gov. Jim Hunt expects Work First savings to fund higher teacher pay — a very worthy cause. Unfortunately, putting more parents to work has not slowed the terrifying rise of child abuse and neglect.

But public awareness and alert agencies will. Through many voices and proposals, the task force delivered its message loud and clear: Rowan County does not accept child abuse. We will not look the other way. We will not let it fall through the cracks. Rowan is building a better child protective system, and we are building it together.

New steps, new hope for DSS

Editor: Between Jan. 31 and Feb. 4 of this year, three Rowan County children — Christopher Jones, Budde Clark and Trola Miller — died within five days of each other. The first two children perished due to child abuse, and the whereabouts of the third, who was part of the Department of Social Services' caseload, was under investigation. A state review team recently analyzed DSS operations and recommended improvements. The local department has responded by issuing a plan, reprinted here in full:

Coordinating services key to child protection

Salisbury Post
5/16/97

BY TRACY PRESSON
SALISBURY POST

Fighting child abuse requires a three-pronged attack involving social services, law enforcement and the medical community, an investigator told participants Thursday at the Fourth Annual State of the Child Conference.

Calvin D. Jackson, a specialist in gathering crime evidence and board member of Safe-T-Child, described the approach as a "three-legged stool." The stool won't stand without all three legs, Jackson said.

"We have to work together," he said. "That's the only way to handlechild abuse cases. We have to pool our resources. Collectively, we solve the problem."

Jackson's advice hit home. Earlier this year, three children — ranging from 19 months to 16 years in age — died within a week. Two of the children suffered abuse and their care givers stand accused of murder. The third child was shot during a disturbance.

All three children had been subjects of Department of Social Services investigations before their deaths. In one case, Rowan Regional Medical Center had evidence of abuse that a social worker did not see.

"You need to make certain the health people are always included in this," Jackson said.

As a result of the deaths, local agencies have pledged to work more closely.

Jackson, who did not mention the Rowan cases, said the community often pays no attention when Social Services asks for more staff — until a child dies. But it does no good to point fingers of blame when child abuse tragedies occur, he said.

➤ See Services, Page 7A

"If we make a mistake, we should learn from it," he said. "You folks are going to get blamed. You do the best you can."

'Violence in Community'

This year's State of the Child Conference, held at Livingstone College, focused on "Violence in the Community." Rowan Partnership for Children and the Inter-Agency Task Force on At-Risk Juveniles sponsored the conference.

About 75 representatives from agencies that serve children attended the conference, which featured group sessions on child abuse, mentoring/parenting, substance abuse and resources for school personnel.

Many left before the wrap-up session so the remaining participants agreed with Social Services director Rick Travis' idea of mailing a ballot of goals to agency representatives. They will vote on three priorities for the coming year.

Dr. Shirley Ritchie, who chairs the Rowan Partnership for Children, said the group should follow Jackson's advice to improve services for children.

"I like the idea of a three-legged stool," Ritchie said. "We've got a real wobbly stool here. We need to fill in the places that are lacking."

Ritchie said the county faces a void in health care for children whose families are poor or served by Medicaid. Private health care providers aren't serving those children, and "the Health Department can't meet all these needs," she said.

State of the Child participants will consider these goals in setting priorities:

- More counseling and treatment for children and families in distress.
- More professional services for children, including medical and dental services.
- A coordinated effort to address substance abuse, often a major factor in child abuse cases.
- A continued attack on teen pregnancy.
- An effort to educate the public on opportunities to mentor children and adults.
- Establishing more mentoring programs.
- Networking between public and private service agencies.
- Increasing public awareness.

Those who attended the child abuse session called for more employees at the Department of Social Services and an automated system to keep track of calls and cases.

They also suggested a support group for child abusers and potential abusers and mentoring programs for parents. Participants said Social Services needs to network with schools and day-care centers.

Parents need help, too

Members of the group focusing on mentoring said the county has programs for youth, but parents also need assistance.

"Parents also need some guidance and support," said Clayton Jones of the Department of Social Services.

Someone working with a family in crisis over an extended period of time could help, Jones said. He said churches are an "untapped tremendous resource." Civic clubs could also participate, Jones said.

A group examining substance abuse also recommended working with children and families to prevent a crisis and break the cycle. A lot of tax dollars support substance abusers in jail, said Sharon Owen of the Rowan County Health Department.

Resources for school personnel

Another group looked at resources for school personnel in working with children. Cindy Stevenson of Family Crisis Service said many children who live at the homeless shelter and battered women's shelter attend Overton Elementary School. Those children need special programs, she said.

Someone suggested assigning a social worker to the school.

Dr. Marlene Anthony, executive director of the Rowan Partnership, said Gov. Jim Hunt has asked the legislature to add $1 million to $1.5 million in Smart Start funds to help pre-school children.

Rowan folks are currently working on a Smart Start plan.

Shirley Gray of the Department of Social Services suggested a Child Advocacy Council to coordinate efforts of different agencies.

Ritchie said the county needs that coordination, a computer system to tie agencies together and a publication to inform people who work with children.

Finding services

She said the Partnership for Children hopes to start a child care resource and referral service with Smart Start funds. That effort would help parents find services but could also help coordinate agencies, Ritchie said.

Last year, State of the Child Conference participants decided to focus on teen pregnancy prevention, mentoring programs and health concerns of young children.

The Adolescent Pregnancy Prevention Council added three classes for parents to teach them how to deal with their children concerning sexual issues. Teen pregnancy cases increased from 340 in 1994 to 359 in 1995, the most recent figures available.

The Salisbury YMCA started the Adopt a Youth mentoring program for children ages 6 to 15. The goal is to prevent at-risk children from getting into trouble, but the program needs volunteers.

The Partnership for Children plans to start a Parents as Teachers program to help new parents and a Community Voices program, which will identify leaders in all areas of the county to work with families.

Health services for children haven't improved, Owen reported. Smart Start funds may help recruit more health care providers to serve children, she said.

"We'd like to see more generalists and a pediatric dentist," Owen said. "It's our responsibility as a community to provide these services so we can have healthy children who grow up to be productive adults."

DSS can't perform duties without enough staff

DSS employees made that point in a letter two years ago

BY PAUL C. LUCAS
SPECIAL TO THE POST

It has been several months since the day I read about the death of little Jordan Bradshaw (Budde Clark). Since that day, I have often thought about the happy and energetic child I met approximately two years ago in the performance of my duties as a Child Protective Services investigator for the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

Since Jordan's death, there have been countless articles written about this little boy and the events surrounding his death. These articles for the most part have centered on pointing fingers and blaming DSS for not protecting Jordan. I have read statements from county commissioners casting blame on DSS social workers for not doing an adequate job as well as the community blaming DSS for this child's death.

I have yet to hear anyone place the responsibility for Jordan's death where it belongs. That responsibility belongs with the murderer.

Could DSS or anyone have done anything to prevent Jordan's death? I don't know. What I do know is that a tragic event such as this was predicted in a letter written and signed by the very social workers (including myself) that the county commissioners and the public are now accusing of not doing an adequate job. This letter was written approximately two years ago, pleading for help and given to the director of DSS. A report from the state also finds that Rowan County Child Protective Services Unit is understaffed.

My question is, why is this being ignored by the county commissioners? Since the death of the three Rowan County children there has been no addition to the staff at DSS. In fact, we have lost two social workers, one of which had over 20 years of experience, and a supervisor has been demoted. Does this improve the services DSS is able to provide to the families they serve? Someone is missing the point of this lesson.

The individuals who work in Child Protective Services are the most dedicated people I have ever worked with. These men and women do a thankless job that is constantly scrutinized. They live in constant fear that an incident such as this is going to happen. These individuals do the best they can in horrible conditions with an unmanageable caseload. When they ask for help, they are denied, and when a horrible incident such as Jordan's death occurs, they are blamed.

Without additional staff in the Child Protective Services Unit, Rowan County will again read about the death of a child in the Salisbury Post due to child abuse. Let us hope that this prediction does not come true.

Records bill: 'Now or never'

Bill to open reports of child deaths could be in trouble

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

The clock could be running out on the idea of opening records to the public in cases where a child dies of abuse or neglect.

Rep. Charlotte Gardner, R-Rowan, who proposed opening records after two Rowan children died from abuse earlier this year, is scrambling to find a compromise to save the bill she introduced in the House.

Gardner is motivated by the deaths of 6-year-old Budde Clark and 19-month-old Christopher Jones between Jan. 31 and Feb. 4. The Rowan County Department of Social Services had received reports of abuse about both children before they were killed, but the department would not discuss the cases until the Post quoted unidentified sources about the agency's involvement.

Gov. Jim Hunt has praised Gardner's bill and said he hopes it becomes the law of the state. But Gardner is once again concerned about delays.

"It's now or never," she told the Post after spending Monday trying to work out a plan to add the cost of a review team to the bill as it now stands.

➤ See Records, Page 7A

"I'm expecting we'll be putting the budget together by next week," she said. "It will go before the whole appropriations committee."

And some form of the bill she introduced to the House must be in the appropriations bill, she said, "or there's no hope at all."

The bill, House Bill 949, has faced sudden death before when it bogged down in a House judiciary committee. On April 30, bills not involving appropriations had to have passed either the House or Senate to remain alive for the rest of the session — and even next year.

Life preserver

But as the deadline neared, Rep. Billy Creech, a co-chairman of the appropriations committee, threw a life preserver by adding a $100,000 appropriation and referring it to a subcommittee for study. The subcommittee was supposed to look at Gardner's open records bill and another proposed by the N.C. Child Fatality Task Force to allow agencies to share records for study.

But days became weeks, and no subcommittee was appointed to do the study.

Gardner asked Rep. Chuck Neely, R-Wake, chairman of the judiciary II committee, why.

He apologized — somehow, it had fallen through the cracks — and appointed a committee, including Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange and chairman; Gardner; Joni Bowie, R-Guilford; Joe Kiser, R-Lincoln; and Fern Shubert, R-Union.

But Gardner was disappointed at its size and make-up and feared the bill could fail.

Compromise

So Monday she investigated a compromise. She went to Kevin FitzGerald, director of the N.C. Division of Social Services, to get figures on the cost of an independent group — like the team that reviewed the Rowan County deaths — investigating every time a child dies from abuse or neglect.

"I'm going to put an appropriation in the budget that will cover the cost for a team like that to go in," she said, "and their information would be made public."

She expects to get the figures today along with a recommendation on who will be on the team.

In the meantime, she says, she hopes the subcommittee will meet and discuss her bill as it now stands — and that option.

She said FitzGerald will speak to the committee in favor of opening information.

"He feels other areas in the state can benefit," Gardner said. "With 40 or more children a year dying in North Carolina of abuse, there is a chance to make changes in the system that will make a difference in children's lives. That's what it's all about."

She says the work of a review team would not duplicate the work of the State Child Fatality Task Force. The Task Force must wait for state autopsies and its investigations are usually delayed a year or more after a death.

"I think the trail gets mighty cold when you wait that long," Gardner said. "The concern is not there as it was initially, and the ability to make a change is more difficult the more distance you put between the death and review by a team."

Related issues

Gardner believes the two concepts — a review team and the task force — are related and need to be discussed together.

"But I don't have the luxury to wait to see what's going to happen," she said. "Kevin FitzGerald is very anxious to see this happen. He became a believer when he saw what transpired in Rowan County."

The process, she said, needs change.

The special subcommittee is also supposed to study the N.C. Child Fatality Task Force bill — House Bill 151 — which authorizes the task force to review death or maltreatment of children and allows the chief district court judge to designate agencies that can share information.

Tom Bennett, executive director of the state task force, hasn't taken a firm position on Gardner's proposal to open records.

"The guiding star is the welfare of the child and the brothers and sisters still in the home," he says. "Whatever we need to do to protect those children is what we need to do. If that means full disclosure, fine. If that means a certain degree of confidentiality, that's also fine."

The problem before the subcommittee, he says, will be balancing privacy and public accountability.

"Both could potentially be important to the safety of the child," he said.

Ken Eudy, lobbyist for the N.C. Press Association, says Gardner's bill as it now stands would be a significant change from the way child protective records are now handled.

"And any time you have a significant change proposed, it's a real challenge," he says.

"The members of the subcommittee that I know are very concerned that in trying to make a process better that they have thought through all the consequences, including the unforeseen consequences. I think they're obliged to do that. They're an incremental body. They do not do wholesale, sweeping changes, so they're going to move slowly, deliberately."

He said his concern is that the committee will resurrect the task force bill which had died in committee, and that it will be the one that will go through. But he believes that the task force reports are limited and late.

Child abuse, he said, "needs serious sunshine, serious debate, and the way you accomplish that is to make them public records, so citizens can look at the circumstances" under which children die.

The subcommittee ought to take a look at what is appropriate, he said. How can a community like Rowan be assured that the Department of Social Services, the hospital, Emergency Medical Services did the right thing?

"Not so much to find fault," he said. "It's too late for that child, but to make sure the system is working to protect children in the future."

Gardner: a positive step

Work begins on opening child fatality records

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

Opponents of a bill to open records in fatal child abuse cases are worried about the "great frenzy out there," one lawmaker said Thursday.

Once records are opened, newspapers will splash them across the front pages, destroy reputations and accuse parents of heinous crimes, Rep. Joni Bowie, R-Guilford, told fellow members of a committee studying the bill proposed by Rowan Rep. Charlotte Gardner.

"It's over, folks. You can't go back," Bowie said.

But Hugh Stevens, general counsel with N.C. Press Association who also represents the Salisbury Post, said, "Our interest is concentrated on cases in which the systems fail a child," to find out where and how they failed.

"The problem is the confidentiality laws keep you from looking at what happened," said Stevens, whose wife is a child abuse expert with the Guardian Ad Litem program. Secrecy can hide errors or prevent people who want to discuss what happened from doing so.

The hope is to loosen the law enough in specific cases, he said, to try to prevent that kind of case from happening again — and a number of states have already done so.

"We're trying to prevent confidentiality laws from preventing people from knowing what has happened," Stevens told the House appropriations subcommittee. Loosening the laws can produce a much better understanding of what happened through nobody's fault.

Change the system

Several members of the subcommittee said changes should be made in the child protection system.

"I believe we can work something out," said Ruth Easterling, D-Mecklenburg. "It's hopeful." Easterling had also introduced a bill enabling the N.C. Child Fatality Task Force to get access to confidential records. Until Thursday's meeting, Easterling's bill appeared technically dead because a subcommittee of Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, and Bowie had not acted on it.

The new subcommittee — of Hackney, Gardner, Bowie, Joe Kiser, R-Lincoln, and Fern Shubert, R-Union — has been asked to see if the two bills can be rolled into one. Kiser and Shubert did not attend Thursday's meeting.

Kevin FitzGerald, director of the N.C. Division of Social Services, attended part of the meeting and said the comments "sounded like a pretty constructive discussion."

"It was pretty positive," Gardner said as the meeting ended. "I feel a real effort for consensus."

Added Stevens, the press association attorney: "It's sort of like cooking collards. It takes patience."

Subcommittee Chairman Hackney suggested that the group meet again next week and hurried off to another committee meeting. The rest stayed to talk about issues which had been raised and scheduled another meeting to continue their discussion next Wednesday. Gardner expects the subcommittee will probably meet again next Thursday.

"People need time to work on it," she said.

Review team funding

She needs time to put $160,000 into the House budget bill for a special review team for the state — like the special state-appointed team which reviewed the abuse deaths of two Rowan County children.

Budde Clark, 6, and Christopher Jones, 19 months, died on the same weekend in late January, and Clark's stepmother and Jones' baby sitter have been charged with murder. The Department of Social Services investigated child abuse complaints involving both children, and the special state review team determined that the system broke down in a number of ways.

What Rowan discovered, Gardner told the subcommittee, was that the Child Fatality Task Force cannot get immediate action that is "absolutely necessary" because it must wait for an autopsy. And autopsies can take up to a year to get.

If Rowan hadn't moved quickly — under pressure from the media and child advocates — what happened to the two children in Rowan would have been old news, she said. "The trail gets cold."

They got attention because people complained to Gov. Hunt, he asked for a report on what happened, a special team came to Rowan to find out and produced a 13-page report.

And that whole report was public, she said, not just a cover letter like an initial review of local actions routinely done by state officials. The first report found few problems and provided few details.

The second investigation was more thorough because the state put extra people on it, Gardner said. "They would like to do this" on all fatality cases. "And they're estimating 60 of them next year."

50 cases reviewed

Chuck Harris, who heads children's services for state Social Services, said the department reviewed 50 cases last year, expects 55 this year and, with the continuing growth of abuse deaths, anticipates 60 next year. And the state learned a lot from the review done in Rowan.

"It certainly worked for us," Gardner said. Rowan got the report quickly, the information is valid and it's working. Rowan is already using it, other counties are looking at it, commissioners are adding three child protection workers and local agencies are developing a written procedure for working closer together.

Hackney asked if the intent was to circumvent his subcommittee, making yesterday's meeting unnecessary.

No, Gardner said.

"The budget is being put together now," she said. "My interest was not in circumventing the committee but in getting the money in." And her interest is not in a witch hunt but in preventing children from dying.

Elizabeth Cook, Salisbury Post editor, said the way the stories unfolded pointed up the need to do something promptly — quicker than the Child Fatality Task Force now moves. The investigation also showed the need for more social workers and for the public to see how Social Services did its job.

Many questions were raised and some solutions suggested during and after Thursday's meeting, including: Should the bill deal with public or private agencies or both? How much of the information will be made public? When? Who can ask for information? And when?

And when the meeting ended, Ken Eudy, lobbyist for the N.C. Press Association, must have been thinking about Budde Clark and Christopher Jones.

"You can't talk about this in theory," he said. "You have to talk about it in practical, real life experience."

Others taking part were Tom Bennett, executive director of the N.C. Child Fatality Prevention Task; Verla Insko, D-Orange, for the Task Force; Susan Hayes, attorney in the research division of the legislative legal staff; Dave Gordon, assistant attorney general with the human resources regional office for child welfare service in Greenville; Deborah Ross, attorney with the American Civil Liberties Union; Jane Gray, deputy attorney general for policy and planning who represented the State Bureau of Investigation in the Task Force discussions before the meeting.

Officials react to budget

BY WESLEY YOUNG
SALISBURY POST

John Shaw can't complain.

As director of Rowan County's Health Department, Shaw is looking forward to moving health services into the former Brendle's building the county bought last week.

But as other officials look over the county budget, some wonder how they can persuade the county to slip some extra money their way.

"We appreciate the support they have given us and we hope it will continue," Schools Superintendent Dr. Joe McCann said, trying to put the best face on a budget that may force him to make cutbacks — even cut jobs — if it's adopted.

The school system wanted an extra $1.4 million to keep existing programs in place, plus another $1.7 million to make the system better. But County Manager Tim Russell's budget calls for spending an extra $817,000 for programs at Rowan-Salisbury Schools.

The Board of Commissioners has yet to approve the budget. Commissioners discuss spending on Wednesday and Thursday, then hold a public hearing June 2.

McCann expects he'll be talking to county commissioners before the final decision.

"We want them to be aware of the distinct possibility that we will reduce services in some areas," McCann said. "If this is the funding level, that is a distinct possibility."

Rick Travis, director of Social Services, hopes to make another pitch for positions the county manager is not recommending after a year in which two children died of abuse and statewide attention focused on his department.

Russell says Travis should get three new child abuse investigators and one new supervisor in the child abuse section. Russell got requests for 21 new positions across county government but turned most down.

Travis wants another four positions: a foster care worker, an adoption worker and two more supervisors.

"The eight positions we asked for are the number required for the agency to meet state-recommended workload standards," Travis said. "The county manager has a responsibility to take all the needs of the county into account when putting the budget together, so he is trying to balance competing needs and interests."

Travis said he hopes to show county leaders extra revenue from the state that would allow him to add new positions without the county footing all of the bill.

Travis said he wants to work extra hard to find money for the adoption worker not in the county manager's budget.

"We have a number of children in foster care, and a significant percentage are eligible for adoption," Travis said. "We have only one social worker doing adoption — not only trying to find homes for children but also having to do the home studies on families wanting to adopt.

Budget

"Because of the increase in the number of child abuse reports, we have removed more children from their homes in the last three months, so that the foster care caseload has increased about 10 percent," Travis said.

Meanwhile, the Economic Development Commission is looking at a big cut in their appropriation: from nearly $200,000 to about $55,000.

It's not that the county doesn't want the agency to do its job. Russell says in his budget statement that the agency should use up most of the cash reserves it has put aside — nearly an entire year's budget.

"You are not hearing me quarrel about it," said Rufus Honeycutt, chairman of the EDC board. "We want to do what we can because we have the interest of the county at heart."

Honeycutt said the money was put aside with the idea the agency might invest in a building to attract industryt.

Now that the county has an industrial park with a speculative building going up, "if we can reduce and help that much, we are not going to quarrel," Honeycutt said.

Shaw said the county's purchase of the Brendle's building shows the board is committed to "address needs that have been outstanding for a number of years."

"We have purchased an outstanding parcel of land and a shell of a building," Shaw said. "What will go in that shell will have to be completely designed. We have to take a fresh look at what our needs are."

And since the building is so large — more than three times the size of the existing Health Department building — Shaw said the county will be able to place other human services offices in the building.

If schools have to cut the budget, McCann said, programs like remediation and enrichment may have to bear the brunt of the blow.

The fate of such programs "will be part of the question that the board will attempt to answer" if the county doesn't give more to the schools, McCann said.

Utility increases alone may add $355,000 to costs, McCann said, because this will be the first year in which all schools are air-conditioned. Plus, the school system must match expected state teacher salary increases.

When they talked about money for schools, commissioners complained that schools aren't doing enough about discipline. Commissioners wondered whether the money is well-spent on programs that help a relatively small number of troubled students.

McCann said the alternative school may have small numbers, but it "affects the learning environment for a significant number of our students."

"We are trying to make a better learning environment for all our students by having those options available," McCann said.

CHINA GROVE — The town's Beautification Committee picked the grounds of First United Methodist Church at 110 W. Church St. as the Yard of the Month for May.

The church has done extensive landscaping around its three-building complex, planting more than 150 trees, shrubs and flowers.

Lloyd Drye designed the landscape and led the planting. Lee Weathers and Andrew Deal prepared the soil for grass. Kenneth Deal did the tractor work. More than 15 other church members helped with the landscaping project.

The China Grove Beautification Committee recently planted a bed of flowers at the church and dedicated it in memory of John DeMarcus and in honor of Jamima DeMarcus. First Methodist members, both were charter members of the Beautification Committee and active in its projects for the past 24 years.

The Rev. Sally Langford dedicated the flower bed.

Boy Scout Troop 375 recently picked up litter along two miles of U.S. 29-A, which the Beautification Committee adopted. Twenty-three Scouts participated in picking up 18 large bags of trash.

Shirley Morton is president of the Beautification Committee. Martha Rudisill is treasurer.

building falls on car

HIGH POINT (AP) — A man escaped injury when a two-story brick building collapsed on top of his car after the car spun around and hit the building.

Paul Brayton, 55, of Lexington, slammed into the front of the RJ Socks outlet store after he was spun around in a minor accident in front of the building.

Brayton managed to open the passenger's side door of his 1994 Bentley and escape.

Both the car's air bags deployed, but the car's frame didn't cave in under the weight of the structure's bricks.

"It's a good strong car," he said.

Six people inside the outlet store also escaped injury — they happened to be in the back of the two-story storefront.

■ Man shot and killed after minor car accident

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A man died on Saturday after he was shot in the head Friday night trying to flee the scene of a minor car accident.

Jaime Tirso, 24, apparently backed his pick-up into the car of Wendell Lloyd, 19, about 11 p.m. Friday night at an east Charlotte townhouse complex.

As Tirso tried to drive off, Lloyd pulled out a gun and fired several shots at Tirso's truck, said Charlotte-Mecklenburg police duty captain Randy Johnson. Tirso was hit once in the back of the head, he said.

After being shot, Tirso ran his truck through the wall of a townhouse in the complex. Six people were inside but none of them were hurt, Johnson said.

Tirso was taken to Carolinas Medical Center where he died on Saturday.

Lloyd was arrested at the scene and charged with assault. After Tirso died, Johnson said the charge would be changed to murder.

DSS board confident of director

BY WESLEY YOUNG
SALISBURY POST

After four months of controversy, Social Services board members say they still have great confidence in the job performance of Director Rick Travis.

Tuesday, the Social Services board agreed that a positive job evaluation of Travis done in December is just as valid today, after months of public scrutiny over how his department handled the investigation of two child fatalities.

"After all we've been through, this is still how we feel," board member Dianne Scott said during the meeting. "This is still a current review."

County administration had asked the Social Services board for a review of Travis' job performance, in preparation for merit pay increases to be granted when the new budget goes into effect July 1.

Instead of working up a new job review, Social Services board members decided the favorable report they made in December — before the controversy erupted — would do just fine.

"I think he deserves a medal," board member Lee Piper said after the meeting, when asked how the controversy affected her opinion of Travis' job performance. She noted that Travis was "attacked personally" but always responded by keeping "the level of discussion at a practical, pragmatic level."

During the months following the deaths of Budde Lee Clark, 6, and 19-month-old Christopher Lee Jones, Social Services has faced not one but two state investigations of how the department performed its job. Along the way, County Commissioner Dave Rowland charged Travis with failing to properly review how his department had handled the child abuse investigations.

The second state review said Social Services missed critical information showing the two children were at further risk of abuse. The state also issued a list of recommendations for improvements, which Travis is beginning to carry out.

"It is good to have the confidence of the board, having gone through such a difficult period," Travis told the Post after Tuesday's meeting. "It is natural to have self-doubts. I appreciate the vote of confidence."

Travis said that if anything, his board members were in a better position during the months of controversy than before, to see how he handled his department.

Board member Jeanne Misenheimer said Travis has done an excellent job leading the department. Although Travis' earlier job review was favorable, she said that in light of the subsequent controversy, "I would multiply that ten times."

Misenheimer said Travis kept the board well informed about what was going on and that he tried to cooperate with everyone as his department came under close watch.

For the earlier review, Social Services board members talked to people in the department and in other parts of the state who were familiar with Travis' work, Piper and Misenheimer said.

"We couldn't find anybody that would say anything bad about him at all," Piper said, adding that Travis is "respected statewide" and that the staff feel their director's support.

Piper called Travis "a fantastic leader, working continually to improve everything."

County OKs abuse investigators, cuts parent training

BY WESLEY YOUNG
SALISBURY POST

Beefed-up child protection was in, but a training program for parents was out as county commissioners talked about helping children during Wednesday's budget session.

No decisions were final, but commissioners tentatively approved three new child-abuse investigators for the Department of Social Services, along with an extra supervisor for the troubled agency's child-protection section.

Later, commissioners eliminated from the budget altogether a donation to the Rowan Partnership for Children, a nonprofit agency which operates the Partners in Learning Center at Catawba College.

The agency wanted $75,000 to start a parent training program. Advocates argued the new program would help prevent future child abuse.

Social Services Director Rick Travis faced close grilling from commissioners trying to improve services without raising taxes. In the end, Travis appeared to get new positions but not as many as he originally requested, including a second supervisory position.

Travis repeatedly insisted the county cannot simply move employees around within the department — at no cost — and come up with a needed adoptions worker — one the county doesn't plan to pay for but which board members believe the county needs.

Travis's chief critic on the board, Commissioner Dave Rowland, didn't believe such a job swap was impossible.

"I am not going to vote for (new social services positions) unless you can come up with at least one person to do adoptions," Rowland said.

Commissioner Newton Cohen didn't believe it, either.

"I want you to set priorities," Cohen told Travis. "You can't tell me adoption is number 141 (in priority) and that you have 140 (employees) there."

After a lot of discussion, commissioners instructed Travis to try to find the extra position within existing staff. Later, Travis told the Post he doesn't know how he'll do that.

The problem arises from the complex funding methods used in social services, Travis indicated to commissioners. Different programs rely on different combinations of federal and local money.

Travis figured that the county could add a position with existing money, but at great cost: for instance, eliminating three child-support enforcement workers could allow the hiring of one extra abuse investigator, if the county also chipped in $24,000.

Even with three new investigators and a new supervisor, Travis told the board he won't be meeting the 5-to-1 ratio of workers to supervisors the state recommends. Board Chairman Jim Neely and Cohen suggested the state ratios were unrealistic for Rowan and that experienced workers shouldn't need such close supervision.

But two child fatalities this winter — both attributed to alleged child abuse — make Travis want close supervision of his workers.

"I want to know if there is a breakdown," Travis said. "I want to know if there is a worker getting behind. To me, it is sort of insurance. As manager, I want assurance that the quality is good."

➤ See County, Page 2C

County

What Neely wanted was assurance from Travis that the county would be able to keep any more children from dying. But Travis said he could never give that kind of guarantee, "just like Sheriff (Bob) Martin can't tell you there won't be any more bank robberies or homicides."

Although Travis said he could shift workers from child abuse treatment to investigation, "if all we do is say that a child has been abused, and don't do anything about it, what good is that?"

Rowland told commissioners he is committed to improving child protection but wants Travis to make changes.

"I just want to see some cooperation from Rick," Rowland said.

That prompted a challenge from Commissioner Steve Blount, a defender of Travis.

"If Rick comes back and says that he can't find (an extra job)," Blount asked Rowland, "do you assume that he is being uncooperative or that he can't find it?"

Blount complained that commissioners were willing to accept the state's conclusion faulting the county for not doing more, but unwilling to carry out the report's call for more staff and supervision to carry out the job.

Blount returned to the fray when commissioners discussed a request from the Partnership for Children for a "Parents as Teachers" program giving advice to new mothers on child-rearing. The Partnership received $50,000 in county money last year and wanted $75,000 in the coming year. The county manager recommended $50,000 for the agency.

Blount called the program preventive, but Cohen blasted the request and suggested cutting the money altogether.

"This is a classic example of someone who, once they get their hand in the coffer, wants to keep it there," Cohen said.

Rowland endorsed a complete cut as well, saying the money saved could pay for an adoptions worker if needed.

Blount called Rowland and Cohen "two scrooges" — he said it with a smile — and gave up his push for the money.

In addition to trying to find an adoptions worker slot within existing staff, commissioners want Travis to check out the possibility of farming out adoption services privately.

Prevention program could nip child abuse early

Backers still trying to sell Parents as Teachers program

BY TRACY PRESSON
SALISBURY POST

Rowan Partnership for Children officials don't plan to lobby county commissioners to reconsider $75,000 for parent training. But they say that money could help prevent child abuse and neglect.

County Manager Tim Russell recommended $50,000 for the Parents as Teachers program, which would send trained mentors to help parents of preschoolers.

But county commissioners cut the program from the budget after objections from Newton Cohen and Dave Rowland.

A $75,000 allocation to the partnership would have met the 5 percent matching funds the county may need for an estimated $1.5 million in state money for Smart Start, a program to make sure children start school healthy and ready to learn.

Gov. Jim Hunt will be in Salisbury for a town meeting Monday afternoon to discuss early childhood education with 75 selected business, community and government leaders as well as parents and child care providers.

Jim Neely, chairman of the county commissioners, received an invitation to the meeting at the Partners in Learning Center at Catawba College.

Dr. Shirley Ritchie, chairperson of the local Partnership for Children, said commissioners turned down a program that has received good results in other places.

The Rowan-Salisbury Schools previously offered Parents as Teachers on a limited basis, but had to cut the program because of a lack of funds.

The program starts with trained mentors contacting new parents in the hospital after a child's birth and later visiting their homes to provide training and resources for raising healthy children.

"We're naturally disappointed because we chose a program we felt had the best chance to deal with some of the problems that exist before child abuse comes to forefront," Ritchie said.

Two Rowan County children died earlier this year as a result of child abuse. County commissioners have approved four more employees in child protection for the Department of Social Services.

Ritchie said the Parents as Teachers program could save the county money in the future on personnel to fight child abuse.

"We see that this opportunity to prevent what happens to children if parents don't take their responsibility and understand child rearing was lost in their denial," Ritchie said. "It's going to become more and

more necessary to fund the investigators and police officers who deal with it on the other end. We see this as absolutely necessary if we're ever going to make any real inroads to the problem."

Ritchie thinks the county could use some of its fund balance for the $75,000.

"If the county has funds they have stashed away for a rainy day, we feel the rainy day has arrived," she said. "And we are in crisis in this county. We've spent several years studying the needs. We think this program would use the funds in a good way."

Child abuse tragedies have happened because the county hasn't funded similar programs, Ritchie said.

"There's a lack of understanding of child development and families are under a lot of stress," she said. "This program provides mentors to work with families to give them instruction on parenting and help them manage stress."

The N.C. General Assembly hasn't decided on expansion of Smart Start, which currently provides 43 counties with services to improve the lives of preschool children. Rowan County received $100,000 in planning money this fiscal year and could get $1.5 million for programs in 1997-98.

Dr. Marlene Anthony, executive director of the Partnership for Children, submitted Rowan's Smart Start proposal to the state on Friday.

The local partnership will have to come up with 5 percent in matching funds — privately if county commissioners don't change their mind about the $75,000 allocation.

"We thought it would be fitting for the county to support us to that degree since we're going to be accessing state funds," Ritchie said. "By trying to hold the status quo, we are putting ourselves behind."

IMPROVING CHILDREN'S LIVES

Action and prevention

You might have been laughed out of the room a year ago if you'd suggested that Rowan County commissioners would stand on the verge of adding three child protection investigators and a supervisor to the Social Services payroll today. County departments seldom get that many new positions in one fell swoop.

But Rowan County seldom gets hit by the kind of tragedy that it knew this past winter. Within five days, three children who had come to the attention of Social Services died, two from abuse. The public quickly concluded what an outside review team eventually documented: Social Services suffered from understaffing, a need for revised procedures and a host of other problems.

In that light, the four positions in the proposed county budget prove to be essential — really, a minimal response, considering the department's request for a total of seven new people. The state has strongly recommended that Rowan add more supervisors, but commissioners are resisting. Rowan desperately needs a stronger system for detecting and treating child abuse. Commissioners appear committed to building it — but only to a point.

Those needs stated, here's a bid to take the concern over children's welfare another step further. Instead of just focusing on treating the results of abuse and neglect, the county also should invest in prevention.

That's where the Rowan Partnership for Children comes in. The nonprofit organization requested $75,000 from the county to operate Parents as Teachers, a program that sends educators into the home after a baby is born to serve as mentors and models to the parents.

County Manager Tim Russell recommended $50,000 for the program in his no-tax-increase budget, but commissioners axed it, apparently inspired by these words of wisdom from Newton Cohen: "This is a classic example of someone who, once they get their hands in the coffer, wants to keep it there." Dave Rowland threw in an "amen" of sorts.

That kind of thinking has prevented Rowan County from coming up with a full-scale assault on the problems of child abuse and neglect. As the budget stands now, it gives Social Services a half-solution in child protection and slams the door in the face of a nonprofit agency that's trying to help children. Is that really what the majority of commissioners want for Rowan County? Is it the way Rowan citizens want to treat the problems of abuse and neglect?

Autopsy backs up abuse reports in child's death

Medical examiner's work shows Budde Clark suffered continuing abuse

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

Four months after Budde Lee Clark died of severe blows to his head and his lifeless body was put in a bathtub to make it look as though he had drowned, an autopsy verifies that the 6-year-old had been brutally beaten for a long time.

The first paragraph of the 12-page report of the autopsy performed by the state medical examiner in Chapel Hill lists more than 27 new — and old — bruises and abrasions on his face and scalp alone. So many more cover the rest of his body that it is impossible to get an accurate total of the number of injuries he suffered — or when.

Citing blunt force injuries to the head as the cause of his death on Jan. 31, the first page of the autopsy just released summarizes those injuries as:

- Multiple contusions and abrasions of his face and scalp;
- Moderate brain swelling;
- Acute brain hemorrhage;
- Bruising of the brain;
- And necrosis, or death, of an area of the brain stem.

In addition, the autopsy showed:

- Multiple contusions and abrasions of his chest and arms and legs;
- Healing fractures of his sixth and seventh ribs;
- Wasting of the muscles in his extremities;
- Thymic involution, which means that the thymus gland in his chest had shrunk, which is an indication of stress in a child;
- Rectal prolapse, which means his rectum was protruding from his body;
- And acute and chronic bronchitis.

The major thrust of the autopsy, said Dr. John Butts, the state's chief medical examiner, is that Budde Clark was "covered up with scrapes and bruises, and, as in any case where a child is regarded to be battered, a variety of various injuries, scrapes, tears, cuts, bruises and internal injuries that can't be explained by an accident."

Generally, he said, in cases such as this, the injuries are not only of different ages but are more numerous "than you can account for by a kid running into something or falling down, so you have to have multiple incidents to explain."

The most significant injuries in terms of causing Budde Lee Clark's death, he said, "are the blows to his head, indicating he was hit with something or ran into something, and the bleeding over the brain — that's the most significant."

Butts went through the autopsy, performed by Dr. Karen Chancellor, who was out of the country when it was released, during a telephone interview with the Post, commenting as he turned pages.

"There are an awful lot of injuries here," he said. "Multiple injuries above and beyond anything you might expect a child to encounter in his normal play activity."

As children and as parents, he said, everyone sees children "run into things, have things fall on them, occasionally catapult off a bicycle, but generally we survive childhood injuries with minor scars. When you see a whole host of injuries, simply beyond what can be explained by any other trauma — certainly the examination shows the child died of trauma, and he would certainly fit our definition of a battered child. The evidence of episodes of injuries over a period of time fit what we call battering."

Budde Lee Clark died five days before 19-month-old Christopher Jones also died of child abuse. The autopsy for the toddler has not yet been completed.

But their deaths led to charges of murder against Budde Clark's stepmother, Robin Gosnell, and Christopher Jones' baby sitter, Jeremy Butcher.

And public outrage prompted Gov. Jim Hunt and his top Human Services administrators to look at what happened here. As a result of the findings of the review team that came to Rowan, changes are now being made in social services procedures here and on the state level. And the General Assembly is now considering legislation to open records in cases of fatal child abuse.

Rick Travis, director of the Rowan County Department of Social Services, who has refused to speak directly with the reporter assigned to the story since the review team's report, was asked by fax if he had any comment on the autopsy, how many times and when complaints were made relating to Budde Lee Clark after he was put into the custody of Lee and Robin Gosnell and how many times and when social workers visited him during that period.

Travis responded by fax that "the only 'complaint' received originated 6/25/96. The last visit occurred in November, 1996 — prior to 12/5/96 closure of the case by DSS." That was less than two months before Budde Lee Clark's death. He did not say how many times social workers saw the child before the case was closed.

Neither Budde Lee Clark's father, Lee Gosnell, who has moved from Cleveland to Salisbury, nor his mother, Pam Bradshaw, could be reached for comment.

But his grandparents, who have talked openly about the difficulty they had seeing him while he was alive and concerns about a nose injury in which the septum was removed one nostril, were not surprised that the autopsy verifies long-time abuse.

"Finally," said his paternal grandmother, Louise Manning, "I know that everything I have been thinking, believing in my heart is true. I couldn't prove it, but it's proven now. We thought it but the truth has come out."

Her thoughts immediately turned to her own inability to intervene — and her anger erupted.

"There was nothing I could do," she said. "I was forbidden" to go on the property of the Cleveland home to see her grandson by his stepmother, Robin Gosnell. "All I can say is I hope God punishes her. God's going to punish her — if she did it."

The child's maternal grandmother, Jane Bradshaw, said nothing in the autopsy can surprise her. "Nothing can be any worse than what I've heard. I don't think it can be any worse than I think it is."

Her husband, Jimmy Bradshaw, said he knew his grandson was being abused for a long time.

"I'm assuming probably well over a year," he said, "and if I was a betting man, I would say it's been going on since they had that child."

His daughter, Pam Bradshaw, lost custody of her son, then known as Jordan Bradshaw, in March, 1995, to his father, Lee Gosnell. Gosnell sought custody after the Rowan Department of Social Services stepped up its push to get "deadbeat dads" to pay back child support. Before that, he had almost nothing to do with the child, according to the child's mother and grandparents.

After the custody hearing, the child lived with the Gosnells, who changed their own names to Clark and his to Budde Lee Clark.

At the time of his death, the autopsy report said he was 40 inches long and weighed 35 pounds, and the doctor's summary and interpretation of the findings noted that he was small for his age.

In addition to body diagrams, the autopsy included written descriptions and results of external, internal and microscopic examinations as well as X-rays that revealed the rib fractures; blood tests that revealed no alcohol, cocaine or morphine; and a statement of the collection of evidence required by a sexual assault test. It was turned over to the Cleveland Police Department on Feb. 1, and the state lab did not do a rape analysis.

Authorities do that kind of analysis, Butts said, but added that "certainly an injury to the rectum or penis of boy or the vagina of a girl has to be considered as possible sexual abuse. We haven't stated there was sexual abuse. All we stated was there was an injury or abnormality regarding the rectum. You can get a prolapse for other reasons but it certainly was unusual."

Butts also commented on possible cigarette burns, which sources had said were evident on the child's body before the autopsy was released.

Butts said any abrasion or scrap of the right size could have been the blistering of a cigarette. "And there were other things and marks on the body that might have been burns."

"The measurements of many of the abrasions listed in the autopsy are an exact fit for a burning cigarette," said an emergency medical technician, who reviewed the autopsy but asked that her name not be used.

The autopsy also includes numerous indications that the abuse took place over a long period of time.

Butts pointed to the two rib fractures that were healing and the wasting of the child's muscles.

"That obviously predates the fresh injuries he had," the doctor said.

The examination also noted fresh and old bleeding over the surface of the brain inside the head, he said. That probably related to an old head injury.

The same can be said about the use of the word "chronic" and the word "resolving," in relation to the necrosis of the brain since resolving means the brain is trying to heal itself.

That's a repeated finding in the summary.

"Internal examination reveals further evidence of remote and recent head injury," Chancellor wrote, concluding that "numerous injuries to the body are present and are in various stages of healing, some being recent while others are chronic injuries."

The cause of the microscopic findings of dead tissue in the brainstem is unclear, she says. However, their nature is ischemic, which means a failure of the blood supply, Butts said, and most likely the result of some previous episode.

CASE CLOSED TOO EARLY

Battering unnoticed?

SALISBURY POST 6/2/97

Someone who suspected Budde Lee Clark was being abused tipped off the Rowan County Department of Social Services last June. An investigation ensued, and a social worker paid a final visit to the home in November. On Dec. 5, the department officially closed his case.

Budde Clark

Two months later, 6-year-old Budde Lee Clark was dead.

The facts that the Rowan DSS slowly shares with the public about this death are as damning as the autopsy report from the N.C. Medical Examiner's Office. Budde died from blows to the head around Jan. 31, but the autopsy proves he had long been a victim of battering and abuse that his immediate family somehow shielded from others' eyes.

Even the Department of Social Services'.

Old head injuries. Dead tissue in his brain stem. Broken ribs that were healing. Bruises and scrapes all over his body. Signs of possible sexual abuse or other odd injuries.

And, in a boy who was rambunctious and sturdy when his father won custody away from his mother, wasting of muscle in his arms and legs.

You might feel better not knowing the sad details of Budde Lee Clark's torturous life and death. But no person of conscience could gloss over his demise without calling for justice — stepmother Robin Gosnell will be tried in 1998 for murder — and for serious corrections to the child protection system in Rowan County.

Reform is on the way. A thorough state review has highlighted weaknesses in the Rowan system that could bring improvements statewide. County commissioners have appointed a task force to unite all the forces that can detect and treat child abuse. (The task force holds its second meeting tonight.) Commissioners may allocate DSS four new employees and $100,000 for new technology — not as much as the department wanted, but a giant leap ahead of what it has had.

And the public has been reminded that the responsibility for reporting child abuse rests with everyone, not just relatives.

Unfinished business remains — and much of it must transpire out of the public's view. DSS Director Rick Travis says no one has been fired or demoted for the handling of this case or the Christopher Jones case. The signs that seem so clear in hindsight were not evident at the time, he has said.

That personnel issue rests solely with Travis and his loyal board of directors. But as commissioners put the finishing touches on the county budget, one fact rings out: Having the right employees is just as important as having enough employees. A hundred new workers would fall short if even one or two lack adequate training, exercise poor judgment or care little about children like the late Budde Lee Clark.

Reporting abuse gets teacher in trouble

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

Overton Elementary teacher Debbie Hirst told the Rowan County Child Abuse Task Force Monday night that her job was threatened after she spoke out a month ago about the problems she had reporting abuse.

"I caught tremendous flak," she said. "I came tonight to say I'm not at liberty to say any more. I don't want to lose my job."

Last month she told the Task Force that she had called the Rowan County Department of Social Services seven times to report abuse and never got a response.

But she got an immediate response the following day from her administrator, who told her she had to go through a supervisor who would decide if a suspicion of abuse was "worthy" of a report.

Superintendent Joe McCann, sitting in front of Hirst in the County Administrative Offices, listened and told the group school policies are a matter of record.

Overton Principal Mary Frances Edens could not be reached for comment this morning.

The school policy says: "All employees have a legal responsibility and all school employees have a moral responsibility to report all instances of suspected child abuse or neglect to the appropriate school authorities.

"All reports of suspected child abuse or neglect shall be forwarded to a designated governmental agency for investigation and action as may be appropriate."

But Hirst, a tenured teacher, said that's the biggest problem. "That's the bomb that's ticking," she said. "I should have the right to call whoever I want to call. That's the law, but that's not the reality."

"What she's saying is very true," agreed Arnold Chamberlain, a local businessman who identified himself as a volunteer guardian ad litem. "That's reality."

Attorney Mary Beth Smith and Rowan Helping Ministries Director Dianne Scott agreed that teachers must be allowed to make reports.

The teacher, Smith said, is the one who sees the imprint of a belt buckle on a child's head. Social workers need to talk to that teacher when investigating reports.

"She's the only one who's going to see that child day after day," Scott agreed. She wants managers at Rowan Helping Ministries to tell her they're making a report but to call themselves.

McCann said he sees no reason to keep Social Services from talking to teachers.

The policies, he said, have been reviewed as recently as the past two weeks. If anything else is happening, "we need to follow through."

"Between now and the next meeting," Commissioner Dave Rowland asked him, "will you look into her situation and find out why her job is on the line?"

"I will," McCann said.

Discussion last night indicated other Rowan County agencies are already talking more to each other — and opening more doors.

"I'm pleased with the communication we're developing," said Jim Freeman, chief operating officer at Rowan Regional Medical Center. "Right at the beginning that's what we said we had to do, that we've got to make sure we can communicate." Last night, he felt like that was happening.

So did Rowland.

"We saw some additions to the hospital policies and some change in the school system," Rowland said. McCann's response to Hirst, he added, should give teachers more confidence about making reports.

Nearly 40 representatives of most Rowan County agencies split into two groups. One focused on the criminal justice system, including law enforcement, the courts and the district attorney's office, and all agencies made up the second group. Social Services officials met with both.

They discussed procedures they each follow, how they should connect with each other and changes they must make to combat child abuse.

"We can write all the protocols we want to write," Judge Anna Mills Wagoner said, but for them to do any good, they must be followed. And the immediate need, she added, is "to find out where the systems come together."

More are coming together. Previously, the hospital contacted only Social Services in cases of suspected abuse, Freeman said. Now they will also contact the sheriff's department. He agreed with Rowland's suggestion that hospital officials make a second contact if 30 minutes pass without a response.

The hospital defines abuse and neglect from a medical standpoint and would be glad to train other people to recognize the signs, Freeman said.

Hirst suggested the Task Force consider training resource officers in middle and high schools and DARE officers in elementary schools because they have authority. She also suggested mandatory training for all teachers and adding a statement on abuse to school handbooks.

Repeatedly Task Force members reminded themselves that everybody, including the public, has a responsibility to report abuse and neglect and that any procedure must have checks and balances. They also want to review the system regularly to make sure it's working.

County Commissioner Steve Blount scheduled another meeting June 30 at 5:15 p.m.

County swaps worker for adoptions slot

BY WESLEY YOUNG
SALISBURY POST

Social Services will swap a worker in foster care for one in adoptions, under a plan the Rowan County Board of Commissioners approved Monday.

Rick Travis, director of Social Services, told commissioners he could live with the swap because he hopes the state will approve money he can later use for the lost foster care worker.

"The lines between foster care and adoption are blurring," Travis said. "If we focus on adoption, I hope the state provides money for staff."

Board Chairman Jim Neely wanted to know if it was better to keep a worker in foster care or adoptions.

"It is six of one and half-dozen of another," Travis told commissioners, who had insisted last week that he find an adoptions worker from existing staff. "When you take the foster care person and put them on adoptions, less attention will be placed on children in foster care."

The county has a backlog of adoption cases waiting for home studies, so Travis had asked for an additional worker. Travis had also asked the board for an extra foster care worker, saying the staff handles a caseload of 30 each, when the state recommends 20.

Under the plan Travis presented Monday, the foster care staff will drop from five to four, and handle an average of 37 children each. But Travis said state money may make things better down the road.

The N.C. House budget includes $2.2 million statewide for adoptions and foster care workers, Travis said. The measure, part of a series of child welfare system improvements cosponsored by Rep. Charlotte Gardner, R-Rowan, has passed the human resources appropriations subcommittee.

"We won't be doing all we could for foster care, but with the prospect of foster care state funds, I can live with that," Travis said. "To assign someone to adoptions will hurt the foster care staff, but I feel good about the prospect of state money by October."

Commissioners unanimously approved the plan. In the same motion, the board approved adding the three child abuse investigators and one supervisor they'd already agreed on.

Travis had requested eight positions in all, citing state guidelines for how many workers he should have and the number of supervisors he should have. Commissioners rejected money for two supervisory positions — one in child abuse prevention — that Travis had requested, along with funds for an additional foster care worker and an adoptions worker.

Program lets volunteers speak out for abused, neglected children

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

A woman and a teen-ager looked at each other outside the juvenile courtroom in Rowan County's Justice Center on a recent Tuesday, their faces as cloudy as the heavy gray skies beyond the window.

"All she wanted," the woman told Amy Collins and Beth Dixon, "is a foster family for two years."

A foster family with a mother and a father who want her. Food. A safe place to sleep. Friends to talk to.

That's a little less than most teen-agers want.

But it's more than this little girl on the brink of becoming a woman ever got from her own parents.

Now, she's in the custody of the Rowan County Department of Social Services and living at a group home. On Tuesday, a judge, a social worker and the child's own advocate argued about plans for her to spend the summer with a parent in a distant city. The same parent who didn't want her and sent her here, to live with her other parent in Rowan County. That parent didn't want her either — and "dumped" her into the files of the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

And maybe, someday, she'll decide that was the best thing that ever happened to her because she was assigned to that child advocate, known as a guardian ad litem.

Though the person often feels more like a guardian angel to a child, the phrase literally means "guardian of the case" and refers to 43 volunteers in Rowan County who are legally appointed by a judge to speak for an ever-increasing army of abused and neglected children.

The program began here 11 years ago with three guardians who were advocates for 25 children. Last year 46 served 127 children. The number of guardians are down a little right now, but the number of children is up — more than 140 children in 79 families.

Last Monday guardians represented seven children in three cases before Judge David Wilson in the regular session of juvenile court for abused and neglected children. Two children in a fourth case didn't have a guardian; there just aren't enough.

Wilson put two children from one family into permanent homes with relatives; a third child remains in foster care.

The other four remain in limbo. Two cases were continued until parents are tried on criminal charges in another court. And children in the other case have to remain in temporary care because Social Services can't find their mother.

When the court emptied, deputy clerk Brenda Stephenson shook her head.

"When I first started this job," she said, "I cried."

Sometimes she still does.

A day later, after a special hearing before Judge Anna Mills Wagoner, the guardian and the teen-ager finally cried when they said goodbye for the summer. (Because the rules of confidentiality are so strict, court officials wouldn't allow the Post to name the guardian for fear of identifying the child.)

The day hadn't turned out the way they hoped for a girl nobody wants —even though her guardian did the best she could.

"I didn't think she should go back home for the summer," the guardian says. "I didn't think she was ready. I didn't think the environment was right. And I didn't think she had received the services ordered by the court or would get them."

And that meant she needed to go back to court and say so.

"That's my job," she says.

Granting legal power

Guardians ad litem are an "equal party" to all court proceedings with the parents and the Department of Social Services, explains Collins, district administrator for the guardian ad litem program in Rowan and Cabarrus Counties. "Any of the three have the right to file a motion to ask the court for a hearing any time they see fit. Parents may feel like they're ready to have custody again. We may feel services aren't being provided."

The guardians, she says, are given the legal power to make sure the children get the services the court orders and, for that reason, are often called the "watchdogs of the court."

So, upset about what had not been done or wasn't being done, the guardian talked to Collins and Beth Dixon, the program's attorney.

The judge wouldn't have had to look at this case again until March, 1998, Dixon says, but the guardian, who'd been working with the girl for two years, was deeply concerned.

The girl had abused alcohol and needs special classes and supervision. But the guardian was worried that her social worker had not arranged for someone to work with her in that distant city.

"She didn't want her to go some place and not be able to get some treatment," Dixon says.

Well over a year ago, the judge had ordered a psychological examination of the girl, but in court Tuesday, the social worker said they had two previous psychiatric exams and that was enough.

"One was old," Dixon says. The other dealt with a specific question that offered no pertinent information. "There never had been a psychological assessment."

That was important, she says. "A psychological examination is an important tool to determine what the needs of the child are and what services can meet those needs. That's what our mandate is. That's what our program is designed to do.

"We filed the motion, and then it was done. It was one of the things that got accomplished the day before court. I believe that if the guardian had not filed the motion, it would not have been accomplished."

When they filed that motion, the guardian went to work. She had to speak up for a child that society was ready to forget.

"I can ask any of her providers — counselors, the police department, mental health — what they've done. No one's exempt from me," she says, "because I'm working for the court, doing an independent investigation for that child.

"So that's what I did. Boom, boom, boom!"

She asked the questions, gathered the information and wrote a report for the court.

Readying report

With only 12 days, including six working days, from the time Dixon filed the motion until the court date, the guardian worked non-stop — and her report was ready when the judge sat down behind the bench.

And Social Services had reacted quickly after the guardian filed her motion.

In those 6 working days:

- She finally had the psychological examination.
- The social worker contacted the department of social services in the city where the teen is going and got a promise that a social worker would contact the girl every other day.
- The social worker is finding out what substance abuse resources are available for her.
- A procedure has been set up for her social worker here to keep in close contact by calling her every other day.
- And the judge has ordered another review in a month, including the stipulation that if her parent wants to regain legal custody, he also must appear.

But none of that was the foster home the girl and the guardian really want.

After the hearing, Dixon and the frustrated guardian walked out of the courtroom to break the news to a frightened girl who looked like a child, despite clunky grown-up shoes and a stylish haircut.

"But all we had to say was we're going back to court," Dixon told both of them, "and we got a lot accomplished."

And that's the purpose of the program.

Neither parents who don't parent or social workers who are overworked are the guardian's concern. The child is. A lot of children are. In 1996 Collins and Dixon, the only paid employees in the program, took part in 210 court hearings in Rowan County representing abused or neglected children.

"And that's not counting the cases that we are prepared to go forward with or that were continued," Collins says. "We're only involved in cases where Social Services has petitioned the court alleging abuse or neglect. We're appointed at the time they bring the case to court."

The law requires Social Services to investigate complaints.

"They investigate, try to make reasonable efforts to keep the family together, offer services," she says. "But in some cases the situation is so dire or the child is in danger, so they file petitions with the court."

About 5 percent of all abuse complaints get into court.

"We don't always agree" with Social Services, Collins says, "but we sort of agree to disagree. We're looking out for that child."

➤ See Guardian, Page 9A

Guardian

More guardians are always needed, she says. Dates for the next training session have not yet been established, though it will probably take place in August.

Volunteers complete a form, and then Collins interviews them, checks their references and does a criminal check.

"We want to insure that these folks are interested, mature, honest, have good judgment — and a genuine concern for the kids," she says.

The training requires 25 hours.

"It's a big commitment. We want people who are interested and committed for at least a year. Any less time wouldn't be worthwhile for them or the child. And we like them to commit themselves for the life of the case, so the child would have only one guardian."

She stresses that it's not a Big Brother program.

"Guardians don't provide services. They assess needs and see that needs are met. If a child needs a Big Brother, the guardian gets a Big Brother. They don't take children to McDonald's just for fun, to form a friendship, but they may take them out to eat in the course of gathering information. They do not do transportation, but they make a social worker aware there's a need for transportation."

And she's convinced nobody should become a guardian ad litem who doesn't love the job and the children.

"You do get discouraged some days," she says, "but then something great happens, and it's all worthwhile."

Another guardian ad litem Tonya Cornelius heard students talking about the program when she was at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

"I figured I would look into it when I got home." That was May 1993. Now a victim of lupus, she's unable to work full time but substitutes as a teacher when she can and volunteers with the children's department at her church. And she's a guardian.

"My heart is with kids," she says. "They're all born with the right to go as far as they can in life, and neglect and abuse shouldn't be there."

Right now she's working with several cases, including a teen mother who has a new baby and isn't sure she can care for her child, a child who has built up a lot of anger against his parents and another bright child who understands her mom has a drug problem — and forgives her.

And she's convinced she'll make a difference in their lives.

"I don't intend to let this program go."

Neither does the teen-ager's guardian who's still looking for a foster home and worried about a frightened girl in a faraway city.

"Nothing has been done for her to satisfy me as a guardian ad litem," she says, "and I learned from it. You have to do more, twice as much, three times as much, but I'm willing to do that for the sake of these children. I just want to know that they have an opportunity ..."

WHEN PLACING A CHILD

Checking backgrounds

You wouldn't expect social workers to place children with a woman convicted of killing another child.

But a law restricting background checks laid that very trap for the Rowan County Department of Social Services, according to Director Rick Travis. Because state law does not allow his agency to use state or national data banks to check a person's criminal record, social workers placed young twins in a home occupied by Denise Santos — convicted in 1974 of manslaughter. Santos was living with the twins' aunt. While the aunt was not at home one day, Santos seriously burned one of the twins by immersing him in scalding water. A Rowan County jury convicted her of felony child abuse for the crime.

Her previous convictions did not come to light until she was charged for the scalding. She also had a drug conviction. Yet she was acting as caretaker for two small children while their aunt was at work.

The story can't end here. If state law is really so misguided as to prevent social workers from doing thorough background checks, lawmakers must fix it. They've certainly been on that bent. In the past few years, the General Assembly has taken every opportunity to not only allow background checks, but also in some cases to require them. That's the case with school teachers and day-care workers. It would be more than logical to add to the list those people who take in children as "voluntary placements" from Social Services, and their live-ins.

Rowan County District Attorney Bill Kenerly suggests that such checks could be handled through the National Crime Information Center. It's hard to imagine a better use of such a resource.

Legislation would make failure to report child abuse a crime

RALEIGH (AP) — Forcing neighbors, relatives — even clergy — to turn in suspected child abusers could save young lives, according to a lawmaker who says failure to report child abuse should be a crime.

The Senate has approved a bill that could result in criminal charges for clergy, doctors and day-care workers who do not report child abuse. The measure hit a snag Tuesday with members of a House judiciary committee, who formed a subcommittee to study the issue.

State law now requires anyone who knows about child abuse to report it to authorities. The new measure would back that obligation by allowing prosecutors to seek criminal punishments for those who do nothing.

Sen. Leslie Winner's bill would make anyone who fails to report abuse subject to a $200 fine.

"We all know that child abuse deaths do not happen the first time there is child abuse," Winner, D-Mecklenburg, told the House committee.

Winner said the current law requiring reporting of child abuse is widely ignored.

"It shows the problem of having laws that have no consequences," she said.

The only exemption from the reporting requirement allowed under the Senate version is for an attorney representing someone charged with child abuse.

THE EYES HAVE IT: Rep. Connie Wilson, R-Mecklenburg, becomes expressive as she talks to one of her seatmates during Tuesday's floor session of the N.C. House in Raleigh.

The subcommittee will consider whether to create exceptions for religious leaders to whom child abusers confess their conduct. It also will consider making the penalty tougher.

Failing to report abuse ought to be comparable to driving with a revoked license, said Rep. Robert Hensley, D-Wake. That would increase the sentence from up to 10 days of community service to up to 45 days, in addition to a fine.

Last year, 43 children in North Carolina died from abuse and neglect, said Thomas Vance Bennett of the North Carolina Child Fatality Task Force. Deaths from neglect might include situations in which children died in a fire after being left home alone, Bennett said.

The number of deaths due to abuse and neglect increased from 28 in 1994 to 40 in 1995, according to the North Carolina Child Health Report Card, issued by child advocates in October.

There were 17,772 confirmed reports of child abuse in 1995, compared to 18,397 in 1994.

DSS, guardians aren't rivals in helping children

BY EMMANUEL DOLO
SPECIAL TO THE SALISBURY POST

In the June 8, 1997 edition of the Salisbury Post, Rose Post wrote a story, perhaps a public relations and/or marketing piece captioned, "Guardians give kids a chance." This article portrayed the Guardian Ad Litem (GAL) program as a repository of "guardian angels," while it demonized the Department of Social Services. Even worse, the story distorted facts and contained errors.

In my response, I will attempt to refute these misrepresentations and falsehoods. Nonetheless, I will fulfill my sworn obligation to protect the confidentiality of the child in question. I will also not reduce my credibility to the level of others whose aim is to win the favor of the public at our expense. But to allow the Post to get away with such unprofessional conduct is simply to be part of its smear campaign against the devoted men and women who work for the Department of Social Services.

Let me address the misrepresentations and errors. At no time did I state that the "two previous psychiatric exams were enough." The claim that "nobody wants" this child is another falsehood. Representatives of DSS and other agencies involved with this case have spent sleepless nights and long days pursuing the interests of this child. I have had 46 collateral contacts with others, including the mother and other agencies on the child's behalf since taking over the case in October of 1996. I have also had eight face-to-face contacts with this child, who lives in a distant county.

The mother is in contact with the youth via phone at least twice a week. Moreover, the mother has not relented in seeking custody of the child. The child has had three visits with the mother without incident. The mother met all the requirements for the child to return home for the long term following an approved home study by the distant state's DSS. Indeed, to imply that the mother, DSS staff and others related to the case do not have the interest of the child at heart is simply a slap in the face.

In addition, the claim that services were not arranged for the child in a distant city is equally false. The home study which confirmed that the child could return home forms a part of an intervention plan that includes soliciting the assistance of the distant DSS to arrange needed services for the child. Specifically, verbal contacts were made with the distant DSS as a preliminary attempt to initiate this effort. This was followed by a formal request through the interstate process, a discussion which occurred at this hearing. All of these interventions preceded the motion filed by the GAL program. Therefore, the suggestion that "things got accomplished" only in the aftermath of the motion filed by the GAL program is ludicrous and without merit.

Social workers are equally advocates for children. To pit two agencies which are primarily concerned with promoting the well-being of children against each other, as this article did, is an attempt to hatch a rivalry which serves one and only one purpose: to sell newspapers and win acclaim. Worse, it created a situation which is likely to make those of us at DSS suspicious of the motives of our peers at the GAL program.

Nonetheless, we at DSS wish to conduct ourselves in accordance with the code of ethics of our profession. More crucial, we consider our colleagues at the GAL program as partners, rather than rivals, and hope they consider us as such. Sadly, the harm has been done, and the actual victim here is the child, not the adults. Perhaps, we can get past that, and make the interest of the child the prime focus of our respective energies and interventions.

Emmanuel Dolo works for the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

SEEING BRUISES OR NEGLECT?

Report abuse — or else

Salisbury Post 6/12/97

A bill before the state legislature brings home the fact that everyone has responsibility for protecting children — a legal responsibility.

State law already requires anyone who knows about child abuse to report it to authorities. A bill under consideration now would back that up with a $200 fine. This means criminal punishment for those who see the bruises, the injuries, the signs of neglect, yet do nothing.

The law would apply to neighbors, friends, ministers, day-care providers, doctors — anyone except an attorney bound by client confidentiality. (A House subcommittee is considering exempting religious leaders.) It would not allow anyone to believe, "That's none of my business," and look away.

Calls not made

North Carolina leaders are awakening to the escalating problems of horribly mistreated children. Deaths due to abuse and neglect increased from 28 in 1994 to 40 in 1995, according to the N.C. Child Health Report Card issued by child advocates in October. The number of confirmed reports of child abuse, though, dropped from 18,397 in 1994 to 17,772 in 1995.

Children's advocates worry about the calls that don't get made. Of the 43 children who died of abuse and neglect in the state last year, about two-thirds had never been brought to the attention of local social workers.

Yet, as Sen. Leslie Winner, D-Mecklenburg, says: "We all know that child abuse deaths do not happen the first time there is child abuse." They happen after a pattern of escalating abuse, a pattern that must be stopped.

Paired with another piece of legislation introduced by Rep. Charlotte Gardner, R-Rowan, this bill could effectively strengthen the safety net North Carolina provides for children in trouble. Gardner is seeking to open records in cases where children have died of abuse or neglect even after they have been brought to Social Services' attention. Together, the two pieces of legislation could bring more children to the attention of child protection workers, and offer some public accountability in cases where those workers' efforts weren't able to prevent tragic outcomes.

Rowan tragedies prevented?

The penalty bill might have saved two little boys who died of abuse in Rowan County early this year. Though in each case Social Services had received at least one report which it checked out, a state team later made this finding: "The review team found evidence that a number of community members had reason to suspect abuse and neglect but did not make a report to the Rowan County Department of Social Services."

The team recommended that Rowan develop an action plan to enhance public awareness of the reporting law. Attaching a penalty to the failure to report would certainly help get people's attention.

The proposed penalty gives force to this fact: When you see signs of abuse or neglect, your first thought should be about protecting the child, not about fears of appearing nosy or intrusive. State law clearly says child abuse is everyone's business, and soon it may also say this: If you don't report what you see and later authorities discover that fact, you will be punished.

Examiner calls toddler's death 'suspicious'

The Rowan County medical examiner says the Sunday afternoon death of a 2-year-old Salisbury boy is suspicious.

During an examination of the child's body, officials at Rowan Regional Medical Center observed signs of trauma to the child, Dr. Gary Fink said.

DeMallon Eljuhnn Krider of 902 E. Lafayette St. was a student at Home Child Care Centers of Salisbury. His mother, Tamanchis, could not be reached for comment this morning.

Fink said an autopsy scheduled for today should reveal more details about the toddler's death. Salisbury police, who have filed a routine report, would not comment until the official results of the autopsy were in.

Child dies of head injuries; police rule homicide

BY JOHN PATTERSON
SALISBURY POST

Salisbury Police this morning ruled the death of a 2-year-old Salisbury toddler a homicide after a preliminary autopsy revealed the child died of head trauma.

DeMallon

A police officer found DeMallon El-Juhnn DeMallon Krider unresponsive just before 1 p.m. Sunday on the floor of an upstairs bedroom at his 902 E. Lafayette St. apartment.

The State Medical Examiner's office in Chapel Hill found bruises and other marks that indicate abuse, reports stated.

The boy's mother, Tamanchies Krider, told the Post that she had only regained custody of her youngest son a few months ago. And the Rowan County Department of Social Services confirmed that it had received a report of neglect against Krider just a week ago.

Rick Travis, director of the local Social Services department, said two social workers had visited Krider's home and seen the child on June 10, five days before he died. Social Services' investigation was continuing when the toddler died, Travis said in a written statement.

State officials said this morning that a team will arrive in Rowan Wednesday to review Social Services' handling of the case.

Earlier this year, a special state review team found a number of problems with Social Services' actions in the death of two other children — Budde Clark and Christopher Jones.

"We'll be on this one with a full review consistent with the one we just completed," FitzGerald told the Post this morning. Staff members were already scheduled to be here to work on "a corrective action plan" relating to the abuse deaths of Clark, 6, on Jan. 31 and Jones, 19 months, on Feb. 4.

FitzGerald said he doesn't know how long the review will take. "I'll be in a better position to say that after my staff reports to me tomorrow," following the visit to Rowan, he said. "I would expect the results will be open."

DeMallon's brother, DeLondon Eltran Krider, 4, also lived with Krider. However, sources said DeLondon has been placed in the care of his grandmother, whose name was unavailable.

Monday afternoon, Krider, 26, said she did not harm her son. "I didn't ever neglect him or anything," she said. "I knew I had the chance to get him back, and I wasn't going to mess that up."

Krider was with her son when authorities arrived at the Lafayette Street apartment. Krider told a Post reporter that DeMallon had been sick and dehydrated for several days.

She said she took her son to Rowan Regional Medical Center June 9 to seek treatment for dehydration.

"I couldn't take care of him," she said. "He was pouring with sweat. He drank all of the fluid that I gave him."

On Sunday, before she called 911, Krider said the toddler began vomiting again.

"He was throwing up everything that I gave him," she said. "He usually hugs me when he sleeps with me in the bed, but he was just balled up Sunday afternoon when I woke up. He didn't give me time."

Krider gave birth to DeMallon while in prison, serving time for violating probation on an assault with a deadly weapon charge. She said the state immediately gave custody of her youngest child to a local guardian.

Krider admits she is a recovering cocaine addict.

"I got with the wrong crowd," Krider said. "The drug dealers just pulled me down. I couldn't get custody back of DeMallon until I quit using cocaine."

According to Krider, she was rewarded custody of her son three months ago, after she "came clean."

Citing confidentiality laws, Travis, the local Social Services director, said he could not reveal the actual date the child was returned to Krider.

In a written statement to the Post, Travis said his agency received a report of possible neglect of the toddler on June 9. The abuse report listed concerns about Krider's ability to care for her son because another child had bitten him, Travis said.

The next day, Social Services' workers went to the two-story Lafayette Street apartment to examine the child, take photographs and interview Krider. The investigation was still in progress when DeMallon died Sunday, Travis said.

Rowan Regional spokesman Phil Whitesell confirmed that hospital officials called Social Services on June 9 — the day Krider brought DeMallon in for what the mother called "fever and weakness." The hospital told Social Services about other injuries to DeMallon, Whitesell said this morning.

One source said hospital officials held the child for six hours.

However, Social Services did not come to Rowan Regional on June 9, Whitesell said.

"After an examination by our physicians, we instructed our staff to call DSS," Whitesell said. "Because the child's injuries were not life-threatening, however, the child was treated and released."

Whitesell said the hospital's patient advocate contacted Social Services three days later — on June 12 — to see if Social Services had contacted the family. "We just wanted to follow up on the patient," he said.

Salisbury Police Capt. Mark Wilhelm said he's not aware of the hospital or Social Services calling law enforcement officials before Sunday.

Meanwhile, Travis said the N.C. Division of Social Services will conduct a comprehensive review of DeMallon's death as quickly as possible.

The state assigned the team to review the earlier Rowan deaths after child advocates appealed directly to Gov. Jim Hunt. The team investigated the deaths of Clark, Jones and Trola Miller, a 16-year-old who died of a random gunshot. Three people have been charged with murder as a result of those deaths.

That review was the first time an outside team was brought here to review practices and the results were released to the public. Its review found evidence of limited investigate work, miscommunication, failed documentation and other concerns and included recommendations for changes.

The state's visit here Wednesday was to work on the plan for those changes.

Rep. Charlotte Gardner, R-Rowan, who has introduced legislation to open records in child fatalities, has also sponsored a bill which will establish state review teams similar to the one which studied the cases here.

Not again

Add another name to the list: Budde Clark. Christopher Jones. Trola Miller. And now, DeMallon El-Juhnn Krider.

On Sunday, 2-year-old DeMallon became the fourth Rowan child in five months to die of suspected abuse or neglect after Social Services had been alerted that something may be amiss.

On June 9, hospital personnel who saw DeMallon in the emergency room called Social Services to report suspicions of abuse or neglect. Social Services did not go to the hospital. DeMallon went home. On June 15, as Social Services' investigation was in progress, he died.

Preliminary examination reveals a head injury killed the boy. Whoever inflicted that injury should be brought to justice.

But any thinking person would also have to raise questions about Social Services' handling of this case — questions that Director Rick Travis says confidentiality laws prevent him from answering. The department is just weeks away from getting additional positions and equipment that commissioners have promised in their 1997-98 budget.

Fortunately, a state review team is on its way to study this case and report findings. Team members probably never thought they'd be returning to Rowan so soon. Perhaps the frequency of these tragedies will tell them something that paperwork and interviews cannot.

State team probing 4th death

SALISBURY POST

A 26-year-old recovering cocaine addict was charged Tuesday afternoon with murdering her 2-year-old son.

Court records also show that Tamanchies Krider was HIV-positive and served time in prison for ignoring a judge's order to get counseling about the communicable disease. Her 2-year-old was born in prison.

Krider is the third person charged with murdering a child in Rowan County this year. In a fourth case, 16-year-old Trola Miller was shot to death in a fracas at a public housing complex.

State officials say Rowan now accounts for almost 25 percent of all child abuse deaths in the state this year. A state official said, however, that other counties have had more child abuse deaths in other years Wake County had five child abuse homicides in 1996 and Cumberland had six.

Nonetheless, the deaths have brought intense scrutiny on the Rowan County Department of Social Services, which had investigated abuse complaints related to all four children before they were killed.

State officials were expected here this morning to begin reviewing Social Services' actions in the latest child death.

A spokesman for Gov. Jim Hunt said Hunt is concerned about this fourth child fatality in Rowan.

"This child did not have to die and it's clear that we need to do more to protect children in Rowan County," said Sean Walsh, the governor's press secretary. "The governor wants to get to the bottom of this immediately and take whatever action is necessary to ensure the safety of children."

Hunt was out of the office this morning, but Walsh said the governor had been following the Rowan situation.

'We need to clean house' — Rowla

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

Shocked members of the Child Abuse Task Force divided sharply in their reaction Tuesday to news that a fourth child known to the Rowan County Department of Social Services has died violently within the past six months.

County Commissioner Steve Blount and Jim Freeman, head of Rowan Regional Medical Center, believe the task force has already opened lines of communication between local agencies and everything that could have been done to prevent the death of 2-year-old DeMallon El-Juhnn Krider was done.

But Commissioner Dave Rowland disagrees. He believes the time has come to "clean house" at the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

"I was baling hay on my tractor and I heard (the news that the toddler's mother had been arrested) on my radio," he said, "and I had a fit."

He was numb, he said, when he saw the story of the child's death in the paper.

"I could not believe it. How could this happen? How could anybody come up and say we don't have a problem now? It's time for drastic changes. I think we need to clean house. We're losing a kid every other month, and if that statement was correct — that the hospital called DSS and held that child for six hours and nobody bothered to show up — we need to replace a lot of people."

Rowland said he's angry.

"Every time I turn, I hear there's no problem at DSS. The DSS board gives Rick Travis (the director) a high recommendation. Here a third child in six months was beaten to death. If that's not a serious problem in their organization, what will they look at as a serious problem? I'm hot. Where does it end?"

His words reflect those of two outspoken child advocates — attorney Mary Beth Smith and her mother, Elizabeth Smith, who focused Gov. Jim Hunt's attention on the earlier child deaths in Rowan County. The women say changes must be made in the Rowan County Department of Social Services, beginning with Director Rick Travis.

Authorities had received abuse reports about both of Tamanchies Krider's sons days before the youngest boy died of a head injury.

A Rowan County probation officer reported suspected abuse of Krider's 4-year-old son in early June to the Department of Social Services and the Salisbury Police Department.

Days later, on June 9, Rowan Regional Medical Center called Social Services about the treatment of Krider's other son, 2-year-old DeMallon El-Juhnn Krider.

The hospital released DeMallon, and Social Services was still investigating the complaint when DeMallon died Sunday.

Krider was charged with his murder Tuesday.

Krider was taken before a Rowan County magistrate Tuesday and charged with the death of DeMallon El-Juhnn Krider. Krider had only regained custody of the child in early May.

With her head down and handcuffed, Krider declined comment while being led to the Rowan County Detention Center, where she is being held without bond.

Krider made a statement to police, but Police Capt. Mark Wilhelm would not elaborate.

Krider gave birth to DeMallon while serving time at the Correctional Center for Women in Raleigh.

WAYNE HINSHAW/SALISBURY POST

Court records say that Krider is HIV-pnsitive and was sent to prison for violating an isolation order issued by the Rowan County Department of Health.

She failed to attend three consecutive, court-ordered counseling sessions on the risks of HIV transmission — a violation of North Carolina's communicable disease law.

According to court records, Krider was convicted twice — in June 1988 and April 1992 — of assault with a deadly weapon, a misdemeanor. Both times Krider was sentenced to probation.

Krider brought DeMallon to Rowan Regional Medical Center on June 9 for treatment of a fever and weakness. But the hospital noticed other injuries, including bite marks and bruises, and called the Rowan County Department of Social Services.

Social Services Director Rick Travis said two social workers went to Krider's apartment at 902 E. Lafayette St. the next day, interviewing the mother and photographing DeMallon's injuries. The workers left the child with his mother and were still investigating when the child died Sunday afternoon.

A preliminary autopsy showed DeMallon died of an injury to his head.

Wilhelm said authorities are also investigating bite marks found on the toddler's body.

Police took Krider to a local dentist Tuesday afternoon to make dental impressions. Her dental impressions will be compared to the bite marks on DeMallon's body.

"I'm going to make a trip to Chapel Hill today (Wednesday) to see if the bite marks on DeMallon's body match the dental records we get from (Tamanchies) Krider," Wilhelm said. "The state medical examiner's office will make that final determination."

The figures do not include 16-year-old Trola Miller, who was killed by a random gunshot during the same period — Jan. 31-Feb. 4 — in which Budde Clark, 6, and Christopher Jones, 19 months, also died.

Though she, too, was known to the Rowan County Department of Social Services, her death was not abuse, Herman-Giddens said. But Rowan's three abuse deaths this year make it the only county in the state with more than one in 1997.

"But that can be just a fluke," she says.

This morning, Herman-Giddens, a member of the special team that reviewed the first two abuse deaths, said she was "sorry to hear about what's happened and very concerned."

Typically, she said, the number of deaths from abuse are so small that comparisons can't be made, and Rowan is not the only place they happen.

"Other counties have had the same number of deaths" in past years, she said, "but for whatever reason, the press and the public have not gotten involved. So it's not like you're the only place. There just wasn't a big outcry."

In 1996, Wake County had five child abuse deaths and Cumberland had six.

Better communication

Steve Blount, who serves as co-chairman of the Rowan Child Abuse Task Force with Dave Rowland, says he believes Rowan Regional Medical Center and DSS are communicating better than ever.

"And it's unfortunate that it didn't prevent the child's death," he said, "but hopefully (further investigation) will show that all groups, including the criminal justice system, did all they could to prevent this."

Similarly Freeman, the hospital's chief operating officer, said, "The tragedy is that another child loses his life."

But he believes the emergency room staff acted with "an overabundance of caution" and did what was "reasonable and reasonably expected for anyone to do" when they saw 2-year-old DeMallon Krider a week before he was killed.

But Elizabeth Smith disagrees.

"I'm not surprised" it happened, she says, "but I am sickened. DSS has been in denial from the beginning."

She asks why the hospital didn't call the Sheriff's Office when Tamanchies Krider took her baby to the hospital on June 9, a week before he was killed and abuse was suspected.

"The safety net was there. It's in place," she says. "Why was it not used?"

"If there is a reason to keep the family from leaving," Freeman says, "the Sheriff's Office would be appropriate in handling that because they've got the ability to act instantly.

"But the physician felt there was enough reason — out of an overabundance of caution — to alert DSS, and that was done. The child was looked at from head to toe. There were examinations and they were found to be negative, and DSS was notified. So I commend the emergency room physician for picking up on the concern."

The task force has suggested that the hospital call the Sheriff's Office, he says, "but that is not part of our protocol. We are in the process of resolving that to be included as part of our protocol.

"But it doesn't have to be written for us to use good common judgment if that's necessary. Under these conditions and these circumstances, there was not a reason to do any more than what was done."

No excuse

Elizabeth Smith disagrees with that and also points out that Social Services has told the task force it now has back-up personnel and pagers. She's seen program manager Tom Brewer wearing one at task force meetings.

"Why weren't both used and the child seen immediately?" she asks. Social Services has no excuse for not having responded to the hospital and for the hospital not to have called law enforcement at the same time they called DSS.

"If that was not done, why not? I don't care how much money you throw at a situation, unless the judgment is appropriate it's not going to make any difference," Elizabeth Smith said. "I think good judgment has been lacking."

If Social Services Director Rick Travis "has not done what he can do, it's up to us to make some changes in the department."

She got at least half a dozen calls after 9 o'clock Tuesday night expressing the same outrage, she says.

Regardless of what the child's mother said, Mary Beth Smith says, Social Services knew the baby was "a very high risk child who had been back in the care of his mother only a very short time. And if you get a call about possible abuse of a child you know to be at high risk that more appropriate reaction should have been taken. This is three children. The question I'm left with is: How many children does it take? How many?"

She says her biggest fear is how many children are being tortured every day and live — and don't make headlines.

Freeman says he feels like "there was an overabundance of caution" on the part of the emergency room staff at the hospital when the 2-year-old was brought in on June 9, a week before he was killed.

The child did not present "a classical child abuse case," he said. "There were bruises on the child, and there were bite marks, which appeared to be child-sized marks. The mother told the physician that the child had been roughhousing with other children, and what the physician saw in the bruises and the bite marks was consistent with what the mother was saying."

The child was in the hospital six hours, he said. The mother and child waited about 1½ hours to see the physician. "The rest of that time was waiting on the results of the examination and with DSS on the telephone. I don't know what component of that time is attributable to what."

After the physician listened to the mother, who said the child had fever and weakness, he extended his examination significantly and decided to report the case to Social Services because of the bite marks, the bruises and the discussion with the mother. All test results were negative. The doctor told the mother he was contacting Social Services and she did not object.

"And they didn't take the child away," he says, "so I think that the course of action developed on June 9 was — at that time — based on facts and information and was a reasonable course. The tragedy is the child is dead. And the tragedy is that I wish all of us had insight to know when those tragedies are going to happen. That's frustrating. What could we have done? What should we have done? We have agonized over this. There's only one word for it — tragic.

"I'm sure there are people who will be of the opinion that we should have done more. If we knew then what we know now, we would have done more.

"If we could have only known what we know now, lots of folks would have done more."

A source told the Post the probation officer was making a regular visit to Krider when the mother said something that led the officer to suspect abuse of her older son.

The officer made an appointment for the child at the Children's Clinic.

The mother became angry, the source said, and did not take the child for the appointment.

That prompted the probation officer to call Social Services.

The probation officer has described Krider as having an explosive personality, the source says. The officer had concerns about the children being returned to the mother, feeling they were safer in the foster home.

Salisbury Police Capt. Mark Wilhelm confirmed police are still investigating the probation officer's report as a possible assault against DeMallon's brother. Wilhelm said police also called Social Services, but he did not know what actions Social Services had taken on the report.

The alleged assault involved Krider's 4-year-old son and another 4-year-old, Wilhelm said.

overabundance of caution to alert DSS, and that was done. The child was looked at from head to toe. There were examinations and they were found to be negative, and DSS was notified. So I commend the emergency room physician for picking up on the concern."

The task force has suggested that the hospital call the Sheriff's Office, he says, "but that is not part of our protocol. We are in the process of resolving that to be included as part of our protocol.

"But it doesn't have to be written for us to use good common judgment if that's necessary. Under these conditions and these circumstances, there was not a reason to do any more than what was done."

No excuse

Elizabeth Smith disagrees with that and also points out that Social Services has told the task force it now has back-up personnel and pagers. She's seen program manager Tom Brewer wearing one at task force meetings.

Freeman says he feels like "there was an overabundance of caution" on the part of the emergency room staff at the hospital when the 2-year-old was brought in on June 9, a week before he was killed.

The child did not present "a classical child abuse case," he said. "There were bruises on the child, and there were bite marks, which appeared to be Wise call for review

Rick Travis, director of the Rowan County Department of Social Services, has wisely invited a state administrative review team to come in and examine how he and others are running the department.

The unusual string of child deaths here calls for nothing less. In a five-month period, three young children have been murdered, all after or during a child protective services investigation by Social Services. And a teen who had been in the agency's custody was hit by a random, fatal shot.

While a couple of other counties had similar numbers last year — Wake had five child abuse deaths, Cumberland County had three — they have much larger populations.

Something is amiss in Rowan County, and the rush to judgment has focused on Travis and Social Services. How could they allow a cocaine-addicted mother with HIV and a string of infractions even while she was in prison to regain custody of a child? What action did Social Services take after a probation officer and a doctor raised red flags about how her children were being treated? Confidentiality laws may prevent us from ever knowing.

Rather than jump to conclusions, though, the public should applaud this call for a broad, objective, administrative review and demand that it be expedited. Citizens want action, but they need the facts first.

Don't doubt the intensity of such a review. State officials are just as irate as Rowan citizens are about these repeated tragedies. The deaths raise troubling questions about North Carolina's ability to protect its most vulnerable citizens.

Travis puts it well: "The questions are legitimate. ... Where I hope it's headed is that they'll look at the larger program and identify if there are problems, whether it's with Rick Travis or anybody else."

Exactly. Let's get on with it.

SALISBURY POST 6/19/97

Responsibility

I have some questions.

How many children in Rowan County are going to be murdered before someone does something about the Department of Social Services? I was in management for years, and if I knowingly had an employee who got killed or injured by my knowledge, I could have been held responsible. Just like the man at the chicken plant where all the people burned up. If a bartender sells someone too many drinks and the person goes out and gets in a wreck, the bartender can be convicted.

How can DSS know that a child is in danger and they walk free? Are they above our law? Where are the little ones' rights?

Another child is dead

In the Salisbury Post edition dated June 17, 1997, the headline read, "Another child dies in Rowan County." How many more children must die before the entire Social Services Department, including the director, is replaced?

I noticed that the state officials are going to investigate again. The first time they found a number of problems. One source said that hospital officials held the child for six hours. Just where was one social worker, or was everyone too busy to go the hospital to check this out? Also, I would like to know where the two special deputies of the Sheriff's Office were, since they could not go out there?

Again, I would like to see the entire department replaced. That is how badly I feel about the four children who have been killed.

Abuse call came during DSS workday

Rowland questions agency's response

BY JASON WILLIAMS AND KIM MASON
SALISBURY POST

A hospital call warning of a threat to DeMallon Krider came to the Department of Social Services about 4 p.m. June 9. But the agency did not respond until the next day.

Social Services Director Rick Travis shocked the latest Rowan Child Fatality Review team this morning with that revelation.

His remarks stunned several people in the room, including county commissioner Dave Rowland. Rowland questioned how Social Services wouldn't have a plan during regular office hours.

"I guess the child would have been better off after hours," child advocate Mary Beth Smith said. "If they don't have anybody available during the day, there's a tremendous breakdown."

Rowland said he would speak with Travis today during an emergency commissioner's meeting.

The Post has reported previously that six days before DeMallon Krider died, hospital officials called Social Services about possible abuse. Travis told state officials this morning that the hospital call came during office hours on June 9, but his agency didn't respond that day.

"We didn't have any investigators right there and should have found somebody," Travis said during the meeting. "We could have made extra effort to round someone up and send them to the hospital."

But those actions were not a violation, Travis said. State rules say the agency has 24 hours to respond to abuse and 72 hours to a neglect complaint. If a case is "life or death," the agency can take a child from a home for 12 hours before going to a judge.

This morning, Travis said the hospital called about DeMallon Krider, 2, about 4:05 p.m. that Monday. A source has told the Post that a nurse called first to report "suspected abuse," and a doctor called a second time when told Social Services couldn't come. (See related article.)

Investigators that Monday were in court or in the field and not available. However, the worker who took the call from the hospital should have paged somebody, Travis said.

Two Social Services employees were at the house the next day and responded in the time frame required by state rules, Travis said.

➤ See Call, Page 6A

Call

On June 15, while Social Services was still investigating the complaint, DeMallon died. Salisbury Police charged the child's mother, Tamanchies Krider, 26, with his murder Tuesday. She is jailed without bond.

Meanwhile, state officials have launched two intensive reviews of DeMallon's death and Social Services' day-to-day operations. DeMallon is the fourth child to die this year who had been the subject of abuse complaints and Social Services' investigations.

This morning, a five-member child fatality review team started work investigating DeMallon Krider's death. Of those five, four worked on the earlier death reviews.

The team will release its findings on July 7.

Two state employees, Jane Smith and Jane Malpass, are working exclusively with Social Services to monitor day-to-day operations.

Smith and Malpass are conducting triple checks with intake calls about abuse or neglect. Normally, a worker would take the call. And if a report is not substantiated, the supervisor and the worker would sign a form in agreement.

Now, Smith and Malpass will check behind those two.

Smith and Malpass have discovered some assignment discrepancies when the supervisor is not available at the time of the call.

Kevin FitzGerald, head of the state's Division of Social Services, said that Smith and Malpass will remain in Rowan as long as necessary.

The women will also re-examine Social Services' entire case load and will review cases identified as "high-risk."

And the work to protect the children in Rowan will be "vigilant," FitzGerald said.

As for Travis's comment about the phone call He was responding to a question about the department's backup procedures on calls after hours.

Charlotte Gardner, R-Rowan, said she was surprised that the call came in during hours. She said that with all the "concentration on after hours maybe regular hours have fallen through the cracks."

Meanwhile, FitzGerald said that his agency will also conduct a separate administrative review of Travis and his entire agency. The review will be conducted after the child fatality team gets its findings.

Hospital suspected abuse six days before child died

Salisbury Post

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

Six days before a 2-year-old toddler was killed, hospital officials clearly told the Department of Social Services they "suspected abuse" — not just neglect — of the child, a source familiar with the investigation says.

But a Social Services official told a hospital worker no protective services worker was available and the backup person could go to the hospital only if the case was "a matter of life or death."

When told of Social Services' response, a doctor repeated the call — and got the same answer. The Social Services worker said everyone was either "in the field" or in court on other juvenile cases and repeated that a backup worker could only respond in case of "life or death."

DeMallon Krider died six days later.

The source says the reports to Social Services — and the responses — are part of the written record that is part of the criminal investigation into DeMallon's death. His mother, Tamanchies Krider, has been charged with murder and is in the Rowan County Detention Center.

In recent days, officials debating Social Services actions in the case have questioned whether or not the hospital report reflected abuse or neglect, a less serious threat to life.

In a statement issued Thursday, Social Services Director Rick Travis said the 2-year-old died while his department was investigating "alleged neglect by the child's mother."

Today Travis did not respond to written questions from the Post concerning the hospital's report to Social Services.

➤ See Hospital, Page 6A

reported to DSS as a possible abuse case" on June 9. No pictures were made at that time, but the report refers to bruising and bite marks.

Social Services told the hospital, the source says, that the agency would investigate the following day. Law requires reports of abuse to be investigated within 24 hours and reports of neglect within 72 hours. Social workers may remove a child from the home for 12 hours if they find the situation life threatening. Legal action is required to keep a child longer.

The source was critical of the delay because the mother's record of crimes and drug abuse showed that the child was in a high risk situation. The source believes Social Services should have had the authority to remove DeMallon from the home.

A Post reporter asked Jim Freeman, chief executive officer of Rowan Regional Medical Center, on Wednesday if the hospital had reported abuse or neglect.

"It's not absolutely marked in the record as to which it was," he said, "but it's clear that while this child" was not "a clear cut, classical abuse situation," the physician's concern for abuse grew as he examined the child.

"It's clear in my mind that he wanted some attention from DSS as an abuse case," Freeman said.

Freeman confirmed the child was at the hospital for six hours that day. The mother and child waited about 1½ hours to see the physician.

"The rest of that time was waiting on the results of the examination and with DSS on the telephone," Freeman said.

Travis, Social Services director, said two social workers went to Krider's apartment at 902 E. Lafayette St. on Tuesday, June 10, interviewed the mother and photographed the injuries. The workers left the child with his mother and were still investigating when the child died Sunday afternoon.

Hospital officials photographed injuries to the child's body when emergency workers brought the toddler back Sunday. The source said the pictures showed "numerous bruises, deep burgundy bruises. ... "

Sometimes bruises are not as obvious on a black dark child, the source said. "These were so deep, you didn't have to look hard to see them."

He had minor lacerations to the head, the source said, and what "looked like a steam iron burn on his forearm. You could see the marks made by the holes in the bottom of the iron. The bruises ranged anywhere from the size of your fist or larger all over his arms, his back, his stomach, his legs, everywhere. Two dozen or more."

Seeing the bruises continues to trouble the source. "Every child deserves a chance to live and know the fullness of life," the source said. "I just can't imagine" anyone hurting a child like that when the child "is not big enough to try to run or do anything for self-defense."

'Major' disparity in facts

Commissioners await state review in sorting DSS handling of complaint; Social Services board backs Travis

BY WESLEY YOUNG AND JASON WILLIAMS
SALISBURY POST

County commissioners say a state review panel will have to solve a "major discrepancy" surrounding Social Services' handling of a child protection complaint it received before toddler DeMallon Krider's violent death.

The board met with Social Services Director Rick Travis and other agency employees for well over an hour Friday afternoon.

But when the board came out of the closed session, Commissioner Steve Blount delivered a terse announcement that the board must still learn "whether the report to the hospital from DSS was a neglect case or an abuse case."

Travis says Krider died about a week after child protection workers began investigating a report of neglect that a Rowan Regional Medical Center hospital worker made to his department June 9.

Social workers did not visit the Krider home until June 10 — an allowable lapse of time for a report of neglect, but not if the report was one of abuse.

However, sources familiar with the investigation have told the Post that a hospital worker made a report of abuse to Social Services, and that a doctor followed up the call when the Social Services employee said no one would come unless it was a "matter of life or death."

"If it was neglect, they probably acted in a timely manner," Commissioner Newton Cohen told the Post after Friday's meeting was over. "If it does turn out to be abuse, it is pretty serious. So far as I am concerned, I am not going to prejudge it, and wait for the review."

That's what all commissioners were saying Friday. Blount, who's defended Social Services, and Commissioner Dave Rowland, the department's chief critic on the board, for once found themselves agreeing.

"So much hinges on how it was turned in," Rowland said. "A second call (the one made by the doctor) would certainly tell you there was some distress.

"If a hospital calls and says that it is abuse, there is no justification for not showing up."

Earlier on Friday, Social Services board members gave Travis a vote of confidence after a coming from their own closed session with the agency director.

The Social Services board, not the county Board of Commissioners, has direct authority over Travis.

Board chairwoman Irene Goodlett said board members have faith in Travis and the agency. Goodlett later told the Post that

➤ See Facts, Page 4A

SALISBURY POST 6/21/97
Page 2 of 2

Facts

Travis was "as good as any director in the state," and that the director worked hard to manage the agency.

"You know we are understaffed," she said.

Goodlett declined further comment about Krider's death until a state fatality review team concludes its findings on July 7.

On Friday, the five-member state team began interviews in the child's death. The mother, Tamanchies Krider, 26, has been charged with murder.

The child fatality review marks the third time that state officials have come to Rowan County to see how Social Services handled a child protection investigation before the death of a child. Two state employees, Jane Smith and Jane Malpass, are also working with the agency on a day-to-day basis.

And Travis has asked for a top-level review of how well he and his child protection staff do their jobs.

Rowland has called for "cleaning house" at Social Services if it turns out the hospital made a report of abuse. Friday, Rowland said he has confidence that the state review team that's coming in will get to the bottom of the matter.

During the closed session, Blount told the Post Friday, he learned from Social Services workers that they "have looked at their official records and the hospital official records, and from that perspective, it was a report of neglect.

"Apparently someone (at the hospital) .... thought it was abuse and thought they were not getting a response from DSS," Blount added, referring to reports in the Salisbury Post concerning the hospital's efforts to get a social worker to come see the child.

Although Social Services received the hospital call during business hours June 9, Travis told the county Child Fatality Review team Friday morning, no investigators were on hand and his agency did not respond that day.

Social workers did investigate the Krider home situation starting June 10. The Post asked Rowland what they found after he came out of the closed session.

"Their (Social Services') stance was that there was nothing they could see that would substantiate taking out that child," Rowland said.

Rowland and Blount also agreed that officials apparently followed the guidelines when they gave custody of the boy to his mother in May. Court records say Krider has two prior misdemeanor assault convictions, and that she gave birth to DeMallon while an inmate at the Correctional Center for Women in Raleigh. She had been sent to prison for violating a health department isolation order issued because of her HIV-positive condition.

"You can't say they did anything wrong" after looking at the custody record, Rowland said. "For some reason, our .... court system wants to remove a child only as a last resort."

Travis would not talk specifics, but said that in general, Social Services is required to make "diligent effort to reunite children and parents."

"What that means is that you give the parent clear explanation of what they should do to gain custody of the child back," Travis said.

For instance, if a parent had a drug problem, they would have to be under treatment. Bad conditions at home would have to be corrected. And so forth.

Rowland and Cohen attended Friday's Social Services meeting, but Cohen left when the board went into closed session.

With Frank Tadlock, the board's Social Services' liaison, not able to make the meeting, Rowland made a bid to stay in the room. But the board split 2-2 on that motion, with Goodlett and board member Jeannie Misenheimer voting against allowing Rowland to attend. Board members Lee Piper and Dianne Scott voted to let Rowland into the meeting.

Rowland said later he agreed to leave because of the tie vote.

Meanwhile, Travis said the latest child fatality issue has workers in his department "second- and third-guessing themselves" and feeling under great pressure to be "perfect." In February, staffers received psychological "debriefing," and some employees received individual counseling.

Commissioner Cohen said a lot depends on the outcome of the state review.

"If the paper stories are accurate, Social Services are in trouble," Cohen said, referring to the flap over whether abuse or neglect was reported. "If the paper story proves to be wrong, they probably aren't in trouble."

SALISBURY POST 6/21/97

Child abuse, government and responsibility

BY PHILLIP HATFIELD
SPECIAL TO THE POST

The death of a child anywhere, anytime, under any circumstances is one too many. I can think of no greater loss to our families, our community and ultimately our nation than when a child dies from abuse. However, as I have personally observed events at the May and June meetings of the Rowan County Child Abuse Task Force and read the numerous statements, editorials and articles in the media, I have began to consider whether our collective expectations of the state, county and even city governments aren't somewhat unrealistic.

It is true that the various law enforcement, social services and public health care agencies are mandated to "protect the children" as those organizations go about the business of providing their respective professional services, but I am concerned that we have allowed the responsibility to prevent child abuse to begin and end there.

In any homicide, sexual offense, drug-related crime or, for that matter, simple burglary, the responsibility does not entirely belong to the government — it belongs to the perpetrator. In other words, the person who committed the crime. I do not believe it is logical for anyone — not the families, friends or government agencies — to accept the blame for the commission of a crime. This is the responsibility of the offender. We have de-focused on this simple fact in the wake of the four recent child homicides in Rowan County.

There are literally volumes of psychological research on record which have addressed the problems of criminal behavior from a variety of clinical, theoretical and even political perspectives. However, one principle that has remained clear and consistent is that it is difficult, if not impossible, to predict with 100 percent accuracy any type of criminal behavior, especially homicidal behavior. If this weren't the case, then there would be no evidence of recidivism, or repeat offenses, when criminals are released from prison or placed on probation. Virtually anyone can produce a litany of statistics to demonstrate that is a major problem. Most statisticians agree that the best predictor of future behavior is past behavior; however, if a parent does not have a pattern or prior criminal record of homicide, there is not always convincing evidence that can predict whether they will ever murder, even if they have assaulted someone, including a child.

This is important to understand because in no manner am I implying that assault is not a serious problem. Rather, I am saying that the presence of assaultive behavior does not necessarily predict homicide. Therefore, it would be very difficult for any professional to accurately predict and control that kind of violence.

Consider the many other cases of assault or physical child abuse that have doubtlessly occurred but have not resulted in homicide. You have to ask yourself, what made that particular situation different? What made it easier for the offender to cross that boundary to actually take a child's life this time?

The answer to that question will not lend itself well to quick, easy or well intentioned answers. We cannot say that it was simply drugs, alcohol, or even that the social services, law enforcement or medical communities were fully responsible. Each of the four homicides in Rowan County represent four unique situations, and I doubt that any one of those family circumstances developed overnight. Several people, including families and friends, saw the problems long before the professionals were notified, and so did the perpetrators.

We must consider the actual offender the responsible party and carefully examine our own behavior to ensure that as private citizens we are doing our part. By this I mean that we must begin to hold each other accountable as friends, neighbors, co-workers, etc. and to get involved when we suspect child abuse before the situation gets out of control. Likewise, we must add some balance to our perspective and not engage in blaming each other for the sake of diffusing the responsibility.

At the same time we should expect accountability from our public and private agencies involved with families and children. It is foolish to rely upon political rhetoric without action, or to continue to expect the government to fix the problems in our families and communities without our active involvement. Uncle Sam can be a great friend, but I don't want him taking charge of our families.

That task belongs first to the private citizens of Rowan County. We should accept the responsibility.

Mother blurts out: 'Guilty'

Woman's statement inadmissible as evidence

BY JOHN PATTERSON
SALISBURY POST

Tamanchies Krider showed little emotion this morning as she stood in Rowan County District Court and said she was guilty of murdering her 2-year-old son.

Her statement doesn't carry any legal significance. She didn't have an attorney and was only answering a prosecutor's procedural question. But the words shocked people working in the courtroom.

Dressed in an orange jump suit from the Rowan County Detention Center, Krider made her first appearance on charges of murdering DeMallon El-Juhnn Krider. Judge David Wilson appointed Marshall Bickett as Krider's attorney, and she will remain in jail without bond until her next court appearance.

Sitting in the courtroom, pulled there out of anger and disbelief, the dead boy's former foster mother, Doris Boyd, could only shake her head — and fight back tears — as she heard the word "guilty" come from Krider's mouth.

Later, outside the courtroom, Boyd gingerly held an 8- by 10-inch photograph of the toddler.

"She (Tamanchies) said she would never hurt him," Boyd said. "I didn't get the feeling that things might be wrong — that she might have hurt him — until after all this happened."

The state gave Boyd custody of DeMallon on Dec. 12, 1994, just five days after the toddler was born at Wake County Medical Center. At the time, Krider was at the N.C. Women's Correctional Center in Raleigh, serving a two-year prison term for violating North Carolina's communicable disease law.

Boyd, who was forced to return the toddler to Krider May 7, said she visited Krider on June 8 and noticed bruises and scratches on the toddler.

A day later, officials say, Krider took him to Rowan Regional Medical Center for fever and weakness. Hospital officials also noticed the injuries and called the Department of Social Services.

"I saw the left side of his head, and it was badly bruised," Boyd said. "His right hand was scratched, and his forehead was bruised as well. She kept telling me that another child was beating him up. I really and truly thought that her (Krider) sister's child did it. But now I realize that another child couldn't have put those marks on him."

Boyd said she called Social Services and begged them to give custody of the child back to her.

"I asked Social Services why I couldn't keep him," Boyd said. "I would have put that child in my will. He would have been taken care of."

A registered nurse, Boyd said she was rarely allowed to see DeMallon after she returned him to Krider.

"She (Krider) was scared about me," Boyd said. "She wouldn't let me near him. When I saw him that day (June 8), she wouldn't let me hold him, even though he recognized my name. He was calling for me, but she said she didn't have time to let me play with him."

Travis: Look at me and DSS

BY ROSE POST
SALISBURY POST

Rowan County's director of Social Services wants the state to look at how well he and his department protect children.

But Rick Travis said this morning he has no intention of resigning.

"If I thought that my resignation would insure no more children were murdered," Travis told the Post, "my letter would be in the hands of the board right now."

His comment was reaction to a firestorm of outrage following news Sunday of the murder of the fourth child under Social Services' investigation this year.

Simultaneously, questions about the deaths in Rowan County are being raised at all levels of government, from Gov. Jim Hunt to members of the General Assembly, the secretary of Human Resources, chiefs of state divisions and local county commissioners.

During 24 hours of rapid fire developments:

■ Governor Jim Hunt called Rowan Rep. Charlotte Gardner to ask what he could do to help. Serious questions and concerns were expressed by Dr. David Bruton, Secretary of Human Resources, and Kevin FitzGerald, director of the N.C. Division of Social Services.

■ A state child welfare worker with more than 25 years of experience was dispatched to Salisbury to work with Rowan County to make sure that all steps necessary are taken to assure the protection of children.

■ The same state review team that investigated the deaths of Budde Clark, 6, Christopher Jones, 19 months, and Trola Miller, 16, was being assembled to come to Rowan Friday to find out what happened here that led to the death of 2-year-old DeMallon El-Juhnn Krider on Sunday. The child's mother, Tamanchies Krider, has been charged with murder and is now in Rowan County jail.

■ And DSS director Travis issued a statement asking for an "administrative review" of himself and his department.

"It is fair to question my leadership," he said in the written statement. "The citizens of Rowan County need to have confidence in their employees, and I believe an administrative review is the right thing to do. A review would provide answers to the public's questions."

At least three people — County commissioner Dave Rowland, attorney Mary Beth Smith and her mother, longtime child advocate Elizabeth Smith — questioned Travis' leadership and whether he should continue to head the department after news of the child's death.

Travis said this morning he doesn't resent the talk about his resignation.

But, he added, he's not convinced that he is doing something so poorly that it has influenced social workers to do their jobs improperly. The administrative review, he said, is one way to get another perspective.

Travis declined to comment on the Krider case, but referred to it in his statement, noting that the child died while Social Services was conducting an investigation into the alleged neglect by the child's mother.

"My staff and I are shocked, and deeply saddened, by the child's death. The N.C. Division of Social Services will conduct a comprehensive review of the department's handling of the case and will make public its findings.

"I believe that it is quite appropriate for people in Rowan County to question the performance of the department, given the child fatalities in the past four months. I know that I would be asking questions, even if I had no connection to DSS.

"State child fatality reviews examine individual situations," he continued, "and draw conclusions. But these reviews do not necessarily look at the 'big picture.' For that reason, I strongly urge the Board of Social Services and the Board of Commissioners to request that the N.C. Division of Social Services conduct an Administrative Review of Children's Services in Rowan County DSS, which would include a review of how programs are operated, and the management of these programs."

At the same time Travis released his statement, state Social Services director FitzGerald issued a statement that his division had dispatched Jane H. Smith, director of program operations for the state children's services section, to Salisbury today "at the invitation of Rowan County Department of Social Services."

Jane Smith, he said, "is a seasoned child welfare supervisor who understands all aspects of protective services, foster care and adoption."

The purpose of her assignment, he added "will be to assure that all necessary steps to protect children are taken. Specifically, she will monitor and consult with Rowan County to see that every case involving a child in custody is reviewed and that the appropriate second party reviews of all incoming calls are in place. She will report directly to Chuck Harris, chief of children's services for the N.C. Division of Social Services, and to me."

FitzGerald said she will remain in Rowan until the job is finished. "And I don't know how long that's going to be."

Harris said Jane Smith has "more than 25 years of experience at the county level, at the regional level and the state level, so she is thoroughly professional and just as knowledgeable as she can be. Her role is to work with the county and to provide the assurances that the steps are taken."

At the same time Harris was rounding up the state review team which came to Rowan in March to find out what happened in the deaths of the other three children between Jan. 31 and Feb. 4.

Harris was replaced on the committee by Melinda Hamrick, assistant director for local support in the N.C. Division. Harris was scheduled to be in charge of a major meeting of 19 counties in Raleigh Friday.

Other members of the review team are John Shaw, director of the Rowan County Health Department; Dr. Marcia Herman-Giddens, of the state medical examiners office; Jennifer Tolle, executive director of Prevent Child Abuse North Carolina; and JoAnn Lamm, director of child welfare policy in the Children's Services Section of the state division.

They will begin work with an entrance interview in Salisbury at 9 a.m. Friday at the Department of Social Services.

"They'll probably be there for the day," FitzGerald said. "What we're probably looking at is a report about July 7 — it takes about two weeks to complete this — and the report will be public."

Harris said, "They'll be talking to law enforcement, emergency room, and emergency response people who went out to the home. As we look at the record and talk to those people, we might identify other folks we need to talk to. We've got to set those (interviews) up today. This is real fast track work and we hope everybody will be available."

If the team needs to return, he added, they will.

Rep. Charlotte Gardner had an appointment with Harris this afternoon to discuss the situation in Rowan.

She told the Post this morning that the governor had called her Wednesday.

"He wanted to know what he could do to help. I said it's too early to assess it. We'll have to see what kind of findings we come up with this time."

Gardner said she's been told the whole N.C. Department of Human Services was in shock with what happened in Rowan.

"Dr. David Bruton said, 'This has just got to stop.' " she said, adding that she found the situation here "incredible."

"I think they've tried to do everything they could from here to help," Gardner said. "I'm beginning to get questions like, 'What are you all doing in Rowan County?' Certainly nobody wants anything like this to happen, but we've been in the spotlight recently what with

A history

Tamanchies Krider

BY JASON WILLIAMS
SALISBURY POST

Tamanchies Krider owed the teen-ager money for crack cocaine.

Back on Sept. 23, 1993, Salisbury Police say, the pair crossed paths at Village Variety, a convenience store at 727 Hopkins St. When Allen Leonard, four days shy of turning 17, asked Krider for his $20, Krider said she would get to him later.

Then, according to Salisbury Police Capt. Mark Wilhelm, Leonard hit Krider in the face and shot her in the left side with a .25-caliber handgun.

Police charged Leonard with assault with a deadly weapon to inflict serious injury, possession of a stolen firearm and possession of a firearm by someone under 18.

After the shooting, Krider spent one day at Rowan Regional Medical Center. Her bill came to $2,649.65. When Krider didn't pay, hospital authorities took her to court and won a judgement.

Krider may never get the chance to pay that bill. She's in the Rowan County Detention Center charged with murdering her 2-year-old son, DeMallon Krider.

Since her son died Sunday, more and more details of Krider's life are emerging, showing a history of hurting others or being hurt. This month alone, she was nearly evicted and the father of her first child went to prison for violating his probation.

Cocaine problems

Krider acknowledges she is a recovered cocaine addict. She's also HIV-positive.

In 1994, officials with the Rowan County Health Department learned that she was pregnant. When she failed to heed counseling sessions about HIV, the virus that leads to AIDS, health officials recommended that the Salisbury woman go to prison to protect herself, the public and her unborn son.

Since 1993, Rowan County Health Director John Shaw has written four so-called "isolation orders" regulating the behavior and health risks of people with communicable diseases. Two cases dealt with tuberculosis and another case dealt with tuberculosis and HIV, Shaw said Wednesday afternoon.

"She was a young woman who needed help and was struggling with a drug addiction," Shaw said about Krider.

ROWAN MANTRA: DO THE LEAST

Wrong message

Salisbury Post
6/22/97

The difference between abuse and neglect seems like a mighty thin thread from which to hang the Rowan County Department of Social Services' professional reputation.

And, as the controversy grows, Rowan County's reputation hangs by a thread, also.

If 2-year-old DeMallon Krider's condition at Rowan Regional Medical Center on June 9 was reported as child abuse, according to state regulations, Social Services failed its duty by not sending a social worker to the hospital immediately.

If his situation was reported as neglect, however, the department was meeting standards to wait and send investigators to his house the next day.

All this sounds like bureaucratic nit-picking in light of the final facts: DeMallon died on June 15, in the midst of a Social Services investigation, and his mother has been charged with murder. Regardless of what was communicated or miscommunicated on June 9, the more crucial questions revolve around what happened on the 10th and thereafter. What did child protection investigators find during their visit to DeMallon's home, and are the final stages of child abuse so rapid and unpredictable that they detected no threat to the child?

Somehow the message seems to have gone through the Rowan Department of Social Services to do only the minimum — to meet legal requirements instead of going the extra mile or inch to protect children. Do the least.

That is the message that comes across each time Social Services explains its handling of individual cases. When the hospital called with concerns about DeMallon around 4 p.m. on that Monday, whoever took the call said investigators were not available. It was a working day; Social Services employs more than 140 people. But no one could go see DeMallon at that moment and talk to the doctor.

Knowing all that has gone on in the past six months, you'd expect Social Services to be especially sensitive to calls from the hospital and get someone out there right away — without screening the call through an abuse vs. neglect checklist. But that's a moral judgment, not a legal requirement.

Is DSS Director Rick Travis to blame for this kind of response? Has he sent the "do the least" message through the Social Services department he heads?

Or has Rowan County government sent the "do the least" message — to Social Services and other county departments? County commissioners have kept Social Services perennially under-staffed. Even after three child deaths earlier this year, they approved only about half of the new child protection positions Social Services requested, and funding for the slots won't be available until July 1. Social Services was just as short-staffed on June 9 as it was on Jan. 31.

In addition to the loss of young lives, Rowan has suffered another tragedy during this controversy: the battering of the department as a whole. Because Social Services cannot share specific details about these cases, doubt is cast over the entire department.

The state reviews of the Krider case and of the department's administration cannot proceed fast enough. But the reviews must

Toddler will get funeral

The phone rings, and she's there. No hello. No preliminaries. Just the question, a dagger piercing the heart.

ROSE POST

"Is anybody doing anything about a funeral?" my friend asks. "Somebody's got to get that baby in the ground."

She has no children herself, no tie to 2-year-old DeMallon Krider, whose mother beat him to death a week ago today, whose tiny body was sent off to Chapel Hill for an autopsy and brought back to a funeral home here to wait until ....

To wait.

His mother's in jail now, charged with murder.

No father

He had no father on Father's Day. No father to play with him, protect him, save him. No father now to bury him.

But he had friends he didn't know he had. My friend who worried about him, and Essie Hogue and her friends.

Essie is a nurse at the Salisbury VA Medical Center and a guardian ad litem who volunteers to help protect children after her working hours.

She knows what can happen to babies.

And she knows no funeral is free. No matter how much the funeral home cuts the cost. No matter how brief the graveside service. No matter how small the coffin.

And, like my friend, she knew somebody had to get that baby in the ground.

Word spread

So she talked to her friends, and they talked to their friends, and people at the hospital — from every level of the staff — reached into their pockets.

"One doctor just pulled out her checkbook and wrote her check out for $100," Essie says. "Others got on the telephone — Maria Hall, Beverly Hall, Sharon Macavina, Costella Arnold — they called churches and the NAACP and people they knew. We raised $1,300 in 24 hours.

"Can I say I didn't believe it?" Essie asked. "No, I can't. I can say, 'Yes! I do believe it!' I can say, 'Thank you, God. Thank you, God. Thank you, thank you, thank you, God!'

"And somebody called around and got a gravesite for the baby to be buried in, and my daughter, Tracey, went out and picked up money that people gave.

"And I think it's beautiful that the community is coming together to do this. Without any questions. Just reaching in their pockets and doing this."

Memorial fund

Doing enough so a graveside service has been scheduled for Tuesday at 4 o'clock at Oakwood Cemetery.

Doing enough so they hope they'll cover the bare out-of-pocket expenses Rowan Funeral Service is charging.

Doing enough so they can talk about setting up a Krider Baby Memorial Fund with any extra money that comes in, a fund that will make sure that other tiny bodies won't have to wait in a funeral home.

Doing enough to bury DeMallon Krider nicely.

But not doing enough to keep Essie Hogue from asking the question that jabs pain through her heart: How could we have come together as a community to prevent this from happening? How can we now?

Admit mistakes, revamp DSS system

BY BETSY C. ROSADO
SPECIAL TO THE POST

I was deeply saddened to read of yet another child dead in Rowan County this year, but I am also greatly disappointed in the lost opportunity to try and prevent more tragic loss of life among our children. We cannot save every life, but we can do much, much better if we take a few simple steps.

■ 1) The people in the agencies involved must stop concentrating on deflecting blame and admit that something has gone wrong. You must admit you have a problem before you can begin attempts to solve it. There must be an atmosphere in which all employees can acknowledge mistakes that were made, painful though this will be.

■ 2) Each incident must be reviewed with an open and objective analysis of the systemic problems that conspired to allow these all too human mistakes to occur. No one is perfect, and awareness of this and weaknesses in the system can help to create new, stronger systems that are less likely to fail.

■ 3) Create a continuing, open monitoring system in which small systemic problems, errors, and solutions can be worked out before they snowball into the kind of tragedy that is repeating itself in our county.

Amidst all the accusations and blaming, denials and excuses, real responsibility gets lost. All agencies and political leaders involved do have the responsibility and the power to correct mistakes and prevent more tragedy. The state of North Carolina, Rowan Department of Social Services, Rowan Regional Medical Center, Salisbury Post and our political leaders must leave behind the empty blame and denial game and move forward toward an honest attempt at preventing the same mistakes from repeating themselves again. It will take great courage to really do things differently, but we owe it to the memory of these children we have lost and to the future of the community we serve.

Mother indicted

DA has not decided if he will seek death penalty

A grand jury returned an indictment Monday accusing Tamanchies Krider of murdering her 2-year-old son.

Rowan County District Attorney Bill Kenerly will announce at a later hearing whether he intends to seek the death penalty for the 26-year-old Salisbury woman.

Kenerly is seeking the death penalty for two other Rowan County residents charged earlier this year with killing children in their care.

On June 15, paramedics were called to Krider's apartment at 902 E. Lafayette St. and found her son DeMallon El-Juhnn Krider on the floor of a bedroom. He was declared dead at Rowan Regional Medical Center, and the state medical examiner's office issued a preliminary ruling that the child died on head trauma.

In early June, Krider's probation officer had called the Department of Social Services and the Salisbury Police Department to investigate possible abuse of the woman's 4-year-old son, DeLondon.

Six days before DeMallon died, Krider brought her son to Rowan Regional Medical Center for "fever and weakness." But officials at the hospital noticed bite marks and bruises on the toddler and called the Department of Social Services twice.

Social Services workers visited Krider's apartment and saw her and the child the following day. They decided to leave the toddler in the care of his mother, and his subsequent death prompted state officials to launch several reviews of Social Services' actions.

A BILL TO BE ENTITLED

AN ACT TO IMPROVE CHILD PROTECTION BY ALLOWING DISCLOSURE OF CERTAIN RECORDS AND TO APPROPRIATE ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS FOR THIS PURPOSE.

The General Assembly of North Carolina enacts:

Section 1. Chapter 7A of the General Statutes is amended by adding the following new section to read:

"§ 7A-675.1. Disclosure in child fatality or near fatality cases.

(a) The following definitions apply in this section:

(1) 'Child fatality' means the death of a child from suspected abuse, neglect, or maltreatment.

(2) 'Near fatality' means a case in which a physician determines that a child is in serious or critical condition as the result of sickness or injury caused by suspected abuse, neglect, or maltreatment.

(3) 'Public agency' means any agency of State government or its subdivisions as defined in G.S. 132-1(a).

(4) 'Findings and information' means a written summary, as allowed by subsections (c) through (f) of this section, of actions taken or services rendered by a public agency following receipt of information that a child might be in need of protection. The written summary shall include any of the following information the agency is able to provide:

a. The dates, outcomes, and results of any actions taken or services rendered.

b. The results of any review by the State Child Fatality Prevention Team, a local child fatality prevention team, a local community child protection team, the Child Fatality Task Force, or any public agency.

c. Confirmation of the receipt of all reports, accepted or not accepted by the county department of social services, for investigation of suspected child abuse, neglect, or maltreatment, including confirmation that investigations were conducted, the results of the investigations, a description of the conduct of the most recent investigation and the services rendered, and a statement of basis for the department's decision.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law and subject to the provisions of subsections (c) through (f) of this section, a public agency shall disclose to the public, upon request, the findings and information related to a child fatality or near fatality if:

(1) A person is criminally charged with having caused the child fatality or near fatality; or

(2) The district attorney has certified that a person would be charged with having caused the child fatality or near fatality but for that person's prior death.

(c) Nothing herein shall be deemed to authorize access to the confidential records in the custody of a public agency, or the disclosure to the public of the substance or content of any psychiatric, psychological, or therapeutic evaluations or like materials or information pertaining to the child or the child's family unless directly related to the cause of the child fatality or near fatality, or the disclosure of information that would reveal the identities of persons who provided information related to the suspected abuse, neglect, or maltreatment of the child.

(d) Within five working days from the receipt of a request for findings and information related to a child fatality or near fatality, a public agency shall consult with the appropriate district attorney and provide the findings and information unless the agency has a reasonable belief that release of the information:

(1) Is not authorized by subsections (a) and (b) of this section;

(2) Is likely to cause mental or physical harm or danger to a minor child residing in the deceased or injured child's household;

(3) Is likely to jeopardize the State's ability to prosecute the defendant;

(4) Is likely to jeopardize the defendant's right to a fair trial;

(5) Is likely to undermine an ongoing or future criminal investigation; or

(6) Is not authorized by federal law and regulations.

(e) Any person whose request is denied may apply to the appropriate district court for an order compelling disclosure of the findings and information of the public agency. The application shall set forth, with reasonable particularity, factors supporting the application. The district court shall have jurisdiction to issue such orders. Actions brought pursuant to this section shall be set down for immediate hearing, and subsequent proceedings in such actions shall be accorded priority by the appellate courts. After the court has reviewed the specific findings and information, in camera, the court shall issue an order compelling disclosure unless the court finds that one or more of the circumstances in subsection (d) of this section exist.

(f) Access to criminal investigative reports and criminal intelligence information of public law enforcement agencies, and confidential information in the possession of the State Child Fatality Prevention Team, the local teams, and the Child Fatality Task Force, shall be governed by G.S. 132-1.4 and G.S. 143-578 respectively.

(g) Any public agency or its employees acting in good faith in disclosing or declining to disclose information pursuant to this section shall be immune from any criminal or civil liability that might otherwise be incurred or imposed for such action.

(h) Nothing herein shall be deemed to narrow or limit the definition of 'public records' as set forth in G.S. 132-1(a)."

Section 2. G.S. 7A-675(h) reads as rewritten:

"(h) ~~Nothing in this section shall preclude the necessary sharing of information among authorized agencies.~~ The chief district court judge in each district shall designate by standing order certain agencies in the district as 'agencies authorized to share information'. Agencies so designated shall share with one another, upon request, information that is in their possession that is relevant to any case in which a petition is filed alleging that a juvenile is abused, neglected, or dependent, and shall continue to do so until the juvenile is no longer subject to the juvenile jurisdiction of the court. Agencies that may be designated as 'agencies authorized to share information' include local mental health facilities, local health departments, local departments of social services, local law enforcement agencies, local school administrative units, the district's district attorney's office, the Division of Juvenile Services of the Administrative Office of the Courts, and the Office of Guardian ad Litem Services of the Administrative Office of the Courts. Any information shared among agencies pursuant to this subsection shall remain confidential, shall be withheld from public inspection, and shall be used only for the protection of the juvenile. Nothing in this section or any other provision of law shall preclude any other necessary sharing of information among agencies."

Section 3. Of the funds appropriated from the General Fund to the Department of Human Resources for the Division of Social Services, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000) for the 1997-98 fiscal year is to be used to implement the provisions of this act.

Section 4. This act becomes effective October 1, 1997.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Representative Charles Neely

FROM: Evan Rodewald E.R.

RE: Gross Receipts Tax on Boxing

This memo provides additional information on what a nine percent (9.0%) increase in the gross receipts tax on boxing, kickboxing and toughman events could raise.

Assumptions

Neither the Department of Revenue nor the Boxing Commission has any data on how much revenue the current three percent (3.0%) tax on fights generates. Our estimates of what a 9.0% tax increase could generate are based on rough projections from the Boxing Commission, which are based on the following assumptions:

- About 60 fights will be held in North Carolina in Fiscal Year 1997-98.
- About 70% of these fights will be toughman fights, and about 30% will be professional fights.
- The average attendance at fights is between 600 and 800.
- Toughman tickets usually sell for $8.00 in advance, and $10.00 at the event.

AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY/AFFIRMATIVE ACTION EMPLOYER

- Professional tickets usually sell for $20.00 in advance, and $25.00 at the event.
- Because we do not know how a 9.0% increase in the tax will effect ticket sales, for the sake of simplicity, we assume that the increase will have no effect on ticket sales. If this assumption is incorrect, revenues from the tax increase may be lower than our estimates.
- Because we have no data on compliance with the tax, we assume that fight promoters would comply. Again, if this assumption is incorrect, revenues from the tax increase may be lower than our estimates.

Estimate

Based on the assumption listed above, we estimate that a 9.0% increase in the gross receipts tax on fight events would generate between $42,000 and $56,000.

Although these estimates are based on the best information available, we consider them rough projections.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Rep. Charles B. Neely, Jr., Chairman,
House Judiciary II Committee

FROM: Tim Hovis and O. Walker Reagan, Staff Attorneys

RE: Senate Bill 372 - Time Limits For Foreign Service (Second Edition)-
Senator Odom

Senate Bill 372 amends the time that a civil summons, or an alias and pluries summons, can remain valid when the defendant is located outside of the United States. This bill is a recommendation of the North Carolina Bar Association.

This bill amends the Rules of Civil Procedures, G.S. 1A-1, Rule 4(d), which governs the extension of time to serve summons and alias and pluries summons in civil cases. Under current law, to extend the time within which a summons may be served, a plaintiff must secure an endorsement on the original summons, or sue out an alias and pluries summons, within 90 days of the last summons or endorsement.

Under this bill, for service upon a defendant not within the United States, an endorsement may be made or an alias and pluries summons may be sued out at any time within two years of the original summons and every two years thereafter. The summons may then be kept up if within two years of the last preceding summons or endorsement, another summons is sued out.

This bill would become effective when it becomes law and would apply to actions begun on or after that date.

Rule 4. Process.

(a) Summons - Issuance; who may serve. - Upon the filing of the complaint, summons shall be issued forthwith, and in any event within five days. The complaint and summons shall be delivered to some proper person for service. In this State, such proper person shall be the sheriff of the county where service is to be made or some other person duly authorized by law to serve summons. Outside this State, such proper person shall be anyone who is not a party and is not less than 21 years of age or anyone duly authorized to serve summons by the law of the place where service is to be made. Upon request of the plaintiff separate or additional summons shall be issued against any defendants. A summons is issued when, after being filled out and dated, it is signed by the officer having authority to do so. The date the summons bears shall be prima facie evidence of the date of issue.

(b) Summons - Contents. - The summons shall run in the name of the State and be dated and signed by the clerk, assistant clerk, or deputy clerk of the court in the county in which the action is commenced. It shall contain the title of the cause and the name of the court and county wherein the action has been commenced. It shall be directed to the defendant or defendants and shall notify each defendant to appear and answer within 30 days after its service upon him and further that if he fails so to appear, the plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded in the complaint. It shall set forth the name and address of plaintiff 's attorney, or if there be none, the name and address of plaintiff. If a request for admission is served with the summons, the summons shall so state.

(c) Summons - Return. - Personal service or substituted personal service of summons as prescribed by Rule 4(j)(1) a and b must be made within 30 days after the date of the issuance of summons, except that in tax and assessment foreclosures under G.S. 47-108.25 or G.S. 105-374 the time allowed for service is 60 days. When a summons has been served upon every party named in the summons, it shall be returned immediately to the clerk who issued it, with notation thereon of its service.

Failure to make service within the time allowed or failure to return a summons to the clerk after it has been served on every party named in the summons shall not invalidate the summons. If the summons is not served within the time allowed upon every party named in the summons, it shall be returned immediately upon the expiration of such time by the officer to the clerk of the court who issued it with notation thereon of its nonservice and the reasons therefor as to every such party not served, but failure to comply with this requirement shall not invalidate the summons.

(d) Summons - Extension; endorsement, alias and pluries. - When any defendant in a civil action is not served within the time allowed for service, the action may be continued in existence as to such defendant by either of the following methods of extension:

(1) The plaintiff may secure an endorsement upon the original summons for an extension of time within which to complete service of process. Return of the summons so endorsed shall be in the same manner as the original process. Such endorsement may be secured within 90 days after the issuance of summons or the date of the last prior endorsement, or

(2) The plaintiff may sue out an alias or pluries summons returnable in the same manner as the original process. Such alias or pluries summons may be sued out at any time within 90 days after the date of issue of the last preceding summons in the chain of summonses or within 90 days of the last prior endorsement.

Provided, in tax and assessment foreclosures under G.S. 47-108.25 and G.S. 105-374, the first endorsement may be made at any time within two years after the issuance of the original summons, and subsequent endorsements may thereafter be made as in other actions; or an alias or pluries summons may be sued out at any time within two years after the issuance of the original summons, and after the issuance of such alias or pluries summons, the chain of summonses may be kept up as in any other action.

Provided, further, the methods of extension may be used interchangeably in any case and regardless of the form of the preceding extension.

(e) Summons - Discontinuance. - When there is neither endorsement by the clerk nor issuance of alias or pluries summons within the time specified in Rule 4(d), the action is discontinued as to any defendant not theretofore served with summons within the time allowed. Thereafter, alias or pluries summons may issue, or an extension be endorsed by the clerk, but, as to such defendant, the action shall be deemed to have commenced on the date of such issuance or endorsement.

(f) Summons - Date of multiple summonses. - If the plaintiff shall cause separate or additional summonses to be issued as provided in Rule 4(a), the date of issuance of such separate or additional summonses shall be considered the same as that of the original summons for purposes of endorsement or alias summons under Rule 4(d).

(g) Summons - Docketing by clerk. - The clerk shall keep a record in which he shall note the day and hour of issuance of every summons, whether original, alias, pluries, or endorsement thereon. When the summons is returned, the clerk shall note on the record the date of the return and the fact as to service or non-service.

(h) Summons - When proper officer not available. - If at any time there is not in a county a proper officer, capable of executing process, to whom summons or other process can be delivered for service, or if a proper officer refuses or neglects to execute such process, or if such officer is a party to or otherwise interested in the action or proceeding, the clerk of the issuing court, upon the facts being verified before him by written affidavit of the plaintiff or his agent or attorney, shall appoint some suitable person who, after he accepts such process for service, shall execute such process in the same manner, with like effect, and subject to the same liabilities, as if such person were a proper officer regularly serving process in that county.

(h1) Summons - When process returned unexecuted. - If a proper officer returns a summons or other process unexecuted, the plaintiff or his agent or attorney may cause service to be made by anyone who is not less than 21 years of age, who is not a party to the action, and who is not related by blood or marriage to a party to the action or to a person upon whom service is to be made. This subsection shall not apply to executions pursuant to Article 28 of Chapter 1 or summary ejectment pursuant to Article 3 of Chapter 42 of the General Statutes.

(i) Summons - Amendment. - At any time, before or after judgment, in its discretion and upon such terms as it deems just, the court may allow any process or proof of service thereof to be amended, unless it clearly appears that material prejudice would result to substantial rights of the party against whom the process issued.

(j) Process - Manner of service to exercise personal jurisdiction. - In any action commenced in a court of this State having jurisdiction of the subject matter and grounds for personal jurisdiction as provided in G.S. 1-75.4, the manner of service of process within or without the State shall be as follows:

(1) Natural Person. - Except as provided in subsection (2) below, upon a natural person:

a. By delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to him or by leaving copies thereof at the defendant's dwelling house or usual place of abode with some person of suitable age and discretion then residing therein; or

b. By delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to an agent authorized by appointment or by law to be served or to accept service of process or by serving process upon such agent or the party in a manner specified by any statute.

c. By mailing a copy of the summons and of the complaint, registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to the party to be served, and delivering to the addressee.

(2) Natural Person under Disability. - Upon a natural person under disability by serving process in any manner prescribed in this section (j) for service upon a natural person and, in addition, where required by paragraph a or b below, upon a person therein designated.

a. Where the person under disability is a minor, process shall be served separately in any manner prescribed for service upon a natural person upon a parent or guardian having custody of the child, or if there be none, upon any other person having the care and control of the child. If there is no parent, guardian, or other person having care and control of the child when service is made upon the child, then service of process must also be made upon a guardian ad litem who has been appointed pursuant to Rule 17.

b. If the plaintiff actually knows that a person under disability is under guardianship of any kind, process shall be served separately upon his guardian in any manner applicable and appropriate under this section (j). If the plaintiff does not actually know that a guardian has been appointed when service is made upon a person known to him to be incompetent to have charge of his affairs, then service of process must be made upon a guardian ad litem who has been appointed pursuant to Rule 17.

(3) The State. - Upon the State by personally delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to the Attorney General or to a deputy or assistant attorney general or by mailing a copy of the summons and of the complaint, registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to the Attorney General or to a deputy or assistant attorney general.

(4) An Agency of the State. -

a. Upon an agency of the State by personally delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to the process agent appointed by the agency in the manner hereinafter provided or by mailing a copy of the summons and of the complaint, registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to said process agent.

b. Every agency of the State shall appoint a process agent by filing with the Attorney General the name and address of an agent upon whom process may be served.

c. If any agency of the State fails to comply with paragraph b above, then service upon such agency may be made by personally delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to the Attorney General or to a deputy or assistant attorney general or by mailing a copy of the summons and of the complaint, registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to the Attorney General, or to a deputy or assistant attorney general.

d. For purposes of this rule, the term "agency of the State" includes every agency, institution, board, commission, bureau, department, division, council, member of Council of State, or officer of the State government of the State of North Carolina, but does not include counties, cities, towns, villages, other municipal corporations or political subdivisions of the State, county or city boards of education, other local public districts, units, or bodies of any kind, or private corporations created by act of the General Assembly.

(5) Counties, Cities, Towns, Villages and Other Local Public Bodies. -

a. Upon a city, town, or village by personally delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to its mayor, city manager or clerk or by mailing a copy of the summons and of the complaint, registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to its mayor, city manager or clerk.

b. Upon a county by personally delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to its county manager or to the chairman, clerk or any member of the board of commissioners for such county or by mailing a copy of the summons and of the complaint, registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to its county manager or to the chairman, clerk, or any member of this board of commissioners for such county.

c. Upon any other political subdivision of the State, any county or city board of education, or other local public district, unit, or body of any kind (i) by personally delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to an officer or director thereof, or (ii) by personally delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to an agent or attorney-in-fact authorized by appointment or by statute to be served or to accept service in its behalf, or (iii) by mailing a copy of the summons and of the complaint, registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to the officer, director, agent, or attorney-in-fact as specified in (i) and (ii).

(c) 1944-1997 by Michie, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc., and Reed Elsevier Properties Inc. All Rights Reserved.

d. In any case where none of the officials, officers or directors specified in paragraphs a, b and c can, after due diligence, be found in the State, and that fact appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court, or a judge thereof, such court or judge may grant an order that service upon the party sought to be served may be made by personally delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to the Attorney General or any deputy or assistant attorney general of the State of North Carolina, or by mailing a copy of the summons and of the complaint, registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to the Attorney General or any deputy or assistant attorney general of the State of North Carolina.

(6) Domestic or Foreign Corporation. - Upon a domestic or foreign corporation:

a. By delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation or by leaving copies thereof in the office of such officer, director, or managing agent with the person who is apparently in charge of the office; or

c. By mailing a copy of the summons and of the complaint, registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to the officer, director or agent to be served as specified in paragraphs a and b.

(7) Partnerships. - Upon a general or limited partnership:

a. By delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to any general partner, or to any attorney-in-fact or agent authorized by appointment or by law to be served or to accept service of process in its behalf, or by mailing a copy of the summons and of the complaint, registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, addressed to any general partner, or to any attorney-in-fact or agent authorized by appointment or by law to be served or to accept service of process in its behalf, or by leaving copies thereof in the office of such general partner, attorney-in-fact or agent with the person who is apparently in charge of the office.

b. If relief is sought against a partner specifically, a copy of the summons and of the complaint must be served on such partner as provided in this section (j).

(8) Other Unincorporated Associations and Their Officers. - Upon any unincorporated association, organization, or society other than a partnership:

a. By delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to an officer, director, managing agent or member of the governing body of the unincorporated association, organization or society, or by leaving copies thereof in the office of such officer, director, managing agent or member of the governing body with the person who is apparently in charge of the office; or

b. By delivering a copy of the summons and of the complaint to an agent authorized by appointment or by law to be served or to accept service of process or by serving process upon

(9) Service upon a foreign state or a political subdivision, agency, or instrumentality thereof shall be effected pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1608.

(j1) Service by publication on party that cannot otherwise be served. - A party that cannot with due diligence be served by personal delivery or registered or certified mail may be served by publication. Except in actions involving jurisdiction in rem or quasi in rem as provided in section (k), service of process by publication shall consist of publishing a notice of service of process by publication once a week for three successive weeks in a newspaper that is qualified for legal advertising in accordance with G.S. 1-597 and G.S. 1-598 and circulated in the area where the party to be served is believed by the serving party to be located, or if there is no reliable information concerning the location of the party then in a newspaper circulated in the county where the action is pending. If the party's post-office address is known or can with reasonable diligence be ascertained, there shall be mailed to the party at or immediately prior to the first publication a copy of the notice of service of process by publication. The mailing may be omitted if the post-office address cannot be ascertained with reasonable diligence. Upon completion of such service there shall be filed with the court an affidavit showing the publication and mailing in accordance with the requirements of G.S. 1-75.10(2), the circumstances warranting the use of service by publication, and information, if any, regarding the location of the party served.

The notice of service of process by publication shall (i) designate the court in which the action has been commenced and the title of the action, which title may be indicated sufficiently by the name of the first plaintiff and the first defendant; (ii) be directed to the defendant sought to be served; (iii) state either that a pleading seeking relief against the person to be served has been filed or has been required to be filed therein not later than a date specified in the notice; (iv) state the nature of the relief being sought; (v) require the defendant being so served to make defense to such pleading within 40 days after a date stated in the notice, exclusive of such date, which date so stated shall be the date of the first publication of notice, or the date when the complaint is required to be filed, whichever is later, and notify the defendant that upon his failure to do so the party seeking service of process by publication will apply to the court for the relief sought; (vi) in cases of attachment, state the information required by G.S. 1-440.14; (vii) be subscribed by the party seeking service or his attorney and give the post-office address of such party or his attorney; and (viii) be substantially in the following form:

(j2) Proof of service. - Proof of service of process shall be as follows:

(1) Personal Service. - Before judgment by default may be had on personal service, proof of service must be provided in accordance with the requirements of G.S. 1-75.10(1).

(2) Registered or Certified Mail. - Before judgment by default may be had on service by registered or certified mail, the serving party shall file an affidavit with the court showing proof of such service in accordance with the requirements of G.S. 1-75.10(4). This affidavit together with the return receipt signed by the person who received the mail if not the addressee raises a presumption that the person who received the mail and signed the receipt was an agent of the addressee authorized by appointment or by law to be served or to accept service of process or was a person of suitable age and discretion residing in the addressee's dwelling house or usual place of abode. In the event the presumption described in the preceding sentence is rebutted by proof that the person who received the receipt at the addressee's dwelling house or usual place of abode was not a person of suitable age and discretion residing therein, the statute of limitation may not be pleaded as a defense if the action was initially commenced within the period of limitation and service of process is completed within 60 days from the date the service is declared invalid. Service shall be complete on the day the summons and complaint are delivered to the address.

(3) Publication. - Before judgment by default may be had on service by publication, the serving party shall file an affidavit with the court showing the circumstances warranting the use of service by publication, information, if any, regarding the location of the party served which was used in determining the area in which service by publication was printed and proof of service in accordance with G.S. 1-75.10(2).

(j3) Service in a foreign country. - Unless otherwise provided by federal law, service upon a defendant, other than an infant or an incompetent person, may be effected in a place not within the United States:

(1) By any internationally agreed means reasonably calculated to give notice, such as those means authorized by the Hague Convention on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents; or

(2) If there is no internationally agreed means of service or the applicable international agreement allows other means of service, provided that service is reasonably calculated to give notice:

a. In the manner prescribed by the law of the foreign country for service in that country in an action in any of its courts of general jurisdiction;

b. As directed by the foreign authority in response to a letter rogatory or letter of request; or

c. Unless prohibited by the law of the foreign country, by

1. Delivery to the individual personally of a copy of the summons and the complaint and,

(c) 1944-1997 by Michie, a division of Reed Elsevier Inc., and Reed Elsevier Properties Inc. All Rights Reserved.

upon a corporation, partnership, association or other such entity, by delivery to an officer or a managing or general agent;

2. Any form of mail requiring a signed receipt, to be addressed and dispatched by the clerk of the court to the party to be served; or

(3) By other means not prohibited by international agreement as may be directed by the court.

Service under subdivision (2)c.1. or (3) of this subsection may be made by any person authorized by subsection (a) of this Rule or who is designated by order of the court or by the foreign court.

On request, the clerk shall deliver the summons to the plaintiff for transmission to the person or the foreign court or officer who will make the service. Proof of service may be made as prescribed in G.S. 1-75.10, by the order of the court, or by the law of the foreign country.

Proof of service by mail shall include an affidavit or certificate of addressing and mailing by the clerk of court.

(j4) Process or judgment by default not to be attacked on certain grounds. - No party may attack service of process or a judgment of default on the basis that service should or could have been effected by personal service rather than service by registered or certified mail. No party that receives timely actual notice may attack a judgment by default on the basis that the statutory requirement of due diligence as a condition precedent to service by publication was not met.

(j5) Personal jurisdiction by acceptance of service. - Any party personally, or through the persons provided in Rule 4(j), may accept service of process by notation of acceptance of service together with the signature of the party accepting service and the date thereof on an original or copy of a summons, and such acceptance shall have the same force and effect as would exist had the process been served by delivery of copy and summons and complaint to the person signing said acceptance.

(k) Process - Manner of service to exercise jurisdiction in rem or quasi in rem. - In any action commenced in a court of this State having jurisdiction of the subject matter and grounds for the exercise of jurisdiction in rem or quasi in rem as provided in G.S. 1-75.8, the manner of service of process shall be as follows:

(1) Defendant Known. - If the defendant is known, he may be served in the appropriate manner prescribed for service of process in section (j), or, if otherwise appropriate section (j1); except that the requirement for service by publication in (j1) shall be satisfied if made in the county where the action is pending and proof of service is made in accordance with section (j2).

(2) Defendant Unknown. - If the defendant is unknown, he may be designated by description and process may be served by publication in the manner provided in section (j1), except that the requirement for service by publication in (j1) shall be satisfied if made in the county where the action is pending and proof of service is made in accordance with section (j2).

A person who has filed such a consent in connection with a previous registration or notice filing need not file another. The Administrator may by rule or order specify an earlier effective date, and he may by order defer the effective date until noon of the 30th day after the filing of any amendment. Registration of an investment adviser automatically constitutes registration of any investment adviser representative who is a partner, executive officer, or director, or a person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions.

Any appropriate deposit of cash or securities shall be accepted in lieu of any bond so required. No bond may be required of any investment adviser whose minimum net capital, which may be defined by rule, exceeds one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000). Every bond shall provide for suit thereon by any person who has a cause of action under G.S. 78C-38 and, if the Administrator by rule or order requires, by any person who has a cause of action not arising under this Chapter. Every bond shall provide that no suit may be maintained to enforce any liability on the bond unless brought within the time limitations of G.S. 78C-38(d)."

(b) With respect to investment advisers, the Administrator may require that certain information be furnished or disseminated as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors and advisory clients. To the extent determined by the Administrator in his discretion, information furnished to clients or prospective clients of an investment adviser pursuant to the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 and the rules thereunder may be used in whole or partial satisfaction of this requirement.

(c) Every registered investment adviser shall file such financial reports as the Administrator by rule ~~prescribes.~~ prescribes, except as provided by Section 222 of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 [15 U.S.C. § 80(b)-18a].

(d) If the information contained in any document filed with the Administrator is or becomes inaccurate or incomplete in any material respect, the registrant or an investment adviser covered under federal law shall promptly file a correcting ~~amendment~~ amendment, if the document is filed with respect to a registrant or when the amendment is required to be filed with respect to an investment adviser covered under federal law, unless notification of the correction has been given under G.S. 78C-16(b).

(e) All the records referred to in subsection (a) of this section are subject at any time or from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by representatives of the Administrator, within or without this State, as the Administrator deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. For the purpose of avoiding unnecessary duplication of examinations, the Administrator, insofar as he deems it practicable in administering this subsection, may cooperate with the securities administrators of other states, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and any national securities exchange or national securities association registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934."

Section 20. G.S. 78C-46(b) reads as rewritten:

"(b) Every applicant for registration under this Chapter shall file with the Administrator, in such form as he by rule prescribes, an irrevocable consent appointing the Administrator or his successor in office to be his attorney to receive service of any lawful process in any noncriminal suit, action or proceeding against him or his successor, executor or administrator which arises under this Chapter or any rule or order hereunder after the consent has been filed, with the same force and validity as if served personally on the person filing the consent. A person who has filed such a consent in connection with a previous registration or notice filing need not file another. Service may be made by leaving a copy of the process in the office of the Administrator, but it is not effective unless (i) the plaintiff, who may be the Administrator in a suit, action, or proceeding instituted by him, forthwith sends notice of the service and a copy of the process by registered or certified mail to the defendant or respondent at his last address on file with the Administrator, and (ii) the plaintiff's affidavit of compliance with the subsection is filed in the case on or before the return day of the process, if any, or within such further time as the court allows."

Section 21. Sections 4 and 15 of this act become effective October 10, 1999. The remainder of this act becomes effective October 1, 1997. Sections 1 through 13 of this act apply to securities offered or sold and to persons who offer or sell securities on or after the applicable effective date of each of these sections. MEMORANDUM

House Judiciary II Committee

FROM: Tim Hovis and O. Walker Reagan, Staff Attorneys

RE: SENATE BILL 439 - CONFORM SECURITIES AND INVESTMENT ADVISORS LAW TO FEDERAL LAW -(Third Edition) Senator Reeves

Senate Bill 439 amends the North Carolina Securities Act to conform North Carolina law with 1996 changes made in federal securities laws involving the registration of securities dealers and sellers, and investment advisers. This bill is a recommendation of the Secretary of State's office.

The National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996 preempts state regulation of certain "covered securities" with federal securities registration. Under this law the states retain investigative and enforcement authority with respect to securities fraud and deceit. The law also allows the states to require "notice" filings of the federal securities filings with the state and permits the states to continue to charge filing and registration fees for these securities. The new federal law also exempts from Securities Exchange Commission (SEC) registration investment advisors subject to state regulation unless they manage at least $25 million in assets and serve as advisers to certain federally registered investment companies. For those investment advisers subject to SEC registration the states still have the right to require "notice filings" and registration fees, and may also investigate fraud and deceit. The law also limits recordkeeping, capital, or bonding requirements to no more than those required in the state where the investment adviser has its principal place of business. The law exempts from state registration advisers who do not have a place of business in the state and who have fewer than 6 clients who were residents of the State for the preceding 12-month period.

AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY/AFFIRMATIVE ACTION EMPLOYER

Senate Bill 439 amends NC law to conform to those matters still within the control of the State, and to exempt those matters on which federal law preempts state law.

Sections 1, 2 and 3 involve amendments to definitions to distinguish matters subject to state regulation and those subject to federal regulation. Section 3 amends effective October 1, 1999 the definition amended in Section 2, because federal law give the states three years to regulate securities otherwise exempt when the issuer fails file the required notice and pay the required state fees.

Section 6 spells out the notice filing registration requirements for securities that are exempt from state regulation, including the fees that the Secretary of State may charge. This section also includes the authority to require the securities issuer to consent to service of process in this State and to issue a stop order for an issuer who fails to comply with this section.

Sections 7 through 10 make conforming changes to other related statutes.

Sections 11 and 12 involve amendments to definitions of investment advisers to make clear which advisers are regulated by state law and which advisers are not. Section 12 amends effective October 1, 1999 the definition amended in Section 11, because federal law gives the states three years to regulate advisers otherwise exempt when the advisor fails to register and pay the required state fees.

Section 14 specifies that all investment advisers transacting business in the State must register unless they are exempt under federal law and those advisers exempt under federal law must still make a notice filing and pay the appropriate fees.

Sections 15, 16, and 17 make conforming changes to other related statutes.

The bill becomes effective October 1, 1997 except for Sections 3 and 12 which will amend sections 2 and 11 once the 3-year enforcement overlap period expires.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Rep. Charles B. Neely, Jr., Chairman,
House Judiciary II Committee

FROM: Tim Hovis and O. Walker Reagan, Staff Attorneys

RE: SENATE BILL 438 - SECURITIES/INVESTMENT ADVISERS ENFORCEMENT -(Second Edition) Senator Reeves

The Proposed Committee Substitute for Senate Bill 438 would amend the NC Securities Act and the Investment Advisors Act by clarifying when a hearing on an order issued by the Secretary of State may be requested, and making clear that records of criminal investigations conducted by the Secretary under these acts are not public records as any other criminal investigation, and civil investigation records are not public records until the investigations are finished.

Sections 1 through 5 of the bill amend parts of the NC Securities Act. Section 1 allows the Secretary to deny, suspend, or revoke the registration of a securities dealer when a final order suspending or expelling the dealer from the national securities organizations is entered. Sections 2 and 4 will make the Secretary's order final unless a request for hearing, other responsive pleading, or submission is made within 30 business days of receipt of the notice of the order by the dealer. Section 5 makes it clear that the provisions of G.S. 132-1.4 (a copy is attached) which exempts criminal investigative records from the public records law applies to investigations under this Act by the Secretary. This section also provides that noncriminal investigation records shall not be subject to public access until the matter is completed and ceases to be active. Additionally, this section makes clear that confidential information obtained from other law enforcement, administrative, or regulatory agencies retains its confidentiality with the Secretary.

Sections 6 through 10 would make similar changes to parts of the Investment Advisers Act. Section 6 adds a definition of person to the Act. Sections 7 and 9 will make the Secretary's order denying or suspending the investment advisers registration final unless a request for hearing, other responsive pleading, or submission is made within 30 business days of receipt of the notice of the order by the advisor.

AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY/AFFIRMATIVE ACTION EMPLOYER

Section 10 provides the same exemptions from the public records law for investigations under the Investment Advisers Act as does Section 5 of the bill.

Actions by the Secretary of State under many of these sections are civil administrative proceedings, normally seeking to stop actions in violation of the law. While certain violations of both the NC Securities Act and the Investment Adviser Act are punished as Class I felonies, the administrative actions, primarily as cease and desist orders, are often used in situations where violations are initiated out of state and where obtaining criminal jurisdiction would be more difficult.

This bill would become effective October 1, 1997, and would apply to proceedings commenced on or after that date.
