Preface

This volume contains the general laws of a permanent nature enacted by the General Assembly through the 2001 Regular Session that are within Chapters 8C through 14, and brings to date the annotations included therein.

A majority of the Session Laws are made effective upon becoming law, but a few provide for stated effective dates. If the Session Law makes no provision for an effective date, the law becomes effective under G.S. 120-20 "from and after 60 days after the adjournment of the session" in which passed.

A ready reference index is included at the back of this volume. This index is intended to give the user a quick reference to larger bodies of statutes within this volume only. For detailed research on any subject, both within this volume and the General Statutes as a whole, see the General Index to the General Statutes.

Beginning with formal opinions issued by the North Carolina Attorney General on July 1, 1969, selected opinions which construe a specific statute are cited in the annotations to that statute. For a copy of an opinion or of its headnotes, write the Attorney General, P.O. Box 629, Raleigh, N.C. 27602.

This recompiled volume has been prepared and published under the supervision of the Department of Justice of the State of North Carolina. The members of the North Carolina Bar are requested to communicate any suggestions they may have for improving the General Statutes to the Department, or to LexisNexis, Charlottesville, Virginia.

§ 8C-1. Rules of Evidence.

The North Carolina Rules of Evidence are as follows:

Editor's Note. — The official Commentary printed under the individual Rules in this Chapter has been printed by the publisher as received, without editorial change. Subsequent amendments to the Rules may not be reflected in the Commentary in some instances.

Legal Periodicals. — For survey of North Carolina construction law, with particular reference to civil procedure and evidence, see 21 Wake Forest L. Rev. 633 (1986).

For legislative survey, see 22 Campbell L. Rev. 253 (2000).

CASE NOTES

Applicability. — This Chapter was applicable to a processioning proceeding pursuant to Chapter 38 to establish a boundary, where even though the proceeding was commenced in 1980, it did not go to trial until 1985. Green Hi-Win Farm Inc. v. Neal, 83 N.C. App. 201, 349 S.E.2d 614 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 104, 353 S.E.2d 109 (1987).

Effect of Commentaries. — The commentaries printed with the North Carolina Rules of Evidence in the General Statutes will not be treated as binding authority, but instead will be given substantial weight in attempting to comprehend legislative intent. State v. Hosey, 318 N.C. 330, 348 S.E.2d 805 (1986); State v. Chul Yun Kim, 318 N.C. 614, 350 S.E.2d 347 (1986).

Applied in State v. Belfield, 144 N.C. App. 320, 548 S.E.2d 549 (2001).

Cited in State v. Riddick, 316 N.C. 127, 340 S.E.2d 422 (1986); State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986); State v. Jordan, 319 N.C. 98, 352 S.E.2d 672 (1987); State v. Evangelista, 319 N.C. 152, 353 S.E.2d 375 (1987); State v. Belfield, 144 N.C. App. 320, 548 S.E.2d 549 (2001).

Article 1.

General Provisions.

Rule 101. Scope.

These rules govern proceedings in the courts of this State to the extent and with the exceptions stated in Rule 1101. (1983, ch. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule differs from Fed. R. Evid. 101 only in that "courts of this State" has been substituted for "courts of the United States and before United States magistrates." Rule 1101 provides greater details regarding the applicability of these rules in various proceedings.

Legal Periodicals. — For survey of 1983 law of evidence, see 62 N.C.L. Rev. 1290 (1984).

For article, "An Analysis of the New North Carolina Evidence Code," see 20 Wake Forest L. Rev. 1 (1984).

For note on the future of character impeachment in North Carolina, in light of State v. Jean, 310 N.C. 157, 311 S.E.2d 266 (1984), see 63 N.C.L. Rev. 535 (1985).

CASE NOTES

Applicability. — The court would not consider this Chapter on the 1985 appeal of a murder conviction, where the trial of the case was completed prior to the effective date of the Chapter, July 1, 1984. State v. Freeman, 313 N.C. 539, 330 S.E.2d 465 (1985).

The Rules of Evidence do not apply to a sentencing hearing where the judge must determine whether or not defendant provided substantial assistance pursuant to § 90-95(h)(5). State v. Willis, 92 N.C. App. 494, 374 S.E.2d 613, cert. denied, 324 N.C. 341, 378 S.E.2d 808 (1988).

Res Gestae Rationale Survives. — Admission of evidence of a criminal defendant's prior bad acts, received to establish the circumstances of the crime on trial by describing its immediate context, is known variously as the "same transaction" rule, the "complete story" exception, and the "course of conduct" exception; such evidence is admissible if it "'forms part of the history of the event or serves to enhance the natural development of the facts'" and this rationale, established in pre-Rules cases, survives the adoption of the Rules of Evidence. State v. Agee, 326 N.C. 542, 391 S.E.2d 171 (1990).

Teacher Dismissal Hearings. — The Rules of Evidence, § 8C-1, are not applicable to teacher dismissal hearings before a board of education. Evers v. Pender County Bd. of Educ., 104 N.C. App. 1, 407 S.E.2d 879 (1991), aff'd, 331 N.C. 380, 416 S.E.2d 3 (1992).

As to the admissibility of out-of-court statements by agent to the effect that he was working for defendant insurance company while investigating plaintiff, see Daily v. Integon Gen. Ins. Corp., 75 N.C. App. 387, 331 S.E.2d 148 (1985).

Rule 102. Purpose and construction.

(a) In general. — These rules shall be construed to secure fairness in administration, elimination of unjustifiable expense and delay, and promotion of growth and development of the law of evidence to the end that the truth may be ascertained and proceedings justly determined.

(b) Subordinate divisions. — For the purpose of these rules only, the subordinate division of any rule which is labeled with a lower case letter shall be a subdivision. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

This rule differs from Fed. R. Evid. 102 by the addition of subdivision (b) which is explained below. The commentary to each rule indicates whether the rule is identical to or different from its counterpart in the federal rules. The intent is to make applicable, as an aid in construction, the federal decisional law construing identical or similar provisions of the Federal Rules of Evidence.

Of course, federal precedents are not binding on the courts of this State in construing these rules. Nonetheless, these rules are not adopted in a vacuum. A substantial body of law construing these rules exists and should be looked to by the courts for enlightenment and guidance in ascertaining the intent of the General Assembly in adopting these rules. Uniformity of evidence rulings in the courts of this State and federal courts is one motivating factor in adopting these rules and should be a goal of our courts in construing those rules that are identical.

Problems of construction may arise that have not been settled by federal precedents. In these instances, our courts should examine North Carolina cases as well as federal cases for enlightenment.

Although these rules answer the vast majority of evidence questions that arise in our courts, there are some evidentiary questions that are not within the coverage of these rules. In these instances, North Carolina precedents will continue to control unless changed by our courts.

The commentary to each rule indicates whether the rule is consistent with current North Carolina practice. The discussion of North Carolina law is included to highlight the changes made by these rules.

Wherever the commentary refers to "the Advisory Committee's Note", the reference is to the Advisory Committee on Rules of Evidence appointed by United States Chief Justice Warren on March 8, 1965. See Saltzburg and Redden, Federal Rules of Evidence Manual, p. 2-4 (3d ed. 1982).

Rule 102 provides that these rules shall be construed to promote growth and development of the law of evidence. Of course, this provision is not intended to give discretion to construe the rules unfettered by the language of the rules. Rather, the language of Rule 102 permits a flexible approach to problems not explicitly covered by the rules.

Subdivision (b) was added to this rule to make it clear that the scheme of subordinate divisions being followed is that of the federal rules. The North Carolina statutory scheme would term the subordinate divisions referred to as "subsections." It was felt by the drafters of the North Carolina rules and commentary that following the federal scheme would avoid confusion in comparing the federal rules to the North Carolina rules and in applying authorities which refer to the federal rules.

Rule 103. Rulings on evidence.

(a) Effect of erroneous ruling. — Error may not be predicated upon a ruling which admits or excludes evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected, and

(1) Objection. — In case the ruling is one admitting evidence, a timely objection or motion to strike appears of record. No particular form is required in order to preserve the right to assert the alleged error upon appeal if the motion or objection clearly presented the alleged error to the trial court;

(2) Offer of proof. — In case the ruling is one excluding evidence, the substance of the evidence was made known to the court by offer or was apparent from the context within which questions were asked.

(b) Record of offer and ruling. — The court may add any other or further statement which shows the character of the evidence, the form in which it was offered, the objection made, and the ruling thereon. It may direct the making of an offer in question and answer form.

(c) Hearing of jury. — In jury cases, proceedings shall be conducted, to the extent practicable, so as to prevent inadmissible evidence from being suggested to the jury by any means, such as making statements or offers of proof or asking questions in the hearing of the jury.

(d) Review of errors where justice requires. — Notwithstanding the requirements of subdivision (a) of this rule, an appellate court may review errors affecting substantial rights if it determines, in the interest of justice, it is appropriate to do so. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 103, except for subsection (1) of subdivision (a), and subdivision (d).

Subdivision (a) adopts the "substantial rights" language used in the majority of states in testing for harmless error. North Carolina Civ. Pro. Rule 61 provides that no error is grounds for reversal unless the error amounts to the denial of a substantial right. Subdivision (a) is not intended to affect the additional requirement in criminal cases that a reasonable possibility exist that a different result would have been reached if the error had not been committed. See G.S. 15A-1443.

Subdivision (a) also provides that rulings on evidence cannot be assigned as error unless the nature of the error was called to the attention of the judge, so as to alert him to the proper course of action and enable opposing counsel to take proper corrective measures. This is in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 27, at 107 (1982); G.S. 15A-1446. The wording of subsection (1) differs from the federal rule by borrowing the language of G.S. 15A-1446(a) to describe the minimum requirements of an objection or motion to strike.

The provisions of subdivision (b) are substantially the same as current North Carolina practice. North Carolina Civ. Pro. Rule 43(c) and G.S. 15A-1446(a) should be amended where necessary to conform to Rule 103.

Subdivision (c) is in accord with North Carolina practice.

Subdivision (d) differs from Fed. R. Evid. 103(d). The federal rule provides that, although an error was not brought to the court's attention (as required by subdivision (a)), the court may nevertheless review "plain error affecting substantial rights." Subdivision (d) of this rule borrows its language from G.S. 15A-1446(b), which applies in criminal proceedings, and makes that the standard for both criminal and civil proceedings, but with the addition that "substantial rights" must be affected. This represents an expansion of the areas in civil cases in which North Carolina appellate courts may review error where no proper objection or motion was previously made. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 27 (1982).

It is anticipated that in civil cases appellate courts will rarely exercise the authority to take notice of errors that were not brought to the attention of the trial court. G.S. 15A-1446(b) should be amended to reflect the adoption of Rule 103(d).

CASE NOTES

Timely Objection Required. — Absent some exceptional situation, error may not be predicated upon the admission of evidence unless a timely objection or motion to strike appears of record. Forsyth County Hosp. Auth. v. Sales, 82 N.C. App. 265, 346 S.E.2d 212, cert. denied, 318 N.C. 415, 349 S.E.2d 594 (1986).

An assignment of error ordinarily will not be considered on appellate review unless the error has been brought to the attention of the trial court by appropriate and timely objection. State v. Short, 322 N.C. 783, 370 S.E.2d 351 (1988).

Where, at the time of defendant's objection to the admission of the envelope's contents, plaintiff had previously been permitted to testify about them without objection, defendant's objection was not raised in a timely manner. Main St. Shops, Inc. v. Esquire Collections, Ltd., 115 N.C. App. 510, 445 S.E.2d 420 (1994).

Late Objection at Trial. — Defendants' motion to strike witness' testimony was untimely, where it occurred at least 100 questions and answers after plaintiff adduced testimony and where defendants neither offered nor argued a "specific reason" for postponing their objection until well past time in which court or plaintiff could have remedied effect of alleged error. Stimpson Hosiery Mills, Inc. v. Pam Trading Corp., 98 N.C. App. 543, 392 S.E.2d 128 (1990).

Where defendant's motion to strike witness' in-court identification came well after the witness' response to the prosecutor's question, defendant's motion was not made in a timely manner and the defendant therefore waived any objection to the in-court identification. State v. McCray, 342 N.C. 123, 463 S.E.2d 176 (1995).

The function of an objection is not only to signify that there is an issue of law, but also to give notice of the terms of its issue. State v. West, 317 N.C. 219, 345 S.E.2d 186 (1986).

Alleged Error Must Be "Clearly Presented". — Although this rule requires no particular form for objections in order to preserve the alleged error on appeal, it does require that the alleged error be "clearly presented" to the trial court. State v. West, 317 N.C. 219, 345 S.E.2d 186 (1986).

Although under this rule no particular form is required to preserve the right to assert an alleged error on appeal, the motion or objection must be timely and must clearly present the alleged error to the trial court. State v. Reid, 322 N.C. 309, 367 S.E.2d 672 (1988).

Where a relevant response was not apparent from the context of the examination defendant was precluded from predicating error upon the trial court's ruling on the State's objection to the question. State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995).

A general objection, if overruled, is ordinarily not effective on appeal. State v. Hamilton, 77 N.C. App. 506, 335 S.E.2d 506 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 593, 341 S.E.2d 33 (1986).

Error may not be argued on appeal where the underlying objection fails to present the nature of the alleged error to the trial court. This rule serves to facilitate proper rulings and to enable opposing counsel to take proper corrective measures to avoid retrial. State v. Catoe, 78 N.C. App. 167, 336 S.E.2d 691 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 380, 344 S.E.2d 1 (1986).

Objection to Opinion Testimony. — In the absence of a special request to qualify a witness as an expert, a general objection to specific opinion testimony will not suffice to preserve the question of the expert's qualifications, even on ultimate issues. State v. Hamilton, 77 N.C. App. 506, 335 S.E.2d 506 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 593, 341 S.E.2d 33 (1966).

If a witness' evidence indicates that he is in fact qualified to give a challenged opinion, even a timely specific objection will not likely be sustained on appeal. State v. Hamilton, 77 N.C. App. 506, 335 S.E.2d 506 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 593, 341 S.E.2d 33 (1966).

Burden on Alleging Improper Admission of Evidence. — An appellant alleging improper admission of evidence has the burden of showing that he was unfairly prejudiced or that the jury verdict was probably influenced thereby, that appellant has been denied some substantial right and that the result of the trial would have been materially more favorable to appellant. McNabb v. Town of Bryson City, 82 N.C. App. 385, 346 S.E.2d 285, appeal dismissed, 319 N.C. 397, 354 S.E.2d 239 (1987).

Defendant Failed to Carry His Burden of Showing Prejudice. — Although trial court did not allow defense counsel to impeach defendant with evidence of his prior convictions, where defendant made no offer of proof as to the matter excluded, nor was the answer apparent from the context in which the question was asked of defendant, the defendant failed to carry his burden of showing prejudice and the court had no basis for concluding that a substantial right of defendant was affected. State v. Locklear, 322 N.C. 349, 368 S.E.2d 377 (1988).

Where plaintiff entered a timely objection to question eliciting witness' opinion as to the speed of motorcycle, a further motion to strike his answer was not required. Coley v. Garris, 87 N.C. App. 493, 361 S.E.2d 427 (1987).

Waiver of Objection. — Except in certain circumstances, failure to object to the admission of evidence at the time it is offered waives the objection. Spencer v. Spencer, 70 N.C. App. 159, 319 S.E.2d 636 (1984).

Failure to move to strike an answer, when its admissibility is not indicated by the question but becomes apparent by some aspect of the answer, waives any objection to the inadmissible information. State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

Defendant waived any objection as to use of a witnesses' prior statements by using them extensively himself on cross-examination, and by failing to object to the use of the statements to refresh the witnesses' memory. State v. Demery, 113 N.C. App. 58, 437 S.E.2d 704 (1993).

By failing to preserve evidence for review, defendant deprived the Supreme Court of the necessary record from which to ascertain if the alleged error was prejudicial. Proper consideration of defendant's argument was therefore precluded. State v. Miller, 321 N.C. 455, 364 S.E.2d 387 (1988).

Where the relevance of the proffered evidence was not obvious from the record, and defendant did not make an offer of proof showing the substance of what the witness would have testified, defendant's question regarding the admissibility of the evidence would not be reviewed on appeal. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

Where trial judge excluded testimony of an expert regarding the standard of care, defendant attempted to elicit his testimony from its expert at trial and judge sustained plaintiff's objection, and thereafter defendant made no offer of proof and the record failed to disclose what the substance of the expert's evidence might have been, defendant waived its right to assert issue on appeal since the essential substance of the witness' testimony was not discernible from the record. River Hills Country Club, Inc. v. Queen City Automatic Sprinkler Corp., 95 N.C. App. 442, 382 S.E.2d 849 (1989).

Where the defendant made no offer of proof regarding his proffered testimony and the significance of the excluded testimony was not obvious from the record, the defendant failed to preserve any issue concerning the exclusion of the testimony for appellate review. State v. Barton, 335 N.C. 741, 441 S.E.2d 306 (1994).

Several assignments of error relating to rulings by the trial court excluding evidence the plaintiffs attempted to offer were not addressed by the court because in each instance the plaintiffs failed to make an offer of proof. Tolbert v. County of Caldwell, 121 N.C. App. 653, 468 S.E.2d 504 (1996).

In order to preserve an argument on appeal which relates to the exclusion of evidence, including evidence solicited on cross-examination, the defendant must make an offer of proof so that the substance and significance of the excluded evidence is in the record. State v. Ginyard, 122 N.C. App. 25, 468 S.E.2d 525 (1996).

This rule does not contemplate an extensive offer of proof; thus, the trial court, while allowing expert's two-page report, properly refused to allow "a lengthy testimony" about the records she relied upon in reaching her conclusions and opinions. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Failure to Offer Proof Precludes Appellate Review. — Defendant, who did not make an offer of proof to show that witness's response to defense's question would have revealed that victim was put on lock-up for profane language and disrespect, failed to preserve this issue for appellate review under the standard set forth in this rule, where the answer was not otherwise apparent from the context. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Failure to Object to Parole Evidence. — Where the record did not show that plaintiff objected to parol evidence in the form of affidavits submitted by the defendants, the facts set out in these affidavits were competent evidence to be considered by the trial court in ruling upon the motions for summary judgment. Lindsey v. North Carolina Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 103 N.C. App. 432, 405 S.E.2d 803 (1991).

Rule 104. Preliminary questions.

(a) Questions of admissibility generally. — Preliminary questions concerning the qualification of a person to be a witness, the existence of a privilege, or the admissibility of evidence shall be determined by the court, subject to the provisions of subdivision (b). In making its determination it is not bound by the rules of evidence except those with respect to privileges.

(b) Relevancy conditioned on fact. — When the relevancy of evidence depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court shall admit it upon, or subject to, the introduction of evidence sufficient to support a finding of the fulfillment of the condition.

(c) Hearing of jury. — Hearings on the admissibility of confessions or other motions to suppress evidence in criminal trials in Superior Court shall in all cases be conducted out of the hearing of the jury. Hearings on other preliminary matters shall be so conducted when the interests of justice require or, when an accused is a witness, if he so requests.

(d) Testimony by accused. — The accused does not, by testifying upon a preliminary matter, subject himself to cross-examination as to other issues in the case.

(e) Weight and credibility. — This rule does not limit the right of a party to introduce before the jury evidence relevant to weight or credibility. (1983, ch. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 104 with the exception of subdivision (c) which is discussed below.

Subdivision (a) states as a general rule that preliminary questions shall be determined by the judge. This is in accord with North Carolina practice. See H. Brandis, Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 8 (1982). The Advisory Committee's Note to the federal rule states:

"The applicability of a particular rule of evidence often depends upon the existence of a condition. Is the alleged expert a qualified physician? Is a witness whose former testimony is offered unavailable? Was a stranger present during a conversation between attorney and client? In each instance the admissibility of evidence will turn upon the answer to the question of the existence of the condition. Accepted practice, incorporated in the rule, places on the judge the responsibility for these determinations. McCormick § 53; Morgan, Basic Problems of Evidence 45-50 (1962).

To the extent that these inquiries are factual, the judge acts as a trier of fact. Often, however, rulings on evidence call for an evaluation in terms of a legally set standard. Thus when a hearsay statement is offered as a declaration against interest, a decision must be made whether it possesses the required against-interest characteristics. These decisions, too, are made by the judge.

In view of these considerations, this subdivision refers to preliminary requirements generally by the broad term 'question,' without attempt at specification.

This subdivision is of general application. It must, however, be read as subject to the special provisions for 'conditional relevancy' in subdivision (b) and those for confessions in subdivision (d)."

The second sentence of subdivision (a) provides that in making its determination on preliminary questions, the court is not bound by the rules of evidence except those with respect to privileges. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"If the question is factual in nature, the judge will of necessity receive evidence pro and con on the issue. The rule provides that the rules of evidence in general do not apply to this process. McCormick § 53, p. 123, n. 8, points out that the authorities are 'scattered and inconclusive,' and observes:

'Should the exclusionary law of evidence, "the child of the jury system" in Thayer's phrase, be applied to this hearing before the judge? Sound sense backs the view that it should not, and that the judge should be empowered to hear any relevant evidence, such as affidavits or other reliable hearsay.'

This view is reinforced by practical necessity in certain situations. An item, offered and objected to, may itself be considered in ruling on admissibility, though not yet admitted in evidence. Thus the content of an asserted declaration against interest must be considered in ruling whether it is against interest.  Another example is the requirement of Rule 602 dealing with personal knowledge. In the case of hearsay, it is enough, if the declarant 'so far as appears [has] had an opportunity to observe the fact declared'. McCormick § 10, p. 19.

If concern is felt over the use of affidavits by the judge in preliminary hearings on admissibility, attention is directed to the many important judicial determinations made on the basis of affidavits. ***

The rules of Civil Procedure are more detailed. Rule 43(e), dealing with motions generally, provides:

'When a motion is based on facts not appearing of record the court may hear the matter on affidavits presented by the respective parties, but the court may direct that the matter be heard wholly or partly on oral testimony or depositions.'

. . . Rule 56 provides in detail for the entry of summary judgment based on affidavits. Affidavits may supply the foundation for temporary restraining orders under Rule 65(b)."

Subdivision (b) concerns relevancy conditioned on fact. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"In some situations, the relevancy of an item of evidence, in the large sense, depends upon the existence of a particular preliminary fact. Thus when a spoken statement is relied upon to prove notice to X, it is without probative value unless X heard it. Or if a letter purporting to be from Y is relied upon to establish an admission by him, it has no probative value unless Y wrote or authorized it. Relevance in this sense has been labelled 'conditional relevancy'. Morgan, Basic Problems of Evidence 45-46 (1962). Problems arising in connection with it are to be distinguished from problems of logical relevancy, e.g., evidence in a murder case that accused on the day before purchased a weapon of the kind used in the killing, treated in Rule 401.

If preliminary questions of conditional relevancy were determined solely by the judge, as provided in subdivision (1), the functioning of the jury as a trier of fact would be greatly restricted and in some cases virtually destroyed. These are appropriate questions for juries. Accepted treatment, as provided in the rule, is consistent with that given fact questions generally. The judge makes a preliminary determination whether the foundation evidence is sufficient to support a finding of fulfillment of the condition. If so, the item is admitted. If after all the evidence on the issue is in, pro and con, the jury could reasonably conclude that fulfillment of the condition is not established, the issue is for them. If the evidence is not such as to allow a finding, the judge withdraws the matter from their consideration. * * *

The order of proof here, as generally, is subject to the control of the judge."

Subdivision (b) is in accord with North Carolina practice in making an exception to the general rule that preliminary questions are for the court. When the relevancy of evidence depends upon the existence of some other fact which also requires proof, the determination of the preliminary fact question is for the jury. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 8, p. 27-28 (1982).

Subdivision (c) concerns when hearings on preliminary questions will be out of the hearing of the jury. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Preliminary hearings on the admissibility of confessions must be conducted outside the hearing of the jury. See Jackson v. Denno, 378 U.S. 368, 84 S.Ct. 1774, 12 L.Ed.2d 908 (1964). Otherwise, detailed treatment of when preliminary matters should be heard outside the hearing of the jury is not feasible. The procedure is time consuming. Not infrequently the same evidence which is relevant to the issue of establishment of fulfillment of a condition precedent to admissibility is also relevant to weight or credibility, and time is saved by taking foundation proof in the presence of the jury. Much evidence on preliminary questions, though not relevant to jury issues, may be heard by the jury with no adverse effect. A great deal must be left to the discretion of the judge who will act as the interests of justice require."

Subdivision (c) has been changed from the federal rule by the addition of language requiring other motions to suppress evidence in criminal cases in superior court to be conducted out of the hearing of the jury. This is in accord with G.S. 15A-977(e) which should be amended to reflect the adoption of this rule.

Subdivision (d) provides that the accused does not, by testifying upon a preliminary matter, subject himself to cross-examination as to other issues in the case. As the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The limitation upon cross-examination is designed to encourage participation by the accused in the determination of preliminary matters. He may testify concerning them without exposing himself to cross-examination generally. The provision is necessary because of the breadth of cross-examination under Rule 611(b).

The rule does not address itself to questions of the subsequent use of testimony given by an accused at a hearing on a preliminary matter. See Walder v. United States, 347 U.S. 62 (1954); Simmons v. United States, 390 U.S. 377 (1968); Harris v. New York, 401 U.S. 222 (1971)."

There are no North Carolina cases on this point.

Subdivision (e) makes it clear that after the court makes its determination on a preliminary question of fact, the party opposing the ruling is entitled to introduce before the jury evidence that relates to the weight or credibility of certain evidence. For example, even if the court determines that a confession was not coerced, the defendant may introduce evidence of coercion, since this is relevant to the weight of the evidence.

Subdivision (e) is in accord with North Carolina practice.

CASE NOTES

The decision to admit evidence rests in the discretion of the court upon consideration of the facts supporting relevancy. State v. Wortham, 80 N.C. App. 54, 341 S.E.2d 76 (1986), modified on other grounds, 318 N.C. 669, 351 S.E.2d 294 (1987).

The exclusion of evidence concerning defendant's understanding of the Miranda warnings was error. As a matter of law, there was a reasonable possibility that, had the error not been committed, a different result would have been reached at the trial. State v. Sanchez, 328 N.C. 247, 400 S.E.2d 421 (1991).

Testimony prohibited by trial court relating to the defendant's mental ability to understand Miranda warnings was clearly admissible as evidence of the surrounding circumstances under which the statements were made. State v. Sanchez, 328 N.C. 247, 400 S.E.2d 421 (1991).

Credibility and Weight of Confessions. — In order for a jury to adequately evaluate the credibility and weight of confessions, they must hear all the competent evidence of the surrounding circumstances. State v. Sanchez, 328 N.C. 247, 400 S.E.2d 421 (1991).

Testimony involving an expert opinion as to defendant's mental ability to understand the questions to him during his interrogation was competent as going to the weight and credit the jury should give to his confession. State v. Sanchez, 328 N.C. 247, 400 S.E.2d 421 (1991).

Declarant's Conflicting Statements. — Where the hearsay statements of a declarant are conflicting the conflict creates a question of credibility and not one of reliability. Questions of credibility are to be determined by the jury. State v. Jolly, 332 N.C. 351, 420 S.E.2d 661 (1992).

Habitual Conduct of Victim. — The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying admissibility of evidence of a victim's prior assault which the defendant claimed the victim fabricated so as to obtain a pregnancy test and which he wanted to introduce to demonstrate "habit" where it noted that the two incidents occurring two years apart were not sufficient to constitute a habit within § 8C-1, Rule 406. State v. Chavis, 141 N.C. App. 177, 540 S.E.2d 404 (2000).

In deciding preliminary matters, the trial court may consider any relevant and reliable information that comes to its attention, whether or not that information is technically admissible under the rules of evidence. In re Will of Leonard, 82 N.C. App. 646, 347 S.E.2d 478 (1986).

Treatment of Motion Raising Qualification of Witnesses. — The trial judge correctly treated motion filed by the State, entitled "Motion in Limine to Allow Witnesses to Testify," seeking to admit the testimony of a social worker, two detectives, a licensed practical nurse, and a medical doctor, pursuant to this rule, as one concerning the qualification of witnesses to testify. State v. Fearing, 315 N.C. 167, 337 S.E.2d 551 (1985).

Where competency is questioned, the trial judge is not required to conduct a formal hearing at which all of the rules of evidence are applicable. The trial court must make only sufficient inquiry to satisfy itself that the witness is or is not competent to testify. In re Will of Leonard, 82 N.C. App. 646, 347 S.E.2d 478 (1986).

The competency of a witness is determined at the time the witness is called upon to testify. In re Will of Leonard, 82 N.C. App. 646, 347 S.E.2d 478 (1986).

Discretion in Determining Competency. — While the trial court's power to determine the competency of a witness is not an arbitrary one, there is no abuse of its discretion where there is evidence to support its ruling. In re Will of Leonard, 82 N.C. App. 646, 347 S.E.2d 478 (1986).

Competency of Child Witness. — The competency of a child witness to testify at trial is not a proper subject for stipulation of counsel, absent the trial judge's independent finding pursuant to personally examining or observing the child on voir dire. State v. Fearing, 315 N.C. 167, 337 S.E.2d 551 (1985).

In a prosecution charging defendant with first-degree rape, incest, and taking indecent liberties with his three-year-old daughter, the trial judge's adoption of counsels' stipulation in concluding that the child victim was incompetent to testify, where he never personally examined or observed the child's demeanor in responding to questions during a voir dire examination, was reversible error, where highly prejudicial testimony was erroneously admitted pursuant to § 8C-1, Rules 803 (24) and 804 (b)(5) on the basis of this improperly based conclusion. State v. Fearing, 315 N.C. 167, 337 S.E.2d 551 (1985).

Hearing on Child's Competence to Testify. — Subsection (c) of this rule requires that a hearing to determine the competency of a young victim be held out of the presence of the jury only when the ends of justice require it. State v. Baker, 320 N.C. 104, 357 S.E.2d 340 (1987).

Defendant's Right to Introduce Evidence as to Statement's Weight or Credibility. — Although the court ruled that defendant's statement confessing to certain crimes was admissible, defendant, who claimed that due to his mental retardation he confessed to crimes he did not commit, retained the right to introduce before the jury evidence relevant to his statement's weight or credibility. State v. Moore, 321 N.C. 327, 364 S.E.2d 648 (1988).

Finding That Witness Was Not Competent Upheld. — Trial judge did not abuse her discretion by finding that witness was incapable of remembering, understanding, and relating to the jury matters of detail concerning the holographic will in question, where the events and conversations which witness would have testified about occurred during the period of 1979-1982, and where the witness could not remember having twice been involuntarily committed during that same period of time. In re Will of Leonard, 82 N.C. App. 646, 347 S.E.2d 478 (1986).

Where trial judge conducted a competency hearing at which he was able to observe for himself a five-year-old's competence to be a witness, and the record showed that the child could not respond to simple questions about basic facts in her life, and was contradictory, uncommunicative, and frightened, there was no error in the court's finding the child incompetent to testify. State v. Deanes, 323 N.C. 508, 374 S.E.2d 249 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1101, 109 S. Ct. 2455, 104 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1989).

Rule 105. Limited admissibility.

When evidence which is admissible as to one party or for one purpose but not admissible as to another party or for another purpose is admitted, the court, upon request, shall restrict the evidence to its proper scope and instruct the jury accordingly. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 105. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"A close relationship exists between this rule and Rule 403 which requires exclusion when 'probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury.' The present rule recognizes the practice of admitting evidence for a limited purpose and instructing the jury accordingly. The availability and effectiveness of this practice must be taken into consideration in reaching a decision whether to exclude for unfair prejudice under Rule 403. In Bruton v. United States, 389 U.S. 818, 88 S.Ct. 126, 19 L.Ed.2d 70 (1968), the Court ruled that a limiting instruction did not effectively protect the accused against the prejudicial effect of admitting in evidence the confession of a codefendant which implicated him. The decision does not, however, bar the use of limited admissibility with an instruction where the risk of prejudice is less serious."

Rule 105 is in accord with the general rule in North Carolina that evidence that is inadmissible for one purpose may be admitted for other and proper purposes. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 79 (1982).

CASE NOTES

The admission of evidence which is competent for a restricted purpose will not be held error in the absence of a request by the defendant for limiting instructions. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 406, 368 S.E.2d 844 (1988).

When evidence is competent for one purpose, but not for all purposes, the objecting party cannot rely on a general objection; he or she must state the grounds and ask for any desired limiting instructions. State v. Short, 322 N.C. 783, 370 S.E.2d 351 (1988).

In a prosecution for bank robbery in New Bern, the court did not err in permitting a teller at another New Bern bank to testify that one of the defendants came into that bank on the day of the robbery and got change for a one hundred dollar bill, where this testimony was offered and received for the limited but proper purpose of showing that the defendants were in New Bern on the day of the robbery and to corroborate the testimony of a confessed participant in the robbery. State v. Alston, 80 N.C. App. 540, 342 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 707, 347 S.E.2d 441 (1986).

Quoted in State v. Allen, 141 N.C. App. 610, 541 S.E.2d 490 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 382, 547 S.E.2d 816 (2001).

Bostic, 121 N.C. App. 90, 465 S.E.2d 20 (1995); State v. Ginyard, 122 N.C. App. 25, 468 S.E.2d 525 (1996).

Rule 106. Remainder of or related writings or recorded statements.

When a writing or recorded statement or part thereof is introduced by a party, an adverse party may require him at that time to introduce any other part or any other writing or recorded statement which ought in fairness to be considered contemporaneously with it. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 106. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The rule is an expression of the rule of completeness. McCormick § 56. It is manifested as to depositions in Rule 32(a) (4) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, of which the proposed rule is substantially a restatement.

The rule is based on two considerations. The first is the misleading impression created by taking matters out of context. The second is the inadequacy of repair work when delayed to a point later in the trial.  The rule does not in any way circumscribe the right of the adversary to develop the matter on cross-examination or as part of his own case.

For practical reasons, the rule is limited to writings and recorded statements and does not apply to conversations."

N.C. Civ. Pro. Rule 32(a) (5), which applies to depositions, is similar to Rule 106.

CASE NOTES

The Supreme Court frequently looks to federal decisions for guidance with regard to the Rules of Evidence, and the lessons of the federal decisions discussing Rule 106 are well settled. Rule 106 codifies the standard common law rule that when a writing or recorded statement or a part thereof is introduced by any party, an adverse party can obtain admission of the entire statement or anything so closely related that in fairness it too should be admitted. State v. Thompson, 332 N.C. 204, 420 S.E.2d 395 (1992).

Requirements. — Federal decisions make clear that Rule 106 does not require introduction of additional portions of the statement or another statement that are neither explanatory of nor relevant to the passages that have been admitted. State v. Thompson, 332 N.C. 204, 420 S.E.2d 395 (1992).

Defendant's argument that the trial court erred in denying his introduction of excluded portion of a statement he gave to the police failed because he did not seek to introduce the excluded portion of the statement contemporaneously as required, but instead sought to introduce the excluded portion on rebuttal. State v. Lloyd, 354 N.C. 76, 552 S.E.2d 596 (2001).

Admission of Entire Report Concerning Child Sex Abuse. — Assuming error in admitting that portion of a licensed psychological associate's report which stated her opinion that a child sexual abuse victim was "not telling everything," the error was harmless in view of the weight of the substantive evidence against the defendant. State v. Waddell, 130 N.C. App. 488, 504 S.E.2d 84 (1998), aff'd in part and modified in part, 351 N.C. 413, 527 S.E.2d 644 (2000).

Prior Inconsistent Statements. — Co-conspirator was allowed to use her attorney-client privilege with regard to a prior inconsistent statement made in conference with her attorney; that privilege was not waived when the information was published and defendant had the opportunity to cross-examine and discredit the witness as to that portion of her statement and never asserted, and was never denied, the right to pursue any other aspect of the statement. State v. Gell, 351 N.C. 192, 524 S.E.2d 332 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 878, 121 S. Ct. 163, 148 L. Ed. 2d 110 (2000).

ARTICLE 2.

Judicial Notice.

Rule 201. Judicial notice of adjudicative facts.

(a) Scope of rule. — This rule governs only judicial notice of adjudicative facts.

(b) Kinds of facts. — A judicially noticed fact must be one not subject to reasonable dispute in that it is either (1) generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court or (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned.

(c) When discretionary. — A court may take judicial notice, whether requested or not.

(d) When mandatory. — A court shall take judicial notice if requested by a party and supplied with the necessary information.

(e) Opportunity to be heard. — In a trial court, a party is entitled upon timely request to an opportunity to be heard as to the propriety of taking judicial notice and the tenor of the matter noticed. In the absence of prior notification, the request may be made after judicial notice has been taken.

(f) Time of taking notice. — Judicial notice may be taken at any stage of the proceeding.

(g) Instructing jury. — In a civil action or proceeding, the court shall instruct the jury to accept as conclusive any fact judicially noticed. In a criminal case, the court shall instruct the jury that it may, but is not required to, accept as conclusive any fact judicially noticed. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 201, except subdivision (e) which is discussed below. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"This is the only evidence rule on the subject of judicial notice. It deals only with judicial notice of 'adjudicative' facts. No rule deals with judicial notice of 'legislative' facts. ***

The omission of any treatment of legislative facts results from fundamental differences between adjudicative facts and legislative facts. Adjudicative facts are simply the facts of the particular case. Legislative facts, on the other hand, are those which have relevance to legal reasoning and the lawmaking process, whether in the formulation of a legal principle or ruling by a judge or court or in the enactment of a legislative body. ***

What, then, are 'adjudicative' facts? Davis refers to them as those 'which relate to the parties,' or more fully:

'When a court or an agency finds facts concerning the immediate parties — who did what, where, when, how, and with what motive or intent — the court or agency is performing an adjudicative function, and the facts are conveniently called adjudicative facts. . . .

'Stated in other terms, the adjudicative facts are those to which the law is applied in the process of adjudication. They are the facts that normally go to the jury in a jury case. They relate to the parties, their activities, their properties, their businesses.' 2 Administrative Law Treatise 353."

Current North Carolina law does not deal with procedure for taking judicial notice of facts. Judicial notice of domestic and foreign law is dealt with in G.S. Chapter 8, Article 1, which remains in force.

Subdivision (b) concerns the kinds of facts that may be judicially noticed. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"With respect to judicial notice of adjudicative facts, the tradition has been one of caution in requiring that the matter be beyond reasonable controversy. This tradition of circumspection appears to be soundly based, and no reason to depart from it is apparent."

Subdivision (b) is consistent with current North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 11 (1982).

Subdivisions (c) and (d) govern when judicial notice is discretionary and when it is mandatory. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Under subdivision (c) the judge has a discretionary authority to take judicial notice, regardless of whether he is so requested by a party. The taking of judicial notice is mandatory, under subdivision (d), only when a party requests it and the necessary information is supplied. This scheme is believed to reflect existing practice. It is simple and workable. It avoids troublesome distinctions in the many situations in which the process of taking judicial notice is not recognized as such."

Subdivisions (c) and (d) are in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 11 (1982).

Subdivision (e) entitles a party, upon timely request, to an opportunity to be heard as to the propriety of taking judicial notice. It differs from the federal rule by its limitation to a trial court. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Basic considerations of procedural fairness demand an opportunity to be heard on the propriety of taking judicial notice and the tenor of the matter noticed. The rule requires the granting of that opportunity upon request. No formal scheme of giving notice is provided. An adversely affected party may learn in advance that judicial notice is in contemplation, either by virtue of being served with a copy of a request by another party under subdivision (d) that judicial notice be taken, or through an advance indication by the judge. Or he may have no advance notice at all. The likelihood of the latter is enhanced by the frequent failure to recognize judicial notice as such. And in the absence of advance notice, a request made after the fact could not in fairness be considered untimely."

Subdivision (e) departs from current North Carolina practice which generally does not require an opportunity to be heard prior to the court taking judicial notice on its own initiative. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 11 (1982).

With respect to notice at administrative hearings, see G.S. 150A-30 [150B-30].

Subdivision (f) is in accord with North Carolina practice in allowing judicial notice to be taken at any stage of the proceedings, whether in the trial court or on appeal.

Subdivision (g) concerns instructing the jury with respect to judicially noticed facts. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Within its relatively narrow area of adjudicative facts, the rule contemplates there is to be no evidence before the jury in disproof. The judge instructs the jury to take judicially noticed facts as established. This position is justified by the undesirable effects of the opposite rule in limiting the rebutting party, though not his opponent, to admissible evidence, in defeating the reasons for judicial notice, and in affecting the substantive law to an extent and in ways largely unforeseeable. Ample protection and flexibility are afforded by the broad provision for opportunity to be heard on request, set forth in subdivision (e)."

Subdivision (g) is in accord with North Carolina practice in civil cases by not allowing evidence to be introduced to dispute a fact that has been judicially noticed. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 11, at 34 (1982).

However, subdivision (g) differs from North Carolina practice by permitting evidence to be introduced in a criminal trial to rebut a fact that has been judicially noticed. In adopting subdivision (g), Congress was of the view that a mandatory instruction to a jury in a criminal case to accept as conclusive any fact judicially noticed is contrary to the spirit of the right to a jury trial.

CASE NOTES

Prior Proceedings. — A court may take judicial notice of its own prior proceedings, and if requested to take notice of its prior proceedings it must do so. In that case, the court simply instructs a civil jury to accept the fact(s) noticed. Georgia-Pacific Corp. v. Bondurant, 81 N.C. App. 362, 344 S.E.2d 302 (1986).

Notice of Consent Order Held Improper. — Consent order was not entered into to dispose of any facts critical to disposition of the issues which were to be tried; therefore, the trial judge erred in taking judicial notice of the order. American Aluminum Prods., Inc. v. Pollard, 97 N.C. App. 541, 389 S.E.2d 589 (1990).

Legal Conclusions, Municipal Ordinances, or Police Department Regulations. — North Carolina courts may not take judicial notice of legal conclusions, municipal ordinances, or police department regulations. Glenn-Robinson v. Acker, 140 N.C. App. 606, 538 S.E.2d 601 (2000).

Experience of Foreign Attorneys. — A judge properly took judicial notice of (1) the number of highly skilled plaintiffs' attorneys engaged in the trial of medical negligence actions in the state, and (2) the number of times plaintiff/law firm participated in litigation in North Carolina by relying on information supplied by the North Carolina State Bar Association. Smith v. Beaufort County Hosp. Ass'n, 141 N.C. App. 203, 540 S.E.2d 775 (2000), cert denied, 353 N.C. 381, 547 S.E.2d 435 (2001), aff'd, — N.C. —, 552 S.E.2d 139 (2001).

Sunset and Moon Phase. — The trial court was not required to take judicial notice of the time of the sunset and the phase of the moon as reported in a local newspaper. State v. Canady, 110 N.C. App. 763, 431 S.E.2d 500 (1993).

Distances Between Cities. — Where an attorney sought to have a deposition admitted pursuant to Rule 32(a)(4) of the Rules of Civil Procedure by asserting that the witness was more than 100 miles from the place of trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by declining to take judicial notice of the distance between two cities. Vandervoort v. McKenzie, 117 N.C. App. 152, 450 S.E.2d 491 (1994).

Testimony Needed Regarding Safety of Motel. — In a child custody proceeding, the trial court should not have taken judicial notice sua sponte of criminal activity around the motel where the father lived where the prevalence of crime in the area was disputed; the court should have had a member of the community testify on the matter. Hinkle v. Hartsell, 131 N.C. App. 833, 509 S.E.2d 455 (1998).

Judicial Notice Did Not Constitute Improper Consolidation. — It was proper for trial court to consider discovery orders from a caveat proceeding in its consideration of sanctions for failure to comply in a discovery proceeding, where both proceedings involved plaintiff and defendant, plaintiff referred to the caveat action in his first set of interrogatories to defendant, and discovery of evidence with respect to the possession and content of the disputed sexually explicit videotapes was relevant to both proceedings. Sugg v. Field, 139 N.C. App. 160, 532 S.E.2d 843 (2000).

Judicial Notice of Racial Slurs. — No fact is more generally known than that a white man who calls a black man a "nigger" within his hearing will hurt and anger the black man and often provoke him to confront the white man and retaliate; thus, the trial court was free to judicially note this fact. In re Spivey, 345 N.C. 404, 480 S.E.2d 693 (1997).

Trend in Electric Utility Industry. — The Utilities Commission did not act arbitrarily in taking judicial notice of the current restructuring trend in the electric utility industry, where the reality of this trend was not subject to reasonable dispute because it was generally known within the industry. State ex rel. Utils. Comm'n v. Carolina Indus. Group For Fair Util. Rates, 130 N.C. App. 636, 503 S.E.2d 697 (1998), cert. denied, 349 N.C. 377 (1998).

ARTICLE 3.

Presumptions in Civil Actions and Proceedings.

Rule 301. Presumptions in general in civil actions and proceedings.

In all civil actions and proceedings when not otherwise provided for by statute, by judicial decision, or by these rules, a presumption imposes on the party against whom it is directed the burden of going forward with evidence to rebut or meet the presumption, but does not shift to such party the burden of proof in the sense of the risk of nonpersuasion, which remains throughout the trial upon the party on whom it was originally cast. The burden of going forward is satisfied by the introduction of evidence sufficient to permit reasonable minds to conclude that the presumed fact does not exist. If the party against whom a presumption operates fails to meet the burden of producing evidence, the presumed fact shall be deemed proved, and the court shall instruct the jury accordingly. When the burden of producing evidence to meet a presumption is satisfied, the court must instruct the jury that it may, but is not required to, infer the existence of the presumed fact from the proved fact. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

The first sentence of this rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 301, except that the phrase "by statute, by judicial decision" is used in lieu of the phrase "by Act of Congress." The last three sentences of the rule, which were modeled upon Alaska Rule of Evidence 301 (1979), clarify the effect of the rule.

A presumption is an assumption of fact resulting from a rule of law which requires such fact to be assumed or inferred from another fact established in the action. The term "basic fact" is used to designate the fact from which the assumption or inference is made and the term "presumed fact" is used to indicate the fact assumed or inferred.

The rule does not apply to "conclusive presumptions", which are merely statements of substantive law and have nothing to do with the law of evidence. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 215, at 170 (1982).

In some situations, when the basic fact has been established, the presumed fact may (but need not) be found to exist. The existence of the presumed fact is for the trier of fact to determine from all the evidence pro and con. The term "permissive presumption" is used to describe this situation. Id. at 171. Or it is said that the basic fact is prima facie evidence of the fact to be inferred. Rule 301 does not apply in situations where a statute or judicial decision creates a "permissive presumption" or merely provides that one fact shall be "prima facie" evidence of another.

The term "mandatory presumption" is used when the presumed fact must be found when the basic fact has been established, unless sufficient evidence of the nonexistence of the presumed fact is forthcoming. Id. at 171. Rule 301 is intended to govern mandatory presumptions.

Care should be taken to determine whether the presumption in question is within the scope of this rule since the term presumption is often misused. The first sentence of the rule makes it clear that the General Assembly and the courts retain power to create presumptions having an effect different from that provided for in this rule. Nonetheless, a presumption created by a prior statute or judicial decision should be construed to come within the scope of this rule unless it is clear that the presumption was not intended to be a "mandatory presumption".

Under Rule 301, the presumption satisfies the burden of producing evidence of the presumed fact. Evidence sufficient to prove the basic fact is sufficient proof of the presumed fact to survive a directed verdict at the end of the proponent's case-in-chief. This is in accord with North Carolina practice.

The general rule in North Carolina is in accord with Rule 301 in that a presumption does not shift the burden of proof. Id. § 218, at 179. However, with respect to some presumptions in North Carolina, the opponent has the burden of persuading the jury, by a preponderance of the evidence or otherwise, that the presumed fact does not exist. Id. If by statute or judicial decision a particular presumption shifts the burden of proof, Rule 301 does not apply.

Proof of the basic fact not only discharges the proponent's burden of producing evidence of the presumed fact but also places upon the opponent the burden of producing evidence that the presumed fact does not exist. If the opponent does not introduce any evidence, or the evidence is not sufficient to permit reasonable minds to conclude that the presumed fact does not exist, the proponent is entitled to a peremptory instruction that the presumed fact shall be deemed proved. This is in accord with North Carolina practice. Id. § 222, at 189.

If the opponent introduces evidence sufficient to permit reasonable minds to conclude that the presumed fact does not exist, no peremptory instruction should be given. Rather, the court must instruct the jury that it may, but is not required to, infer the existence of the presumed fact from proof of the basic fact.

Of course, the opponent may avoid the effect of a presumption by proving that the basic fact does not exist.

CASE NOTES

Total Charges Must Be Reasonable. — When plaintiff proffers the evidence required by § 8-58.1, the fact-finder must find that the total amount of the alleged medical charges is reasonable, unless defendant carries its burden of going forward by rebutting the presumed fact of reasonableness. Jacobsen v. McMillan, 124 N.C. App. 128, 476 S.E.2d 368 (1996).

Failure to Rebut Statutory Presumption Resulted in Summary Judgment. — Summary judgment for the defendant on the issue of slander per se was appropriate where the plaintiff's description of retaliatory motives for defendant's report failed to rebut the statutory presumption created in favor of the defendant by the child abuse reporting provisions of this section and § 7B-309 which together provide immunity not merely conditional upon proof of good faith, but a "good faith" immunity which endows the reporter with the mandatory presumption that he or she acted in good faith. Dobson v. Harris, 352 N.C. 77, 530 S.E.2d 829 (2000).

Rule 302. Applicability of federal law in civil actions and proceedings.

In civil actions and proceedings, the effect of a presumption respecting a fact which is an element of a claim or defense as to which federal law supplies the rule of decision is determined in accordance with federal law. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule differs from Fed. R. Evid. 302 in that "federal law" has been substituted for "state law." The Comment to Rule 302 of the Uniform Rules of Evidence (1974) explains the purpose of the change:

"Parallel jurisdiction in state and federal courts exists in many instances. The rule prescribes that when a federally created right is litigated in a state court, any prescribed federal presumption shall be applied."

ARTICLE 4.

Relevancy and Its Limits.

Rule 401. Definition of "relevant evidence."

"Relevant evidence" means evidence having any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 401. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Problems of relevancy call for an answer to the question whether an item of evidence, when tested by the processes of legal reasoning, possesses sufficient probative value to justify receiving it in evidence. Thus, assessment of the probative value of evidence that a person purchased a revolver shortly prior to a fatal shooting with which he is charged is a matter of analysis and reasoning.

The variety of relevancy problems is coextensive with the ingenuity of counsel in using circumstantial evidence as a means of proof. An enormous number of cases fall in no set pattern, and this rule is designed as a guide for handling them. On the other hand, some situations recur with sufficient frequency to create patterns susceptible of treatment by specific rules. Rule 404 and those following it are of that variety; they also serve as illustrations of the application of the present rule as limited by the exclusionary principles of Rule 403.

Passing mention should be made of so-called 'conditional' relevancy. Morgan, Basic Problems of Evidence 45-46 (1962). In this situation, probative value depends not only upon satisfying the basic requirement of relevancy as described above but also upon the existence of some matter of fact. For example, if evidence of a spoken statement is relied upon to prove notice, probative value is lacking unless the person sought to be charged heard the statement. The problem is one of fact, and the only rules needed are for the purpose of determining the respective functions of judge and jury. See Rules 104(b) and 901. The discussion which follows in the present note is concerned with relevancy generally, not with any particular problem of conditional relevancy.

Relevancy is not an inherent characteristic of any item of evidence but exists only as a relation between an item of evidence and a matter properly provable in the case. Does the item of evidence tend to prove the matter sought to be proved? Whether the relationship exists depends upon principles evolved by experience or science, applies logically to the situation at hand. James, Relevancy, Probability and the Law, 29 Calif.L.Rev. 689, 696, n. 15 (1941), in Selected Writings on Evidence and Trial 610, 615, n. 15 (Fryer ed. 1957). The rule summarizes this relationship as a 'tendency to make the existence' of the fact to be proved 'more probable or less probable.' Compare Uniform Rule 1(2) which states the crux of relevancy as 'a tendency in reason,' thus perhaps emphasizing unduly the logical process and ignoring the need to draw upon experience or science to validate the general principle upon which relevancy in a particular situation depends.

The standard of probability under the rule is 'more ... probable than it would be without the evidence.' Any more stringent requirement is unworkable and unrealistic. As McCormick § 152, p. 317, says, 'A brick is not a wall,' or, as Falknor, Extrinsic Policies Affecting Admissibility, 10 Rutgers L. Rev. 574, 576 (1956), quotes Professor McBaine, '... [I]t is not to be supposed that every witness can make a home run.' Dealing with probability in the language of the rule has the added virtue of avoiding confusion between questions of admissibility and questions of the sufficiency of the evidence.

The rule uses the phrase 'fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action' to describe the kind of fact to which proof may properly be directed. The language is that of California Evidence Code § 210; it has the advantage of avoiding the loosely used and ambiguous word 'material'.  The fact to be proved may be ultimate, intermediate, or evidentiary; it matters not, so long as it is of consequence in the determination of the action. Cf. Uniform Rule 1(2) which requires that the evidence relate to a 'material' fact.

The fact to which the evidence is directed need not be in dispute. While situations will arise which call for the exclusion of evidence offered to prove a point conceded by the opponent, the ruling should be made on the basis of such considerations as waste of time and undue prejudice (see Rule 403), rather than under any general requirement that evidence is admissible only if directed to matters in dispute. Evidence which is essentially background in nature can scarcely be said to involve disputed matter, yet it is universally offered and admitted as an aid to understanding. Charts, photographs, views of real estate, murder weapons, and many other items of evidence fall in this category. A rule limiting admissibility to evidence directed to a controversial point would invite the exclusion of this helpful evidence, or at least the raising of endless questions over its admission."

While North Carolina courts have used slightly different definitions of relevant evidence, the rule is unlikely to alter significantly North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 78 (1982). Although the rule speaks in terms of relevancy, the definition includes what is often referred to in our courts as materiality. Id. § 77.

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Relevant Evidence.
III. Irrelevant Evidence.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

This rule sets a standard to which trial judges must adhere in determining whether proffered evidence is relevant; at the same time, this standard gives the judge great freedom to admit evidence because the rule makes evidence relevant if it has any logical tendency to prove any fact that is of consequence. State v. Wallace, 104 N.C. App. 498, 410 S.E.2d 226 (1991), cert. denied, 331 N.C. 290, 416 S.E.2d 398, 506 U.S. 915, 113 S. Ct. 321, 121 L. Ed. 2d 241 (1992).

Rulings on Relevance Given Great Deference. — Even though a trial court's rulings on relevancy technically are not discretionary and therefore are not reviewed under the abuse of discretion standard applicable to Rule 403, such rulings are given great deference on appeal. State v. Wallace, 104 N.C. App. 498, 410 S.E.2d 226 (1991), cert. denied, 331 N.C. 290, 416 S.E.2d 398, 506 U.S. 915, 113 S. Ct. 321, 121 L. Ed. 2d 241 (1992).

Compliance with the facial requirements of Rule 901(a), regarding authentication and identification, does not mean (i) that an exhibit automatically qualifies as relevant under Rule 401 or (ii) if relevant, that it is admissible under Rule 802, the hearsay rule. State v. Patterson, 103 N.C. App. 195, 405 S.E.2d 200, aff'd, 332 N.C. 409, 420 S.E.2d 98 (1992).

Evidence is relevant if it has any logical tendency, however slight, to prove a fact in issue in the case. State v. Sloan, 316 N.C. 714, 343 S.E.2d 527 (1986); State v. Wingard, 317 N.C. 590, 346 S.E.2d 638 (1986); State v. Whiteside, 325 N.C. 389, 383 S.E.2d 911 (1989); State v. Murillo, 349 N.C. 573, 509 S.E.2d 752 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 103, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

Evidence is relevant if it can assist the jury in understanding the evidence. State v. Huang, 99 N.C. App. 658, 394 S.E.2d 279 (1990), vacated in part, 107 N.C. App. 710, 421 S.E.2d 812 (1992).

Every circumstance that is calculated to throw any light upon the supposed crime is admissible; the weight of such evidence is for the jury. State v. Whiteside, 325 N.C. 389, 383 S.E.2d 911 (1989).

The court has interpreted this rule broadly and has explained on a number of occasions that in a criminal case every circumstance calculated to throw any light upon the supposed crime is admissible and permissible. State v. Collins, 335 N.C. 729, 440 S.E.2d 559 (1994).

Even though evidence may tend to show other crimes, wrongs or acts by the defendant, and his propensity to commit them, it is admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) so long as it is also relevant for some purpose other than to show that defendant has the propensity for the type of conduct for which he is being tried. State v. Bagley, 321 N.C. 201, 362 S.E.2d 244 (1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 1036, 108 S. Ct. 1598, 99 L. Ed. 2d 312 (1988).

An individual piece of evidence need not conclusively establish a fact to be of some probative value. It need only support a logical inference of the fact's existence. State v. Payne, 328 N.C. 377, 402 S.E.2d 582 (1991).

When Relevant Hearsay Is Admissible. — Hearsay evidence, even if relevant, is inadmissible unless it is covered by statutory exception, or unless its exclusion deprives a defendant of a trial in accord with fundamental standards of due process. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of State v. Bailey, 89 N.C. App. 212, 365 S.E.2d 651 (1988).

When Evidence Is Irrelevant. — If proffered evidence has no tendency to prove a fact in issue in the case, the evidence is irrelevant and must be excluded. State v. Coen, 78 N.C. App. 778, 338 S.E.2d 784 (1986).

Admission of irrelevant evidence is generally considered harmless error. State v. Melvin, 86 N.C. App. 291, 357 S.E.2d 379 (1987).

Admission of irrelevant evidence will be treated as harmless unless the defendant shows that he was so prejudiced by the erroneous admission that a different result would have ensued if the evidence had been excluded. State v. Harper, 96 N.C. App. 36, 384 S.E.2d 297 (1989).

Defendant has the burden of showing that he was prejudiced by the admission of evidence. In order to show prejudice, defendant must meet the statutory requirements of § 15A-1443(a). State v. Melvin, 86 N.C. App. 291, 357 S.E.2d 379 (1987).

When relevant evidence not involving a right arising under the Constitution of the United States is erroneously excluded, a defendant has the burden of showing that the error was prejudicial. This burden may be met by showing that there is a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached had the error not been committed. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

Admission of Evidence Held Prejudicial Error. — Where the challenged evidence that defendant was in custody for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill his girlfriend was especially prejudicial because of its similarity to the charge at issue, which was murder and assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, and the similarity of the charges was compounded by the additional "verification" evidence of a detective, such admissions constituted prejudicial error and defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Cashwell, 322 N.C. 574, 369 S.E.2d 566 (1988).

Cumulative Effect of Admitted Evidence Held Prejudicial. — Where, in a murder prosecution, the State spent a great deal of time focusing on the details of defendant's alleged prior offenses of selling marijuana to high school students, citation for possession of marijuana, and breaking and entering, the cumulative effect of the admission of the evidence was prejudicial error entitling the defendant to a new trial. State v. Emery, 91 N.C. App. 24, 370 S.E.2d 456, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 627, 374 S.E.2d 594 (1988).

Admission of Evidence Held Not Prejudicial Error. — In prosecution for rape, first-degree kidnapping, sexual offense, and common law robbery, the admission of the officer's testimony that the defendant had a rifle in his car when he was arrested, if error, was not prejudicial, where there was no intimation by the officer that the defendant attempted to use the rifle when he was arrested, that it was used in the commission of any crime or that possession of the rifle was otherwise unlawful. State v. Herring, 322 N.C. 733, 370 S.E.2d 363 (1988).

Evidence of Defendant's Behavior. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of the defendant's anti-social and disruptive behavior while in custody awaiting trial for the purpose of impeaching the defendant's credibility. State v. Myers, 123 N.C. App. 189, 472 S.E.2d 598 (1996).

II. RELEVANT EVIDENCE.

Background Evidence. — Evidence which is essentially background in nature is universally offered and admitted as an aid to understanding. Santora, McKay & Ranieri v. Franklin, 79 N.C. App. 585, 339 S.E.2d 799 (1986).

Amount of Damages in Personal Injury Action. — Where the determination to be made in a personal injuries action was the amount of damages, any fact bearing on the degree or severity of injury sustained by plaintiff was properly admitted. Ferrell v. Frye, 108 N.C. App. 521, 424 S.E.2d 197 (1993).

Evidence concerning the speed the defendant's vehicle was traveling when it struck the rear of the plaintiffs' vehicle was relevant to the extent of the plaintiffs' injuries, and thus was relevant to the issue of damages. Albrecht v. Dorsett, 131 N.C. App. 502, 508 S.E.2d 319 (1998).

Evidence that another person committed the crime for which defendant is charged generally is relevant and admissible, as long as it does more than create an inference or conjecture in this regard; under this rule, such evidence must tend both to implicate another and be inconsistent with the guilt of the defendant. State v. Cotton, 318 N.C. 663, 351 S.E.2d 277 (1987), overruling prior decisions to the extent that they tend to indicate that a defendant may not present evidence to show that the crime charged was committed by another unless the crime was one that only could have been committed by one person acting alone. See also, State v. Brewer, 325 N.C. 550, 386 S.E.2d 569 (1989), cert. denied, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3212, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1211 (1976).

Excluded evidence which showed that within a few hours during the same night three homes in close proximity were broken into, the female occupants were sexually assaulted, and the modus operandi in each case was very similar, which tended to show that the same person committed all of the similar crimes in the neighborhood in question on that night and that the person was someone other than the defendant, was both relevant and admissible under this rule, and the trial court erred in ruling to the contrary. State v. Cotton, 318 N.C. 663, 351 S.E.2d 277 (1987).

The defendant was entitled to a new trial because a different result might have been reached had the trial court not excluded relevant and admissible evidence which cast doubt upon the State's evidence that defendant was the perpetrator of the murder of an elderly victim and which further implicated another person as that perpetrator beyond conjecture or mere implication. State v. Israel, 353 N.C. 211, 539 S.E.2d 633 (2000).

Witness' testimony in which he stated he was "pretty sure" that defendant had admitted to killing victim was relevant to the issue of the identification of defendant and not unfairly prejudicial. State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct. 951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

Videotaped interview, initiated by defendant herself and containing the story as told to her family, police, doctors and the news reporter, was relevant to show how she lied consistently concerning the cause of the injuries leading to her child's death and, even if wrongly admitted into evidence, was not prejudicial. State v. Burgess, 134 N.C. App. 632, 518 S.E.2d 209 (1999).

Although defendant pled guilty, videotape showing murder was admissible as it showed that the murder was committed for pecuniary gain and that the murder was part of a course of conduct which included a crime of violence against another person. State v. Jones, 336 N.C. 229, 443 S.E.2d 48, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1003, 115 S. Ct. 518, 130 L. Ed 2d 423 (1994), 339 N.C. 619, 454 S.E.2d 263 (1995).

The witness's plea agreement with the State, in which she agreed to testify against the defendant, was relevant to her credibility and therefore properly admitted. State v. McCord, 140 N.C. App. 634, 538 S.E.2d 633 (2000), review denied, 353 N.C. 392 (2001).

Evidence to Indicate Defendant Was Racist. — In trial for murder, evidence which indicated that defendant was a racist was relevant where no evidence other than race as to why victim was singled out for abuse appeared from the record. State v. Wynne, 329 N.C. 507, 406 S.E.2d 812 (1991).

Testimony Regarding Victim's Behavior. — Testimony of a lay witness as to a child sexual abuse victim's behavior before and after the alleged sexual abuse was relevant as to whether the abuse occurred. State v. Stancil, — N.C. App. —, 552 S.E.2d 212, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 860 (2001).

Testimony Regarding Mental State. — Where doctor was allowed to testify about defendant's mental state at the time of the murders and gave his opinion that defendant did not form the specific intent to kill, but was not allowed to give his opinion that the defendant "snapped", defendant received a fair trial, free of prejudicial error. State v. Burgess, 345 N.C. 372, 480 S.E.2d 638 (1997).

Expert Testimony Regarding Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. — If believed, expert testimony regarding post traumatic stress disorder could be helpful to jury in understanding behavioral patterns of sexual assault victims. North Carolina Court of Appeals and courts of other jurisdictions have recognized reliability of post traumatic stress disorder testimony in sexual assault cases. State v. Huang, 99 N.C. App. 658, 394 S.E.2d 279 (1990), vacated in part, 107 N.C. App. 710, 421 S.E.2d 812 (1992).

Evidence Pertaining to Parental Relations of Decedent in Wrongful Death Action. — Evidence pertaining to disease of plaintiff's decedent and the effect it had on his relationship with his parents had a tendency to prove the extent of damages, which were in controversy in wrongful death action. The evidence was therefore relevant and should have been admitted on that ground. Hales v. Thompson, 111 N.C. App. 350, 432 S.E.2d 388 (1993).

Evidence of Sexual Activity in Paternity Case. — Character evidence is generally not admitted in civil cases unless it is character which is in issue because this evidence is often more prejudicial than probative. Where, however, evidence of sexual activity and promiscuity goes to a central element of the case, i.e., the opportunity to impregnate plaintiff, whether or not other men had the opportunity to father child born out of wedlock is of ultimate relevance to the issue of paternity. In addition, this nongenetic outside information, as a factor in the probability of paternity calculation, must be received in order for the jury to weigh any expert's assumptions underlying the calculation of numerical probability of paternity. State ex rel. Williams v. Coppedge, 105 N.C. App. 470, 414 S.E.2d 81, rev'd on other grounds, 332 N.C. 654, 422 S.E.2d 691 (1992).

Evidence from a Void Statutory Rape Charge. — The court rejected the defendant's claim that the admission of evidence on a void statutory rape charge was irrelevant and unfairly prejudicial and found that the evidence of defendant's sexual activity with the fourteen-year-old was relevant to establish intent, motive, knowledge, as well as defendant's scheme of involving himself with vulnerable, disturbed teenage girls at the home. State v. Crockett, 138 N.C. App. 109, 530 S.E.2d 359 (2000).

Evidence of Previous Traffic Violations. — The defendant's previous traffic violations were relevant and admissible in his second-degree murder prosecution arising from a traffic accident to show malice based on defendant's "depraved heart" on the night that he struck the two victims' vehicle while intoxicated and while rounding a sharp curve at a speed at least 40 mph over the speed limit. State v. Rich, 132 N.C. App. 440, 512 S.E.2d 441 (1999), aff'd, 351 N.C. 386, 527 S.E.2d 299 (2000).

Medical Opinion Relevant. — Court did not err in admitting doctor's opinion that victims wound was consistent with the victim leaning over a chair when he was shot. State v. Cummings, 346 N.C. 291, 488 S.E.2d 550 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1092, 118 S. Ct. 886, 139 L. Ed. 2d 873 (1998).

Medical Records Relevant. — The court properly allowed evidence of the plaintiff's medical records indicating the possibility of a history of alcohol abuse to explain the reason defendants considered the possibility that alcohol withdrawal was a potential cause of the plaintiff's post-operative confusion or hallucinations. Marley v. Graper, 135 N.C. App. 423, 521 S.E.2d 129 (1999).

Dreams and Diary Relevant. — Testimony from witness about her dreams and diary entry when first incarcerated was relevant under this rule and admissible under Rule 403; however, references to later bad dreams were properly excluded. State v. Jones, 347 N.C. 193, 491 S.E.2d 641 (1997).

Victim's Character. — Evidence that defendant had murdered a blood relative who had opened her home to him, had been especially caring, and had offered him a stable environment was admissible as it tended to support the aggravating circumstance that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State v. Davis, 353 N.C. 1, 539 S.E.2d 243 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 95, 151 L. Ed. 2d 55 (2001).

Evidence of Decedent's Drinking Habits Held Relevant. — Although evidence of decedent's drinking habits did not by itself show that decedent knew defendant was under the influence, all of the evidence of decedent's drinking habits, along with the evidence of defendant's drinking on the day of the accident, established that decedent's prior use of alcohol and his knowledge of its effect was relevant on the issue of contributory negligence for riding with intoxicated driver. McFarland v. Cromer, 117 N.C. App. 678, 453 S.E.2d 527 (1995), cert.

Evidence of the Method Used by the Defendant in Loading Merchandise After the Accident. — Since plaintiff allegedly had been injured by merchandise falling from the defendant's trailer, defendant's employee was properly permitted to testify that he had observed the method by which defendant loaded and packed its trailers and that he had observed merchandise fall out of the trailers when the rear doors were opened. The observations were not too remote in time (within 18 months) and allowed a reasonable inference that the same methods had been used to load the trailer involved in plaintiff's injury. Kilgo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 138 N.C. App. 644, 531 S.E.2d 883 (2000).

Surveillance Video of Personal Injury Plaintiffs Admissible. — A surveillance videotape was relevant and admissible in a personal injury trial on damages, where the occupants of a van were shown engaging in various physical activities, and this evidence was relevant to whether and to what extent the occupants were disabled by the injuries they sustained in a rear end collision. Albrecht v. Dorsett, 131 N.C. App. 502, 508 S.E.2d 319 (1998).

A jury view of the police vehicle that defendant shot during incident was well within the court's discretion and the evidence was relevant as defendant's intent when he fired shots into the vehicle was at issue. State v. Tucker, 347 N.C. 235, 490 S.E.2d 559 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1061, 118 S. Ct. 1389, 140 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1998).

Weapons Evidence Admissible. — The drawing of and testimony about a knife that the defendant habitually carried was admissible where the witnesses' descriptions of the approximate size of defendant's pocketknife overlapped with the medical examiner's testimony regarding the approximate depth and width of the victim's wounds; any variance in size between the knife described by the witnesses and the medical examiner's description of the victim's wounds merely affected the weight or probative value of the evidence, not its admissibility. State v. Grooms, 353 N.C. 50, 540 S.E.2d 713 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Three loose nine-millimeter cartridges turned over to investigators by the manager of the trailer park where defendant lived and where bodies were discovered were properly included as relevant evidence and an adequate foundation was laid for their inclusion. State v. Lytch, 142 N.C. App. 576, 544 S.E.2d 570 (2001).

Demonstration of Effects of Pepper Spray. — Trial court properly allowed the State, during its presentation of rebuttal evidence, to demonstrate the effects of pepper spray in an experiment under circumstances dissimilar to those that actually occurred and with the use of law enforcement officers trained in the use of pepper spray; defendant was given, but chose not to take, the opportunity to present his own demonstration on lay witnesses. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Testimony of Coast Guard officer as to ocean currents was relevant to show a connection between defendant and the crime where an inference could be drawn therefrom that a body had drifted from an area with which defendant was familiar. State v. Dial, 122 N.C. App. 298, 470 S.E.2d 84 (1996).

Cross-Examination Held Proper. — Where state did not cross-examine defendant in murder case about an unrelated rape accusation to show defendant was unworthy of belief because of this alleged bad act, but for purpose of establishing defendant's motive for crime for which he was on trial, cross-examination was proper. State v. Meekins, 326 N.C. 689, 392 S.E.2d 346 (1990).

Photographs of Crime Scene and Victim's Clothes. — Photographs of the crime scene and victim's bloody clothes were admissible since they were only used so that the witnesses could explain and illustrate their testimony and the trial court instructed the jury as to their limited purpose; further, the photographs were not unnecessarily gory. State v. Lloyd, 354 N.C. 76, 552 S.E.2d 596 (2001).

Relevancy Not Renewable Under Abuse of Discretion Standard. — A trial court's ruling on whether evidence is relevant is technically not discretionary and therefore is not reviewed under the abuse of discretion standard. Sherrod v. Nash Gen. Hosp., 126 N.C. App. 755, 487 S.E.2d 151 (1997), rev'd on other grounds, 348 N.C. 526, 500 S.E.2d 708 (1998).

Evidence Improperly Excluded. — In a murder trial, where guilt was based on circumstantial evidence, the trial court committed reversible error in refusing to admit into evidence defendant's proposed exhibit, a drawing found by law enforcement officers among the victim's personal effects, which included a rough map of the area surrounding defendant's North Carolina home and numerous written notations indicating a possible larceny scheme. The exhibit was clearly relevant to a crucial issue in the case, namely, whether this defendant, and not some other person, was in fact the perpetrator of the crime, and it therefore should have been admitted into evidence at trial. State v. McElrath, 322 N.C. 1, 366 S.E.2d 442 (1988).

Evidence Properly Excluded. — Evidence of substantial amounts of drugs belonging to others and seized at the trailer where the defendant lived was irrelevant, prejudicial and inadmissible to show his knowledge that the substance in a van he was driving was cocaine where the defendant was not charged with any offense in connection with the drugs seized. State v. Moctezuma, 141 N.C. App. 90, 539 S.E.2d 52 (2000).

In prosecution of defendant for committing sexual offenses upon two of her young stepsons, trial court committed reversible error in excluding evidence that defendant, her husband and the oldest stepson consulted a lawyer for the purpose of bringing an action for custody of the boys against their natural mother shortly before natural mother accused defendant of sexual offenses against them, as this evidence was relevant in tending to establish why natural mother might have suborned her sons' testimony. State v. Helms, 322 N.C. 315, 367 S.E.2d 644 (1988).

Where defendant was accused of sexually abusing his 14-year-old adopted daughter, evidence regarding a prior accusation of sexual misconduct made by the prosecutrix directed at her uncle was relevant and defendant should not have been prevented from offering such proof at his trial. State v. Maxwell, 96 N.C. App. 19, 384 S.E.2d 553, cert. denied, 326 N.C. 53, 389 S.E.2d 83 (1989).

Evidence Held Relevant. — In a murder trial involving a 60 year old victim who was beaten and kicked about the head in June, 1983 and died in December, 1983 of complications resulting from injury to the brain received in the incident, admission of evidence regarding victim's physical appearance at the scene and in the hospital was relevant under this rule on the issue of excessive force, was not prejudicial under § 8C-1, Rule 403, and was not inflammatory under the old rules. State v. Moxley, 78 N.C. App. 551, 338 S.E.2d 122 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 384, 342 S.E.2d 904 (1986).

Challenged testimony which addressed the substance of a New York lawsuit from which the action at issue, an action for attorneys' fees, arose provided needed background information pertaining to the dispute at issue, was not prejudicial, and was properly admitted. Santora, McKay & Ranieri v. Franklin, 79 N.C. App. 585, 339 S.E.2d 799 (1986).

Although motive was not an element of any of the crimes for which the defendant was convicted (murder, arson, and assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury), his motives and state of mind at the time of the fire certainly were facts "of consequence to the determination of the action ...", and the trial court did not err by admitting evidence thereof. State v. Riddick, 315 N.C. 749, 340 S.E.2d 55 (1986).

In prosecution for first degree rape and intercourse by a substitute parent, the trial court did not commit prejudicial error in admitting into evidence, over objection, a letter which the defendant wrote to the victim's mother, in which defendant promised not to "bother" victim again, despite defendant's contention that what he had meant was that he would not discipline the victim anymore. State v. Moses, 316 N.C. 356, 341 S.E.2d 551 (1986).

The alcohol level of defendant's blood approximately one hour after the accident is relevant to the issue of defendant's intoxication. State v. Miller, 80 N.C. App. 425, 342 S.E.2d 553, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 711, 347 S.E.2d 448 (1986).

In prosecution for rape and other offenses, where the State produced evidence that one of the defendants had threatened victim with a knife when they abducted her and that one of the three assailants had told her that he would be back for her and that she would be shot if she reported the crimes, trial court did not err in admitting knives and razor found in defendants' car five nights later when defendants came to victim's apartment around 1:00 a.m., beat on the door and attempted to open it, before leaving when a neighbor stepped outside his apartment, as by entering pleas of not guilty and denying that they were the assailants, defendants made identity an issue in the case, and this evidence clearly bore on the issue of identity. State v. Gilliam, 317 N.C. 293, 344 S.E.2d 783 (1986).

Watch and ring taken from victim of rape and kidnapping were "relevant" in defendant's trial for those offenses, because they tended to make the existence of a fact of consequence — defendant's connection to the offenses with which he was charged — more probable than it would be without the evidence, and their admission was not unduly prejudicial. State v. Mercer, 317 N.C. 87, 343 S.E.2d 885 (1986).

State's exhibits, which included $5,900 in United States currency, rolling papers and pipe, electric digital scales, a triple beam balance scale, a water bong, a plastic bag containing white powder, an airline bag in which the white powder was found and a briefcase with documents, with the exception of the briefcase, were relevant to the crime of trafficking in cocaine, in that they intended to show that defendant knowingly possessed cocaine and was trafficking in it, and the briefcase, which was in defendant's possession at the time of arrest, tended to explain or illustrate the circumstances surrounding his arrest. State v. Teasley, 82 N.C. App. 150, 346 S.E.2d 227 (1986), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 318 N.C. 701, 351 S.E.2d 759 (1987).

Because defendant's statement that he had "unfinished business" in the area to take care of upon his release from prison had some probative value on the issue of defendant's intent to kill the victim, the evidence was relevant and properly admitted. State v. Prevette, 317 N.C. 148, 345 S.E.2d 159 (1986).

Evidence merely disclosing subsequent pregnancy of the rape victim was admissible as tending to prove penetration, an essential element of the crime of forcible rape; moreover, victim's simple statement that she had an abortion served the purpose of corroborating both the fact of penetration and the fact of her pregnancy, and the mere fact that an abortion took place was not so inflammatory as to render it inadmissible. State v. Stanton, 319 N.C. 180, 353 S.E.2d 385 (1987).

In a first degree sexual offense case, evidence that defendant attempted a remarkably odd and strikingly similar modus operandi some 10 weeks after his attack on victim was relevant and admissible as tending to prove the defendant's modus operandi, motive, intent, preparation and plan. State v. Bagley, 321 N.C. 201, 362 S.E.2d 244 (1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 1036, 108 S. Ct. 1598, 99 L. Ed. 2d 912 (1988).

Videotape and magazines and detective's testimony concerning them were relevant to corroborate child victim's testimony that defendant had shown him such materials at the time defendant committed the crimes for which he was on trial, and since the exhibits and testimony were relevant to a fact or issue other than the character of the accused, § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) did not require that they be excluded from the evidence at trial. State v. Rael, 321 N.C. 528, 364 S.E.2d 125 (1988).

In prosecution for second-degree murder, evidence concerning defendant's sale of marijuana to the victim was relevant in showing the relationship between the victim and defendant, and given the evidence defendant once questioned the witness about whether the victim was a "nark," the evidence that defendant sold marijuana was admissible since it had some probative value concerning defendant's possible motive in the shooting. However, the testimony that the defendant was in the business of selling marijuana to high school age persons had no tendency to make any fact of consequence more or less probable, nor was the evidence about how defendant procured his automobile and the evidence concerning the details of how the marijuana was packaged and sold relevant to any material fact in issue. Equally irrelevant was evidence concerning the victim's citation for possession of marijuana. State v. Emery, 91 N.C. App. 24, 370 S.E.2d 456, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 627, 374 S.E.2d 594 (1988).

In a rape case hair comparison testimony was clearly relevant on the issue of whether the victim was sexually assaulted even though the evidence of hair comparison analysis was not used to establish the identity of perpetrator, since a hair belonging to someone other than the victim was found in her pubic area tended to show that the person from whom the hair came could have engaged in sexual contact with the victim. State v. McNicholas, 322 N.C. 548, 369 S.E.2d 569 (1988).

Testimony by a rape victim that the defendant was on "house arrest" at the time of the rape was part of the chain of circumstances and relevant to the victim's account of the crime, where the victim further explained that she ran to the corner after the attack because she knew that the defendant could not follow her as he was wearing a control device on his ankle. State v. Monk, 132 N.C. App. 248, 511 S.E.2d 332 (1999).

In a first-degree murder case evidence that insulation particles in defendant's clothing had apparently come from the attic used to gain access to the victim's apartment did not prove that he killed her, but was relevant to the State's case since evidence is relevant if it has any logical tendency, however slight, to prove a fact in issue, and certainly a fact of consequence was the presence of fiber on the defendant's clothing consistent with that found in the victim's apartment. State v. Crandell, 322 N.C. 487, 369 S.E.2d 579 (1988).

Evidence that approximately two weeks before he killed victim the defendant threatened to kill him, or to kill a group of which he was a member, was relevant and admissible as evidence tending to show premeditation and deliberation and to negate self-defense. State v. Groves, 324 N.C. 360, 378 S.E.2d 763 (1989).

Evidence that shortly after his arrest defendant gave as his address 6619 Somersworth Drive, Charlotte, was relevant since evidence tended to show that defendant lived at the house at the time of the search and his arrest. State v. Marshall, 94 N.C. App. 20, 380 S.E.2d 360, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 325 N.C. 275, 384 S.E.2d 526 (1989).

In a negligence action where defendant employee parked garbage truck on the shoulder of the road facing oncoming traffic and van collided with the truck, evidence of the alternative method for collecting customer's garbage prior to the accident as well as testimony revealing defendant employee's rationale for stopping as he did was relevant not only to the issue of whether defendant employer and defendant employee violated § 20-161(a) and (b) but also to the issue of defendant employee's alleged negligent conduct. Smith v. Pass, 95 N.C. App. 243, 382 S.E.2d 781 (1989).

In trial for charges of trafficking in marijuana, trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection to the State's evidence which tended to show defendant's driving activities around the Virginia Beach area, the type of boat which was present several months earlier in a campground in which defendant was living and which was later present outside a beach cottage, and the accessibility of the beach cottage to a nearby inlet; the evidence was relevant to show defendant was arrested while she was on a trip which followed the same general route as trips which she had previously taken, the accessibility of the beach cottage to the inlet partially explained why surveillance of the beach cottage was instituted and the evidence about the boat being at the campground showed that the boat had some connection to the person who paid the cottage's electric bill. State v. Drewyore, 95 N.C. App. 283, 382 S.E.2d 825 (1989).

Evidence of footprints or shoe prints at the scene of the crime corresponding to those of the accused is admissible as relevant circumstantial evidence tending to connect an accused with the crime. State v. Whiteside, 325 N.C. 389, 383 S.E.2d 911 (1989).

In trial for robbery with a dangerous weapon, evidence of victim's scholastic achievements presented by the assistant district attorney during preliminary questioning was relevant; it was offered as a means of introducing the victim to the court and jury and to assist in explaining the victim's background, and considering the fact that defendant later portrayed victim as the aggressor, the challenged testimony was not prejudicial. State v. Summerlin, 98 N.C. App. 167, 390 S.E.2d 358, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 143, 394 S.E.2d 183 (1990).

A witness' statement that his wife heard a rape victim say "Are you going to shoot me, too?" was relevant for the limited purpose of explaining why the witness called the sheriff a second time after he heard a commotion outside his house, and the statement was not inadmissible hearsay. State v. Roper, 328 N.C. 337, 402 S.E.2d 600, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 902, 112 S. Ct. 280, 116 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1991).

Testimony by a captain of a county sheriff's department that, to his knowledge, wife of murder victim was beneficiary of the victim's life insurance policy did not point directly to the guilt of another; at most, it cast suspicion upon another or raised a mere conjectural inference that the crime may have been committed by another. Therefore, it did not meet the relevancy test of this rule. State v. Eason, 328 N.C. 409, 402 S.E.2d 809 (1991).

Testimony that the defendant was calm and was not crying which described her emotional state shortly after her husband was killed, based upon the witnesses' observations of her demeanor at that time, and evidence that the defendant disposed of her husband's personal effects the day after his funeral, amounted to evidence tending to shed light upon the circumstances surrounding husband's killing and, thus, were relevant and admissible. State v. Stager, 329 N.C. 278, 406 S.E.2d 876 (1991).

Photographs which showed numerous gunshot wounds were relevant to show not only the cause of death, but were also relevant as a means of proving the premeditation and deliberation elements of first-degree murder. State v. Brown, 335 N.C. 477, 439 S.E.2d 589 (1994).

Where defense counsel attacked the professionalism of the conduct of the law enforcement officers who investigated the case, the evidence that defendant was read his Miranda rights according to law and that he indicated his understanding of them tended to refute the characterization of the officers' conduct as unprofessional and was therefore relevant. State v. Carter, 335 N.C. 422, 440 S.E.2d 268 (1994).

Evidence which tended to show that the defendant did not support his children and did not send them gifts following his wife's death tended to shed light upon the circumstances surrounding the shooting and tended to rebut the defendant's characterization of his relationship with his wife and children as a caring, supportive one and was thus relevant and admissible. State v. Collins, 335 N.C. 729, 440 S.E.2d 559 (1994).

Evidence that the defendant had escaped from jail was relevant and probative in that it tended to show the defendant's consciousness of his guilt. Furthermore, the threats made by defendant during the course of his escape were relevant to show the strength of his desire to escape. State v. McDougald, 336 N.C. 451, 444 S.E.2d 211 (1994).

Evidence regarding the issuance of a warrant for defendant's arrest for beating murder victim in the hour immediately preceding the murder tended to shed light on defendant's emotional state at or around the time of the killing and the circumstances surrounding that killing; thus, it was relevant and admissible. The testimony established intent and motive of returning to continue the assault and tended to prove premeditation, deliberation, and malice. State v. Fisher, 336 N.C. 684, 445 S.E.2d 866 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1098, 115 S. Ct. 768, 130 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1995).

Condensed videotape which included footage of a body being turned over, placed in a body bag and on a stretcher, then transported to elevator for removal was relevant to illustrate the crime scene prior to the arrival of medical personnel and was neither excessive nor cumulative evidence. State v. Leazer, 337 N.C. 454, 446 S.E.2d 54 (1994).

The evidentiary fact that defendant was armed and hesitant to submit to arrest was not inconsequential and was relevant to the determination of his guilt in the murder. State v. Mason, 337 N.C. 165, 446 S.E.2d 58 (1994).

Where the state's theory of case was that defendant had moved to county to act as the leader of a drug ring, and as such had ordered a "hit" on the victim, evidence demonstrating that defendant may have had alternative motivations in moving to the county was relevant.

The testimony may have had the tendency to make the State's theory less plausible than it would have been without the testimony. State v. Wilson, 338 N.C. 244, 449 S.E.2d 391 (1994).

Testimony of police officers, which stemmed from their personal experience combined with their observation of defendant, was helpful to a clear understanding of a relevant issue — defendant's demeanor shortly after the crime — was admissible under Rule 701 and relevant under this rule. State v. Lambert, 341 N.C. 36, 460 S.E.2d 123 (1995).

Bloody clothing of a victim that is corroborative of the state's case, is illustrative of the testimony of a witness, or throws any light on the circumstances of the crime is relevant and admissible evidence at trial. State v. Knight, 340 N.C. 531, 459 S.E.2d 481 (1995).

Plaintiff's possession of a Taurus .357 pistol was relevant where the victim died from gunshot wounds, a spent .38/.357 bullet was found in close proximity to the victim's body, and this bullet had markings consistent with those of a Taurus pistol. State v. Soles, 119 N.C. App. 375, 459 S.E.2d 4, appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 341 N.C. 655, 462 S.E.2d 523 (1995).

Photographs received with limiting instructions that they were being admitted for the purpose of illustrating and explaining the testimony of victim's mother and were not to be considered for any other purpose were appropriately admitted. State v. Alston, 341 N.C. 198, 461 S.E.2d 687 (1995).

Handgun and bullets introduced as evidence were relevant because they tended to link defendant to the crime where the handgun and bullets found in dumpster were linked to defendant through both his fingerprints and his own testimony, and the bullets found in the dumpster were consistent with the type of bullets recovered from the victim's body; the evidence was probative on the question of defendant's guilt. State v. Burke, 342 N.C. 113, 463 S.E.2d 212 (1995).

Admission of consent to search form bearing defendant's signatures was not prejudicial error; the form was relevant evidence on the issue of defendant's control of the premises. State v. Shine, 121 N.C. App. 78, 464 S.E.2d 475 (1995).

Evidence of a car chase was properly received as evidence of flight and was sufficient to support the trial court's instruction on flight. State v. King, 343 N.C. 29, 468 S.E.2d 232 (1996).

Evidence of flight, i.e. that the defendant did not appear at his first scheduled trial, is a relevant circumstance to be considered by the jury, together with other circumstances, in determining the issue of the defendant's guilt. State v. Williamson, 122 N.C. App. 229, 468 S.E.2d 840 (1996).

Where blood spatter experiments demonstrated that it was probable that defendant was in close proximity to victim at the time the gun was fired, the results cast doubt on the credibility of defendant's statements to police chief that she did not remember being close to her husband at the time of the shooting and that she did not see the shooting; thus, the trial court properly admitted the results of the experiments. State v. Clifton, 125 N.C. App. 471, 481 S.E.2d 393 (1997), cert. granted, 346 N.C. 182, 486 S.E.2d 200 (1997), discretionary review improvidently allowed, 347 N.C. 391, 493 S.E.2d 56 (1997).

Evidence that decedent was a police officer was not unfairly prejudicial and was relevant. State v. Larry, 345 N.C. 497, 481 S.E.2d 907 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 917, 118 S. Ct. 304, 139 L. Ed. 2d 234 (1997).

Photographs of male models and men in underwear were properly admitted into evidence in defendant's trial for taking indecent liberties with a child and crime against nature. State v. Creech, 128 N.C. App. 592, 495 S.E.2d 752 (1998), cert. denied, 348 N.C. 285, 501 S.E.2d 921 (1998).

Testimony by the wife of an eyewitness to a murder that he was restless and unable to sleep prior to his identification of the defendant but that he slept much better after doing so was admissible in the defendant's prosecution for second degree murder, where the eyewitness' credibility was in issue, and the wife's testimony was relevant to the reliability of his identification. State v. Smith, 130 N.C. App. 71, 502 S.E.2d 390 (1998).

Where witness remembered that defendant had a gun similar to the one used in the two murders at issue because defendant had playfully held it to his head, the trial court properly allowed the prosecution to present evidence of the defendant's prior misconduct with a handgun. State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct. 951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

Officer's testimony that he had training in the investigation of drug offenses, had dealt with occupants of the subject house when investigating drug offenses, and had arrested "folks" that resided in the house for drug offenses was relevant to show motive, i.e., that defendant committed robbery with a dangerous weapon in order to get money to buy drugs. State v. Stevenson, 136 N.C. App. 235, 523 S.E.2d 734 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 368, 543 S.E.2d 144 (2000).

Testimony Which Opens the Door to Otherwise Inadmissible Evidence — When defendant testified that he loved his wife and did not intend to kill her, the door was opened to questions by the State as to matters which would show the defendant did not love his wife, as evidenced by his affairs with other women. State v. Norman, 331 N.C. 738, 417 S.E.2d 233 (1992).

III. IRRELEVANT EVIDENCE.

Prosecutor's Questions Exceeded the Purpose for Which They Were Allowed. — Although, in murder prosecution, evidence that defendant was familiar with the gun and had used it previously might have rebutted defendant's claim of accident, the State greatly exceeded this purpose and questioned the witness at length about the details of the breaking and entering, details which had no connection with the crime for which defendant was being prosecuted. State v. Emery, 91 N.C. App. 24, 370 S.E.2d 456, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 627, 374 S.E.2d 594 (1988).

Evidence Attempting to Implicate Another. — Evidence showing that the defendant's ex-girlfriend's two sons were hostile toward his wife and were not in school on the day of the murder was not admissible under this rule because it did no more than arouse suspicion that the sons had motive and opportunity to murder the victim; this evidence neither directly linked sons to the murder nor tended to exculpate the defendant. State v. Floyd, 143 N.C. App. 128, 545 S.E.2d 238 (2001).

Evidence Properly Excluded. — In an action against an insurer in which plaintiff sought to recover the cost of chiropractic services rendered to her and her two minor children as a result of injuries sustained in an automobile collision, where plaintiff testified to the extent and type of damage to her automobile as a result of the collision, the court, in the exercise of its discretion under § 8C-1, Rule 403, could properly exclude the automobile repair bill by which plaintiff sought to corroborate her testimony, as this evidence was cumulative and its probative value was weak, and moreover, the potential for confusion of issues by its admission was clear. Brown v. Allstate Ins. Co., 76 N.C. App. 671, 334 S.E.2d 89 (1985).

Proffered testimony as to the amount of rent victim was paying for her apartment had no logical tendency to prove that the shower in her apartment was in good working order on the day in question. State v. Coen, 78 N.C. App. 778, 338 S.E.2d 784 (1986).

Evidence that another person, bearing a resemblance to defendant and utilizing a modus operandi similar to that used in the robbery for which defendant was being tried, robbed another fast food restaurant two months after the robbery was not admissible where there was no evidence that the other person committed the crime with which defendant was charged. Stated another way, the proffered evidence did not point directly to the other person's guilt of the crime with which the defendant was charged. Neither did the proffered evidence in any way refute the identification of the defendant by the eyewitnesses as the perpetrator of the robbery. State v. Allen, 80 N.C. App. 549, 342 S.E.2d 571, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 707, 347 S.E.2d 441 (1986).

The fact that defendant pointed his gun at victim three years previously and that both men laughed afterward did not indicate that three years later defendant did not fear victim or make the apparent necessity to defend himself more or less probable than it would be without the evidence; thus, it was error to allow testimony of this extrinsic act of misconduct in order to show the defendant's character for violence and that therefore he must have acted in conformity with that character, and not in self defense, when he fatally shot the victim. State v. Mills, 83 N.C. App. 606, 351 S.E.2d 130 (1986).

The evidence defendant sought to introduce in his trial for first-degree sexual offense of his two daughters, which primarily involved his marital dispute over their property would only have muddled the evidence worthy of the jury's consideration, and the trial court committed no error in precluding the introduction of evidence regarding defendant's theory that the victim's mother devised this scheme for her financial benefit. State v. Knight, 93 N.C. App. 460, 378 S.E.2d 424, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 230, 381 S.E.2d 789 (1989).

The trial court properly excluded exhibits which merely indicated plaintiff's legal position towards defendants and did not have a tendency to prove a fact at issue in the case. Raintree Homeowners Ass'n v. Bleimann, 116 N.C. App. 561, 449 S.E.2d 13, rev'd on other grounds, 342 N.C. 159, 463 S.E.2d 72 (1995).

Interjecting evidence which the defendant contended would allow the jury to infer his immaturity, and immaterial matter, so that the jury could make an additional leap to infer a fact of consequence, that he lacked capacity to form the requisite intent would have unnecessarily confused the issues, given the slight probative value of the contested evidence; therefore, even if this evidence was relevant and admissible, its exclusion was within the trial court's discretion. State v. Huggins, 338 N.C. 494, 450 S.E.2d 479 (1994).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to question victim about prior arrests, where the arrests showed nothing beyond the facts that victim was arrested and there was insufficient evidence to proceed with the charges. State v. Johnson, 128 N.C. App. 361, 496 S.E.2d 805 (1998).

Trial court properly precluded defendant from cross-examining victim concerning an alleged sexual offense on grounds of lack of relevance. State v. Chavis, 134 N.C. App. 546, 518 S.E.2d 241 (1999).

The trial court properly excluded the defendant's proffered expert testimony that the defendant was reacting to a potential fear that he was about to be harmed when defendant killed the victim since such testimony would not aid but rather tend to confuse the jury in understanding the evidence and determining the facts in issue. State v. Lawrence, 352 N.C. 1, 530 S.E.2d 807 (2000).

Evidence Held Irrelevant. — In trial on charge of first degree rape, which was tried on the theory that defendant was the principal and two other men were aiders and abettors, evidence of previous convictions of the other men was irrelevant under this rule, and being irrelevant, was not admissible. Further, the admission of such evidence violated defendant's U.S. Const., Amend. VI right to confront the witnesses against him with regard to this charge. State v. Brown, 319 N.C. 361, 354 S.E.2d 225 (1987).

Testimony of cellmate and detective that defendant was in jail on a charge of attempted murder of his girlfriend was not relevant where defendant was on trial for an unrelated crime of murder since the court determined that this testimony was not relevant to any fact or issue other than the character of the accused. State v. Cashwell, 322 N.C. 574, 369 S.E.2d 566 (1988).

Evidence of prior, noncriminal unrelated fire held inadmissible because of its prejudicial character since such evidence was irrelevant in that it neither confirmed nor suggested a relationship between two defendants charged with burning down a food market. Moreover, the State failed to show defendants had any connection with the previous fire. State v. Clark, 90 N.C. App. 489, 369 S.E.2d 607 (1988).

There can be no question that prejudice resulted from the testimony that defendant had returned to witness's motel room three hours after the murder occurred with "mud or grass" stains on the knees of his pants, and that he was "very nervous and upset" and wanted to "get drunk" and did so, and the prejudicial effect of this testimony far outweighed the need to show witness to be less than credible (especially where the remainder of her testimony included little of value in the State's case) or the need to bolster officer's credibility. State v. Hunt, 324 N.C. 343, 378 S.E.2d 754 (1989).

In wrongful death action, trial court erred in denying administrator's in limine motion seeking to prevent the admission of testimony concerning decedent's possession of a firearm and his blood/alcohol level; since no testimony existed on record that the defendant knew decedent had a handgun in his possession or that he was aware that decedent had consumed any alcohol, this evidence was not relevent. Young v. Warren, 95 N.C. App. 585, 383 S.E.2d 381 (1989).

Proffered testimony as to the victim's alcohol consumption with other people in party settings had no tendency to prove that the victim consented to sexual activity with the defendant on the day in question. State v. Cronan, 100 N.C. App. 641, 397 S.E.2d 762 (1990), discretionary review denied and appeal dismissed, 328 N.C. 573, 403 S.E.2d 516 (1991).

Admission in capital case of testimony by fingerprint expert witness to the effect that he had discovered identifiable fingerprints in only three percent of the criminal cases in which he had been involved was error, as the testimony was not relevant to the issues in the case; however, the error was not prejudicial. State v. Robinson, 330 N.C. 1, 409 S.E.2d 288 (1991).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion by not permitting cross-examination of witness in order to show the extent of the affectionate relations between defendant and the witness after a shooting. State v. Bryant, 337 N.C. 298, 446 S.E.2d 71 (1994).

Where defendant was charged with trafficking in cocaine, the mere ownership of a passport showing travel to Colombia was not probative of a fact at issue in the case. State v. Cuevas, 121 N.C. App. 553, 468 S.E.2d 425 (1996).

Even though the trial court erred in admitting evidence of defendant's passport showing travel to Colombia, that error alone did not mandate a new trial where it was unlikely that a different result would have occurred at trial but for the introduction of the passport. State v. Cuevas, 121 N.C. App. 553, 468 S.E.2d 425 (1996).

Testimony of codefendant's cell mate, which defendant sought to introduce to prove codefendant's manipulative hold over defendant, did not concern defendant's motives or any actions taken by defendant in relation to proving his guilt or innocence, and as such was collateral and irrelevant. State v. York, 347 N.C. 79, 489 S.E.2d 380 (1997).

The fact that defendant's wife had a prior criminal record, used drugs, had extra-marital affairs, and had a baby by another man during her marriage to defendant were of no relevance to any theory of defendant's case, nor probative of his defense of diminished capacity. State v. Clark, 128 N.C. App. 87, 493 S.E.2d 770 (1997), cert. denied, 348 N.C. 285, 501 S.E.2d 913 (1998).

Erroneously But Not Prejudicially Admitted. — The State's exhibition of investigating officer's gun was error but not prejudicial error; the gun had not been introduced into evidence, and the exhibition was not relevant under this rule because the evidence did not establish any relationship between the investigating officer's gun and the gun used by defendant other than that defendant's gun "could have been a little bigger" than the investigating officer's gun. The exhibition of the gun did not establish that defendant knew the procedure for firing the gun that he used in the shootings; rather, this fact was established by his testimony regarding his use of his own gun. State v.

Rule 402. Relevant evidence generally admissible; irrelevant evidence inadmissible.

All relevant evidence is admissible, except as otherwise provided by the Constitution of the United States, by the Constitution of North Carolina, by Act of Congress, by Act of the General Assembly or by these rules. Evidence which is not relevant is not admissible. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 402 except that the phrases "by the Constitution of North Carolina" and "by Act of the General Assembly" were added and the phrase "by other rules prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority" was deleted. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The provisions that all relevant evidence is admissible, with certain exceptions, and that evidence which is not relevant is not admissible are 'a presupposition involved in the very conception of a rational system of evidence.' Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence 264 (1898). They constitute the foundation upon which the structure of admission and exclusion rests. ***

Not all relevant evidence is admissible. The exclusion of relevant evidence occurs in a variety of situations and may be called for by these rules, by the Rules of Civil ... Procedure ..., by Act of Congress, or by constitutional considerations.

Succeeding rules in the present article, in response to the demands of particular policies, require the exclusion of evidence despite its relevancy. In addition, ... Article VI imposes limitations upon witnesses and the manner of dealing with them; Article VII specifies requirements with respect to opinions and expert testimony; Article VIII excludes hearsay not falling within an exception; Article IX spells out the handling of authentication and identification; and Article X restricts the manner of proving the contents of writings and recordings.

The Rules of Civil ... Procedure in some instances require the exclusion of relevant evidence. For example, ... the Rules of Civil Procedure, by imposing requirements of notice and unavailability of the deponent, place limits on the use of relevant depositions.

The rule recognizes but makes no attempt to spell out the constitutional considerations which impose basic limitations upon the admissibility of relevant evidence. Examples are evidence obtained by unlawful search and seizure, Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383, 34 S.Ct. 341, 58 L.Ed. 652 (1914); Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 88 S.Ct. 507, 19 L.Ed.2d 576 (1967); incriminating statement elicited from an accused in violation of right to counsel, Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 84 S.Ct. 1199, 12 L.Ed.2d 246 (1964)."

Rule 402 is consistent with North Carolina practice.

CASE NOTES

Section 8C-1, Rule 803 Does Not Annul Relevancy Requirement. — While § 8C-1, Rule 803 delineates instances in which evidence will not be excluded simply because such evidence is hearsay, it does not annul the requirement of this rule that the evidence be relevant. York v. Northern Hosp. Dist., 88 N.C. App. 183, 362 S.E.2d 859 (1987), cert. denied, 322 N.C. 116, 367 S.E.2d 922 (1988).

Res Gestae Rationale Survives. — Admission of evidence of a criminal defendant's prior bad acts, received to establish the circumstances of the crime on trial by describing its immediate context, is known variously as the "same transaction" rule, the "complete story" exception, and the "course of conduct" exception. Such evidence is admissible if it "forms part of the history of the event or serves to enhance the natural development of the facts"; and this rationale, established in pre-Rules cases, survives the adoption of the Rules of Evidence. State v. Agee, 326 N.C. 542, 391 S.E.2d 171 (1990).

Evidence pertaining to the foreseeability of criminal attack shall not be limited to prior criminal acts occurring on the premises. Evidence of criminal acts occurring near the premises in question may be relevant to the question of foreseeability, and such evidence is admissible unless excluded by some specific rule. Murrow v. Daniels, 321 N.C. 494, 364 S.E.2d 392 (1988), overruled on other grounds, Nelson v. Freeland, 349 N.C. 615, 507 S.E.2d 882 (1998).

Admission of evidence which is technically inadmissible will be treated as harmless unless prejudice is shown such that a different result likely would have ensued had the evidence been excluded. State v. Gappins, 320 N.C. 64, 357 S.E.2d 654 (1987).

The burden is on the party who asserts that evidence was improperly admitted to show both error and that he was prejudiced by its admission. State v. Gappins, 320 N.C. 64, 357 S.E.2d 654 (1987).

When relevant evidence not involving a right arising under the Constitution of the United States is erroneously excluded, a defendant has the burden of showing that the error was prejudicial. This burden may be met by showing that there is a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached had the error not been committed. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

Evidence Not Probative. — Where defendant was charged with trafficking in cocaine, the mere ownership of a passport showing travel to Colombia was not probative of a fact at issue in the case. State v. Cuevas, 121 N.C. App. 553, 468 S.E.2d 425 (1996).

Probative Value Outweighed by Prejudicial Potential. — Where officer saw two small bottles of liquor in a purse but had no reason to believe that alcohol consumption contributed to car accident the probative value of this evidence was outweighed by its prejudicial potential. Browning v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 114 N.C. App. 229, 441 S.E.2d 607 (1994), aff'd, 340 N.C. 254, 456 S.E.2d 307 (1995).

In order to establish the relevancy of blood test results, plaintiff is required to lay a foundation by way of expert testimony explaining the way the test is conducted, attesting its scientific reliability, and vouching for its correct administration in this particular case. Further, the substance analyzed must be accurately identified by proving a chain of custody to insure that the substance came from the source claimed and that its condition was unchanged. Lombroia v. Peek, 107 N.C. App. 745, 421 S.E.2d 784 (1992).

Psychiatric Testimony About Ability to Form Specific Intent in Murder Trial. — Testimony of a psychiatric expert that in his opinion the defendant was suffering from organic brain impairment, that the defendant's capacity to plan, think or reflect was impaired at the time of the shootings, and that the defendant was incapable of forming the specific intent to kill at the time of the shootings was evidence tending to show that the defendant acted without premeditation or deliberation when he murdered victim and that he was incapable of forming the specific intent to kill when he shot his stepson and was therefore relevant in the defendant's trial for first-degree murder and assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury. State v. Daniel, 333 N.C. 756, 429 S.E.2d 724 (1993).

Expert Testimony Regarding Battered Child Syndrome. — Testimony from expert in pediatrics and child abuse regarding battered child syndrome was properly admitted. State v. Elliott, 344 N.C. 242, 475 S.E.2d 202 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1106, 117 S. Ct. 1111, 137 L. Ed. 2d 312 (1997).

Photographs of Crime Scene and Victim's Clothes. — Photographs of the crime scene and victim's bloody clothes were admissible since they were only used so that the witnesses could explain and illustrate their testimony and the trial court instructed the jury as to their limited purpose; further, the photographs were not unnecessarily gory. State v. Lloyd, 354 N.C. 76, 552 S.E.2d 596 (2001).

Evidence Held Relevant. — Although motive was not an element of any of the crimes for which the defendant was convicted (murder, arson and assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury), his motives and state of mind at the time of the fire certainly were facts "of consequence to the determination of the action ...", and the trial court did not err by admitting evidence thereof. State v. Riddick, 315 N.C. 749, 340 S.E.2d 55 (1986).

Watch and ring taken from victim of rape and kidnapping were "relevant" in defendant's trial for those offenses, because they tended to make the existence of a fact of consequence — defendant's connection to the offenses with which he was charged — more probable than it would be without the evidence, and their admission was not unduly prejudicial. State v. Mercer, 317 N.C. 87, 343 S.E.2d 885 (1986).

State's exhibits, which included $5,900 in United States currency, rolling papers and pipe, electric digital scales, a triple beam balance scale, a water bong, a plastic bag containing white powder, an airline bag in which the white powder was found and a briefcase with documents, with the exception of the briefcase, were relevant to the crime of trafficking in cocaine, in that they intended to show that defendant knowingly possessed cocaine and was trafficking in it, and the briefcase, which was in defendant's possession at the time of arrest, tended to explain or illustrate the circumstances surrounding his arrest. State v. Teasley, 82 N.C. App. 150, 346 S.E.2d 227 (1986), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 318 N.C. 701, 351 S.E.2d 759 (1987).

Evidence merely disclosing the subsequent pregnancy of the rape victim was admissible as tending to prove penetration, an essential element of the crime of forcible rape; moreover, the victim's simple statement that she had an abortion served the purpose of corroborating both the fact of penetration and the fact of her pregnancy, and the mere fact that an abortion took place was not so inflammatory as to render it inadmissible. State v. Stanton, 319 N.C. 180, 353 S.E.2d 385 (1987).

In trial for robbery with a dangerous weapon, evidence of victim's scholastic achievements presented by the assistant district attorney during preliminary questioning was relevant; it was offered as a means of introducing the victim to the court and jury and to assist in explaining the victim's background, and considering the fact that defendant later portrayed victim as the aggressor, the challenged testimony was not prejudicial. State v. Summerlin, 98 N.C. App. 167, 390 S.E.2d 358, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 143, 394 S.E.2d 183 (1990).

Whether or not building met the standards of the Building Code, though not determinative of the issue of negligence, had some probative value as to whether or not defendant failed to keep his store in a reasonably safe condition, and expert testimony on this issue could properly be introduced in a negligence action against store owner. Thomas v. Dixson, 321 N.C. App. 226, 363 S.E.2d 209 (1988).

Testimony that the defendant was calm and was not crying which described her emotional state shortly after her husband was killed, based upon the witnesses' observations of her demeanor at that time, and evidence that the defendant disposed of her husband's personal effects the day after his funeral, amounted to evidence tending to shed light upon the circumstances surrounding husband's killing and, thus, were relevant and admissible. State v. Stager, 329 N.C. 278, 406 S.E.2d 876 (1991).

Plaintiffs failed to make a timely objection to the admission of a report prepared by financial consultant, which was listed by defendant in the "order on final pre-trial conference," thus affording plaintiffs ample time to prepare for a timely objection to the introduction of the exhibit at trial. Furthermore, the report was relevant since it tended to show the interconnected operations of the parties, the inadequacies of the financial record keeping, and the degree of control that plaintiffs exercised over one party. Powell v. Omli, 110 N.C. App. 336, 429 S.E.2d 774 (1993), cert. denied, 334 N.C. 621, 435 S.E.2d 338 (1993).

Evidence regarding the issuance of a warrant for defendant's arrest for beating murder victim in the hour immediately preceding the murder tended to shed light on defendant's emotional state at or around the time of the killing and the circumstances surrounding that killing; thus, it was relevant and admissible. The testimony established intent and motive of returning to continue the assault and tended to prove premeditation, deliberation, and malice. State v. Fisher, 336 N.C. 684, 445 S.E.2d 866 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1098, 115 S. Ct. 768, 130 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1995).

Testimony that the victim was a very good person, always went to church, loved her children, was a good wife and mother and died not knowing what happened to her two-and-a-half year old child was properly admitted. State v. Reeves, 337 N.C. 700, 448 S.E.2d 802 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1114, 115 S. Ct. 1971, 131 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1995).

Evidence of flight, i.e. that the defendant did not appear at his first scheduled trial, is a relevant circumstance to be considered by the jury, together with other circumstances, in determining the issue of the defendant's guilt. State v. Williamson, 122 N.C. App. 229, 468 S.E.2d 840 (1996).

Bloody clothing of a victim that is corroborative of the state's case, is illustrative of the testimony of a witness, or throws any light on the circumstances of the crime is relevant and admissible evidence at trial. State v. Knight, 340 N.C. 531, 459 S.E.2d 481 (1995).

Plaintiff's possession of a Taurus .357 pistol was relevant where the victim died from gunshot wounds, a spent .38/.357 bullet was found in close proximity to the victim's body, and this bullet had markings consistent with those of a Taurus pistol. State v. Soles, 119 N.C. App. 375, 459 S.E.2d 4, appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 341 N.C. 655, 462 S.E.2d 523 (1995).

Testimony of Coast Guard officer as to ocean currents was relevant to show a connection between defendant and the crime where an inference could be drawn therefrom that a body had drifted from an area with which defendant was familiar. State v. Dial, 122 N.C. App. 298, 470 S.E.2d 84 (1996).

Evidence that victim, her family members, and a friend had threatened defendant's life was relevant to explain why defendant had a gun and to explain defendant's behavior and was not unfairly prejudicial. State v. Macon, 346 N.C. 109, 484 S.E.2d 538 (1997).

Testimony by the wife of an eyewitness to a murder that he was restless and unable to sleep prior to his identification of the defendant but that he slept much better after doing so was admissible in the defendant's prosecution for second degree murder, where the eyewitness' credibility was in issue, and the wife's testimony was relevant to the reliability of his identification. State v. Smith, 130 N.C. App. 71, 502 S.E.2d 390 (1998).

Evidence concerning the speed the defendant's vehicle was traveling when it struck the rear of the plaintiffs' vehicle was relevant to the extent of the plaintiffs' injuries, and thus was relevant to the issue of damages. Albrecht v. Dorsett, 131 N.C. App. 502, 508 S.E.2d 319 (1998).

Evidence of electrocution was relevant and admissible in a death benefits proceeding before the Industrial Commission, where the issue was whether the employee died of electrocution or of a preexisting heart condition. Westbrooks v. Bowes, 130 N.C. App. 517, 503 S.E.2d 409 (1998).

Where persuasive evidence existed to show that a death caused by unprotected floor openings placed the defendant on notice of the danger, evidence of OSHA citations against the defendant/general contractor showing continuing violations several days later was properly admitted as relevant to the questions of negligence and gross negligence. Lane v. R.N. Rouse & Co., 135 N.C. App. 494, 521 S.E.2d 137 (1999).

Evidence Held Irrelevant. — Proffered testimony as to the amount of rent victim was paying for her apartment had no logical tendency to prove that the shower in her apartment was in good working order on the day in question. State v. Coen, 78 N.C. App. 778, 338 S.E.2d 784 (1986).

Evidence that another person, bearing a resemblance to defendant and utilizing a modus operandi similar to that used in the robbery for which defendant was being tried, robbed another fast food restaurant two months after the robbery was not admissible, where there was no evidence that the other person committed the crime with which defendant was charged. Stated another way, the proffered evidence did not point directly to the other person's guilt of the crime with which the defendant was charged. Neither did the proffered evidence in any way refute the identification of the defendant by the eyewitnesses as the perpetrator of the robbery. State v. Allen, 80 N.C. App. 549, 342 S.E.2d 571, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 707, 347 S.E.2d 441 (1986).

In medical malpractice case, evidence of plaintiffs' separate lawsuit against a different defendant, which had been dismissed, was irrelevant under this rule, and its admission contravened the strong public policy favoring settlement of controversies out of court. Cates v. Wilson, 83 N.C. App. 448, 350 S.E.2d 898 (1986), modified on other grounds, 321 N.C. 1, 361 S.E.2d 734 (1987).

In a negligence action against a hospital, in which plaintiffs had previously settled with the attending physician, the court properly excluded references to the physician's participation as a defendant as irrelevant under this rule and as contravening the strong public policy favoring settlement of controversies out of court. Campbell ex rel. McMillan v. Pitt County Mem. Hosp., 84 N.C. App. 314, 352 S.E.2d 902, aff'd, 321 N.C. 260, 362 S.E.2d 273, appeal of right allowed pursuant to N.C.R.A.P., Rule 16(b) and petition allowed as to additional issues, 319 N.C. 458, 356 S.E.2d 2 (1987).

In trial on charge of first degree rape, which was tried on the theory that defendant was the principal and two other men were aiders and abettors, evidence of previous convictions of the other men was irrelevant under § 8C-1, Rule 401, and being irrelevant, was not admissible. Further, the admission of such evidence violated defendant's U.S. Const., Amend. VI right to confront the witnesses against him with regard to this charge. State v. Brown, 319 N.C. 361, 354 S.E.2d 225 (1987).

Testimony of a cellmate and a detective that defendant was in jail on a charge of attempted murder of his girlfriend was not relevant where defendant was on trial for an unrelated crime of murder since the court determined that this testimony was not relevant to any fact or issue other than the character of the accused. State v. Cashwell, 322 N.C. 574, 369 S.E.2d 566 (1988).

Proffered testimony as to the victim's alcohol consumption with other people in party settings has no tendency to prove that the victim consented to sexual activity with the defendant on the day in question. State v. Cronan, 100 N.C. App. 641, 397 S.E.2d 762 (1990), discretionary review denied and appeal dismissed, 328 N.C. 573, 403 S.E.2d 516 (1991).

A trial court did not err by excluding medical records and preventing cross-examination of the State's witness regarding her mental and emotional condition and treatment where the trial court examined the medical records in camera, found no good cause to violate the confidentiality of the physician-patient relationship, preserved those records sealed for review by the appellate court, and found that the records revealed no evidence bearing on the witness's credibility. State v. Adams, 103 N.C. App. 158, 404 S.E.2d 708 (1991).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion by refusing to admit the testimony of detective that a violation of § 47C-4-110, for failure to put money in escrow, is not subject to criminal sanctions. State v. Rupe, 109 N.C. App. 601, 428 S.E.2d 480 (1993).

Where plaintiff in paternity case did not contend that an operation which could produce the effects of recanalization was performed on defendant who had vasectomy, nor was there any evidence that such an operation was performed, the testimony on the procedure was irrelevant. Brooks v. Hayes, 113 N.C. App. 168, 438 S.E.2d 420 (1993).

Photographs of witness used to corroborate her allegations that defendant used the photographs to blackmail her to prevent her from testifying were admissible, but it was error to admit other photographs into evidence, not used for any purpose during the trial. State v. Cummings, 113 N.C. App. 368, 438 S.E.2d 453 (1994), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 336 N.C. 75, 445 S.E.2d 39 (1994).

The fact that a pipe, which according to the State's eyewitnesses was neither used nor noticed by anyone prior to shooting, was on the ground under the victim's automobile did not serve to establish that these eyewitnesses were part of an earlier fight or that it had any relevance with respect to the events which occurred at the time of the shooting; the fact that the chrome pipe was underneath victim's automobile before the shooting did not tend to make it more or less probable that defendant had no specific intent to kill victim because he could not premeditate and deliberate and, thus, the pipe itself was not relevant and was properly excluded as an exhibit. State v. Jackson, 340 N.C. 301, 457 S.E.2d 862 (1995).

Whether child of codefendant was abused by codefendant was irrelevant to the charges of first degree sexual offense and taking indecent liberties with a child against defendant and was properly excluded pursuant to this rule. State v. Parker, 119 N.C. App. 328, 459 S.E.2d 9 (1995).

Defendant's testimony that his Intoxilyzer reading did not accurately reflect his blood alcohol level was not admissible and the trial court correctly excluded this evidence. State v. Cothran, 120 N.C. App. 633, 463 S.E.2d 423 (1995).

Testimony of codefendant's cell mate, which defendant sought to introduce to prove codefendant's manipulative hold over defendant, did not concern defendant's motives or any actions taken by defendant in relation to proving his guilt or innocence, and as such was collateral and irrelevant. State v. York, 347 N.C. 79, 489 S.E.2d 380 (1997).

Testimony Which Opens the Door to Otherwise Inadmissible Evidence. — When defendant testified that he loved his wife and did not intend to kill her, the door was opened to questions by the State as to matters which would show the defendant did not love his wife, as evidenced by his affairs with other women. State v. Norman, 331 N.C. 738, 417 S.E.2d 233 (1992).

Trial court did not err in ruling that defense counsel opened the door to introduction of evidence regarding the prior killing of a cat by defendant. State v. Cagle, 346 N.C. 497, 488 S.E.2d 535 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1032, 118 S. Ct. 635, 139 L. Ed. 2d 614 (1998).

Evidence Improperly Excluded. — In a murder trial, where guilt was based on circumstantial evidence, the trial court committed reversible error in refusing to admit into evidence defendant's proposed exhibit, a drawing found by law enforcement officers among the victim's personal effects, which included a rough map of the area surrounding defendant's North Carolina home and numerous written notations indicating a possible larceny scheme. The exhibit was clearly relevant to a crucial issue in the case, namely, whether this defendant, and not some other person, was in fact the perpetrator of the crime, and it therefore should have been admitted into evidence at trial. State v. McElrath, 322 N.C. 1, 366 S.E.2d 442 (1988).

The defendant was entitled to a new trial because a different result might have been reached had the trial court not excluded relevant and admissible evidence which cast doubt upon the State's evidence that defendant was the perpetrator of the murder of an elderly victim and which further implicated another person as that perpetrator beyond conjecture or mere implication. State v. Israel, 353 N.C. 211, 539 S.E.2d 633 (2000).

Exclusion of Evidence Held Not Prejudicial. — Court's refusal to permit witness to testify that, based upon his personal knowledge of the State's only eyewitness, he would not believe the State's witness under oath was not prejudicial, where immediately before that evidence was offered, the same witness testified without objection that in his opinion the State's witness was a liar and had told him he would take a bribe to change his testimony. State v. Burge, 100 N.C. App. 671, 397 S.E.2d 760 (1990).

Admission of Evidence Held Prejudicial. — In prosecution for rape, first-degree kidnapping, sexual offense, and common law robbery, the admission of the officer's testimony that the defendant had a rifle in his car when he was arrested, if error, was not prejudicial, where there was no intimation by the officer that the defendant attempted to use the rifle when he was arrested, that it was used in the commission of any crime or that possession of the rifle was otherwise unlawful. State v. Herring, 322 N.C. 733, 370 S.E.2d 363 (1988).

Where the challenged evidence that defendant was in custody for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill his girlfriend was especially prejudicial because of its similarity to the charge at issue, which was murder and assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, and the similarity of the charges was compounded by the additional "verification" evidence of a detective, such admissions constituted prejudicial error and defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Cashwell, 322 N.C. 574, 369 S.E.2d 566 (1988).

Admission of Evidence Held Harmless. — Trial court's error in admitting irrelevant evidence of co-attacker's robbery and attack of another person following victims' deaths constituted harmless error. State v. Teague, 134 N.C. App. 702, 518 S.E.2d 573 (1999).

Even though the trial court erred in admitting evidence of defendant's passport showing travel to Colombia, that error alone did not mandate a new trial where it was unlikely that a different result would have occurred at trial but for the introduction of the passport. State v. Cuevas, 121 N.C. App. 553, 468 S.E.2d 425 (1996).

Cross-Examination Held Proper. — Where State did not cross-examine defendant in murder case about an unrelated rape accusation to show defendant was unworthy of belief because of this alleged bad act, but for purpose of establishing defendant's motive for crime for which he was on trial, cross-examination was proper. State v. Meekins, 326 N.C. 689, 392 S.E.2d 346 (1990).

Evidence Properly Admitted. — Admission into evidence of defendant's offer of $150,000 to plaintiff to terminate lease, which was an effort on part of defendant to satisfy a condition of sale of restaurant property, was not violative of § 8C-1, Rule 408, nor was it barred by this rule, as offer was evidence of value of lease and was therefore relevant to issue of damages. Marina Food Assocs. v. Marina Restaurant, Inc., 100 N.C. App. 82, 394 S.E.2d 824 (1990).

Trial court did not commit reversible error when it allowed introduction of hair and fiber evidence removed from defendant's pants with a lint brush, even though defendant maintained that he could have picked up the incriminating hair and fibers by riding in the same police car in which the victim had ridden earlier in the day. Argument that defendant may have picked up the fibers somewhere else would go to the weight of such evidence, not to its admissibility. State v. Davy, 100 N.C. App. 551, 397 S.E.2d 634 (1990).

The trial court did not err by admitting the finger of a murder victim burned beyond recognition as evidence, because its probative value as to the issue of identity of the victim was not substantially outweighed by any danger of unfair prejudice. State v. Eason, 328 N.C. 409, 402 S.E.2d 809 (1991).

Knife which was found in a pond around three months after murder was admissible evidence. State v. DeCastro, 342 N.C. 667, 467 S.E.2d 653 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 896, 117 S. Ct. 241, 136 L. Ed. 2d 170 (1996).

A hacksaw frame and three hacksaw blades were admissible based on the proximity of the hacksaw frame to the location of the victim's severed hand and the expert witness' conclusions that the victim's right hand was severed by a hacksaw blade similar to those seized from the residence of defendant's parents. State v. Grooms, 353 N.C. 50, 540 S.E.2d 713 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Expert Testimony. — Professional engineer's testimony as to the structure and appearance of the stairway on which plaintiff was injured was based on direct personal knowledge; therefore, this testimony was admissible so long as it was relevant and its probative value was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Newton v. New Hanover County Bd. of Educ., 342 N.C. 554, 467 S.E.2d 58 (1996).

A robbery report containing statements regarding the seizure, at a bus station, of defendant's luggage which police suspected contained marijuana was relevant evidence; the statements made to the investigating officer were vital to the identification of the defendants as the suspects in the armed robbery and admissible for non-hearsay purposes. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Admissibility of Records. — School records of minor son were not inadmissible hearsay, but were admissible under an exception to the hearsay rule as business records since the school records were not offered to prove the truth of what was contained in them but were used to impeach the mother's testimony. Sterling v. Gil Soucy Trucking, Ltd., — N.C. App. —, 552 S.E.2d 674, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 868 (2001).

Trial court's admission of victim's testimony from a domestic violence protective order hearing did not violate his right to confront the witness against him, nor did it violate § 8C-1, Rules 403, 404(b), and 803(3) of the North Carolina Rules of Evidence, where the hearsay statements constituted, and were admissible as, statements of the declarant's then-existing mental, emotional, or physical condition and where their probative value outweighed their prejudicial effect. State v. Thibodeaux, 352 N.C. 570, 532 S.E.2d 797 (2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1155, 121 S. Ct. 1106, 148 L. Ed. 2d 976 (2001).

Testimony Relevant to Negate Self-Defense And Establish State of Mind And Intent. — The testimony of four witnesses about victim's screams during murder, the appearance of the crime scene, and defendant's behavior and demeanor immediately following the murder was relevant to negate the defendant's claim of self-defense as well as to establish his state of mind and intent to kill. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Rule 403. Exclusion of relevant evidence on grounds of prejudice, confusion, or waste of time.

Although relevant, evidence may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 403. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The case law recognizes that certain circumstances call for the exclusion of evidence which is of unquestioned relevance. These circumstances entail risks which range all the way from inducing decision on a purely emotional basis, at one extreme, to nothing more harmful than merely wasting time, at the other extreme. Situations in this area call for balancing the probative value of and need for the evidence against the harm likely to result from its admission.  The rules which follow in this Article are concrete applications evolved for particular situations. However, they reflect the policies underlying the present rule, which is designed as a guide for the handling of situations for which no specific rules have been formulated.

Exclusion for risk of unfair prejudice, confusion of issues, misleading the jury, or waste of time, all find ample support in the authorities. 'Unfair prejudice' within its context means an undue tendency to suggest decision on an improper basis, commonly, though not necessarily, as an emotional one.

The rule does not enumerate surprise as a ground for exclusion, in this respect following Wigmore's view of the common law. 6 Wigmore § 1849. Cf. McCormick § 152, p. 320, n. 29, listing unfair surprise as a ground for exclusion but stating that it is usually 'coupled with the danger of prejudice and confusion of issues'.  While it can scarcely be doubted that claims of unfair surprise may still be justified despite procedural requirements of notice and instrumentalities of discovery, the granting of a continuance is a more appropriate remedy than exclusion of the evidence.  Moreover, the impact of a rule excluding evidence on the ground of surprise would be difficult to estimate."

The rule is substantially in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 77 et seq. (1982). In North Carolina, unfair surprise appears to be a ground for exclusion of evidence. Id. § 77, p. 287. However, as the Advisory Committee states, the rule does not enumerate surprise as a ground for exclusion. Nonetheless, surprise may be covered by unfair prejudice, confusion of issues, or undue delay. See Wright and Graham, Federal Practice and Procedure: Evidence § 5218, at 298.

The Advisory Committee's Note states that:

"In reaching a decision whether to exclude on grounds of unfair prejudice, consideration should be given to the probable effectiveness or lack of effectiveness of a limiting instruction. See Rule 106 and Advisory Committee's Note thereunder. The availability of other means of proof may also be an appropriate factor."

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Photographs and Videotapes.
III. Prejudicial Evidence, Evidence Excluded Based on Confusion, Etc.
IV. Admission or Exclusion of Evidence Not Prejudicial.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Test for determining whether evidence of crimes, wrongs or acts other than those specifically at issue is admissible is whether the incidents are sufficiently similar and not too remote in time so as to be more probative than prejudicial under the balancing test of this rule. State v. Shultz, 88 N.C. App. 197, 362 S.E.2d 853 (1987); State v. Boyd, 321 N.C. 574, 364 S.E.2d 118 (1988); Pinckney v. Van Damme, 116 N.C. App. 139, 447 S.E.2d 825 (1994); State v. Hamilton, 132 N.C. App. 316, 512 S.E.2d 80 (1999).

Although admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b), the probative value of evidence must still outweigh the danger of undue prejudice to the defendant to be admissible under this rule. State v. Everhardt, 96 N.C. App. 1, 384 S.E.2d 562 (1989), aff'd, 326 N.C. 777, 392 S.E.2d 391 (1990).

Even if testimony is admissible as corroborative, the trial court still must determine whether its probative value outweighs the danger of unfair prejudice to defendant. State v. Coffey, 345 N.C. 389, 480 S.E.2d 664 (1997).

"Unfair prejudice," as used in this rule, means an undue tendency to suggest decision on an improper basis, commonly, though not necessarily, as an emotional one. State v. DeLeonardo, 315 N.C. 762, 340 S.E.2d 350 (1986); State v. Cameron, 83 N.C. App. 69, 349 S.E.2d 327 (1986).

Unfairness of Prejudice Is Determinative. — All evidence favorable to plaintiff will be, by definition, prejudicial to defendants; however, the test under this rule is whether that prejudice to defendants is unfair. Matthews v. James, 88 N.C. App. 32, 362 S.E.2d 594 (1987), cert. denied, 322 N.C. 112, 367 S.E.2d 913 (1988); Screaming Eagle Air, Ltd. v. Airport Comm'n, 97 N.C. App. 30, 387 S.E.2d 197 (1990).

Question of Prejudice Is One of Degree. — Necessarily, evidence which is probative in the State's case will have a prejudicial effect on the defendant; the question is one of degree. State v. Mercer, 317 N.C. 87, 343 S.E.2d 885 (1986).

Whether to exclude evidence on the ground that its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice is a matter left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and the question is one of degree, because evidence that is probative of the state's case necessarily will have a prejudicial effect on the defendant. State v. Hoffman, 349 N.C. 167, 505 S.E.2d 80 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1053, 119 S. Ct. 1362, 143 L. Ed. 2d 522 (1999).

Probative Value Must Be Substantially Outweighed. — Most evidence tends to prejudice the party against whom it is offered; to be excluded, the probative value of the evidence must not only be outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, it must be substantially outweighed. State v. Lyons, 340 N.C. 646, 459 S.E.2d 770 (1995).

Once a trial court determines that other crimes evidence is properly admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b), it must still determine if the probative value of the evidence is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. Bidgood, 144 N.C. App. 267, 550 S.E.2d 198 (2001).

Specific Finding Not Required So Long as Balancing Test Occurred. — The court's failure to make a specific finding as to whether the probative value of the evidence of defendant's prior assault on murder victim outweighed its prejudicial effect did not constitute reversible error where the court conducted the balancing test required by this rule outside the presence of the jury. State v. Washington, 141 N.C. App. 354, 540 S.E.2d 388 (2000), cert denied, 353 N.C. 396, 547 S.E.2d 427 (2001).

Factors to Consider in Determining Admissibility. — Although no definitive test for the admissibility of photographs alleged to be inflammatory and unduly prejudicial has been developed, factors that courts have looked to in the past include: (1) the number of the photographs; (2) whether the photographs were unnecessarily duplicative of other testimony; (3) whether the purpose of the photographs was aimed solely at arousing the passions of the jury; and (4) the circumstances surrounding the presentation of the photographs. State v. Brown, 335 N.C. 477, 439 S.E.2d 589 (1994).

Passage of Time Should Be Weighed in Admitting Evidence. — A process that allows for the passage of time to be weighed in a court's initial decision to admit such evidence is the better reasoned approach and one that ensures that an accused is tried only for the acts for which he has been indicted. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 585, 369 S.E.2d 822 (1988).

Effect of Remoteness in Time. — Remoteness in time is most important where evidence of another crime is used to show that both crimes arose out of a common scheme or plan; remoteness in time is less important when the other crime is admitted because its modus operandi is so strikingly similar to the modus operandi of the crime being tried as to permit a reasonable inference that the same person committed both crimes. State v. Schultz, 88 N.C. App. 197, 362 S.E.2d 853 (1987).

Generally, remoteness in time goes to the weight of the evidence and not to its admissibility. State v. Schultz, 88 N.C. App. 197, 362 S.E.2d 853 (1987).

Prior Bad Act. — Where the testimony tended to prove that defendant's prior acts of sexual abuse occurred continuously over a period of twenty-six years, the prior bad acts were not too remote in time to be considered evidence of defendant's common plan or scheme to sexually abuse female family members. State v. Frazier, 344 N.C. 611, 476 S.E.2d 297 (1996).

Evidence of a party's mental or physical condition at a time remote from the execution of a document is generally not admissible, but where he has a progressive degenerative illness, evidence of his condition some years prior to and after the date of execution may be admissible to show the onset of the disorder and the gradual deterioration of the party's mind and will. Matthews v. James, 88 N.C. App. 32, 362 S.E.2d 594 (1987), cert. denied, 322 N.C. 112, 367 S.E.2d 913 (1988).

Evidence of decedent's mental condition over a year before the critical time was admissible, and was not too remote. Caudill v. Smith, 117 N.C. App. 64, 450 S.E.2d 8 (1994).

Even relevant evidence may be excluded if its probative value is outweighed by the danger that it will confuse or mislead the jury. State v. Knox, 78 N.C. App. 493, 337 S.E.2d 154 (1985).

Regardless of a statement's relevancy, the court retains discretionary authority to exclude it if its probative value is substantially outweighed by its unfairly inflammatory effect. State v. Hamilton, 77 N.C. App. 506, 335 S.E.2d 506 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 593, 341 S.E.2d 33 (1986).

The admissibility of demonstrative or experimental evidence depends, as does any other piece of evidence, upon whether its probative value is outweighed by the potential undue prejudicial effect it may have on defendant's case. State v. Hunt, 80 N.C. App. 190, 341 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

Foundation for Courtroom Demonstration. — In the case of a courtroom demonstration, the demonstrator may not need to be qualified as an expert in the same way as an experimenter, but a proper foundation must still be laid as to the person's familiarity with the thing he or she is demonstrating. State v. Hunt, 80 N.C. App. 190, 341 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

Evidence of Psychological Trauma. — The trial court should balance the probative value of evidence of post-traumatic stress, or rape trauma, syndrome against its prejudicial impact under this rule. It should also determine whether admission of this evidence would be helpful to the trier of fact under Evidence Rule 702. State v. Hall, 330 N.C. 808, 412 S.E.2d 883 (1992).

In a trial on rape charges, evidence that the victim has suffered a conversion reaction may be admitted for corroborative purposes to the same extent as evidence that she has suffered from post-traumatic stress syndrome; however, admission of evidence on these two psychological phenomena constituted error where it was offered for the substantive purpose of proving that a rape did in fact occur. State v. Hall, 330 N.C. 808, 412 S.E.2d 883 (1992).

Evidence of Intent. — Evidence of robbery of a restaurant committed by defendants one week prior to the attempted robbery in case at issue was sufficiently similar to show intent. State v. Davis, 340 N.C. 1, 455 S.E.2d 627, cert. denied, 516 U.S. 846, 116 S. Ct. 136, 133 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1995).

The fact that victim had in his possession videotapes which depicted violent homosexual acts had little tendency to show that the victim was the aggressor with intent to sodomize the defendant. State v. Lovin, 339 N.C. 695, 454 S.E.2d 229 (1995).

Waiver of Objection. — Where arresting officer's opinion that defendant possessed marijuana was of minimal probative value since the purposes for admitting "chain of circumstances" evidence could have easily been accomplished without the arresting officer's opinion, defendant waived any objection under this rule on appeal since defendant admitted during his direct examination the truth of the State's allegation that he possessed marijuana at the time of his arrest. State v. Agee, 93 N.C. App. 346, 378 S.E.2d 533 (1989), aff'd, 326 N.C. 542, 391 S.E.2d 171 (1990).

Discretion of Trial Judge. — Whether or not to exclude evidence under this rule is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Mason, 315 N.C. 724, 340 S.E.2d 430 (1986); State v. Penley, 318 N.C. 30, 347 S.E.2d 783 (1986); State v. Brooks, 83 N.C. App. 179, 349 S.E.2d 630 (1986); State v. Morrison, 84 N.C. App. 41, 351 S.E.2d 810 (1987); State v. Frazier, 319 N.C. 388, 354 S.E.2d 475 (1987); State v. Morrison, 85 N.C. App. 511, 355 S.E.2d 182 (1987); State v. Hall, 85 N.C. App. 447, 355 S.E.2d 250, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 515, 358 S.E.2d 525 (1987); State v. Mack, 87 N.C. App. 24, 359 S.E.2d 485 (1987); State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990); State v. Anderson, 350 N.C. 152, 513 S.E.2d 296

Whether to exclude evidence under this rule is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court; however, where the trial court has discretion, but erroneously fails to exercise it and rules as a matter of law, the prejudiced party is entitled to have the matter reconsidered. State v. Cotton, 318 N.C. 663, 351 S.E.2d 277 (1987).

Whether or not to exclude evidence under this rule because its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Schultz, 88 N.C. App. 197, 362 S.E.2d 853 (1987).

Whether or not to exclude evidence under this rule is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court, and his ruling may be reversed for an abuse of discretion only upon a showing that it was so arbitrary that it could not have been the result of a reasoned decision. State v. Jones, 89 N.C. App. 584, 367 S.E.2d 139 (1988).

Whether evidence should be excluded under this Rule is ordinarily a decision within the trial court's discretion. State v. Robertson, 115 N.C. App. 249, 444 S.E.2d 643 (1994).

The appellate court will not intervene where the trial court has properly weighed both the probative and prejudicial value of evidence and made its ruling accordingly. Tomika Invs., Inc. v. Macedonia True Vine Pentecostal Holiness Church of God, 136 N.C. App. 493, 524 S.E.2d 591 (2000).

Clearly False Statement. — The admission of a statement that is so clearly false and that is made by a witness who is unavailable to testify or be cross-examined would be misleading to a jury. State v. Brown, 335 N.C. 477, 439 S.E.2d 589 (1994).

In a trial before a judge without a jury, it is presumed that the judge disregarded any incompetent evidence and did not draw inferences from testimony otherwise competent which would render such testimony incompetent. In re Paul, 84 N.C. App. 491, 353 S.E.2d 254, cert. denied, 319 N.C. 673, 356 S.E.2d 779 (1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1004, 108 S. Ct. 694, 98 L. Ed. 2d 646 (1988).

Admission of expert testimony regarding memory factors is within trial court's discretion, and appellate court will not intervene where trial court properly appraises probative and prejudicial value of evidence under § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. Cotton, 99 N.C. App. 615, 394 S.E.2d 456 (1990), aff'd, 329 N.C. 764, 407 S.E.2d 514 (1991).

Factors Entering into Expert's Opinion. — Although court was not required to conduct a balancing test under this section in the sentencing proceeding, it correctly allowed admission of evidence of list of serial killers defendant possessed near the time of two murders as relevant for cross-examination of mental health expert, because jury was entitled to know to what extent, if any, these materials entered into the expert's opinion regarding defendant's state of mind. State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct. 951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

Evidence of Common Malpractice Carrier. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion by granting motion in limine which suppressed evidence that defendant and two of his expert witnesses shared a common malpractice carrier. Warren v. Jackson, 125 N.C. App. 96, 479 S.E.2d 278 (1997).

Terminology of Expert. — Doctor's use of the term "homicidal assault" was not a legal term of art, nor correlated to a criminal offense and the testimony related a proper opinion for an expert in the field of forensic pathology; thus, the trial court did not err in allowing the testimony. State v. Flippen, 344 N.C. 689, 477 S.E.2d 158 (1996).

II. PHOTOGRAPHS AND VIDEOTAPES.

Photographs Held Relevant. — Color autopsy photographs, although gruesome, were relevant to illustrate the testimony of the pathologist and were illustrative of testimony regarding the number and nature of the victim's wounds and were therefore admissible. State v. Rose, 335 N.C. 301, 439 S.E.2d 518, cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1246, 114 S. Ct. 2770, 129 L. Ed. 2d 883 (1994), overruled in part on other grounds, State v. Buchanan, — N.C. — 543 S.E.2d 823 (2001).

Photographs which showed numerous gunshot wounds were relevant to show not only the cause of death, but were also relevant as a means of proving the premeditation and deliberation elements of first-degree murder. State v. Brown, 335 N.C. 477, 439 S.E.2d 589 (1994).

Photographs of the decedent admitted into evidence that were illustrative of testimony regarding the nature and number of the victim's wounds and the condition of the body upon discovery and of the crime scene were properly admitted. State v. Williams, 341 N.C. 1, 459 S.E.2d 208 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1128, 116 S. Ct. 945, 133 L. Ed. 2d 870 (1996).

The relevance of fifty-one photographs was upheld where these photographs, albeit numerous, were unique in subject matter and in detail in that they (1) depicted the exceedingly large number of wounds inflicted upon different parts of the victim's body by various weapons, including a knife, a drill bit, a pipe, an ax head, and a limb or pruning saw, (2) depicted the condition of the body, its location, and the crime scene, (3) corroborated defendant's confession by demonstrating that the victim was attacked in his bedroom, that he fell to the floor with his head toward the closet, that he was stabbed while on the floor, and that his neck was cut with a saw while on the floor. State v. Hyde, 352 N.C. 37, 530 S.E.2d 281 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1114, 121 S. Ct. 862, 148 L. Ed. 2d 775 (2001).

A photograph depicting blood in victim's grocery store, which resulted from a head injury defendant inflicted on victim when he struck him with a gun during robbery, and the accompanying testimony were relevant to support the existence of the aggravating circumstance that defendant had been previously convicted of a felony involving the use of violence to the person. State v. Blakeney, 352 N.C. 287, 531 S.E.2d 799 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1117, 121 S. Ct. 868, 148 L. Ed. 2d 780 (2001).

Discretion of Court. — What represents an excessive number of photographs and whether the photographic evidence is more probative than prejudicial are matters within the sound discretion of the trial court. State v. Flippen, 344 N.C. 689, 477 S.E.2d 158 (1996).

Proper Inquiry Regarding Admissibility of Photographs. — Critical to the trial court's inquiry into the admissibility of a photograph is the determination that it does not unduly reiterate illustrative evidence already presented. When a photograph adds nothing to the State's case, then its probative value is nil, and nothing remains but its tendency to prejudice. State v. Hennis, 323 N.C. 279, 372 S.E.2d 523 (1988).

What a photograph depicts, its level of detail and scale, whether it is color or black and white, a slide or a print, where and how it is projected or presented, the scope and clarity of the testimony it accompanies — these are all factors the trial court must examine in determining the illustrative value of photographic evidence and in weighing its use by the State against its tendency to prejudice the jury. State v. Hennis, 323 N.C. 279, 372 S.E.2d 523 (1988).

The test for excess in the use of photographs is not formulaic; the trial court's task is to examine both the content and the manner in which photographic evidence is used, and to scrutinize the totality of circumstances composing that presentation. State v. Hennis, 323 N.C. 279, 372 S.E.2d 523 (1988).

Repetitive photographs may be introduced, even if they are gruesome or revolting, as long as they are used for illustrative purposes and are not offered solely to arouse prejudice or passion of the jury. State v. Flippen, 344 N.C. 689, 477 S.E.2d 158 (1996).

When the use of photographs that have inflammatory potential is excessive or repetitious, the probative value of such evidence is eclipsed by its tendency to prejudice the jury. State v. Hennis, 323 N.C. 279, 372 S.E.2d 523 (1988).

Photographs Held Not Excessive. — Photographs of the murder victim, including one illustrating the visible wounds on the decedent's body, were not excessive. State v. Larrimore, 340 N.C. 119, 456 S.E.2d 789 (1995).

Where a party introduces photographs for illustrative purposes and not solely to arouse prejudice or passion, they are admissible even if revolting and repetitious. State v. Daughtry, 340 N.C. 488, 459 S.E.2d 747 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1079, 116 S. Ct. 789, 133 L. Ed. 2d 739 (1996).

Where defendant conceded that the autopsy photographs of the victim were used to illustrate the testimony of the medical examiner, the defendant failed to show that the photographs were unduly prejudicial or that their admission was not proper. State v. Norwood, 344 N.C. 511, 476 S.E.2d 349 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1158, 117 S. Ct. 1341, 137 L. Ed. 2d 500 (1997).

The admission of two photographs depicting the victim's damaged car did not result in unfair prejudice to defendant where the court instructed the jury that the photographs were being admitted only for the purpose of illustrating the investigating trooper's testimony; although blood was visible in both photographs, and prominent in one, the photographs were not gruesome, horrifying, or revolting. State v. Gray, 137 N.C. App. 345, 528 S.E.2d 46 (2000).

Defendant's Photograph Admissible to Contradict Self-Defense Theory. — A photograph of defendant which only illustrated his facial features and showed he looked like a "mean kind of fellow" was admissible to demonstrate that defendant was neither injured nor disheveled and to contradict defendant's theory of self-defense. State v. Washington, 141 N.C. App. 354, 540 S.E.2d 388 (2000), cert denied, 353 N.C. 396, 547 S.E.2d 427 (2001).

Photographs Held Properly Admitted. — Photographs of decedent's body after he had been shot illustrated testimony with respect to the crime scene in general, the location and position of the body when found, and the wounds suffered by the deceased, and it was therefore within the trial court's discretion to allow these pictures into evidence. State v. Smith, 320 N.C. 404, 358 S.E.2d 329 (1987).

While some photographic evidence at issue was gruesome, there was no suggestion slide projections were done unfairly, there was no needless repetition of photographs and presentation of each photograph or slide was accompanied by competent testimony of witnesses, which photographic evidence illustrated; thus, trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting photographic evidence to be used. State

v. Robinson, 327 N.C. 346, 395 S.E.2d 402 (1990).

The defaced photographs of victim's wife given to murder victim by defendant, considered with the original photographs defendant gave to the wife moments before the shooting, were important, highly probative evidence for the state. This evidence tended to show defendant's hostility toward the victim and his bizarre preoccupation with the victim's wife during the four months immediately before the shooting. The probative value of this evidence to show malice was not outweighed by the potential for unfair prejudice. State v. Terry, 329 N.C. 191, 404 S.E.2d 658 (1991).

Admission in murder trial of color photographs and slides picturing the victim's body and of testimony about the condition of the body when found including the fact that it was infested with maggots, did not constitute an abuse of discretion. State v. Wynne, 329 N.C. 507, 406 S.E.2d 812 (1991); State v. Trull, 349 N.C. 428, 509 S.E.2d 178 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 835, 120 S. Ct. 95, 145 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1999).

Where doctor who performed autopsy used one photograph showing victim's bare breast to illustrate his testimony about the cause of death and the nature and location of the wound, the danger of redundant and excessive use of potentially inflammatory photographs was not present, and the trial court acted within its sound discretion in ruling under § 8C-1, Rule 403 that the probative value of the unaltered photograph was not substantially outweighed by any prejudice. State v. Butler, 331 N.C. 227, 415 S.E.2d 719 (1992).

Defendant failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion in denying his motion to exclude gun and photograph of gun from evidence. State v. Thompson, 332 N.C. 204, 420 S.E.2d 395 (1992).

Where photographs of a homicide victim's body were not excessive in number and were used solely for the purpose of illustrating a medical examiner's testimony, the trial court did not err in admitting them into evidence. State v. Mahaley, 332 N.C. 583, 423 S.E.2d 58 (1992), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1089, 115 S. Ct. 749, 130 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1995).

Photograph of rape victim was properly admitted for the limited purpose of illustrating witness medical examiner's testimony as to cause of death. State v. McCollum, 334 N.C. 208, 433 S.E.2d 144 (1993), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1254, 114 S. Ct. 2784, 129 L. Ed. 2d 895, reh'g denied, 512 U.S. 1278, 115 S. Ct. 26, 129 L. Ed. 2d 924 (1994).

There was no abuse of discretion in the admission of photographs where each photograph related to material events and facts to which each identifying witness was testifying and further, the testimony of each witness whose testimony the photographs illustrated related to different aspects of the case and served different purposes. State v. Gray, 337 N.C. 772, 448 S.E.2d 794 (1994).

Photographs of defendants' home were properly admitted for the purpose of illustrating four witnesses' testimony. Raintree Homeowners Ass'n v. Bleimann, 116 N.C. App. 561, 449 S.E.2d 13, rev'd on other grounds, 342 N.C. 159, 463 S.E.2d 72 (1995).

Photographs which depicted the victim's fatal wound may have been prejudicial to the defendant, but they were not unfairly so. They were not excessive in number, repetitious or peculiarly gruesome, were properly used to illustrate the testimony of deputy sheriff, and as such, their admission by the trial court did not amount to an abuse of discretion. State v. Huggins, 338 N.C. 494, 450 S.E.2d 479 (1994).

Where there was no evidence that photograph was used solely to arouse the passions of the jury but was used to illustrate testimony concerning defendant's possession and control of the murder weapon, because the photograph had probative value and there was minimal potential for any unfair prejudice, the trial court did not abuse its discretion; this assignment of error was overruled. State v. Thibodeaux, 341 N.C. 53, 459 S.E.2d 501 (1995).

Admission of photo was not error where the photograph was used for illustrative purposes during nephew's testimony to describe his aunt and uncle while alive. State v. Goode, 341 N.C. 513, 461 S.E.2d 631 (1995).

Videotape and photographs of crime scene and autopsy photographs of child who had been brutally raped and murdered were properly admitted. State v. Kandies, 342 N.C. 419, 467 S.E.2d 67 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 894, 117 S. Ct. 237, 136 L. Ed. 2d 167 (1996).

The State may introduce photographs into evidence although the defendant stipulates the cause of death. State v. French, 342 N.C. 863, 467 S.E.2d 412 (1996).

The probative value of the gruesome photographs outweighed the prejudice where they were used to show the circumstances of the killing and to establish the extent of the victim's head wound. State v. Ocasio, 344 N.C. 568, 476 S.E.2d 281 (1996).

Seven photographs of the victim were properly admitted where they were used during the testimony of a police officer to show the location, position, and condition of the body when it was discovered and used to illustrate a pathologist's testimony. State v. Warren, 348 N.C. 80, 499 S.E.2d 431 (1998).

Photographs of the victims' bodies at the crime scene, and the victims' bodies during autopsy were admissible in a prosecution for aiding and abetting first-degree murder, since the photographs depicted the condition and location of the bodies at the time they were found or showed a unique perspective or contained unique details or subject matter. State v. Goode, 350 N.C. 247, 512 S.E.2d 414 (1999).

Court properly allowed photographs of victims before and after their deaths where it gave due consideration to counsel's objection and arguments and found the photos relevant, not repetitive, and no more gruesome than photos from other murders of the same nature, and where the probative value of the photos outweighed the danger of any prejudice to the defendant. State v. Morganherring, 350 N.C. 701, 517 S.E.2d 622 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1024, 120 S. Ct. 1432, 146 L. Ed. 2d 322 (2000).

Photographs and videotape were properly admitted where each photograph at issue illustrated, in some unique respect, the manner in which the victim was killed, including depiction of electrical wire used to bind the victim at the wrists, knees, and ankles, and the videotape uniquely depicted the condition and location of the victim's body in the context of the crime scene; both illustrated witness testimony. State v. Blakeney, 352 N.C. 287, 531 S.E.2d 799 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1117, 121 S. Ct. 868, 148 L. Ed. 2d 780 (2001).

Admission of Photographs Held Error. — The admission into evidence of 26 photographs taken at the victims' autopsies which added nothing to the State's case as already delineated in crime scene slides and their accompanying testimony, was error; given the absence of additional probative value, these photographs—grotesque and macabre in and of themselves—had potential only for inflaming the jurors. State v. Hennis, 323 N.C. 279, 372 S.E.2d 523 (1988).

The prejudicial effect of photographs used repetitiously in a murder case was compounded by the manner in which the photographs were presented, where an unusually large screen was erected on a wall directly over defendant's head such that the jury would continually have him in its vision as it viewed the slides. This was a manner of presentation that in itself quite probably enhanced the prejudicial impact of the slides themselves. State v. Hennis, 323 N.C. 279, 372 S.E.2d 523 (1988).

Admittance of Videotape Recordings. — The basic principles governing the admissibility of photographs apply also to motion pictures. Videotape recordings may be admitted into evidence where they are relevant and have been properly authenticated. State v. Billings, 104 N.C. App. 362, 409 S.E.2d 707 (1991).

A relevant videotape may be played for a jury even if gory and gruesome if not used solely to arouse the passions of the jury. State v. French, 342 N.C. 863, 467 S.E.2d 412 (1996).

A videotape of capital murder defendant's stepdaughter made 49 days before her death was properly admitted, where the videotape of the two-year-old, thirty pound victim was probative of the State's case to show why it would be especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel for a man as large and powerful as defendant to murder the child with his hands while she was in his care. State v. Flippen, 349 N.C. 264, 506 S.E.2d 702 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1135, 119 S. Ct. 1813, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1015 (1999).

Statements of Defendant on Videotape. — If a videotape contains incriminating statements by the defendant, upon his objection, the judge must conduct a voir dire to determine the admissibility of any in-custody statements or admissions in the tape. State v. Billings, 104 N.C. App. 362, 409 S.E.2d 707 (1991).

Sequence of Events Video. — Admission of videotape showing the sequence of events at issue in the defendant's murder trial, even if shown in slow motion, was not an abuse of discretion because of the videotape's probative value. State v. Brewington, 343 N.C. 448, 471 S.E.2d 398 (1996).

Conduct of Defendant on Videotape. — Where a videotape depicts conduct of a defendant in a criminal case, the trial judge should grant a request from the defense to preview the tape. State v. Billings, 104 N.C. App. 362, 409 S.E.2d 707 (1991).

Condensed videotape which included footage of a body being turned over, placed in a body bag and on a stretcher, then transported to elevator for removal was relevant to illustrate the crime scene prior to the arrival of medical personnel and was neither excessive nor cumulative evidence. State v. Leazer, 337 N.C. 454, 446 S.E.2d 54 (1994).

Motion Pictures. — The principles that govern the admissibility of photographs apply to motion pictures as well. State v. French, 342 N.C. 863, 467 S.E.2d 412 (1996).

III. PREJUDICIAL EVIDENCE, EVIDENCE EXCLUDED BASED ON CONFUSION, ETC.

Refusal to Exclude Evidence of Other Killings Held Prejudicial. — In trial for murder of defendant's husband, rulings of the trial judge denying defendant's motion in limine to exclude evidence implicating her in other killings was held to have impermissibly chilled her right to testify in her own defense. State v. Lamb, 321 N.C. 633, 365 S.E.2d 600 (1988).

Evidence of One Murder in Support of Another. — The defendant failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion in permitting evidence of one murder to show opportunity and identity in support of another murder. State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct.

951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

Evidence of Offense for Which Defendant Acquitted Not Admissible. — The State may not introduce in a subsequent criminal trial evidence of a prior alleged offense for which defendant had been tried and acquitted in an earlier trial. Where the probative value of such evidence depends upon defendant's having in fact committed the prior alleged offense, his acquittal of the offense in an earlier trial so divests the evidence of probative value that, as a matter of law, it cannot outweigh the tendency of such evidence unfairly to prejudice the defendant. State v. Scott, 331 N.C. 39, 413 S.E.2d 787 (1992).

Evidence Improperly Admitted. — In prosecution charging defendant with being an accessory before the fact to second degree murder, where the real effect of questions about devil worship, satanic bibles, graveyard seances, and the like could only have been to arouse the passion and prejudice of the jury, and where relative veracity of the State's two accomplice witnesses and the defendant was critical, the trial court committed reversible error in permitting the district attorney, over objection, to ask defendant questions about devil worshipping activities. State v. Kimbrell, 320 N.C. 762, 360 S.E.2d 691 (1987).

It was reversible error for the trial court to allow extrinsic evidence of prior inconsistent statements to impeach defense witness' testimony when that testimony concerned matters collateral to the issues in the case (what he did or did not tell his parole officer), and had that evidence not been erroneously admitted there was a reasonable possibility of a different result. See State v. Williams, 322 N.C. 452, 368 S.E.2d 624 (1988).

There can be no question that prejudice resulted from the testimony that defendant had returned to witness's motel room three hours after the murder occurred with "mud or grass" stains on the knees of his pants, and that he was "very nervous and upset" and wanted to "get drunk" and did so, and the prejudicial effect of this testimony far outweighed the need to show witness to be less than credible (especially where the remainder of her testimony included little of value in the state's case) or the need to bolster officer's credibility. State v. Hunt, 324 N.C. 343, 378 S.E.2d 754 (1989).

In a first-degree murder case evidence that insulation particles in defendant's clothing had apparently come from the attic used to gain access to the victim's apartment did not prove that he killed her, but was relevant to the State's case since evidence is relevant if it has any logical tendency, however slight, to prove a fact in issue, and certainly a fact of consequence was the presence of fiber on the defendant's clothing consistent with that found in the victim's apartment. State v. Crandell, 322 N.C. 487, 369 S.E.2d 579 (1988).

Evidence that approximately two weeks before he killed victim the defendant threatened to kill him, or to kill a group of which he was a member, was relevant and admissible as evidence tending to show premeditation and deliberation and to negate self-defense. State v. Groves, 324 N.C. 360, 378 S.E.2d 763 (1989).

Where defendant was accused of sexually abusing his 14-year-old adopted daughter, the trial court erred in admitting testimony of alleged prior bad acts committed by defendant; namely, defendant's alleged frequent nudity, his alleged frequent fondling of himself, and an adulterous affair in which he was allegedly involved, as under the circumstances of this case, the admission of such evidence was highly prejudicial and of questionable relevance. State v. Maxwell, 96 N.C. App. 19, 384 S.E.2d 553 (1989), cert. denied, 326 N.C. 53, 389 S.E.2d 83 (1990).

Because doctor explicitly implicated defendant in her testimony regarding post traumatic stress disorder, the effects of alleged sexual assault on victim, and because doctor specifically named defendant twice and repeatedly implicated defendant as "friend" who caused victim's post traumatic stress disorder by unexpected and "unjust" attack, probative value of doctor's testimony was outweighed by danger of unfair prejudice. Therefore its admission violated this rule. This testimony not only directly implicated defendant, but also encouraged jury's outrage about injustice of defendant's alleged act. State v. Huang, 99 N.C. App. 658, 394 S.E.2d 279 (1990), vacated in part, 107 N.C. App. 710, 421 S.E.2d 812 (1992).

The trial court erred in allowing the State to cross-examine defendant charged with a sexual offense in the first degree concerning the following items on cross-examination: photographs, a dildo, a catalogue of condoms, lubricant, and two books entitled "Sexual Intercourse" and "The Sex Book," all of which were found in his home. State v. Hinson, 102 N.C. App. 29, 401 S.E.2d 371, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 273, 407 S.E.2d 846 (1991).

The probative value of defendant's convictions in 1986 was substantially outweighed by the potential for prejudice; and the convictions should have been excluded under this rule upon defendant's motion in limine and his objection at trial. State v. Coffey, 336 N.C. 412, 444 S.E.2d 431 (1994).

The appellate court agreed with 14-year-old defendant that allegations of a subsequent sexual assault on a four-year-old were not admissible since the incident was not sufficiently similar to the one at issue involving a nine-year-old; the admission of such evidence tended only to show the propensity of the defendant to commit sexual acts against young female children, an improper purpose, and therefore entitled defendant to a new trial. State v. White, 135 N.C. App. 349, 520 S.E.2d 70 (1999).

Evidence Properly Excluded. — In an action against an insurer in which plaintiff sought to recover the cost of chiropractic services rendered to her and her two minor children as a result of injuries sustained in an automobile collision, where plaintiff testified to the extent and type of damage to her automobile as a result of the collision, the court, in the exercise of its discretion under this rule, could properly exclude the automobile repair bill by which plaintiff sought to corroborate her testimony, as this evidence was cumulative and its probative value was weak, and moreover, the potential for confusion of issues by its admission was clear. Brown v. Allstate Ins. Co., 76 N.C. App. 671, 334 S.E.2d 89 (1985).

For case in which exclusion of expert testimony of a professor of psychology, by whom defendant had sought to provide expert evidence on memory variables affecting eyewitness identification, but who had not interviewed the victim, was upheld, see State v. Knox, 78 N.C. App. 493, 337 S.E.2d 154 (1985).

Where the trial court's rulings which excluded some testimony about slander plaintiff's background excluded only a small portion of the evidence presented by defendants concerning plaintiff's background, the trial court properly exercised its discretion under this rule excluding the testimony because its probative value was substantially outweighed by a danger of unfair prejudice. Raymond U v. Duke Univ., 91 N.C. App. 171, 371 S.E.2d 701, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 629, 374 S.E.2d 590 (1988).

The evidence defendant sought to introduce in his trial for first-degree sexual offense of his two daughters, which primarily involved his marital dispute over their property would only have muddled the evidence worthy of the jury's consideration, and the trial court committed no error in precluding the introduction of evidence regarding defendant's theory that the victim's mother devised this scheme for her financial benefit. State v. Knight, 93 N.C. App. 460, 378 S.E.2d 424, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 230, 381 S.E.2d 789 (1989).

In paternity action, trial court did not err by excluding the child's birth certificate in which the name of the father was left blank. The absence of a named father on the birth certificate had little probative value and was misleading because, under § 130A-101(f), the name of the father of an illegitimate child may not be entered on the child's birth certificate without the father's sworn consent. State v. McInnis, 102 N.C. App. 338, 401 S.E.2d 774, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 274, 407 S.E.2d 848 (1991).

The trial court did not err by excluding hospital records which purported to show that the mother, a father and child were "bonding"; the hospital records had little probative value and were misleading because no evidence was presented identifying the male person who could have been a relative or friend. State v. McInnis, 102 N.C. App. 338, 401 S.E.2d 774, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 274, 407 S.E.2d 848 (1991).

Because the document was remote in time, failed to specify to whom the document was referring, and failed to show a definite susceptibility of propounder to influence testatrix, its probative value was substantially outweighed by its danger of prejudice, and the trial court properly exercised its discretion in excluding the evidence. In re Will of Prince, 109 N.C. App. 58, 425 S.E.2d 711 (1993).

Where officer saw two small bottles of liquor in a purse but had no reason to believe that alcohol consumption contributed to car accident, the probative value of this evidence was outweighed by its prejudicial potential. Browning v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 114 N.C. App. 229, 441 S.E.2d 607 (1994), aff'd, 340 N.C. 254, 456 S.E.2d 307 (1995).

Trial court acted within its sound discretion as required by this rule and properly excluded testimony of three defense witnesses regarding defendant/wife's claims of domestic violence and mysogynistic behavior of husband. State v. Owen, 133 N.C. App. 543, 516 S.E.2d 159 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 117, 540 S.E.2d 743 (1999).

The trial court made a meticulous effort to perform the balancing test pursuant to this rule while redacting statements from defendant's interview and did not abuse its discretion in doing so; while the court redacted statements which contain the child-victim's observations about sexual activity around her home and which the defendant claimed might have been relevant in determining why she made certain statements involving him, the trial court also carefully excluded from the jury's consideration statements by defendant regarding his murder conviction in the State of Tennessee and his sexual relationship with his half-sister. State v. Campbell, 142 N.C. App. 145, 541 S.E.2d 803 (2001).

The trial court properly refused to permit plaintiff to offer insurer's original answer, admitting liability as evidence to contradict its amended answer denying liability, where the probative value of the answers was substantially outweighed by the danger of prejudice and confusion of the issues by the jury. Warren v. GMC, 142 N.C. App. 316, 542 S.E.2d 317 (2001).

Claim Estimates by Insurer Properly Excluded. — In personal injury action against plaintiff's UIM insurer, admitting claim estimates prepared by the insurer would unduly prejudice the defense and circumvent the policy of having the jury focus on the facts and not the existence of liability insurance. Braddy v. Nationwide Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 122 N.C. App. 402, 470 S.E.2d 820 (1996).

Medical Record Properly Excluded. — In a case arising from an automobile accident which plaintiff testified resulted in injury to her neck, shoulder and thoracic spine, the court properly excluded evidence from her 10-year-old medical record indicating "longstanding mid-thoracic pain" and "paraspinal muscle pain" along with the testimony of defense witness/doctor regarding disputed medical record. Sitton v. Cole, 135 N.C. App. 625, 521 S.E.2d 739 (1999).

Evidence of subsequent remedial measures in the form of written instructions to security guards was properly excluded since it could not be used to impeach testimony and since its probative value tended to be outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Benton v. Hillcrest Foods, Inc., 136 N.C. App. 42, 524S.E.2d 53 (1999).

Evidence Held Prejudicial. — Evidence of prior sexual assaults against a witness, which happened seven years before a similar sexual assault for which defendant was charged, was prejudicial to defendant's fundamental right to a fair trial because the prior acts were too remote in time. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 585, 369 S.E.2d 822 (1988).

Where counsel for the defendant asked over 60 questions referencing an action arising out of events occurring some 12 to 14 years earlier and these inquiries related to an extremely remote event, they were minimally probative when compared to their prejudicial effect, and were therefore proscribed by this rule; further, the continued repetitive questioning reflected the harassment and "needless consumption of time" that Rule 611(a) prohibits. Weston v. Daniels, 114 N.C. App. 418, 442 S.E.2d 69 (1994), cert. denied, 336 N.C. 785, 447 S.E.2d 433 (1994).

Where the probative value of witness's testimony to prove intent, common scheme, plan, modus operandi, or absence of mistake directly depended on defendant having committed the crime about which she testified, defendant's acquittal of the offense in an earlier trial so divested the evidence of probative value that, as a matter of law, it could not outweigh the tendency of such evidence to unfairly prejudice the defendant. State v. Robinson, 115 N.C. App. 358, 444 S.E.2d 475, cert. denied, 337 N.C. 697, 448 S.E.2d 538 (1994).

Interjecting evidence which would allow the jury to infer the defendant's immaturity so that the jury could infer that he lacked capacity to form the requisite intent would have unnecessarily confused the issues; therefore, even if this evidence was relevant and admissible, its exclusion was within the trial court's discretion. State v. Huggins, 338 N.C. 494, 450 S.E.2d 479 (1994).

Exclusion of Evidence Held Harmless — Trial court's decision to prevent defendant's expert from relating statements made by defendant to him and used by him to form the basis of his expert opinion of defendant's mental state at the time of the homicide, if an abuse of discretion, was harmless error since the same information was related in answers given by the expert to other questions. State v. Holston, 134 N.C. App. 599, 518 S.E.2d 216 (1999).

Character of Victim. — Defendant failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion by excluding the testimony of witnesses where his theory that the testimony was relevant because it showed that the victim had been involved in a shooting incident a few hours prior to his death, providing someone other than the defendant with a motive to kill him, was pure conjecture, and the proffered testimony was prejudicial to the state in that it suggested the victim was himself a violent person. State v. McCray, 342 N.C. 123, 463 S.E.2d 176 (1995).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that evidence was being offered to unfairly prejudice the State, to confuse the issues, and to mislead the jury by inflaming the jury's passions against murder victim by implying that she was involved in an interracial relationship and that she was a drug user. State v. Julian, 345 N.C. 608, 481 S.E.2d 280 (1997).

Admission of Prejudicial Evidence within the Discretion of the Court. — The court determined within its discretion that the probative value of the admission of the unredacted version of the incident report, obtained through a subpoena duces tecum, when the redacted version had previously been introduced into evidence, outweighed its tendency to prejudice the defendant. Kilgo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 138 N.C. App. 644, 531 S.E.2d 883 (2000).

Evidence Improperly Excluded. — Where the trial court erred by not allowing the defendant to question the complainant in the presence of the jury regarding the allegation of rape made five months earlier and subsequently withdrawn, defendant was entitled to a new trial because there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different. State v. Ginyard, 122 N.C. App. 25, 468 S.E.2d 525 (1996).

Probative Value of Evidence Outweighed Danger of Unfair Prejudice. — The prosecutor's cross-examination of defendant about a specific prison infraction was properly allowed in light of defendant's extensive testimony on direct examination regarding the amount of time that defendant was confined to lockup at various institutions throughout the prison system. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, —

U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

IV. ADMISSION OR EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE NOT PREJUDICIAL.

Cumulative Character Evidence. — It was not error for the trial judge, in a trial for first degree sexual offense, after the defendant had called and examined six character witnesses, to ask him to list his seven remaining character witnesses and have them stand and state their names and addresses, where the jury was informed by the comments of the court and counsel that these witnesses were present to attest to the defendant's good character and reputation in the community. State v. Ramey, 318 N.C. 457, 349 S.E.2d 566 (1986).

The probative value of defendant's prior conviction for involuntary manslaughter was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect in a capital murder case and was, therefore, clearly admissible as an aggravating factor in the sentencing phase of defendant's trial where defendant admitted the conviction and stipulated to it. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of State v. Anderson, 85 N.C. App. 104, 354 S.E.2d 264.

Where the trial court, by sustaining the prosecutor's objection to a question, did nothing more than exclude cumulative evidence, the trial court's action did not constitute error. State v. Barton, 335 N.C. 696, 441 S.E.2d 295 (1994).

Evidence of Sexual Activity in Paternity Case. — Character evidence is generally not admitted in civil cases unless it is character which is in issue because this evidence is often more prejudicial than probative. Where, however, evidence of sexual activity and promiscuity goes to a central element of the case, i.e., opportunity to impregnate plaintiff, whether or not other men had the opportunity to father child born out of wedlock is of ultimate relevance to the issue of paternity. In addition, this nongenetic outside information, as a factor in the probability of paternity calculation, must be received in order for the jury to weigh the expert's assumptions underlying the calculation of numerical probability of paternity. State ex rel. Williams v. Coppedge, 105 N.C. App. 470, 414 S.E.2d 81, rev'd on other grounds, 332 N.C. 654, 422 S.E.2d 691 (1992).

Evidence from Sexual Assault Kit. — The results of a test based on the "Phadebas methodology" were not excludable under this section, where the test confirmed the presence of saliva on the vaginal swab taken from the victim's sexual assault kit, which served to corroborate the victim's testimony that the defendant had placed his mouth on her vagina. State v. Dennis, 129 N.C. App. 686, 500 S.E.2d 765 (1998).

Evidence regarding victim's cash advances to defendant and the victims real estate dealings with defendant shed light on their relationship at the time of the victim's death and was relevant; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by declining to exclude this evidence pursuant to this Rule. State v. Bishop, 346 N.C. 365, 488 S.E.2d 769 (1997).

Evidence of Prior Shooting. — Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of a prior shooting committed by defendant since the prior shooting was similar to the shooting with which defendant was accused at trial and the prior shooting was not too remote in time; further, the trial court did not have to consider the years defendant served in prison for the prior shooting in determining remoteness. State v. Lloyd, 354 N.C. 76, 552 S.E.2d 596 (2001).

Repressed Memory of Evidence of Prior Crime. — Repressed memory evidence of sexual offense committed by defendant was not unfairly prejudicial where the evidence's value in proving a common plan or scheme outweighed the danger of such prejudice. State v. Williamson, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 54, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 945 (2001).

Cross-Examination Upheld. — The defendant on trial for nine murders was not prejudiced by the cross-examination of expert witnesses concerning two additional murders he had committed. State v. Wallace, 351 N.C. 481, 528 S.E.2d 326 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1018, 121 S. Ct. 581, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

Cross-Examination to Establish Motive Proper. — Where State did not cross-examine defendant in murder case about an unrelated rape accusation to show defendant was unworthy of belief because of this alleged bad act, but for purpose of establishing defendant's motive for the crime for which he was on trial, the cross-examination was proper. State v. Meekins, 326 N.C. 689, 392 S.E.2d 346 (1990).

Admission of Improper Evidence Not Prejudicial. — The admission of evidence concerning the defendant's convictions of failure to follow a truck route and improper turning was improper under § 8C-1, Rule 609, but the error was not prejudicial to the defendant in prosecution for driving while his license was revoked, where the defendant admitted driving the van while his license was revoked. State v. Gainey, 84 N.C. App. 107, 351 S.E.2d 819 (1987).

Watch and ring taken from victim of rape and kidnapping were "relevant" in defendant's trial for those offenses, because they tended to make the existence of a fact of consequence — defendant's connection to the offenses with which he was charged — more probable than it would be without the evidence, and their admission was not unduly prejudicial. State v. Mercer, 317 N.C. 87, 343 S.E.2d 885 (1986).

State's exhibits, which included $5,900 in United States currency, rolling papers and pipe, electric digital scales, a triple beam balance scale, a water bong, a plastic bag containing white powder, an airline bag in which the white powder was found and a briefcase with documents, with the exception of the briefcase, were relevant to the crime of trafficking in cocaine, in that they intended to show that defendant knowingly possessed cocaine and was trafficking in it, and the briefcase, which was in defendant's possession at the time of arrest, tended to explain or illustrate the circumstances surrounding his arrest. State v. Teasley, 82 N.C. App. 150, 346 S.E.2d 227 (1986), cert. denied, 318 N.C. 701, 351 S.E.2d 759 (1987).

In prosecution for incest, evidence tending to show that defendant had had prior sexual contact with the prosecuting witness was reasonably probative of defendant's knowledge, opportunity, intent, and plan, and was not so prejudicial as to outweigh its probative value and render it inadmissible; moreover, even if there was error in the admission of such evidence, absent a showing of a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached had the evidence been excluded, any possible error would be considered harmless. State v. Cameron, 83 N.C. App. 69, 349 S.E.2d 327 (1986).

The admission into evidence of the defendant's prior convictions for driving while impaired and for hit and run did not unfairly prejudice the defendant in prosecution for driving while his license was revoked, where the defendant admitted driving the van while his license was revoked. State v. Gainey, 84 N.C. App. 107, 351 S.E.2d 819 (1987).

Evidence merely disclosing the subsequent pregnancy of the rape victim was admissible as tending to prove penetration, an essential element of the crime of forcible rape; moreover, the victim's simple statement that she had an abortion served the purpose of corroborating both the fact of penetration and the fact of her pregnancy, and the mere fact that an abortion took place was not so inflammatory as to render it inadmissible. State v. Stanton, 319 N.C. 180, 353 S.E.2d 385 (1987).

In a prosecution for rape and sexual offense committed against a mentally defective female, the trial court did not err in allowing a pediatrician to testify on the credibility of children in general who report sexual abuse. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

Where improperly admitted evidence merely corroborated testimony from other witnesses, the Supreme Court found no reasonable possibility that the jury would have reached a different result absent the doctor's testimony. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

In view of the entire body and weight of relevant evidence presented by the State against defendant, and the utter irrelevance of a prior sex act to the charges on which defendant was ultimately convicted, the erroneous admission of a statement concerning the sex act did not constitute prejudicial error. State v. Gibson, 333 N.C. 29, 424 S.E.2d 95 (1992), overruled on other grounds, 334 N.C. 402, 432 S.E.2d 349 (1993).

Potentially Prejudicial Testimony With Limiting Instruction. — Where the court gave a limiting instruction, the probative value of the testimony evidence of defendant's former girlfriend describing defendant's prior bad acts was not substantially outweighed by its prejudicial impact. State v. Penland, 343 N.C. 634, 472 S.E.2d 734 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1098, 117 S. Ct. 781, 136 L. Ed. 2d 725 (1997).

Evidence Properly Admitted. — In a murder trial involving a 60-year-old victim who was beaten and kicked about the head in June, 1983 and died in December, 1983 of complications resulting from injury to the brain received in the incident, admission of evidence regarding victim's physical appearance at the scene and in the hospital was relevant under § 8C-1, Rule 401 on the issue of excessive force, was not prejudicial under this rule, and was not inflammatory under the old rules. State v. Moxley, 78 N.C. App. 551, 338 S.E.2d 122 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 384, 342 S.E.2d 904 (1986).

In a prosecution charging defendant with making harassing, embarrassing and annoying telephone calls in violation of § 14-196(a)(3), the actual contents of the statements attributed to defendant were relevant to show whether the intent of the telephone calls was to abuse, annoy, threaten, terrify, harass or embarrass the victims of the calls, and the trial court did not err in allowing witnesses to testify about the actual contents of the calls. State v. Boone, 79 N.C. App. 746, 340 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 708, 347 S.E.2d 442 (1986).

In prosecution for first degree rape and intercourse by a substitute parent, the trial court did not commit prejudicial error in admitting into evidence, over objection, a letter which the defendant wrote to the victim's mother, in which defendant promised not to "bother" victim again, despite defendant's contention that what he had meant was that he would not discipline the victim anymore. State v. Moses, 316 N.C. 356, 341 S.E.2d 551 (1986).

In a first degree sexual offense case, evidence of defendant's similar attempted offense some 10 weeks after his attack on victim was not unfairly prejudicial, especially since the trial judge issued limiting jury instructions regarding this evidence. State v. Bagley, 321 N.C. 201, 362 S.E.2d 244 (1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 1036, 108 S. Ct. 1598, 99 L. Ed. 2d 912 (1988).

Whether or not building met the standards of the Building Code, though not determinative of the issue of negligence, had some probative value as to whether or not defendant failed to keep his store in a reasonably safe condition, and expert testimony on this issue could properly be introduced in a negligence action against store owner. Thomas v. Dixson, 88 N.C. App. 337, 363 S.E.2d 209 (1988).

In trial for possession with intent to sell and deliver cocaine and marijuana and for sale and delivery thereof, admission of evidence that on a previous occasion, when officers went to defendant's admitted residence to purchase controlled substances from another person, an officer saw defendant inside the apartment did not constitute prejudicial error. State v. Fielder, 88 N.C. App. 463, 363 S.E.2d 662 (1988).

Where defendant was charged with raping his stepdaughter in her bunk-bed while her mother was working late at night, mother's testimony tending to show that defendant similarly took advantage of her cousin when the child was left in his custody, while in his stepdaughter's bunk-bed, while she was working late at night was admissible under the exception of § 8C-1, Rule 404(b), and trial judge did not abuse his discretion by failing to exclude this testimony under the balancing test of this rule, since the alleged incident was sufficiently similar to the act charged and not too remote in time. State v. Boyd, 321 N.C. 574, 364 S.E.2d 118 (1988).

Where young victim's testimony clearly tended to establish the relevant fact that defendant took sexual advantage of her availability and susceptibility at times when she was left in his care, victim's testimony concerning her father's other acts of sexual intercourse with her was admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 404, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to exclude such testimony under this rule. State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

Where defendant in a capital murder case testified that he had not robbed or injured the victim or anyone else, he "opened the door" to cross-examination designed to rebut his assertion, which produced evidence of prior instances of violent conduct by defendant that resulted in injury to others; there was no abuse of discretion in the refusal of the court to prohibit the cross-examination on the ground that the probative value of the evidence produced thereby was outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. State v. Darden, 323 N.C. 356, 372 S.E.2d 539 (1988).

Evidence detailing factual circumstances of prior conviction was neither excessive nor repetitious, and the trial judge exercised the necessary discretion to prevent the hearing from degenerating into a mini-trial of the prior crime. State v. Cummings, 323 N.C. 181, 372 S.E.2d 541 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Where victim testified defendant stated "they are never going to take me in again alive," the statement was probative of defendant's knowledge of his guilt, and defendant made no showing that the probative value of the statement was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. State v. Charles, 92 N.C. App. 430, 374 S.E.2d 658 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 338, 378 S.E.2d 800 (1989).

Where detective testified that defendant had told television crew that she had killed her son, the trial court did not err in admitting the detective's testimony; the evidence was not unfairly prejudicial since officer had previously testified without objection that defendant stated "It's my fault. I killed him." State v. France, 94 N.C. App. 72, 379 S.E.2d 701 (1989).

There was no abuse of discretion where the trial judge admitted evidence of prior sexual misconduct since the judge allowed the evidence for a limited purpose and specifically instructed the jury before their deliberations that they could consider this evidence only for the limited purposes of considering (i), whether or not the defendant had the necessary intent required to commit the crimes charged and (ii), whether or not there existed in the mind of the defendant a plan, scheme, system or design involving the crimes charged in these cases; moreover, the evidence was not grossly shocking or so cumulative as to mislead the jury away from the offenses for which defendant was being tried. State v. Pruitt, 94 N.C. App. 261, 380 S.E.2d 383, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 435, 384 S.E.2d 545 (1989).

In a prosecution for felonious possession of stolen property, testimony of son of property owner, who allegedly furnished defendant with the property, that he was indebted to defendant (for purchase of cocaine) was properly admitted to illustrate a possible motive, and its probative value substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice against defendant. State v. Martin, 97 N.C. App. 19, 387 S.E.2d 211 (1990).

In capital murder trial for the murder of a 10-year-old girl, this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) did not require the exclusion of evidence concerning an earlier incident when defendant had masturbated in the presence of a three-year-old girl. State v. Coffey, 326 N.C. 268, 389

Evidence of defendant's cocaine and marijuana possession occurring eight days after the last crime of sale of LSD and cocaine charged under § 90-95 was relevant and had a probative value that substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice. State v. Goldman, 326 N.C. App. 457, 389 S.E.2d 281, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 434, 395 S.E.2d 691 (1990).

In trial for first degree burglary and first degree rape, circumstantial evidence showing that defendant was the perpetrator of a rape committed five months earlier, which included both fingerprint evidence and pattern of perpetration similar to the crime charged at trial, demonstrated a potent, logical pertinence to the question of the assailant's identity in the offense on trial; thus, under the circumstances of the crime charged and those of the offense admitted, for the purpose of proving identity under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of the other, similar offense, which shared strong circumstantial indicia that defendant had been the perpetrator. State v. Jeter, 326 N.C. 457, 389 S.E.2d 805 (1990).

Murder victim's statements to her son and sister regarding defendant's threat revealed her then-existing fear of defendant, further explaining why she did not want defendant visiting her home. The prohibition of visits to the home by defendant was relevant to prove defendant's state of mind, that is, that he knew he was entering victim's home without consent. State v. Faucette, 326 N.C. 676, 392 S.E.2d 71 (1990).

Evidence that an arson defendant had previously solicited or attempted to solicit youths to commit other crimes was admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) for the purpose of showing defendant's intent, plan, design, or mode of operation and that its probative value outweighed its prejudicial effect. State v. Richardson, 100 N.C. App. 240, 395 S.E.2d 143 (1990).

The trial court did not err by admitting the finger of a murder victim burned beyond recognition, because its probative value as to the issue of identity of the victim was not substantially outweighed by any danger of unfair prejudice. State v. Eason, 328 N.C. 409, 402 S.E.2d 809 (1991).

Where a defendant showed, to the brother of a sexual-offense victim, condoms to be used "whenever they were going to make love," the prosecution's questions to defendant concerning the condoms were admissible to show proof of intent, preparation, plan, knowledge and absence of mistake. State v. Hinson, 102 N.C. App. 29, 401 S.E.2d 371, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 273, 407 S.E.2d 846 (1991).

During murder prosecution, where victim was a young woman, rebuttal testimony by a woman previously assaulted by defendant, concerning the prior assault, was admissible to clarify defendant's admission that he "beat this girl," as the jury reasonably could infer, in light of the witness' testimony, that defendant, in a "hysterical state" shortly after an aggressive sexual encounter with the victim, was referring to the victim rather than the witness when he made his admission. State v. McKinnon, 328 N.C. 668, 403 S.E.2d 474 (1991).

In case in which defendant was convicted of second degree sexual offense and first degree burglary, evidence that defendant committed a similar break-in and sexual offense approximately one month earlier, about two blocks from victim's house was admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b), to show intent, identity, common scheme, plan or design, and under this rule in that the probative value of the evidence substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice to defendant's case and the court's charge to the jury correctly stated the limited purpose of the evidence. State v. Whitaker, 103 N.C. App. 386, 405 S.E.2d 911 (1991).

In a trial for assault with a deadly weapon in which defendant claimed self-defense, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence that prior to wounding the victim, defendant placed a gun to the head of a fourteen year old boy and questioned him regarding stolen cocaine. State v. Jones, 104 N.C. App. 251, 409 S.E.2d 322 (1991).

In a case of first degree sexual offense and taking indecent liberties with two young boys, defendant's statement to detective concerning prior incidents of taking indecent liberties with two young girls was relevant to show defendant's unnatural lust, intent, or state of mind. State v. Reeder, 105 N.C. App. 343, 413 S.E.2d 580, cert. denied, 331 N.C. 290, 417 S.E.2d 68 (1992).

Tape recorded statements regarding defendant's prior crimes including a statement from defendant's own mouth that he had killed various people by sundry methods of his own volition in the past were sufficiently similar and not so remote as to run afoul of the balancing test between probative value and prejudicial effect set out in this rule. State v. Gibson, 333 N.C. 29, 424 S.E.2d 95 (1992).

In capital murder trial, trial court did not err by permitting the jury to listen to an audio tape recording of the defendant's telephone conversation with county sheriff because the tape recording was extremely probative. During the conversation, the defendant discussed problems he had experienced with his stepson, whom he shot, the defendant admitted the shooting of his stepson and the "other fellow" and stated that he told the "other guy" that he would "blow (them) away" if "the law comes out here." State v. Daniel, 333 N.C. 756, 429 S.E.2d 724 (1993).

Trial court's admission of the testimony of kidnapping victim regarding a prior incident during which defendant struck the murder victim in the back of the head with a pole and threatened to cut her throat with a butcher knife was upheld. State v. Kyle, 333 N.C. 687, 430 S.E.2d 412 (1993).

No error in the trial judge's discretionary ruling allowing the introduction of a note indicating that the victim was scared of defendant because he had threatened to kill her with a gun earlier that evening into evidence at defendant's first-degree murder trial. State v. Shoemaker, 334 N.C. 252, 432 S.E.2d 314 (1993).

The trial court did not err in admitting evidence that defendant had previously sexually assaulted another daughter pursuant to Rule 404(b) and this rule. State v. Jacob, 113 N.C. App. 605, 439 S.E.2d 812 (1994).

Court did not err in allowing testimony concerning defendant's threats to the state's principal witness, these threats were a strong indication of defendant's awareness of his own guilt. State v. Mason, 337 N.C. 165, 446 S.E.2d 58 (1994).

Where, during her account of how she was sexually assaulted, the victim testified that defendant put his hand over her mouth and told her that if she told anybody what he was going to do he was going to "hurt her like he hurt Koda", the trial court did not err in allowing defendant's statement. State v. Robertson, 115 N.C. App. 249, 444 S.E.2d 643 (1994).

There was no error where the defendant was required to place over his head a stocking recovered from co-defendant's car because the demonstration was relevant to aid the jury in assessing the credibility of the store clerk's identification of defendant. State v. Westall, 116 N.C. App. 534, 449 S.E.2d 24, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 671, 453 S.E.2d 185 (1994).

In a murder prosecution, evidence of a prior murder was properly admitted by the trial court to show identity, plan, and the existence of a common modus operandi between the two murders. State v. Moseley, 338 N.C. 1, 449 S.E.2d 412 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1091, 115 S. Ct. 1815, 131 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1995).

Chain-of-events evidence leading up to murder was properly admitted to establish defendant's intent and motive for the murders at issue, the evidence was more probative than prejudicial. State v. Rose, 339 N.C. 172, 451 S.E.2d 211 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 2565, 132 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1995).

In a prosecution for murder, testimony that a witness saw defendant dancing with the victim and that the witness called the police was relevant and properly admitted as evidence of defendant's character. Also, evidence that witness called the police because he recognized defendant only after seeing on television that defendant had been charged with another murder was not irrelevant, inflammatory, or improperly prejudicial. State v. Moseley, 338 N.C. 1, 449 S.E.2d 412 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1091, 115 S. Ct. 1815, 131 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1995).

Bloody clothing of a victim that is corroborative of the state's case, is illustrative of the testimony of a witness, or throws any light on the circumstances of the crime is relevant and admissible evidence at trial. State v. Knight, 340 N.C. 531, 459 S.E.2d 481 (1995).

Questions on alcohol use were not so prejudicial as to be improper where incident took place in a club in which alcohol was served, the prosecutrix and another witness, as well as defendant, were questioned on cross-examination as to whether they were drinking that night and defendant was not singled out by the questioning but was subjected to the same type of limited questioning on alcohol use as were the other witnesses. State v. Alkano, 119 N.C. App. 256, 458 S.E.2d 258, appeal dismissed, 341 N.C. 653, 467 S.E.2d 898 (1995).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that the probative value of the interwoven evidence of defendant's confession to murder of stepson and involvement in her husband's murder outweighed any prejudicial effect such evidence might have had against her. State v. White, 340 N.C. 264, 457 S.E.2d 841 (1995).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a rape kit and emergency room records where they were relevant to corroborate the victim's testimony that the defendant raped her and showed trauma to the victim's vaginal area tending to establish penetration. State v. McKenzie, 122 N.C. App. 37, 468 S.E.2d 817 (1996).

Where victim testified that she loved her father before the alleged sexual abuse, but that she no longer loved him, the change in her affection was relevant to show that it is likely that he committed these acts. State v. Woody, 124 N.C. App. 296, 477 S.E.2d 462 (1996).

Demonstration by doctor which used colored dowels and mannequins to illustrate testimony about the angles at which bullets entered the bodies of murder victims was probative, helpful, and not unfairly prejudicial. State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 876, 118 S. Ct. 196, 139 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1024, 118 S. Ct. 1309, 140 L. Ed. 2d 473 (1998).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting three letters which expressed the victim's love for his wife and his pain and anguish that she had left him. State v. Moody, 345 N.C. 563, 481 S.E.2d 629 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 871, 118 S. Ct. 185, 139 L. Ed. 2d 125 (1997).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion under this rule in determining the testimony of defendant's girlfriends not to be unduly prejudicial. Holt v. Williamson, 125 N.C. App. 305, 481 S.E.2d 307 (1997), cert. denied, 346 N.C. 178, 486 S.E.2d 204 (1997).

Doctor's statement about victim's pain being "excessive" which followed testimony about victim's extensive injuries in the upper abdomen, was not unfairly prejudicial. State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 900, 118 S. Ct. 248, 139 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1997).

Evidence that victim, her family members, and a friend had threatened defendant's life was relevant to explain why defendant had a gun and to explain defendant's behavior and was not unfairly prejudicial. State v. Macon, 346 N.C. 109, 484 S.E.2d 538 (1997).

Evidence of prior instances when the murder defendant beat the victim was not more prejudicial than probative in showing the escalating nature of the attacks and to rebut the claim that the killing was accidental. State v. Murillo, 349 N.C. 573, 509 S.E.2d 752 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 103, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

Where defendant and his stepson kidnapped two boys and put them in the trunk of a car while they murdered the boys' father and then murdered the two boys, evidence regarding the murder of the father was so intertwined with evidence of the murder of the boys that it was admissible and was not an abuse of discretion. State v. Sidden, 347 N.C. 218, 491 S.E.2d 225 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1097, 118 S. Ct. 1583, 140 L. Ed. 2d 797 (1998).

Testimony from witness about her dreams and diary entry when first incarcerated was relevant under Rule 401 and admissible under this rule; however, references to later bad dreams were properly excluded. State v. Jones, 347 N.C. 193, 491 S.E.2d 641 (1997).

Court did not err in admitting doctor's opinion that victims wound was consistent with the victim leaning over a chair when he was shot. State v. Cummings, 346 N.C. 291, 488 S.E.2d 550 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1092, 118 S. Ct. 886, 139 L. Ed. 2d 873 (1998).

The state had no alternative but to introduce evidence of defendant's prior convictions in order to meet its burden of showing an element of possession of a firearm by a felon; thus, the trial did not commit error by the admission of the evidence. State v. Faison, 128 N.C. App. 745, 497 S.E.2d 111 (1998).

In a prosecution for stalking, evidence which related to events occurring before defendant was warned to stay a away from the victim was not irrelevant and prejudicial. State v. Ferebee, 128 N.C. App. 710, 499 S.E.2d 459 (1998).

Admission of a letter written by the defendant to the murder victim did not unfairly prejudice him, where he wrote the letter to the mother of his child promising not to physically harm her again, in that the letter tended to shed light on both his state of mind and the nature of his relationship with the victim, and although it implied that he had been violent with the victim in the past, it did not indicate that he would be in the future. State v. Owen, 130 N.C. App. 505, 503 S.E.2d 426 (1998), cert. denied, 349 N.C. 372, 525 S.E.2d 188 (1998).

Testimony by the wife of an eyewitness to a murder that he was restless and unable to sleep prior to his identification of the defendant as the perpetrator but that he slept much better after doing so was admissible in the defendant's prosecution for second degree murder, where the eyewitness' credibility was in issue, and the wife's testimony was relevant to the reliability of his identification, and the defendant failed to show any prejudice resulting from the testimony. State v. Smith, 130 N.C. App. 71, 502 S.E.2d 390 (1998).

The probative value of the murder victim's statements to her friends concerning defendant's abuse of the victim and his threats against her was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. State v. Hayes, 130 N.C. App. 154, 502 S.E.2d 853 (1998), aff'd, 350 N.C. 79, 511 S.E.2d 302 (1999).

Testimony by the murder victim's mother was admissible in defendant's murder prosecution, despite the defendant's contention that the testimony was irrelevant, prejudicial evidence of prior bad acts, where the mother testified that the defendant cursed her when she went to talk to him, and further testified as to her daughter's attempts to "work things out" herself, in reference to the defendant's threats to kill her if she left him or refused to marry him. State v. Gary, 348 N.C. 510, 501 S.E.2d 57 (1998).

Evidence that defendant had been convicted in the shooting death of his first wife was properly argued to the jury as making more incredulous his claim of accident in the shooting death of his second wife, particularly as defendant had made incriminating remarks regarding his role in the death of his first wife to threaten his second one. State v. Murillo, 349 N.C. 573, 509 S.E.2d 752 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 103, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

The probative value of testimony by experts that they had seen children with the same condition as the defendant's child but never one in such poor condition outweighed any prejudicial effect in the mother's prosecution for child abuse and involuntary manslaughter, as it was relevant to show that the defendant had not provided adequate care to the child. State v. Fritsch, 132 N.C. App. 262, 511 S.E.2d 325 (1999), cert. granted, 350 N.C. 841, 538 S.E.2d 576 (1999), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 351

The decedent/wife's statements that her husband was jealous and had repeatedly threatened to kill her were admissible, although arguably no more than recitations of fact, where the facts that she recited tended to show her state of mind as to her marriage, indicated her relationship with the defendant and, therefore, were relevant under this rule, and rebutted testimony by the defendant that they had a good marriage. State v. Jones, 137 N.C. App. 221, 527 S.E2d 700 (2000).

Court properly allowed testimony about a letter written by defendant to rape victim's mother who later destroyed it, because any prejudicial effect the letter may have had was outweighed by its probative value. State v. Jarrell, 133 N.C. App. 264, 515 S.E.2d 247 (1999).

Where State introduced evidence of defendant's assaultive behavior prior to a brain injury which he claimed partially caused his violence, the court correctly determined that the probative value of the evidence of defendant's prior violent acts was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under this rule. State v. Hedgepeth, 350 N.C. 776, 517 S.E.2d 605 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 1274, 146 L. Ed. 2d 223 (2000).

Evidence of defendant's participation in several robberies was properly admitted in murder trial under § 8C-1, Rule 404 to corroborate the accounts of other witnesses or for the purpose of showing defendant's motive, intent or plan to commit the instant crime and presented with limiting jury instructions could not fairly be characterized as arbitrary and unreasonable under this rule. State v. Hall, 134 N.C. App. 417, 517 S.E.2d 907 (1999).

Evidence of a prior robbery and a prior attempted robbery was correctly admitted after court determined that the evidence was relevant for some purpose other than to show defendant's propensity to commit this type of crime, as required by § 8C-1, Rule 404, and that it was more probative than prejudicial, as required by this rule. State v. Leggett, 135 N.C. App. 168, 519 S.E.2d 328 (1999).

Evidence of defendant's molestation of a fourth sister had probative value to show the existence of intent, plan or design which, in light of the direct evidence presented by the other three sisters/victims and the investigator, was not outweighed by any unfair prejudice. State v. Owens, 135 N.C. App. 456, 520 S.E.2d 590 (1999).

Witness testimony regarding statements made by murder victim, regarding the presence of drugs and money in the hotel room where she was staying with a drug dealer, were admissible to show what the hearer did based on the victim's statements. State v. McCord, 140 N.C. App. 634, 538 S.E.2d 633 (2000), review denied, 353 N.C. 392 (2001).

Statements made by victim approximately six months prior to murder, to the effect that she and defendant were not getting along well, that she no longer wanted to be married, that if defendant had not left by May, 1997, she would "push the issue" for him to leave, that defendant told her that one day he would come home and find her dead with her throat cut, and that she believed defendant wanted her to sell her house so he could get some of her money, were admissible under this rule. State v. Aldridge, 139 N.C. App. 706, 534 S.E.2d 629 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 269, 546 S.E.2d 114 (2000).

The court rejected defendant state trooper's argument that evidence of his alleged crimes, wrongs, and acts was admitted in violation of the Rules of Evidence and his due process rights; testimony that defendant asked one witness to ride in the floor of his patrol car before the shooting, that another witness and defendant had violated or circumvented numerous automobile title transfer procedures, and that, upon searching defendant's patrol car, a third witness had found licenses and registrations that should have been turned over to a magistrate under highway patrol policy, was admissible to chronicle the murder, and its probative value was not outweighed by the danger of prejudice. State v. Parker, — N.C. App. —, — S.E.2d —, 2000 N.C. App. LEXIS 1107 (Oct. 3, 2000).

Where arresting officer's testimony about defendant's demeanor shortly after committing murder was probative of the circumstances surrounding the murder and defendant's intent, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the testimony and ruling that the probative value of the testimony was not substantially outweighed by unfair prejudice. State v. Lloyd, 354 N.C. 76, 552 S.E.2d 596 (2001).

DNA Evidence Properly Admitted. — Where DNA evidence was highly probative of the identity of the victim's killer, it did not unfairly prejudice defendant, confuse the issues, or mislead the jury; the trial court properly allowed forensic serologist to testify about the results of DNA analysis and the statistical significance thereof. State v. Daughtry, 340 N.C. 488, 459 S.E.2d 747 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1079, 116 S. Ct. 789, 133 L. Ed. 2d 739 (1996).

The admission of testimony regarding the source of the DNA in the DNA data bank which led to the conviction of the defendant for a murder committed 4 years earlier was not plain error under this section. State v. Berry, 143 N.C. App. 187, 546 S.E.2d 145 (2001), review denied, 353 N.C. 729, 551 S.E.2d 439 (2001).

Testimony Based on Blood-Alcohol Analyzer. — Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting Blood-Alcohol Analyzer as a reliable scientific method of proof under § 8C-1, Rule 702(a), nor should it have been excluded under this rule, since the probative value of its results were not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or jury confusion and since both parties had opportunity to either attack or support its reliability. State v. Cardwell, 133 N.C. App. 496, 516 S.E.2d 388 (1999).

Admission of a tape recording of a 911 call made by murder victim's children was properly admitted. State v. Jordan, 128 N.C. App. 469, 495 S.E.2d 732 (1998), cert. denied, 348 N.C. 287, 501 S.E.2d 914 (1998).

Defendant failed to show that the decision of the trial court to admit 911 tape recording of his daughter telling dispatchers that he was "trying to kill" her mother was not the result of a reasoned choice in conformity with the requirements of this rule. State v. Wilds, 130 N.C. App. 195, 515 S.E.2d 466 (1999).

Evidence Properly Excluded. — Defendant's testimony that his Intoxilyzer reading did not accurately reflect his blood alcohol level was not admissible and the trial court correctly excluded this evidence. State v. Cothran, 120 N.C. App. 633, 463 S.E.2d 423 (1995).

Expert testimony was properly excluded where it would have directed the jury's attention away from defendant's actual conduct and confused it with evidence unrelated to the legality of the arrest or the force the officers used in attempting to apprehend defendant. State v. Harden, 344 N.C. 542, 476 S.E.2d 658 (1996).

Trial court did not err by excluding doctor's testimony regarding his opinion that defendant did not act with a cool state of mind. State v. Boyd, 343 N.C. 699, 473 S.E.2d 327 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1096, 117 S. Ct. 778, 136 L. Ed. 2d 722 (1997).

Where plaintiffs introduced records of 911 calls from January 1988 through July 1993 concerning incidents at a restaurant where the subject murder occurred, and where their crime analyst testified as to the type of offenses that prompted the calls in 1992 and 1993 as well as crimes that occurred within a one-half mile radius of the restaurant in those years, the trial court did not err in excluding data pertaining to criminal activity from 1988 to 1991, some of which was probably cumulative; if such exclusion did constitute error, such error was, in the face of the plaintiffs' contributory negligence, harmless. Benton v. Hillcrest Foods, Inc., 136 N.C. App. 42, 524S.E.2d 53 (1999).

Exclusion of Evidence Held Not Prejudicial. — Court's refusal to permit witness to testify that, based upon his personal knowledge of the State's only eyewitness, he would not believe the State's witness under oath was not prejudicial where immediately before that evidence was offered, the same witness testified without objection that in his opinion the State's witness was a liar and had told him he would take a bribe to change his testimony. State v. Burge, 100 N.C. App. 671, 397 S.E.2d 760 (1990).

Where doctor who performed autopsy used one photograph showing victim's bare breast to illustrate his testimony about the cause of death and the nature and location of the wound, the danger of redundant and excessive use of potentially inflammatory photographs was not present, and the trial court acted within its sound discretion in ruling under this rule that the probative value of the unaltered photograph was not substantially outweighed by any prejudice. State v. Butler, 331 N.C. 227, 415 S.E.2d 719 (1992).

Trial court did not err in ruling that co-defendants would not be called to testify due to the fact that they would invoke their Fifth Amendment privilege without conducting the balancing inquiry required by this rule, where defendant did not submit an offer of proof as to their testimony outside the presence of the jury; his testimony on his own behalf indicated his version of the incident but did not qualify as an offer of proof as to his co-defendants's testimony. State v. Harris, 139 N.C. App. 153, 532 S.E.2d 850 (2000).

Exclusion of Evidence Held Prejudicial. — Where defendant sought to reveal that two years ago witness had deceived a person he was investigating in an effort to obtain a confession for that crime, the evidence was probative of the witness's character for untruthfulness, was not too remote and was unfairly prejudicial; thus, the defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Baldwin, 125 N.C. App. 530, 482 S.E.2d 1 (1997), cert. granted, 345 N.C. 756, 485 S.E.2d 299 (1997), discretionary review improvidently allowed, 347 N.C. 348, 492 S.E.2d 354 (1997).

Statements Regarding Prior Similar Actions. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting certain statements by a town mayor regarding previous actions of a chief building official where the statements were relevant to the claim for negligent supervision and the trial court thrice gave a limiting instruction as to their applicability. Leftwich v. Gaines, 134 N.C. App. 502, 521 S.E.2d 717 (1999).

Evidence of defendant's prior assault on another victim admitted for the limited purposes of proving a common scheme and defendant's intent, was not unfairly prejudicial; the prior assault and the current charges were similar in nature; in both instances the victims, similar in age, visited various residences or places in which they were unfamiliar and then were taken by automobile to isolated areas at night; where the defendant told the victims something was wrong with the automobile, asked the victims to get out of the automobile, and then proceeded to sexually assault them. State v. Chavis, 141 N.C. App. 177, 540 S.E.2d 404 (2000).

Evidence Properly Admitted. — The description of a pocketknife which the defendant usually carried with him and the admission of a hacksaw frame and several hacksaws were not unfairly prejudicial to the defendant so as to require exclusion pursuant to this section. State v. Grooms, 353 N.C. 50, 540 S.E.2d 713 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Professional engineer's testimony as to the structure and appearance of a stairway that plaintiff was injured on was based on direct personal knowledge; therefore, this testimony was admissible so long as it was relevant and its probative value was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Newton v. New Hanover County Bd. of Educ., 342 N.C. 554, 467 S.E.2d 58 (1996).

Photographs of Other Houses' Cracks in Structural Defect Case — Photographs of cracks in the foundations and floors of other houses constructed by the defendant/construction company were properly admitted into evidence because the probative value of the photographs was not outweighed by unfair prejudice. Allen v. Roberts Constr. Co., 138 N.C. App. 557, 532 S.E.2d 534 (2000).

Demonstration of Weaponry. — Where defense counsel commented in his opening statement that the state could present no evidence of the existence of shell casings from the revolver allegedly used by the defendant, the state's demonstration of semi-automatic weapons to explain that shell casings are not ejected by revolvers was relevant in light of defense counsel's statement. State v. Reaves, 132 N.C. App. 615, 513 S.E.2d 562 (1999).

Demonstration of Effects of Pepper Spray. — Trial court properly allowed the State, during its presentation of rebuttal evidence, to demonstrate the effects of pepper spray in an experiment under circumstances dissimilar to those that actually occurred and with the use of law enforcement officers trained in the use of pepper spray; defendant was given, but chose not to take, the opportunity to present his own demonstration on lay witnesses. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Admission of Prior Misconduct with Gun. — Defendant was not prejudiced by admission of testimony that witness remembered a gun, similar to that used in two murders, because defendant had playfully held it to his head. State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct. 951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

Admission of Prior Voluntary Manslaughter Conviction. — Trial court did commit prejudicial error under this rule in rejecting defendant's tendered limiting stipulation and admitting evidence of an earlier prior voluntary manslaughter conviction, where defendant was not charged with any attendant offenses similar to his prior conviction and where the jury was not informed that his prior conviction in any way involved use of a firearm. State v. Jackson, 139 N.C. App. 721, 535 S.E.2d 48 (2000), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 353 N.C. 495 546 S.E.2d 570 (2001).

Evidence of defendant's offenses subsequent to burglary, namely, shoplifting, breaking, entering and larceny, and car theft, were admissible to show intent and motive (the defendant wanted money for drugs) and was not unfairly prejudicial where the judge gave a limiting instruction. State v. Hutchinson, 139 N.C. App. 132, 532 S.E.2d 569 (2000).

Admission of expert testimony regarding memory factors is within trial court's discretion, and appellate court will not intervene where trial court properly appraises probative and prejudicial value of evidence under this rule. State v. Cotton, 99 N.C. App. 615, 394 S.E.2d 456 (1990), aff'd, 329 N.C. 764, 407 S.E.2d 514 (1991).

Witness testimony in which he stated he was "pretty sure" that defendant had admitted to killing victim was relevant to the issue of the identification of defendant and not unfairly prejudicial. State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct. 951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

Trial court's admission of victim's testimony from a domestic violence protective order hearing did not violate his right to confront the witness against him, nor did it violate § 8C-1, Rules 403, 404(b), and 803(3) of the North Carolina Rules of Evidence where the hearsay statements constituted, and were admissible as, statements of declarant's then-existing mental, emotional, or physical condition and where their probative value outweighed their prejudicial effect. State v. Thibodeaux, 352 N.C. 570, 532 S.E.2d 797 (2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1155, 121 S. Ct. 1106, 148 L. Ed. 2d 976 (2001).

Rule 404. Character evidence not admissible to prove conduct; exceptions; other crimes.

(a) Character evidence generally. — Evidence of a person's character or a trait of his character is not admissible for the purpose of proving that he acted in conformity therewith on a particular occasion, except:

(1) Character of accused. — Evidence of a pertinent trait of his character offered by an accused, or by the prosecution to rebut the same;

(2) Character of victim. — Evidence of a pertinent trait of character of the victim of the crime offered by an accused, or by the prosecution to rebut the same, or evidence of a character trait of peacefulness of the victim offered by the prosecution in a homicide case to rebut evidence that the victim was the first aggressor;

(3) Character of witness. — Evidence of the character of a witness, as provided in Rules 607, 608, and 609.

(b) Other crimes, wrongs, or acts. — Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is not admissible to prove the character of a person in order to show that he acted in conformity therewith. It may, however, be admissible for other purposes, such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake, entrapment or accident. Admissible evidence may include evidence of an offense committed by a juvenile if it would have been a Class A, B1, B2, C, D, or E felony if committed by an adult. (1983, c. 701, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 7, s. 3; 1995, c. 509, s. 7.)

This rule is identical to Fed. Evid. Rule 404, except for the addition of the word "entrapment" in the last sentence of subdivision (b).

Subdivision (a) deals with the basic question whether character evidence should be admitted. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Once the admissibility of character evidence in some form is established under this rule, reference must then be made to Rule 405, which follows, in order to determine the appropriate method of proof. If the character is that of a witness, see Rules 608 and 610 for methods of proof.

Character questions arise in two fundamentally different ways. (1) Character may itself be an element of a crime, claim, or defense. A situation of this kind is commonly referred to as 'character in issue.' Illustrations are: the chastity of the victim under a statute specifying her chastity as an element of the crime of seduction, or the competency of the driver in an action for negligently entrusting a motor vehicle to an incompetent driver. No problem of the general relevancy of character evidence is involved, and the present rule therefore has no provision on the subject. The only question relates to allowable methods of proof, as to which see Rule 405, immediately following. (2) Character evidence is susceptible of being used for the purpose of suggesting an inference that the person acted on the occasion in question consistently with his character. This use of character is often described as 'circumstantial.' Illustrations are: evidence of a violent disposition to prove that the person was the aggressor in an affray, or evidence of honesty in disproof of a charge of theft. This circumstantial use of character evidence raises questions of relevancy as well as questions of allowable methods of proof."

The rule is consistent with North Carolina practice in that character evidence is generally not admissible as circumstantial evidence of conduct.

Subdivision (a)(1) creates an exception which permits an accused to introduce pertinent evidence of good character, in which event the prosecution may rebut with evidence of bad character. The exception is consistent with North Carolina practice except that subdivision (a)(1) speaks in terms of a "pertinent trait of his character". This limits the exception to relevant character traits, whereas North Carolina practice permits use of evidence of general character. Professor Brandis states that:

"The North Carolina rule on this subject is unique, and appears to have had its origin in a misinterpretation of the earlier opinions.

In a majority of jurisdictions, character evidence must be confined to the particular trait of character involved in the conduct which is being investigated: In the case of a witness, his character for truth and veracity; of a defendant charged with a crime of violence, his peaceable or violent character; of an alleged embezzler, his honesty and integrity, etc.; a few courts will also admit evidence of general moral character, and this view was adopted by the North Carolina Court at an early date. For at least eighty years it was permissible to prove either the general character or the specific relevant trait of character of the person in question. When, during this period, the Court stated that only 'general character' could be shown, it meant that the only method of proving character was by general reputation, as distinguished from 'particular facts and the opinion of witnesses.' In State v. Hairston the principle of the earlier cases seems to have been misunderstood, and the rule was stated: 'A party introducing a witness as to character can only prove the general character of the person asked about. The witness, of his own motion, may say in what respect it is good or bad.'

When the witness is asked whether he knows the general 'reputation' or 'reputation and character' of the subject, if he answers 'No' he should be stood aside; but if he answers 'Yes' it seems that he need not confine his testimony to that reputation, but may testify to reputation for some specific trait of character. This may be highly relevant, as when witness character is at stake and the answer deals with reputation for veracity. However, it may deal with reputation for liquor-selling, or horse trading, or domestic cruelty, even though the trait is wholly irrelevant to any issue in the case.

The Court recently reviewed the history of the rule, but did not change it. It explicitly held that it is proper for counsel to prepare his witness by explaining the rule and that this does not render the specific trait evidence inadmissible unless, at counsel's suggestion, it is false. To this writer this is convincing proof that the rule should be scrapped. When counsel ascertains in advance a trait which the witness will specify, his question to elicit it should surely not merely be allowed, but be required to deal with that trait. In such case, objection may be made to the question and relevance rationally appraised. As it is, the question is foolproof and there is no opportunity to object until the specific trait evidence is actually given and the damage is done." Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 114 (1982) (footnotes omitted): Brandis also notes that:

"At best the present rule requires use of an ambiguous and misleading formula in examining character witnesses. At worst it has positively undesirable consequences. It opens the door to evidence of character traits which are irrelevant and prejudicial, and permits the prosecution, under the guise of impeaching the defendant as a witness, to prove traits having no relation to veracity but which are relevant on the issue of guilt, thus evading the rule (see § 104) prohibiting the State from attacking the defendant's character unless he first puts it in issue. These consequences would be avoided, and logic and symmetry restored, by confining the inquiry to traits relevant for the particular purpose and holding the witness to responsive answers." Id. at 114, n. 91.

Subdivision (a)(2) creates an exception to permit an accused to introduce pertinent evidence of character of the victim and to permit the prosecution to introduce similar evidence in rebuttal of the character evidence. The subdivision extends the exception recognized in North Carolina homicide and assault and battery cases to include all criminal cases. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 106 (1982).

North Carolina practice permits evidence of the character of the victim tending to show that the defendant had a reasonable apprehension of death or bodily harm. Id. Such evidence when introduced to show the reasonable apprehension of death or bodily harm to the accused, rather than to prove that the victim acted in conformity with his character trait on a particular occasion, would not be within the ban created by subdivision (a).

North Carolina practice also permits evidence of the character of the victim tending to show that the victim was the first aggressor. Unlike Rule 404, current North Carolina practice permits such evidence to be introduced only if the State's evidence is wholly circumstantial or the nature of the transaction is in doubt.

Subdivision (a)(2) permits proof of any pertinent trait of the victim. North Carolina practice has confined the evidence to character for violence. Id.

Subdivision (a)(2) is consistent with North Carolina practice in that evidence of the character of the victim for peace and quiet would be admissible to rebut evidence of the deceased's character for violence and evidence of the victim's good general character would not. Id. at 397.

The second part of subdivision (a)(2) permits introduction of "evidence of a character trait of peacefulness of the victim offered by the prosecution in a homicide case to rebut evidence that the victim was the first aggressor." In North Carolina the prosecution may offer evidence of the deceased's character for peace and quiet only if the defendant has introduced evidence of the deceased's character for violence. See Nance v. Fike, 244 N. C. 368, 372 (1956). Thus in North Carolina the accused can apparently claim self-defense without opening the door to character evidence relating to the victim. Subdivision (a)(2) would alter this practice and permit the prosecution to offer evidence of the peacefulness of the victim to rebut any evidence that the victim was the first aggressor.

The North Carolina exception, unlike the rule, applies to cases of civil assault and battery. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 106, at 393 (1982). The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The argument is made that circumstantial use of character ought to be allowed in civil cases to the same extent as in criminal cases, i.e., evidence of good (nonprejudicial) character would be admissible in the first instance, subject to rebuttal by evidence of bad character. The difficulty with expanding the use of character evidence in civil cases is set forth by the California Law Revision Commission ***:

'Character evidence is of slight probative value and may be very prejudicial. It tends to distract the trier of fact from the the main question of what actually happened on on the particular occasion. It subtly permits the trier of fact to reward the good man and to punish the bad man because of their respective characters despite what the evidence in the case shows actually happened.'"

Subdivision (a)(3) creates an exception to the general rule and permits the introduction of evidence of the character of a witness, as provided in Rules 607, 608, and 609, to prove that he acted in conformity therewith on a particular occasion.

Subdivision (b) permits the introduction of specific "crimes, wrongs, or acts" for a purpose other than to prove the conduct of a person. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Subdivision (b) deals with a specialized but important application of the general rule excluding circumstantial use of character evidence. Consistently with that rule, evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is not admissible to prove character as a basis for suggesting the inference that conduct on a particular occasion was in conformity with it. However, the evidence may be offered for another purpose, such as proof of motive, opportunity, and so on, which does not fall within the prohibition. In this situation the rule does not require that the evidence be excluded. No mechanical solution is offered. The determination must be made whether the danger of undue prejudice outweighs the probative value of the evidence, in view of the availability of other means of proof and other factors appropriate for making decisions of this kind under Rule 403."

The list in the last sentence of subdivision (b) is nonexclusive and the fact that evidence cannot be brought within a category does not mean that the evidence is inadmissible.

Subdivision (b) is consistent with North Carolina practice.

Relevance of the complainant's past behavior in a rape or sex offense case is governed by Rule 412.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Federal Rule Compared. — This rule is identical to Federal Evidentiary Rule 404, except for the addition of the word "entrapment" in the last sentence of subsection (b). State v. DeLeonardo, 315 N.C. 762, 340 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

This rule is virtually identical to Federal Rule of Evidence 404, the legislative history of which tends to favor admissibility. State v. Wortham, 80 N.C. App. 54, 341 S.E.2d 76 (1986), rev'd in part, 318 N.C. 669, 351 S.E.2d 294 (1987); Medina v. Town & Country Ford, Inc., 85 N.C. App. 650, 355 S.E.2d 831, appeal of right allowed pursuant to Rule 16(b) and petition allowed as to additional issues, 320 N.C. 513, 358 S.E.2d 521 (1987), aff'd, 320 N.C. 517, 358 S.E.2d 533 (1987).

This rule is consistent with prior North Carolina practice. State v. Wortham, 80 N.C. App. 54, 341 S.E.2d 76 (1986), rev'd in part, 318

Subsection (b) of this rule is consistent with prior North Carolina practice. State v. Belton, 77 N.C. App. 559, 335 S.E.2d 522 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 141, 347 S.E.2d 755 (1986); State v. Spinks, 77 N.C. App. 657, 335 S.E.2d 786 (1985); In re Paul, 84 N.C. App. 491, 353 S.E.2d 254 (1987); State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, writ denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 66, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

Subsection (b) of this rule permits the introduction of specific "crimes, wrongs, or acts" for a legitimate purpose other than to prove the conduct of a person. In so doing, it is consistent with North Carolina practice prior to its enactment. State v. DeLeonardo, 315 N.C. 762, 340 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

Subsection (b) of this rule codifies the longstanding rule in this jurisdiction that evidence of other offenses is inadmissible on the issue of guilt if its only relevancy is to show the character of the accused or his disposition to commit an offense of the nature of the one charged; but if it tends to prove any other relevant fact, it will not be excluded merely because it also shows him to have been guilty of an independent crime. State v. Young, 317 N.C. 396, 346 S.E.2d 626 (1986).

This rule is a clear general rule of inclusion of relevant evidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts by a defendant, subject to but one exception requiring its exclusion if its only probative value is to show that the defendant has the propensity or disposition to commit an offense of the nature of the crime charged. State v. Kennedy, 130 N.C. App. 399, 503 S.E.2d 133 (1998), aff'd, 350 N.C. 87, 511 S.E.2d 305 (1999).

This rule is a general rule of inclusion of evidence, subject to an exception when the only probative value of the evidence is to show that the defendant has the propensity or disposition to commit an offense of the nature of the crime charged. State v. West, 103 N.C. App. 1, 404 S.E.2d 191 (1991).

This rule addresses the admissibility of evidence; it is not a discovery statute which requires the State to disclose such evidence as it might introduce thereunder. State v. Payne, 337 N.C. 505, 448 S.E.2d 93 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1038, 115 S. Ct. 1405, 131 L. Ed. 2d 292 (1995).

Construction. — North Carolina's appellate courts have been markedly liberal in admitting evidence of similar sex offenses by a defendant for the purposes now enumerated in § 8C-1, Rule 404(b), such as establishing the defendant's identity as the perpetrator of the crime charged. State v. Bidgood, 144 N.C. App. 267, 550 S.E.2d 198 (2001).

Probative Value Substantially Outweighs Prejudice. — Once a trial court determines that other crimes evidence is properly admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b), it must still determine if the probative value of the evidence is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. Bidgood, 144 N.C. App. 267, 550 S.E.2d 198 (2001).

Section 8C-1, Rule 608(b) Distinguished. — Although subsection (b) of this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 608(b) concern the use of specific instances of a person's conduct, the two rules have very different purposes and are intended to govern entirely different uses of extrinsic conduct evidence. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

"Extrinsic conduct evidence" refers to evidence of a specific prior or subsequent act, not charged in the indictment, which may be criminal but, as applied in § 8C-1, Rule 608(b), does not result in a conviction. Criminal convictions are included in subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

Section 8C-1, Rule 608(b) governs reference to specific instances of conduct only on cross-examination regarding the credibility of any witness and prohibits proof by extrinsic evidence. Under subsection (b) of this rule, however, evidence regarding extrinsic acts is not limited to cross-examination and may be provided by extrinsic evidence as well as through cross-examination. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

Rule 609 Distinguished. — Although the State exceeded the permissible scope of inquiry into defendant's prior criminal conviction under § 8C-1, Rule 609 by delving into his motivation for his "forgery activity," the evidence that defendant previously committed forgery to finance his drug habit could properly be admitted under this section, to show that his need to support his drug habit and his lack of finances were the motive for the robbery and murder of the victim. State v. Barnett, 141 N.C. App. 378, 540 S.E.2d 423 (2000), appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 353 N.C. 527, 549 S.E.2d 552 (2001).

Single Scheme or Plan. — Where there existed an extended interval of as much as several years between sex offenses and where there was a lack of a consistent pattern in defendant's molesting behavior, all of the charged acts perpetrated against three sisters did not constitute part of a single scheme or plan, as a matter of law, and the trial court erred in joining the cases under § 15A-926; however, since evidence of other molestations would have been admissible pursuant to this rule to show "intent, plan or design," at the trial of any one offense, the error was harmless. State v. Owens, 135 N.C. App. 456, 520 S.E.2d 590 (1999).

Evidence Which Was Irrelevant as Substantive Evidence Held Proper When Used for Rebuttal. — While State would not have been allowed to introduce, in the first instance, evidence of defendant's bad conduct toward fellow employees, trial court did not err in allowing State to rebut defendant's evidence of a good employment record. State v. Cotton, 99 N.C. App. 615, 394 S.E.2d 456 (1990), aff'd, 329 N.C. 764, 407 S.E.2d 514 (1991).

It was error for a trial judge not to conduct a voir dire in order to rule on questions of admissibility and order a tape recording to be edited or redacted as necessary. State v. Gibson, 333 N.C. 29, 424 S.E.2d 95 (1992), overruled on other grounds, 334 N.C. 402, 432 S.E.2d 349 (1993).

Evidence of Victim's State of Mind. — Evidence that the victim was peaceful and unarmed the night of the murder was relevant to prove that the victim did not provoke defendant and that the murder was committed with premeditation and deliberation. State v. Alford, 339 N.C. 562, 453 S.E.2d 512 (1995).

Evidence of Accused's State of Mind. — In prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon, testimony about defendant's conduct prior to confrontation with deputies and admission of videotape allegedly depicting this conduct would be upheld, as part of the "chain of events" and as showing defendant's state of mind immediately prior to the deputies being called to the scene. State v. Price, 118 N.C. App. 212, 454 S.E.2d 820 (1995).

Evidence of Motive. — The evidence of defendant's drug dealing activities, the victim's desire for a greater cut of the profits and his failure to turn in all the money, was relevant to show defendant's motive for murdering the victim. State v. Lundy, 135 N.C. App. 13, 519 S.E.2d 73 (1999).

Factors Affecting Mental State. — Defendant was properly permitted to cross-examine plaintiff about other factors in her life which had a bearing upon her mental state, such as acts of wrong-doing on the part of her children. Pelzer v. UPS, Inc., 126 N.C. App. 305, 484 S.E.2d 849 (1997), cert. denied, 346 N.C. 549, 488 S.E.2d 808 (1997).

Premeditation and deliberation are generally not susceptible of direct proof, but are mental processes which may be inferred from circumstantial evidence surrounding a murder, including lack of provocation on the part of the victim. State v. Alford, 339 N.C. 562, 453 S.E.2d 512 (1995).

Failure to Exclude Not Amounting to Plain Error. — Even if the trial court erred in not intervening to exclude the portion of witness's statement which referred to defendant's prior bad act, the court's error did not result in manifest injustice and did not amount to plain error. State v. Ocasio, 344 N.C. 568, 476 S.E.2d 281 (1996).

II. CHARACTER EVIDENCE GENERALLY.

Subsection (a) is a general rule of exclusion, prohibiting the introduction of character evidence to prove that a person acted in conformity with that evidence of character. State v. Bogle, 324 N.C. 190, 376 S.E.2d 745 (1989).

Under subdivision (a)(1) of this rule an accused may no longer offer evidence of undifferentiated "good character" as permitted by our previous practice; rather, he must tailor the evidence to a particular trait that is relevant to an issue in the case. State v. Squire, 321 N.C. 541, 364 S.E.2d 354 (1988); State v. Fultz, 92 N.C. App. 80, 373 S.E.2d 445 (1988).

The plain meaning of the "first aggressor" exception is abundantly clear: if a defendant presents evidence that the victim was the first aggressor in the confrontation which led to the victim's death, the State can offer evidence of the victim's peacefulness. State v. Faison, 330 N.C. 347, 411 S.E.2d 143 (1991).

Accused May Introduce Evidence of Specific Traits. — This rule, which became effective on July 1, 1984, is a significant departure from our previous practice under the common law, in that it permits an accused to introduce evidence of specific traits of his character. Under our previous rule, developed under the common law, the only method for introducing evidence of character was by general reputation. State v. Squire, 321 N.C. 541, 364 S.E.2d 354 (1988).

When Evidence of Character Traits Is Admissible. — "Pertinent" in the context of subdivision (a)(1) of this rule is tantamount to relevant. Thus, in determining whether evidence of a character trait is admissible under subdivision (a)(1), the trial court must determine whether the trait in question is relevant; i.e., whether it would make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more or less probable than it would be without evidence of the trait. State v. Squire, 321 N.C. 541, 364 S.E.2d 354 (1988).

A criminal defendant will be entitled to an instruction on a good character trait as substantive evidence of his innocence when he satisfies the following four-part test: First, the evidence must be of a "trait of character" and not merely evidence of a fact (e.g., "being 'law-abiding' addresses one's character of abiding by all laws, a lack of convictions addresses only the fact that one has not been convicted of a crime"); second, the evidence of the trait must be competent (i.e., in addition to satisfying all other applicable standards, the evidence must be in the proper form as required by § 8C-1, Rule 405); third, the trait must be pertinent (i.e., relevant in the context of the crime charged in that it bears a special relationship to or is involved in such crime); and fourth, the instruction must be requested by the defendant. State v. Moreno, 98 N.C. App. 642, 391 S.E.2d 860 (1990).

Evidence of criminal activity not related to the crime charged must be relevant to some issue in the case to be admissible; such evidence is inadmissible when introduced to prove defendant's "character in order to show that he acted in conformity therewith." State v. Coffey, 336 N.C. 412, 444 S.E.2d 431 (1994).

Where defendant argues he acted in self-defense, evidence of the victim's character may be admissible for two reasons: to show defendant's fear or apprehension was reasonable, or to show the victim was the aggressor. State v. Ray, 125 N.C. App. 721, 482 S.E.2d 755 (1997).

Where defendant proffered evidence of his good character, trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the State to rebut by introducing evidence of his assaultive behavior prior to his 1976 brain injury. State v. Hedgepeth, 350 N.C. 776, 517 S.E.2d 605 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 1274, 146 L. Ed. 2d 223 (2000).

Trait May Be General in Nature. — While under this rule, an accused must tailor his character evidence to a "pertinent" trait, the trait may be general in nature, provided that it is relevant in the context of the crime charged. State v. Squire, 321 N.C. 541, 364 S.E.2d 354 (1988).

Such as Trait of Being Law-Abiding. — An example of a character trait of a general nature which is nearly always relevant in a criminal case is the trait of being law-abiding. State v. Squire, 321 N.C. 541, 364 S.E.2d 354 (1988).

Defendant was entitled to an instruction on his character trait of law-abidingness as substantive evidence of his innocence; it was for the jury to assess the weight of this evidence. State v. Bogle, 324 N.C. 190, 376 S.E.2d 745 (1989).

"Pertinent" Trait to Be Restrictively Construed. — The language of the subsection (a) exception permitting the accused to offer evidence of a "pertinent" trait should be restrictively construed. State v. Bogle, 324 N.C. 190, 376 S.E.2d 745 (1989).

Lack of Mental Illness Not Pertinent. — Evidence of the defendant's general "psychological make-up," including evidence of the lack of several mental problems, was not pertinent to the commission of a sexual assault, and, thus, was not admissible under the exception to the general bar against character evidence offered for the purpose of proving conduct in conformity therewith. State v. Wagoner, 131 N.C. App. 285, 506 S.E.2d 738 (1998).

Sexual Orientation Not Pertinent. — Evidence offered by the defendant showing that the victim had a reputation for being a homosexual is not a pertinent character trait within the meaning of subsection (a)(2). State v. Laws, 345 N.C. 585, 481 S.E.2d 641 (1997).

Because an individual's sexual orientation bears no relationship to the likelihood that one would threaten a sexual assault, it therefore can bear no relationship to defendant's claim that he killed in self-defense in response to a threatened sexual assault. State v. Laws, 345 N.C. 585, 481 S.E.2d 641 (1997).

Military Record or Military Service. — A good military record or military service is not relevant to defendant's guilt or innocence in a rape case. State v. Mustafa, 113 N.C. App. 240, 437 S.E.2d 906, cert. denied, 336 N.C. 613, 447 S.E.2d 409 (1994).

Witness' Beliefs About Defendant Not Evidence of Pertinent Trait. — Defense question to rape defendant's employment supervisor of whether he believed defendant was capable of raping anyone was not allowed as evidence of a pertinent character trait under subdivision (a)(1) of this rule. State v. Najewicz, 112 N.C. App. 280, 436 S.E.2d 132 (1993), cert. denied, 335 N.C. 362, 441 S.E.2d 130 (1994).

Violent Character. — Evidence of a victim's violent character is irrelevant in a homicide case when the defense of accident is raised. State v. Goodson, 341 N.C. 619, 461 S.E.2d 740 (1995).

Same — Irrelevant When Victim Unknown. — Defendant did not know victim nor did he know anything about his reputation prior to altercation; thus, evidence of specific instances of victim's violent character was irrelevant in regards to the reasonableness of defendant's apprehension and need to use force, and the trial court properly denied its admission on this basis. State v. Ray, 125 N.C. App. 721, 482 S.E.2d 755 (1997).

Evidence of deceased's criminal record cannot be received for purpose of establishing his reputation for violence. State v. Adams, 90 N.C. App. 145, 367 S.E.2d 362 (1988).

Drug Addiction Is Not Probative of Truthfulness or Untruthfulness. — Cross-examination concerning defendant's drug addiction was improper under § 8C-1, Rule 608(b), because extrinsic evidence of drug addiction, standing alone, is not probative of defendant's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness. State v. Rowland, 89 N.C. App. 372, 366 S.E.2d 550 (1988).

Prosecution May Introduce Character Evidence. — This rule allows the prosecution to introduce evidence of a victim's character only to rebut defendant's evidence calling it into question. State v. Quick, 329 N.C. 1, 405 S.E.2d 179 (1991).

Admission of Victim's Character Evidence Not Plain Error — The admission of the evidence concerning decedent/wife's good character before the defendant offered any evidence of her character was error but not plain error. State v. Jones, 137 N.C. App. 221, 527 S.E2d 700 (2000).

Exclusion of Evidence of Character Traits Held Error. — In a close case on the issue of whether homicide was committed in self-defense, where defendant demonstrated that the victim was a violent person who had directed his anger toward him in the past, and also offered a plausible explanation for his fear at the time he shot the victim, which was corroborated by two witnesses, evidence of favorable character traits of defendant other than peacefulness and truthfulness, such as, for example, being law-abiding, might have weighed heavily in the jury's determination of whether the defendant acted in self-defense, or might have influenced the jury to return a verdict of voluntary manslaughter or second degree murder rather than first degree murder, and thus trial court's unwarranted general prohibition of evidence of character traits other than peacefulness and truthfulness constituted reversible error entitling defendant to a new trial. State v. Squire, 341 N.C. 541, 364 S.E.2d 354 (1988).

Evidence Showed More than Character. — In a first-degree murder case, evidence of defendant's having been charged with driving while impaired explained circumstances under which he was taken into custody, and evidence of defendant's refusal to take a breathalyzer test explained the circumstances under which defendant was kept waiting in the Virginia Public Safety Center where he confessed to the crimes for which he was on trial; all of this evidence tended ultimately to show the circumstances under which that confession was made and was thus relevant on the issues of the confession's voluntariness and credibility. The evidence cast more light on these important questions than it did on defendant's character; therefore, its probative value outweighed its prejudicial effect. State v. Rannels, 333 N.C. 644, 430 S.E.2d 254 (1993).

Admission of Evidence Prejudicial Error. — There was no relevancy for the admission of defendant's past violent behavior toward his wife to prove the character of the defendant in relation to motive, opportunity, or intent and the admission of the evidence constituted prejudicial error requiring a new trial. State v. Brooks, 113 N.C. App. 451, 439 S.E.2d 234 (1994).

Admission of Evidence Not Prejudicial. — The trial court erred in admitting officer's testimony as a drug dealer; however, as defendant's testimony alone was enough from which a reasonable juror could conclude that defendant possessed the marijuana and cocaine with the intent to sell and deliver, defendant was not prejudiced by the admission of the character evidence against him. State v. Taylor, 117 N.C. App. 644, 453 S.E.2d 225 (1995).

Witnesses' testimony regarding defendant's activities hours before murders occurred explained why witness was found walking away from crime scene and provided evidence confirming state of mind, method of operation, and course of conduct of defendant and his cohorts; thus, the testimony was not inadmissible character evidence. State v. DeCastro, 342 N.C. 667, 467 S.E.2d 653 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 896, 117 S. Ct. 241, 136 L. Ed. 2d 170 (1996).

Drug Use to Show Motive. — In a prosecution for common law burglary and first-degree murder, evidence that defendant had been using cocaine was properly admitted to show her motive to commit the robbery. State v. Stephenson, 144 N.C. App. 465, 551 S.E.2d 858 (2001).

III. OTHER CRIMES AND WRONGS.

Denial of pre-trial disclosure of § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) evidence did not deprive defendant of a fair trial in violation of the Fifth, Sixth, and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and N.C. Const., Article I, §§ 19 and 23. State v. Parker, — N.C. App. —, — S.E.2d —, 2000 N.C. App. LEXIS 1107 (Oct. 3, 2000).

Res Gestae Rationale Survives. — Admission of evidence of a criminal defendant's prior bad acts, received to establish the circumstances of the crime on trial by describing its immediate context, is known variously as the "same transaction" rule, the "complete story" exception, and the "course of conduct" exception. Such evidence is admissible if it "forms part of the history of the event or serves to enhance the natural development of the facts"; and this rationale, established in pre-Rules cases, survives the adoption of the Rules of Evidence. State v. Agee, 326 N.C. 542, 391 S.E.2d 171 (1990).

Applicability of Subsection (b). — Subsection (b) of this rule has been interpreted as applicable only to parties and, in a criminal case, would usually be applicable only to a defendant. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

Basis for Exception in Subsection (b). — The exception noted in subsection (b) of this rule is grounded in the logic of inferring from the sequence of events comprising an offense or from its particular features that the same person committed the offense more than once, aware on at least the latter occasion of its consequences. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

The use of evidence as permitted under subsection (b) of this section is guided by two constraints: similarity and temporal proximity. When the features of the earlier act are dissimilar from those of the offense with which the defendant is currently charged, such evidence lacks probative value. When otherwise similar offenses are distanced by significant stretches of time, commonalties become less striking, and the probative value of the analogy attaches less to the acts than the character of the actor. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

The list of purposes in the second sentence of subsection (b) of this rule is neither exclusive nor exhaustive. State v. Moseley, 338 N.C. 1, 449 S.E.2d 412 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1091, 115 S. Ct. 1815, 131 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1995).

The list of permissible purposes for admission of other crimes evidence is not exclusive, and such evidence is admissible as long as it is relevant to any fact or issue other than the defendant's propensity to commit the crime. State v. Hipps, 348 N.C. 377, 501 S.E.2d 625 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1180, 119 S. Ct. 1119, 143 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1999).

The statutory list of permissible purposes for other crimes evidence is not exclusive and the fact that evidence cannot be brought within a listed category does not necessarily mean that it is inadmissible. State v. Blackwell, 133 N.C. App. 31, 514 S.E.2d 116 (1999), cert. denied, 350 N.C. 595, 537 S.E.2d 483 (1999).

Admissibility. — "Other crimes, wrongs, or acts" evidence is admissible only if offered for a proper purpose. A proper purpose includes, among other things, proof of a defendant's motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake, entrapment, or accident. State v. Haskins, 104 N.C. App. 675, 411 S.E.2d 376 (1991), cert. denied, 331 N.C. 287, 417 S.E.2d 256 (1992).

The admissibility of "other crimes, wrongs, or acts" evidence is determined through an application of subsection (b) of this rule, and § 8C-1, Rules 402, 401, 403, 104(b), and 105. State v. Haskins, 104 N.C. App. 675, 411 S.E.2d 376 (1991), cert. denied, 331 N.C. 287, 417 S.E.2d 256 (1992).

For evidence of defendant's prior crimes or bad acts to be admissible to show the identity of the defendant as the perpetrator of the crime for which he is being tried, there must be some unusual facts present in both crimes or particularly similar acts that would indicate that the same person committed both crimes, and while the similarities need not be unique and bizarre, they must tend to support a reasonable inference that the same person committed both the earlier and later acts. State v. Gary, 348 N.C. 510, 501 S.E.2d 57 (1998).

When prior incidents are offered for a proper purpose, the ultimate test of admissibility is whether they are sufficiently similar and not so remote as to run afoul of the balancing test between probative value and prejudicial effect set out in § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. West, 103 N.C. App. 1, 404 S.E.2d 191 (1991).

A prior act or crime is "similar" if, etc. there are some unusual facts present indicating that the same person committed both the earlier offense and the present one. However, the similarities between the two incidents need not be "unique and bizarre." State v. Sneeden, 108 N.C. App. 506, 424 S.E.2d 449 (1993), aff'd, 336 N.C. 482, 444 S.E.2d 218 (1994).

Evidence of defendant's attempt to burn a second victim's body was admissible where the unusual, unique and bizarre circumstances of the two deaths — the dismemberment of the bodies, the severing of the ears, the saving of those ears, and the building of two bonfires — revealed a contrived, common plan showing the same person committed both crimes. State v. Sokolowski, 351 N.C. 137, 522 S.E.2d 65 (1999).

The "acid test" for whether evidence of other crimes properly falls within the identity provision in subsection (b) of this rule and its common law precursor is its logical relevancy to the particular purpose for which it is sought to be introduced. State v. Jeter, 326 N.C. 457, 389 S.E.2d 805 (1990).

The list of purposes in the last sentence of subsection (b) of this rule is not exclusive, and the fact that evidence cannot be brought within a category does not necessarily mean that the evidence is inadmissible. State v. DeLeonardo, 315 N.C. 762, 340 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

The list in the second sentence of subsection (b) of this rule contains examples of theories of relevancy under which extrinsic conduct evidence may properly be used as circumstantial proof of a controverted fact at trial (for instance, to prove motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, etc.). This list is neither exclusive nor exhaustive. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

The second sentence of subsection (b) of this rule contains a list of theories of relevancy which is neither exclusive nor exhaustive. State v. Young, 317 N.C. 396, 346 S.E.2d 626 (1986).

The list of other purposes contained within subsection (b) of this rule is nonexclusive, and thus evidence not falling within these categories may be admissible. State v. Everhardt, 96 N.C. App. 1, 384 S.E.2d 562 (1989).

Challenges Made Pursuant to This Section Must Follow Proper Procedure — The court would not hear the defendant's challenge, pursuant to this section, to the introduction of evidence of past acts of domestic and sexual violence against five women in his trial for the murder and dismemberment of victim where his pretrial motion in limine did not preserve the question for appeal; where he failed to object during trial to the admission of the evidence of prior bad acts; and where he offered no explanation, analysis or specific contention in his appellate brief to support his challenge. State v. Grooms, 353 N.C. 50, 540 S.E.2d 713 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Erroneous Admission Cured by Another Proper Purpose. — Trial court's admission of the testimonies of two prior rape victims to show victim's lack of consent was error but not prejudicial error because the evidence was admissible to show a common plan or purpose. State v. Harris, 140 N.C. App. 208, 535 S.E.2d 614 (2000).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in deferring a ruling on motion in limine to suppress subsection (b) evidence of the underlying facts of prior convictions. While it may have been preferable for the court to have ruled on this motion earlier, the court's handling of the matter and its basis for deferred ruling were reasonable and did not constitute an abuse of discretion. State v. Barber, 120 N.C. App. 505, 463 S.E.2d 405 (1995).

Court's ruling that defendant's prior drug deals could only come in if he "opened the door" by taking the stand and denying he had ever dealt drugs was upheld where defendant did not show prejudice because he did not make an offer of proof regarding his testimony, and there was no evidence as to what his factual defense would have been had the State revealed to him those acts it intended to prove, under section (b) of this Rule, and those acts it would attempt to elicit, should he testify, under § 8C-1, Rule 608(b). State v. Manning, 139 N.C. App. 454, 534 S.E.2d 219 (2000), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 353 N.C. 273, 546 S.E.2d 385 (2000), aff'd, 353 N.C. 449, 545 S.E.2d 211 (2001).

When evidence reasonably tends to prove a material fact in issue in the crime charged, it will not be rejected merely because it also proves defendant guilty of another crime. State v. White, 101 N.C. App. 593, 401 S.E.2d 106, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 329 N.C. 275, 407 S.E.2d 852 (1991).

Prior Violent Acts of Defendant. — Court did not err in allowing the State to put defendant's character into evidence by presenting specific instances of violent conduct by defendant, where defendant opened the door to the State's subsequent questions by portraying herself as a good mother. State v. Burgess, 134 N.C. App. 632, 518 S.E.2d 209 (1999).

Evidence of defendant's prior assault on another victim was admissible to show common scheme and intent where the prior assault and the current charges were similar in nature; in both instances the victims, similar in age, visited various residences or places in which they were unfamiliar and then were taken by automobile to isolated areas at night, defendant told the victims something was wrong with the automobile, asked the victims to get out of the automobile, and then proceeded to sexually assault them. State v. Chavis, 141 N.C. App. 177, 540 S.E.2d 404 (2000).

Evidence of an assault and attempted robbery involving the defendant that took place two days before murders was admissible where the closeness in both geography and time, the similar nature of the assault, and the connection between the bullets found at both scenes presented sufficient similarities for the evidence's admissibility. State v. Lytch, 142 N.C. App. 576, 544 S.E.2d 570 (2001).

Prior Violent Act By Victim. — Where a defendant seeks under subsection (b) to use evidence of a prior violent act by the victim to prove the defendant's state of mind at the time he killed the victim, the defendant must show that he was aware of the prior act and that his awareness somehow was related to the killing. State v. Strickland, 346 N.C. 443, 488 S.E.2d 194 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1078, 118 S. Ct. 858, 139 L. Ed. 2d 757 (1998).

Prior Act of Witness. — The trial court did not err by excluding evidence of witness's prior knife threat on a police officer where the record revealed no unusual facts surrounding the knife threat that were also present in the circumstances surrounding the victim's death. State v. Hamilton, 351 N.C. 14, 519 S.E.2d 514 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1102, 120 S. Ct. 1841, 146 L. Ed. 2d 783 (2000).

Evidence of previous threats is admissible in trials for first degree murder to prove premeditation and deliberation, and the remoteness in time of the threat goes to its weight, but does not make it inadmissible. State v. Cox, 344 N.C. 184, 472 S.E.2d 760 (1996).

Where an accident is alleged, evidence of similar acts is more probative than in cases in which an accident is not alleged. State v. Stager, 329 N.C. 278, 406 S.E.2d 876 (1991).

When an accused contends a victim's death was an accident rather than a homicide, evidence of similar acts may be offered to show that the act in dispute was not inadvertent, accidental, or involuntary. State v. Boczkowski, 130 N.C. App. 702, 504 S.E.2d 796 (1998).

The trial court properly allowed the introduction of defendant's prior driving-related crimes to establish that defendant acted with the malice necessary to convict him of second-degree murder; the defendant's convictions, dating back to 1982, were not too remote in time to be relevant. State v. Miller, 142 N.C. App. 435, 543 S.E.2d 201 (2001).

Trial court properly permitted evidence of defendant's having been convicted of a prior shooting similar to the one with which defednant was accused since the prior crimes evidence showed absence of accident (as defendant claimed), motive, and common plan or scheme for shooting the victim. State v. Lloyd, 354 N.C. 76, 552 S.E.2d 596 (2001).

This rule includes no requisite that the evidence tending to prove defendant's identity as the perpetrator of another crime be direct evidence exclusively. State v. Moore, 335 N.C. 567, 440 S.E.2d 797, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 898, 115 S. Ct. 253, 130 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1994).

Chain-of-events evidence leading up to murder was properly admitted to establish defendant's intent and motive for the murders at issue, the evidence was more probative than prejudicial. State v. Rose, 339 N.C. 172, 451 S.E.2d 211 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 2565, 132 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1995).

When Evidence of Other Crimes May Be Admitted. — Subsection (b) of this rule allows the use of extrinsic conduct evidence so long as the evidence is relevant for some purpose other than to show that defendant has the propensity of the type of conduct for which he is being tried. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

Subsection (b) of this rule permits evidence that a defendant committed similar offenses when it tends to establish a common plan or scheme embracing the commission of a series of crimes so related to each other that proof of one or more tends to prove the crime charged and to connect the accused with its commission. State v. Morrison, 85 N.C. App. 511, 355 S.E.2d 182, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 796, 361 S.E.2d 84 (1987).

Evidence of other offenses is admissible so long as it is relevant to any fact or issue other than the character of the accused. State v. Bagley, 321 N.C. 201, 362 S.E.2d 244 (1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 1036, 108 S. Ct. 1598, 99 L. Ed. 2d 912 (1988); State v. Rael, 321 N.C. 528, 364 S.E.2d 125 (1988); State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

Even though evidence may tend to show other crimes, wrongs, or acts by the defendant, and his propensity to commit them, it is admissible under subsection (b) of this rule so long as it is also relevant for some purpose other than to show that defendant has the propensity for the type of conduct for which he is being tried. State v. Bagley, 321 N.C. 201, 362 S.E.2d 244 (1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 1036, 108 S. Ct. 1598, 99 L. Ed. 2d 912 (1988).

Evidence of other crimes may distract the fact finders and confuse their consideration of the issues at trial. With these considerations bearing great weight, evidence of prior bad acts, admitted to show a common plan under this rule, must be sufficiently similar and not so remote in time before they can be admitted against a defendant. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 585, 369 S.E.2d 822 (1988).

Subsection (b) allows the admission of evidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts to show motive, opportunity, intent, plan or identity. State v. Allen, 92 N.C. App. 168, 374 S.E.2d 119 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 544, 380 S.E.2d 772 (1989).

Under subsection (b) of this rule there is a clear general rule of inclusion of relevant evidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts by a defendant, subject to but one exception requiring its exclusion if its only probative value is to show that the defendant has the propensity or disposition to commit an offense of the nature of the crime charged. State v. Coffey, 326 N.C. 268, 389 S.E.2d 48 (1990), cert. denied, — N.C. —, 421 S.E.2d 360 (1992); State v. Thomas, 350 N.C. 315, 514 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 503, 145 L. Ed. 2d 388 (1999).

Under subsection (b) of this rule, it is not the case that evidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts by a defendant falls under a general rule of exclusion subject to certain exceptions. It is clear now that, as a careful reading of subsection (b) clearly shows, evidence of other offenses is admissible so long as it is relevant to any fact or issue other than the character of the accused. State v. Coffey, 326 N.C. 268, 389 S.E.2d 48 (1990), cert. denied, — N.C. —, 421 S.E.2d 360 (1992).

Evidence is admissible under subsection (b) of this rule if it is substantial evidence tending to support a reasonable finding by the jury that the defendant committed a similar act or crime and its probative value is not limited solely to tending to establish the defendant's propensity to commit a crime such as the crime charged. State v. Stager, 329 N.C. 278, 406 S.E.2d 876 (1991).

Evidence of other crimes committed by a defendant may be admissible under subsection (b) if it establishes the chain of circumstances or context of the charged crime; such evidence is admissible if the evidence of other crimes serves to enhance the natural development of the facts or is necessary to complete the story of the charged crime for the jury. State v. White, 340 N.C. 264, 457 S.E.2d 841 (1995).

Because the unusual injuries inflicted on the victim were particularly similar to those inflicted by defendant upon the victim's mother and because the unusual acts which would have caused the victim's injuries were particularly similar those acts defendant committed against the victim's mother, the evidence of defendant's prior misconduct toward regarding his choking her, bruising her with his hands and fingers, and bending her arms behind her back was relevant and admissible to show identity under subsection (b). State v. Burr, 341 N.C. 263, 461 S.E.2d 602 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1123, 116 S. Ct. 1359, 134 L. Ed. 2d 526 (1996).

Evidence of defendant's prior traffic violations—driving 75 mph in a 45 mph zone, 76 mph in a 45 mph zone, 70 mph in a 35 mph zone, and 70 mph in a 55 mph zone—was relevant to establish defendant's "depraved heart" on the night he struck the victims' vehicle while rounding a sharp curve at a speed at least 40 mph over the posted limit. State v. Rich, 351 N.C. 386, 527 S.E.2d 299 (2000).

Repressed memory evidence of a sexual offense previously committed by the defendant was admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) to show a common plan or scheme. State v. Williamson, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 54, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 945 (2001).

Evidence of Husband's Prior Misconduct Toward His Wife. — Evidence that defendant had beaten his wife numerous times during their marriage was admissible to prove motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, or absence of mistake or accident with regard to the subsequent fatal attack upon her. State v. Murillo, 349 N.C. 573, 509 S.E.2d 752 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 103, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

Trial court properly allowed evidence of defendant's prior conviction for assault and injury to personal property pursuant to this section to show intent, ill will and malice; ten-year time span affected weight of evidence, not admissibility. State v. Wilds, 130 N.C. App. 195, 515 S.E.2d 466 (1999).

But Hearsay Rules Apply. — If evidence of a defendant's misconduct toward his wife during the marriage is offered to prove motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, or absence of mistake or accident with regard to a subsequent fatal attack on her, and the evidence is used to prove the truth of the matter asserted, it must be admissible under the rules against hearsay. State v. Murillo, 349 N.C. 573, 509 S.E.2d 752 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 103, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

The list of permissible purposes for admission of "other crimes" evidence is not exclusive, and such evidence is admissible as long as it is relevant to any fact or issue other than the defendant's propensity to commit the crime. State v. White, 340 N.C. 264, 457 S.E.2d 841 (1995).

Evidence of other crimes must be connected by point of time and circumstance. Through this commonality, proof of one act may reasonably prove a second. However, the passage of time between the commission of the two acts slowly erodes the commonality between them. The probability of an ongoing plan or scheme then becomes tenuous. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 585, 369 S.E.2d 822 (1988).

Sufficiently Similar Crimes. — Evidence of robbery of a restaurant committed by defendants one week prior to the attempted robbery in case at issue was sufficiently similar to show intent. State v. Davis, 340 N.C. 1, 455 S.E.2d 627, cert. denied, 516 U.S. 846, 116 S. Ct. 136, 133 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1995).

Defendant's actions against former girlfriend and those against the victim were sufficiently similar that the ten-year span between the crimes charged and the prior bad acts did not render the evidence too remote to be probative on the issue of common plan or scheme. State v. Penland, 343 N.C. 634, 472 S.E.2d 734 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1098, 117 S. Ct. 781, 136 L. Ed. 2d 725 (1997).

Where evidence of defendant's prior assaults were sufficiently similar to evidence in case of first degree murder and intent to commit first degree murder, prior bad act evidence was properly admitted for the limited purposes of showing motive, purpose, intent, and opportunity to commit, and if there existed a scheme, system, or design or preparation for the offense as to the charge of first degree murder, and to establish intent to commit murder as to the charge of second degree burglary. State v. White, 343 N.C. 378, 471 S.E.2d 593 (1996).

Evidence of a prior murder was admissible, where the murder the defendant had committed 17 years earlier for which he was convicted of second-degree murder was committed in the same manner, tending to show that the defendant had both knowledge and intent when he committed the new murder, because the evidence was relevant for reasons other than to show defendant's propensity to commit crime. State v. Hipps, 348 N.C. 377, 501 S.E.2d 625 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1180, 119 S. Ct. 1119, 143 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1999).

Other crimes evidence was admissible to show the defendant's modus operandi in carrying out another robbery, where both incidents began with a knock at the door at about midnight, two perpetrators were involved, the victims in both cases were told to give up their "stash," and the robberies were committed within ten days of each other. State v. Allred, 131 N.C. App. 11, 505 S.E.2d 153 (1998).

In a rape prosecution, evidence that defendant had been convicted of a rape that occurred six years earlier was properly admitted; the modus operandi in the two rapes was similar and the first rape was not too remote in time as defendant had been paroled after his conviction for the first rape only a few months before the second rape. State v. Barkley, 144 N.C. App. 514, 551 S.E.2d 131 (2001).

The admissibility of evidence of a prior crime must be closely scrutinized since this type of evidence may put before the jury crimes or bad acts allegedly committed by the defendant for which he has neither been indicted nor convicted. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 585, 369 S.E.2d 822 (1988).

The use of other crimes evidence under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) is guided by two constraints: similarity and temporal proximity. State v. Bidgood, 144 N.C. App. 267, 550 S.E.2d 198 (2001).

Insufficiently Similar Crimes. — The admission of defendant's prior conviction was in error because any similarity between the prior robbery for which defendant was convicted and the subsequent robbery was so slight as to be virtually non-existent. State v. Willis, 136 N.C. App. 820, 526 S.E.2d 191 (2000).

When a specific mental intent or state of mind is an essential element of the charged offense, evidence of previous acts of the same kind is admissible to prove the defendant's intent or state of mind. State v. Hall, 85 N.C. App. 447, 355 S.E.2d 250, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 515, 358 S.E.2d 525 (1987).

Evidence of other misconduct is admissible under the identity exception upon a showing of unusual facts present in both acts, or particularly similar acts which tend to show that the same person committed both. State v. Williams, 82 N.C. App. 281, 346 S.E.2d 315 (1986).

Subsection (b) of this rule must be applied to allow a defendant to introduce evidence of very similar crimes of another person, when such evidence tends to show that the other person committed the crime for which the defendant is on trial. State v. Cotton, 318 N.C. 663, 351 S.E.2d 277 (1987).

Determination by Trial Court Before Extrinsic Conduct Evidence Is Admitted. — Before extrinsic conduct evidence is admissible pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, the trial court is required, first, to determine whether conduct is being offered pursuant to subsection (b); and second, to make a determination of the evidence's relevancy. If the trial judge makes the initial determination that the evidence is of the type and is offered for a proper purpose under subsection (b), the record should so reflect. State v. Rowland, 89 N.C. App. 372, 366 S.E.2d 550 (1988).

Probative Value Must Be Weighed Against Potential Prejudice. — If evidence of other acts is offered to prove something other than character, the trial court must determine whether the risk of undue prejudice outweighs the probative value of the evidence, in view of the availability of the other means of proof. State v. Bartow, 77 N.C. App. 103, 334 S.E.2d 480 (1985).

Although admissible under subsection (b) of this rule, the probative value of evidence must still outweigh the danger of undue prejudice to the defendant to be admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. Everhardt, 96 N.C. App. 1, 384 S.E.2d 562 (1989), cert. denied, 326 N.C. 52, 389 S.E.2d 99 (1990).

While this rule does not offer a mechanical solution, once it is established that evidence is admissible under subsection (b), a determination must be made as to whether the danger of undue prejudice outweighs the probative value of the evidence in view of the availability of other means of proof and other factors appropriate for making decisions of this kind under § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. DeLeonardo, 315 N.C. 762, 340 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

The test for determining whether evidence of crimes, wrongs or acts other than those specifically at issue in the trial is admissible is whether the incidents are sufficiently similar and not too remote in time so as to be more probative than prejudicial under the balancing test of § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. Shultz, 88 N.C. App. 197, 362 S.E.2d 853 (1987).

The ultimate test for determining whether evidence of other offenses is admissible is whether the incidents are sufficiently similar and not so remote in time as to be more probative than prejudicial under the balancing test of § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. Boyd, 321 N.C. 574, 364 S.E.2d 118 (1988).

The admission into evidence of a crack pipe was proper to show motive in a robbery, especially since the defendant failed to argue that its probative value outweighed its prejudice to the defendant. State v. Stevenson, 136 N.C. App. 235, 523 S.E.2d 734 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 368, 543 S.E.2d 144 (2000).

The State does not bear the burden of proving the validity of a plea of guilty in a prior criminal matter before it may be used to impeach the defendant or to aggravate his sentence. State v. Smith, 96 N.C. App. 235, 385 S.E.2d 349 (1989), cert. denied, 326 N.C. 267, 389 S.E.2d 119 (1990).

Conviction of other crimes is not a prerequisite to their admissibility under this rule. Conduct need not be criminal or unlawful if it sheds light on defendant's character and is relevant to something other than criminal propensity. State v. Suggs, 86 N.C. App. 588, 359 S.E.2d 24, cert. denied, 321 N.C. 299, 362 S.E.2d 786 (1987).

Even if evidence is admissible under subsection (b) of this rule, the trial court must still determine whether its probative value outweighs the danger of undue prejudice to the defendant. State v. Frazier, 319 N.C. 388, 354 S.E.2d 475 (1987).

Prior Conviction And Prior Pending Impaired Driving Charge. — The trial court did not err in admitting evidence of the two prior incidents of impaired driving where the 1991 conviction was identical with the one at bar and the 1997 incident was indicative of the defendant's state of mind although the defendant was appealing that decision and awaited a trial de novo, especially where the court's instruction clearly communicated that the defendant had not been convicted and that the evidence was admitted for the limited purpose of showing state of mind or intent. State v. McAllister, 530 S.E.2d 859 (2000).

The doctrine of collateral estoppel, as encompassed by the U.S. Const., Amend. V guarantee against double jeopardy, does not prohibit the introduction of evidence, in a subsequent trial for a different crime, of a crime of which a defendant has previously been acquitted. State v. Agee, 326 N.C. 542, 391 S.E.2d 171 (1990).

Prior Acts Must Be Sufficiently Similar and Not So Remote in Time as to Be Prejudicial. — To be admissible, evidence of prior sexual abuse must relate to incidents sufficiently similar and not so remote in time that they are more probative than prejudicial under balancing test of § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. Faircloth, 99 N.C. App. 685, 394 S.E.2d 198 (1990).

Remoteness of Other Offense. — While the remoteness of another offense is relevant to its admissibility to show modus operandi or a common scheme or plan, remoteness usually goes to the weight of the evidence, not its admissibility. State v. Hall, 85 N.C. App. 447, 355 S.E.2d 250, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 515, 358 S.E.2d 525 (1987).

Generally, remoteness in time goes to the weight of the evidence and not to its admissibility. State v. Schultz, 88 N.C. App. 197, 362 S.E.2d 853 (1987), aff'd, 322 N.C. 467, 368 S.E.2d 386 (1988).

Remoteness in time is most important where evidence of another crime is used to show that both crimes arose out of a common scheme or plan; remoteness in time is less important when the other crime is admitted because its modus operandi is so strikingly similar to the modus operandi of the crime being tried as to permit a reasonable inference that the same person committed both crimes. State v. Schultz, 88 N.C. App. 197, 362 S.E.2d 853 (1987), aff'd, 322 N.C. 467, 368 S.E.2d 386 (1988).

A process that allows for the passage of time to be weighed in a court's initial decision to admit evidence of other crimes is the better reasoned approach and one that ensures that an accused is tried only for the acts for which he has been indicted. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 585, 369 S.E.2d 822 (1988).

Attenuated by time, the pertinence of evidence of prior offenses attaches to the defendant's character rather than to the offense for which he is on trial; in other words, remoteness in time tends to diminish the probative value of the evidence and enhance its tendency to prejudice. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Remoteness in time between evidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts and the charged crime is less significant when the prior conduct is used to show intent, motive, knowledge, or lack of accident, since remoteness in time generally affects only the weight to be given such evidence, not its admissibility. State v. White, 349 N.C. 535, 508 S.E.2d 253 (1998), cert.

denied, 527 U.S. 1026, 119 S. Ct. 2376, 144 L. Ed. 2d 779 (1999).

Temporal remoteness of defendant's prior sexual acts in the presence of children, properly admitted under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b), went to their weight, rather than admissibility. State v. Beckham, 145 N.C. App. 119, 550 S.E.2d 231 (2001).

Testimony Not Too Remote to Be Admissible. — Where defendant was found guilty of taking indecent liberties with a minor, defendant assigned error to the admission of testimony of two witnesses that they were touched by defendant in ways similar to victim in case, and defendant contended evidence of prior acts was inadmissible under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b), because prior acts were both remote in time and dissimilar to the act charged in the indictment, testimony of witnesses was admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) since lapse of nearly five years between events involving witnesses and those involving victims did not diminish similarities between acts. State v. Roberson, 93 N.C. App. 83, 376 S.E.2d 486, cert. denied, 324 N.C. 435, 379 S.E.2d 247 (1989).

Three instances of similar sexual conduct against same victim within a 28-month span did not make evidence impermissibly remote. State v. Faircloth, 99 N.C. App. 685, 394 S.E.2d 198 (1990).

Evidence that a murder defendant gave the victim defaced photographs of the victim's wife more than four months before the shooting was not too remote to be relevant. The passage of four months did not render this evidence irrelevant. State v. Terry, 329 N.C. 191, 404 S.E.2d 658 (1991).

Remoteness did not bar admission of the defendant's conviction of second-degree murder that occurred 17 years earlier, where the evidence showed that the prior murder was committed in the same manner as the present murder, because the lapse of time went to the evidence's weight rather than its admissibility. State v. Hipps, 348 N.C. 377, 501 S.E.2d 625 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1180, 119 S. Ct. 1119, 143 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1999).

Defendant's prior sexual assaults were not too remote in time to prevent their admission to show a similar modus operandi to a new sexual offense, where there was a six-year period between the former offense and present offense, excluding time spent in prison. State v. Blackwell, 133 N.C. App. 31, 514 S.E.2d 116 (1999), cert. denied, 350 N.C. 595, 537 S.E.2d 483 (1999).

Evidence of defendant's prior alleged sexual acts committed on victim when she was five years old, some seven years before the first charged offense, and of sexual acts committed on victim when she was ten years old, some two years before the first charged offense, was admissible pursuant to this rule to show a common plan or ongoing scheme by defendant of sexually abusing her. State v. Thompson, 139 N.C. App. 299, 533 S.E.2d 834 (2000).

Seventeen Year Prior Assault on First Wife, Not Too Remote. — The time between defendant's assault of his first wife and of his second wife was not so remote as to make his first wife's testimony inadmissible where the defendant spent at least half of the seventeen years in prison serving time for the assault; where the defendant attacked both women during a period of marital discord; and where the defendant never denied stabbing his first wife or shooting his second wife to prevent either from leaving him. State v. Brooks, 138 N.C. App. 185, 530 S.E.2d 849 (2000).

Prior Bad Acts Showing Intent, Plan or Design. — Evidence that an arson defendant had previously solicited or attempted to solicit youths to commit other crimes was admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) for purpose of showing defendant's intent, plan, design, or mode of operation and that its probative value outweighed its prejudicial effect. State v. Richardson, 100 N.C. App. 240, 395 S.E.2d 143 (1990).

Testimony by witnesses that they had contracted with defendant to move their houses, which defendant never did yet retained their money, was admissible to show the intent or plan of defendant. State v. Barfield, 127 N.C. App. 399, 489 S.E.2d 905 (1997).

The trial court properly allowed the plaintiff in a sexual harassment case to present evidence concerning alleged prior misconduct, where the plaintiff alleged that the defendant cut her wages and forced her to resign when she refused his sexual advances, and she was allowed to testify as to a statement allegedly made by defendant concerning a previous sexual relationship he had with a prior employee, in that this statement could suggest an intent to prey on female subordinates. Russell v. Buchanan, 129 N.C. App. 519, 500 S.E.2d 728 (1998), cert. denied, 348 N.C. 501, 510 S.E.2d 655 (1998).

Testimony of prior crimes or wrongs was properly admitted under this rule in a prosecution for conspiracy to traffic in cocaine, where testimony by a witness who had been a minor at the time in question that he had sold cocaine for the defendant and had been paid by the defendant in drugs and currency was relevant to show the defendant's intent to plan and commit a conspiracy. State v. Love, 131 N.C. App. 350, 507 S.E.2d 577 (1998), aff'd, 350 N.C. 586, 516 S.E.2d 382 (1999).

Past incidents of defendant's failure to provide proper care for the victim, her daughter who had cerebral palsy and died from malnutrition, were relevant and admissible to show intent because the trial court properly balanced its probative value against any unduly prejudicial effect by giving a limiting instruction and granted defendant's other motions in limine to suppress evidence of the pathologist's conclusion that the victim died from the withholding of food, of defendant's lifestyle, of the injury to the victim's brother's eye, and of two investigations by the DSS into unsubstantiated allegations of neglect of other children. State v. Fritsch, 351 N.C. 373, 526 S.E.2d 451 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 890, 121 S. Ct. 213, 148 L. Ed. 2d 150 (2000).

Prior Bad Act Showing Intent, Malice, Premeditation, and Deliberation. — Where defendant was convicted of murdering his wife, testimony regarding defendant's frequent arguments with, violent acts toward, separations from, reconciliations with, and threats to his wife were admissible to prove the issues in dispute, lack of intent, malice, premeditation, and deliberation. State v. Scott, 343 N.C. 313, 471 S.E.2d 605 (1996).

The defendant's prior alcohol-related conviction pursuant to N.C. Gen. Stat. § 20-138.3 was relevant, where the impaired defendant caused a death and was charged with second-degree murder, and admissible for the purpose of establishing malice even though the prior offense imposed strict liability based upon defendant's age without regard to the quantity consumed. State v. Gray, 137 N.C. App. 345, 528 S.E.2d 46 (2000).

Prior Bad Acts Showing Intent, Malice, Premeditation, and Deliberation. — Evidence of defendant's prior assault on the victim tended to establish not only malice, intent, premeditation and deliberation, all elements of first-degree murder, but more importantly, it tended to establish ill-will against the victim and lack of accident; where defendant contended that he shot her by mistake, this evidence was relevant to an issue other than defendant's character. State v. Washington, 141 N.C. App. 354, 540 S.E.2d 388 (2000), cert denied, 353 N.C. 396, 547 S.E.2d 427 (2001).

Evidence of felonious impaired driving could be used to demonstrate defendant had the requisite state of malice required for second-degree murder. State v. Blackwell, 142 N.C. App. 388, 542 S.E.2d 675 (2001).

Evidence of Pending DWI Admissible to Show Malice — The circumstances attendant to the pending DWI charge—defendant was speeding on the wrong side of the road and ran another motorist off the road while impaired—demonstrated that defendant was aware that his conduct leading up to the collision at issue was reckless and inherently dangerous to human life; thus, such evidence tended to show malice on the part of defendant and was properly admitted under this rule. State v. Jones, 353 N.C. 159, 538 S.E.2d 917 (2000).

Intent is a mental attitude seldom provable by direct evidence. Past incidents of mistreatment are admissible to show intent in a child abuse case. State v. West, 103 N.C. App. 1, 404 S.E.2d 191 (1991).

Passage of Time May Prove Existence of Plan. — Where defendant was convicted of first-degree rape of his daughter, prior acts were not too remote to be considered as evidence of defendant's common scheme to abuse the victim sexually; when similar acts have been performed continuously over a period of years, the passage of time serves to prove, rather than disprove, the existence of a plan. State v. Shamsid-Deen, 324 N.C. 437, 379 S.E.2d 842 (1989).

Prior Acts Showing Motive or Conduct. — Evidence that a murder defendant had engaged in homosexual activities with a witness and with two murder victims was relevant to show motive and pattern of conduct. State v. Ross, 100 N.C. App. 207, 395 S.E.2d 148 (1990), aff'd, 329 N.C. 108, 405 S.E.2d 158 (1991).

Trial court's admission of the testimony of kidnapping victim regarding a prior incident during which defendant struck the murder victim in the back of the head with a pole and threatened to cut her throat with a butcher knife was upheld under section (b) of this Rule and under § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. Kyle, 333 N.C. 687, 430 S.E.2d 412 (1993).

Evidence about drug sales by defendant and his friends on the night of the murder was relevant to show the motive for the shooting and to put the crime in context. Thus, the testimony was admissible under section (b) and the trial court did not err in admitting it. State v. Cook, 334 N.C. 564, 433 S.E.2d 730 (1993).

Testimony of defendant's grandfather concerning defendant's loss of luggage, offered by his brother co-defendant, was relevant as well as admissible, pursuant to this section, to prove his motive for not wanting to return to Richmond by bus (he would ostensibly have to stop over in the town where the police seized his luggage for containing marijuana) and, consequently, his ultimate motive for robbery and car theft. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Evidence of defendant's offenses subsequent to burglary, namely, shoplifting, breaking, entering and larceny, and car theft, were admissible to show intent and motive (defendant wanted money for drugs) and was not unfairly prejudicial where the judge gave a limiting instruction. State v. Hutchinson, 139 N.C. App. 132, 532 S.E.2d 569 (2000).

Identity Must Be at Issue. — Before identity evidence is admissible under Rule 404(b), there must be a determination of whether the identity of the perpetrator is at issue. State v.

White, 101 N.C. App. 593, 401 S.E.2d 106, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 329 N.C. 275, 407 S.E.2d 852 (1991).

Where the prior crime was not being offered to show common plan or scheme, but to show identity, — the passage of time affected the weight of the evidence rather than its admissibility. State v. Carter, 338 N.C. 569, 451 S.E.2d 157 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1107, 115 S. Ct. 2256, 132 L. Ed. 2d 263 (1995).

Application of the identity exception of subsection (b) of this rule requires that some unusual facts or particularly similar acts be present in both crimes indicating that the same person committed both crimes. State v. Schultz, 88 N.C. App. 197, 362 S.E.2d 853 (1987), aff'd, 322 N.C. 467, 368 S.E.2d 386 (1988).

Evidence of Other Murder — Showing Opportunity and Identity. — Trial court correctly allowed evidence of one murder to show opportunity and identity in support of another murder. State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct. 951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

Same — Showing Common Scheme. — Where State used evidence of another victim's death to show that defendant had a common scheme to hurt his former girlfriend for refusing to continue their relationship, and the two killings shared significant similarities, and the court conducted a lengthy pretrial hearing which supported its decision to admit the evidence, appellate court found no abuse of discretion under this rule. State v. Underwood, 134 N.C. App. 533, 518 S.E.2d 231 (1999), cert. dismissed, 352 N.C. 669, 535 S.E.2d 33 (2000).

Modus Operandi Need Not Be Unique or Bizarre. — Under subsection (b) of this rule, for similar crimes to be admitted as evidence of identity it is not necessary that the modus operandi of the crime which the state seeks to have admitted rise to the level of the unique or bizarre. Rather, the similarities must support the reasonable inference that the same person committed both the earlier and the later crimes. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

Prior Assault. — The evidence of the defendant's prior assault on murder victim tended to establish malice, intent, premeditation and deliberation and the defendant's ill will toward the victim; thus, the evidence was relevant to an issue other than defendant's character. State v. Alston, 341 N.C. 198, 461 S.E.2d 687 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1148, 116 S. Ct. 1021, 134 L. Ed. 2d 100 (1996).

The State was allowed to ask the defendant questions about the names of other women he had been convicted of shooting, his relationship with those other women, and type of weapons he had used, to show that he had a history of shooting women with whom he had previously had relationships. State v. Dammons, 128 N.C. App. 16, 493 S.E.2d 480 (1997).

Testimony concerning the defendant's discipline of the victim, the manner in which she spoke to him, along with testimony describing her as a "pushy person," was properly admitted where the defendant was charged with felony child abuse and her treatment of the victim was at issue and, thus, relevant. State v. Clark, 138 N.C. App. 392, 531 S.E.2d 482 (2000).

Absence of Mistake. — Where defendant was on trial for murdering his 2 1/2 year old niece, evidence that 6 months prior defendant became angry with girlfriend's 4 year old son and shook him and threw him into a chair which then slid and hit the wall was relevant to establish defendant's motive and intent in shaking niece and to show absence of mistake on defendant's part. State v. Pierce, 346 N.C. 471, 488 S.E.2d 576 (1997).

Identity. — Evidence showing that defendant beat his girlfriend in the head with the same pistol used to murder the victim was admissible under subsection (b) for the purpose of identity. State v. Robinson, 346 N.C. 586, 488 S.E.2d 174 (1997), cert. denied, — N.C. —, 502 S.E.2d 611 (1998).

The testimony of a narcotics officer connecting the defendant to an address where clothing worn by the alleged murderer was found did not impermissibly introduce evidence of "crimes, wrongs, or acts" in violation of this section nor was the possibility of the jury's drawing a conclusion from the occupation of the witness as to the defendant's activities prejudicial. State v. Hanton, 140 N.C. App. 679, 540 S.E.2d 376 (2000).

Prior Sex Acts by Defendant Showing Intent, Motive or Plan. — Evidence of prior sex acts may have some relevance to the question of defendant's guilt of the crime charged if it tends to show a relevant state of mind such as intent, motive, plan, or opportunity. Such evidence is deemed admissible and not violative of the general rule prohibiting character evidence. State v. Hinson, 102 N.C. App. 29, 401 S.E.2d 371, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 273, 407 S.E.2d 846 (1991).

Evidence of prior sex acts may have some relevance on the question of defendant's guilt of the crime charged if it tends to show a relevant state of mind such as intent, motive, plan, or opportunity. State v. Boyd, 321 N.C. 574, 364 S.E.2d 118 (1988).

Evidence that perpetrators of sexual offenses have committed other sexual acts with their victims may be relevant and admissible. State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

North Carolina is quite liberal in admitting evidence of other sex offenses when those offenses involve the same victim as the victim in the crime for which the defendant is on trial. State v. Allen, 92 N.C. App. 168, 374 S.E.2d 119 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 544, 380 S.E.2d 772 (1989).

When the State seeks to introduce evidence of prior, similar sex offenses by a defendant, the Supreme Court of North Carolina has been markedly liberal in admitting such evidence for the purposes cited in subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

North Carolina liberally admits evidence of prior similar sex offenses; this is particularly true where the fact sought to be proved is the defendant's intent to commit a similar sexual offense for which the defendant has been charged. State v. Sneeden, 108 N.C. App. 506, 424 S.E.2d 449 (1993), aff'd, 336 N.C. 482, 444 S.E.2d 218 (1994).

The trial court did not err in admitting evidence that defendant had previously sexually assaulted another daughter pursuant to Rule 403 and subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Jacob, 113 N.C. App. 605, 439 S.E.2d 812 (1994).

Where five females testified that defendant looked after them when they were young and began his misconduct by touching them and fondling them, began to touch them more invasively as they grew older, had sexual intercourse with all but one of them and convinced each of them to remain quiet about the abuse by threatening to send them away or by threatening to stop taking care of their financial needs, all of the witnesses testified to similar forms of abuse which demonstrated a distinct pattern over a protracted period. State v. Frazier, 121 N.C. App. 1, 464 S.E.2d 490 (1995), aff'd, 344 N.C. 611, 476 S.E.2d 297 (1996).

While testimony regarding previous rape may have been irrelevant, its admission was not prejudicial where defendant's admission of intercourse on the grounds of consent was effectively a confession. State v. Anthony, 133 N.C. App. 573, 516 S.E.2d 195 (1999), appeal dismissed, cert. granted, 351 N.C. 109, 516 S.E.2d 195 (1999), aff'd, 528 S.E.2d 321 (2000).

Trial court properly admitted testimony of defendant's prior sexual assaults where (1) the prior assaults were admitted for purposes other than to show defendant had a propensity to commit the crimes charged; (2) the trial court instructed the jury to limit its consideration of the prior assaults to those proper purposes; (3) the trial court found that the assaults bore several similarities; (4) there were sufficient similarities to support a reasonable inference that the defendant committed all three assaults; and (5) the prior assaults were not so temporally remote as to diminish their probative value. State v. Berry, 143 N.C. App. 187, 546 S.E.2d 145 (2001), review denied, 353 N.C. 729, 551 S.E.2d 439 (2001).

Joinder of four sex offense charges against defendant was error, but not prejudicial error, where the record revealed that the crimes charged against defendant occurred over a period of 12 years, from 1984 to 1996, and involved three different victims (one being defendant's daughter, one his niece and the third unrelated), but, although all of the charges alleged sexual crimes against children, the evidence did not show that defendant went about committing them in any special way, or place, and where he neither offered an argument to support his objection to the joinder nor suggested to the court that it would prejudice him, and the evidence of the other crimes would have been admissible under section (b) of this rule. State v. Bowen, 139 N.C. App. 18, 533 S.E.2d 248 (2000).

By attacking the victim's character for marital fidelity, defendant went beyond what was necessary for his defense and opened the door to the rebuttal evidence. State v. Sexton, 336 N.C. 321, 444 S.E.2d 879, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1006, 115 S. Ct. 525, 130 L. Ed. 2d 429 (1994), 343 N.C. 516, 472 S.E.2d 23 (1996).

In a prosecution for first-degree murder, first-degree rape, and first-degree sexual assault, evidence of defendant's sexual relations with his ex-wife were probative of defendant's state of mind at the time the victim was sexually assaulted and murdered, and was properly admitted. State v. Moseley, 338 N.C. 1, 449 S.E.2d 412 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1091, 115 S. Ct. 1815, 131 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1995).

The similarity between two crimes, closely connected temporally, clearly supported the admission of a previous rape to prove identity and intent in the attempted rape for which defendant was being tried. State v. Carter, 338 N.C. 569, 451 S.E.2d 157 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1107, 115 S. Ct. 2256, 132 L. Ed. 2d 263 (1995).

Evidence of a party's prior driving record is inadmissible in automobile cases. However, where the jury found defendant negligent, admission of defendant's good driving record could not have influenced the jury's verdict to plaintiff's detriment. Wentz v. Unifi, Inc., 89 N.C. App. 33, 365 S.E.2d 198, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 610, 370 S.E.2d 257 (1988).

The court did not commit plain error in admitting defendant's driving offenses where defendant's driving offenses from eight to two years past were sufficiently proximate in time to the offenses charged, including murder in the second degree for causing a fatal automobile accident as a result of fleeing a police officer. State v. Fuller, 138 N.C. App. 481, 531 S.E.2d 861 (2000).

The trial court's instructions properly limited the use of evidence of defendant's prior traffic violations under this rule. State v. Fuller, 138 N.C. App. 481, 531 S.E.2d 861 (2000).

Evidence of Prior Robberies. — Admission of evidence of defendant's participation in several robberies, to corroborate the accounts of other witnesses or for the purpose of showing defendant's motive, intent or plan to commit the instant crime, presented with limiting jury instructions, could not fairly be characterized as arbitrary and unreasonable and in violation of the principles of § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. Hall, 134 N.C. App. 417, 517 S.E.2d 907 (1999).

Evidence of a prior robbery and a prior attempted robbery was correctly admitted after the court determined that the evidence was relevant for some purpose other than to show defendant's propensity to commit this type of crime, as required by this rule, and that it was more probative than prejudicial, as required by § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. Leggett, 135 N.C. App. 168, 519 S.E.2d 328 (1999).

Conversation Regarding Advantages of Committing Armed Robbery. — Evidence of defendant's alleged conversation with witness in which defendant, among other things, discussed the advantages of committing armed robbery over stealing and selling property as well as the manner in which it could be done, constituted Rule 404(b) evidence of another "crime, wrong, or act" on the part of defendant, but was admissible, inter alia, to show defendant had a plan, scheme, system, or design involving the commission of robberies. State v. Wilson, 108 N.C. App. 117, 423 S.E.2d 473 (1992).

Questions About Collateral Misdeeds Must Have Good Faith Basis. — A defendant who takes the stand may be asked about collateral misdeeds that tend to show his criminal conduct, intent or motive in the case being tried. But such questions must have a good faith basis. State v. Flannigan, 78 N.C. App. 629, 338 S.E.2d 109 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 197, 341 S.E.2d 572 (1986).

And Must Be Supported by Evidence. — The State, by questions put to a defendant during cross-examination, may not inform the jury of purported misdeeds by the defendant that firsthand knowledge of source does not support. State v. Flannigan, 78 N.C. App. 629, 338 S.E.2d 109 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 197, 341 S.E.2d 572 (1986).

Evidence Inadmissible If Its Only Value Is to Show Defendant's Propensity to Commit an Offense. — Subsection (b) of this rule is one of inclusion of relevant evidence of other crimes subject to but one exception requiring its exclusion if its only probative value is to show that defendant has propensity or disposition to commit an offense of nature of crime charged. State v. Faircloth, 99 N.C. App. 685, 394 S.E.2d 198 (1990).

The trial court's error in allowing evidence of a prior assault by defendant on the victim entitled him to a new trial; evidence of the 1994 assault did not tend to prove a material fact in issue in the crimes charged and demonstrated no connection between the 1994 assault and the 1997 assaults, other than the defendant's propensity for violence, making it inadmissible under this section. State v. Elliott, 137 N.C. App. 282, 528 S.E.2d 32 (2000).

Evidence of Other Crimes, etc., Is Not Admissible to Prove Character. — All that subsection (b) of this rule forbids is receiving evidence of other crimes, wrongs or acts to prove the character of a person in order to show that he acted in conformity therewith. State v. Elledge, 80 N.C. App. 714, 343 S.E.2d 549 (1986).

Evidence of prior wrongs cannot come into show the character of a person and that he acted in conformity with that character; thus, evidence of 14 separate incidents, which was clearly relevant to no other issue than to show that the defendant was a violent man and therefore must have been the aggressor when he shot and killed victim, was indirect contravention of subsection (b) of this rule, and the trial court erred in allowing it. State v. Mills, 83 N.C. App. 606, 351 S.E.2d 130 (1986).

Evidence of a violent disposition to prove that a person was the aggressor in an affray is an impermissible use of evidence of other crimes and not admissible under subsection (b), but even assuming that these acts were relevant and admissible, the probative value is far outweighed by the prejudicial effect of their admissibility and their admission and that they would only serve to show to the jury that the deceased was somewhat less worthy of living than someone who hadn't performed these relevant acts. State v. Smith, 337 N.C. 658, 447 S.E.2d 376 (1994).

And Prosecutor May Not Argue Defendant's Bad Character Therefrom. — Where evidence of defendant's past convictions was offered and admitted solely to impeach defendant's credibility, and this was the only legitimate purpose for which the evidence was admissible, it was error for the prosecutor in his argument to use defendant's prior convictions primarily to characterize him as a bad man of a violent, criminal nature and more likely to be guilty of the crime charged. State v. Tucker, 317 N.C. 532, 346 S.E.2d 417 (1986).

Prosecutor's Questions About Prior Crime Exceeded Permissible Purpose. — While, in murder prosecution, evidence that defendant was familiar with the gun and had used it previously might rebut defendant's claim of accident, the State greatly exceeded this purpose and questioned the witness at length about the details of the breaking and entering, details which had no connection with the crime for which defendant was being prosecuted. State v. Emery, 91 N.C. App. 24, 370 S.E.2d 456, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 627, 374 S.E.2d 594 (1988).

Scope of Inquiry on Cross-Examination of Defendant. — By choosing to testify, a defendant is subject to cross-examination as other witnesses; defendant waived his privilege against self-incrimination regarding bad acts when he elected to testify. State v. Artis, 91 N.C. App. 604, 372 S.E.2d 905 (1988).

Where defendant testified on direct examination that he had no intent of selling cocaine until he was approached by the informant, he raised the issue of entrapment, and § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) allowed the State on cross-examination to question defendant concerning the prior sale to undercover police to prove absence of entrapment; defendant's privilege against self-incrimination was not violated by the questions. State v. Artis, 91 N.C. App. 604, 372 S.E.2d 905 (1988).

Evidence of a victim's awareness of prior crimes allegedly committed by the defendant may be admitted to show that the victim's will had been overcome by her fears for her safety, where the offense in question requires proof of lack of consent or that the offense was committed against the will of the victim. State v. Young, 317 N.C. 396, 346 S.E.2d 626 (1986).

Evidence of physical abuse and animal abuse done in victim's presence was admissible pursuant to this rule where it tended to explain victim's fear of defendant and why she never reported all the incidents of sexual abuse, and where defendant specifically made her state of mind relevant; to the extent that evidence of physical and/or animal abuse not done in her presence was admitted, such admission was error, but would not have changed the outcome so as to require a new trial. State v. Thompson, 139 N.C. App. 299, 533 S.E.2d 834 (2000).

Trial court's admission of the victim's testimony from a domestic violence protective order hearing did not violate his right to confront the witness against him, nor did it violate § 8C-1, Rules 403, 404(b), or 803(3) of the North Carolina Rules of Evidence, where the hearsay statements constituted, and were admissible as, statements of declarant's then-existing mental, emotional, or physical condition and where their probative value outweighed their prejudicial effect. State v. Thibodeaux, 352 N.C. 570, 532 S.E.2d 797 (2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1155, 121 S. Ct. 1106, 148 L. Ed. 2d 976 (2001).

Evidence Held Improper But Not Prejudicial. — In light of uncontradicted evidence recorded against defendant, the State's line of questioning in connection with defendant's previous criminal record, while improper under subsection (b) of this rule, was not prejudicial. State v. Butler, 90 N.C. App. 463, 368 S.E.2d 887, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 176, 373 S.E.2d 116 (1988).

Testimony regarding defendant's failure to spend time with his sons did not tend to show that the victim was afraid of defendant or that she had no intention of reconciling with him. Rather, the evidence tended to show defendant's bad character and, as such, should not have been admitted. In light of all the evidence that was properly introduced, however, this tangential bit of evidence could not have affected the outcome of the trial; therefore, it was not prejudicial error. State v. Jolly, 332 N.C. 351, 420 S.E.2d 661 (1992).

Videotaping of Family Bathroom Not Relevant to Sex Offense Charge. — The admission of evidence indicating that the defendant, who was charged with two counts of first degree statutory sex offense against the twelve-year-old daughter of his girlfriend, installed a camcorder in his girlfriend's bathroom was error, pursuant to this section, since it did not tend to demonstrate a plan or scheme to sexually assault the child; however, its admission was not reversible error since the defendant failed to show it had "a probable impact on the jury's finding of guilt." State v. Doisey, 138 N.C. App. 620, 532 S.E.2d 240 (2000), cert. denied, 352 N.C. 678, 545 S.E.2d 434 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1177, 121 S. Ct. 1153, 148 L. Ed. 2d 1015 (2001).

Inadmissible Evidence Admitted but Held Harmless Error. — Although testimony was not relevant to any issue except the defendant's character to show that he had a propensity for bad acts and acted in conformity therewith in killing victim, it was harmless error to admit this testimony. In light of the strong substantive evidence against the defendant, as well as other evidence of bad acts including the ingestion of illegal drugs, the result would not have been different had this testimony been excluded. State v. Willis, 332 N.C. 151, 420 S.E.2d 158 (1992).

DNA Databank Evidence Properly Admitted. — The admission of testimony regarding the source of the DNA in the DNA data bank which led to the conviction of the defendant for a murder committed 4 years earlier was not plain error under this section. State v. Berry, 143 N.C. App. 187, 546 S.E.2d 145 (2001), review denied, 353 N.C. 729, 551 S.E.2d 439 (2001).

IV. ILLUSTRATIVE CASES.

Evidence Held Admissible. — Evidence that on the day prior to robbery the defendant had pleaded guilty to a crime in federal court and that he had been ordered to pay a fine of $2,500 was admissible for the limited purpose of showing that the defendant needed money, and thus had a motive to commit the robbery. State v. Spinks, 77 N.C. App. 657, 335 S.E.2d 786 (1985), aff'd, 316 N.C. 547, 342 S.E.2d 522 (1986).

Photographs depicting defendant in close proximity to marijuana plants or holding or smoking marijuana, which were found in defendant's kitchen, were admissible as evidence that defendant was living at house at which marijuana was found, and to show defendant's knowledge of the marijuana. Photographs of defendant's girlfriend, partially nude, found in an envelope in his bedroom, were also relevant, as evidence that defendant lived in the house. State v. Johnson, 78 N.C. App. 68, 337 S.E.2d 81 (1985).

In a prosecution for false pretenses involving a check cashing scheme, the testimony of certain witnesses, to the effect that defendant had been involved with passing bad checks in the past, was admissible where defendant had maintained in his own defense at trial that he was mistaken about the legitimacy of the checks and had no knowledge that the fake janitorial service in whose name the checks were written was a sham. State v. Freeman, 79 N.C. App. 177, 339 S.E.2d 56, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 338, 346 S.E.2d 144 (1986), rehearing denied, 318 N.C. 509, 349 S.E.2d 868 (1986), overruled in part by State v. Rogers, 346 N.C. 262, 485 S.E.2d 619 (1997).

In trial charging defendant with first-degree sexual offense involving his two sons, evidence relating to sexual activity involving defendant's three-year-old daughter was properly admitted under this rule. State v. DeLeonardo, 315 N.C. 762, 340 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

In light of the unusual modus operandi involved in the offense at issue, as well as prior sexual assault, the court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of the earlier incident, the "signature" value of which was high. State v. Wortham, 80 N.C. App. 54, 341 S.E.2d 76 (1986), rev'd in part, 318 N.C. 669, 351 S.E.2d 294 (1987).

Testimony that murder and assault victims had a bad reputation as violent people who were prone to fight, especially when drunk, was permissible under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 405(a). State v. Shoemaker, 80 N.C. App. 95, 341 S.E.2d 603, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 340, 346 S.E.2d 145 (1986).

In prosecution for obtaining property by false pretense, involving false representations to homeowners of termite infestation, evidence with respect to other similar transactions in which defendant had engaged was relevent to show motive, intent, plan and knowledge and was a generally permissible inquiry pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Childers, 80 N.C. App. 236, 341 S.E.2d 760, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 337, 346 S.E.2d 142 (1986).

Where defendant was being tried for the rape of his five-year-old stepdaughter, testimony of a prison inmate that the defendant had admitted engaging in sexual intercourse with his three-year-old daughter tended to show a common scheme or plan by the defendant to take sexual advantage of the availability and susceptibility of his young daughters. The testimony was therefore admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Gordon, 316 N.C. 497, 342 S.E.2d 509 (1986).

In a prosecution for robbery of a New Bern bank, the court did not err in permitting a teller at another New Bern bank to testify that one of the defendants came into that bank on the day of the robbery and got change for a one hundred dollar bill, where this testimony was offered and received for the limited but proper purpose of showing that the defendants were in New Bern on the day of the robbery and to corroborate the testimony of a confessed participant in the robbery. State v. Alston, 80 N.C. App. 540, 342 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 707, 347 S.E.2d 441 (1986).

In prosecution for rape and other offenses where the State produced evidence that one of the defendants had threatened victim with a knife when they abducted her and that one of the three assailants had told her that he would be back for her and that she would be shot if she reported the crimes, trial court did not err in admitting knives and razor found in defendants' car five nights later when defendants came to victim's apartment around 1:00 a.m., beat on the door and attempted to open it, before leaving when a neighbor stepped outside his apartment, as by entering pleas of not guilty and denying that they were the assailants, defendants made identity an issue in the case, and this evidence clearly bore on the issue of identity. State v. Gilliam, 317 N.C. 293, 344 S.E.2d 783 (1986).

Evidence that on earlier occasions defendant had broken into his wife's house and assaulted her tended to prove these two elements of the offense under § 14-277.1 and its receipt did not violate subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Elledge, 80 N.C. App. 714, 343 S.E.2d 549 (1986).

In a prosecution for felonious larceny of certain tools, evidence of previous dealings between defendant and State's witness involving the sale of tools was admissible as tending to show a plan or scheme to steal tools and sell them to the witness. State v. Weaver, 318 N.C. 400, 348 S.E.2d 791 (1986).

In prosecution for incest, evidence tending to show that defendant had had prior sexual contact with the prosecuting witness was reasonably probative of defendant's knowledge, opportunity, intent, and plan, and was not so prejudicial as to outweigh its probative value and render it inadmissible; moreover, even if there was error in the admission of such evidence, absent a showing of a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached had the evidence been excluded, any possible error would be considered harmless. State v. Cameron, 83 N.C. App. 69, 349 S.E.2d 327 (1986).

In trial for rape and incest involving defendant's minor daughter, evidence that defendant had taken his daughter to an X-Rated movie and told her to look at graphic sexual scenes was admissible to show defendant's preparation and plan to engage in sexual intercourse with his daughter and to assist in that preparation and plan by making her aware of such sexual conduct and arousing her. State v. Williams, 318 N.C. 624, 350 S.E.2d 353 (1986).

In a proceeding before the trial court in which the respondent attorney was found guilty of criminal contempt upon the court's finding that he "did solicit, encourage and cause" a certain individual to disrupt court, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence testimony that the respondent violated a court order by making certain public statements. In re Paul, 84 N.C. App. 491, 353 S.E.2d 254, cert. denied, 319 N.C. 673, 356 S.E.2d 779 (1987), 484 U.S. 1004, 108 S. Ct. 694, 98 L. Ed. 2d 646 (1988).

Where defendant's identity as the gunman was the key issue in case involving kidnapping, attempted armed robbery, and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, the fact that witness had received a telephone call from the defendant a month before the attempted robbery tended to support the witness's claim that he recognized defendant's voice and thus was admissible, even though the call also concerned a stolen TV set not involved in the charges he was being tried for. State v. Harlee, 85 N.C. App. 159, 354 S.E.2d 348, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 173, 358 S.E.2d 60 (1987).

Where defendant, on cross-examination of a State's witness, injected the theory that visitor from Florida, rather than defendant, was the perpetrator of the sexual offenses described by the victim, evidence of a continuing scheme to commit sexual acts against the victim was relevant to show that defendant was the perpetrator of the offense allegedly committed. State v. Frazier, 319 N.C. 388, 354 S.E.2d 475 (1987).

Where the testimony of the prosecuting witness tended to establish a common plan or scheme on the part of defendant to sexually abuse her child, the testimony of the prosecuting witness regarding other acts of sexual abuse was properly admitted. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

In a rape trial, the trial court did not err in allowing a witness to testify that defendant had also attempted to rape her, where in both cases defendant lured the women into his apartment on the pretext that he needed to change clothes before their dates, and once inside, defendant's pattern of behavior was nearly identical. State v. Morrison, 85 N.C. App. 511, 355 S.E.2d 182, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 796, 361 S.E.2d 84 (1987).

Evidence of defendant's prior conviction in 1977 for assault with intent to rape, as well as his recent release from prison, which was offered to prove that his intent in assaulting and kidnapping his victim was to rape her, was properly admitted for that purpose in trial for kidnapping and attempted rape. State v. Hall, 85 N.C. App. 447, 355 S.E.2d 250, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 515, 358 S.E.2d 525 (1987).

In prosecution in which defendant was convicted of second degree rape of mentally retarded adult, testimony of five other mentally retarded females which tended to prove a continuing and ongoing course of sexual molestation by defendant of mentally retarded young women employed under his supervision, and a common plan or scheme to take sexual advantage of his relationship of authority over these women, was relevant and admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, writ dismissed, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 66, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

In action against car dealership, alleging breach of contract, malicious prosecution, and unfair and deceptive trade practices, similar occurrence evidence was probative of defendant's motive, intent, absence of mistake and possible bad faith in its dealings with plaintiff, and thus was properly admitted under subsection (b) of this rule. Medina v. Town & Country Ford, Inc., 85 N.C. App. 650, 355 S.E.2d 831, appeal of right allowed pursuant to Rule 16(b) and petition allowed as to additional issues, 320 N.C. 513, 358 S.E.2d 521 (1987), aff'd, State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988).

In murder trial, evidence that defendant came into possession of a large quantity of dynamite the day before the shooting was admissible under this rule to show "preparation" and "plan." However, the criminal manner by which defendant came to possess the dynamite was not. State v. Sullivan, 86 N.C. App. 316, 357 S.E.2d 414, cert. denied, 321 N.C. 123, 361 S.E.2d 602 (1987), holding, however, that the error was harmless.

Prosecutor's comment in murder trial on defendant's failure to present evidence of the victim's character which might have shown that the victim was the aggressor was permissible. State v. Hager, 320 N.C. 77, 357 S.E.2d 615 (1987).

Where defendant put his character in issue by having witnesses testify concerning his reputation for peacefulness, and only then did the prosecutor cross-examine the witnesses about specific instances of conduct by defendant in an effort to rebut their prior testimony as to defendant's character for peacefulness, the answers to the prosecutor's questions were properly admitted. State v. Gappins, 320 N.C. 64, 357 S.E.2d 654 (1987).

Where the testimony of the three State's witnesses showed only that each of them had seen defendant in possession of a firearm on some unspecified occasions over a period of years prior to the events giving rise to the present murder charge, and the evidence did not suggest that defendant's possession of a firearm at any previous time was unlawful, nor did it attribute to him a criminal disposition or a character prone to violence, the admission of such testimony did not violate this rule. State v. Knight, 87 N.C. App. 125, 360 S.E.2d 125 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 476, 364 S.E.2d 662 (1988).

In murder trial, evidence that defendant on previous occasions had assaulted victim was competent to prove his malice toward her and was admissible. State v. Spruill, 320 N.C. 688, 360 S.E.2d 667 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2833, 100 L. Ed. 2d 934 (1988).

In a civil action for malicious prosecution and intentional infliction of emotional distress, evidence of plaintiff's attempt in earlier action to bribe witness and subordinate perjury could not accurately be classified as character evidence at all. This testimony on the alleged offense arose out of the particular facts of the case. Lay v. Mangum, 87 N.C. App. 251, 360 S.E.2d 481 (1987).

Admission of defendant's 1982 fingerprint identification card and testimony regarding same, for the sole purpose of identifying latent fingerprints taken from credit application completed by individual suspected of larceny, did not violate the longstanding general rule of practice in this State, now codified in subsection (b) of this rule and thus did not unduly influence the jury or prejudice defendant. State v. McKnight, 87 N.C. App. 458, 361 S.E.2d 429 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 476, 364 S.E.2d 663 (1988).

In a first degree sexual offense case, evidence that defendant attempted a remarkable, odd and strikingly similar modus operandi some ten weeks after his attack on victim was relevant and admissible as tending to prove defendant's modus operandi, motive, intent, preparation and plan. State v. Bagley, 321 N.C. 201, 362 S.E.2d 244 (1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 1036, 108 S. Ct. 1598, 99 L. Ed. 2d 912 (1988).

In trial for possession with intent to sell and deliver cocaine and marijuana, and the sale and delivery thereof, admission of evidence that on a previous occasion, when officers went to defendant's admitted residence to purchase controlled substances from another person, an officer saw defendant inside the apartment did not constitute prejudicial error. State v. Fielder, 88 N.C. App. 463, 363 S.E.2d 662 (1988).

Where defendant was charged with raping his stepdaughter in her bunk-bed while her mother was working late at night, mother's testimony tending to show that defendant similarly took advantage of her cousin when the child was left in his custody, while in his stepdaughter's bunk-bed, while she was working late at night was admissible under the exception of subsection (b) of this rule, and there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court in failing to exclude this testimony under the balancing test of § 8C-1, Rule 403, since the alleged incident was sufficiently similar to the act charged and not too remote in time. State v. Boyd, 321 N.C. 574, 364 S.E.2d 118 (1988).

Videotape and magazines and detective's testimony concerning them were relevant to corroborate child victim's testimony that defendant had shown him such materials at the time he committed the crimes for which he was on trial, and since the exhibits and testimony were relevant to a fact or issue other than the character of the accused, subsection (b) of this rule did not require that they be excluded from the evidence at trial. State v. Rael, 321 N.C. 528, 364 S.E.2d 125 (1988).

Where victim's testimony clearly tended to establish the relevant fact that defendant took sexual advantage of the availability and susceptibility of his young victim at times when she was left in his care, victim's testimony concerning her father's other acts of sexual intercourse with her was admissible under this rule, and moreover, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to exclude this testimony under § 8C-1, Rule 403. State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

Evidence that defendant committed another sex offense against the same child, his young son, on the day after the offense for which he was being tried was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Miller, 321 N.C. 445, 364 S.E.2d 387 (1988).

In trial for murder and other crimes, testimony of jailer who was assaulted during defendant's escape and of individual from whom defendant and his confederate stole a truck and rifle was admissible to show intent and motive, in that it tended to show that defendant and his confederate intended to escape from jail, and then do whatever was necessary to avoid capture, and therefore that they had a motive for killing state trooper. State v. Bray, 321 N.C. 663, 365 S.E.2d 571 (1988).

Shooting incident in tavern some two weeks prior to three barroom shootings for which defendant was on trial was sufficiently similar to subsequent killings to be probative of defendant's guilt, not because of the bizarre or unique nature of the elements, but because of the repetition or reenactment in the barroom of so many of the elements played out in the tavern. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

Where evidence of a different sex offense tended to establish a common plan or scheme on the part of defendant to sexually abuse the victim, his stepgranddaughter, such evidence, relating to defendant's other sexual activity with the victim was properly admitted under this rule. State v. Jones, 89 N.C. App. 584, 367 S.E.2d 139 (1988).

In a prosecution for second-degree murder, evidence concerning defendant's sale of marijuana to the victim was relevant in showing the relationship between the victim and defendant, and given the evidence defendant once questioned the witness about whether the victim was a "nark," the evidence that defendant sold marijuana was admissible since it had some probative value concerning defendant's possible motive in the shooting. State v. Emery, 91 N.C. App. 24, 370 S.E.2d 456, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 627, 374 S.E.2d 594 (1988).

Where, in a prosecution for first degree sexual offense, the other incidents for which evidence was admitted occurred within three months of the incident for which the defendant was tried, and they were similar to the incident for which the defendant was tried, they were properly admitted to show a common scheme or plan out of which the crime for which the defendant was tried arose. State v. Rosier, 322 N.C. 826, 370 S.E.2d 359 (1988).

Where the challenged testimony of the victim, her attending physician, and the investigating police officer tended to establish a plan or scheme by defendant to sexually abuse the victim when the victim's mother went to work, and where the alleged prior incidents occurred within twelve months prior to the incident for which defendant was charged, proof of the incidents was not so remote in time as to outweigh its probative force; therefore, the trial court did not err in allowing evidence of these prior incidents. State v. Summers, 92 N.C. App. 453, 374 S.E.2d 631 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 341, 378 S.E.2d 806 (1989).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion by allowing evidence of prior sexual crimes allegedly committed by defendant upon his children; children's testimony concerning prior episodes of abuse would show that defendant engaged in scheme whereby he took sexual advantage of the availability and susceptibility of his young daughters at times they were left in his custody, and the probative value of evidence of other sexual acts outweighed any unfair prejudice to defendant. State v. Hewett, 93 N.C. App. 1, 376 S.E.2d 467 (1989).

Judge correctly permitted the State to introduce evidence of second robbery; defendant's defense of alibi put in issue whether he participated in the crimes at victim's house, and the evidence of the second robbery, when coupled with the evidence of the victims, tended to show that both burglaries were committed by the same people, and that defendant was one of the people involved. State v. McDowell, 93 N.C. 289, 378 S.E.2d 48 (1989).

Where evidence consisted of first witness's testimony concerning defendant's selling and using cocaine in the house and second witness's testimony that he had previously sold cocaine for defendant, the evidence was not inadmissible character evidence under subsection (b) of this rule; first witness's testimony was clearly relevant to the charge of maintaining a dwelling for the purpose of keeping and selling a controlled substance and, therefore, its admissibility was not governed by subsection (b); the admissibility of second witness's testimony was governed by this rule and the testimony was properly admitted to show a defendant's intent and plan to commit a conspiracy. State v. Rosario, 93 N.C. App. 627, 379 S.E.2d 434, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 275, 384 S.E.2d 527 (1989).

In a case where defendant was convicted of raping his daughter, sexual misconduct by defendant toward Sister A or Sister B was not too remote in time from the rape in question to be admitted properly for the purpose of showing a systematic plan; the facts demonstrated sufficient similarity between the prior acts and the crime specified in the indictment to justify the trial court's admission of evidence of defendant's prior sexual misconduct; the evidence revealed defendant's pattern of forcing his daughters to submit to intercourse as they reached puberty and continuing to assault them, using whatever force necessary, into their adulthood and after they had left home. State v. Shamsid-Deen, 324 N.C. 437, 379 S.E.2d 842 (1989).

Where defendant was convicted of first-degree rape, the circumstances of the other crime were sufficiently similar to the crimes charged to be admissible under subsection (b) of this rule; although there were no strikingly peculiar similarities in the manner of their commission, nevertheless, in both crimes the perpetrator forcibly entered motel rooms at night occupied by women who were alone, raped the women with accompanying threats of physical harm and the crimes occurred only two weeks apart at the same motel. State v. Moore, 94 N.C. App. 55, 379 S.E.2d 858, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 435, 384 S.E.2d 544 (1989).

The strikingly similar behavior attributed to defendant by all three women — befriending the women; luring them into a dating relationship; and then, after gaining their trust, using physical violence and/or the threat of a deadly weapon to force each woman to engage in vaginal intercourse, anal intercourse, cunnilingus, and fellatio — rendered the testimony of defendant's former lovers admissible to prove defendant's modus operandi, plan, motive and intent. State v. Pruitt, 94 N.C. App. 261, 380 S.E.2d 383, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 435, 384 S.E.2d 545 (1989).

Where defendant was convicted of second degree rape of the 13-year-old daughter of his girlfriend, trial court did not err by allowing the victim to testify concerning prior acts of sexual conduct between the victim and defendant; the testimony tended to illustrate defendant's opportunity to commit these acts, and a plan to molest the girl in her mother's absence. State v. Morrison, 94 N.C. App. 517, 380 S.E.2d 608, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 549, 385 S.E.2d 507 (1989).

Evidence of separate offense was admissible both to show identity and under the common plan exception; even though defendant presented no evidence, the identity exception applied since defendant's plea of not guilty put into issue every material element of the State's charges against him, including defendant's identity. State v. Bullock, 95 N.C. App. 524, 383 S.E.2d 431 (1989).

Trial court's allowance of testimony by the eight-year-old victim regarding prior acts of sexual misconduct was not error; testimony was admissible to establish a common plan or scheme on the part of defendant to sexually molest his niece. State v. Hoffman, 95 N.C. App. 647, 383 S.E.2d 458 (1989), cert. denied, 326 N.C. 52, 389 S.E.2d 101 (1990).

Evidence of prior assaults by a husband upon his wife was admissible to explain the wife's failure to move out and to prove that because of her fear arising from earlier abuse, her failure to leave her husband's home should not be construed as consent to his abuse. State v. Everhardt, 96 N.C. App. 1, 384 S.E.2d 562 (1989).

In a prosecution for felonious possession of stolen property, testimony of son of property owner, who allegedly furnished defendant with the property, that he was indebted to defendant (for purchase of cocaine) was properly admitted to illustrate a possible motive, and its probative value substantially out-weighed the danger of unfair prejudice against defendant. State v. Martin, 97 N.C. App. 19, 387 S.E.2d 211 (1990).

In capital murder trial for the murder of a 10-year-old girl, § 8C-1, Rule 403 and subsection (b) of this rule did not require the exclusion of evidence concerning an earlier incident when defendant had masturbated in the presence of a three-year-old girl. State v. Coffey, 326 N.C. 268, 389 S.E.2d 48 (1990), cert. denied, — N.C. —, 421 S.E.2d 360 (1992).

Despite severance of defendant's trials for murder of two sisters two years apart, under subsection (b) of this rule, trial court properly allowed evidence of defendant's attitude towards first victim prior to her disappearance, the facts of her disappearance, the discovery of her remains near the site where her sister, the second victim's, body was discovered, and a description of her remains in trial for the second murder. State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

In a prosecution for sale of LSD and cocaine under § 90-95, the State's introduction of evidence of defendant's marijuana use and possession was properly introduced in an attempt to show that defendant had a predisposition to commit these crimes and was, therefore, not entrapped. State v. Goldman, 97 N.C. App. 589, 389 S.E.2d 281, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 434, 395 S.E.2d 691 (1990).

In trial for first degree burglary and first degree rape, circumstantial evidence that defendant was the perpetrator of a rape committed five months earlier, which included both fingerprint evidence and pattern of perpetration similar to those of the crime charged demonstrated a potent, logical pertinence to the question of the assailant's identity in the offense on trial; thus, under the circumstances of the crime charged and those of the offense admitted, for the purpose of proving identity under subsection (b) of this rule, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of the other, similar offense, which shared strong circumstantial indicia that defendant had been the perpetrator. State v. Jeter, 326 N.C. 457, 389 S.E.2d 805 (1990).

Evidence of prior sex offenses held admissible in trial for second-degree rape and sexual activity by a substitute parent, see State v. Hall, 98 N.C. App. 1, 390 S.E.2d 169, rev'd on other grounds, 330 N.C. 808, 412 S.E.2d 883 (1990).

Where police found defendant in possession of both marijuana and LSD at the time of arrest, but defendant was acquitted on charges of misdemeanor possession of marijuana, evidence introduced at trial for possession of LSD of defendant's marijuana possession served the purpose of establishing the chain of circumstances leading up to his arrest for possession of LSD, and section (b) of this rule did not require its exclusion as evidence probative only of defendant's propensity to possess illegal drugs. State v. Agee, 326 N.C. 542, 391 S.E.2d 171 (1990).

The court did not err in allowing testimony that a murder defendant had given drugs to a third person who suffered an overdose from those drugs, even though the testimony presented evidence of other crimes; the testimony showed that defendant knew that the drugs he gave to the victim were extremely dangerous. State v. Liner, 98 N.C. App. 600, 391 S.E.2d 820 (1990).

The court properly admitted evidence that a defendant accused of soliciting the murder of his wife had solicited an undercover agent to murder his wife 11 months after the solicitation for which he was on trial; the evidence of the subsequent solicitation showed knowledge, modus operandi or common scheme or plan, and continuing offense. State v. Strickland, 98 N.C. App. 693, 391 S.E.2d 829 (1990).

In trial for obtaining money by false pretenses in which insurance agent was charged with turning in fictitious applications to receive commissions, admission into evidence of information contained in defendant's confession concerning other allegedly false applications submitted by defendant and trial court's instruction to jury on these prior bad acts did not constitute error. State v. Melvin, 99 N.C. App. 16, 392 S.E.2d 740 (1990).

Defendant's prior sex offenses were sufficiently similar to the crimes charged to be admitted for the purpose of showing defendant's plan, scheme, system, or design of forcing unconsenting female acquaintances into his basement for the purpose of gratifying his sexual desires. State v. Davis, 101 N.C. App. 12, 398 S.E.2d 645 (1990), discretionary review denied and appeal dismissed, 328 N.C. 573, 403 S.E.2d 516 (1991).

During murder prosecution, where victim was a young woman, rebuttal testimony by a woman previously assaulted by defendant, concerning the prior assault, was admissible to clarify defendant's admission that he "beat this girl," as the jury reasonably could infer in light of the witness' testimony, that defendant, in a "hysterical state" shortly after an aggressive sexual encounter with the victim, was referring to the victim rather than the witness when he made his admission. State v. McKinnon, 328 N.C. 668, 403 S.E.2d 474 (1991).

Evidence concerning two previous insurance claims made by defendant on other stores owned by her after purchasing theft policies are relevant insofar as they tend to show intent, absence of mistake and a pattern by which defendant made and then exaggerated claims resulting from commercial burglary under former § 14-214 (repealed). These prior instances are within five years of the present claim, exhibit a distinctive modus operandi, and are relevant under Rule 404(b). State v. Carroll, 101 N.C. App. 691, 401 S.E.2d 114, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 501, 407 S.E.2d 543 (1991).

In case in which defendant was convicted of second degree sexual offense and first degree burglary, evidence that defendant committed a similar break-in and sexual offense approximately one month earlier, about two blocks from victim's house was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule, to show intent, identity, common scheme, plan or design, and under § 8C-1, Rule 403 in that the probative value of the evidence substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice to defendant's case and the court's charge to the jury correctly stated the limited purpose of the evidence. State v. Whitaker, 103 N.C. App. 386, 405 S.E.2d 911 (1991).

In a trial for assault with a deadly weapon in which defendant claimed self-defense, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence that prior to wounding the victim, defendant placed a gun to the head of a fourteen year old boy and questioned him regarding stolen cocaine. State v. Jones, 104 N.C. App. 251, 409 S.E.2d 322 (1991).

Where evidence of defendant's pending driving while impaired charge was evidence of malice to support a second degree murder charge, the trial court properly admitted such evidence pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, since the evidence was not submitted to show defendant's propensity to commit the crime, but to show the requisite mental state for a conviction of second degree murder. State v. Byers, 105 N.C. App. 377, 413 S.E.2d 586 (1992).

In a trial for sexual abuse of a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the state to introduce the defendant's statements to the Department of Social Services (DSS) about his prior acts of sexual abuse of a different child in an unrelated case where the defendant "opened the door" to the matter by cross-examining the DSS witness about DSS files containing the statement. Although the state did not reveal the statement in response to the defendant's motion under § 15A-903, neither did the state attempt to use the statement prior to defendant's questions of the DSS witness. State v. Moore, 103 N.C. App. 87, 404 S.E.2d 695 (1991).

Evidence of the circumstances surrounding the death of defendant's first husband 10 years previously was admissible under this rule as evidence of intent, plan, preparation, or absence of accident in capital murder trial for the death of her second husband. State v. Stager, 329 N.C. 278, 406 S.E.2d 876 (1991).

In malpractice action brought against therapist who had sexual relationship with plaintiff client, testimony of three prior relationships between defendant and his patients was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. MacClements v. LaFone, 104 N.C. App. 179, 408 S.E.2d 878 (1991), cert. denied, 330 N.C. 613, 412 S.E.2d 87 (1992).

Testimony about defendant's frequent arguments with, violent acts toward, separations from, reconciliations with, and threats to, his wife were admissible under subsection (b) of this rule to prove issues defendant disputed in a trial for her murder, namely, lack of accident, intent, malice, premeditation and deliberation—notwithstanding that some of the incidents dated back to the beginning of the marriage. State v. Syriani, 333 N.C. 350, 428 S.E.2d 118, cert. denied, 510 U.S. 948, 114 S. Ct. 392, 126 L. Ed. 2d 341 (1993), reh'g denied, 510 U.S. 1066, 114 S. Ct. 745, 126 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1994).

Where defendant was tried for the first-degree murder of her husband, evidence of her affair with a co-conspirator was highly probative of her motive for wanting her husband murdered, and evidence of the defendant's theft of money and credit cards, coupled with evidence of her drug problems, tended to show that the defendant needed money which she stood to gain from the insurance proceeds due upon her husband's death; therefore, the trial court did not err in admitting the evidence. State v. Mahaley, 332 N.C. 583, 423 S.E.2d 58 (1992), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1089, 115 S. Ct. 749, 130 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1995).

Where a statement regarding a prior sex act, rather than pertaining exclusively to defendant's character, was relevant to lend credibility to the State's confession, the evidence was admissible under section (b) of this rule. State v. Gibson, 333 N.C. 29, 424 S.E.2d 95 (1992).

Where the State's evidence showed that in both 1967 and in 1990 defendant gained the trust of his victims, lured them into an automobile and then took them to a different location where they were sexually assaulted, the similarities justified admitting the evidence of prior crimes to prove modus operandi and intent; furthermore, since the 1967 rape was also admissible on the question of consent, it was not so remote as to have lost its probative value. State v. Sneeden, 108 N.C. App. 506, 424 S.E.2d 449 (1993), aff'd, 336 N.C. 482, 444 S.E.2d 218 (1994).

Where defendant had poisoned two other men with arsenic, given the similarities between the crime charged and the other crimes presented by the State, the evidence of the other offenses was relevant as evidence tending to prove modus operandi, motive, opportunity, intent and identity of defendant as the perpetrator. State v. Moore, 335 N.C. 567, 440 S.E.2d 797, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 898, 115 S. Ct. 253, 130 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1994).

Evidence that one month prior to the alleged rape, defendant failed to return the victim's car, stole some money, broke into her home, and was arrested was admissible as a part of the history of the event which served to enhance the natural development of the facts. State v. Jenkins, 115 N.C. App. 520, 445 S.E.2d 622, stay granted pending appeal, 336 N.C. 784, 447 S.E.2d 435, cert. denied, temporary stay dissolved, 337 N.C. 804, 449 S.E.2d 752 (1994).

Testimony regarding prior conviction was admissible under subsection (b) and was not precluded under Rule 609; therefore, the trial court did not err in admitting it and there was no plain error. State v. Sexton, 336 N.C. 321, 444 S.E.2d 879, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1006, 115 S. Ct. 525, 130 L. Ed. 2d 429 (1994), 343 N.C. 516, 472 S.E.2d 23 (1996).

Where evidence of defendant's prior assault on the victim tended to show malice, the evidence was thus relevant to an issue other than defendant's character and was properly admitted. State v. Bryant, 337 N.C. 298, 446 S.E.2d 71 (1994).

In a prosecution for first-degree murder, first-degree rape, and first-degree sexual assault, evidence of an attack on a prior victim was properly admitted. State v. Moseley, 338 N.C. 1, 449 S.E.2d 412 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1091, 115 S. Ct. 1815, 131 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1995).

Testimony was allowed to show that defendant had a metal pipe in his bedroom approximately one month prior to the death of the victim since the evidence tended to show that the victim was killed by the use of a blunt object, such as a pipe, and since defendant's confession indicated that he had thrown a pipe away prior to the victim's death. State v. Weathers, 339 N.C. 441, 451 S.E.2d 266 (1994).

In a prosecution for murder, testimony that a witness saw defendant dancing with the victim and that the witness called the police was relevant and properly admitted as evidence of defendant's character. Also, evidence that witness called the police because he recognized defendant as being with the victim only after seeing on television that defendant had been charged with another murder was not irrelevant, inflammatory, and improperly prejudicial. State v. Moseley, 338 N.C. 1, 449 S.E.2d 412 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1091, 115 S. Ct. 1815, 131 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1995).

In a murder prosecution, evidence of a prior murder was properly admitted by the trial court to show identity, plan, and the existence of a common modus operandi between the two murders. State v. Moseley, 338 N.C. 1, 449 S.E.2d 412 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1091, 115 S. Ct. 1815, 131 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1995).

Where in both robbery and the crime committed against the victims, there were at least two individuals involved who incapacitated the victims by pulling their clothing down around their elbows and hands, and at least one person was robbed during both events and the evidence tended to show that defendant punched robbery victim in the eye during the robbery and that victim's body was found to have areas of abrasion and bruising on his face, that the similar acts and the close proximity of time in both the robbery and the murders tend to indicate that the same person was involved in both crimes. State v. Goode, 341 N.C. 513, 461 S.E.2d 631 (1995).

Proffered testimony of defense witness that would have taken the form of an opinion, because it illuminated a pertinent trait of defendant's character, should have been admitted; the testimony did not constitute hearsay and would have revealed a character trait of defendant that was relevant to rebut the State's evidence which raised the implication that defendant declined to swear to his innocence because he knew he was guilty. State v. Powell, 340 N.C. 674, 459 S.E.2d 219 (1995).

Evidence that defendant was arrested for carrying a concealed weapon in connection with the seizure of handgun was relevant to show defendant's possession of the murder weapon and the circumstances under which the police obtained this weapon, and the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection to the admission of evidence that defendant was arrested for carrying a concealed weapon at trial of defendant for murder. State v. Williams, 341 N.C. 1, 459 S.E.2d 208 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1128, 116 S. Ct. 945, 133 L. Ed. 2d 870 (1996).

Evidence that defendant was firing the gun in question shortly before events at mobile home park where four-year old girl was killed was admissible to prove defendant's identity as the person who fired the stray 9mm bullet that killed her. State v. Burton, 119 N.C. App. 625, 460 S.E.2d 181 (1995).

Evidence that four-year old victim, who died from strangulation on a plastic bag, suffered from a severe skull fracture and serious burns shortly before his death was relevant to the jury's determination of whether defendant was criminally negligent; evidence that during the time victim was home under defendant's sole supervision, he obtained matches and ignited a can of gasoline, resulting in severe burns on his leg and ankle, was relevant to the determination of whether defendant had a pattern of reckless or careless supervision of the child. The fact that the child suffered a severe skull fracture during the same time period and the fact that defendant wrapped the child's burns in plastic wrap, in spite of his alleged habit of putting the plastic in his mouth and her knowledge that the plastic could hurt him, were likewise relevant to the issue of defendant's criminal negligence. State v. White, 340 N.C. 264, 457 S.E.2d 841 (1995).

From evidence that defendant continued to cover four-year-old victim's burns with plastic wrap even though she told a neighbor she knew he liked to chew on it and it could hurt him, the jury could reasonably infer that defendant was setting the stage for the victim to strangle to death on a piece of plastic, either by accident or with her assistance; this evidence was relevant and admissible as proof of defendant's preparation and planning for the commission of this crime and that the victim's death was not accidental. State v. White, 340 N.C. 264, 457 S.E.2d 841 (1995).

Evidence that property owners made renovations in bad faith and for the purpose of enhancing their damages was relevant and competent evidence for a jury to consider in the determination of the value of the property at the time of the taking. DOT v. Coleman, 127 N.C. App. 342, 489 S.E.2d 187 (1997).

Where defendant and his stepson kidnapped two boys and put them in the trunk of a car while they murdered the boys father and then murdered the two boys, evidence regarding the murder of the father was so intertwined with evidence of the murder of the boys that it was admissible and was not an abuse of discretion. State v. Sidden, 347 N.C. 218, 491 S.E.2d 225 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1097, 118 S. Ct. 1583, 140 L. Ed. 2d 797 (1998).

Convictions for driving under the influence that were more than 10 years old were admissible in a second degree murder prosecution, where the evidence was relevant to show malice in that the defendant was driving under the influence, was without a license, and was speeding when he struck another car, killing the driver and injuring her daughters, and the court gave the jury a limiting instruction concerning the purpose for which contested evidence could be considered. State v. Grice, 131 N.C. App. 48, 505 S.E.2d 166 (1998).

Evidence of the defendant's acts of violence toward his former girlfriend were admissible in his prosecution for the murder of the girlfriend's grandmother and the grandmother's friend, where evidence showing that the defendant tried to control the girlfriend to the point of assaulting her, kidnapping her, tying her to the bed, and threatening to kill her family members pertained to the chain of events explaining the context, motive, and set-up of the crime. State v. White, 349 N.C. 535, 508 S.E.2d 253 (1998), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1026, 119 S. Ct. 2376, 144 L. Ed. 2d 779 (1999).

Other crimes evidence was admissible on the issue of identity in a capital murder trial, where a witness testified that the defendant had participated in two bank robberies with the witness during the two months before the robbery urder for which the defendant was being tried, and the testimony established that the defendant drove his white car in bank robberies and a white car was seen outside the jewelry store on the day of the murder, the defendant's sawed-off shotgun and ski mask were used in the prior bank robberies and the murderer wore a ski mask and carried a sawed off shotgun, and all the robberies were during business hours in small towns surrounding a larger city. State v. Hoffman, 349 N.C. 167, 505 S.E.2d 80 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1053, 119 S. Ct. 1362, 143 L. Ed. 2d 522 (1999).

In a prosecution for murder, the trial court did not err when it allowed the admission of evidence relating to the defendant's prejudice against Jewish people and homosexuals since such evidence showed the defendant's skinhead beliefs and was relevant to show the defendant's motive and intent when he killed two black people. State v. Burmeister, 131 N.C. App. 190, 506 S.E.2d 278 (1998).

Photographs were admissible in a capital murder case over an irrelevancy objection, where the photographs showing empty beer cans and cigarette butts in a corn field supported the testimony of a companion of the murder victim that the defendant lured him to the cornfield and tried to kill him after they drank beer and smoked cigarettes, as the photographs supported the inference that this also happened to the murder victim. State v. Call, 349 N.C. 382, 508 S.E.2d 496 (1998).

Evidence that the capital murder defendant took his former girlfriend away from a cookout and fired a shotgun when members of her family came to check on her safety was admissible to show identity and the motive of retaliation for the girlfriend's resistance to his forceful control in the defendant's prosecution for the murder of the girlfriend's grandmother and the grandmother's companion. State v. White, 349 N.C. 535, 508 S.E.2d 253 (1998), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1026, 119 S. Ct. 2376, 144 L. Ed. 2d 779 (1999).

Evidence of similar circumstances surrounding the death of the defendant's second wife were admissible in his prosecution for the murder of his first wife to show that the death was a homicide and not an accident, where the evidence was that both alleged victims were married to the defendant, that both died in the home they shared with the defendant and he was home at the time, that the defendant was the last person to see the victims alive and was performing CPR on the victim when emergency personnel arrived, that one victim died in or around a bathtub and the other in a hot tub, that the defendant stated in both cases that the dead women had drinking problems and had been drinking, that both had similar marks and injuries, and that insurance money was involved in both incidents. State v. Boczkowski, 130 N.C. App. 702, 504 S.E.2d 796 (1998).

Evidence that defendant had been convicted in the shooting death of his first wife was properly argued to the jury as making more incredulous his claim of accident in the shooting death of his second wife, particularly as defendant had made incriminating remarks regarding his role in the death of his first wife to threaten his second one. State v. Murillo, 349 N.C. 573, 509 S.E.2d 752 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 103, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

The defendant's previous traffic violations were relevant and admissible in his second-degree murder prosecution arising from a traffic accident to show malice based on defendant's "depraved heart" on the night that he struck the two victims' vehicle while intoxicated and while rounding a sharp curve at a speed at least 40 mph over the speed limit. State v. Rich, 132 N.C. App. 440, 512 S.E.2d 441 (1999), aff'd, 351 N.C. 386, 527 S.E.2d 299 (2000).

The murder defendant's statement that he was going to have to "cap someone" if his employer did not stop garnishing his wages was not excludable as evidence of a prior bad act. State v. White, 131 N.C. App. 734, 509 S.E.2d 462 (1998).

Evidence of a prior crime was similar to the charged crime so as to be admissible to prove identity, where both crimes involved cutting a hole in the roof of a department store and removing large amounts of jewelry from display counters, and the previous crime had occurred fewer than three years earlier. State v. Hamilton, 132 N.C. App. 316, 512 S.E.2d 80 (1999).

Evidence that the defendant previously had punished her children by beating them with a belt and/or biting them was admissible in her prosecution for the murder of a two-year old child and felonious child abuse to establish the identity of the person who committed the crime, a plan, and the absence of accident. State v. Anderson, 350 N.C. 152, 513 S.E.2d 296 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 973, 120 S. Ct. 417, 145 L. Ed. 2d 326 (1999).

The defendant's comment to witness about having gotten in trouble was admissible where it was not presented in a vacuum, but was part of a narrative that justified a police officer's initial contact with defendant, clarified the witness' identification of defendant after the shooting, and explained why an incorrect name was placed on certain documentation in the case. State v. Riley, 137 N.C. App. 403, 528 S.E.2d 590 (2000), cert. denied, 352 N.C. 596, 545 S.E.2d 218 (2000) .

Exception under subsection (b) of this rule applied to witnesses' repetition of defendant's statements relating to recent burglaries at home in question, showing proof of opportunity, preparation, knowledge, identity, and absence of mistake, entrapment, or accident, proximate time, as well as statements regarding victim's demeanor after rape. State v. Campbell, 133 N.C. App. 531, 515 S.E.2d 732 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 111, 540 S.E.2d 370 (1999).

Where evidence surrounding two robberies, as well as the circumstances immediately preceding and following those robberies, was relevant to facts other than the defendant's propensity to commit the robbery and murder at issue, the trial court correctly allowed its inclusion. State v. Cheek, 351 N.C. 48, 520 S.E.2d 545 (1999), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1245, 120 S. Ct. 2694, 147 L. Ed. 2d 965 (2000).

Testimony of fourth sister regarding sexual molestation by defendant was admissible in case involving sexual molestation of three other sisters to show a common plan or scheme. State

v. Owens, 135 N.C. App. 456, 520 S.E.2d 590 (1999).

The admission of statements in a letter in which defendant urged his girlfriend to divorce her estranged husband and made threatening statements towards him were clearly relevant as an admission with respect to victim's death and also to show defendant's deliberate intent to kill. State v. Perez, 135 N.C. App. 543, 522 S.E.2d 102 (1999).

Evidence that defendant lied in order to have child support for his three children terminated and that the Department of Social Services planned to have said support reinstated was not admitted to show bad character but was relevant to show motive for murder and attempted murders, and to show the particular circumstances leading up to them. State v. Smith, 351 N.C. 251, 524 S.E.2d 28 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 862, 121 S. Ct. 151, 148 L. Ed. 2d 100 (2000).

Evidence that defendant complained to a co-worker about having the Department of Social Services take over half his paycheck for child support was admissible to show motive and plan for first-degree murder of defendant's daughter and attempted murder of defendant's two children and their mother. State v. Smith, 351 N.C. 251, 524 S.E.2d 28 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 862, 121 S. Ct. 151, 148 L. Ed. 2d 100 (2000).

Admission of testimony revealing that police informant became informant as a result of being arrested for buying cocaine from defendant and promising to help catch the seller, i.e. the defendant, was proper to prove intent, a common plan or scheme, and to identify defendant. State v. Montford, 137 N.C. App. 495, 529 S.E.2d 247 (2000).

Witness testimony that defendant fled when approached by law enforcement officers, including the details of the flight such as the fact that the defendant fired a weapon at the officers and was then hit with a bullet fired by one of them, was admissible to show his consciousness of guilt. State v. McCord, 140 N.C. App. 634, 538 S.E.2d 633 (2000), review denied, 353 N.C. 392 (2001).

Evidence that approximately one week before the victim's death, defendant (1) pointed and shot a gun over his mother's head and (2) pointed a gun at his brother and threatened to kill him was admissible to establish the "chain of circumstances" of the crime charged; these prior acts revealed not only defendant's intensifying display of violent behavior toward his family, but also tended to show the possibility that defendant was angry with the victim for confronting him about the treatment of his family. State v. Allen, 141 N.C. App. 610, 541 S.E.2d 490 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 382, 547 S.E.2d 816 (2001).

Testimony of defendant's two former wives concerning his behavior towards them during their marriages, which tended to show that as the marriages deteriorated, defendant responded violently, was admissible at his trial for the murder of his wife. State v. Aldridge, 139 N.C. App. 706, 534 S.E.2d 629 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 269, 546 S.E.2d 114 (2000).

Court rejected defendant state trooper's argument that evidence of his alleged crimes, wrongs, and acts was admitted in violation of the Rules of Evidence and his due process rights; testimony that defendant asked one witness to ride in the floor of his patrol car before the shooting, that another witness and defendant had violated or circumvented numerous automobile title transfer procedures, and that, upon searching the defendant's patrol car, a third witness had found licenses and registrations that should have been turned over to a magistrate under highway patrol policy, was admissible to chronicle the murder and its probative value was not outweighed by the danger of prejudice. State v. Parker, — N.C. App. —, — S.E.2d —, 2000 N.C. App. LEXIS 1107 (Oct. 3, 2000).

Drugs Found at Defendant's Home Inadmissible. — Evidence of substantial amounts of drugs belonging to others and seized at the trailer where the defendant lived was irrelevant, prejudicial and inadmissible to show his knowledge that the substance in a van he was driving was cocaine; the defendant was not charged with any offense in connection with the drugs seized at the trailer and the circumstantial evidence presented at trial—the fact that drugs belonging to other people were discovered at the trailer defendant shared with others—was too weak to support an inference of knowledge on his part. State v. Moctezuma, 141 N.C. App. 90, 539 S.E.2d 52 (2000).

Evidence Held Inadmissible. — Where five year old child, whom the court ruled was incompetent to testify, herself was incapable of informing the jury firsthand of the events that the State claimed she had participated in, it was not proper for the prosecutor to advise the jury of these purported events based on his secondhand understanding of what the child knew and had said. State v. Flannigan, 78 N.C. App. 629, 338 S.E.2d 109 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 197, 341 S.E.2d 572 (1986).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, evidence elicited from defendant's girlfriend regarding another crime, namely, the shooting of her former boyfriend, constituted prejudicial error. State v. Monroe, 78 N.C. App. 661, 338 S.E.2d 137 (1986).

It was error for the trial court to allow, over defendant's objection, the prosecutor's cross-examination of defendant regarding alleged extrinsic acts of misconduct in order to circumstantially prove defendant's character for violence as the basis for an inference that defendant was the aggressor in the affray at issue and could not have acted in self-defense. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986), holding, however, that the error was harmless in light of other evidence properly admitted at trial.

In a prosecution for first degree sexual offense involving three and four year old victims, defendant's alleged sexual contacts with his sister nine years before trial, when defendant was thirteen years old, were too remote in time to be probative or relevant. State v. Scott, 317 N.C. 689, 347 S.E.2d 414 (1986).

Evidence of defendant's involvement in other crimes, offered by the State to prove the crime for which defendant was being tried, was not admissible where the only relation between the other crimes and the crime charged was that they were similar and were committed within a time not too far removed from the crime charged. State v. Hamrick, 81 N.C. App. 508, 344 S.E.2d 316 (1986).

In prosecution for rape, sexual offense and crime against nature, cross-examination of defendant with regard to other nonconsensual sexual activity with another woman was not relevant on the question of the victim's consent, and where defendant's only defense was consent, this cross-examination inquiry was clearly prejudicial and required a new trial. State v. Bailey, 80 N.C. App. 678, 343 S.E.2d 434, petition for cert. improvidently allowed, 318 N.C. 652, 350 S.E.2d 94 (1986).

The fact that the defendant pointed his gun at victim three years previously and that both men laughed afterward did not indicate that three years later defendant did not fear victim or make the apparent necessity to defend himself more or less probable than it would be without the evidence; thus, it was error to allow testimony of this extrinsic act of misconduct in order to show defendant's character for violence and that therefore he must have acted in conformity with that character, and not in self defense, when he fatally shot the victim. State v. Mills, 83 N.C. App. 606, 351 S.E.2d 130 (1986).

In trial for murder of defendant's husband, specific instances of conduct regarding defendant's alleged participation in three previous unrelated murders were not probative of defendant's character for truthfulness under § 8C-1, Rule 608(b), and were not admissible to prove motive under subsection (b) of this rule. Thus the trial court committed prejudicial error in denying defendant's motion in limine to prevent the district attorney from using the inadmissible evidence to impeach defendant. State v. Lamb, 84 N.C. App. 569, 353 S.E.2d 857 (1987), aff'd, 321 N.C. 633, 365 S.E.2d 600 (1988).

The trial court erred by admitting testimony elicited by the prosecutor from witness that she was "still afraid" of defendant on the day she testified, as this was inadmissible character evidence. State v. Bell, 87 N.C. App. 626, 362 S.E.2d 288 (1987).

Where it was clear at trial who was being tried and witnesses specifically identified defendant, and there was no evidence that defendant ever gave anyone a different name, testimony by police officer that he knew defendant by an alias inferred that defendant had been involved in some other crime or had used other names for some illegal purpose, and such testimony was, therefore, not admissible as an identity exception under subsection (b) of this section. State v. General, 91 N.C. App. 375, 371 S.E.2d 784 (1988).

In a prosecution for second-degree murder, testimony that the defendant was in the business of selling marijuana to high school age persons had no tendency to make any fact of consequence more or less probable, nor was the evidence about how defendant procured his automobile and the evidence concerning the details of how the marijuana was packaged and sold relevant to any material fact in issue. Equally irrelevant was evidence concerning the victim's citation for possession of marijuana. State v. Emery, 91 N.C. App. 24, 370 S.E.2d 456, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 627, 374 S.E.2d 594 (1988).

Evidence of prior, noncriminal unrelated fire was held inadmissible because of its prejudicial character since such evidence was irrelevant in that it neither confirmed nor suggested a relationship between two defendants charged with burning down a food market. Moreover, the State failed to show defendants had had any connection with the previous fire, the exception for the admission of prior bail acts set out by this rule. State v. Clark, 90 N.C. App. 489, 369 S.E.2d 607 (1988).

Testimony of cellmate and detective that defendant was in jail on a charge of attempted murder of his girlfriend was not relevant where defendant was on trial for an unrelated crime of murder, since the court determined that this testimony was not relevant to any fact or issue other than the character of the accused. State v. Cashwell, 322 N.C. 574, 369 S.E.2d 566 (1988).

Where, in an attempt to undercut defendant's testimony about her abuse by her first husband, who was a drug addict, and by her second, who was an alcoholic, district attorney asked, "Well, you sort of enjoyed smoking marijuana, didn't you?" and defendant responded, "I did on occasion sir," the question was error; defendant's admission to having smoked marijuana had no conceivable tendency to prove or disprove her truthfulness and subsection (b) of this rule prohibits evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts to prove the defendant acted in conformity with a character trait those acts

In trial for first degree arson, court erred in admitting evidence of an earlier fire in another house where there was no evidence that defendant had performed any act with respect to the 1982 fire, and no evidence placing defendant at the scene or in its vicinity at the time of that fire; there was no nexus between the defendant and the act sought against him; therefore, the evidence did not support the inference that defendant committed both the earlier and the later acts. State v. English, 95 N.C. App. 611, 383 S.E.2d 436 (1989).

Where defendant was charged with two counts of burglary, two counts of rape and two counts of sex offense, his employment record had no relevance to any of those offenses; thus, neither defendant's evidence that he was a good employee nor State's rebuttal evidence of his bad conduct toward fellow employees was admissible under subdivision (a)(1) of this rule. State v. Cotton, 99 N.C. App. 615, 394 S.E.2d 456 (1990), aff'd, 329 N.C. 764, 407 S.E.2d 514 (1991).

Court's refusal to permit defendant to cross-examine detective about police department's having used defendant as an informant was proper. Defendant's purpose was to show that he had credibility with the police department, but at that time only the State had presented evidence, defendant's credibility had not been attacked, and he was not entitled to bolster it in advance. State v. Burge, 100 N.C. App. 671, 397 S.E.2d 760 (1990).

Proffered testimony as to the victim's alcohol consumption with other people in party settings had no tendency to prove that the victim consented to sexual activity with the defendant on the day in question. State v. Cronan, 100 N.C. App. 641, 397 S.E.2d 762 (1990), discretionary review denied and appeal dismissed, 328 N.C. 573, 403 S.E.2d 516 (1991).

Where defendant was arrested after a bag of cocaine was found under the seat of the truck he was operating, and at trial he offered the criminal record of the owner of the truck to show that the owner acted in conformity with a prior conviction by placing cocaine under the seat, the court properly excluded the criminal record under section (b) of this rule. Such evidence created only an inference or conjecture. State v. Chandler, 100 N.C. App. 706, 398 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

Where defendant sought unsuccessfully to introduce evidence that another victim was attacked in the hospital basement by a black male attired similarly to the suspect the hospital employee described and where defendant contended that the evidence should have been admitted to show that someone else committed the crime, trial court did not err in excluding this evidence. The crimes were not similar; other victim was not raped and there was no indication that her attacker attempted to rape her; the attacker's identity was not known; and there was no evidence to indicate that the man who grabbed other victim also committed the offense against the victim two months later. State v. Richardson, 328 N.C. 505, 402 S.E.2d 401 (1991).

Prosecutor's questioning of capital murder defendant's mother about locks placed on the outside of defendant's bedroom door was highly prejudicial and of no probative value; however, such error was harmless where the question of defendant's guilt was strong, the trial court properly sustained defendant's objections to the questions and the mother testified she was not afraid of her son. State v. Payne, 328 N.C. 377, 402 S.E.2d 582 (1991).

It was proper for the prosecution to refer to the defendant's illegal adulterous affair only in order to rebut the defendant's contention that he was a law-abiding citizen. Therefore, the trial court erred in allowing the prosecution to cross-examine the defendant concerning the adulterous affair and to require the defendant to read the love letters concerning the affair on cross-examination. State v. Woodard, 102 N.C. App. 687, 404 S.E.2d 6 (1990), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 329 N.C. 504, 407 S.E.2d 550 (1991).

Where the prosecution cross-examined the defendant concerning his affair before the defendant put character witnesses on the stand to testify as to his law-abidingness, the trial court erred in allowing the prosecution to ask the defendant about his adultery before the defendant put his witness on the stand. State v. Woodard, 102 N.C. App. 687, 404 S.E.2d 6 (1990), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 329 N.C. 504, 407 S.E.2d 550 (1991).

In trial for sexual offenses against 3 minor teenage boys, testimony of a 24 year old man that he had been sexually assaulted by the defendant approximately seven years before was error, but the error was not prejudicial in light of the other evidence. State v. Gross, 104 N.C. App. 97, 408 S.E.2d 531, cert. denied, 330 N.C. 444, 412 S.E.2d 78 (1991).

Evidence that thirteen and one-half years prior to trial defendant had been convicted of armed robbery was admissible where the evidence presented by the State of the earlier armed robbery was sufficiently similar to the crimes charged to be admitted for the purpose of showing a modus operandi, motive and even identity, and where the evidence was not too remote in time to be probative of any fact at issue. State v. Wilson, 106 N.C. App. 342, 416 S.E.2d 603 (1992).

Trial judge did not err by allowing testimony about defendant's drug dealings; the disputed evidence was relevant to show defendant's motive for murder. State v. Ligon, 332 N.C. 224, 420 S.E.2d 136 (1992).

The trial court erred in allowing cross-examination of defendant about details of his prior convictions in that it bore no logical relevance to the crimes charged that would render it admissible under section (b), and it was not admissible to refute any inaccurate or misleading testimony or inferences raised by defendant. State v. Lynch, 334 N.C. 402, 432 S.E.2d 349 (1993).

Where defendant was convicted of second degree murder, evidence that defendant had previously shot over a truck was irrelevant and inadmissible and could not be deemed harmless error so that defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Irby, 113 N.C. App. 427, 439 S.E.2d 226 (1994).

Court properly excluded from evidence the fact that the victim had twice been convicted of murder. State v. Leazer, 337 N.C. 454, 446 S.E.2d 54 (1994).

The trial court erred in allowing the introduction of evidence of plaintiff's prior use of illegal drugs in sexual molestation case, such information was highly prejudicial and defendants proffered no permissible use of such information. Johnson v. Amethyst Corp., 120 N.C. App. 529, 463 S.E.2d 397 (1995), cert. granted, — N.C. —, 467 S.E.2d 713 (1996).

Evidence of witness's juvenile adjudication of guilt of involuntary manslaughter was not relevant; admission of the evidence was not necessary to a fair determination of defendant's guilt or innocence. State v. Deese, 136 N.C. App. 413, 524 S.E.2d 381 (2000), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 476, 543 S.E.2d 499 (2000).

Evidence Held Inadmissible. — Evidence of a prior detainment incident at another department store was inadmissible in defendant's shoplifting case where she did not claim to have made a mistake in either incident and where defendant was judicially acquitted of the crime for which she was charged in the prior incident. State v. Fluker, 139 N.C. App. 768, 535 S.E.2d 68 (2000).

Evidence Held Prejudicial. — Where the challenged evidence that defendant was in custody for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill his girlfriend was especially prejudicial because of its similarity to the charge at issue, which was murder and assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, and the similarity of the charges was compounded by the additional "verification" evidence of a detective, such admissions constituted prejudicial error and defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Cashwell, 322 N.C. 574, 369 S.E.2d 566 (1988).

Evidence of prior sexual assaults against a witness, which happened seven years before a similar sexual assault for which defendant was charged was prejudicial to defendant's fundamental right to a fair trial because the prior acts were too remote in time. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 585, 369 S.E.2d 822 (1988).

Where defendant was accused of sexually abusing his 14-year-old adopted daughter, the trial court erred in admitting testimony of alleged prior bad acts committed by defendant; namely, defendant's alleged frequent nudity, his alleged frequent fondling of himself, and an adulterous affair in which he was allegedly involved, as under the circumstances of this case, the admission of such evidence was highly prejudicial and of questionable relevance. State v. Maxwell, 96 N.C. App. 19, 384 S.E.2d 553 (1989), cert. denied, 326 N.C. 53, 389 S.E.2d 83 (1990).

The appellate court agreed with 14-year-old defendant that allegations of a subsequent sexual assault on a four-year-old were not admissible since the incident was not sufficiently similar to the one at issue involving a nine-year-old; the admission of such evidence tended only to show the propensity of the defendant to commit sexual acts against young female children, an improper purpose, and therefore entitled defendant to a new trial. State v. White, 135 N.C. App. 349, 520 S.E.2d 70 (1999).

Refusal to Exclude Evidence of Other Killings Held Prejudicial. — In trial for murder of defendant's husband, rulings of the trial judge denying defendant's motion in limine to exclude evidence implicating her in other killings held to have impermissibly chilled her right to testify in her own defense. State v. Lamb, 321 N.C. 633, 365 S.E.2d 600 (1988).

Cumulative Effect of Admitted Evidence Held Prejudicial. — Where, in a murder prosecution, the State spent a great deal of time focusing on the details of defendant's alleged prior offenses of selling marijuana to high school students, citation for possession of marijuana, and breaking and entering, the cumulative effect of the admission of the evidence was prejudicial error entitling the defendant to a new trial. State v. Emery, 91 N.C. App. 24, 370 S.E.2d 456, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 627, 374 S.E.2d 594 (1988).

Admission of Irrelevant Evidence Not Prejudicial. — In the light of the direct evidence against defendant and the utter irrelevance of marijuana possession to the charges on which defendant was ultimately convicted, no prejudicial error occurred by virtue of admission of evidence that marijuana was found in defendant's basement. State v. Fie, 80 N.C. App. 577, 343 S.E.2d 248 (1986), rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 626, 359 S.E.2d 774 (1987).

Rule 405. Methods of proving character.

(a) Reputation or opinion. — In all cases in which evidence of character or a trait of character of a person is admissible, proof may be made by testimony as to reputation or by testimony in the form of an opinion. On cross-examination, inquiry is allowable into relevant specific instances of conduct. Expert testimony on character or a trait of character is not admissible as circumstantial evidence of behavior.

(b) Specific instances of conduct. — In cases in which character or a trait of character of a person is an essential element of a charge, claim, or defense, proof may also be made of specific instances of his conduct. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 405 except for the addition of the last sentence to subdivision (a).

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The rule deals only with allowable methods of proving character, not with admissibility of character evidence, which is covered by Rule 404.

Of the three methods of proving character provided by the rule, evidence of specific instances of conduct is the most convincing. At the same time it possesses the greatest capacity to arouse prejudice, to confuse, to surprise, and to consume time. Consequently the rule confines the use of evidence of this kind to cases in which character is, in the strict sense, in issue and hence deserving of a searching inquiry. When character is used circumstantially and hence occupies a lesser status in the case, proof may be only by reputation and opinion. These latter methods are also available when character is in issue."

With respect to specific instances of conduct and reputation, this treatment is consistent with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 110 (1982).

With respect to opinion evidence, the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"In recognizing opinion as a means of proving character, the rule departs from usual contemporary practice in favor of that of an earlier day. See 7 Wigmore § 1986, pointing out that the earlier practice permitted opinion and arguing strongly for evidence based on personal knowledge and belief as contrasted with 'the second-hand, irresponsible product of multiplied guesses and gossip which we term "reputation".' It seems likely that the persistence of reputation evidence is due to its largely being opinion in disguise. Traditionally character has been regarded primarily in moral overtones of good and bad: chaste, peaceable, truthful, honest. Nevertheless, on occasion nonmoral considerations crop up, as in the case of the incompetent driver, and this seems bound to happen increasingly. If character is defined as the kind of person one is, then account must be taken of varying ways of arriving at the estimate.  No effective dividing line exists between character and mental capacity, and the latter traditionally has been provable by opinion."

In permitting opinion evidence as a means of proving character, the rule departs from current North Carolina practice. The general practice in this state is to frame questions in terms of reputation. However, if the witness is questioned concerning the "general character" or the "reputation and character" of another person, it is understood that the real subject of inquiry is reputation. State v. King, 224 N.C. 329 (1944); State v. Hicks, 200 N.C. 539 (1933); State v. Cathey, 170 N.C. 794 (1916). Professor Brandis points out that:

"If as e.g., in the initial question in State v. Cathey ... 'reputation' is entirely omitted from the question, or if the question refers, as in State v. Hicks ... to 'reputation and character,' the judge and counsel may know that the witness should confine himself to reputation, but, in the absence of further enlightenment, it seems most doubtful that the witness is so legally learned. Therefore, the practical result may well be to admit opinion evidence while giving lip service to the prohibition against it. Since, additionally, as a practical matter, many witnesses will in fact give opinion in answering a question ostensibly calling only for reputation, it seems to the author of this edition that it would be much more realistic for the Court to scrap the present stated rule and frankly admit either opinion or reputation testimony." Stansbury's North Carolina Evidence (Brandis ed.) § 110, at 338, n. 99.

Since Fed. R. Evid. 405 opens up the possibility of proving character by means of expert witnesses, the last sentence was added to subdivision (a) to prohibit expert testimony on character as it relates to the likelihood of whether or not the defendant committed the act he is accused of. This sentence is not intended to exclude expert testimony of a personality or character change as it relates to the issue of damages.

The second sentence of subdivision (a) permits inquiry on cross-examination into relevant specific instances of conduct. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"According to the great majority of cases, on cross-examination inquiry is allowable as to whether the reputation witness has heard of particular instances of conduct pertinent to the trait in question.  The theory is that, since the reputation witness relates what he has heard, the inquiry tends to shed light on the accuracy of his hearing and reporting. Accordingly, the opinion witness would be asked whether he knew, as well as whether he had heard. The fact is, of course, that these distinctions are of slight if any practical significance, and the second sentence of subdivision (a) eliminates them as a factor in formulating questions. This recognition of the propriety of inquiring into specific instances of conduct does not circumscribe inquiry otherwise into the bases of opinion and reputation testimony."

Under current North Carolina practice, inquiry into specific instances of conduct on cross-examination is available only on the cross-examination of the person whose character is in question. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence §§ 111, 115 (1982). It is not permissible in North Carolina to ask a character witness whether he has heard of the person in question having committed a particular act. Id. § 115. However, to some extent the North Carolina rule may be circumvented by cross-examination as to specific traits. Id.

Also, the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The express allowance of inquiry into specific instances of conduct on cross-examination in subdivision (a) and the express allowance of it as part of a case in chief when character is actually in issue in subdivision (b) contemplate that testimony of specific instances is not generally permissible on the direct examination of an ordinary opinion witness to character. Similarly as to witnesses to the character of witnesses under Rule 608(b). Opinion testimony on direct in these situations ought in general to correspond to reputation testimony as now given, i.e., be confined to the nature and extent of observation and acquaintance upon which the opinion is based. See Rule 701."

CASE NOTES

This rule effects a change in the permissible methods of proving character. Subsection (a) of this rule provides that proof of character may be made by testimony as to reputation or by testimony in the form of an opinion. State v. Sidden, 315 N.C. 539, 340 S.E.2d 340 (1986).

Violent Reputation of Victims. — Testimony that murder and assault victims had a bad reputation as violent people who were prone to fight, especially when drunk, was permissible under subsection (a) of this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 404 (a)(2). State v. Shoemaker, 80 N.C. App. 95, 341 S.E.2d 603, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 340, 346 S.E.2d 145 (1986).

Same — Not Relevant Where Victim Unknown. — Defendant did not know victim nor did he know anything about his reputation prior to altercation; thus, evidence of specific instances of victim's violent character was irrelevant in regards to the reasonableness of defendant's apprehension and need to use force, and the trial court properly denied its admission on this basis. State v. Ray, 125 N.C. App. 721, 482 S.E.2d 755 (1997).

In self-defense cases, the victim's character for violence is relevant only as it bears upon the reasonableness of defendant's apprehension and use of force, which are essential elements of the defense of self-defense. Thus, the conduct becomes relevant only if defendant knew about it at the time of the shooting. State v. Shoemaker, 80 N.C. App. 95, 341 S.E.2d 603, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 340, 346 S.E.2d 145 (1986).

In self-defense cases, the victim's violent character is relevant only as it relates to the reasonableness of defendant's apprehension and use of force, which are essential elements of self-defense. Thus, the victim's conduct in his relationship with ex-girlfriend became relevant only if defendant knew about it at the time of the shooting. State v. Brown, 120 N.C. App. 276, 462 S.E.2d 655 (1995).

Where defendant argues he acted in self-defense, evidence of the victim's character may be admissible for two reasons: to show defendant's fear or apprehension was reasonable or to show the victim was the aggressor. State v. Ray, 125 N.C. App. 721, 482 S.E.2d 755 (1997).

Cross-Examination as to Specific Instances of Defendant's Conduct. — The second sentence of subsection (a) of this rule represents a departure from prior case law, in that it allows a witness who has given character evidence for the defendant to be cross-examined by the State about relevant specific instances of the defendant's conduct. By enacting this sentence, the legislature adopted the practice applied in most jurisdictions. Prior case law applying the former rule that prohibited the use of specific instances of misconduct to test a character witness' knowledge of the character and reputation of the person about whom he was testifying is no longer authoritative or binding in this regard. State v. Gappins, 320 N.C. 64, 357 S.E.2d 654 (1987).

Subsection (a) of this rule allows questions of a character witness on cross-examination concerning specific instances of conduct of the person whose character is in issue. This changes the rule in this state as it existed before the adoption of the Evidence Code. State v. Martin, 322 N.C. 229, 367 S.E.2d 618 (1988).

It was not error for witnesses to be cross-examined about whether they knew that defendant had hit or been violent toward his wife where defendant placed his character at issue by having members of his family testify about his reputation for nonviolence or peacefulness. State v. Roseboro, 351 N.C. 536, 528 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1019, 121 S. Ct. 582, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

When Character Evidence May Be Admitted. — A criminal defendant will be entitled to an instruction on a good character trait as substantive evidence of his innocence when he satisfies the following four-part test: First, the evidence must be of a "trait of character" and not merely evidence of a fact (e.g., "being 'law-abiding' addresses one's character of abiding by all laws, a lack of convictions addresses only the fact that one has not been convicted of a crime"); second, the evidence of the trait must be competent (i.e., in addition to satisfying all other applicable standards, the evidence must be in the proper form as required by this rule); third, the trait must be pertinent (i.e., relevant in the context of the crime charged in that it bears a special relationship to or is involved in such crime); and fourth, the instruction must be requested by the defendant. State v. Moreno, 98 N.C. App. 642, 391 S.E.2d 860 (1990).

Consideration of Defendant's Character Evidence. — When a defendant testifies and also offers evidence of his good character, he is entitled to have the jury consider his character evidence both as bearing upon his credibility as a witness and as substantive evidence bearing directly upon the issue of his guilt or innocence. A court is not required to charge on this feature of the case, however, unless the defendant requests it. State v. Martin, 322 N.C. 229, 367 S.E.2d 618 (1988).

Proffered testimony of defense witness that would have taken the form of an opinion, because it illuminated a pertinent trait of defendant's character, should have been admitted; the testimony did not constitute hearsay and would have revealed a character trait of defendant that was relevant to rebut the State's evidence which raised the implication that defendant declined to swear to his innocence because he knew he was guilty. State v. Powell, 340 N.C. 674, 459 S.E.2d 219 (1995).

Indictment May Not Be Used to Impeach. — An indictment's function is not to determine whether a person is guilty of a crime, but rather, to show only that the state's evidence is sufficient to try the defendant. For this reason, it may not be used to impeach a witness. The same considerations apply during the cross-examination of a character witness. State v. Martin, 322 N.C. 229, 367 S.E.2d 618 (1988).

It was error for character witness to be cross-examined about whether he knew that defendant had been charged with selling marijuana in jail. However, the error was not prejudicial where defendant had previously testified that he had grown marijuana. State v. Martin, 322 N.C. 229, 367 S.E.2d 618 (1988).

Rebuttal of Evidence as to Defendant's Character. — Where defendant put his character in issue by having witnesses testify concerning his reputation for peacefulness, and only then did the prosecutor cross-examine the witnesses about specific instances of conduct by defendant in an effort to rebut their prior testimony as to defendant's character for peacefulness, the answers to the prosecutor's questions were properly admitted. State v. Gappins, 320 N.C. 64, 357 S.E.2d 654 (1987).

Evidence of a prior alleged rape was offered for impeachment purposes and was admissible to show character witnesses' knowledge of specific instances of defendant's conduct to rebut the witnesses' prior testimony as to defendant's good character. State v. Roper, 328 N.C. 337, 402 S.E.2d 600, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 902, 112 S. Ct. 280, 116 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1991).

Evidence of Plaintiff's Character in Civil Suit. — In a civil suit for assault and battery, where in addition to pleading self defense and alleging that plaintiff assaulted defendant, defendant sought to cast doubt on plaintiff's truthfulness by rigorously cross-examining him about his version of the incident as well as about specific misdeeds that tended to sully plaintiff's character, plaintiff had a right to attempt to counteract these reflections upon his veracity and character with evidence as to his reputation for truthfulness, and as to his general character. McNeill v. Durham County ABC Bd., 87 N.C. App. 50, 359 S.E.2d 500 (1987), modified on other grounds, 322 N.C. 425, 368 S.E.2d 619, rehearing denied, 322 N.C. 838, 371 S.E.2d 278 (1988).

Character Evidence in Defamation Action. — Because evidence of the "character" of a plaintiff in a defamation action is admissible, proof may be made by testimony as to reputation or by testimony in the form of an opinion. Raymond U v. Duke Univ., 91 N.C. App. 171,

Expert Opinion on Credibility. — Subsection (a) of this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 608, read together, forbid an expert's opinion as to the credibility of a witness. State v. Heath, 316 N.C. 337, 341 S.E.2d 565 (1986).

In a prosecution for taking indecent liberties with a child, testimony of two witnesses for the State, a pediatrician and a child psychologist, that in their opinion the child had testified truthfully, did not meet the requirements for expert testimony, as it concerned the credibility of a witness, a field in which jurors are supreme and require no assistance, rather than some fact involving scientific, technical or other specialized knowledge, and as character evidence the testimony violated the provisions of subsection (a) of this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 608. State v. Holloway, 82 N.C. App. 586, 347 S.E.2d 72 (1986).

Testimony of pediatrician that in her opinion the victim of alleged sexual abuse was "believable" was inadmissible under this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 608. State v. Aguallo, 318 N.C. 590, 350 S.E.2d 76 (1986).

Subsection (a) of this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 608, read together, forbid an expert's opinion testimony as to the credibility of a witness. State v. Chul Yun Kim, 318 N.C. 614, 350 S.E.2d 347 (1986); State v. Jenkins, 83 N.C. App. 616, 351 S.E.2d 299 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 675, 356 S.E.2d 791 (1987).

Testimony of child psychologist as to child rape victim's truthfulness during her evaluation and treatment was not admissible, where her sessions with the child began as a result of the acts which resulted in charges against the defendant and involved psychotherapy to assist the victim in overcoming her negative responses to the incidents, as the question posed by the prosecutor to which this testimony was responsive clearly invoked the psychologist's status as an expert and sought to establish the credibility of the victim as a witness. State v. Chul Yun Kim, 318 N.C. 614, 350 S.E.2d 347 (1986).

In prosecution for taking indecent liberties with children, the trial court committed prejudicial error in allowing a child psychologist to give his expert opinion as to whether children lie about sexual abuse, where his testimony referred in part to the individual witnesses and not just to children in general. State v. Jenkins, 83 N.C. App. 616, 351 S.E.2d 299 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 675, 356 S.E.2d 791 (1987).

Subsection (a) of this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 608 prohibit the admission of expert testimony on the issue of credibility of a witness. State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, writ denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 66, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987), holding, however, that erroneous admission of testimony did not entitle defendant to a new trial absent prejudice.

Expert witness' answer on cross examination that his opinion about "improbability" of hair originating from a source other than defendant was based on nonscientific considerations, addressed credibility of other witnesses and was an expression of opinion as to defendant's guilt and thus violated the Rules of Evidence. State v. Faircloth, 99 N.C. App. 685, 394 S.E.2d 198 (1990).

Expert testimony of credibility of a witness is not admissible. State v. Huang, 99 N.C. App. 658, 394 S.E.2d 279 (1990), vacated in part, 107 N.C. App. 710, 421 S.E.2d 812 (1992).

While it is true that in North Carolina expert testimony on the credibility of a witness is inadmissible, the defendant must show prejudicial error. State v. Davis, 106 N.C. App. 596, 418 S.E.2d 263 (1992), cert. denied, 333 N.C. 347, 426 S.E.2d 710 (1993).

Although Rules 405 and 608, when read together, prohibit an expert witness from commenting on the credibility of another witness, Rule 702 allows expert testimony where the expert's testimony goes to the reliability of a diagnosis and not to the credibility of a victim. State v. Marine, 135 N.C. App. 279, 520 S.E.2d 65 (1999).

Expert Opinion on Witness's Procedures. — The court rightfully refused the testimony of defendant's expert, a private detective and retired police officer of 30 years, where the jury was perfectly capable of judging the improper methods and procedures used by the undercover narcotics officer without the assistance of the expert; the testimony was irrelevant, had insufficient probative value on the facts to be proved, and violated the rule prohibiting expert testimony as to witness credibility, § 8C-1, Rules 405(a) and 608, as read together. State v. Mackey, 352 N.C. 650, 535 S.E.2d 555 (2000).

Expert Testimony Held Not Expression of Opinion. — In trial on first-degree rape charges where, when asked to "describe the victim emotionally" during counseling sessions, the victim's counselor, who was qualified as an expert, responded, "Genuine," the witness was testifying that the emotions of the victim during the counseling session were genuine emotions, and was not testifying that she believed what the victim told her was true, nor was she giving her opinion as to the victim's character for truthfulness in general; therefore, such a response was proper. State v. Wise, 326 N.C. 421, 390 S.E.2d 142, cert. denied, 498 U.S. 853, 111 S. Ct. 146, 112 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1990).

Opinion and Reputation Evidence on Credibility. — Both opinion and reputation evidence are admissible as evidence pertaining to a witness's credibility under this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 608. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App.

Admission of Expert Opinion, Although Error, Not Prejudicial. — In trial of defendant accused of his wife's murder, trial court erred, under section (a) of this rule, in admitting expert psychiatrist's opinion that victim was not homicidal; however, defendant did not show that this amounted to prejudicial error under § 15A-1443(a). State v. Mixion, 110 N.C. App. 138, 429 S.E.2d 363, cert. denied, 334 N.C. 437, 433 S.E.2d 183 (1993).

Testimony Relating to Defendant's Mental Condition Not Character Evidence. — Court erred in excluding doctor's testimony that related to psychological factors affecting the defendant's mental condition on the basis that it was testimony on character. State v. Baldwin, 125 N.C. App. 530, 482 S.E.2d 1 (1997), cert. granted, 345 N.C. 756, 485 S.E.2d 299 (1997), discretionary review improvidently allowed, 347 N.C. 348, 492 S.E.2d 354 (1997).

Credibility of Children Who Report Abuse. — In trial for sexual offenses committed against mentally retarded victim who functioned at an eight to ten year old level, expert testimony as to the general credibility of children who report sexual abuse was not excluded by this rule. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

Psychologist's testimony that child victim responded to test questions in an "honest fashion ... admitting that she was in a fair amount of emotional distress" did not constitute an expert opinion as to her character or credibility, but was merely a statement of opinion by a trained professional, based upon personal knowledge and professional expertise, that the test results were reliable because the victim seemed to respond to the questions in an honest fashion. State v. Kennedy, 320 N.C. 20, 357 S.E.2d 359 (1987).

Continued Cooperation of Child with Abuser. — In a prosecution in which defendant was convicted of taking indecent liberties with a minor, testimony of social worker and pediatrician as to a child's continued cooperation with a person whom the child has accused of sexual abuse was specialized knowledge, helpful to the jury and well within the fields of expertise of the two witnesses, and as defendant had "opened the door" for this evidence by cross-examining child victim about going to barn alone with defendant after she admitted she was afraid of defendant and did not like to be alone with him, it was also admissible expert testimony that corroborated the testimony of the state's prosecuting witness. State v. Bailey, 89 N.C. App. 212, 365 S.E.2d 651 (1988).

History of Fantasizing or Fabricating. — In prosecution for second-degree rape and sexual offense, the trial court erred in permitting the prosecutor to pose a question to an expert in clinical psychology regarding whether the 13-year-old victim had a mental condition which would cause her to fabricate a story about the sexual assault. State v. Heath, 316 N.C. 337, 341 S.E.2d 565 (1986).

Question asked of expert as to whether or not mentally retarded adult who had been sexually assaulted had any mental condition which would generally affect her ability to distinguish reality from fantasy was within the scope of the expert witness' expertise and did not amount to an impermissible opinion with respect to defendant's guilt or innocence. State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, writ denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 66, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

Failure to Object to Expert Opinion on Credibility. — Defense counsel's failure to object to a social worker's testimony that child/victim's statements were believable did not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel, where testimony was elicited by defense counsel in an effort to show that child's sexual knowledge resulted from a prior incident of sexual abuse. State v. Pretty, 134 N.C. App. 379, 517 S.E.2d 677 (1999), cert. denied, appeal dismissed, 351 N.C. 117, 540 S.E.2d 745 (1999).

Prostitution Cases. — Under North Carolina common law, evidence of other crimes is generally inadmissible, subject to certain well-defined exceptions. Section 14-206, pertaining to reputation and prior convictions in prosecutions for prostitution, represents a legitimate legislative decision to broaden such rules. The statute does not, of course, relieve the State of its burden of coming forward and proving its case beyond a reasonable doubt. Nor does the statute provide an "open door" for any evidence of other crimes or reputation. The legislature did not intend thereby to remove entirely the trial judge's discretion to exclude irrelevant evidence. Evidence proffered on the State's case in chief under § 14-206 must remain relevant to the issues at hand. State v. Evans, 73 N.C. App. 214, 326 S.E.2d 303 (1985).

Statement Not Admissible. — Witness's statement that defendant had been in trouble with the law from the time that he was twelve years old was not admissible under either subsection (a) of this rule or Rule 608(a). State v. Hunt, 339 N.C. 622, 457 S.E.2d 276 (1994).

Applied in State v. Britt, 93 N.C. App. 126, 377 S.E.2d 79 (1989); State v. Garner, 330 N.C. 273, 410 S.E.2d 861 (1991); State v. Cummings, 332 N.C. 487, 422 S.E.2d 692 (1992); State v. Richardson, 346 N.C. 520, 488 S.E.2d 148 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1056, 118 S. Ct. 710, 139 L. Ed. 2d 652 (1998); State v. Belfield, 144 N.C. App. 320, 548 S.E.2d 549 (2001).

Rule 406. Habit; routine practice.

Evidence of the habit of a person or of the routine practice of an organization, whether corroborated or not and regardless of the presence of eyewitnesses, is relevant to prove that the conduct of the person or organization on a particular occasion was in conformity with the habit or routine practice. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 406.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"An oft-quoted paragraph, McCormick § 162, p. 340, describes habit in terms effectively contrasting it with character.

'Character and habit are close akin. "Character" is a generalized description of one's disposition, or of one's disposition in respect to a general trait, such as honesty, temperance, or peacefulness. "Habit," in modern usage, both lay and psychological, is more specific. It describes one's regular response to a repeated specific situation. If we speak of character for care, we think of the person's tendency to act prudently in all the varying situations of life, in business, family life, in handling automobiles and in walking across the street. A habit, on the other hand, is the person's regular practice of meeting a particular kind of situation with a specific type of conduct, such as the habit of going down a particular stairway two stairs at a time, or of giving the hand-signal for a left turn, or of alighting from railway cars while they are moving. The doing of the habitual acts may become semi-automatic.'

Equivalent behavior on the part of a group is designated 'routine practice of an organization' in the rule.

Agreement is general that habit evidence is highly persuasive as proof of conduct on a particular occasion. Again quoting McCormick § 162, p. 341:

'Character may be thought of as the sum of one's habits though doubtless it is more than this. But unquestionably the uniformity of one's response to habit is far greater than the consistency with which one's conduct conforms to character or disposition. Even though character comes in only exceptionally as evidence of an act, surely any sensible man in investigating whether X did a particular act would be greatly helped in his inquiry by evidence as to whether he was in the habit of doing it.'

When disagreement has appeared, its focus has been upon the question what constitutes habit, and the reason for this is readily apparent. The extent to which instances must be multiplied and consistency of behavior maintained in order to rise to the status of habit inevitably gives rise to difference of opinion. Lewan, Rationale of Habit Evidence, 16 Syracuse L.Rev. 39, 49 (1964). While adequacy of sampling and uniformity of response are key factors, precise standards for measuring their sufficiency for evidence purposes cannot be formulated.

The rule is consistent with prevailing views. Much evidence is excluded simply because of failure to achieve the status of habit. Thus, evidence of intemperate 'habits' is generally excluded when offered as proof of drunkenness in accident cases, Annot., 46 A.L.R.2d 103, and evidence of other assaults is inadmissible to prove the instant one in a civil assault action, Annot., 66 A.L.R.2d 806. In Levin v. United States, 119 U.S.App. D.C. 156, 338 F.2d 265 (1964), testimony as to the religious 'habits' of the accused, offered as tending to prove that he was at home observing the Sabbath rather than out obtained money through larceny by trick, was held properly excluded:

'It seems apparent to us that an individual's religious practices would not be the type of activities which would lend themselves to the characterization of "invariable regularity." (1 Wigmore 520.) Certainly the very volitional basis of the activity raises serious questions as to its invariable nature, and hence its probative value.' Id. at 272.

These rulings are not inconsistent with the trend towards admitting evidence of business transactions between one of the parties and a third person as tending to prove that he made the same bargain or proposal in the litigated situation. Slough, Relevancy Unraveled, 6 Kan.L.Rev. 38-41 (1957). Nor are they inconsistent with such cases as Whittemore v. Lockheed Aircraft Corp., 65 Cal.App.2d 737, 151 P.2d 670

(1944), upholding the admission of evidence that plaintiff's intestate had on four other occasions flown planes from defendant's factory for delivery to his employer airline, offered to prove that he was piloting rather than a guest on a plane which crashed and killed all on board while en route for delivery.

A considerable body of authority has required that evidence of the routine practice of an organization be corroborated as a condition precedent to its admission in evidence. Slough, Relevancy Unraveled, 5 Kan.L.Rev. 404, 449 (1957). This requirement is specifically rejected by the rule on the ground that it relates to the sufficiency of the evidence rather than admissibility.  The rule also rejects the requirement of the absence of eyewitnesses, sometimes encountered with respect to admitting habit evidence to prove freedom from contributory negligence in wrongful death cases."

Rule 406 is consistent with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 95 (1982).

CASE NOTES

Court to Make Inquiries. — This rule permits proof of habit by evidence of specific instances of conduct; before evidence of specific instances of conduct may be admitted to prove habit, however, the trial court must make certain inquiries to determine the reliability and probative value of the proffered evidence. Crawford v. Fayez, 112 N.C. App. 328, 435 S.E.2d 545 (1993), cert. denied, 335 N.C. 553, 441 S.E.2d 113 (1994).

Witness Held Competent to Testify as to Routine Practice. — Defendant-employer's corporate safety specialist was competent to testify concerning the routine practice of the defendant-employer in removing asbestos pursuant to this rule, even though the witness was not actually present at the jobsite where plaintiff worked. Barber v. Babcock & Wilcox Constr. Co., 98 N.C. App. 203, 390 S.E.2d 341 (1990), rev'd on other grounds on rehearing, 101 N.C. App. 564, 400 S.E.2d 735, cert. granted, 328 N.C. 569, 403 S.E.2d 506 (1991).

Witness testimony as to the customary procedures followed in administering tests using the Breathalyzer model 900 machine was sufficient, and properly admitted under this rule, to prove defendant's test was administered in accordance with "approved methods," required by § 20-139.1, where copies of the actual test and the arresting officer's personal notes concerning the case had been discarded as customary after approximately five years. State v. Tappe, 139 N.C. App. 33, 533 S.E.2d 262 (2000).

Admission of Testimony Properly Denied. — The trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to admit habit evidence under this section given the vague and imprecise nature of the witness's testimony regarding defendant's speed (defendant was driving "'wide open as usual") and the witness's potential, albeit understandable, interest in the outcome of the case as the son of plaintiffs. Long v. Harris, 137 N.C. App. 461, 528 S.E.2d 633 (2000).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying admissibility of evidence of a victim's prior assault which the defendant claimed the victim fabricated so as to obtain a pregnancy test and which he wanted to introduce to demonstrate "habit" where it noted that the "two incidents" occurring "two years apart" were not sufficient to constitute a habit within the meaning of this rule. State v. Chavis, 141 N.C. App. 177, 540 S.E.2d 404 (2000).

Where defendant claimed to have met murder victim in an adult video store the night of the murder, and defendant attempted to introduce evidence that the victim had visited adult-oriented establishments two or three times per month, the trial court properly excluded the evidence; occasional visits did not constitute relevant evidence of habit. State v. Fair, — N.C. —, 552 S.E.2d 568, 2001 N.C. LEXIS 944 (2001).

Testimony Held Admissible. — It was not error to allow the decedent's sister to testify that she was familiar with the decedent's habit of keeping money and always having on her person from twenty to forty dollars. State v. Palmer, 334 N.C. 104, 431 S.E.2d 172 (1993).

Trial court did not err in admitting testimony relating to plaintiff's prior course of conduct involving alcohol, marijuana, and automobiles where the habit evidence was not admitted to prove that plaintiff was drinking on the night in question, but that plaintiff had a habit of engaging in the above-described behavior, and that his conduct on the night in question was willful or wanton, in conformity with the habit. Anderson v. Austin, 115 N.C. App. 134, 443 S.E.2d 737, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 514, 452 S.E.2d 806 (1994).

Stated in State v. Griffin, 136 N.C. App. 531, 525 S.E.2d 793 (2000).

Rule 407. Subsequent remedial measures.

When, after an event, measures are taken which, if taken previously, would have made the event less likely to occur, evidence of the subsequent measures is not admissible to prove negligence or culpable conduct in connection with the event. This rule does not require the exclusion of evidence of subsequent measures when offered for another purpose, such as proving ownership, control, or feasibility of precautionary measures, if those issues are controverted, or impeachment. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 407 except that the phrase "those issues are" has been inserted to clarify what must be controverted.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The rule incorporates conventional doctrine which excludes evidence of subsequent remedial measures as proof of an admission of fault. The rule rests on two grounds. (1) The conduct is not in fact an admission, since the conduct is equally consistent with injury by mere accident or through contributory negligence. Or, as Baron Bramwell put it, the rule rejects the notion that 'because the world gets wiser as it gets older, therefore it was foolish before'. Hart v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Ry. Co., 21 L.T.R.N.S. 261, 263 (1869). Under a liberal theory of relevancy this ground alone would not support exclusion as the inference is still a possible one. (2) The other, and more impressive, ground for exclusion rests on a social policy of encouraging people to take, or at least not discouraging them from taking, steps in furtherance of added safety. The courts have applied this principle to exclude evidence of subsequent repairs, installation of safety devices, changes in company rules, and discharge of employees, and the language of the present rule is broad enough to encompass all of them. See Falknor, Extrinsic Policies Affecting Admissibility, 10 Rutgers L.Rev. 574, 590 (1956).

The second sentence of the rule directs attention to the limitations of the rule. Exclusion is called for only when the evidence of subsequent remedial measures is offered as proof of negligence or culpable conduct. In effect it rejects the suggested inference that fault is admitted. Other purposes are, however, allowable, including ownership or control, existence of duty, and feasibility of precautionary measures, if controverted, and impeachment. 2 Wigmore § 283; Annot., 64 A.L.R.2d 1296. Two recent federal cases are illustrative. Boeing Airplane Co. v. Brown, 291 F.2d 310 (9th Cir. 1961), an action against an airplane manufacturer for using an allegedly defectively designed alternator shaft which caused a plane crash, upheld the admission of evidence of subsequent design modification for the purpose of showing that design changes and safeguards were feasible. And Powers v. J. B. Michael & Co., 329 F.2d 674 (6th Cir. 1964), an action against a road contractor for negligent failure to put out warning signs, sustained the admission of evidence that defendant subsequently put out signs to show that the portion of the road in question was under defendant's control. The requirement that the other purpose be controverted calls for automatic exclusion unless a genuine issue be present and allows the opposing party to lay the groundwork for exclusion by making an admission. Otherwise the factors of undue prejudice, confusion of issues, misleading the jury, and waste of time remain for consideration under Rule 403."

The increasing tendency of federal courts is to hold that Rule 407 is not applicable to product liability cases. North Carolina courts have applied the rule excluding evidence of subsequent remedial measures in product liability cases. See Jenkins v. Helgren, 26 N.C. App. 653 (1975). It is the intent of the Committee that the rule should apply to all types of actions.

Rule 407 is consistent with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 180 (1982).

CASE NOTES

Measures Taken to Assess Reasonableness of Conduct. — In a negligence action, trial court did not commit prejudicial error in admitting evidence concerning a subsequent accident in which, on the day after the accident in question, officers and employees of defendant employer, in an attempt to assess the safety and reasonableness of defendant employee's actions, placed another garbage truck of similar size and weight in the same location as the truck driven by defendant employee the day before, at the same time of day and where a car driven in an easterly direction collided with the right front portion of the truck; this rule excludes evidence of measures taken after an event which would have made the event less likely to occur, and there was no evidence that the actions taken by defendant were remedial in nature. Smith v. Pass, 95 N.C. App. 243, 382 S.E.2d 781 (1989).

Evidence of subsequent remedial measures in the form of written instructions to security guards was properly excluded since it could not be used to impeach testimony that there was no reason to lock the front door of the restaurant and since its probative value tended to be outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Benton v. Hillcrest Foods, Inc., 136 N.C. App. 42, 524S.E.2d 53 (1999).

Measures Taken by Another. — In action against motel by guest who was criminally assaulted by third parties, admission of the testimony of another motel operator as to security measures that he took after the incident involving plaintiff at defendants' motel did not violate this rule. Murrow v. Daniels, 85 N.C. App. 401, 355 S.E.2d 204 (1987), rev'd on other grounds, 321 N.C. 494, 364 S.E.2d 392 (1988).

Evidence of Control and Feasibility of Precautionary Measures. — Where general contractor repeatedly argued that it had no control of a construction site on the day of the subject accident, the measures taken by it, immediately following decedent's death, to cover floor openings, were admissible to rebut this contention and to demonstrate the feasibility of taking precautionary measures. Lane v. R.N. Rouse & Co., 135 N.C. App. 494, 521 S.E.2d 137 (1999).

Rule 408. Compromise and offers to compromise.

Evidence of (1) furnishing or offering or promising to furnish, or (2) accepting or offering or promising to accept, a valuable consideration in compromising or attempting to compromise a claim which was disputed as to either validity or amount, is not admissible to prove liability for or invalidity of the claim or its amount. Evidence of conduct or evidence of statements made in compromise negotiations is likewise not admissible. This rule does not require the exclusion of any evidence otherwise discoverable merely because it is presented in the course of compromise negotiations. This rule also does not require exclusion when the evidence is offered for another purpose, such as proving bias or prejudice of a witness, negativing a contention of undue delay, or proving an effort to obstruct a criminal investigation or prosecution. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 408 except that the words "evidence of" were added to the second sentence. The addition is for the purpose of clarification and is not intended as a material change. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"As a matter of general agreement, evidence of an offer to compromise a claim is not receivable in evidence as an admission of, as the case may be, the validity or invalidity of the claim. As with evidence of subsequent remedial measures, dealt with in Rule 407, exclusion may be based on two grounds. (1) The evidence is irrelevant, since the offer may be motivated by a desire for peace rather than from any concession of weakness of position. The validity of this position will vary as the amount of the offer varies in relation to the size of the claim and may also be influenced by other circumstances. (2) A more consistently impressive ground is promotion of the public policy favoring the compromise and settlement of disputes. McCormick §§ 76, 251. While the rule is ordinarily phrased in terms of offers of compromise, it is apparent that a similar attitude must be taken with respect to completed compromise when offered against a party thereto. This latter situation will not, of course, ordinarily occur except when a party to the present litigation has compromised with a third person."

North Carolina practice is consistent with Rule 408 in that an offer of compromise, as such, is not admissible to prove liability for or invalidity of a claim or its amount. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 180 (1982). The same rule applies to an offer to settle, or the actual settlement of, a third person's claim arising out of the transaction in litigation. Id. at 56. The words "the claim" in the first sentence should be interpreted to include the claim that is the subject of the lawsuit and any other claim arising out of the same occurrence.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The policy considerations which underlie the rule do not come into play when the effort is to induce a creditor to settle an admittedly due amount for a lesser sum. McCormick § 251, p. 540. Hence the rule requires that the claim be disputed as to either validity or amount."

The phrase "which was disputed" should be interpreted consistently with North Carolina decisional law concerning what constitutes a dispute. See Wilson County Board of Education v. Lamm, 276 N.C. 487 (1970).

With respect to the second sentence of the rule, the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The practical value of the common law rule has been greatly diminished by its inapplicability to admissions of fact, even though made in the course of compromise negotiations, unless hypothetical, stated to be 'without prejudice,' or so connected with the offer as to be inseparable from it. McCormick § 251, pp. 540-541. An inevitable effect is to inhibit freedom of communication with respect to compromise, even among lawyers. Another effect is the generation of controversy over whether a given statement falls within or without the protected area. These considerations account for the expansion of the rule herewith to include evidence of conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations, as well as the offer or completed compromise itself."

Thus Rule 408 changes the current North Carolina practice that allows a "distinct admission of an independent fact" made during compromise negotiations to be received in evidence. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 180, at 56-57 (1982).

Policy reasons for the compromise rule do not apply to evidence discoverable outside of settlement negotiations. Thus the third sentence of Rule 408 states that evidence otherwise discoverable need not be excluded merely because it is presented in compromise discussions. There is not any North Carolina case law on this point.

The Advisory Committee's Note states that:

"The final sentence of the rule serves to point out some limitations upon its applicability. Since the rule excludes only when the purpose is proving the validity or invalidity of the claim or its amount, an offer for another purpose is not within the rule. The illustrative situations mentioned in the rule are supported by the authorities. As to proving bias or prejudice of a witness, see Annot., 161 A.L.R. 395, contra, Fenberg v. Rosenthal, 348 Ill.App. 510, 109 N.E.2d 402 (1952), and negativing a contention of lack of due diligence in presenting a claim, 4 Wigmore § 1061. An effort to 'buy off' the prosecution or a prosecuting witness in a criminal case is not within the policy of the rule of exclusion. McCormick, § 251, p. 542."

The final sentence of the rule is consistent with North Carolina practice in that an offer for a purpose other than to prove the validity or invalidity of the claim or its amount is not within the rule. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 180, at 55, 56 (1982).

CASE NOTES

This rule does not apply unless there is an existing dispute when offer to compromise a claim which is disputed is made. Marina Food Assocs. v. Marina Restaurant, Inc., 100 N.C. App. 82, 394 S.E.2d 824 (1990).

Evidence of a Contract of Compromise. — While evidence of either an offer or an acceptance of consideration in compromising or attempting to compromise a disputed claim is not admissible to prove liability for or invalidity of the claim, evidence admitted under this rule of a contract of compromise between the parties to a suit, whether or not performed, is admissible. Carter v. Foster, 103 N.C. App. 110, 404 S.E.2d 484 (1991).

Failure to Object at Trial. — Even if affidavits of two defendants contained evidence of settlement negotiations made inadmissible by this rule incompetent to support defendants' motions for summary judgment, plaintiff's failure to move to strike the affidavits prohibited plaintiff from asserting their admission as error on appeal. Lindsey v. North Carolina Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 103 N.C. App. 432, 405 S.E.2d 803 (1991).

Exclusion of Evidence Otherwise Discoverable Not Proper. — Although this rule provides that evidence of conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations is inadmissible, this rule does not require the exclusion of evidence that is otherwise discoverable or offered for another purpose, merely because it is presented in the course of compromise negotiations. Renner v. Hawk, 125 N.C. App. 483, 481 S.E.2d 370 (1997), cert. denied, 346 N.C. 283, 487 S.E.2d 553 (1997).

Evidence Held Admissible. — Admission into evidence of defendants' offer of $150,000 to plaintiff to terminate lease, which was an effort on part of defendant to satisfy a condition of sale of restaurant property, was not violative of § 8C-1, Rule 408, nor was it barred by § 8C-1, Rule 402, as offer was evidence of value of lease and was therefore relevant to issue of damages. Marina Food Assocs. v. Marina Restaurant, Inc., 100 N.C. App. 82, 394 S.E.2d 824 (1990).

The trial judge properly determined that admitted portions of an answering machine message and a subsequent conversation between the plaintiff mother of a boy injured on an amusement ride and the deceased defendant ride operator in which defendant admitted the possibility that he had not fastened the boy properly were not part of settlement negotiations; there was no mention of an intent to compromise or negotiate in the admitted portions of the conversation and the testimony was an admission of fact during a telephone conversation initiated by a party to the dispute. Breedlove v. Aerotrim, U.S.A., Inc., 142 N.C. App. 447, 543 S.E.2d 213 (2001).

Deputy commissioner in workers' compensation proceeding properly allowed evidence of the existence of a claims adjuster's form, which contained an offer to pay compensation, that was sent to the injured worker's counsel to be introduced as rebuttal after the injured worker claimed the insurance company refused to pay according to the treating physician's evaluation. Hawley v. Wayne Dale Constr., — N.C. App. —, 552 S.E.2d 269, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 944 (2001).

Harmless Error. — The admission of offers of compromise to boost defendant's argument that decedent intended for home listed in her daughter's name to belong to her constituted harmless error where an abundance of evidence otherwise supported the decedent's intent to treat the property as a gift. Tucker v. Westlake, 136 N.C. App. 162, 523 S.E.2d 139 (1999).

Evidence Held Inadmissible. — In a medical malpractice case, evidence of the plaintiffs' separate lawsuit against a different defendant, which had been dismissed, was irrelevant under § 8C-1, Rule 402, and its admission contravened the strong public policy favoring settlement of controversies out of court. Cates v. Wilson, 83 N.C. App. 448, 350 S.E.2d 898 (1986), modified, 321 N.C. 1, 361 S.E.2d 734 (1987).

Use of Statements Made During Compromise Negotiations to Support Separate Claim. — While affidavit of plaintiff's attorney containing statements made during negotiations between a member and the board of a voluntary association could not be offered up to prove plaintiff's innocence of the charges against her, they could support a distinct and separate claim for damages on the ground that she was denied a fair hearing by an impartial board. Wilson Realty & Constr., Inc. v. Asheboro-Randolph Bd. of Realtors, Inc., 134 N.C. App. 468, 518 S.E.2d 28 (1999).

Rule 409. Payment of medical and other expenses.

Evidence of furnishing or offering or promising to pay medical, hospital, or other expenses occasioned by an injury is not admissible to prove liability for the injury. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 409, except that the phrase "other expenses" has been established for the phrase "similar expenses."

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The considerations underlying this rule parallel those underlying Rules 407 and 408, which deal respectively with subsequent remedial measures and offers of compromise. As stated in Annot., 20 A.L.R.2d 291, 293:

'[G]enerally, evidence of payment of medical, hospital, or similar expenses of an injured party by the opposing party, is not admissible, the reason often given being that such payment or offer is usually made from humane impulses and not from an admission of liability, and that to hold otherwise would tend to discourage assistance to the injured person.'"

Under current North Carolina law, rendering aid to an injured person or promising to render aid is not an admission of fault.

Rule 409 does not cover rendering aid but does not change existing North Carolina law that rendering aid to an injured person or promising to render aid is not an admission of fault. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 180, at 58 (1982).

Unlike the federal rule, which applies to "medical, hospital, or similar expenses," this rule applies to "medical, hospital, or other expenses." The phrase "other expenses" is intended to include, but is not limited to, lost wages and damage to property. The phrase "occasioned by an injury" is intended to include a property injury as well as a personal injury. The rule's coverage of nonmedical expenses occasioned by either a personal or property injury is an expansion of the current North Carolina rule. See Id. However, this rule is intended to apply only to tort claims and not to claims in other actions such as child support.

Rule 409 is consistent with North Carolina practice in that evidence inadmissible under the rule to prove liability may be admissible for another purpose. See Id. § 180, at 58-59 (1982). The rule is also consistent with North Carolina practice in that it does not bar evidence of conduct and statements outside of the simple act of furnishing or offering to pay medical expenses. As the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Contrary to Rule 408, dealing with offers of compromise, the present rule does not extend to conduct or statements not a part of the act of furnishing or offering or promising to pay. This difference in treatment arises from fundamental differences in nature. Communication is essential if compromises are to be effected, and consequently broad protection of statements is needed. This is not so in cases of payments or offers or promises to pay medical expenses, where factual statements may be expected to be incidental in nature."

Rule 410. Inadmissibility of pleas, plea discussions, and related statements.

Except as otherwise provided in this rule, evidence of the following is not, in any civil or criminal proceeding, admissible for or against the defendant who made the plea or was a participant in the plea discussions:

(1) A plea of guilty which was later withdrawn;
(2) A plea of no contest;
(3) Any statement made in the course of any proceedings under Article 58 of Chapter 15A of the General Statutes or comparable procedure in district court, or proceedings under Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure or comparable procedure in another state, regarding a plea of guilty which was later withdrawn or a plea of no contest;
(4) Any statement made in the course of plea discussions with an attorney for the prosecuting authority which do not result in a plea of guilty or which result in a plea of guilty later withdrawn.

However, such a statement is admissible in any proceeding wherein another statement made in the course of the same plea or plea discussions has been introduced and the statement ought in fairness be considered contemporaneously with it. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 410, except as noted below.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Withdrawn pleas of guilty were held inadmissible in federal prosecutions in Kercheval v. United States, 274 U.S. 220, 47 S.Ct. 582, 71 L.Ed. 1009 (1927). The Court pointed out that to admit the withdrawn plea would effectively set at naught the allowance of withdrawal and place the accused in a dilemma utterly inconsistent with the decision to award him a trial. The New York Court of Appeals, in People v. Spitaleri, 9 N.Y.2d 168, 212 N.Y.S.2d 53, 173 N.E.2d 35 (1961), reexamined and overturned its earlier decisions which had allowed admission. In addition to the reasons set forth in Kercheval, which was quoted at length, the court pointed out that the effect of admitting the plea was to compel defendant to take the stand by way of explanation and to open the way for the prosecution to call the lawyer who had represented him at the time of entering the plea. State court decisions for and against admissibility are collected in Annot., 86 A.L.R.2d 326."

Subsection (2), regarding pleas of no contest is the same as the federal rule and is consistent with North Carolina law. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 177, at 41, 42 (1982).

The third paragraph differs from Fed. R. Evid. 410 by making a reference to Article 58 of General Statutes Chapter 15A, which specifies the procedure relating to guilty pleas in superior court. The third paragraph also refers to comparable procedures in district court, although no statutory scheme regulates plea negotiations in district court. See Official Commentary to G.S. Ch. 15A, Art. 58.

Prior to the 1979 amendments to Fed. R. Evid. 410 and Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(e)(6), it was questionable whether an otherwise voluntary admission to law enforcement officials was rendered inadmissible merely because it was made in hope of obtaining leniency by a plea. The Notes of the Advisory Committee on the amendment to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(e)(6) state that the rule:

"makes inadmissible statements made 'in the course of any proceedings under this rule regarding' either a plea of guilty later withdrawn or a plea of no contest later withdrawn and also statements 'made in the course of plea discussions with an attorney for the government which do not result in a plea of guilty or which result in a plea of guilty later withdrawn.' It is not limited to statements by the defendant himself, and thus would cover statements by defense counsel regarding defendant's incriminating admissions to him. It thus fully protects the plea discussion process ... without attempting to deal with confrontations between suspects and law enforcement agents, which involve problems of quite different dimensions .... This change, it must be emphasized, does not compel the conclusion that statements made to law enforcement agents, especially when the agents purport to have authority to bargain, are inevitably admissible. Rather, the point is that such cases ... must be resolved by that body of law dealing with police interrogations."

If there has been a plea of guilty later withdrawn or a plea of no contest, the third paragraph of Rule 410 makes inadmissible statements made in the course of any proceedings relating to guilty pleas in the superior or district courts. This includes, for example, admissions by the defendant when he makes his plea in court and also admissions made to provide the factual basis for the plea. However, the rule is not limited to statements made in court. If the court were to defer its decision on a plea agreement pending examination of the presentence report, statements made to the probation officer in connection with the preparation of that report would come within the third paragraph. See Notes of Advisory Committee on the Amendment to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(e)(6).

The last sentence of Rule 410 provides an exception to the general rule of nonadmissibility of the described statements. Such a statement is admissible "in any proceedings wherein another statement made in the course of the same plea or plea discussions has been introduced and the statement ought in fairness be considered contemporaneously with it."

"... when evidence of statements made in the course of or as consequence of a certain plea or plea discussions are introduced under circumstances not prohibited by this rule (e.g., not 'against' the person who made the plea), other statements relating to the same plea or plea discussions may also be admitted when relevant to the matter at issue. For example, if a defendant upon a motion to dismiss a prosecution on some ground were able to admit certain statements made in aborted plea discussions in his favor, then other relevant statements made in the same plea discussions should be admissible against the defendant in the interest of determining the truth of the matter at issue. The language ... follows closely that in Fed. R. Evid. 106, as the considerations involved are very similar." Id.

Unlike the federal rule, Rule 410 does not contain an exception permitting a statement made by the defendant under oath, on the record, and in the presence of counsel to be introduced in a criminal proceeding for perjury or false statement.

Rule 410 differs from the federal rule by making the described evidence inadmissible in favor of the defendant as well as against him. North Carolina practice in this area is governed in part by G.S. 15A-1025 which is consistent with this rule. G.S. 15A-1025 should be amended after Rule 410 is adopted.

CASE NOTES

The defendant waived his right to appellate review of a possible violation of this section by introducing evidence during his own direct examination of plea discussions and subsequently failing to object to the State's eliciting of further evidence during cross-examination. State v. Thompson, 141 N.C. App. 698, 543 S.E.2d 160 (2001), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 396, 548 S.E.2d 157 (2001).

Rule 411. Liability insurance.

Evidence that a person was or was not insured against liability is not admissible upon the issue whether he acted negligently or otherwise wrongfully. This rule does not require the exclusion of evidence of insurance against liability when offered for another purpose, such as proof of agency, ownership, or control, or bias or prejudice of a witness. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 411. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The courts have with substantial unanimity rejected evidence of liability insurance for the purpose of proving fault, and absence of liability insurance as proof of lack of fault. At best the inference of fault from the fact of insurance coverage is a tenuous one, as is its converse. More important, no doubt, has been the feeling that knowledge of the presence or absence of liability insurance would induce juries to decide cases on improper grounds. McCormick § 168; Annot., 4 A.L.R.2d 761. The rule is drafted in broad terms so as to include contributory negligence or other fault of a plaintiff as well as fault of a defendant.

The second sentence points out the limits of the rule, using well established illustrations. Id."

Rule 411 is consistent with North Carolina practice in barring evidence of insurance unless offered for a purpose other than to prove negligence. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 88 (1982).

CASE NOTES

Rule Not an Absolute Bar. — This rule does not operate as an absolute bar to the admission of evidence concerning liability insurance when offered for a purpose, such as proof of agency, ownership, or control or bias and prejudice of a witness. Warren v. Jackson, 125 N.C. App. 96, 479 S.E.2d 278 (1997).

Section 8C-1, Rule 411 does not absolutely bar the admission of evidence concerning liability insurance when that evidence is offered for another purpose, such as proof of agency, ownership, or control, or bias or prejudice of a witness. Williams v. McCoy, 145 N.C. App. 111, 550 S.E.2d 796 (2001).

Admission to Explain Answer. — The trial court abused its discretion when it refused, under § 8C-1, Rule 411, to allow the injured party to explain why she consulted an attorney before seeing a doctor, since this was prompted by a negative experience with an insurance adjuster, because this rule did not prohibit such testimony, and the trial court could have given a limiting instruction. Williams v. McCoy, 145 N.C. App. 111, 550 S.E.2d 796 (2001).

Purposes for Which Evidence of Insurance Is Admissible. — This rule enumerates several examples for which evidence of insurance is admissible, but it does not by its terms limit admissibility to those examples alone. Johnson v. Skinner, 99 N.C. App. 1, 392 S.E.2d 634, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 429, 395 S.E.2d 680 (1990).

Introduction of Coverage. — In suit regarding automobile accident, evidence of defendant's liability insurance coverage should not have been introduced just because evidence of plaintiff's recovery in workers' compensation was introduced pursuant to § 97-10.2(e). Anderson v. Hollifield, 123 N.C. App. 426, 473 S.E.2d 399 (1996), rev'd on other grounds, 345 N.C. 480, 480 S.E.2d 661 (1997).

The fact that defendant may have had liability insurance on vehicle some two months before accident in question did not tend to show agency, ownership or control on the later date. As registration certification and financial responsibility certification did not tend to show agency on the date of the accident, this rule had no application. Further, the documents were not relevant and were thus inadmissible. Smith v. Starnes, 88 N.C. App. 609, 364 S.E.2d 442 (1988).

Evidence of Insurance Held Admissible. — Admission was proper where evidence was offered for following purposes: (1) to show defendant's motive for using dealer tags; (2) to show that Toyota had knowledge that defendant wanted to use tags so his Pontiac could be driven on highway by himself and others after defendant's insurance had lapsed; and (3) to allow jury to assess foreseeability of an accident when dealer tags are loaned to a member of class of persons who have not complied with North Carolina's Financial Responsibility Act. Johnson v. Skinner, 99 N.C. App. 1, 392 S.E.2d 634, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 429, 395 S.E.2d 680 (1990).

Admission to Show Bias or Prejudice. — The trial court properly allowed plaintiff to cross-examine private investigator about insurance company's hiring him to do videotape; this rule provides for the admission of evidence concerning insurance when offered to show bias or prejudice of a witness. Carrier v. Starnes, 120 N.C. App. 513, 463 S.E.2d 393 (1995).

Claim Estimates Properly Excluded as Evidence. — In personal injury action against plaintiff's UIM insurer, admitting claim estimates prepared by the insurer as admissions of a party opponent would unduly prejudice the defense and circumvent the policy of having the jury focus on the facts and not the existence of liability insurance. Braddy v. Nationwide Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 122 N.C. App. 402, 470 S.E.2d 820 (1996).

Reference to defendant builder's insurance was not grounds for a mistrial in a liability suit for defects in plaintiffs' house, where the reference was accidental, insignificant and inadvertent, so much so that the judge determined that giving the jury a curative instruction would only serve to highlight the matter and bring it to the jury's attention. Medlin v. FYCO, Inc., 139 N.C. App. 534, 534 S.E.2d 622 (2000).

Rule 412. Rape or sex offense cases; relevance of victim's past behavior.

(a) As used in this rule, the term "sexual behavior" means sexual activity of the complainant other than the sexual act which is at issue in the indictment on trial.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the sexual behavior of the complainant is irrelevant to any issue in the prosecution unless such behavior:

(1) Was between the complainant and the defendant; or

(2) Is evidence of specific instances of sexual behavior offered for the purpose of showing that the act or acts charged were not committed by the defendant; or

(3) Is evidence of a pattern of sexual behavior so distinctive and so closely resembling the defendant's version of the alleged encounter with the complainant as to tend to prove that such complainant consented to the act or acts charged or behaved in such a manner as to lead the defendant reasonably to believe that the complainant consented; or

(4) Is evidence of sexual behavior offered as the basis of expert psychological or psychiatric opinion that the complainant fantasized or invented the act or acts charged.

(c) Sexual behavior otherwise admissible under this rule may not be proved by reputation or opinion.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, unless and until the court determines that evidence of sexual behavior is relevant under subdivision (b), no reference to this behavior may be made in the presence of the jury and no evidence of this behavior may be introduced at any time during the trial of:

(1) A charge of rape or a lesser included offense of rape;

(2) A charge of a sex offense or a lesser included offense of a sex offense; or

(3) An offense being tried jointly with a charge of rape or a sex offense, or with a lesser included offense of rape or a sex offense.

Before any questions pertaining to such evidence are asked of any witness, the proponent of such evidence shall first apply to the court for a determination of the relevance of the sexual behavior to which it relates. The proponent of such evidence may make application either prior to trial pursuant to G.S. 15A-952, or during the trial at the time when the proponent desires to introduce such evidence. When application is made, the court shall conduct an in camera hearing, which shall be transcribed, to consider the proponent's offer of proof and the argument of counsel, including any counsel for the complainant, to determine the extent to which such behavior is relevant. In the hearing, the proponent of the evidence shall establish the basis of admissibility of such evidence. Notwithstanding subdivision (b) of Rule 104, if the relevancy of the evidence which the proponent seeks to offer in the trial depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court, at the in camera hearing or at a subsequent in camera hearing scheduled for that purpose, shall accept evidence on the issue of whether that condition of fact is fulfilled and shall determine that issue. If the court finds that the evidence is relevant, it shall enter an order stating that the evidence may be admitted and the nature of the questions which will be permitted.

(e) The record of the in camera hearing and all evidence relating thereto shall be open to inspection only by the parties, the complainant, their attorneys and the court and its agents, and shall be used only as necessary for appellate review. At any probable cause hearing, the judge shall take cognizance of the evidence, if admissible, at the end of the in camera hearing without the questions being repeated or the evidence being resubmitted in open court. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule differs substantially from Fed. R. Evid. 412. Except as noted below, the rule is the same as the current shield law, G.S. 8-58.6 [now repealed].

Subdivision (c), which is derived from the federal rule, was added to the current shield law to make it clear that sexual behavior otherwise admissible under this rule may not be proved by reputation or opinion.

The next to the last sentence of subdivision (d), which is derived from the federal rule, was added to the shield law to address the issue of conditional relevancy. The sentence provides that, notwithstanding Rule 104(b), if the relevancy of the evidence depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court will hear evidence in the in camera proceeding and decide whether the condition of fact is fulfilled. The court should decide whether the defendant has presented sufficient evidence for a reasonable jury to find the proposition asserted to be true. If so, the defendant's evidence should be admitted. If not, the evidence should be excluded. See S. Saltzburg and K. Redden, Federal Rules of Evidence Manual, at 221 — 27 (3d ed. 1982). Evidence should not be admitted on behalf of the defendant subject to connecting-up. The court should make sure, before any evidence of prior sexual activity is admitted, that the conditional relevance analysis has been satisfied. Id. at 90.

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Decisions under Former § 8-58.6.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Qualifications for Relevancy. — Under this rule, the sexual behavior of the prosecuting witness is irrelevant unless the behavior (1) was between the complainant and the defendant; or (2) is evidence of specific instances of sexual behavior offered for the purpose of showing that the act or acts charged were not committed by the defendant; or (3) is evidence of a pattern of sexual behavior so distinctive and so closely resembling the defendant's version of the alleged encounter with the complainant as to tend to prove that such complainant consented to the act or acts charged or behaved in such a manner as to lead the defendant reasonably to believe that the complainant consented; or (4) is evidence of sexual behavior offered as the basis of expert psychological or psychiatric opinion that the complainant fantasized or invented the act or acts charged. State v. Alverson, 91 N.C. App. 577, 372 S.E.2d 729 (1988).

Prior sexual conduct between the complainant and the defendant on trial was relevant, even though multiple defendants were being tried for rape in separate proceedings. State v. Ginyard, 122 N.C. App. 25, 468 S.E.2d 525 (1996).

By this statute, the legislature intended to exclude from evidence only the actual sexual history of the complainant and not prior false accusations made by the complainant. State v. McCarroll, 109 N.C. App. 574, 428 S.E.2d 229, cert. granted, 333 N.C. 794, 430 S.E.2d 426 (1993), rev'd on other grounds, 336 N.C. 559, 445 S.E.2d 18 (1994).

Exclusion of Public Held Proper. — Court did not err in closing to the public a voir dire hearing conducted to determine the relevance of prosecuting rape victim's past sexual behavior. State v. McNeil, 99 N.C. App. 235, 393 S.E.2d 123 (1990).

Scope of In Camera Hearing. — At an in camera hearing pursuant to this rule, the trial judge acted well within his authority when he refused to allow defendant to question victim about the manner in which her assailant performed the act of sexual intercourse. Such questions did not present an inquiry into evidence of sexual activity of the victim other than the sexual acts which were at issue, and so were not a proper subject of the in camera examination; further, defendant had already cross-examined victim about the extent of penetration and ejaculation by her assailant during the rape. State v. Mason, 315 N.C. 724, 340 S.E.2d 430 (1986).

Cross-Examination Properly Limited. — Where the defendant attempted to elicit testimony from the victim regarding an incident in which she was allegedly "making out" with defense witness, the trial court properly limited the cross-examination of the victim pursuant to the Rape Shield Statute. State v. Herring, 322 N.C. 733, 370 S.E.2d 363 (1988).

Deceased Rape Victim. — In the limited circumstance where the rape victim is deceased and the defendant's own testimony brings into question the victim's sexual behavior, the prosecution may present rebuttal evidence relating to the victim's prior sexual conduct to challenge the credibility of defendant's testimony. State v. Sexton, 336 N.C. 321, 444 S.E.2d 879, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1006, 115 S. Ct. 525, 130 L. Ed. 2d 429 (1994), 343 N.C. 516, 472 S.E.2d 23 (1996).

The victim's virginity or lack thereof does not fall within any of the four exceptions and is therefore an area prohibited from cross-examination by this rule. State v. Autry, 321 N.C. 392, 364 S.E.2d 341 (1988).

Although this rule did not operate as a shield to questions regarding medical records relating to victim's gonorrhea where defendant maintained that the sexual acts, if any, committed on the victim (and the resultant gonorrhea) were done by someone else, defendant's questions were properly excluded as irrelevant because the records, referring only to the victim's "partner," did not contradict anything testified to by the victim, nor did it suggest anything else that could be used to impeach her. State v. Thompson, 139 N.C. App. 299, 533 S.E.2d 834 (2000).

Evidence of prostitution does not necessarily counter the allegations of a witness as prostitutes may be victims of sexual offenses. State v. Fletcher, 125 N.C. App. 505, 481 S.E.2d 418 (1997), cert. denied, 346 N.C. 285, 487 S.E.2d 560 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 957, 118 S. Ct. 383, 139 L. Ed. 2d 299 (1997).

Prior Abuse of Child Not Admissible. — Absent some "opening of the door," evidence of prior abuse sought to be admitted solely to show child had prior knowledge of sexual matters was not admissible under this rule. State v. Bass, 121 N.C. App. 306, 465 S.E.2d 334 (1996).

Prosecutor Held Allowed to Comment on Purpose of the Rape Shield Statute. — The trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling the defendant's objection to the prosecutor's comment about the purpose of the Rape Shield Statute where the prosecutor attempted to explain that the statute was intended to insure that victims were not again "victimized" through inquiries about irrelevant sexual behavior, and the trial court immediately cautioned the jury to follow the court's instructions as to the law. State v. Herring, 322 N.C. 733, 370 S.E.2d 363 (1988).

Questions Excluded Where No Request for Hearing. — Trial court did not err by excluding questions defendant sought to ask the prosecutrix regarding her past sexual behavior; once the state opens the door into a victim's sexual activity, the defendant may request an in camera hearing, and in the absence of such a request, a fishing expedition into the victim's past sexual behavior is not permitted. State v. Fenn, 94 N.C. App. 127, 379 S.E.2d 715, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 548, 385 S.E.2d 504 (1989).

Cross-Examination of Defendant Concerning Defendant's In Camera Statements. — Contrary to defendant's position, this rule could not be utilized as a barrier to prevent cross-examination concerning critical inconsistencies in sworn testimony; therefore, the prosecution was properly permitted to cross-examine defendant concerning his prior inconsistent statements made at an in camera hearing. State v. Najewicz, 112 N.C. App. 280, 436 S.E.2d 132 (1993), cert. denied, 335 N.C. 362, 441 S.E.2d 130 (1994).

Exclusion of Evidence Upheld. — In prosecution in which defendant was convicted of taking indecent liberties with a minor, the trial court did not err by prohibiting defendant from cross-examining prosecutrix about her previous accusations of sexual misconduct against her father and stepfather. State v. Anthony, 89 N.C. App. 93, 365 S.E.2d 195 (1988).

The trial court did not commit reversible error in denying defendant's request to cross-examine the victim about her testimony that before she was raped she told defendant that she was a virgin, despite defendant's contention that the trial court's ruling prevented the correction of false testimony by the victim and was therefore fundamentally unfair and violative of his constitutional right to confront his accuser. State v. Autry, 321 N.C. 392, 364 S.E.2d 341 (1988).

Contention that because witness stated at trial that he thought the victim was a "nice person" and detective stated that witness had voiced a similar opinion during a recorded statement given to the police, certain portions of that recorded statement concerning the victim's prior sexual history should have been admitted into evidence was without merit. State v. McCrimmon, 89 N.C. App. 525, 366 S.E.2d 572, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 322 N.C. 609, 370 S.E.2d 253 (1988).

Trial court properly limited line of questioning whereby defense counsel attempted to question rape victim about an alleged violent incident with her boyfriend, which rape victim testified was unrelated to any sexual activity, as these questions were not relevant or admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Watkins, 89 N.C. App. 599, 366 S.E.2d 876, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 179, 373 S.E.2d 123 (1988).

Defendant's request to cross-examine the prosecuting witness in rape trial, based upon his speculation that she was motivated to accuse him of rape because she was pregnant by her boyfriend, did not fall under an exception in this rule; therefore, the trial court was correct in denying this line of questioning during cross-examination of the prosecuting witness. State v. Alverson, 91 N.C. App. 577, 372 S.E.2d 729 (1988).

Evidence that someone other than defendant sexually abused child two and a half years before the incident resulting in a rape charge against defendant was properly excluded as being irrelevant and confusing to the jury. State v. Holden, 106 N.C. App. 244, 416 S.E.2d 415, appeal dismissed, 332 N.C. 669, 424 S.E.2d 413 (1992).

Testimony was properly excluded where there was evidence of only one incident of the complainant exchanging sex for crack cocaine; there was not sufficient evidence that the complainant engaged in a pattern of exchanging sex for crack. State v. Ginyard, 122 N.C. App. 25, 468 S.E.2d 525 (1996).

Evidence of victim's alleged past sexual behavior was not the type of relevant evidence which could be offered, under this rule, for the purpose of showing that the acts charged were not committed by defendant. State v. Trogden, 135 N.C. App. 85, 519 S.E.2d 64 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 190, 541 S.E.2d 725 (1999).

Exclusion of Evidence Held Error. — In a trial for rape and sexual offense against a child victim, where the only physical evidence corroborating the victim's testimony of rape was possibly attributable to the acts of a man other than the defendant, namely, the defendant's adult son, exclusion of evidence about defendant's son's acts was prejudicial to the defendant in presenting his defense to the charge of rape, and necessitated a new trial. State v. Ollis, 318 N.C. 370, 348 S.E.2d 777 (1986).

Excluded testimony of 12-year-old rape complainant's grandmother that she observed complainant masturbate with a washcloth and with her fingers on several occasions provided an alternative explanation for the victim's physical condition, consistent with physician's testimony that repeated acts of intercourse, penetration or masturbation could create the degree of irritation that prosecutrix suffered, and should have been admitted as evidence relating to whether the rape occurred. State v. Wright, 98 N.C. App. 658, 392 S.E.2d 125 (1990).

Defendant's evidence, which consisted of a letter written by victim to her friend asking her to engage in sex, was evidence of conversation, not of a prior sexual act. Therefore, testimony in sexual abuse case concerning the letter was not deemed irrelevant by this rule and was improperly excluded on that basis. State v. Guthrie, 110 N.C. App. 91, 428 S.E.2d 853, cert. denied, 333 N.C. 793, 431 S.E.2d 28 (1993).

It was error to exclude testimony which would have tended to show that the prosecuting witness was not truthful when she said she had a sexual encounter with someone other than the defendants. State v. McCarroll, 336 N.C. 559, 445 S.E.2d 18 (1994).

Where the trial court erred by not allowing the defendant to question the complainant in the presence of the jury regarding the allegation of rape made five months earlier and subsequently withdrawn, defendant was entitled to a new trial because there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different. State v. Ginyard, 122 N.C. App. 25, 468 S.E.2d 525 (1996).

Error in the Face of Overwhelming Evidence to Convict. — Even if evidence of victim's alleged past sexual behavior was improperly excluded, the defendant failed to show, in view of the testimony of seven other juvenile sexual abuse victims, that a different result would have resulted from its inclusion. State v. Trogden, 135 N.C. App. 85, 519 S.E.2d 64 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 190, 541 S.E.2d 725 (1999).

Failure to Conduct In Camera Hearing Held Harmless. — Where all of the testimony complained of by defendant related to sexual behavior between complainant and defendant, even if it was assumed arguendo that the trial court erred by failing to conduct the required in camera hearing before admitting such testimony, the error was harmless. State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

Victim Not Prohibited from Willingly Testifying. — Neither this rule nor its predecessor statute, § 8-58.6, prohibited a rape victim from willingly testifying as to her lack of sexual involvement for purposes of corroboration. State v. Stanton, 319 N.C. 180, 353 S.E.2d 385 (1987).

Defendant could present evidence of previous acts of bondage between the complainant and defendant, sexual acts on a leather couch, complainant experiencing pain during previous acts of intercourse, a sexual act on a piano stool, and watching pornographic movies because it was evidence of sexual act pertinent to the defense that the complainant consented to the sexual act that was the basis of the charge. State v. Jenkins, 115 N.C. App. 520, 445 S.E.2d 622, stay granted pending appeal, 336 N.C. 784, 447 S.E.2d 435, cert. denied, temporary stay dissolved, 337 N.C. 804, 449 S.E.2d 752 (1994).

Applied in State v. Degree, 322 N.C. 302, 367 S.E.2d 679 (1988); State v. Norris, 101 N.C. App. 144, 398 S.E.2d 652 (1990); State v. Black, 111 N.C. App. 284, 432 S.E.2d 710 (1993); State v. Mustafa, 113 N.C. App. 240, 437 S.E.2d 906, cert. denied, 336 N.C. 613, 447 S.E.2d 409 (1994); State v. Graham, 118 N.C. App. 231, 454 S.E.2d 878 (1995).

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER § 8-58.6.

Editor's Note. — The cases below were decided under former § 8-58.6 and previous statutory provisions.

Codification of Rule of Relevance. — Former § 8-58.6 was nothing more than a codification of this jurisdiction's rule of relevance as that rule specifically applies to the past sexual behavior of rape victims. State v. Fortney, 301 N.C. 31, 269 S.E.2d 110 (1980).

Constitutionality. — Former § 8-58.6, referred to as the rape victim shield statute, did not violate a rape defendant's constitutional right to confront the witnesses against him by preventing him from automatically questioning the victim about her prior sexual experience, since (1) there is no constitutional right to ask a witness questions that are irrelevant, (2) the statute was primarily procedural in its impact and application and does not alter any of the defendant's substantive rights, and (3) there were valid policy reasons, aside from questions of relevance, which support the statute. State v. Fortney, 301 N.C. 31, 269 S.E.2d 110 (1980).

Former § 8-58.6 changed the rule of evidence in such a way that matters collateral to the issues on trial could not be introduced into evidence, and this change in the rule of evidence did not violate a defendant's constitutional right to cross-examine witnesses appearing against him. State v. Porter, 48 N.C. App. 565, 269 S.E.2d 266, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 301 N.C. 529, 273 S.E.2d 459 (1980).

Inferences of prior sexual activity by a rape victim with third persons, without more, are irrelevant to the defense of consent in a rape trial. State v. Fortney, 301 N.C. 31, 269 S.E.2d 110 (1980).

Evidence of Discussion Between Complainant and Defendant Held Inadmissible. — In a prosecution for rape, evidence of a discussion between complainant and defendant concerning complainant's sexual problems was not admissible, since such discussion did not constitute sexual behavior or activity between complainant and defendant. State v. Smith, 45 N.C. App. 501, 263 S.E.2d 371 (1980).

Evidence of Different Semen Stains on Victim's Clothing. — Former § 8-58.6 was not unconstitutionally applied to defendant when the trial court excluded evidence that three different semen stains were found on clothing worn by an alleged rape victim, since the inference raised by such evidence, i.e., that the victim had had sex with two persons other than defendant at some time prior to the sexual acts in question, was not probative of the victim's consent to those acts. State v. Fortney, 301 N.C. 31, 269 S.E.2d 110 (1980).

Evidence of Prosecutrix' Moral Environment Held Irrelevant Where Defendant Denied Act. — Whether the prosecutrix in a prosecution for second degree rape lived in an environment of sexual immorality or in a cloistered convent had no relevance to the issues in a case where defendant denied that any act of intercourse or other assault took place. State v. McLean, 294 N.C. 623, 242 S.E.2d 814 (1978), decided prior to the effective date of this section.

Decisions of Trial Court at Voir Dire Hearing Held Proper. — In a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape, the trial court did not err in refusing to permit defendant to testify at a voir dire hearing to determine whether testimony as to prior conduct of the prosecutrix was admissible as evidence of a pattern of sexual behavior closely resembling defendant's version of the alleged encounter, and in postponing its ruling on the admissibility of the testimony of prior conduct until after it had heard defendant's version of the events in question. State v. White, 48 N.C. App. 589, 269 S.E.2d 323 (1980).

Article 5.

Privileges.

Rule 501. General rule.

Except as otherwise required by the Constitution of the United States, the privileges of a witness, person, government, state, or political subdivision thereof shall be determined in accordance with the law of this State. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule differs from Fed. R. Evid. 501. After reviewing rules on privilege proposed by the Supreme Court, Congress rejected the proposal and substituted a rule that applies the common law of privileges in federal civil and criminal cases. In civil actions in which state law supplies the rule of decision, the state law on privileges applies.

The Uniform Rules of Evidence (1974) adopted the federal draft and several states have modeled their privilege laws on the federal draft. However, there is not a great deal of uniformity among the federal courts and various states with respect to privileges. Adoption of the federal draft would modify and delete privileges currently recognized in North Carolina and add other privileges currently not recognized in North Carolina.

Because of the extensive effort needed to clarify this confused area, the Committee decided not to draft new rules of privilege at this time but to continue the present statutory and common law system. See generally Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 54 et seq. (1982).

Article 6.

Witnesses.

Rule 601. General rule of competency; disqualification of witness.

(a) General rule. — Every person is competent to be a witness except as otherwise provided in these rules.

(b) Disqualification of witness in general. — A person is disqualified to testify as a witness when the court determines that he is (1) incapable of expressing himself concerning the matter as to be understood, either directly or through interpretation by one who can understand him, or (2) incapable of understanding the duty of a witness to tell the truth.

(c) Disqualification of interested persons. — Upon the trial of an action, or the hearing upon the merits of a special proceeding, a party or a person interested in the event, or a person from, through or under whom such a party or interested person derives his interest or title by assignment or otherwise, shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf or interest, or in behalf of the party succeeding to his title or interest, against the executor, administrator or survivor of a deceased person, or the committee of a lunatic, or a person deriving his title or interest from, through or under a deceased person or lunatic, by assignment or otherwise, concerning any oral communication between the witness and the deceased person or lunatic. However, this subdivision shall not apply when:

(1) The executor, administrator, survivor, committee or person so deriving title or interest is examined in his own behalf regarding the subject matter of the oral communication.

(2) The testimony of the lunatic or deceased person is given in evidence concerning the same transaction or communication.

(3) Evidence of the subject matter of the oral communication is offered by the executor, administrator, survivor, committee or person so deriving title or interest.

Nothing in this subdivision shall preclude testimony as to the identity of the operator of a motor vehicle in any case. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

Subdivision (a) is identical to the first sentence of Fed. R. Evid. 601. The second sentence of Fed. R. Evid. 601 concerns the application of state law in diversity cases and was omitted. Fed. R. Evid. 601 does not contain subdivision (b) on disqualification of a witness.

This rule eliminates all grounds of incompetency not specifically recognized in subdivision (b) or (c) or the succeeding rules of this Article.

At common law husband and wife were incompetent to testify in an action to which either was a party. However, by statute, each spouse has been competent to testify for or against the other in all civil actions and proceedings, with two rigidly defined exceptions. One exception makes one spouse incompetent to testify "for or against the other ... in any action or proceeding for or on account of criminal conversation... ." G.S. 8-56. With respect to this exception Professor Brandis states:

"It is hard to find a purpose except one based on notions of delicacy, and even this is frustrated by permitting the plaintiff husband to testify to his wife's improper relations with the defendant. Danger of collusion would seem to be no greater than in any other case, and the interest of the state in the marriage relation, which only doubtfully justifies extreme measures to prevent collusion in divorce litigation, is no excuse for a rule of incompetency in criminal conversation actions." Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 58, at 232, n. 28 (1982).

The other exception bars a spouse from testifying "for or against the other in any action or proceeding in consequence of adultery." G.S. 8-56. This exception is supplemented by G.S. 50-10 which provides that in divorce actions "neither the husband nor the wife shall be a competent witness to prove the adultery of the other, nor shall the admissions of either party be received as evidence to prove such fact." With respect to this exception, Professor Brandis notes that if the original purpose was to prevent collusion in divorce actions, "[I]t would seem that the prohibition should have been repealed when a relatively short period of separation was made a ground for divorce." Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 58, at 230, n. 20 (1982).

At common law the spouse of a criminal defendant was incompetent to testify. This incompetence was removed by G.S. 8-57 so far as testifying for the defendant was concerned. With respect to testimony against the other spouse, G.S. 8-57 left in force the common law rule of incompetence. In State v. Freeman, 302 N.C. 591 (1981), the court removed the incompetence to testify against the other spouse (except to the extent that it preserved the privilege against disclosure of confidential communications). During the 1983 Legislative Session G.S. 8-57 was rewritten and now provides that the spouse of the defendant is competent but not compellable to testify for the State against the defendant except that the spouse is both competent and compellable to testify in the following cases:

(1) In a prosecution for bigamy or criminal cohabitation, to prove the fact of marriage and facts tending to show the absence of divorce or annulment;

(2) In a prosecution for assaulting or communicating a threat to the other spouse;

(3) In a prosecution for trespass in or upon the separate lands or residence of the other spouse when living separate and apart from each other by mutual consent or court order;

(4) In a prosecution for abandonment of or failure to provide support for the other spouse or their child;

(5) In a prosecution of one spouse for any other criminal offense against the minor child of either spouse, including any illegitimate or adopted or foster child of either spouse.

The provisions of the previous G.S. 8-57 which provided that the spouse is a competent witness for the defendant in a criminal action and which also provided that a spouse was not compellable to disclose any confidential communication made by one to the other during their marriage are retained in the rewrite of the statute.

Upon adoption of Rule 601, G.S. 8-56 and 50-10 should be rewritten to make it clear that a husband or wife are competent to testify. The privilege against disclosure of confidential communications should be retained.

Subdivision (b) establishes a minimum standard for competency of a witness and is consistent with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 55 (1982).

Subdivision (c) represents a narrowing of the scope of G.S. 8-51 [now repealed], the Dead Man's Statute. The Dead Man's Statute will now be applicable only to oral communications between the party interested in the event and the deceased person or lunatic, rather than to "a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the deceased person or lunatic." Subdivision (c) preserves the exceptions already existing in G.S. 8-51 and adds subsection (3) which is a statement of the North Carolina case law having to do with one way in which "the door can be opened." See Carswell v. Greene, 253 N.C. 266, 270 (1960); Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 75, at 282, 283 (1982).

It was not the intent of the drafters of subdivision (c) to change any existing cases where the Dead Man's Statute has been held to be inapplicable, or where, because of the actions of one party or the other the protection of the rule has been held to be waived. For example, subdivision (c) would not change the results in Smith v. Perdue, 258 N.C. 686 (1963) or In re Chisman, 175 N.C. 420 (1918). The report of the Legislative Research Commission's Study Committee on the Laws of Evidence to the 1983 General Assembly did not contain subdivision (c), nor did the original versions of House Bill 96 and Senate Bill 43. This would have completely eliminated the Dead Man's Statute, which has been much criticized. In Professor Brandis' view, for example:

"[T]he statute has fostered more injustice than it has prevented and has led to an unholy waste of the time and ingenuity of judges and counsel. The situation calls for more than legislative tinkering. What is needed is repeal of the statute." Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 66 at 258, n. 62 (1982).

However, subdivision (c) was added to Rule 601 because of a concern that fraud and hardship could result if an interested party could testify concerning an oral communication with the deceased or lunatic.

G.S. 8-51 should be repealed after this rule is adopted.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Prior to the adoption of the North Carolina Rules of Evidence, the test for whether a witness was competent to testify was whether the witness understood the obligation of an oath or affirmation and had sufficient capacity to understand and relate facts which would assist the jury in reaching its decision. There was no fixed age limit below which a witness was incompetent to testify. The determination of the competency of a witness was entrusted to the discretion of the trial judge, and his determination was conclusive on appeal absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. State v. Gordon, 316 N.C. 497, 342 S.E.2d 509 (1986).

The purpose of this section is to exclude evidence of statements of deceased persons since those persons are not available to respond. In re Will of Hester, 84 N.C. App. 585, 353 S.E.2d 643, rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 738, 360 S.E.2d 801, rehearing denied, 321 N.C. 300, 362 S.E.2d 780 (1987).

This rule makes no change in the basic rules of competency as they have been stated by the North Carolina Supreme Court. In re Will of Leonard, 82 N.C. App. 646, 347 S.E.2d 478 (1986).

The general rule is that every person is competent to testify unless determined to be disqualified by the Rules of Evidence. State v. Rael, 321 N.C. 528, 364 S.E.2d 125 (1988); State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

Lack of understanding of the nature of an oath would have been grounds for disqualification of a person as a witness prior to the adoption of the Rules of Evidence; however, this rule does not mention the ability to understand the nature of an oath, but provides that a person may be disqualified as a witness when he is incapable of expressing himself concerning the matter or when he is incapable of understanding the duty of a witness to tell the truth. State v. Baker, 320 N.C. 104, 357 S.E.2d 340 (1987).

Subsection (b) establishes a minimum standard for competency of a witness. State v. DeLeonardo, 315 N.C. 762, 340 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

Subsection (c) of this rule is a compromise between the traditional "Dead Man's Act" and complete abolition. Hunt v. Hunt, 85 N.C. App. 484, 355 S.E.2d 519 (1987).

As to the applicability of subsection (c) of this rule, see Hunt v. Hunt, 85 N.C. App. 484, 355 S.E.2d 519 (1987).

Hearsay Defined. — Whenever the assertions of any person, other than that of the witness himself in his present testimony, is offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, the evidence so offered is hearsay. If offered for any other purpose, it is not hearsay. DeHart v. R/S Fin. Corp., 78 N.C. App. 93, 337 S.E.2d 94 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 375, 342 S.E.2d 893 (1986).

A witness' testimony is incompetent under the dead man's statute if the witness is a party or is interested in the event, his or her testimony relates to a personal communication with the decedent, the action is against a personal representative of the decedent or a person deriving title or an interest from, through, or under the decedent, or the witness is testifying in his or her own behalf. In re will of Hester, 84 N.C. App. 585, 353 S.E.2d 643, rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 738, 360 S.E.2d 801, rehearing denied, 321 N.C. 300, 362 S.E.2d 780 (1987).

The competency of a witness is determined at the time the witness is called upon to testify. In re Will of Leonard, 82 N.C. App. 646, 347 S.E.2d 478 (1986).

Defendant Who Was Competent to Testify Held Competent to Confess. — Where there was no dispute that the defendant was capable of expressing herself concerning the matter so that she could be understood, and there was no evidence that she was incapable of understanding the duty of a witness to tell the truth, the defendant would have been competent to testify; therefore, she was competent to confess. State v. Shytle, 323 N.C. 684, 374 S.E.2d 573 (1989).

Defendant was properly found competent to confess; therefore, even if she was not fully capable of appreciating the seriousness of the confession, this did not make it inadmissible if it otherwise had the indicia of reliability. State v. Shytle, 323 N.C. 684, 374 S.E.2d 573 (1989).

The test of competency is the capacity of the proposed witness to understand and to relate under oath the facts which will assist the jury in determining the truth with respect to the ultimate facts. In re Will of Leonard, 82 N.C. App. 646, 347 S.E.2d 478 (1986); State v. Jenkins, 83 N.C. App. 616, 351 S.E.2d 299 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 675, 356 S.E.2d 791 (1987).

Competency under both the new rules and the case law prior to their adoption is the capacity of the proposed witness to understand and relate, under the obligation of an oath, facts which will assist the jury in determining the truth of the matters as to which it is called upon to decide. State v. Hicks, 319 N.C. 84, 352 S.E.2d 424 (1987).

Subsection (b) of this rule does not ask how bright, how young, or how old a witness is. Instead, the question is: does the witness have the capacity to understand the difference between telling the truth and lying? State v. Davis, 106 N.C. App. 596, 418 S.E.2d 263 (1992), cert. denied, 333 N.C. 347, 426 S.E.2d 710 (1993).

The trial court applied an erroneous legal standard in denying respondent father's request to call the children as witnesses because the focus of the voir dire was incorrectly directed to the effect the children's testifying would have on their mental health, rather than upon the ability of the children to understand their obligation to tell the truth and to relate events which they may have seen, heard or experienced; rather than determining whether all or any of them were competent to testify under this section, the trial court disqualified them as being "unavailable," apparently relying upon the definition of "unavailability" contained in § 8C-1, Rule 804(a)(4), but the question of a potential witness' unavailability becomes relevant only with respect to the admissibility of his hearsay declarations. In re Faircloth, 137 N.C. App. 311, 527 S.E.2d 679 (2000).

Ambiguity or Vagueness of Witness on Voir Dire. — It matters not that some of a witness' answers during voir dire are ambiguous or vague or that a witness is unable to answer some of the questions which are put to him. Such performance is not unusual when the witness is a young child. The same applies for a mentally retarded individual. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

Effect of Drug Use on Competency. — A witness is not incompetent to testify on the basis of drug use alone, but only insofar as such use affects his ability to be understood or to respect the importance of veracity. State v. Fields, 315 N.C. 191, 337 S.E.2d 518 (1985).

Where the effect of drug use is concerned, the question is more properly one of the witness' credibility, not his competence. As such, it is in the jury's province to weigh his evidence, not in the court's to bar it. State v. Fields, 315 N.C. 191, 337 S.E.2d 518 (1985).

Competency of Child to Testify. — The competency of a child witness to testify at trial is not a proper subject for stipulation of counsel absent the trial judge's independent finding pursuant to personally examining or observing the child on voir dire. State v. Fearing, 315 N.C. 167, 337 S.E.2d 551 (1985).

There is no age below which one is incompetent, as a matter of law, to testify. State v. Jenkins, 83 N.C. App. 616, 351 S.E.2d 299 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 675, 356 S.E.2d 791 (1987); State v. Rael, 321 N.C. 528, 364 S.E.2d 125 (1988).

In sexual offense case, fact that six-year-old victim testified without objection that she was six years old and had one brother who was eight years old, named the school she attended, gave her teacher's name and where she lived, and said that she was going to tell the truth clearly supported the trial judge's conclusion that the six-year-old was competent to testify; thus, the trial judge's failure to conduct a voir dire examination to establish the child's competency was not prejudicial error. State v. Gilbert, 96 N.C. App. 363, 385 S.E.2d 815 (1989).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding the four year old victim competent to testify and allowing her to testify to sexual offenses allegedly occurring when she was two. State v. Ward, 118 N.C. App. 460, 455 S.E.2d 666 (1995).

Although child was two-and-a-half years at the time of her mother's murder she had the capacity to testify at age five. State v. Reeves, 337 N.C. 700, 448 S.E.2d 802 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1114, 115 S. Ct. 1971, 131 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1995).

It was not error to allow five year old child to testify to the jury while sitting on her stepmother's lap. State v. Reeves, 337 N.C. 700, 448 S.E.2d 802 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1114, 115 S. Ct. 1971, 131 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1995).

The court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that a mentally retarded rape victim was incapable of effectively communicating at trial and was therefore incompetent to testify. State v. Washington, 131 N.C. App. 156, 506 S.E.2d 283 (1998), cert. denied, 352 N.C. 362, 544 S.E.2d 562 (2000).

A six-year old sexual abuse victim was not competent to testify, where the trial court conducted an extensive voir dire of the child to determine his ability to tell the truth, and he consistently exhibited that he did not know the truth from falsehood. State v. Waddell, 130 N.C. App. 488, 504 S.E.2d 84 (1998), aff'd in part and modified in part, 351 N.C. 413, 527 S.E.2d 644 (2000).

Further findings were required because the juvenile court disqualified the four-year-old victim without making an appropriate inquiry into her competency to testify. A short voir dire based on five questions, only one of which she did not answer, was insufficient to allow the juvenile court to determine whether she was incapable of expressing herself concerning the matter or incapable of understanding the duty to tell the truth. State v. Pugh, 138 N.C. App. 60, 530 S.E.2d 328 (2000).

"Unavailable" Witness. — Where four year old victim's testimony was so limited and she was neither cooperative nor responsive, the victim was in fact "unavailable" for purposes of testifying at trial, and combining her de facto unavailability with the evidentiary importance of her previous statements, the hearsay testimony of the witness to these statements was "necessary" under the two-part hearsay test. State v. Ward, 118 N.C. App. 460, 455 S.E.2d 666 (1995).

Failure of Court to Personally Determine Competency of Child. — In a prosecution charging defendant with first-degree rape, incest, and taking indecent liberties with his three-year-old daughter, the trial judge's adoption of counsel's stipulation in concluding that the child victim was incompetent to testify, where he never personally examined or observed the child's demeanor in responding to questions during a voir dire examination, was reversible error, where highly prejudicial testimony was erroneously admitted pursuant to § 8C-1, Rules 803 (24) and 804 (b)(5) on the basis of this improperly based conclusion. State v. Fearing, 315 N.C. 167, 337 S.E.2d 551 (1985).

Despite child prosecutrix's lack of understanding of an obligation to tell the truth from a religious point of view, because she stated on direct examination an understanding of the difference between truth and lies and the importance of telling the truth, she exhibited a capacity to understand and relate facts and a comprehension of the difference between the truth and untruth. State v.

Weaver, 117 N.C. App. 434, 451 S.E.2d 15 (1994).

Effect of Mental Illness on Competency. — Even when the trial court finds that a witness is presently suffering from a mental illness, the witness may testify if he has sufficient understanding to apprehend his obligation to tell the truth and is able to give a correct account of the matters he seeks to testify about. In re Will of Leonard, 82 N.C. App. 646, 347 S.E.2d 478 (1986).

An interested party may testify to oral communications with a decedent or lunatic where his mental capacity is in issue, the interested party expresses an opinion thereon, and the basis for the opinion includes the communications and personal transactions testified to. Peterson v. Finger, 82 N.C. App. 743, 348 S.E.2d 351 (1986).

Failure to Make Findings as to Competency. — Trial court did not commit reversible error by failing to make findings of fact and more detailed conclusions concerning competency of child victim to testify. State v. Rael, 321 N.C. 528, 364 S.E.2d 125 (1988).

When the evidence clearly supports a conclusion that the witness is competent, the trial court's failure to conduct a voir dire inquiry and make specific findings and conclusions concerning the witness' competency is, at worst, harmless error. State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

Although the trial court did not make a specific finding as to whether a nine-year-old child was capable of expressing herself concerning matters as to which she was to testify, the findings made by the trial court and its conclusion that she was competent clearly establish that the trial court exercised its discretion in declaring her competent as a witness. State v. Eason, 328 N.C. 409, 402 S.E.2d 809 (1991).

Finding of Competency Upheld. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding 12-year-old child with a low IQ competent to testify, where the court considered and determined the overall competency of the witness as to his mental capacity and his age as these factors affected his ability to understand and relate under oath facts concerning the charge of first-degree sexual offense committed upon him. State v. DeLeonardo, 315 N.C. 762, 340 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

Refusal of the trial court to disqualify ten-year-old victim and her nine-year-old brother upheld. State v. Rhodes, 321 N.C. 102, 361 S.E.2d 578 (1987).

Trial court's exercise of its discretion in ruling that four-year-old child victim was competent to testify would be upheld. State v. Rael, 321 N.C. 528, 364 S.E.2d 125 (1988).

Testimony of four-year-old victim of rape held to meet the standards of this rule. State v. Everett, 98 N.C. App. 23, 390 S.E.2d 160, cert. denied, 326 N.C. 599, 393 S.E.2d 884 (1990), rev'd on other grounds, 328 N.C. 72, 399 S.E.2d 305 (1991).

Testimony of victim, who was one month short of her 14th birthday, observed by the trial court, fully supported the conclusion that she was not disqualified as a witness for failure to understand her duty to tell the truth as a witness. Assuming arguendo that the trial court erred in failing to conduct a voir dire examination of the witness and in failing to make specific findings and conclusions as to the witness' competency, any such error was harmless. State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

Finding of Incompetency Upheld. — The trial judge did not abuse her discretion by finding that witness was incapable of remembering, understanding, and relating to the jury matters of detail concerning holographic will in question, where the events and conversations which the witness would have testified about occurred during the period of 1979-1982, and where the witness could not remember having twice been involuntarily committed during that same period of time. In re Will of Leonard, 82 N.C. App. 646, 347 S.E.2d 478 (1986).

Where the trial judge conducted a competency hearing at which he was able to observe for himself a five-year-old's competence to be a witness, and the record showed that the child could not respond to simple questions about basic facts in her life, and was contradictory, uncommunicative, and frightened, there was no error in the court's finding the child incompetent to testify. State v. Deanes, 323 N.C. 508, 374 S.E.2d 249 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1101, 109 S. Ct. 2455, 104 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1989).

Discretion of Trial Court. — The determination that a witness is competent to testify is within the discretion of the trial court, which has the opportunity itself to observe the comportment of the witness. State v. Fields, 315 N.C. 191, 337 S.E.2d 518 (1985).

The competency of a witness is a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the trial judge in the light of his or her examination of the observation of the particular witness. State v. Jenkins, 83 N.C. App. 616, 351 S.E.2d 299 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 675, 356 S.E.2d 791 (1987); State v. Hicks, 319 N.C. 84, 352 S.E.2d 424 (1987); State v. Rael, 321 N.C. 528, 364 S.E.2d 125 (1988); State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

Appellate Review of Trial Court's Ruling. — Absent a showing that the trial court's ruling as to the competency of a witness could not have been the result of a reasoned decision, the ruling must stand on appeal. State v. Hicks, 319 N.C. 84, 352 S.E.2d 424 (1987); State v. Rael, 321 N.C. 528, 364 S.E.2d 125 (1988);

State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

II. PERSONS INTERESTED IN THE EVENT OF THE ACTION.

Dead Man's Statute. — The North Carolina "Dead Man's Statute", formerly § 8-51, has traditionally prohibited testimony involving both transactions and communications by individuals who would potentially benefit from the alleged statements of a deceased individual. In re Will of Lamparter, 348 N.C. 45, 497 S.E.2d 692 (1998).

The statute, or rule as now codified, is applicable only to oral communications between the party interested in the event and the deceased. In re Will of Lamparter, 348 N.C. 45, 497 S.E.2d 692 (1998).

The Dead Man's Statute was intended as a shield to protect against fraudulent and unfounded claims. In re Will of Lamparter, 348 N.C. 45, 497 S.E.2d 692 (1998).

Exception to the Dead Man's Statute. — With regard to a holographic will, an exception to the Dead Man's Statute has evolved which allows beneficiaries to testify as to the three material elements of a will: the testator's handwriting, the testator's signature, and what the testator considered to be his place for keeping valuable players. In re Will of Lamparter, 348 N.C. 45, 497 S.E.2d 692 (1998).

Legal or Pecuniary Interest in the Outcome. — To be disqualified as a witness interested in the event of the action, the witness must have a direct legal or pecuniary interest in the outcome of the litigation. In re Will of Hester, 84 N.C. App. 585, 353 S.E.2d 643, rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 738, 360 S.E.2d 801, rehearing denied, 321 N.C. 300, 362 S.E.2d 780 (1987).

A named executor is not a person interested in the event of the caveat proceeding within the meaning of the dead man's statute. In re Will of Hester, 84 N.C. App. 585, 353 S.E.2d 643, rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 738, 360 S.E.2d 801, rehearing denied, 321 N.C. 300, 362 S.E.2d 780 (1987).

The named executor's membership in a church, which was a beneficiary under the contested will, was too tenuous an interest to come within the meaning of the dead man's statute. In re Will of Hester, 84 N.C. App. 585, 353 S.E.2d 643, rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 738, 360 S.E.2d 801 (1987).

Propounders and Caveators. — In a proceeding for the probate of a will, both propounders and caveators are parties interested in the event within the meaning and spirit of subsection (c) of this section. In re Will of Hester, 84 N.C. App. 585, 353 S.E.2d 643, rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 738, 360 S.E.2d 801, rehearing denied, 321 N.C. 300, 362 S.E.2d 780 (1987); In re Will of Lamparter, 348 N.C. 45, 497 S.E.2d 692 (1998).

A beneficiary under a will may not testify as to communications with the deceased, but he or she may give an opinion, based on his or her own observations, as to the issue of the decedent's mental capacity at the time of the execution of the will and testify to transactions with the deceased as being a part of the basis of the opinion. In re Will of Hester, 84 N.C. App. 585, 353 S.E.2d 643, rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 738, 360 S.E.2d 801, rehearing denied, 321 N.C. 300, 362 S.E.2d 780 (1987).

Subsection (c) prohibits beneficiaries from testifying as to oral communications they had with the decedent about his intent to make a new will or with regard to specific bequests to be contained in that will. In re Will of Lamparter, 348 N.C. 45, 497 S.E.2d 692 (1998).

III. TESTIMONY NOT DISQUALIFIED.

Child Held Competent. — Where a child testified at the voir dire hearing that she knew what it meant to tell the truth and she knew it was bad to tell a lie, and she promised to tell just what had happened and nothing else, the fact that the child may not have told the truth in the past and was uncertain about some times and dates did not prevent her from being a competent witness. State v. Fletcher, 322 N.C. 415, 368 S.E.2d 633 (1988).

Where child's competency to testify was not determined until after her direct testimony, this was not prejudicial error; although the better practice would have been to conduct the voir dire examination and determine competency prior to the witness' testimony in order to avoid possible mistrial or prejudice from the admission of testimony by a witness later found incompetent, this witness was correctly determined to be competent during her testimony, and the timing of the competency finding was not prejudicial error. State v. Reynolds, 93 N.C. App. 552, 378 S.E.2d 557 (1989).

A child was competent to testify in a capital murder trial, where she was about five when she testified and she had been four when her mother was murdered, and although she said at the trial's outset that it was not good to tell the truth, she thereafter responded to the prosecutor that it was not true to say that her blue dress was red, and she also stated that she knew she would get a spanking if she did something wrong, that it was wrong to tell a lie, that she knew she was in court to talk about the defendant shooting her mother, and that she wanted to tell the truth. State v. Andrews, 131 N.C. App. 370, 507 S.E.2d 305 (1998).

The child victim-witness was competent to testify where it was demonstrated that she knew the difference between the truth and a lie; she indicated a capacity to understand and relate facts to the jury concerning defendant's assaults upon her; she displayed a comprehension of the difference between truth and untruth; and she affirmed her intention to tell the truth. State v. Ford, 136 N.C. App. 634, 525 S.E.2d 218 (2000).

Seven-Year-Old Child Competent to Testify. — Where the voir dire record revealed that although the seven-year-old child did not understand her obligation to tell the truth from a religious point of view and had no fear of certain retribution for mendacity, she knew the difference between the truth and a lie, indicated a capacity to understand and relate facts to the jury concerning the defendant's assaults upon her, a comprehension of the difference between truth and untruth, and her obligation to tell the truth, and affirmed her intention to do so, the victim's testimony met the standards of this rule. State v. Hicks, 319 N.C. App. 84, 352 S.E.2d 424 (1987).

Where defendant was charged with first degree rape of his seven-year-old daughter, although child answered she did not know what it meant to break a promise and did not know what an oath was, court did not abuse its discretion in finding child competent to testify, since child testified she knew what it meant to tell the truth and she knew the difference between right and wrong. State v. Green, 95 N.C. App. 558, 383 S.E.2d 419 (1989).

Four-Year-Old Child Competent to Testify. — Juvenile court did not commit plain error in admitting the testimony of a four-year-old victim, despite defendant's argument that the victim was incompetent to testify in that she did not clearly communicate her understanding of the obligation to tell the truth or illustrate that she had the capacity to understand and relate facts since she provided inaudible responses to questions; the victim's story was consistent and corroborated by the testimony of her mother, her brother, her doctor, and the investigating officer and the evidence sufficiently demonstrated the use of force. In re Clapp, 137 N.C. App. 14, 526 S.E.2d 689 (2000).

Retarded Victim Held Competent. — A mentally retarded 13-year-old victim, whose language abilities were that of a seven-year-old, read at a kindergarten level, and functioned socially and emotionally as a four- or five-year-old, and had a poor concept of time, but remembered details accurately, was held competent to testify. State v. Swann, 322 N.C. 666, 370 S.E.2d 533 (1988).

Witness of Low Mentality. — The fact that the court felt the witness was of low mentality did not disqualify her, and the record did not show that the witness was either incapable of expressing herself or incapable of understanding her duty to tell the truth such that the court should have disqualified her as a witness on its own motion. State v. Cox, 344 N.C. 184, 472 S.E.2d 760 (1996).

Defendant Suffering Brain Damage Held Competent to Confess and Stand Trial. — Defendant, who, as a result of a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the head and resulting surgery, had suffered damage to her brain which impaired her emotional response to situations, was competent to make a valid confession and stand trial; there was evidence that defendant had an I.Q. within the normal range and that she knew what the charges were and what could happen to her if she was convicted; if this did not worry or upset her because of her altered mental condition, it did not mean she did not understand these facts, and the court could find from this and other evidence that the defendant understood the nature and object of the proceedings against her and could comprehend her own situation in reference to the proceedings. State v. Shytle, 323 N.C. 684, 374 S.E.2d 573 (1989).

Past Mental Illness. — Although codefendant had a past history of mental illness, the denial of the motion to preclude the witness from testifying was not error; the trial judge considered the psychiatric report from hospital which stated the witness had the capacity to proceed and determined that, in light of the fact that defendant presented no other evidence and based on his own observation of the witness, the witness was competent to testify. State v. Liles, 324 N.C. 529, 379 S.E.2d 821 (1989).

Where executor does not qualify as a person interested in the outcome of the caveat proceeding, his testimony regarding oral communications with the decedent is competent. In re Will of Hester, 84 N.C. App. 585, 353 S.E.2d 643, rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 738, 360 S.E.2d 801, rehearing denied, 321 N.C. 300, 362 S.E.2d 780 (1987).

Where the executor drafted the will, his testimony regarding decedent's mental capacity was properly admitted for the purpose of showing the basis for his opinion that at the crucial time decedent had the requisite mental capacity. In re Will of Hester, 84 N.C. App. 585, 353 S.E.2d 643, rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 738, 360 S.E.2d 801, rehearing denied, 321 N.C. 300, 362 S.E.2d 780 (1987).

Waiver of Dead Man Protections. — Defendants, manufacturers of an amusement ride, waived any protection afforded by this rule when they deposed the mother of an injured boy regarding her conversation with the amusement ride operator who had since died, although they did not offer the testimony at trial. Breedlove v. Aerotrim, U.S.A., Inc., 142 N.C. App. 447, 543 S.E.2d 213 (2001).

IV. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER § 8-51.

A. General Consideration.

Editor's Note. — The cases below were decided under the former Dead Man's Statute, former § 8-51. 320 N.C. 738, 360 S.E.2d 801, rev'd on other grounds.

As to summary and analysis of former § 8-51, see Burnett v. Savage, 92 N.C. 10 (1885); Sumner v. Candler, 92 N.C. 634 (1885); Bunn v. Todd, 107 N.C. 266, 11 S.E. 1043 (1890); Seals v. Seals, 165 N.C. 409, 81 S.E. 613 (1914); Fidelity Bank v. Wysong & Miles Co., 177 N.C. 284, 98 S.E. 769 (1919).

Purpose of Section. — The mischief the statute was passed to prevent was the giving of testimony by a witness interested in the event, as to a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the deceased person whose lips are sealed in death. Abernathy v. Skidmore, 190 N.C. 66, 128 S.E. 475 (1925).

The purpose of this section was to exclude evidence of a personal transaction or communication between the witness and a person who by reason of death or lunacy cannot be heard. White v. Mitchell, 196 N.C. 89, 144 S.E. 526 (1928).

The reasoning behind this section was succinctly stated: Death having closed the mouth of one of the parties (with respect to a personal transaction or communication), it is but meet that the law should not permit the other to speak of those matters which are forbidden by the statute. Men quite often understand and interpret personal transactions and communications differently, at best; and the legislature, in its wisdom, has declared that an ex parte statement of such matters shall not be received in evidence. Carswell v. Greene, 253 N.C. 266, 116 S.E.2d 801 (1960); Whitley v. Redden, 5 N.C. App. 705, 169 S.E.2d 260 (1969), rev'd on other grounds, 276 N.C. 263, 171 S.E.2d 894 (1970).

The law that an interested survivor to a personal transaction or communication cannot testify with respect thereto against the dead man's estate was intended as a shield to protect against fraudulent and unfounded claims. It was not intended as a sword with which the estate may attack the survivor. Pearce v. Barham, 267 N.C. 707, 149 S.E.2d 22 (1966); Smith v. Dean, 2 N.C. App. 553, 163 S.E.2d 551 (1968).

The rule that evidence offered is admissible if it is competent for any purpose ought not to be used as a sword with which to attack a decedent's estate by destroying the express provisions of this section. Whitley v. Redden, 5 N.C. App. 705, 169 S.E.2d 260 (1969), rev'd on other grounds, 276 N.C. 263, 171 S.E.2d 894 (1970).

When Testimony Is Incompetent Under This Section. — This section did not render the testimony of a witness incompetent in any case unless these four questions required an affirmative answer: 1. Is the witness (a) a party to the action, or (b) a person interested in the event of the action, or (c) a person from, through or under whom such a party or interested person derives his interest or title? 2. Is the witness testifying (a) in his own behalf or interest, or (b) in behalf of the party succeeding to his title or interest? 3. Is the witness testifying against (a) the personal representative of a deceased person, or (b) the committee of a lunatic, or (c) a person deriving his title or interest from, through or under a deceased person or lunatic? 4. Does the testimony of the witness concern a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the deceased person or lunatic? Peek v. Shook, 233 N.C. 259, 63 S.E.2d 542 (1951); Brown v. Green, 3 N.C. App. 506, 165 S.E.2d 534 (1969); Ballard v. Lance, 6 N.C. App. 24, 169 S.E.2d 199 (1969); Etheridge v. Etheridge, 41 N.C. App. 39, 255 S.E.2d 735 (1979).

Even in instances where these four things concurred, the testimony of the witness was nevertheless admissible under an exception specified in the statute itself if the personal representative of the deceased person, or the committee of the lunatic, or the person deriving his title or interest from, through, or under the deceased person or lunatic, was examined in his own behalf, or the testimony of the deceased person or lunatic was given in evidence concerning the same transaction or communication. Peek v. Shook, 233 N.C. 259, 63 S.E.2d 542 (1951); Brown v. Green, 3 N.C. App. 506, 165 S.E.2d 534 (1969).

The testimony of a witness was incompetent under the provisions of this statute when it appeared (1) that such witness was a party, or interested in the event, (2) that his testimony related to a personal transaction or communication with the deceased person, (3) that the action was against the personal representative of the deceased or a person deriving title or interest from, through or under the deceased, and (4) that the witness was testifying in his own behalf or interest. Collins v. Covert, 246 N.C. 303, 98 S.E.2d 26 (1957); Godwin v. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., 259 N.C. 520, 131 S.E.2d 456 (1963).

Reasons for Exclusion. — The exclusion of such testimony rested not merely upon the ground that the dead man could not have a fair showing, but upon the broader and more practical ground that the other party to the action had no chance by the oath of the relevant witness to reply to the oath of the party to the action. In re Will of Mann, 192 N.C. 248, 134 S.E. 649 (1926).

Courts were not disposed to extend the disqualification of a witness under this section to those not included in its express terms. Sanderson v. Paul, 235 N.C. 56, 69 S.E.2d 156 (1952); Brown v. Whitley, 12 N.C. App. 306, 183 S.E.2d 258 (1971).

The provisions of this section could be waived by the adverse party. Andrews v. Smith, 198 N.C. 34, 150 S.E. 670 (1929).

Where an administrator brought proceedings under former § 1-569 et seq., to examine a defendant to discover assets of the estate of the deceased, the administrator waived the provisions of this section and the testimony thus taken could be introduced by the defendant in his own behalf. Andrews v. Smith, 198 N.C. 34, 150 S.E. 670 (1929).

If the plaintiffs at a former trial called the defendant as an adverse witness, examined her in detail about her relations with deceased, such examination would seem to be a waiver of this section and would open the door for the defendant to testify in another trial in respect to the matters about which the plaintiffs examined her. Hayes v. Ricard, 244 N.C. 313, 93 S.E.2d 540 (1956).

Where a party claiming under a deceased person examined the attorney for the deceased in respect to the execution and delivery of deeds to the land in controversy and the consideration therefor, such examination constituted a waiver of this section in respect to communications or transactions with decedent, and the other party was entitled to cross-examine the attorney as to such transactions. However, the waiver did not apply to other and independent transactions. Hayes v. Ricard, 244 N.C. 313, 93 S.E.2d 540 (1956).

Where the plaintiffs adversely examined the defendant for the purpose of obtaining evidence for use in the trial as provided in former §§ 1-568.1 through 1-568.16, that examination was a waiver of the protection afforded by this section to the extent that either party might use it upon the trial. Hayes v. Ricard, 244 N.C. 313, 93 S.E.2d 540 (1956).

But adverse examinations of defendant in regard to transactions with decedent, which examinations were taken in prior actions nonsuited, did not operate as a waiver of this section so as to render competent defendant's testimony in subsequent trials in regard to such transactions. McCurdy v. Ashley, 259 N.C. 619, 131 S.E.2d 321 (1963).

Where an action to recover for injuries to one passenger was consolidated with two actions for wrongful deaths of two other passengers against the same defendant, the admission of testimony of plaintiff passenger in regard to a transaction between defendant and one of the deceased passengers did not constitute a waiver of this section in regard to the two actions for wrongful death. McCurdy v. Ashley, 259 N.C. 619, 131 S.E.2d 321 (1963).

Under certain circumstances the personal representative could waive the protection afforded by this section, and when this is done, it is frequently referred to as "opening the door" for the testimony of the opposing party or interested survivor. Smith v. Dean, 2 N.C. App. 553, 163 S.E.2d 551 (1968).

Province of Court to Decide What Testimony May "Come In". — When a personal representative "opens the door" by testifying to a transaction, it is not in his province, but that of the court, to decide what testimony favorable to the adverse party may "come in." Mansfield v. Wade, 208 N.C. 790, 182 S.E. 475 (1935).

This section applied to actions in tort as well as actions on contract. Boyd v. Williams, 207 N.C. 30, 175 S.E. 832 (1934). See Hardison v. Gregory, 242 N.C. 324, 88 S.E.2d 96 (1955).

This section prohibited the surviving party from testifying in his own behalf with respect to personal transactions and communications between him and a deceased person in an action in which the survivor seeks to establish a claim, either in contract or in tort, against the estate of the deceased. Carswell v. Greene, 253 N.C. 266, 116 S.E.2d 801 (1960).

Itemized and Verified Accounts. — Section 8-45, relating to itemized and verified accounts, was subordinate to this section. See William M. Lloyd & Co. v. Poythress, 185 N.C. 180, 116 S.E. 584 (1923).

Testimony Not Barred by Section. — Where a widow was entitled during her widowhood to the profits on the land devised by her deceased husband, but not to his moneys commingled therewith in a deposit in a bank, and she died devising the total amount of the deposit: Held, testimony as to her receipt of the money from the crops was competent, not falling within the provisions of this section, and did not affect the title to other money owned by her husband at his death and given to her for life by his will. White v. Mitchell, 196 N.C. 89, 144 S.E. 526 (1928).

Same — Conversations with Living Persons. — Where the widow under the terms of the will of her husband could only dispose of the moneys in the bank to her credit, and not such as could at her death pass to the remainderman under his will, it could be shown by disinterested witnesses as to what part passed under the widow's will, as not objectionable evidence under this section based upon conversations with other living parties interested under the husband's will. White v. Mitchell, 196 N.C. 89, 144 S.E. 526 (1928).

Testimony of conversations with party to action wherein witness related statements of decedent is not in contravention of this section. Allen v. Allen, 213 N.C. 264, 195 S.E. 801 (1938).

Same — Rehearsal of Conversation. — Direct evidence of a conversation and understanding with the plaintiff's testator was, under this section, incompetent, but a rehearsal of that conversation was a part of the res gestae, and admissible. Gilmer v. McNairy, 69 N.C. 335 (1873).

Same — Personal letters written by decedent to his granddaughter, one of the propounders of his will, were held admissible over the objection that they constituted personal transactions with the deceased which were prohibited by the "dead man's statute." In re Will of McDowell, 230 N.C. 259, 52 S.E.2d 807 (1949).

Same — Testimony to Prove Time When Act Was Done. — Where the act of the widow's execution of dissent to the will and the delivery of such dissent by her to the court was established by evidence, an interested party could testify, after the death of the widow, as to the time she saw the widow file the dissent in the clerk's office, the testimony being offered not for the purpose of proving the widow's execution of the dissent but only to establish that the act was done within the time allowed. Philbrick v. Young, 255 N.C. 737, 122 S.E.2d 725 (1961).

Same — Record Evidence. — While testimony as to personal transactions with the deceased payee of a note would be incompetent to establish defenses to the note over the objection of the personal representative of the payee, record evidence tending to establish such defenses was not precluded by this section. Flippin v. Lindsey, 221 N.C. 30, 18 S.E.2d 824 (1942).

The death certificate of the daughter intestate recorded no transaction between the child's mother and the doctor, and even had that been the case, record evidence did not fall within the ban of this section. Spillman v. Forsyth Mem. Hosp., 30 N.C. App. 406, 227 S.E.2d 292 (1976).

Same — Testimony Competent as to Only One of Two Defendants Was Admissible. — When there was more than one defendant, testimony which was competent as to one party should not have been excluded by virtue of this section because it was not competent against another party in the suit. Lamm v. Gardner, 250 N.C. 540, 108 S.E.2d 847 (1959); Brown v. Whitley, 12 N.C. App. 306, 183 S.E.2d 258 (1971).

Instruction as to Use of Section Cannot Be Obtained by Declaratory Judgment. — In an action instituted under the Declaratory Judgment Act the court had no authority to instruct a litigant whether to take advantage of the provision of this section, upon the hearing of the cause upon its merits, since such instructions upon a question of procedure do not fall within the purview of the act. Redmond v. Farthing, 217 N.C. 678, 9 S.E.2d 405 (1940).

B. Parties to the Action.

A member of the board of county commissioners was not a competent witness as to transactions with the defendant's intestate in a suit by the board. Commissioners of Forsyth v. Lash, 89 N.C. 159 (1883).

A principal debtor, who was a party to an action to foreclose a mortgage given by his sureties as security for the loan, was an incompetent witness to a contract with the deceased creditor. Benedict v. Jones, 129 N.C. 475, 40 S.E. 223 (1901).

A defendant executor could not testify concerning a land transaction between himself and the intestate in a suit brought by creditors of the estate to subject the land alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed to the defendant by the intestate. State ex rel. Bryant & Bro. v.

Morris, 69 N.C. 444 (1873); Grier v. Cagle, 87 N.C. 377 (1882).

Guardian. — Testimony of a guardian, suing an executor to establish a gift made by testatrix to the guardian's ward, as to what occurred between the testatrix and executor, was admissible as against the objection that the guardian could not testify as to any communication or transaction between himself and testatrix. Zollicoffer v. Zollicoffer, 168 N.C. 326, 84 S.E. 349 (1915).

A "next friend" is not a party to the suit. But his liability for costs renders him incompetent to testify to the transactions or conversations here under consideration. Mason v. McCormick, 75 N.C. 263 (1876). See McLeary v. Norment, 84 N.C. 235 (1881).

Original Beneficiary of Life Insurance Policy. — In an action by the person substituted as beneficiary in a policy of life insurance to recover the policy and proceeds as against the original beneficiary after the death of the insured, the original beneficiary was precluded by this section from testifying to the effect that she had the policy in her possession and was holding same as security for a loan to insured and for premiums paid by her on the policy, since such testimony tends to establish an oral assignment of the policy to her as security, she being a party to the action and having a direct pecuniary interest in the outcome. Harrison v. Winstead, 251 N.C. 113, 110 S.E.2d 903 (1959).

Parties in Probate of Will. — In a proceeding for the probate of a will, both propounders and caveators were parties interested in the event within the meaning and spirit of this section. In re Will of Brown, 194 N.C. 583, 140 S.E. 192 (1927).

Under this section the beneficiary under a will could not testify to transactions and communications with the deceased, but he could in proceedings of devisavit vel non give his opinion, based on his own observations, as to the mental incapacity of the deceased at the time of the execution of the writing propounded, and then testify to personal transactions he had with him as being a part of the basis of his opinion, when evidence of this character was properly so confined upon the trial by instructions or otherwise, the weight and credibility being for the jury to determine. In re Will of Brown, 194 N.C. 583, 140 S.E. 192 (1927).

A caveator or a propounder in a will contest was a "party" to whom the prohibitions and exceptions of this section apply. In re Will of Ricks, 292 N.C. 28, 231 S.E.2d 856 (1977).

Partner. — Where one partner was a party to the action and was interested in the event of the action, and the other partner was dead, because his lips were sealed in death the living partner was incompetent to testify in his own behalf to any transaction or communication between himself and the intestate concerning his relationship to the copartnership and to relate certain conversations he had with deceased about the assets of the partnership. Wingler v. Miller, 223 N.C. 15, 25 S.E.2d 160 (1943).

In a suit by distributees to recover from administrators and surviving partner money found on the person of decedent and claimed by his partner, testimony of the partner, concerning his relations to the partnership and the relation of certain conversations he had with deceased about the assets of the partnership, was clearly inadmissible under this section. Wingler v. Miller, 223 N.C. 15, 25 S.E.2d 160 (1943).

Party Acting in Corporate Capacity. — One who is a party to a suit, though in his corporate capacity, was not competent to testify as to a transaction with a deceased person. Commissioners of Forsyth v. Lash, 89 N.C. 159 (1883).

Payee of Promissory Note. — The Dead Man's Statute was clearly applicable to the testimony of a payee of a promissory note. In re Cooke, 37 N.C. App. 575, 246 S.E.2d 801 (1978).

Surviving Occupant of Car. — Testimony of a surviving occupant in a car to the effect that he was not driving but that one of the other occupants killed in the accident was driving at the time of the accident came within the provisions of this section in actions against the surviving occupant for wrongful death. McCurdy v. Ashley, 259 N.C. 619, 131 S.E.2d 321 (1963).

Surviving Stockholders. — In an action by a corporation and the surviving principal stockholders against the widow of a deceased principal stockholder, involving the liability of the corporation under its contract for the purchase of the stock of the deceased stockholder, the surviving stockholders were incompetent to testify as to conversations between the stockholders modifying the stock purchase agreement in favor of the corporation or the surviving stockholders. Collins v. Covert, 246 N.C. 303, 98 S.E.2d 26 (1957).

Decedent's Tenant. — In an action for goods sold and delivered to the intestate, a tenant of the intestate who was furnished with goods from the plaintiff's store, and who settled with the intestate, was competent to testify in the plaintiff's behalf as to the intestate's delivery to him of the merchandise because the witness was not a party to the action. Sorrell v. McGhee, 178 N.C. 279, 100 S.E. 434 (1919).

Surviving tenant by the entirety was the "survivor of a deceased person" within the meaning of this section in an action which attacked the validity of a deed by which the tenancy by the entirety was created. Gribble v. Gribble, 25 N.C. App. 366, 213 S.E.2d 376, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 465, 215 S.E.2d 623 (1975).

Party May Testify as to Transaction with

Deceased Agent of Opponent. — This section did not render an interested witness incompetent to testify to a transaction between himself and a deceased agent of his opponent. Bailey v. Westmoreland, 251 N.C. 843, 112 S.E.2d 517 (1960); Tharpe v. Newman, 257 N.C. 71, 125 S.E.2d 315 (1962).

Hence, where a note was executed to two payees jointly and one of them thereafter acquired the interest of the other and sued the makers of the note, after the death of the other payee, testimony of the maker as to a contemporaneous agreement with the deceased payee, acting for himself and as agent of the other payee, that the note should not become a binding obligation until the happening of a stated contingency, was competent as to plaintiff payee's original share of the note, even though it was incompetent as to the share acquired by him as assignee of the deceased payee. Bailey v. Westmoreland, 251 N.C. 843, 112 S.E.2d 517 (1960).

But This Rule Applies Only Where Agent Was Not Personally Liable. — The rule that this section did not render an interested witness incompetent to testify to a transaction between himself and a deceased agent of his opponent was applied only in factual situations where the deceased agent was not personally liable in respect of the alleged cause of action. It had no application where the liability, if any, of the principal rested solely on the alleged tortious acts of the agent under the doctrine of respondeat superior. Tharpe v. Newman, 257 N.C. 71, 125 S.E.2d 315 (1962).

Testimony of the surviving occupant of car tending to show that the other occupant, killed in the accident, was driving at that time was incompetent in an action by the survivor against the owner of the vehicle sought to be held liable under the doctrine of agency, since the owner, after having paid such liability, would have had a right of action against the estate of the deceased, and therefore the transaction came within the spirit if not the letter of this section. Tharpe v. Newman, 257 N.C. 71, 125 S.E.2d 315 (1962).

Testimony by Agent of Adverse Party Admissible. — In an action on an insurance policy by the son of the deceased owner, testimony of insurer's agent that prior to his death the owner directed him to transfer the policy to the owner's son because the owner was giving the land to his son was not precluded by this section. King v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., 258 N.C. 432, 128 S.E.2d 849 (1963).

Action to Enforce Agreement to Bequeath Property in Consideration of Services. — Where the plaintiff, in her own right and as administratrix of her mother, sought to recover upon an alleged contract made by her mother and another person now deceased, under which her mother performed services to such other person under his agreement that he would devise and bequeath to her all of his property, it was incompetent for the plaintiff to testify to communications or transactions between her mother and such other person tending to establish her demand, for she was a party interested, within the contemplation of the statute. Brown v. Adams, 174 N.C. 490, 93 S.E. 989 (1917).

C. Persons Interested in the Event of the Action.

Section Not Confined to Parties to Action. — The provisions of this section were not confined to the parties to the action, but extended to testimony of a witness interested in the result of the action. Honeycutt v. Burleson, 198 N.C. 37, 150 S.E. 634 (1929).

Test for Disqualifying Interest. — To determine when such interests existed as to render a person incompetent, the following rule was applied: The true test of the competency of a witness is whether he bears such a relation to the controversy that the verdict and judgment in the case may be used against him as a party in another action; if not, he is not disqualified. Jones v. Emory, 115 N.C. 158, 20 S.E. 206 (1894); Henderson v. McLain, 146 N.C. 329, 59 S.E. 873 (1907).

Nature of Interest Involved. — This section does not disqualify every witness who, in the broadest sense of the term, is interested in the event of the action, but only such as have a direct and substantial or a direct legal or pecuniary interest in the result. Jones v. Emory, 115 N.C. 158, 20 S.E. 206 (1894); Helsabeck v. Doub, 167 N.C. 205, 83 S.E. 241 (1914); In re Gorham, 177 N.C. 271, 98 S.E. 717 (1919); Allen v. Allen, 213 N.C. 264, 195 S.E. 801 (1938); Sanderson v. Paul, 235 N.C. 56, 69 S.E.2d 156 (1952).

It follows that a mere sentimental interest will not suffice. Sutton v. Walters, 118 N.C. 495, 24 S.E. 357 (1896); Sanderson v. Paul, 235 N.C. 56, 69 S.E.2d 156 (1952).

And it has been held that relationship of the parties alone does not constitute the direct, legal, pecuniary interest required. See Sutton v. Walters, 118 N.C. 495, 24 S.E. 357 (1896); Porter v. White, 128 N.C. 42, 38 S.E. 24 (1901); Bennett v. Best, 142 N.C. 168, 55 S.E. 84 (1906); Walston v. Lowry, 212 N.C. 23, 192 S.E. 877 (1937).

To be disqualified as a "person interested in the event" the witness must have a direct legal or pecuniary interest in the outcome of the litigation. Brown v. Whitley, 12 N.C. App. 306, 183 S.E.2d 258 (1971).

Present Interest. — In Isler v. Dewey, 67 N.C. 93 (1872), the court intimates that the interest necessary to disqualify is a present interest; that is, one retained by the party at the time of examination. In reaching this conclusion it was said: "Any other construction would make a statute, professedly for the removal of the incompetency of witnesses, the means of introducing new incompetencies unknown to the common law and opposed to its principles." See Sanderson v. Paul, 235 N.C. 56, 69 S.E.2d 156 (1952).

Originally this section disqualified a fourth class of persons, i. e. those who have had an interest in the subject matter of the suit, but whose interest has since ceased. This disqualification did not exist at common law, and was struck out of this section of the Code of 1883, except in the cases in which such persons still came under the third class of disqualified persons above stated. Bunn v. Todd, 107 N.C. 266, 11 S.E. 1043 (1890).

Witness Having Dual or Alternative Interest. — To determine the competency of a witness who has a dual or alternative interest in the event of the action, the court must decide which of the two interests was the more immediately valuable. Sanderson v. Paul, 235 N.C. 56, 69 S.E.2d 156 (1952).

The competency of the interested witness is limited to the same transaction as the one testified about by the administrator or the deceased, or elicited from the witness himself by the administrator. Smith v. Dean, 2 N.C. App. 553, 163 S.E.2d 551 (1968).

Agent of Payee of Note. — Testimony of an endorser of a note, as to conversations with the payee's agent, now dead, showing the consideration which induced the endorsement, was not excluded under this section, the agent not being a party interested in the event within the meaning of the statute for, although the agent guaranteed all notes to the payee, if there was a failure of consideration the payee could hold neither of the guarantors and had the endorser been liable he could not have recovered from the agent. American Agrl. Chem. Co. v. Griffin, 204 N.C. 559, 169 S.E. 152 (1933).

Agent of Third Person in Transaction with Deceased. — Assuming that a collision between two motor vehicles was a "transaction" within the meaning of this section, then one who has acted as an agent for a third person in a transaction with a person since deceased was ordinarily competent to testify to conversations or transactions of the decedent. Brown v. Whitley, 12 N.C. App. 306, 183 S.E.2d 258 (1971).

Attorney Formerly Holding Note for Collection. — An attorney formerly holding a note for collection was not an interested party in an action on the note within the meaning of this section, prohibiting testimony by interested parties as to transactions with or declarations of a decedent. Vannoy v. Stafford, 209 N.C. 748, 184 S.E. 482 (1936).

Brother-in-Law of Decedent in Action to Recover Embezzled Funds. — The testimony of a witness, in an action against the administrator of his deceased brother-in-law to recover certain sums obtained by the deceased on two vouchers made to a fictitious firm and embezzled by him, that he collected the vouchers for the deceased through his bank and sent the proceeds to the deceased, was not incompetent as falling within the provisions of this section, the witness not being a party in interest and having no direct, legal or pecuniary interest in the event of the action. Fort Worth & D.C. Ry. v. Hegwood, 198 N.C. 309, 151 S.E. 641 (1930).

Depositor's Son in Action to Recover Moneys Deposited. — In an action by the administrator of a deceased person against a bank to recover moneys deposited by the intestate, resisted on the ground that the deceased had authorized the bank to pay the money upon his son's checks, the latter being present at the time, the son was interested in the event since he would be liable to the plaintiff if he was not authorized to draw the checks and possibly to the defendant, and his testimony was incompetent under this section, and the fact that a third person was present at the time of the transaction and testified at the trial did not affect this result. Donoho v. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., 198 N.C. 765, 153 S.E. 451 (1930).

Draftsman of Deed Sought to Be Reformed. — In an action for reformation of a deed to a county board of education for mistake of the draftsman in failing to insert a reversionary clause therein in accordance with the agreement between the grantors and grantee, testimony of the draftsman relating to declarations of a deceased member of the board and of the superintendent of schools, tending to show that it was agreed that the reversionary clause should be inserted, was held not precluded by this section, the draftsman not being a party interested in the event as contemplated by the statute. Ollis v. Board of Educ., 210 N.C. 489, 187 S.E. 772 (1936).

Holder of Insurance Policy. — A policy holder in a mutual life insurance company is not disqualified as "interested in the event of the action" to testify for the company suing to cancel another policy. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Leaksville Woolen Mills, 172 N.C. 534, 90 S.E. 574 (1916). See also Gwaltney v. Provident Sav. Life Assurance Soc'y, 132 N.C. 925, 44 S.E. 659 (1903); Gwaltney v. Provident Sav. Life Assurance Soc'y, 134 N.C. 552, 47 S.E. 122 (1904).

Husband and Wife. — A witness may have a very large pecuniary interest in fact, as the interest of a wife in an important lawsuit to which her husband is a party, and still be competent, while a comparatively slight legal interest will disqualify the witness. Rape v. Lyerly, 287 N.C. 601, 215 S.E.2d 737 (1975).

The prohibition against the testimony of a "person interested in the event" extends only to those having a "direct legal or pecuniary interest," and not to the sentimental interest the husband or wife would naturally have in the lawsuit of the other. Burton v. Styers, 210 N.C. 230, 186 S.E. 248 (1936).

Where husband and wife instituted separate suits to recover, each respectively, for personal services rendered by them to defendant's testate, it was held that each was competent to testify for the other, since neither had a direct pecuniary interest in the action of the other, and was not therefore an interested party in the other's action within the meaning of this section, the testimony not being as to a transaction between the witnesses and the deceased, but between a third party and deceased. Burton v. Styers, 210 N.C. 230, 186 S.E. 248 (1936).

Interest of Wife in Compensation Due Husband. — In an action against an administrator to recover the value of services which the plaintiff alleged he has rendered the deceased, the wife of the plaintiff had no interest in the event which would bar her testimony as to a transaction with the deceased, and it was competent for her to testify to the contract relied upon by her husband the plaintiff. Helsabeck v. Doub, 167 N.C. 205, 83 S.E. 241 (1914). See Price v. Askins, 212 N.C. 583, 194 S.E. 284 (1937).

Where plaintiffs acquired ownership as issue of devisee, devisee's husband had no pecuniary legal interest in plaintiffs' real property; therefore, his testimony as to the decedent's devise was not incompetent under this section. Rape v. Lyerly, 287 N.C. 601, 215 S.E.2d 737 (1975).

Husband as Interested Party in Check Given Wife. — When a check made payable to one of the intestate's daughters and signed by the intestate was introduced in evidence to show an advancement, the daughter's husband was held competent under this section to testify over objection that the check was given his wife as a wedding present, he having no interest in the event of the action. Likewise another daughter was permitted to testify for her sister, the transaction testified to not being between the witness and deceased, but between the witness's sister and deceased father. Vannoy v. Green, 206 N.C. 80, 173 S.E. 275 (1934).

Husband as Interested Party in Deed Drawn by Wife. — The husband was an interested witness in the event of the action, though not a party, when a trust deed made by his deceased wife was being attacked for the want of his joining therein; and upon the question of abandonment, his evidence, to the effect that his wife said to him, she would give him a horse if he would leave, was incompetent. The testimony of the daughter that she heard the conversation to that effect would be the "indirect testimony of an interested witness as to a transaction or communication with deceased," and also incompetent. Whitty v. Barham, 147 N.C. 479, 61 S.E. 372 (1908).

Husband's Interest in Wife's Action to Recover for Services. — A husband was not disqualified by interest from testifying in his wife's behalf in her action to recover for services rendered a deceased person, the possibilities of his being benefited by her will or in case of her intestacy being too remote. McCurry v. Purgason, 170 N.C. 463, 87 S.E. 244 (1915).

Husband of Decedent Grantee. — Where the blind husband of a grantee, in a deed reserving a life estate in the grantor, was present and heard the grantor acknowledge its execution and delivery, he was a competent witness to prove such execution and delivery, his wife having died prior to the grantor and the title therefore being vested in her son, in that his evidence disclosed no personal transaction or communication and he was not a party in interest within this section. Turlington v. Neighbors, 222 N.C. 694, 24 S.E.2d 648 (1943).

Husband of Donee of Gift May Testify as to Declarations Made by Donor to Donee. — The husband of the donee of a gift could testify as to directions given and declarations made by the donor to the donee, since the testimony was not in behalf of the husband or in behalf of a party succeeding to his interest nor as to a transaction or communication between him and the deceased the testimony being as to a transaction between donor and donee. Scottish Bank v. Atkinson, 245 N.C. 563, 96 S.E.2d 837 (1957).

Widower Has No Interest in Division of Wife's Lands Among Children. — When a husband and wife, each owning certain lands, entered into an agreement to pool their lands for division among their children, and the wife died intestate before her lands were deeded in accordance with the agreement, the husband had a life estate in her lands as tenant by the curtesy regardless of the disposition of the lands among the children, and therefore had no direct pecuniary interest in an action by the children to whom deeds were not executed to declare the heirs of another child estopped to assert an interest in the lands of their mother, and his testimony of the agreement with his wife was not precluded by this section. Coward v. Coward, 216 N.C. 506, 5 S.E.2d 537 (1939).

The interest of one who temporarily held the title to the lands in dispute prior to the defendant was a sufficient interest in the event to disqualify his testimony as to a conversation or transaction with the plaintiff's deceased predecessor in title. Dill-Cramer-Truitt Corp. v. Downs, 201 N.C. 478, 160 S.E. 492 (1931).

A partner in intestate's firm could not testify as to transactions or communications with intestate in an action by brokers against the estate on a claim for commissions and advancements. Fenner v. Tucker, 213 N.C. 419, 196 S.E. 357 (1938).

Nonmember of Partnership. — Where the defendant's liability depended upon whether he was a member of the defendant partnership at the time the firm contracted a debt, which was the subject of the action, with the plaintiff who had since died and whose administrator had been made a party to the action, a witness who was not a member of the firm was not such person interested in the result as would exclude his direct testimony, under the provisions of this section as to the payment to his own knowledge by the deceased of the partnership debts. Herring v. Ipock, 187 N.C. 459, 121 S.E. 758 (1924).

Sheriff in Action by Deputy. — A deputy collected a sum of money on account of taxes and deposited the same with G. with instructions to pay it over to the sheriff, which was not done, and the deputy was afterwards required to pay the sheriff the sum so collected; it was held, in an action to recover the amount, brought by the deputy against the administrator of G., that the sheriff had no interest in the event of the action, and was a competent witness under this section. Allen v. Gilkey, 86 N.C. 64 (1882).

Stockholder's Interest in Recovery on Contract of Sale. — Where defendant's intestate made two separate contracts with the holders of stock in a corporation to purchase their respective holdings, in an action by one of the stockholders to recover on the contract of sale the other testified that he had no claim against the estate on his contract. It was held that the witness was not interested in the event, and his testimony as to the transaction between decedent and plaintiff as to the contract of sale of plaintiff's stock was competent under this section. Winborne v. McMahan, 206 N.C. 30, 173 S.E. 278 (1934).

Trustor's Son Where Estate Insolvent. — In an action involving the validity of a deed of trust, where the trustor was dead and his estate insolvent, the son of the trustor was a competent witness as to his declarations concerning the trust; the disqualification of the son under this section was removed by the insolvency of his father's estate, for there was nothing for the children in any event of the action. Gidney v. Logan, 79 N.C. 214 (1878).

D. Persons Deriving Title or Interest Through Parties or Interested Persons.

In General. — The words "derives its interest or title by assignment or otherwise" meant gets from a source, some person, through or under one or more persons, successively, directly or indirectly, immediately or mediately, "his interest or title," any valuable interest in part or share of something real or personal, of whatever nature, whether legal or equitable, acquired by assignment, or by any other means, or in any other manner. Carey v. Carey, 104 N.C. 171, 10 S.E. 156 (1889).

The exclusion under this section applied to privies as well as parties. Carswell v. Greene, 253 N.C. 266, 116 S.E.2d 801 (1960).

Deceased Assignee. — When deceased had no interest in lands, but was simply an assignee, evidence of his declarations was admissible as no claim of title was made under him. Condor v. Secrest, 149 N.C. 201, 62 S.E. 921 (1908).

Attorney. — The fact that an attorney has an interest in the event of a suit on account of the fee taxed does not disqualify him under this section. Nor is an attorney of one of the parties precluded from testifying for his client concerning the agreement. Propst v. Fisher, 104 N.C. 214, 10 S.E. 295 (1889).

Testimony of Grantee of Deceased Debtor. — In an action in the nature of a creditor's bill, evidence of the brother of the immediate grantee of the deceased debtor was held incompetent as in favor of their sister, claiming title under the witness, the validity of which title was affected by the testimony. Sutton v. Wells, 175 N.C. 1, 94 S.E. 688 (1917).

Trustee. — In an action by trustors against a trustee to compel an accounting for the proceeds of a foreclosure sale, the incompetency of the trustor to testify as to transactions between himself and the deceased cestui que trust must be predicated upon the assumption that the trustee under the deed of trust derived his "title or interest from, through or under" the cestui, and furthermore that it is this interest which is attacked. Garrett v. Stadiem, 220 N.C. 654, 18 S.E.2d 178 (1942).

Trustor. — Where a deed of trust was attacked for fraud, the trustee having died, and the property having been conveyed by a substituted trustee to the defendants, the trustor was not excluded by this section from being a witness for the plaintiff, who also claimed title through him. Isler v. Dewey, 67 N.C. 93 (1872).

E. Testimony Disqualified.

Party May Not Contradict Former Witness. — A defendant having an interest in the event of an action was not permitted under this section to testify in his own behalf, for the purpose of contradicting a former witness whose testimony tended to show that the defendant fraudulently procured an assignment from a person deceased. Bushee v. Surles, 77 N.C. 62 (1877).

Where Adverse Party Non Compos Mentis. — A party interested in the event of the action could not testify as a witness as to a transaction with the adverse party who at the time of trial has been adjudged non compos mentis. Price v. Whisnant, 232 N.C. 653, 62 S.E.2d 56 (1950).

Action Concerning Disputed Boundary. — Testimony of a party interested in the result of the action that the deceased predecessor of the common source of title of the parties had agreed as to the boundary of the lands in dispute preliminary to making the deeds, that the deceased had the lands surveyed, and that the witness saw the deceased mark the boundary claimed by him as controlling the description given in the deeds later made, was that of a transaction or communication prohibited by this section. Poole v. Russell, 197 N.C. 246, 148 S.E. 242 (1929).

The defendant in an action for money demanded was disqualified by this section to testify as to the time and place of signing a receipt by the plaintiff's intestate in support of his plea of satisfaction. Sumner v. Candler, 86 N.C. 71 (1882).

Receipt of Money from Person Now Deceased. — Where, in an action to establish a claim against an estate, plaintiff introduced evidence that prior to his death decedent had received the funds in dispute, testimony by her that she had never received any part of the funds was tantamount to testifying that decedent had not paid her any part thereof, and was incompetent under this section. Wilson v. Ervin, 227 N.C. 396, 42 S.E.2d 468 (1947).

Testimony by the maker of notes as to transactions with deceased payee tending to establish nonliability was properly excluded as coming within prohibition of this section. Perry v. First Citizens Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 226 N.C. 667, 40 S.E.2d 116 (1946).

In an action to recover for services rendered deceased, testimony by the plaintiff that plaintiff boarded deceased was incompetent under the provisions of this section. Price v. Pyatt, 203 N.C. 799, 167 S.E. 69 (1933).

Contest over Will. — As between the propounder or an interested executor and a person who is interested in the result of the trial, this section, rendering an interested survivor incompetent as a witness to a personal transaction with a deceased person, applied in a contest over a will, notwithstanding the proceeding is in rem. There was an exception when the evidence is directed solely towards the question or issue of mental condition or testamentary capacity. In that case, it is competent for the interested witness to give testimony of such transaction or conversation, solely, however, as a basis for the opinion formed as to the mental condition or capacity of the deceased. Whitley v. Redden, 276 N.C. 263, 171 S.E.2d 894 (1970).

F. Testimony Not Disqualified.

Party Testifying against Interest. — Under this section a witness could testify against his own interest, even if thereby other parties to the suit are injuriously affected; the disqualification applied only when a witness testifies in his own behalf. In re Worth's Will, 129 N.C. 223, 39 S.E. 956 (1901); Sanderson v. Paul, 235 N.C. 56, 69 S.E.2d 156 (1952).

In proceedings to caveat a will, an heir at law who would receive more as a beneficiary under the will if it was not set aside may testify to declarations made by the testator after its execution which were competent to show that it was obtained by fraud and undue influence; and such testimony, being against the interests of the witness, was not prohibited by this section. In re Worth's Will, 129 N.C. 223, 39 S.E. 956 (1901); In re Will of Fowler, 159 N.C. 203, 74 S.E. 117 (1912).

When the witness was testifying not in his own behalf or interest, but against his interest, he was not disqualified by this section. Sanderson v. Paul, 235 N.C. 56, 69 S.E.2d 156 (1952).

Testimony Not Against Representatives. — The administrator of a deceased guardian was a competent witness to prove the execution to said guardian by a debtor of a bond for the payment of money, such testimony not being against the representatives of a deceased person. Thompson v. Humphrey, 83 N.C. 416 (1880).

Testimony in Favor of Representative. — Where a witness was not asked to testify against the representative or assignee of a dead person as to any transaction or communication between himself and the person deceased, but in favor of such a representative, the testimony being offered by the party to the suit who represented the dead person, it was held that such testimony did not fall within the inhibition of this section, which was intended to protect the deceased person's representative or assignee who was suing or being sued. Bonner v. Stotesbury, 139 N.C. 3, 51 S.E. 781 (1905).

Where the witness was testifying for, rather than against, the person deriving title or interest from, through or under a deceased person, such testimony did not come within the inhibitions of this section. Sprinkle v. Ponder, 233 N.C. 312, 64 S.E.2d 171 (1951).

Representative Not a Party. — It was competent for a plaintiff, as a witness for himself, to testify where the representative of the deceased was not a party to the suit. Thomas v. Kelly, 74 N.C. 416 (1876).

Sureties Entitled to Same Protection as Representative. — The rule to be deduced from the authorities was that the surety, who comes not within the letter but within the intendment of the law, stands in the same position and was entitled to the same protection as the representative of his deceased principal when sued. McGowan v. Davenport, 134 N.C. 526, 47 S.E. 27 (1904).

Conversations with Third Parties Present. — A witness was not incompetent, under this section, to testify to a conversation had with two persons, one of whom was dead at the time of the trial, in reference to a contract made between them and the witness. Peacock v. Stott, 90 N.C. 518 (1884).

This section made no exception where other parties were present but left these witnesses to be called by either, and their testimony to come before the jury and be considered by itself, its credit unaffected by the testimony of the interested party. MacRae v. Molley, 90 N.C. 521 (1884).

Where the conversation was not strictly with the intestate, but was one held with him and two others who were associated with him in the transaction, then the provisions of this section did not incapacitate the party from testifying. Johnson v. Townsend, 117 N.C. 338, 23 S.E. 271 (1895).

Action for Breach of Contract. — In an action against the administrator of a deceased person to recover for breach of the deceased's contract to devise, testimony of witnesses not interested in the event as to declarations made by the deceased against his interest was properly admitted. Hager v. Whitener, 204 N.C. 747, 169 S.E. 645 (1933).

Action for Breach of Warranty. — In an action against an insane person for damages for breach of warranty in a deed, a witness who was not interested in the recovery was not disqualified by this section, though he might have an interest in the land. Lemly v. Ellis, 143 N.C. 200, 55 S.E. 629 (1906).

Action in Ejectment. — Where some of the witnesses in an action in ejectment were not interested in the event, their testimony did not fall within the intent and meaning of this section and the exclusion of their testimony tending to show the tenancy of a decedent under whom one defendant claimed as adverse possessor was reversible error entitling the plaintiff to a new trial. Pitman v. Hunt, 197 N.C. 574, 150 S.E. 13 (1929).

In an action to declare a deed void on the ground that it was never delivered to the grantee, since deceased, testimony offered by the grantor tending to show that the deed had not been delivered was not incompetent under this section. Gulley v. Smith, 203 N.C. 274, 165 S.E. 710 (1932).

Transactions with Partnership. — The death of one of the partners in a firm would not incapacitate the witness from proving a transaction with the firm while the other partner, who was present at the interview, was living. Peacock v. Stott, 90 N.C. 518 (1884).

G. Subject Matter of the Transaction.

1. In General.

This section related not only to "personal transactions" but also to "communications" with a deceased person. Smith v. Dean, 2 N.C. App. 553, 163 S.E.2d 551 (1968).

Not Applicable Unless Transaction Was Personal. — Under this section the parties in interest were disqualified from testifying only as to personal transactions with the deceased. McCall v. Wilson, 101 N.C. 598, 8 S.E. 225 (1888); Cox v. Beaufort County Lumber Co., 124 N.C. 78, 32 S.E. 381 (1899); Davidson v. Bardin, 139 N.C. 1, 51 S.E. 779 (1905).

Test as to When Transaction Was "Personal". — A fair test in undertaking to ascertain what was a "personal transaction or communication" with the deceased was to inquire whether, in case the witness testified falsely, the deceased, if living, could contradict it of his own knowledge. Sherrill v. Wilhelm, 182 N.C. 673, 110 S.E. 95 (1921); Whitley v. Redden, 5 N.C. App. 705, 169 S.E.2d 260 (1969), rev'd on other grounds, 276 N.C. 263, 171 S.E.2d 894 (1970).

A personal transaction or communication within the purview of this section was anything done or said between the witness and the deceased person or lunatic tending to establish the claim being asserted against the personal representative of the deceased person, or the committee of the lunatic, or the person deriving his title or interest from, through, or under the deceased person or lunatic. Peek v. Shook, 233 N.C. 259, 63 S.E.2d 542 (1951); Brown v. Green, 3 N.C. App. 506, 165 S.E.2d 534 (1969); Ballard v. Lance, 6 N.C. App. 24, 169 S.E.2d 199 (1969).

A personal transaction or communication within the purview of this section was anything done or said between the witness and the deceased person tending to establish the claim being asserted against the personal representative of the deceased person. Smith v. Dean, 2 N.C. App. 553, 163 S.E.2d 551 (1968); Etheridge v. Etheridge, 41 N.C. App. 39, 255 S.E.2d 735 (1979).

A personal transaction included that which was done by one person which affected the rights of another, and out of which a cause of action arose. Smith v. Dean, 2 N.C. App. 553, 163 S.E.2d 551 (1968).

Caveat to Will. — On an issue of devastavit vel non it was not competent to prove by a witness whose husband was one of the caveators and heirs at law of the testator, declarations of said testator offered for the purpose of showing undue influence, as such witness had an interest in the real estate, dependent upon the result of the action. Linebarger v. Linebarger, 143 N.C. 229, 55 S.E. 709 (1906).

The interest which a married woman has in the real property of her husband before and during coverture came within the intent and meaning of this section, and would exclude testimony by her of a communication or transaction between her husband and a deceased person as to a contract made between them whereby a mortgage on the lands of her husband executed prior to his marriage was to be canceled by the deceased. Honeycutt v. Burleson, 198 N.C. 37, 150 S.E. 634 (1929).

Mother, in her illegitimate child's action against the estate of the deceased father on a contract made by him for the child's support, was not a party interested in the event of the action whose evidence on the trial was excluded under the provisions of this section. Conley v. Cabe, 198 N.C. 298, 151 S.E. 645 (1930).

A husband has no vested interest in the real estate of his wife, and it would seem that he was not a "person interested in the event" within the contemplation of this section in an action involving his wife's title to realty. Allen v. Allen, 213 N.C. 264, 195 S.E. 801 (1938).

Transaction Must Be Exclusive Source of Knowledge. — In order to exclude testimony under this provision, it must be made to appear that the knowledge of the witness was derived from a personal transaction with the deceased person. Thompson v. Onley, 96 N.C. 9, 1 S.E. 620 (1887). And it was proper to show whether the witness had knowledge of the fact testified to, from sources extraneous to his personal communications or relations with the deceased. Charlotte Oil & Fertilizer Co. v. Rippy, 123 N.C. 656, 31 S.E. 879 (1898), rehearing denied, State v. Barnwell, 17 N.C. App. 299, 194 S.E.2d 63 (1973).

Testimony of a witness as to what he himself did in regard to the transaction did not come within the prohibition of this section when it did not relate to acts or communications with the deceased person in regard to such transaction. Waddell v. Carson, 245 N.C. 669, 97 S.E.2d 222 (1957).

Testimony as to Independent Facts. — A party in interest could testify to any substantive fact which was independent of any transaction or communication with the deceased or was based upon independent knowledge not derived from such source. Sutton v. Wells, 175 N.C. 1, 94 S.E. 688 (1917). See also In re Will of Saunders, 177 N.C. 156, 98 S.E. 378 (1919); Price Real Estate & Ins. Co. v. Jones, 191 N.C. 176, 131 S.E. 587 (1926).

Testimony of an interested witness as to independent facts and circumstances, within his own knowledge, or as to what he saw or heard take place between deceased and a third party, was not rendered incompetent by this section, since in such instances the testimony did not relate to a personal transaction or communication between the witness and deceased and, accordingly, appellant's exceptions to the admission of such testimony were not sustained. Wilder v. Medlin, 215 N.C. 542, 2 S.E.2d 549 (1939).

This section did not preclude a witness from testifying to independent facts and circumstances within her observation and knowledge or from giving evidence of what she saw or heard take place between the deceased and another or others, not involving personal transactions between herself and the deceased. Collins v. Lamb, 215 N.C. 719, 2 S.E.2d 863 (1939).

The disqualification of a party to the action to testify against the personal representative of a deceased person as to a transaction or communication with the deceased did not prohibit such interested party from testifying as to the acts and conduct of the deceased where the interested party was merely an observer and was testifying as to facts based upon independent knowledge not derived from any personal transaction or communication with the deceased. Hardison v. Gregory, 242 N.C. 324, 88 S.E.2d 96 (1955); Carswell v. Greene, 253 N.C. 266, 116 S.E.2d 801 (1960); Brown v. Whitley, 12 N.C. App. 306, 183 S.E.2d 258 (1971).

An interested party was not prohibited by this section from testifying concerning his independent acts. Hardison v. Gregory, 242 N.C. 324, 88 S.E.2d 96 (1955).

This section did not preclude an interested party from testifying as to his own acts or the acts and conduct of the decedent when the witness was testifying as to facts based upon independent knowledge not derived from any personal transaction or communication with the deceased. Brown v. Green, 3 N.C. App. 506, 165 S.E.2d 534 (1969).

Any acts done in observation of a deceased person were considered independent acts and not within the statutory exclusion. Brown v. Whitley, 12 N.C. App. 306, 183 S.E.2d 258 (1971).

Acts of Deceased. — This section did not prohibit an interested party from testifying as to acts and conduct of the deceased where the interested party was merely an observer. Archer v. Norwood, 37 N.C. App. 432, 246 S.E.2d 37, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 645, 248 S.E.2d 249 (1978).

The prohibitions of this section did not prevent a witness from testifying as to the acts and conduct of the deceased where the witness was merely an observer and was testifying to facts based upon independent knowledge. In re Will of Simmons, 43 N.C. App. 123, 258 S.E.2d 466 (1979), cert. denied, 299 N.C. 121, 262 S.E.2d 9 (1980).

Same — Facts Occurring Out of Presence of Deceased. — A witness who offered to prove a fact which occurred out of the presence of, and which was in no sense a transaction with, a deceased person was not incompetent under this section. It was only when the transaction was between the deceased and the living party that the statute prohibits the latter from testifying. Lockhart v. Bell, 86 N.C. 443 (1882), appeal dismissed, 90 N.C. 499 (1884).

The acts of two independent drivers, total strangers to each other up to the point of impact, cannot be said to be acts done with a deceased person but are acts done in observation of a deceased person; thus, testimony as to these acts was not excluded by this section. Brown v. Whitley, 12 N.C. App. 306, 183 S.E.2d 258 (1971).

A defendant was not prevented from describing the conduct and movements of a deceased's car by the phrase "concerning a personal transaction" when the movements were quite independent and apart from, and in no way connected with, or prompted or influenced by reason of, the conduct of the party testifying. Brown v. Whitley, 12 N.C. App. 306, 183 S.E.2d 258 (1971).

In action for alienation of affections and criminal conversation against the administrators of the alleged tort-feasor, plaintiff's testimony that when he returned to his home at night he found the deceased standing in the living room of the unlighted house, and that on two other occasions he saw his wife and the deceased alone at farm cabins was held competent as testimony of independent facts. Hardison v. Gregory, 242 N.C. 324, 88 S.E.2d 96 (1955).

Action for Debt. — In an action in the nature of a creditor's bill, testimony of the deceased debtor's grantee that the deceased grantor occupied the building part of the time after she got her deed to the land in litigation was held admissible as being to a substantive fact of which she had knowledge independently of any statement by the deceased. Sutton v. Wells, 175 N.C. 1, 94 S.E. 688 (1917).

Testimony Concerning Mental Capacity. — Where a witness testifies to the want of mental capacity in a grantor to take a deed, and that his opinion was formed from conversation and communication between the witness and grantor, it was held competent to prove the facts upon which such opinion was founded, the provisions not applying as the subject was not a "transaction" within its meaning. McLeary v. Norment, 84 N.C. 235 (1881); Rakestraw v. Pratt, 160 N.C. 436, 76 S.E. 259 (1912).

Beneficiaries under the will are competent to testify as to transactions with the testator solely on the issue of testamentary capacity. In re Will of Lomax, 226 N.C. 498, 39 S.E.2d 388 (1946).

A party interested in the event could testify as to transactions with a decedent when such testimony related solely to the issue of mental capacity. Goins v. McLoud, 231 N.C. 655, 58 S.E.2d 634 (1950).

The rule prohibiting an interested party from testifying as to a transaction with a decedent did not preclude a caveator from testifying as to his opinion of the mental condition of testator. In re Will of Thompson, 248 N.C. 588, 104 S.E.2d 280 (1958).

A person (who would otherwise be precluded from testifying by this section), after testifying as to the mental capacity of a deceased person, could testify to transactions and communications with deceased in order to show the jury that the opinion was well founded. Whitley v. Redden, 276 N.C. 263, 171 S.E.2d 894 (1970).

However, such evidence would be rejected when it was offered for the purpose of proving and did tend to prove vital and material facts which will fix liability against the representative of a deceased person, or committee of a lunatic, or anyone deriving his title or interest through them. Whitley v. Redden, 276 N.C. 263, 171 S.E.2d 894 (1970); In re Will of Ricks, 292 N.C. 28, 231 S.E.2d 856 (1977).

A party or an interested witness could, notwithstanding this section, in an action to set aside a will, a deed or other writing, testify to communications or conversations with a deceased to show the basis upon which the party or witness had formed an opinion regarding the mental capacity of the deceased, when he testified to such an opinion, and when the lack of such capacity was a ground for setting aside the instrument. In re Will of Ricks, 292 N.C. 28, 231 S.E.2d 856 (1977).

2. Particular Transactions.

In a proceeding for dower, the decision of the question whether the plaintiff left her husband's home of her own volition or by reason of what the law would recognize as compulsion, was an inquiry that did not necessarily involve a transaction or communication with her husband which would disqualify her under this section. Hicks v. Hicks, 142 N.C. 231, 55 S.E. 106 (1906).

Driving of Car as "Transaction" Between Occupants of Same Car. — Where the only evidence of negligence in an action by the wife of the driver to recover for injuries sustained in an automobile accident was her testimony that he was traveling at an excessive speed upon a curve, and that the accident occurred when the car failed to make the curve, and that she had spoken to him in regard to the speed he was driving the car, the driving of the car was a transaction within the meaning of the term as used in this section and her testimony of his manner of driving and her statement to him regarding the speed was incompetent under this section, her testimony of the transaction and communication being an essential or material link in the chain establishing liability of the estate to her. Boyd v. Williams, 207 N.C. 30, 175 S.E. 832 (1934).

Prior to the 1967 amendment to this section it was held that the surviving occupant of an automobile, in an action against the estate of the deceased occupant, was an incompetent witness as to the identity of the driver immediately preceding and at the time of the wreck. Tharpe v. Newman, 257 N.C. 71, 125 S.E.2d 315 (1962). See Davis v. Pearson, 220 N.C. 163, 16 S.E.2d 655 (1941).

Two occupants of the same automobile were engaged in a "personal transaction," thereby rendering incompetent the testimony of one against the personal representative of the other's estate. Brown v. Whitley, 12 N.C. App. 306, 183 S.E.2d 258 (1971).

But a collision between two motor vehicles was not a "personal transaction" within the meaning of this section. Brown v. Whitley, 12 N.C. App. 306, 183 S.E.2d 258 (1971).

And Section Did Not Exclude Testimony of Surviving Driver. — Considering the fact that the only relationship between a defendant and a decedent was the impact of their vehicles, such a collision was not a personal transaction within the meaning of the term, and this section was not applicable to the testimony of the surviving driver in a two-vehicle collision. Brown v. Whitley, 12 N.C. App. 306, 183 S.E.2d 258 (1971).

Conversation Between Decedent and Third Person. — This section did not apply to the testimony of an interested witness as to a conversation between her deceased father and a living defendant. This was not testimony "concerning a personal transaction." Abernathy v. Skidmore, 190 N.C. 66, 128 S.E. 475 (1925).

Testimony by a party as to a conversation between decedent and a third person did not concern a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the decedent; therefore it was not excluded by this section. Hodges v. Hodges, 257 N.C. 774, 127 S.E.2d 567 (1962).

The transaction observed and testified to by the plaintiff mother of intestate was not one between her and the deceased doctor but was one between the deceased doctor and a third party, her daughter. Therefore, notwithstanding her interest, she was properly allowed to testify concerning it. Spillman v. Forsyth Mem. Hosp., 30 N.C. App. 406, 227 S.E.2d 292 (1976).

Proof of Handwriting. — A party interested in the event of a suit was not an incompetent witness, under this section, to prove the handwriting of the deceased person. Rush v. Steed, 91 N.C. 226 (1884); Hussey v. Kirkman, 95 N.C. 63 (1886); Armfield v. Colvert, 103 N.C. 147, 9 S.E. 461 (1889); Sawyer v. Grady, 113 N.C. 42, 18 S.E. 79 (1893); Lister v. Lister, 222 N.C. 555, 24 S.E.2d 342 (1943).

The plaintiff on his examination-in-chief, in an action against an executor or administrator, was competent to testify to the handwriting of deceased from his general knowledge, but not to testify that he saw deceased actually sign the particular instrument. Batten v. Aycock, 224 N.C. 225, 29 S.E.2d 739 (1944).

A husband, who testified that he knew his wife's handwriting, was competent to testify after his wife's death, that her signature was on the note in question, and while his further testimony that she signed the instruments in question was technically incompetent under this section, such further testimony would not be held prejudicial when this fact was established by other competent testimony. Waddell v. Carson, 245 N.C. 669, 97 S.E.2d 222 (1957).

Claim That Intestate Was Holder in Due Course. — Where the administrator of the deceased claimed that his intestate was a holder of a negotiable instrument in due course for value, and relied upon his intestate's possession to make out a prima facie case, it was not a personal transaction or communication with the deceased, prohibited by statute, for it could have been shown in rebuttal that after maturity it was seen in the possession of another claimant of the title. Price Real Estate & Ins. Co. v. Jones, 191 N.C. 176, 131 S.E. 587 (1926).

Loan and Instrument Evidencing Same. — In an action by the widow against the executor of her husband upon an acknowledgment of indebtedness executed by the husband to her, the widow was incompetent to testify that she had loaned her husband the sum or that she saw him sign the instrument and that he delivered it to her. McGowan v. Beach, 242 N.C. 73, 86 S.E.2d 763 (1955).

Evidence of the declarations of a deceased partner tending to show that the deceased partner made an agreement with plaintiff that check given for a disputed account and marked thereon "balance on account" was not to be taken as full settlement was incompetent as a transaction or communication with a deceased person prohibited by this section. Walston v. Coppersmith, 197 N.C. 407, 149 S.E. 381 (1929).

Sale of Interest in Partnership. — This section did not apply to a transaction between living persons by which one of them sold to the other his interest in a firm of which the decedent was the other partner. Brantley v. Marshbourn, 166 N.C. 527, 82 S.E. 959 (1914).

Personal Services. — Since personal services rendered by plaintiff to decedent are of necessity personal transactions between them, plaintiff may not testify directly that he rendered such services, nor establish this fact indirectly by testifying that he expected pay for such services or as to their value, or that he had not been paid for them. Peek v. Shook, 233 N.C. 259, 63 S.E.2d 542 (1951).

The performance of services by a witness for the deceased was held to be a personal transaction. Godwin v. Tew, 38 N.C. App. 686, 248 S.E.2d 771 (1978).

Services of Physician. — Testimony by a physician, the plaintiff, that he attended the deceased as such, for which he had an account against him, of the number of visits, sum due therefor, etc., was incompetent as being "personal" transactions with the deceased, prohibited by this section. Dunn v. Currie, 141 N.C. 123, 53 S.E. 533 (1906); Knight v. Everett, 152 N.C. 118, 67 S.E. 328 (1910).

In a civil action for rents allegedly received by defendant's intestate from plaintiffs' property, evidence of plaintiffs, that deceased went into possession of the premises, shortly after default in payments to a mortgagee, for the purpose of collecting the rents and applying same to plaintiffs' mortgage indebtedness, that afterwards defendant's intestate purchased the property and plaintiffs executed notes to defendant's intestate and saw a deed for the premises in the possession of deceased, was excluded by this section as personal transactions and communications with defendant's intestate. McMichael v. Pegram, 225 N.C. 400, 35 S.E.2d 174 (1945).

Sale of Property by Guardian. — It was competent for the plaintiff to prove the sale of his property by his guardian as this was not a personal transaction within the meaning of this section. State ex rel. Dobbins v. Osborne, 67 N.C. 259 (1872).

Possession of Stock. — See Jones v. Waldroup, 217 N.C. 178, 7 S.E.2d 366 (1940).

Testimony Given in Former Trial. — It was competent for the plaintiff's witness to testify what the deceased maker of the note sued upon testified on a former trial as to its payment, such not being a personal transaction within the meaning of the provisions of this section. Costen v. McDowell, 107 N.C. 546, 12 S.E. 432 (1890); Worth v. Wrenn, 144 N.C. 656, 57 S.E. 388 (1907).

Testimony as to Placement of Deed. — This section did not exclude testimony that the witness saw the decedent place the deed, under which the witness claims, in a trunk as it did not involve a communication or transaction with him. Cornelius v. Brawley, 109 N.C. 542, 14 S.E. 78 (1891); Carroll v. Smith, 163 N.C. 204, 79 S.E. 497 (1913).

Probate of Wills. — In Cox v. Beaufort County Lumber Co., 124 N.C. 78, 32 S.E. 381 (1899), it was held that this section did not apply to wills, but that they were governed by §§ 31-9 and 31-10; this was placed on the ground that this section applied where there was necessarily a contract or agreement between the parties, and in the case of a will there was ordinarily no transaction between the parties.

By the same reasoning it was held that attesting a will was not a "personal transaction," the witness being of the law and not of the party. Collins v. Collins, 101 N.C. 114, 7 S.E. 687 (1888).

But a beneficiary could not testify as to the leaving of a holograph will with her for safekeeping. McEwan v. Brown, 176 N.C. 249, 97 S.E. 20 (1918).

A beneficiary could, however, testify that when a will was opened it contained certain erasures and that they were not made by him. In re Will of Saunders, 177 N.C. 156, 98 S.E. 378 (1919).

Circumstances could arise, however, in which the person interested as a beneficiary could attempt to testify as to personal transactions or conversations with the deceased, and this testimony would, of course, be excluded. But the rule of exclusion did not apply, as may be inferred from the preceding cases, as to facts of which the witness had knowledge by means other than by personal transactions with the deceased. So the rule did not exclude the witness from testifying as to the identity of certain papers as being those which he had previously seen in the testator's presence; nor to the fact that it was the same "will," when only for the purpose and effect of the identification of the sheets in question. In re Will of Mann, 192 N.C. 248, 134 S.E. 649 (1926).

Under this section a party interested in the results of the action was incompetent to testify to a declaration of the deceased, whose will was under attack, when the issue was as to undue influence. In re Will of Plott, 211 N.C. 451, 190 S.E. 717 (1937).

This section applied to caveat proceedings notwithstanding that they were in rem, with the exception that beneficiaries under the will were competent to testify as to transactions with deceased testator solely upon the issue of testamentary capacity. In re Will of Lomax, 226 N.C. 498, 39 S.E.2d 388 (1946).

A challenge to the testimony of a witness on the ground that any knowledge regarding a purported will and where it was located was obtained as the result of a personal transaction or communication with the testatrix was rejected. In re Will of Wilson, 258 N.C. 310, 128 S.E.2d 601 (1962).

This section operated to exclude evidence by the caveator in a caveat proceeding concerning any personal transactions or communications between him and decedent. In re Will of Edgerton, 29 N.C. App. 60, 223 S.E.2d 524, cert. denied, 290 N.C. 308, 225 S.E.2d 832 (1976).

Settlement of Estate. — Testimony relating to an agreement between administrator and distributee in regard to the settlement of an estate was incompetent in an action by distributee's administrator to recover assets. Wilder v. Medlin, 215 N.C. 542, 2 S.E.2d 549 (1939).

H. Exceptions.

This section contained only two exceptions, one of which related to the identity of the driver of a motor vehicle, and the other of which related to cases in which the representative of the lunatic or deceased person had "opened the door" by testifying or offering the testimony of the deceased or insane person. Whitley v. Redden, 5 N.C. App. 705, 169 S.E.2d 260 (1969), rev'd on other grounds, 276 N.C. 263, 171 S.E.2d 894 (1970).

However, the Supreme Court stated what seemed to be another exception to this section, which provided that after a witness had stated his opinion as to the mental capacity of the deceased person, and where this opinion had been formed from conversations and communications with such person, it was competent to offer such in evidence as constituting the basis of such opinion. While it was conceded that a sane declaration by a person may have been some evidence of sanity, the statute as written by the legislature did not contain this exception. Whitley v. Redden, 5 N.C. App. 705, 169 S.E.2d 260 (1969), rev'd on other grounds, 276 N.C. 263, 171 S.E.2d 894 (1970).

Exception for Similar Evidence Previously Introduced. — This section did not apply where evidence similar to that which was being introduced had previously been introduced and the door had been opened to the objecting party. Davison v. West Oxford Land Co., 126 N.C. 704, 36 S.E. 162 (1900).

When defendant, representative of deceased, was examined in behalf of himself and his corepresentative concerning a personal transaction between plaintiff and deceased, under this section, he thus opened the door and made competent the testimony of his adversary concerning the same transaction. Batten v. Aycock, 224 N.C. 225, 29 S.E.2d 739 (1944).

Testimony otherwise incompetent under this section was rendered admissible when the personal representative of a deceased person, or the committee of a lunatic, or the person deriving his title or interest from, through, or under the deceased person or lunatic, was examined in his own behalf, or the testimony as to declarations of the deceased person or lunatic was given in evidence concerning the same transaction or communication. Peek v. Shook, 233 N.C. 259, 63 S.E.2d 542 (1951).

But this section gave a personal representative no right to "open the door," over the other party's objection, by incompetent evidence. Gurganus v. Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., 246 N.C. 655, 100 S.E.2d 81 (1957).

Introduction by the opposing party of evidence of a transaction between plaintiff and decedent opened the door to plaintiff's testimony in regard thereto. Pearce v. Barham, 267 N.C. 707, 149 S.E.2d 22 (1966).

The rule was that when incompetent evidence was admitted over objection, the admission of such evidence was cured where the same evidence, or evidence of substantially the same import, was thereafter admitted without objection. Brown v. Green, 3 N.C. App. 506, 165 S.E.2d 534 (1969).

Grounds for Exceptions. — The rule of exclusion, if left absolute in form, might in certain cases, it was thought, work unequally, and therefore the exception was inserted to make it fair and just in its operation. There was nothing inequitable in requiring that the opposing testimony to that given in evidence by the other side should be limited to the same transaction or communication. It could not be otherwise without opening the door much wider than the necessity of the particular case justified. Pope v. Pope, 176 N.C. 283, 96 S.E. 1034 (1918).

Where the testimony of a deceased adverse party has been given and was available, the reason for the exclusion rule ceases. Phillips v. Interstate Land Co., 174 N.C. 542, 94 S.E. 12 (1917).

Limitation of Exception. — Where the door was opened to the opposing party to testify for himself, he could testify only as to those particular transactions and communications to which the testimony of the deceased person or his representative was pertinent. Sumner v. Candler, 92 N.C. 634 (1885).

In order to "open the door" for the admission of evidence of transactions or communications with a deceased person, prohibited by this section, such evidence had to relate to the particular subject matter of the evidence testified to by the adverse party, or the same transaction, and the door was not necessarily opened to all transactions or fact situations growing out of the controversy. Walston v. Coppersmith, 197 N.C. 407, 149 S.E. 381 (1929).

The door was opened, under this section, by the representative of deceased taking the stand, only in respect to the transaction or set of facts about which such representative testifies. If one party opened the door as to one transaction, the other party could not swing it wide in order to admit another independent transaction. Batten v. Aycock, 224 N.C. 225, 29 S.E.2d 739 (1944).

The incompetence of the adverse party to testify may be removed by her being cross-examined as to the transaction in question. When the door was thus opened for the adverse party, it was only opened to the extent that he may testify as to the transaction about which he was cross-examined. Godwin v. Tew, 38 N.C. App. 686, 248 S.E.2d 771 (1978).

Illustrations. — Where the defendant executor testified as to certain matters relating to the identification of certain letters the deceased had written upon the question of whether he should be held liable as a partner for the debts of a firm, it was competent for the plaintiff's witness to testify in the plaintiff's behalf, as to other matters relating thereto and tending to fix the deceased with liability as a partner, under the principle that when the defendant had himself "opened the door by his own evidence" the plaintiff may testify as to the completed transaction, and this section prohibiting testimony as to transaction, etc., with a deceased person, did not apply. Herring v. Ipock, 187 N.C. 459, 121 S.E. 758 (1924).

It was incompetent as a transaction with a deceased person for the plaintiff to testify as to personal services rendered to the deceased as coming within her demand for damages, where the defendant had not "opened the door" by asking the plaintiff for an explanation as to why she had changed the amount at her demand. Pulliam v. Hege, 192 N.C. 459, 135 S.E. 288 (1926).

The prohibition against a beneficiary testifying as to transactions with deceased testator on the question of undue influence related solely to transactions with the deceased, and a beneficiary was competent to testify as to circumstances tending to show undue influence on the part of the propounder unrelated to any transaction which the witness had with testator. In re Will of Lomax, 226 N.C. 498, 39 S.E.2d 388 (1946).

Where, in an action to recover upon a quantum meruit for personal services rendered deceased, defendant executor first testified as to his version of the services rendered, it did not violate this section for plaintiff to testify in rebuttal as to the services she rendered, since the "door had been swung wide" by defendant's prior testimony. Highfill v. Parrish, 247 N.C. 389, 100 S.E.2d 840 (1957).

If the challenged testimony violated this section, it was rendered admissible when the sister of intestate, as plaintiff's witness, testified that defendant was driving and that he was not intoxicated. This opened the door for defendant's version of the matter. Bryant v. Ballance, 13 N.C. App. 181, 185 S.E.2d 315 (1971), cert. denied, 280 N.C. 495, 186 S.E.2d 513 (1972).

In an action to recover the amount of a note from the estate of the borrower's attorney-in-fact, there was no merit to defendant's contention that much of the affidavit testimony upon which the trial court based its decision should have been excluded under this section as testimony of transactions with a deceased person, since defendant, by offering evidence as to a completely independent transaction, opened the door for plaintiff to give an explanation by his own affidavit. Nye v. Lipton, 50 N.C. App. 224, 273 S.E.2d 313, cert. denied, 302 N.C. 630, 280 S.E.2d 441 (1981).

I. Pleading and Practice.

Admission. — Anything that a party to the action had said, if relevant to the issues and not subject to some specific exclusionary rule, was admissible against him as an admission. Brown v. Green, 3 N.C. App. 506, 165 S.E.2d 534 (1969).

Proper Objection Required. — In order to have the benefit of this section, a party had to lodge a proper objection at the time the incompetent testimony was offered. Etheridge v. Etheridge, 41 N.C. App. 39, 255 S.E.2d 735 (1979).

Effect of Failure to Object. — Objections to the competency of testimony had to be taken in due time; if not, they were waived. Therefore, where a party was allowed to testify, upon examination in chief, to a conversation between himself and the defendant's testator, and during the cross-examination the defendant objected to the competency of such testimony and asked that it might be excluded, it was held that, although incompetent, the objection to its reception came too late. Meroney v. Avery, 64 N.C. 312 (1870).

Where a general objection as to witness' competency was overruled, and afterwards no specific objection was made to his testimony as to transactions with the decedent, the objection was deemed waived. Norris v. Stewart, 105 N.C. 455, 10 S.E. 912, 18 Am. St. R. 917 (1890).

The objection will not be considered unless it is so specific as to show that the evidence is objectionable. Perkins v. Berry, 103 N.C. 131, 9 S.E. 621 (1889).

The incompetency must appear at the time of the objection to the evidence, so that the court may pass intelligently upon the objection. Harris v. Harris, 178 N.C. 7, 100 S.E. 125 (1919).

The objecting party has the burden of establishing the incompetency of the evidence. Etheridge v. Etheridge, 41 N.C. App. 39, 255 S.E.2d 735 (1979).

Motion to Strike Out Incompetent Part of Answer. — The rule was that where a question asked a witness was competent, exception to his answer, when incompetent in part, should be taken by motion to strike out the part that was objectionable. Brown v. Green, 3 N.C. App. 506, 165 S.E.2d 534 (1969).

When Admission of Evidence Harmless. — The erroneous admission of evidence of transactions with deceased persons prohibited by this section becomes immaterial when from the answers by the jury to the issues it appears that this evidence was disregarded by them. Ray v. Ray, 175 N.C. 290, 95 S.E. 550 (1918).

Determination on Appeal of Relevancy of Testimony. — Where testimony of transactions or communications with a decedent was properly excluded as irrelevant to the issue, its competency or incompetency under this section would not be determined on appeal. Pendleton v. Spencer, 205 N.C. 179, 170 S.E. 637 (1933).

Rule 602. Lack of personal knowledge.

A witness may not testify to a matter unless evidence is introduced sufficient to support a finding that he has personal knowledge of the matter. Evidence to prove personal knowledge may, but need not, consist of the testimony of the witness himself. This rule is subject to the provisions of Rule 703, relating to opinion testimony by expert witnesses. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule, which is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 602, restates the traditional common-law rule in North Carolina barring a witness from testifying to a fact of which he has no direct personal knowledge. See Robbins v. C. W. Myers Trading Post, Inc., 251 N.C. 663 (1960). A witness who testifies to a fact which can be perceived by the senses must have had an opportunity to observe and must have actually observed the facts. The Advisory Committee's Note states that:

"These foundation requirements may, of course, be furnished by the testimony of the witness himself; hence personal knowledge is not an absolute but may consist of what the witness thinks he knows from personal perception.  It will be observed that the rule is in fact a specialized application of the provisions of Rule 104(b) on conditional relevancy."

Preliminary determination of personal knowledge need not be explicit but may be implied from the witness' testimony.

Rule 602 applies to hearsay statements admitted under the hearsay exception rules in that admissibility of a hearsay statement is predicated on the foundation requirement of the witness' personal knowledge of the making of the statement itself. However, it is not intended that firsthand knowledge be required where a hearsay exception necessarily embraces secondhand knowledge (e.g. Rules 803(8)(C) and 803(23)).

Rule 602 is subject to Rule 703 relating to expert witnesses.

CASE NOTES

Testimony Establishing Personal Knowledge. — Testimony of witness that she in fact heard the defendant make the statements in question ipso facto amounted to testimony that she had the ability to hear him make those statements. No more was required to establish her personal knowledge under this rule, but the defendant was free to cross-examine her as to such matters. State v. Riddick, 315 N.C. 749, 340 S.E.2d 55 (1986).

Testimony properly allowed to draw an inference that defendant could not have known the caliber of the murder weapon at the time he made his inculpatory statement unless he was the murderer. State v. Corbett, 339 N.C. 313, 451 S.E.2d 252 (1994).

The witness' answer was not inadmissible opinion evidence but was testimony as to what was within his own personal knowledge, where in a prosecution for second degree murder the prosecutor asked the defendant's son about the meaning of his own statement of "I know" in response to the defendant's statement that he had made a big mistake, and the son replied that his father's statement referred to murdering the victim. State v. Marecek, 130 N.C. App. 303, 502 S.E.2d 634 (1998).

Officer's testimony as to what occurred after his conversation with informant consisted of details of the drug transaction derived from his subsequent participation in the deal and not from any prior conversation with the informant and was, therefore, admissible under this rule. State v. Broome, 136 N.C. App. 82, 523 S.E.2d 448 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 362, 543 S.E.2d 136 (2000).

Testimony Held Improper. — Husband's testimony that wife was familiar with the corporation's financial records and should have known about the $102,000 loan violated this rule since a witness may only testify as to matters of which he has personal knowledge and the evidence presented did not support the finding that wife was familiar with the corporation's books. Lee v. Lee, 93 N.C. App. 584, 378 S.E.2d 554 (1989).

Officer's testimony that it appeared just by looking over there that there had indeed been a break in at victim's home on the night in question constituted inadmissible opinion evidence. However, defendant was not entitled to a new trial unless the erroneous admission of this testimony prejudiced him. State v. Shaw, 106 N.C. App. 433, 417 S.E.2d 262, cert. denied, 333 N.C. 170, 424 S.E.2d 914 (1992).

Where witness could not identify the speaker, nor did she have personal knowledge of his voice, trial court properly excluded the testimony. State v. Locklear, 121 N.C. App. 355, 465 S.E.2d 61 (1996).

Testimony Held Improper But Not Prejudicial. — Witness testimony that the defendant intended to purchase a gun for the purpose of threatening the victim was admitted without a foundation in violation of this rule but did not prejudice the defendant where other evidence at trial pointed to premeditation and deliberation. State v. Harshaw, 138 N.C. App. 657, 532 S.E.2d 224 (2000).

State of Mind Testimony Was Not Plain Error. — The testimony of a police officer as to defendant's state of mind neither constituted "a miscarriage of justice" nor did it probably cause the jury to reach a different verdict than it otherwise would have in light of defendant's confession, as well as his trial testimony concerning his involvement in these crimes. State v. Holder, 138 N.C. App. 89, 530 S.E.2d 562 (2000).

Testimony Held Proper. — Where all of the evidence challenged by the defendant, accused of murdering her grandmother in a nursing home, was either within the personal knowledge of the witness or was permitted due to the defendant's having opened the door to the subject on cross-examination, the court rejected the contention that the trial court erred by permitting various witnesses to offer a variety of speculative testimony. State v. Smith, 135 N.C. App. 649, 522 S.E.2d 321 (1999).

Applied in State v. Hollingsworth, 78 N.C. App. 578, 337 S.E.2d 674 (1985); State v. Hunt, 324 N.C. 343, 378 S.E.2d 754 (1989); State v. Jones, 98 N.C. App. 342, 391 S.E.2d 52 (1990); State v. Johnson, 340 N.C. 32, 455 S.E.2d 644 (1995); State v. King, 343 N.C. 29, 468 S.E.2d 232 (1996).

Rule 603. Oath or affirmation.

Before testifying, every witness shall be required to declare that he will testify truthfully, by oath or affirmation administered in a form calculated to awaken his conscience and impress his mind with his duty to do so. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 603 and is in accord with North Carolina practice. The Advisory Committee's Note states that:

"The rule is designed to afford the flexibility required in dealing with religious adults, atheists, conscientious objectors, mental defectives, and children. Affirmation is simply a solemn undertaking to tell the truth; no special verbal formula is required."

CASE NOTES

This rule merely provides that a witness before testifying must either by oath or affirmation declare that he will testify truthfully. State v. James, 322 N.C. 320, 367 S.E.2d 669 (1988).

Rule Not Applicable at Sentencing Hearing. — The trial court committed no error by allowing an unsworn victim impact statement at the sentencing hearing where the rules of evidence do not apply. State v. Hendricks, 138 N.C. App. 668, 531 S.E.2d 896 (2000).

Indirect Reference by Prosecutor to Defendant's Affirmation. — Prosecutor's argument as to defendant's credibility held not to violate N.C. Const., Art. I, § 13, nor did it violate this rule or § 8C-1, Rule 610, despite an indirect reference to defendant's affirmation as a witness. State v. James, 322 N.C. 320, 367 S.E.2d 669 (1988).

Competency of Child to Testify. — The competency of a child witness to testify at trial is not a proper subject for stipulation of counsel, absent the trial judge's independent finding pursuant to personally examining or observing the child on voir dire. State v. Fearing, 315 N.C. 167, 337 S.E.2d 551 (1985).

Inquiry into Sincerity of Oath. — Despite the prohibition of evidence of the beliefs or opinions of a witness on matters of religion, by questioning the sincerity and solemnity with which the witness took the oath, the defense exposed the witness to the same inquiry by the prosecution; thus, and there was no error in the prosecution's questioning of the witness because the defense had already "opened the door" to this line of inquiry. State v. Westall, 116 N.C. App. 534, 449 S.E.2d 24, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 671, 453 S.E.2d 185 (1994).

Cited in State v. Ramey, 318 N.C. 457, 349 S.E.2d 566 (1986); State v. Rogers, 109 N.C. App. 491, 428 S.E.2d 220 (1993).

Rule 604. Interpreters.

An interpreter is subject to the provisions of these rules relating to qualification as an expert and the administration of an oath or affirmation that he will make a true translation. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 604. There are no North Carolina cases on this point.

Rule 605. Competency of judge as witness.

The judge presiding at the trial may not testify in that trial as a witness. No objection need be made in order to preserve the point. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule, which is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 605, prevents a judge from testifying in a trial over which he is presiding. The Advisory Committee's Note states that:

"The rule provides for an 'automatic objection'. To require an actual objection would confront the opponent with a choice between not objecting, with the result of allowing the testimony, and objecting, with the probable result of excluding the testimony but at the price of continuing the trial before a judge likely to feel that his integrity had been attacked by the objector."

G.S. 15A-1223 requires a judge in a criminal case to disqualify himself if he is a witness in the case upon motion of the State or the defendant. Upon adoption of Rule 605, a conforming amendment should be made to G.S. 15A-1223 to remove the requirement for a motion to disqualify.

The question of whether a judge may testify in civil proceedings over which he is presiding does not appear to have arisen in North Carolina. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 53, at 198 (1982).

CASE NOTES

Instruction Calling for an Opinion. — In a trial in which the defendant claimed to have multiple personalities, the trial court could not, as the defense requested, instruct the jury that the person sitting at the defense table was not "James Woodard," but instead was "Johnny Gustud" (the defendant's "alternate personality"). If the judge had done so, he would have impermissibly expressed his opinion as to whether the defendant in fact had multiple personalities. State v. Woodard, 102 N.C. App. 687, 404 S.E.2d 6 (1990), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 329 N.C. 504, 407 S.E.2d 550 (1991).

Rule 606. Competency of juror as witness.

(a) At the trial. — A member of the jury may not testify as a witness before that jury in the trial of the case in which he is sitting as a juror. If he is called so to testify, the opposing party shall be afforded an opportunity to object out of the presence of the jury.

(b) Inquiry into validity of verdict or indictment. — Upon an inquiry into the validity of a verdict or indictment, a juror may not testify as to any matter or statement occurring during the course of the jury's deliberations or to the effect of anything upon his or any other juror's mind or emotions as influencing him to assent to or dissent from the verdict or indictment or concerning his mental processes in connection therewith, except that a juror may testify on the question whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jury's attention or whether any outside influence was improperly brought to bear upon any juror. Nor may his affidavit or evidence of any statement by him concerning a matter about which he would be precluded from testifying be received for these purposes. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 606.

Subdivision (a) provides that a juror may not testify as a witness in the trial in which he is sitting as a juror. There are no North Carolina cases on this point.

The Advisory Committee's Note to subdivision (a) states:

"The considerations which bear upon the permissibility of testimony by a juror in the trial in which he is sitting as juror bear an obvious similarity to those evoked when the judge is called as a witness. See Advisory Committee's Note to Rule 605. The judge is not, however, in this instance so involved as to call for departure from usual principles requiring objection to be made; hence the only provision on objection is that opportunity be afforded for its making out of the presence of the jury. Compare Rule 605."

Subdivision (b) concerns an inquiry into the validity of a verdict or indictment. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Whether testimony, affidavits, or statements of jurors should be received for the purpose of invalidating or supporting a verdict or indictment, and if so, under what circumstances, has given rise to substantial differences of opinion. The familiar rubric that a juror may not impeach his own verdict, dating from Lord Mansfield's time, is a gross oversimplification. The values sought to be promoted by excluding the evidence include freedom of deliberation, stability and finality of verdicts, and protection of jurors against annoyance and embarrassment. McDonald v. Pless, 238 U.S. 264 (1915). On the other hand, simply putting verdicts beyond effective reach can only promote irregularity and injustice. The rule offers an accommodation between these competing considerations.

The mental operations and emotional reactions of jurors in arriving at a given result would, if allowed as a subject of inquiry, place every verdict at the mercy of jurors and invite tampering and harassment.  The authorities are in virtually complete accord in excluding the evidence.  As to matters other than mental operations and emotional reactions of jurors, substantial authority refuses to allow a juror to disclose irregularities which occur in the jury room, but allows his testimony as to irregularities occurring outside and allows outsiders to testify as to occurrences both inside and out.  However, the door of the jury room is not necessarily a satisfactory dividing point, and the Supreme Court has refused to accept it for every situation. Mattox v. United States, 146 U.S. 140, ... (1892). Under the federal decisions the central focus has been upon insulation in the manner in which the jury reached its verdict, and this protection extends to each of the components of deliberation, including arguments, statements, discussions, mental and emotional reactions, votes, and any other feature of the process. Thus testimony or affidavits of jurors have been held incompetent to show a compromise verdict, Hyde v. United States, 225 U.S. 347, 382 (1912); a quotient verdict, McDonald v. Pless, 238 U.S. 264, (1915); speculation as to insurance coverage, Holden v. Porter, 405 F.2d 878 (10th Cir. 1969), Farmers Coop. Elev. Ass'n v. Strand, 382 F.2d 224, 230 (8th Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 1014; misinterpretation of instructions, Farmers Coop. Elev. Ass'n v. Strand, supra; mistake in returning verdict, United States v. Chereton, 309 F.2d 197 (6th Cir. 1962); interpretation of guilty plea by one defendant as implicating others, United States v. Crosby, 294 F.2d 928, 949 (2d Cir. 1961). The policy does not, however, foreclose testimony by jurors as to prejudicial extraneous information or influences injected into or brought to bear upon the deliberative process. Thus a juror is recognized as competent to testify to statements by the bailiff or the introduction of a prejudicial newspaper account into the jury room, Mattox v. United States, 146 U.S. 140 (1892). See also Parker v. Gladden, 385 U.S. 363 (1966)."

The exclusion is intended to encompass testimony about mental processes and testimony about any matter or statement occurring during the deliberations, except that testimony of either of these two types can be admitted if it relates to extraneous prejudicial information or improper outside influence.

The general rule in North Carolina has been that a juror's testimony or affidavit will not be received to impeach the verdict of the jury. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 65 (1982). The North Carolina rule, unlike Rule 606, does not apply to attempts to support a verdict. Id. An express, though limited exception to the anti-impeachment rule is provided in G.S. 15A-1240, which should be amended to conform to Rule 606.

Also, the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"This rule does not purport to specify the substantive grounds for setting aside verdicts for irregularity; it deals only with the competency of jurors to testify concerning those grounds. Allowing them to testify as to matters other than their own inner reactions involves no particular hazard to the values sought to be protected. The rule is based upon this conclusion. It makes no attempt to specify the substantive grounds for setting aside verdicts for irregularity."

CASE NOTES

Extraneous Information. — Extraneous information is information dealing with the defendant or the case which is being tried, which information reaches a juror without being introduced in evidence; it does not include information which a juror has gained in his or her experience which does not deal with the defendant or the case being tried. State v. Rosier, 322 N.C. 826, 370 S.E.2d 359 (1988).

The Supreme Court of North Carolina has interpreted extraneous information under subsection (b) to mean information that reaches a juror without being introduced into evidence and that deals specifically with the defendant or the case being tried. State v. Heatwole, 344 N.C. 1, 473 S.E.2d 310 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1122, 117 S. Ct. 1259, 137 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1997).

Official Comment Misstates Rule. — Hearing judge did not err by excluding juror testimony regarding how the extraneous information affected the jury's decision; although the official comment to this rule suggests that a juror is competent to testify regarding the effect of extraneous prejudicial information upon the juror's mental processes, the comment inadvertently misstates the rule since both subsection (b) of this rule and § 15A-1240 unambiguously prohibit inquiry into the effect of anything occurring during deliberations upon jurors' minds. State v. Lyles, 94 N.C. App. 240, 380 S.E.2d 390 (1989).

Section 15A-1240 and Subsection (b) of This Rule Do Not Conflict. — Although subsection (b) of this rule is broader in some respects than § 15A-1240, the two statutes do not conflict; the exceptions to the anti-impeachment rule listed in § 15A-1240 are designed to protect the same interests as, and are entirely consistent with, the exceptions in subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Lyles, 94 N.C. App. 240, 380 S.E.2d 390 (1989).

Impeachment of Civil Verdict Not Permitted. — Prior to July 1, 1984, the effective date of the Rules of Evidence, a juror's testimony could not be received even to show that extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jury's attention. While such evidence could be received in a criminal case because of the constitutional right of confrontation, no such exception to the general anti-impeachment rule applied in civil cases. Therefore, it was error for judge to grant a conditional new trial on the basis of juror misconduct proved solely by the juror's affidavit and testimony. Smith v. Price, 315 N.C. 523, 340 S.E.2d 408 (1986).

Impeachment of Criminal Verdict Not Permitted. — Affidavits of three jurors, asserting that the jury's verdict, as reported by the foreman, was not a true verdict, but represented their answer to the foreman's question of whether defendant might have been guilty of some other offense, but also asserting that all 12 jurors, when polled, agreed with the verdict of guilty, were not admissible to impeach the verdict. State v. Costner, 80 N.C. App. 666, 343 S.E.2d 241, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 709, 347 S.E.2d 444 (1986).

Jurors May Testify to Objective Events But Not Subjective Effect. — Jurors may testify regarding the objective events listed as exceptions in the statutes, but are prohibited from testifying to the subjective effect those matters had on their verdict. State v. Lyles, 94 N.C. App. 240, 380 S.E.2d 390 (1989).

Consideration of Possibility of Parole. — Allegations that jurors considered defendant's possibility of parole during their deliberations were allegations of internal influences on the jury; the information that defendant would be eligible for parole in about ten years was not information dealing with this particular defendant, but general information concerning the possibility of parole for a person sentenced to life imprisonment for first-degree murder; furthermore, there was no allegation that the jurors received information about parole eligibility from an outside source. State v. Quesinberry, 325 N.C. 125, 381 S.E.2d 681 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Quesinberry, 328 N.C. 288, 401 S.E.2d 632 (1991).

Writing on Letter as Extraneous Information and Matter Not in Evidence. — While viewing exhibit, juror peeled back the paper over the bottom of defendant's photograph, revealing the words, "Police Department, Wilson, North Carolina — 12291, 12-07-81"; therefore, where the jurors discussed the writing on the photograph as evidence that defendant had been in area in December 1981, a fact which, if true, contradicted the testimony of defendant's alibi witnesses, the writing on defendant's photograph was both "extraneous information" within the meaning of subsection (b) of this rule and a matter not in evidence, which implicated defendant's confrontation right within the meaning of § 15A-1240(c)(1). State v. Lyles, 94 N.C. App. 240, 380 S.E.2d 390 (1989).

Information allegedly received by jurors did not concern either the defendant or the case being tried, but was rather information about the foreman's belief or impression about the impact of punitive damage awards; therefore, the trial court correctly refused to consider the juror affidavits under section (b). Berrier v. Thrift, 107 N.C. App. 356, 420 S.E.2d 206 (1992), cert. denied, 333 N.C. 254, 424 S.E.2d 918 (1993).

Jurors' Affidavits Held Not Extraneous Information. — In prosecution for first-degree sexual offense where the court instructed the jury not to talk to anyone about the case and not to read, watch or listen to any publication or broadcast concerning the trial, affidavits containing statements by the jurors that the foreman of the jury had watched the program on child abuse and that the foreman told them about a 15 to 17 year old friend of his who had been raped, did not deal with extraneous information within the meaning of this rule. State v. Rosier, 322 N.C. 826, 370 S.E.2d 359 (1988).

Juror's Question to Psychology Professor Did Not Entitle Defendant to Relief. — Defendant was not entitled to relief under subsection (b) where a juror, who was enrolled in a psychology class, asked his professor if schizophrenics or paranoid schizophrenics commit violent acts. State v. Heatwole, 344 N.C. 1, 473 S.E.2d 310 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1122, 117 S. Ct. 1259, 137 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1997).

Admissibility of Jurors' Affidavits. — Subsection (b) reflects the common law rule that affidavits of jurors are inadmissible for the purposes of impeaching the verdict except as they pertain to extraneous influences that may have affected the jury's decision. State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995).

Evidence of a jury foreman's error in writing down the verdict was not excludable under this rule, as it dealt with a clerical error occurring after deliberations rather than with a matter occurring during deliberations. Chandler v. U-Line Corp., 91 N.C. App. 315, 371 S.E.2d 717, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 623, 374 S.E.2d 583 (1988).

Bible Reading by Juror. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion by failing to inquire further into allegation that a juror read the Bible aloud in the jury room prior to the commencement of deliberations and prior to the trial court's instructions to the jury as the alleged Bible reading was not directed to the facts or governing law at issue in the case. State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 876, 118 S. Ct. 196, 139 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1024, 118 S. Ct. 1309, 140 L. Ed. 2d 473 (1998).

Testimony in Criminal Contempt Hearing. — Jurors' testimony regarding the alleged misconduct of a fellow juror was admissible in a criminal contempt hearing, fell within exception to subsection (b) of this rule, and did not frustrate public policy considerations underlying this rule. State v. Pierce, 134 N.C. App. 148, 516 S.E.2d 916 (1999).

Rule 607. Who may impeach.

The credibility of a witness may be attacked by any party, including the party calling him. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 607. The rule abandons the traditional common law rule that a party "vouches" for a witness by calling him and, therefore, may not impeach his own witness. The traditional rule has been the subject of numerous exceptions. See N.C. Civ. Pro. Rule 43(b); Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 40 (1982). The substantial inroads into the old rule made by statutes and decisions are evidence of doubts as to its basic soundness and workability. As the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The traditional rule against impeaching one's own witness is abandoned as based on false premises. A party does not hold out his witnesses as worthy of belief, since he rarely has a free choice in selecting them. Denial of the right leaves the party at the mercy of the witness and the adversary."

The impeaching proof must be relevant within the meaning of Rule 401 and Rule 403 and must in fact be impeaching. See Ordover, Surprise! That Damaging Turncoat Witness Is Still With Us, 5 Hofstra L. Rev. 65, 70 (1976).

CASE NOTES

Prior Law Distinguished. — Prior to the adoption of the North Carolina Rules of Evidence, the general rule was that the State was prohibited from impeaching its own witness. However, this rule now provides that a witness may be impeached by any party, including the party who called him. State v. Covington, 315 N.C. 352, 338 S.E.2d 310 (1986).

The anti-impeachment rule and exceptions thereto were abolished with the adoption of the North Carolina Rules of Evidence. State v. Hosey, 318 N.C. 330, 348 S.E.2d 805 (1986).

It is not the intent of this rule to provide a subterfuge for getting otherwise impermissible hearsay before the jury in the guise of impeachment, and this tactic is expressly disapproved. State v. Bell, 87 N.C. App. 626, 362 S.E.2d 288 (1987).

Prior statements by a defendant are a proper subject of inquiry by cross-examination. State v. Aguallo, 322 N.C. 818, 370 S.E.2d 676 (1988).

Prior Statement Offered for Impeachment or Corroboration. — Prior statement which corroborated witness' direct testimony, although it tended to impeach his cross-examination testimony, was properly introduced where it was not offered as substantive evidence but was admitted for a limited purpose, impeachment or corroboration, whichever the jury found. State v. Ayudkya, 96 N.C. App. 606, 386 S.E.2d 604 (1989).

Whether or not a witness has given prior inconsistent statements is a collateral matter, and when a witness is cross-examined on a collateral matter, the party who draws out unfavorable answers will not be permitted to contradict them using other testimony. State v. Jerrells, 98 N.C. App. 318, 390 S.E.2d 722, cert. denied, 326 N.C. 802, 393 S.E.2d 901 (1990).

Use of Prior Inconsistent Statement for Corroborative Purposes. — Where State's witness admitted giving a statement, but denied the specifics of what the State claimed he said, the proper use of his prior statement for corroborative purposes was to have detective attest to the fact that a prior statement was indeed made, but not to prove the facts to which the statement purportedly related. State v. Jerrells, 98 N.C. App. 318, 390 S.E.2d 722, cert. denied, 326 N.C. 802, 393 S.E.2d 901 (1990).

Inquiry Prior to Allowing Impeachment of State's Witness. — The better practice continues to be for the trial court, before allowing impeachment of the State's own witness by a prior inconsistent statement, to make findings and conclusions with respect to whether the witness' testimony is other than what the State had reason to expect, or whether a need to impeach otherwise exists. State v. Bell, 87 N.C. App. 626, 362 S.E.2d 288 (1987).

Impeachment of Own Witness by State. — After State's witness testified that his identification of defendant was based on his prior photographic identification, the State had the right under this rule to elicit contradictory testimony. Furthermore, even under the old impeachment rule, this evidence would have been admissible. State v. Covington, 315 N.C. 352, 338 S.E.2d 310 (1986).

Where witness admitted that she had not told the police or the prosecutors during their meeting that she intended to change her version of the facts, that she felt as though the trial was her "chance to speak out" and that she was scared to tell the detectives prior to trial that defendant told her another person shot the victim, thus indicating that she had not spoken to the State about her change of testimony prior to trial, the State was surprised at trial by witness's change of her version of the facts, and the trial court properly allowed the State to impeach her with her prior inconsistent statement. State v. Williams, 341 N.C. 1, 459 S.E.2d 208 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1128, 116 S. Ct. 945, 133 L. Ed. 2d 870 (1996).

The State properly impeached two of its witnesses concerning the inconsistencies in their prior statements where both admitted making statements to a detective in which they discussed details of the robbery and assault of the victim and implicated defendant but, then subsequently testified that certain parts of their statements as recounted were inaccurate. State v. Riccard, 142 N.C. App. 298, 542 S.E.2d 320 (2001).

Defendant cannot call witness and then attempt to impeach him by inquiring into prior charges or indictments against the witness. State v. Mills, 332 N.C. 392, 420 S.E.2d 114 (1992).

Prior bad acts and prior inconsistent statements are proper subjects for cross-examination. State v. Belton, 77 N.C. App. 559, 335 S.E.2d 522 (1985).

Impeachment Improper of Witness Where Officer Could Have Given Testimony. — Once the trial court determined that witness was a hostile or unwilling witness, it properly permitted the state to subject her to cross-examination. However, the trial court erred in permitting police officer to testify as to the substance of the prior statements denied by witness since the officer could properly have been called to contradict the fact, denied by witness, that she had made the statement to him on the specified date. But, it was improper to impeach her concerning what she had or had not told officer by offering the testimony of officer. State v. Hunt, 324 N.C. 343, 378 S.E.2d 754 (1989).

Admission of Impeachment Testimony Upheld. — Where prosecutor was unaware of witness's prior inconsistent statement until after he had testified, and defendant offered substantially the same evidence through his own witness, the admission of impeachment testimony without a preliminary inquiry by the trial court was not prejudicial error. State v. Bell, 87 N.C. App. 626, 362 S.E.2d 288 (1987).

The state was permitted, under this rule, to question its witness about his prior criminal activity only after defendant himself had elicited the testimony on cross-examination, where the questions appeared to have been asked in order to clarify state witness' testimony on cross-examination. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Statement Held Inadmissible for Impeachment. — Where witness never testified to his recollection of the events in question either before or after the court admitted his statement, he never testified to something with which his statement was inconsistent. Thus his statement was not admissible for the limited purpose of impeachment, and the court erred in admitting it. State v. Platt, 85 N.C. App. 220, 354 S.E.2d 332, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 516, 358 S.E.2d 529 (1987).

Witness Summary Improperly and Prejudicially Admitted. — Defendant was entitled to yet another new trial where a witness' purported summary, allegedly written by an investigating officer who was not called as a witness by the State, was improperly and prejudicially admitted into evidence although it was not admissible as a recorded recollection under Rule 803(5), did not refresh the witness' recollection, was not properly used to impeach her under this rule and the witness, in fact, objected to parts of the statement. State v. Spinks, 136 N.C. App. 153, 523 S.E.2d 129 (1999).

Questions to Rebuttal Witness. — Impeaching questions about a previous alleged knifing incident asked by prosecutor of rebuttal witness held not to constitute error. State v. Price, 118 N.C. App. 212, 454 S.E.2d 820 (1995).

Rule 608. Evidence of character and conduct of witness.

(a) Opinion and reputation evidence of character. — The credibility of a witness may be attacked or supported by evidence in the form of reputation or opinion as provided in Rule 405(a), but subject to these limitations: (1) the evidence may refer only to character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, and (2) evidence of truthful character is admissible only after the character of the witness for truthfulness has been attacked by opinion or reputation evidence or otherwise.

(b) Specific instances of conduct. — Specific instances of the conduct of a witness, for the purpose of attacking or supporting his credibility, other than conviction of crime as provided in Rule 609, may not be proved by extrinsic evidence. They may, however, in the discretion of the court, if probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness, be inquired into on cross-examination of the witness (1) concerning his character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, or (2) concerning the character for truthfulness or untruthfulness of another witness as to which character the witness being cross-examined has testified.

The giving of testimony, whether by an accused or by any other witness, does not operate as a waiver of his privilege against self-incrimination when examined with respect to matters which relate only to credibility. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 608, except for the addition of the phrase "as provided in Rule 405(a)" to subdivision (a).

Subdivision (a) allows the credibility of a witness to be attacked or supported by evidence in the form of reputation or opinion. Admitting opinion evidence to prove character is a change in North Carolina practice. See Commentary to Rule 405. The reference to Rule 405(a) is to make it clear that expert testimony on the credibility of a witness is not admissible.

The rule in North Carolina has been that evidence of a specific trait of character is admissible only if asked on cross-examination or if "volunteered" by the witness on direct examination in answer to a question which asks if the witness knows the general reputation or reputation and character of the subject. In both cases, the witness may testify to character traits that are wholly irrelevant to any issue in the case. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence §§ 114, 115 (1982). The North Carolina rule is unique, and appears to have its origin in a misinterpretation of earlier opinions. Id. § 114.

The first limitation of subdivision (a) changes this result by confining evidence of specific traits of a witness to character for truthfulness or untruthfulness and permitting counsel to ask questions regarding these traits on direct examination or cross-examination. However, evidence of truthfulness is permitted only after the character of the witness for truthfulness has been attacked.

In North Carolina the necessity for impeachment as a prerequisite to corroboration has been more theoretical than real. Id. § 50. Adoption of this rule strengthens the limitation. The Advisory Committee's Note states that:

"Opinion or reputation that the witness is untruthful specifically qualifies as an attack under the rule, and evidence of misconduct, including conviction of crime, and of corruption also fall within this category. Evidence of bias or interest does not. McCormick § 49; 4 Wigmore §§ 1106, 1107. Whether evidence in the form of contradiction is an attack upon the character of the witness must depend upon the circumstances. McCormick § 49. (Cf. 4 Wigmore §§ 1108, 1109)."

As to the use of specific instances on direct by an opinion witness, see the Commentary to Rule 405, supra.

Subdivision (b) generally bars evidence of specific instances of conduct of a witness for the purpose of attacking or supporting his credibility. Evidence of wrongful acts admissible under Rule 404(b) is not within this rule and is admissible by extrinsic evidence or by cross-examination of any witness.

There are two exceptions under subdivision (b). Conviction of a crime as a technique of impeachment is treated in detail in Rule 609 and is merely recognized in this rule as an exception to the general rule excluding evidence of specific incidents for impeachment purposes.

The second exception allows particular instances of conduct, though not the subject of criminal conviction, to be inquired into on cross-examination of the principal witness himself or of a witness who testifies concerning his character for truthfulness. Current North Carolina practice allows only inquiry concerning the specific acts of the principal witness himself. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence §§ 111, 115 (1982). The Advisory Committee's Note states that:

"Effective cross-examination demands that some allowance be made for going into matters of this kind, that the possibilities of abuse are substantial. Consequently safeguards are erected in the form of specific requirements that the instances inquired into be probative of truthfulness or its opposite and not remote in time. Also, the overriding protection of Rule 403 requires that the probative value not be outweighed by danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of issues, or misleading the jury, and that of Rule 611 bars harassment and undue embarrassment."

The last sentence of Rule 608 constitutes a rejection of the doctrine of such cases as State v. Foster, 284 N.C. 259 (1973), that any past criminal act relevant to credibility may be inquired into on cross-examination, in apparent disregard of the privilege against self-incrimination. As the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"While it is clear that an ordinary witness cannot make a partial disclosure of incriminating matter and then invoke the privilege on cross-examination, no tenable contention can be made that merely by testifying he waives his right to foreclose inquiry on cross-examination into criminal activities for the purpose of attacking his credibility. So to hold would reduce the privilege to a nullity. While it is true that an accused, unlike an ordinary witness, has an option whether to testify, if the option can be exercised only at the price of opening up inquiry as to any and all criminal acts committed during his lifetime, the right to testify could scarcely be said to possess much vitality. In Griffin v. California, 380 U.S. 609, 85 S.Ct. 1229, 14 L.Ed.2d 106 (1965), the Court held that allowing comment on the election of an accused not to testify exacted a constitutionally impermissible price, and so here. While no specific provision in terms confers constitutional status on the right of an accused to take the stand in his own defense, the existence of the right is so completely recognized that a denial of it or substantial infringement upon it would surely be of due process dimensions. See Ferguson v. Georgia, 365 U.S. 570, 81 S.Ct. 756, 5 L.Ed.2d 783 (1961); McCormick, § 131; 8 Wigmore § 2276 (McNaughton Rev. 1961). In any event, wholly aside from constitutional considerations, the provision represents a sound policy."

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Opinion and Reputation Evidence of Character.
III. Specific Instances of Conduct.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Departure from Former Practice. — Subsection (b) of this rule represents a drastic departure from former traditional North Carolina practice, which allowed a defendant to be cross-examined for impeachment purposes regarding any prior act of misconduct not resulting in conviction, so long as the prosecutor had a good-faith basis for the questions. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

This rule curtailed former North Carolina practice allowing cross-examination of a defendant for impeachment purposes regarding any prior misconduct not resulting in a conviction, as long as the prosecutor had a good-faith basis for the question. State v. Scott, 318 N.C. 237, 347 S.E.2d 414 (1986).

With the introduction of subsection (a) of this rule, the long-standing North Carolina rule against allowing a witness to testify as to his or her own opinion of another's character for truth and veracity was abrogated. State v. Morrison, 84 N.C. App. 41, 351 S.E.2d 810, cert. denied, 319 N.C. 408, 354 S.E.2d 724 (1987).

Subsection (b) of this rule represents a drastic departure from former traditional North Carolina practice, which allowed cross-examination for impeachment purposes regarding any prior act of misconduct if the question was asked in good faith. State v. Lamb, 321 N.C. 633, 365 S.E.2d 600 (1988).

Subsection (b) of this rule limits the State in its inquiry to types of misconduct which involve truthfulness or untruthfulness. State v. Woodard, 102 N.C. App. 687, 404 S.E.2d 6 (1990), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 329 N.C. 504, 407 S.E.2d 550 (1991).

But State allowed questions about defendant's "Affidavit of Indigency". — Limited nature of questions permitted by the trial court in allowing the State to cross-examine the defendant regarding the contents of his "Affidavit of Indigency," filed in conjunction with his motion that counsel be appointed for trial, fell within the parameters of subsection (b). State v. Larrimore, 340 N.C. 119, 456 S.E.2d 789 (1995).

Prior statements by a defendant are a proper subject of inquiry by cross-examination. State v. Aguallo, 322 N.C. 818, 370 S.E.2d 676 (1988).

Expert Opinion on Witness's Procedures And Practices. — The court rightfully refused the testimony of defendant's expert, a private detective and retired police officer of 30 years, where the jury was perfectly capable of judging the improper methods and procedures used by the undercover narcotics officer without the assistance of the expert; the testimony was irrelevant, had insufficient probative value on the facts to be proved, and violated the rule prohibiting expert testimony as to witness credibility, § 8C-1, Rules 405(a) and 608, as read together. State v. Mackey, 352 N.C. 650, 535 S.E.2d 555 (2000).

Subsection (b) of this rule does not allow the use of extrinsic evidence concerning that misconduct to impeach a witness. State v. Woodard, 102 N.C. App. 687, 404 S.E.2d 6 (1990), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 329 N.C. 504, 407 S.E.2d 550 (1991).

Section 8C-1, Rule 404(b) Distinguished. — Although subsection (b) of this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) concern the use of specific instances of a person's conduct, the two rules have very different purposes and are intended to govern entirely different uses of extrinsic conduct evidence. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

Subsection (b) of this rule governs reference to specific instances of conduct only on cross-examination regarding the credibility of any witness and prohibits proof by extrinsic evidence. Under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b), however, evidence regarding extrinsic acts is not limited to cross-examination and may be proved by extrinsic evidence as well as through cross-examination. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

"Extrinsic conduct evidence" refers to evidence of a specific prior or subsequent act, not charged in the indictment, which may be criminal but, as applied in subsection (b) of this rule, does not result in a conviction. Criminal convictions are included in Rule 404(b). State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

When § 8C-1, Rule 611 Applicable. — While specific instances of drug use or mental instability are not directly probative of truthfulness, they may bear upon credibility in other ways, in which case § 8C-1, Rule 611 is applicable to the admission of such evidence rather than this rule. State v. Williams, 330 N.C. 711, 412 S.E.2d 359 (1992).

Violation of Rule Does Not Require New Trial. — Although extrinsic evidence of sexual misconduct is not in any way probative of a witness' character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, even so, any error in admitting evidence in violation of this rule does not require a new trial unless there is a reasonable possibility that, had the error in question not been committed, a different result would have been reached at trial. State v. Moore, 103 N.C. App. 87, 404 S.E.2d 695 (1991).

Discretion of Court. — Although this Rule allows evidence of prior acts or misconduct to be admissible for the purpose of impeaching the credibility of a witness, whether to admit such evidence is within the trial court's discretion and will not be overturned absent an abuse of discretion. Ferebee v. Hardison, 126 N.C. App. 230, 484 S.E.2d 857 (1997), rev'd in part, 347 N.C. 346, 492 S.E.2d 354 (1997).

It was within the court's discretion to allow the State to question defendant briefly as to his knowledge regarding insurance fraud committed by his brother and parents, where the possibility that he was aware of such a scam would arguably be probative of his truthfulness. State v. Kimble, 140 N.C. App. 153, 535 S.E.2d 882 (2000).

Applied in State v. Hamrick, 81 N.C. App. 508, 344 S.E.2d 316 (1986); Frye v. Anderson, 86 N.C. App. 94, 356 S.E.2d 370 (1987); State v. Russell, 91 N.C. App. 581, 372 S.E.2d 880 (1988); Hinnant v. Holland, 92 N.C. App. 142, 374 S.E.2d 152 (1988); State v. Hunt, 325 N.C. 187, 381 S.E.2d 453 (1989); State v. Stevenson, 328 N.C. 542, 402 S.E.2d 396 (1991); State v. Wills, 110 N.C. II. OPINION AND REPUTATION EVIDENCE OF CHARACTER.

Before a witness may testify as to another witness's reputation, a foundation must be laid showing that the testifying witness has sufficient contact with the community to enable him or her to be qualified as knowing the general reputation of the person in question. State v. Morrison, 84 N.C. App. 41, 351 S.E.2d 810, cert. denied, 319 N.C. 408, 354 S.E.2d 724 (1987).

The phrase "as provided in § 8C-1, Rule 405(a)" was inserted in subsection (a) of this rule to make clear that expert testimony on the credibility of a witness is not admissible. State v. Aguallo, 318 N.C. 590, 350 S.E.2d 76 (1986).

Opinion and Reputation Evidence on Credibility. — Both opinion and reputation evidence are admissible as evidence pertaining to a witness' credibility under this rule and Rule 405. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

Expert Opinion on Credibility. — This rule and § 8C-1, Rule 405(a), read together, forbid an expert's opinion as to the credibility of a witness. State v. Heath, 316 N.C. 337, 341 S.E.2d 565 (1986).

In a prosecution for taking indecent liberties with a child, testimony of two witnesses for the State, a pediatrician and a child psychologist, that in their opinion the child had testified truthfully, did not meet the requirements for expert testimony, as it concerned the credibility of a witness, a field in which jurors are supreme and require no assistance, rather than some fact involving scientific, technical or other specialized knowledge, and as character evidence, the testimony violated the provisions of § 8C-1, Rule 405(a) and this rule. State v. Holloway, 82 N.C. App. 586, 347 S.E.2d 72 (1986).

Testimony of pediatrician that in her opinion the victim of alleged sexual abuse was "believable" was inadmissible under this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 405. State v. Aguallo, 318 N.C. 590, 350 S.E.2d 76 (1986).

This rule and § 8C-1, Rule 405(a), read together, forbid an expert's opinion testimony as to the credibility of a witness. State v. Chul Yun Kim, 318 N.C. 614, 350 S.E.2d 347 (1986).

Testimony of child psychologist as to child rape victim's truthfulness during her evaluation and treatment was not admissible, where her sessions with the child began as a result of the acts which resulted in charges against the defendant and involved psychotherapy to assist the victim in overcoming her negative responses to the incidents, as the question posed by the prosecutor to which this testimony was responsive clearly invoked the psychologist's status as an expert and sought to establish the credibility of the victim as a witness. State v. Chul Yun Kim, 318 N.C. 614, 350 S.E.2d 347 (1986).

Section 8C-1, Rule 405(a) and subsection (a) of this rule, read together, forbids an expert's opinion testimony as to the credibility of a witness; this rule applies to child witnesses as well as adults. State v. Jenkins, 83 N.C. App. 616, 351 S.E.2d 299 (1985), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 675, 356 S.E.2d 791 (1987).

In prosecution for taking indecent liberties with children, the trial court committed prejudicial error in allowing a child psychologist to give his expert opinion as to whether children lie about sexual abuse, where his testimony referred in part to the individual witnesses and not just to children in general. State v. Jenkins, 83 N.C. App. 616, 351 S.E.2d 299 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 675, 356 S.E.2d 791 (1987).

This rule and § 8C-1, Rule 405(a) prohibit the admission of expert testimony on the issue of credibility of a witness. State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, writ denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 66, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987), holding, however, that erroneous admission of testimony did not entitle defendant to a new trial absent prejudice.

Expert testimony as to the credibility of a witness is not admissible. State v. Huang, 99 N.C. App. 658, 394 S.E.2d 279 (1990), vacated in part, 107 N.C. App. 710, 421 S.E.2d 812 (1992).

In child sexual abuse case where the medical evidence was in conflict, testimony by doctor that was offered to show that the victim was being truthful about allegations was prejudicial. For this reason defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Baymon, 336 N.C. 748, 446 S.E.2d 1 (1994).

Although Rules 405 and 608, when read together, prohibit an expert witness from commenting on the credibility of another witness, Rule 702 allows expert testimony where the expert's testimony goes to the reliability of a diagnosis and not to the credibility of a rape victim. State v. Marine, 135 N.C. App. 279, 520 S.E.2d 65 (1999).

Expert's Testimony Held Not Expression of Opinion. — In trial on first-degree rape charges where, when asked to "describe the victim emotionally" during counseling sessions, the victim's counselor, who was qualified as an expert, responded, "Genuine," the witness was testifying that the emotions of the victim during the counseling session were genuine emotions, and was not testifying that she believed what the victim told her was true, nor was she giving her opinion as to the victim's character for truthfulness in general; therefore, such a response was proper. State v. Wise, 326 N.C. 421, 390 S.E.2d 142, cert. denied, 498 U.S. 853, 111 S. Ct. 146, 112 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1990).

Testimony as to Credibility Distinguished from Testimony Relating to Diagnosis. — While the testimony of an expert to the effect that a prosecuting witness is believable, credible, or telling the truth is inadmissible evidence, those cases in which the disputed testimony concerns the credibility of a witness' accusation of a defendant must be distinguished from cases in which the expert's testimony relates to a diagnosis based on the expert's examination of the witness. State v. Bailey, 89 N.C. App. 212, 365 S.E.2d 651 (1988).

Tendency to Fabricate. — In prosecution for second degree rape and sexual offense, the trial court erred in permitting the prosecutor to pose a question to an expert in clinical psychology regarding whether the 13-year-old victim had a mental condition which would cause her to fabricate a story about the sexual assault. State v. Heath, 316 N.C. 337, 341 S.E.2d 565 (1986).

Truthfulness of Witness. — Testimony by FBI agent regarding a State's witness was given for the purpose of laying the foundation for the agent's opinion as to the witness's truthfulness and was admissible. State v. Sidden, 347 N.C. 218, 491 S.E.2d 225 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1097, 118 S. Ct. 1583, 140 L. Ed. 2d 797 (1998).

Truthfulness of Defendant. — The prosecutor properly elicited information from defendant about his numerous prison infractions to show his character for untruthfulness where defendant testified on direct examination about the living conditions that he endured while on lockup and while on maximum security but never explained why he was confined in that manner. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Character for Untruthfulness. — Where defendant sought to reveal that two years ago witness had deceived a person he was investigating in an effort to obtain a confession for that crime, the evidence was probative of the witness's character for untruthfulness, was not too remote and was unfairly prejudicial; thus, the defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Baldwin, 125 N.C. App. 530, 482 S.E.2d 1 (1997), cert. granted, 345 N.C. 756, 485 S.E.2d 299 (1997), discretionary review improvidently allowed, 347 N.C. 348, 492 S.E.2d 354 (1997).

Ability to Distinguish Reality from Fantasy. — Question asked of expert as to whether or not mentally retarded adult who had been sexually assaulted had any mental condition which would generally affect her ability to distinguish reality from fantasy was within the scope of the expert witness' expertise and did not amount to an impermissible opinion with respect to defendant's guilt or innocence. State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

Evidence as to Plaintiff's Character in Civil Suit. — In a civil suit for assault and battery, where in addition to pleading self defense and alleging that plaintiff assaulted defendant, defendant sought to cast doubt on plaintiff's truthfulness by rigorously cross-examining him about his version of the incident, as well as about specific misdeeds that tended to sully plaintiff's character, plaintiff had a right to attempt to counteract these reflections upon his veracity and character with evidence as to his reputation for truthfulness, and as to his general character. McNeill v. Durham County ABC Bd., 87 N.C. App. 50, 359 S.E.2d 500 (1987), modified on other grounds, 322 N.C. 425, 368 S.E.2d 619 (1988), rehearing denied, 322 N.C. 838, 371 S.E.2d 278 (1988).

Question of Truthfulness Held Proper on Redirect. — Where following cross-examination, during which defense counsel asked the child if she had ever told a lie, and where the State asked the child if she had testified truthfully, witness' statement that she had testified truthfully was not character evidence since the question was a proper one to ask on redirect examination. State v. Hewett, 93 N.C. App. 1, 376 S.E.2d 467 (1989).

Failure to Object to Expert Opinion on Credibility. — Defense counsel's failure to object to a social worker's testimony that child/victim's statements were believable did not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel, where testimony was elicited by defense counsel in an effort to show that child's sexual knowledge resulted from a prior incident of sexual abuse. State v. Pretty, 134 N.C. App. 379, 517 S.E.2d 677 (1999), cert. denied, appeal dismissed, 351 N.C. 117, 540 S.E.2d 745 (1999).

Evidence Held Admissible. — In trial for sexual offense in the first degree, the trial judge did not err in permitting State's rebuttal witness, Chief Medical Examiner for the State, to testify that in his opinion scratch marks on child's back were not consistent with self-mutilation and in allowing pediatrician to offer her opinion that the injuries were neither accidental nor self-inflicted. State v. Kennedy, 320 N.C. 20, 357 S.E.2d 359 (1987).

Psychologist's testimony that child victim responded to test questions in an "honest fashion ... admitting that she was in a fair amount of emotional distress" did not constitute an expert opinion as to her character or credibility, but was merely a statement of opinion by a trained professional, based upon personal knowledge and professional expertise, that the test results were reliable because the victim seemed to respond to the questions in an honest fashion. State v. Kennedy, 320 N.C. 20, 357 S.E.2d 359 (1987).

In trial for sexual offense in the first degree, it was not improper to allow both psychologist and pediatrician to testify concerning the symptoms and characteristics of sexually abused children and to state the opinion that the symptoms exhibited by the victim were consistent with sexual or physical abuse. State v. Kennedy, 320 N.C. 20, 357 S.E.2d 359 (1987).

In prosecution in which defendant was convicted of taking indecent liberties with a minor, admission of testimony of psychologist who examined child at the request of DSS as to her anxiousness and anger during his examination of her and his professional expert opinion as to the relationship between her anxiousness and anger and the events which she described during the examination was not error. State v. Bailey, 89 N.C. App. 212, 365 S.E.2d 651 (1988).

In a prosecution in which defendant was convicted of taking indecent liberties with a minor, it was not error for the trial court to permit social worker and pediatrician to give expert opinion testimony that child had been sexually abused. State v. Bailey, 89 N.C. App. 212, 365 S.E.2d 651 (1988).

Where State asked child "Do you recall indicating earlier that you understood what it meant to tell the truth?", child's statements did not constitute improper character evidence since question was simply attempt by assistant district attorney to prompt child to speak. State v. Hewett, 93 N.C. App. 1, 376 S.E.2d 467 (1989).

Plaintiff's evidence placed defendant's reputation for truthfulness in issue when plaintiff testified that defendant paid fee to himself under power of attorney without her (plaintiff's) consent, thus implying that defendant had engaged in self-dealing in violation of his fiduciary duty to plaintiff; therefore, defendant was entitled to submit evidence of his reputation for truthfulness to help rebut any presumption that as a fiduciary he was guilty of constructive fraud in procuring a benefit for himself. Williams v. Randolph, 94 N.C. App. 413, 380 S.E.2d 553, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 437, 384 S.E.2d 547 (1989).

Where, on cross-examination of the victim, the defendant's attorney repeatedly attempted to impeach her by asking her about prior inconsistent statements made to her doctor, her mother, and at the preliminary hearing, this cross-examination constituted an attack on her credibility such that the State could then present reputation or opinion evidence as to the victim's reputation for truthfulness. State v. Hall, 98 N.C. App. 1, 390 S.E.2d 169 (1990), rev'd on other grounds, 330 N.C. 808, 412 S.E.2d 883 (1990).

Evidence Held Inadmissible. — Expert witness' answer on cross-examination that his opinion about the "improbability" of hair originating from a source other than defendant was based on nonscientific considerations, addressed the credibility of other witnesses and was an expression of opinion as to defendant's guilt and thus violated the Rules of Evidence. State v. Faircloth, 99 N.C. App. 685, 394 S.E.2d 198 (1990).

Witness statement that defendant had been in trouble with the law from the time that he was twelve years old was not admissible under either Rule 405(a) or subsection (a) of this rule. State v. Hunt, 339 N.C. 622, 457 S.E.2d 276 (1994).

III. SPECIFIC INSTANCES OF CONDUCT.

Admissibility of Evidence Under Subsection (b). — Subsection (b) of this rule addresses the admissibility of specific instances of conduct, as opposed to opinion or reputation evidence, only in the very narrow instance where (1) the purpose of producing the evidence is to impeach or enhance credibility by proving that the witness' conduct indicates his character for truthfulness or untruthfulness; (2) the conduct in question is in fact probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness and is not too remote in time; (3) the conduct in question did not result in a conviction; and (4) the inquiry into the conduct takes place during cross-examination. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

Inquiries concerning prior criminal acts or specific acts of misconduct must be limited to conduct which bears upon or is relevant to the witness' propensity to truthfulness or untruthfulness. State v. Bailey, 80 N.C. App. 678, 343 S.E.2d 434, petition for cert. improvidently allowed, 318 N.C. 652, 350 S.E.2d 94 (1986).

Determination of admissibility under this rule rests on whether the alleged prior misconduct elicited at trial was probative of defendant's truthfulness or lack thereof. State v. Scott, 318 N.C. 237, 347 S.E.2d 414 (1986).

Specific instances of the conduct of a witness, for the purpose of attacking the witness' credibility, may be inquired into on cross-examination of the witness only if they are "probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness." State v. Clemmons, 319 N.C. 192, 353 S.E.2d 209 (1987).

Under subsection (b) of this rule, evidence of a specific instance of conduct is not admissible for impeachment purposes unless it is in fact probative of truthfulness. State v. Lamb, 321 N.C. 633, 365 S.E.2d 600 (1988).

Evidence routinely disapproved of as irrelevant to the question of a witness' veracity includes specific instances of conduct relating to violence against other persons. State v. Lamb, 321 N.C. 633, 365 S.E.2d 600 (1988).

Prior bad acts and prior inconsistent statements are proper subjects for cross-examination. State v. Belton, 77 N.C. App. 559, 335 S.E.2d 522 (1985).

Cross-Examination on Witness' Prior Violent Conduct. — Trial court properly denied defendant the right to cross-examine a State's witness regarding his prior violent conduct. State v. Holston, 134 N.C. App. 599, 518 S.E.2d 216 (1999).

Veracity or Lack Thereof Is Only Relevant Trait Under Subsection (b). — Because the only purpose for which evidence is sought to be admitted under subsection (b) of this rule is to impeach or bolster the credibility of a witness, the only character trait relevant to the issue of credibility is veracity or the lack of it. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986); State v. Harris, 323 N.C. 112, 371 S.E.2d 689 (1988).

Probative Value Must Be Weighed Against Potential Prejudice. — If the proffered evidence meets the four enumerated prerequisites for admission under subsection (b) of this rule, before admitting the evidence the trial judge must determine, in his discretion, pursuant to § 8C-1, Rule 403, that the probative value of the evidence is not outweighed by the risk of unfair prejudice, confusion of issues or misleading the jury, and that the questioning will not harass or unduly embarrass the witness. Even if the trial judge allows the inquiry on cross-examination, extrinsic evidence of the conduct is not admissible. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

Questions About Collateral Misdeeds Must Have Good Faith Basis. — A defendant who takes the stand may be asked about collateral misdeeds that tend to show his criminal conduct, intent or motive in the case being tried. But such questions must have a good faith basis. State v. Flannigan, 78 N.C. App. 629, 338 S.E.2d 109 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 197, 341 S.E.2d 572 (1986).

And Must Be Supported by Evidence. — The State, by questions put to a defendant during cross-examination, may not inform the jury of purported misdeeds by the defendant that firsthand knowledge of its source does not support. State v. Flannigan, 78 N.C. App. 629, 338 S.E.2d 109 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 197, 341 S.E.2d 572 (1986).

The prior use of false identification is probative of a witness' tendency to be truthful. State v. Freeman, 79 N.C. App. 177, 339 S.E.2d 56, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 338, 346 S.E.2d 144 (1986), rehearing denied, 318 N.C. 509, 349 S.E.2d 868 (1986), overruled in part by State v. Rogers, 346 N.C. 262, 485 S.E.2d 619 (1997).

Extrinsic evidence of sexual misconduct is not in any way probative of a witness' character for truthfulness or untruthfulness. State v. Gordon, 316 N.C. 497, 342 S.E.2d 509 (1986); State v. Clemmons, 319 N.C. 192, 353 S.E.2d 209 (1987).

Adultery is not the type of misconduct which falls under Rule 608(b). State v. Woodard, 102 N.C. App. 687, 404 S.E.2d 6 (1990), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 329 N.C. 504, 407 S.E.2d 550 (1991).

Prior Drug Deals. — Court's ruling that defendant's prior drug deals could only come in if he "opened the door" by taking the stand and denying he had ever dealt drugs was upheld where defendant did not show prejudice because he did not make an offer of proof regarding his testimony, and there was no evidence as to what his factual defense would have been had the State revealed to him those acts it intended to prove, under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b), and those acts it would attempt to elicit, should he testify, under section (b) of this rule. State v. Manning, 139 N.C. App. 454, 534 S.E.2d 219 (2000), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 353 N.C. 273, 546 S.E.2d 385 (2000), aff'd, 353 N.C. 449, 545 S.E.2d 211 (2001).

Alcohol Use. — Evidence of drug use alone is not admissible, however, a witness may be impeached by evidence showing mental or physical impairment affecting his ability to observe and remember the events in question; impeachment of a witness concerning alcohol use near the time of the observed incident is permissible to show such impairment. State v. Alkano, 119 N.C. App. 256, 458 S.E.2d 258, appeal dismissed, 341 N.C. 653, 467 S.E.2d 898 (1995).

Where the prosecutor limited his questions on alcohol use to substances used on the day and evening of the incident and did not ask questions about addiction or habitual use, this was permissible impeachment. State v. Alkano, 119 N.C. App. 256, 458 S.E.2d 258, appeal dismissed, 341 N.C. 653, 467 S.E.2d 898 (1995).

Other Tort Suits. — In an action to recover for injuries allegedly sustained when struck by defendant's car in a shopping center parking lot, testimony that following the parking lot accident plaintiff contacted his lawyer before he did his doctor, that between the time this accident occurred and the trial, five years later, he sued two others, alleging that they ran their car over his foot and injured him, and that he also sued the county sheriff, alleging that deputy gave him a severe beating and seriously injured him, was relevant to the issue being tried and was also admissible for the purpose of impeaching plaintiff's credibility and showing his bias as a witness. Thompson v. James, 80 N.C. App. 535, 342 S.E.2d 577 (1986).

Cross-Examination Held Proper. — A specific instance of false swearing is clearly probative of untruthfulness; thus, it was permissible for the prosecutor to impeach and cast doubt upon the defendant witness's testimony in a murder case by cross-examining him concerning a previous false statement made under oath to a magistrate. State v. Springer, 83 N.C. App. 657, 351 S.E.2d 120 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 226, 353 S.E.2d 410 (1987).

Where defendant in a capital murder case testified that he had not robbed or injured the victim or anyone else, the accuracy of the assertion that he had not injured anyone else was probative of his truthfulness or untruthfulness and the trial court could, in its discretion, allow cross-examination regarding the statement. State v. Darden, 323 N.C. 356, 372 S.E.2d 539 (1988).

Trial court's decision to allow prosecution's cross-examination of defendant in murder trial concerning numerous prior acts, which tested the plausibility of the defense theory that while in the Navy defendant developed a drinking problem which, over the years, became a chronic disease rendering him nonculpable on the night in question by seeking to show that defendant's Navy service was, in fact, replete with instances of bad conduct, did not constitute plain error. State v. Leroux, 326 N.C. 368, 390 S.E.2d 314 (1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 871, 111 S. Ct. 192, 112 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1990).

Defendant, on trial for the murder of his wife, opened the door to the cross-examination regarding specific instances of misconduct toward both his wife and children where defendant testified on direct examination that he was a loving and supportive husband and father, that he did not intend to hurt his wife but rather unintentionally, or in self-defense, struck back at her with the screwdriver, trying only to get her to stop moving the car. The state was entitled to cross-examine defendant concerning the specific acts of prior misconduct—including threats, arguments, and acts of violence toward both his wife and children—to explain and rebut defendant's direct examination testimony. State v. Syriani, 333 N.C. 350, 428 S.E.2d 118, cert. denied, 510 U.S. 948, 114 S. Ct. 392, 126 L. Ed. 2d 341 (1993), reh'g denied, 510 U.S. 1066, 114 S. Ct. 745, 126 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1994).

Subsection (b) generally bars evidence of specific instances of conduct of a witness for the purpose of attacking his credibility, but such testimony was relevant where the state was not attempting to impeach either witnesses' general reputations for veracity but was trying to rebut their testimony on direct examinations. State v. Bell, 338 N.C. 363, 450 S.E.2d 710 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1163, 115 S. Ct. 2619, 132 L. Ed. 2d 861 (1995).

The admission of evidence regarding a witness's pending burglary charge under this section was not plain error in view of the admission under § 8C-1, Rule 609 of his first-degree burglary conviction and his own testimony that he consumed "four 40[-]ounce beers" on the evening of the shooting. State v. McEachin, 142 N.C. App. 60, 541 S.E.2d 792 (2001), cert. dismissed, 353 N.C. 392, 548 S.E.2d 151 (2001), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 353 N.C. 392, 548 S.E.2d 152 (2001).

The prosecutor did not exceed the scope of this rule by exploring the facts on cross-examination after defendant tended to minimize the seriousness of his criminal involvement, for example, characterizing the attack on an officer at a youth prison facility as "[getting] into some trouble." State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Cross-Examination Held Improper. — Prosecutor's cross-examination of defendant concerning an alleged specific instance of misconduct, i.e., two assaults by pointing a gun at two people during the same incident, was improper under subsection (b) of this rule, because extrinsic instances of assaultive behavior, standing alone, are not in any way probative of the witness' character for truthfulness or untruthfulness. State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986).

In prosecution for rape, sexual offense and crime against nature, cross-examination of defendant with regard to other nonconsensual sexual activity with another woman was not relevant on the question of the victim's consent, and where defendant's only defense was consent, this cross-examination inquiry was clearly prejudicial and required a new trial. State v. Bailey, 80 N.C. App. 678, 343 S.E.2d 434, petition for cert. improvidently allowed, 318 N.C. 652, 350 S.E.2d 94 (1986).

In a prosecution for first degree sexual offense involving three and four year old victims, testimony elicited from defendant during cross-examination, involving instances of sexual relations or proclivities, fell outside the bounds of admissibility under this rule. State v. Scott, 318 N.C. 237, 347 S.E.2d 414 (1986).

Cross-examination concerning defendant's drug addiction was improper under subsection (b) of this rule, because extrinsic evidence of drug addiction, standing alone, is not probative of a defendant's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness. State v. Rowland, 89 N.C. App. 372, 366 S.E.2d 550 (1988).

Where defendant testified and denied he had ever sexually abused any of the witnesses and the State then cross-examined defendant about his prior acts of sexual misconduct it was error for the trial court to allow this cross-examination but the error did not require defendant a new trial. State v. Frazier, 121 N.C. App. 1, 464 S.E.2d 490 (1995), aff'd, 344 N.C. 611, 476 S.E.2d 297 (1996).

The trial court properly precluded questions concerning the witness' history of domestic violence for which he had not been convicted, where such evidence had no bearing on the witness' truthfulness or untruthfulness in the capital murder prosecution. State v. Call, 349 N.C. 382, 508 S.E.2d 496 (1998).

Limiting Cross-Examination Held Proper. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion in preventing defendant's cross-examination of witness about theft of restaurant ribs, when defendant had already impeached witness with evidence that he waited four months before admitting that he knew about the robbery, had experienced a messy break-up with defendant's sister, and had "bad blood" with defendant. State v. Grigsby, 134 N.C. App. 315, 517 S.E.2d 195 (1999), rev'd on other grounds, 351 N.C. 454, 526 S.E.2d 460 (2000).

Factors Affecting Mental State. — Defendant was properly permitted to cross-examine plaintiff about other factors in her life which had a bearing upon her mental state such as acts of wrong-doing on the part of her children. Pelzer v. UPS, Inc., 126 N.C. App. 305, 484 S.E.2d 849 (1997), cert. denied, 346 N.C. 549, 488 S.E.2d 808 (1997).

Evidence Held Admissible. — Evidence in a malicious prosecution action involving the institution of a child support claim, concerning a bribe by plaintiff to alter a blood grouping test, was not introduced for the purpose of attacking plaintiff's credibility, but was offered as relevant noncollateral evidence of plaintiff's knowledge of the surrounding facts and circumstances of the case, and hence, such evidence was not inadmissible under subsection (b) of this rule. Lay v. Mangum, 87 N.C. App. 251, 360 S.E.2d 481 (1987).

Trial court's failure to rule on defendant's motion in limine to prohibit the prosecutor from cross-examining her with the allegedly inadmissible evidence of her involvement in her husband's murder did not impermissibly chill her exercise of her constitutional right to testify on her own behalf in indictment for murder of her stepson; the State could have legitimately cross-examined defendant about her involvement in her husband's murder for impeachment purposes to the extent such evidence was probative of defendant's truthfulness or to the extent that defendant "opened the door" to such testimony. State v. White, 340 N.C. 264, 457 S.E.2d 841 (1995).

Evidence Held Inadmissible. — In trial for murder of defendant's husband, specific instances of conduct regarding defendant's alleged participation in three previous unrelated murders were not probative of defendant's character for truthfulness under subsection (b) of this rule, and were not admissible to prove motive under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b). Thus the trial court committed prejudicial error in denying defendant's motion in limine to prevent the district attorney from using the inadmissible evidence to impeach defendant. State v. Lamb, 84 N.C. App. 569, 353 S.E.2d 857 (1987), aff'd, 321 N.C. 633, 365 S.E.2d 600 (1988).

Where the victim testified that defendant stated "they are never going to take me in again alive," the statement was probative of defendant's knowledge of his guilt, and defendant made no showing that the probative value of the statement was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. State v. Charles, 92 N.C. App. 430, 374 S.E.2d 658 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 338, 378 S.E.2d 800 (1989).

The trial court erred by allowing the teacher of an alleged victim of sexual abuse to testify on direct examination regarding specific instances of the alleged victim's conduct which tended to establish her truthfulness. State v. Baymon, 108 N.C. App. 476, 424 S.E.2d 141, aff'd, 336 N.C. 748, 446 S.E.2d 1 (1994).

Instances of alleged prior and unrelated acts of larceny and possession of marijuana, without more, were not necessarily probative of a prosecution witness's propensity for truthfulness or untruthfulness under the standard imposed by subsection (b). State v. Bell, 338 N.C. 363, 450 S.E.2d 710 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1163, 115 S. Ct. 2619, 132 L. Ed. 2d 861 (1995).

Evidence of defendant's prior use of cocaine and marijuana was irrelevant and inadmissible under subsection (b), and under § 8C-1, Rule 611(b), because defendant was not a key prosecution witness. State v. Wilson, 118 N.C. App.

Medical examinations of several minor children who allegedly participated and witnessed the abuse of the victims who testified at trial were inadmissible extrinsic evidence. State v. Parker, 119 N.C. App. 328, 459 S.E.2d 9 (1995).

The trial court erred in allowing the introduction of evidence of plaintiff's prior use of illegal drugs in sexual molestation case, such information was highly prejudicial and defendants proffered no permissible use of such information. Johnson v. Amethyst Corp., 120 N.C. App. 529, 463 S.E.2d 397 (1995), cert. granted, — N.C. —, 467 S.E.2d 713 (1996).

Extrinsic Conduct Evidence Held Inadmissible. — Prosecutor's questions upon cross-examination of defendant, regarding a fight he was involved in at the hospital where his competency evaluation took place, were not addressed to the issue of defendant's credibility and it was error for such extrinsic conduct evidence to be admitted. State v. Harris, 323 N.C. 112, 371 S.E.2d 689 (1988).

Where, in an attempt to undercut defendant's testimony about her abuse by her first husband who was drug addict, and by her second who was an alcoholic, district attorney asked, "Well, you sort of enjoyed smoking marijuana, didn't you?" and defendant responded, "I did on occasion sir," the question was error; defendant's admission to having smoked marijuana had no conceivable tendency to prove or disprove her truthfulness and § 8C-1, Rule 404(b) prohibits evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts to prove the defendant acted in conformity with a character trait those acts exhibit. State v. Clark, 324 N.C. 146, 377 S.E.2d 54 (1989).

Evidence showing that the victim had let the air out of the tires of the defendant's vehicle months before the kidnapping was properly excluded pursuant to this section. State v. Guice, 141 N.C. App. 177, 541 S.E.2d 474 (2000), cert. dismissed, 353 N.C. 731, 551 S.E.2d 112 (2001).

Refusal to Exclude Evidence of Other Crimes Held Prejudicial. — In trial for murder of defendant's husband, rulings of the trial judge denying defendant's motion in limine to exclude evidence implicating her in other killings held to have impermissibly chilled her right to testify in her own defense. State v. Lamb, 321 N.C. 633, 365 S.E.2d 600 (1988).

Exclusion of Evidence Not Prejudicial Error. — Defendant's intended question to state's witness, concerning an attempt by that witness to lure his acquaintance away from his home so his accomplices could break into the residence and steal the property inside, should have been allowed as bearing on the witness' propensity to deceive and defraud others, but the exclusion of this testimony did not constitute prejudicial error. State v. Bell, 338 N.C. 363, 450 S.E.2d 710 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1163, 115 S. Ct. 2619, 132 L. Ed. 2d 861 (1995).

No error by prohibiting defendant from cross-examining witness regarding the lawsuit that he had brought against law enforcement officers in which he made false allegations because there was no reasonable possibility that the outcome of the trial would have been different if the excluded evidence had been admitted. State v. Hunt, 339 N.C. 622, 457 S.E.2d 276 (1994).

Rule 609. Impeachment by evidence of conviction of crime.

(a) General rule. — For the purpose of attacking the credibility of a witness, evidence that the witness has been convicted of a felony, or of a Class A1, Class 1, or Class 2 misdemeanor, shall be admitted if elicited from the witness or established by public record during cross-examination or thereafter.

(b) Time limit. — Evidence of a conviction under this rule is not admissible if a period of more than 10 years has elapsed since the date of the conviction or of the release of the witness from the confinement imposed for that conviction, whichever is the later date, unless the court determines, in the interests of justice, that the probative value of the conviction supported by specific facts and circumstances substantially outweighs its prejudicial effect. However, evidence of a conviction more than 10 years old as calculated herein is not admissible unless the proponent gives to the adverse party sufficient advance written notice of intent to use such evidence to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to contest the use of such evidence.

(c) Effect of pardon. — Evidence of a conviction is not admissible under this rule if the conviction has been pardoned.

(d) Juvenile adjudications. — Evidence of juvenile adjudications is generally not admissible under this rule. The court may, however, in a criminal case allow evidence of a juvenile adjudication of a witness other than the accused if conviction of the offense would be admissible to attack the credibility of an adult and the court is satisfied that admission in evidence is necessary for a fair determination of the issue of guilt or innocence.

(e) Pendency of appeal. — The pendency of an appeal therefrom does not render evidence of a conviction inadmissible. Evidence of the pendency of an appeal is admissible. (1983, c. 701, s. 1; 1999-79, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

Subdivision (a) differs from Fed. R. Evid. 609(a), which permits, for purposes of attacking the credibility of a witness, evidence of conviction of a felony or a crime that involves dishonesty or false statement. The current practice in North Carolina is that any sort of criminal offense may be the subject of inquiry for the purpose of attacking credibility.

Subdivision (a) provides that evidence of a crime punishable by more than 60 days confinement shall be admissible. This is the standard used in the Fair Sentencing Act in defining an aggravating factor. See G.S. 15A-1340.4(a)(1)(o). This includes convictions occurring in other states, the District of Columbia, and the United States even though the crime for which the defendant was convicted would not have been a crime if committed in this state.

Under current North Carolina practice a witness' denial of a prior conviction "may not be contradicted by introducing the record of his conviction or otherwise proving by other witnesses that he was, in fact, convicted." However, this prohibition has often been circumvented. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 112, at 414 (1982). Subdivision (a) allows the record of the conviction to be introduced.

Subdivision (a) also deletes the requirement in Fed. R. Evid. 609(a) that the court determine that the probative value of admitting evidence of the prior conviction outweighs its prejudicial effect to the defendant.

Subdivision (b) is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 609 (b) and departs from the common law in North Carolina in providing a time limit on the use of prior convictions. Generally, evidence of a prior conviction is not admissible under subdivision (b) if more than 10 years has elapsed since the date of the conviction or of the release of the witness from confinement imposed for that conviction, whichever is the later date. Evidence of such a conviction is admissible, however, if the court determines, in the interests of justice, that the probative value of the conviction supported by specific facts and circumstances substantially outweighs its prejudicial effect. A party must give written notice if he intends to use a conviction falling outside the 10-year period.

Subdivision (c) differs from Fed. R. Evid. 609(c) and provides an absolute prohibition of evidence of a conviction that has been pardoned. Current North Carolina practice does not prohibit evidence of such convictions.

Subdivision (d) is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 609(d) and provides that evidence of a juvenile adjudication is generally inadmissible. However, the court in a criminal case may "allow evidence of a juvenile adjudication of a witness other than the accused if conviction of the offense would be admissible to attack the credibility of an adult and the court is satisfied that admission in evidence is necessary for a fair determination of the issue of guilt or innocence." This is intended to satisfy the requirement of Davis v. Alaska, 415 U.S. 308 (1974). G.S. 7A-677, which provides that the defendant or another witness in a criminal case may be ordered to testify with respect to whether he was adjudicated delinquent, should be amended to conform to this subdivision. Conforming amendments also should be made to G.S. 15-223(b) [see now 15A-145], G.S. 90-96, and G.S. 90-113.14.

Subdivision (e) is the same as Fed. R. Evid. 609(e) and conforms to current North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 112, at 411 (1982).

CASE NOTES

The State is prohibited from eliciting details of prior convictions other than the name of the crime and the time, place, and punishment for impeachment purposes under section (a) of this Rule in the guilt-innocence phase of a criminal trial (overruling State v. Harrison, 90 N.C. App. 629, 369 S.E.2d 624 and State v. Gibson, 333 N.C. 29, 47-48, 424 S.E.2d 95, 105 (1992)). State v. Lynch, 334 N.C. 402, 432 S.E.2d 349 (1993).

A no contest plea can properly be admitted under subsection (a) of this rule for purposes of impeachment. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

For the purposes of impeachment, a witness, including defendant, may be cross-examined with respect to prior convictions. State v. Gallagher, 101 N.C. App. 208, 398 S.E.2d 491 (1990).

Defendant's argument that a prayer for judgment continued was not a final judgment and should not be treated as a conviction for purposes of this rule was without merit. State v. Sidberry, 337 N.C. 779, 448 S.E.2d 798 (1994).

Question as to Whether Witness Had Been Charged with a Crime Error. — It was error for the court to allow a question on cross-examination as to whether the defendant had been charged with a crime. State v. Jones, 329 N.C. 254, 404 S.E.2d 835 (1991).

When Evidence of Defendant's Prior Convictions Is Admissible. — This rule allows defendant's prior conviction to be offered into evidence when defendant takes the stand and thereby places his credibility at issue. State v. Chandler, 100 N.C. App. 706, 398 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

Where a conviction is established for impeachment purposes, there may be further inquiry into the time and place of the conviction and the punishment imposed. State v. Rathbone, 78 N.C. App. 58, 336 S.E.2d 702 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 200, 341 S.E.2d 582 (1986).

Scope of Inquiry into Prior Convictions. — Inquiry into prior convictions which exceeds the limitations established in State v. Finch, 293 N.C. 132, 235 S.E.2d 819 (1977), is reversible error. State v. Gallagher, 101 N.C. App. 208, 398 S.E.2d 491 (1990).

The prosecution's repeated inquiries into the facts of prior crimes improperly exceeded the limitations on admissibility of evidence of prior convictions for impeachment purposes under section (a) of this Rule established in State v. Finch, 293 N.C. 132, 141, 235 S.E.2d 819, 825 (1977). State v. Lynch, 334 N.C. 402, 432 S.E.2d 349 (1993).

The permissible scope of inquiry into prior convictions for impeachment purposes is restricted to the name of the crime, the time and place of the conviction, and the punishment imposed. State v. Perkins, 345 N.C. 254, 481 S.E.2d 25 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 837, 118 S. Ct. 111, 139 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1997).

This rule is much more restrictive than the former law; it limits admissible evidence of prior convictions to those convictions less than 10 years old and punishable by more than 60 days confinement. Alston v. Herrick, 76 N.C. App. 246, 332 S.E.2d 720 (1985), aff'd, 315 N.C. 386, 337 S.E.2d 851 (1986).

Comparison to Federal Rule. — North Carolina's version of subsection (a) of this rule is more permissive than its federal counterpart in that its only limitation on evidence of a witness's convictions is that the crime be punishable by more than sixty days confinement. The federal rule requires (1) that the crime be punishable by death or imprisonment for more than one year, and that the court balance the probative weight of the evidence against its prejudicial effect, or (2) that the crime involve "dishonesty or false statement, regardless of the punishment." State v. Ross, 329 N.C. 108, 405 S.E.2d 158 (1991).

Subsection (b) of this rule is identical to the federal rule. State v. Ross, 329 N.C. 108, 405 S.E.2d 158 (1991).

Inapplicability of Time Limit to Trials Held Before July 1, 1984. — The trial court did not err in permitting the prosecutor to ask the defendant on cross-examination whether he had been convicted of several larceny charges more than 10 years before the date of trial, where the Rules of Evidence became effective the week following his trial, as the court had no authority to implement a statute before its effective date. State v. Lane, 77 N.C. App. 741, 336 S.E.2d 410 (1985).

Legislative Intent as to Time Limit. — The legislative intent behind this rule is not to forbid the admission of evidence of a prior conviction where a period of more than 10 years has elapsed since the date of conviction or the date of defendant's release from confinement, but rather, as affecting admissibility, to balance the prejudicial effect of the remoteness of the conviction against the probative value of the conviction as evidence. State v. Ragland, 80 N.C. App. 496, 342 S.E.2d 532 (1986).

Subsection (b) requires the court to conduct a balancing test to see whether the probative value substantially outweighs the prejudicial effect. State v. Hunt, 123 N.C. App. 762, 475 S.E.2d 722 (1996).

In order to adequately review the careful weighing of probative value and prejudicial effect necessitated by an evidentiary rule, an appellate court must consider the factual context of the entire trial, including the testimony of the defendant. State v. Hunt, 123 N.C. App. 762, 475 S.E.2d 722 (1996).

In order to preserve rulings made under subsection (b) for appeal, a defendant must testify. State v. Hunt, 123 N.C. App. 762, 475 S.E.2d 722 (1996).

Subsection (b) of this rule does not forbid the admission of a prior conviction more than 10 years old as a matter of law. Rather, as in the federal rule, the court must weigh the probative value of the conviction against its possible prejudicial effect. State v. Blankenship, 89 N.C. App. 465, 366 S.E.2d 509 (1988).

Failure to Make Required Findings of Fact. — Court erred by admitting into evidence defendant's convictions for contributing to the delinquency of a minor and assault on a juvenile which were more than 10 years old where the court did not make findings of fact to support its determination that the probative value of the convictions outweighed the prejudicial effect. State v. Farris, 93 N.C. App. 757, 379 S.E.2d 283 (1989), discretionary review improvidently allowed, 326 N.C. 45, 387 S.E.2d 54 (1990).

Finding of Specific Facts and Circumstances. — A conclusory finding that the evidence would attack defendant's credibility without prejudicial effect does not satisfy the "specific facts and circumstances" requirement of subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Hensley, 77 N.C. App. 192, 334 S.E.2d 783 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 393, 338 S.E.2d 882 (1986).

Evidence Must Be Probative of Defendants' Credibility. — Where defendant was accused of sexually attacking and murdering a woman in 1983, the trial court's determination that defendant's 1957 and 1967 convictions for assault on a female with intent to commit rape and assault on a female were admissible, was erroneous; the trial court failed to comply with this rule by identifying any fact or circumstance indicating that this evidence was probative of defendant's credibility. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of State v. Dawson, 281 N.C. 645, 190 S.E.2d 196 (1972).

In first-degree murder trial, specific facts and circumstances articulated by trial court as underlying its determination that introduction of defendant's 13-year-old convictions were more probative than prejudicial violated principle that when witness is the accused, his past convictions should be offered for what they indicate about his credibility, not for what they indicate about his character; court singled out and permitted evidence that defendant had committed prior assaults because they involved the use of violence; furthermore, court's conclusory remark that the only purpose for admission through cross-examination would be to impeach the credibility or truthfulness of defendant was not a "fact" or "circumstance" vouching for an appropriate balance of probative over prejudicial weight. State v. Carter, 326 N.C. 243, 388 S.E.2d 111 (1990).

Evidence of Prior Convictions Held Admissible on Issue of Credibility. — Where trial court conducted an extensive hearing and entered findings of fact revealing that the credibility of defendant's testimony, in which he claimed he acted in self-defense, was central to the resolution of the case and that evidence of a 1981 conviction was therefore more probative than prejudicial, evidence of the old attempted robbery was properly presented to the jury for its consideration. State v. Holston, 134 N.C. App. 599, 518 S.E.2d 216 (1999).

Evidence Admitted Despite Failure to Disclose Crimes Punishable by 60 Days Confinement. — State properly introduced public records which indicated that defendant had pled guilty in its rebuttal to certain crimes, even though the records of conviction did not disclose that the offenses were punishable by confinement of greater than 60 days as (1) defendant first brought his prior convictions to the jury's attention in his own testimony, (2) without objection on cross-examination defendant admitted his prior convictions, and (3) when defendant denied that he had pled guilty to the charges against him, the State, as a basis for attacking his credibility, was entitled to show on rebuttal that defendant had in fact pled guilty to those charges. State v. Dalton, 96 N.C. App. 65, 384 S.E.2d 573 (1989).

Waiver of Objection to Introduction of Prior Convictions. — Since the introduction of evidence of defendant's prior convictions more than 10 years old was not forbidden by statute, it was incumbent upon defendant to timely object in order to present the question of admissibility for review on appeal. Defendant's failure to object constituted a waiver of the right to do so. State v. Ragland, 80 N.C. App. 496, 342 S.E.2d 532 (1986).

Even if trial court erred by ruling that the State would be permitted to cross-examine a murder defendant about his conviction which was more than 10 years old, this objection was waived when defendant himself testified as to the convictions on direct examination. State v. Ross, 100 N.C. App. 207, 395 S.E.2d 148 (1990), aff'd, 329 N.C. 108, 405 S.E.2d 158 (1991).

Defendant's Out-of-Court Statements Implying Prior Conviction Held Admissible. — Where the victim testified that defendant stated "they are never going to take me in again alive," the statement was probative of defendant's knowledge of his guilt, and defendant made no showing that the probative value of the statement was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. State v. Charles, 92 N.C. App. 430, 374 S.E.2d 658 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 338, 378 S.E.2d 800 (1989).

Convictions Resulting from Nolo Contendere Plea. — Since in State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 125, 362 S.E.2d 513 (1987) the Supreme Court held, under § 15A-2000(e) that a nolo contendere plea may be used to aggravate a crime so as to sustain a death sentence, evidence of past convictions resulting from a nolo plea should also be properly admitted under subsection (a) for purposes of impeachment especially when a defendant has voluntarily taken the stand to testify and be cross-examined, at which time he could explain his plea if he desired and assert his innocence. State v. Outlaw, 94 N.C. App. 491, 380 S.E.2d 531 (1989), aff'd, 326 N.C. 467, 390 S.E.2d 336 (1990).

Under § 15A-1022(c), when a plea of no contest is now entered there must be a finding by a court that there is a factual basis for the plea. This finding and the entry of a judgment thereon constitute an adjudication of guilt. This adjudication would be a conviction within the meaning of subsection (a) of this rule, and as a conviction it may then be used in another case to attack the credibility of a witness. State v. Outlaw, 326 N.C. 467, 390 S.E.2d 336 (1990).

Use of Juvenile Adjudication Orders. — Court did not err where pursuant to the discretion afforded in subsection (d) of this rule, the court allowed juvenile adjudication orders concerning a witness to be used by defendant on cross-examination for impeachment purposes but denied defendant's request to introduce them into evidence at the close of defendant's evidence. State v. Whiteside, 325 N.C. 389, 383 S.E.2d 911 (1989).

Trial court applied the correct standard that evidence of juvenile convictions were not necessary for the fair determination of of guilt or innocence even though it stated that "the probative value of the evidence of the juvenile petitions and convictions is far outweighed by the prejudice that may be committed and the creation of ancillary issues." State v. McAllister, 132 N.C. App. 300, 511 S.E.2d 660 (1999), aff'd, 351 N.C. 44, 519 S.E.2d 524 (1999).

Juvenile Convictions Properly Excluded. — The trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence of a witness's juvenile convictions committed subsequent to her sexual assault and initial accusations against defendant, where at the time she made the accusations she was a thirteen year old child with good grades and no history of criminal activity. State v. McAllister, 132 N.C. App. 300, 511 S.E.2d 660 (1999), aff'd, 351 N.C. 44, 519 S.E.2d 524 (1999).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it allowed the State's pre-trial motion in limine to prohibit defendant from cross-examining a witness concerning her juvenile adjudication of guilt of involuntary manslaughter in South Carolina. State v. Deese, 136 N.C. App. 413, 524 S.E.2d 381 (2000), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 476, 543 S.E.2d 499 (2000).

Exclusion of Juvenile Convictions did not Violate Confrontation Clause. — The trial court did not violate the confrontation clause of the Sixth Amendment where it refused to allow the defendant to impeach a witness's credibility with evidence of juvenile offenses committed well after the commission of the defendant's offense where that evidence was not relevant or necessary for the fair determination of guilt or innocence. State v. McAllister, 132 N.C. App. 300, 511 S.E.2d 660 (1999), aff'd, 351 N.C. 44, 519 S.E.2d 524 (1999).

Exclusion of Victim's Prior Convictions Upheld. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to allow defendant to impeach the State's primary witness, the victim, with her prior convictions from more than 20 years earlier, where the jury heard about the victim's earlier conviction and imprisonment for possession of stolen goods, other various larceny offenses, a guilty plea to providing false information to police, her use of various aliases, dates of birth, and social security numbers under different names, and defense counsel's unconfirmed suggestions to the witness that she had a history of cocaine and alcohol abuse; in light of all these other facts elicited about the victim's background, the probative value of the stale convictions was slight. State v. Harris, 140 N.C. App. 208, 535 S.E.2d 614 (2000).

Cross-Examination Upheld. — Where defendant testified on direct examination that he had been convicted of assault, the prosecutor's question as to whether the assault involved a shooting was basically no more than an inquiry into whether the conviction was, in reality, one for a more serious offense, i.e., assault with a deadly weapon, and even if the inquiry was error, the error was not of such magnitude as to require a new trial under the test of prejudicial error contained in § 15A-1443(a). State v. Rathbone, 78 N.C. App. 58, 336 S.E.2d 702 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 200, 341 S.E.2d 582 (1986).

Where, when defendant took the stand, defense counsel posed questions about his convictions within the last ten years, and defense counsel also asked defendant whether those convictions were the only convictions he had, and defendant replied in the affirmative, such a statement opened the door and allowed the State to go into a 1972 conviction. Defendant's testimony created favorable inferences as to his entire criminal record. Therefore, on cross-examination, the State could inquire into defendant's record and rebut his statement that he had not been convicted of anything other than the crimes mentioned in his testimony. State v. Chandler, 100 N.C. App. 706, 398 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

The prosecutor's cross-examination of the defendant regarding his past convictions did not exceed the scope allowed by this rule, where after the defendant denied knowing about certain past convictions, the prosecutor provided sufficient detail about the offenses to jog the defendant's memory. State v. White, 349 N.C. 535, 508 S.E.2d 253 (1998), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1026, 119 S. Ct. 2376, 144 L. Ed. 2d 779 (1999).

Considering defendant's testimony on direct examination, which tended to minimize the seriousness of his criminal involvement (which consisted of two counts of first-degree murder, four counts of robbery with a dangerous weapon, second-degree kidnapping, larceny of a motor vehicle, assault with a deadly weapon, and numerous misdemeanors such as "traffic offenses, simple assault, and misdemeanor breaking and entering") the prosecutor did not exceed the scope of proper examination when he explored the fact scenarios behind some of the incidents. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

The trial court properly used this section as guide in limiting the defendant's cross-examination of State's witness as to her criminal record where the defendant did not give notice of his intent to impeach her, nor make an offer of proof as to: (1) whether she was actually convicted of the offenses, (2) what the convictions were, (3) the exact nature of the offenses involved, or (4) how long ago the convictions were obtained. State v. Greene, 351 N.C. 562, 528 S.E.2d 575 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1041, 121 S. Ct. 635, 148 L. Ed. 2d 543 (2000).

Prosecutor's Argument Held Improper. — Where evidence of defendant's past convictions was offered and admitted solely to impeach defendant's credibility, and this was the only legitimate purpose for which the evidence was admissible, it was error for the prosecutor in his argument to use defendant's prior convictions primarily to characterize him as a bad man of a violent, criminal nature and more likely to be guilty of the crime charged. State v. Tucker, 317 N.C. 532, 346 S.E.2d 417 (1986).

Line of Questioning Held Improper. — When prosecutor asked defendant if he had the money or the gun on him during a crime which was the basis for a prior conviction, the prosecutor was trying to prejudice the jury by aligning the prior conviction with the current offense, and trial court committed reversible error in allowing that line of questioning. State v. Wilson, 98 N.C. App. 86, 389 S.E.2d 626 (1990).

As prosecutor's questions on cross-examination were inquiries which went beyond the time and place of defendant's convictions and the punishment imposed, and as case turned on credibility, the defendant was prejudiced by the trial judge's overruling defendant's objections to such questions. State v. Gallagher, 101 N.C. App. 208, 398 S.E.2d 491 (1990).

Testimony regarding prior conviction was admissible under this Rule 404(b) and was not precluded under this Rule; therefore, the trial court did not err in admitting it and there was no plain error. State v. Sexton, 336 N.C. 321, 444 S.E.2d 879, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1006, 115 S. Ct. 525, 130 L. Ed. 2d 429 (1994), 343 N.C. 516, 472 S.E.2d 23 (1996).

Testimony Regarding Prior Conviction Inadmissible. — Although the State exceeded the permissible scope of inquiry into defendant's prior criminal conviction under this section by delving into his motivation for his "forgery activity," the evidence that defendant previously committed forgery to finance his drug habit could properly be admitted under § 8C-1, Rule 404(b), not to show defendant had a propensity to commit forgery or other crimes, but rather to show that his need to support his drug habit and his lack of finances were the motive for the robbery and murder of the victim. State v. Barnett, 141 N.C. App. 378, 540 S.E.2d 423 (2000), appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 353 N.C. 527, 549 S.E.2d 552 (2001).

The trial court properly restricted defendant's questioning of state's witness on his prior convictions for breaking and entering and larceny on the time and place of the convictions and the penalties imposed thereon. State v. Bell, 338 N.C. 363, 450 S.E.2d 710 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1163, 115 S. Ct. 2619, 132 L. Ed. 2d 861 (1995).

Testimony Regarding Prior Arrests Properly Denied. — Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to question victim about prior arrests, where the arrests showed nothing beyond the facts that victim was arrested and there was insufficient evidence to proceed with the charges. State v. Johnson, 128 N.C. App. 361, 496 S.E.2d 805 (1998).

Error Not Prejudicial. — Although in a personal injury action it was error for defendant to elicit from plaintiff on cross-examination that he had been convicted of speeding, this error was not prejudicial, where there was no reasonable probability that the jury would find plaintiff's testimony incredible merely because he had been convicted on one occasion of speeding. Alexander v. Robertson, 81 N.C. App. 502, 344 S.E.2d 352 (1986).

Even if admission of two cases in which the defendant was not actually involved constituted error, it was not so prejudicial as to justify a mistrial. State v. Fisher, 318 N.C. 512, 350 S.E.2d 334 (1986).

Admission of evidence concerning the defendant's convictions for failure to follow a truck route and improper turning was improper under this rule, but the error was not prejudicial to the defendant in prosecution for driving while his license was revoked, where defendant admitted driving the van while his license was revoked. State v. Gainey, 84 N.C. App. 107, 351 S.E.2d 819 (1987).

Where it was entirely proper for prosecutor to cross-examine defendant concerning the existence of his prior conviction, prosecutor's limited inquiry as to date of arrest, while improper, did not rise to level of prejudicial error necessary to require a new trial. Knowledge that defendant committed another property crime around same time period could clearly have been gained by permissible cross-examination as to date and place of conviction. State v. Von Cunningham, 97 N.C. App. 631, 389 S.E.2d 286, cert. denied, 326 N.C. 802, 393 S.E.2d 905 (1990).

Although it appeared from the record that defendant chose not to testify at least in part because he feared being impeached with a 1975 conviction which should have been excluded, his failure to take the stand did not rise to the level of prejudicial error, where there was overwhelming evidence of his guilt. State v. Norris, 101 N.C. App. 144, 398 S.E.2d 652 (1990), discretionary review denied, 328 N.C. 335, 402 S.E.2d 843 (1991).

Admission of defendant's 19-year-old sodomy conviction where trial court's finding described no specific facts and circumstances indicating that the probative value of the conviction substantially outweighed its prejudicial effect was harmless error where there was substantial evidence of defendant's homosexuality and overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. State v. Ross, 329 N.C. 108, 405 S.E.2d 158 (1991).

Where the jury knew when the witness was tried for his crime, the date he was convicted, and the name of the crime that he had been convicted of, and also knew that the witness had received five years' probation for this crime, the actual date on which one count of the crime occurred could not add any impeachment value to the information about the prior conviction and the failure to allow this question was harmless. State v. Skipper, 337 N.C. 1, 446 S.E.2d 252 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1134, 115 S. Ct. 953, 130 L. Ed. 2d 895 (1995), cert. dismissed, 342 N.C. 417, 465 S.E.2d 547 (1995).

The admission of evidence regarding a witness's pending burglary charge under § 8C-1, Rule 608 was not plain error in view of the admission under this section of his first-degree burglary conviction and his own testimony that he consumed "four 40[-]ounce beers" on the evening of the shooting. State v. McEachin, 142 N.C. App. 60, 541 S.E.2d 792 (2001), cert. dismissed, 353 N.C. 392, 548 S.E.2d 151 (2001), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 353 N.C. 392, 548 S.E.2d 152 (2001).

Applied in Frye v. Anderson, 86 N.C. App. 94, 356 S.E.2d 370 (1987); State v. Porter, 326 N.C. 489, 391 S.E.2d 144 (1990); State v. Garner, 330 N.C. 273, 410 S.E.2d 861 (1991); State v. Gibson, 333 N.C. 29, 424 S.E.2d 95 (1992); State v. Lynch, 337 N.C. 415, 445 S.E.2d 581 (1994); State v. Conaway, 339 N.C. 487, 453 S.E.2d 824 (1995); In re Hayes, 139 N.C. Rule 610. Religious beliefs or opinions.

Evidence of the beliefs or opinions of a witness on matters of religion is not admissible for the purpose of showing that by reason of their nature his credibility is impaired or enhanced; provided, however, such evidence may be admitted for the purpose of showing interest or bias. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 610 except for the proviso that explicitly states that evidence of religious beliefs or opinions may be admitted to show interest or bias. The rule clarifies unsettled law in North Carolina concerning whether, for impeachment purposes, a witness may be cross-examined as to his religious beliefs. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 55, at 205 (1982). Evidence probative of something other than veracity is not prohibited by the rule.

CASE NOTES

This rule is a rule of evidence and does not affect jury arguments, except in support of the rule that counsel ordinarily may not argue matters not supported by the evidence. State v. James, 322 N.C. 320, 367 S.E.2d 669 (1988).

Counsel may not attack the credibility of a witness because of the witness's religious beliefs or rights of conscience. State v. James, 322 N.C. 320, 367 S.E.2d 669 (1988).

But Evidence of Beliefs May Be Admitted to Show Interest or Bias. — This rule proscribes the admissibility of evidence of the religious beliefs or opinions of a witness for the purpose of attacking his credibility. Such evidence may be admitted to show interest or bias of the witness. State v. James, 322 N.C. 320, 367 S.E.2d 669 (1988).

Indirect Reference by Prosecutor to Defendant's Affirmation. — Prosecutor's argument as to defendant's credibility held not to violate N.C. Const., Art. I, § 13, nor did it violate this rule or § 8C-1, Rule 603, despite an indirect reference to defendant's affirmation as a witness. State v. James, 322 N.C. 320, 367 S.E.2d 669 (1988).

In prosecution charging defendant with being an accessory before the fact to second degree murder, where the real effect of questions about devil worship, satanic bibles, graveyard seances, and the like, could only have been to arouse the passion and prejudice of the jury, and where the relative veracity of the State's two accomplice witnesses and the defendant was critical, the trial court committed reversible error in permitting the district attorney, over objection, to ask defendant questions about devil worshipping activities. State v. Kimbrell, 320 N.C. 762, 360 S.E.2d 691 (1987).

Cited in State v. Reilly, 71 N.C. App. 1, 321 S.E.2d 564 (1984); State v. Westall, 116 N.C. App. 534, 449 S.E.2d 24, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 671, 453 S.E.2d 185 (1994).

Rule 611. Mode and order of interrogation and presentation.

(a) Control by court. — The court shall exercise reasonable control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence so as to (1) make the interrogation and presentation effective for the ascertainment of the truth, (2) avoid needless consumption of time, and (3) protect witnesses from harassment or undue embarrassment.

(b) Scope of cross-examination. — A witness may be cross-examined on any matter relevant to any issue in the case, including credibility.

(c) Leading questions. — Leading questions should not be used on the direct examination of a witness except as may be necessary to develop his testimony. Ordinarily leading questions should be permitted on cross-examination. When a party calls a hostile witness, an adverse party, or a witness identified with an adverse party, interrogation may be by leading questions. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule, except for subdivision (b), is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 611.

The rule sets forth the objectives the court should seek to obtain rather than spelling out detailed rules. Specific statutes relating to the mode and order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence, e.g., G.S. 15A-1226 dealing with when rebuttal evidence may be presented, will not be overridden by the general guidelines set by this rule.

The Advisory Committee's Note says that:

"Item (1) restates in broad terms the power and obligation of the judge as developed under common law principles. It covers such concerns as whether testimony shall be in the form of a free narrative or responses to specific questions, McCormick § 5, the order of calling witnesses and presenting evidence, 6 Wigmore § 1867, the use of demonstrative evidence, McCormick § 179, and the many other questions arising during the course of a trial which can be solved only by the judge's common sense and fairness in view of the particular circumstances.

Item (2) is addressed to avoidance of needless consumption of time, a matter of daily concern in the disposition of cases. A companion piece is found in the discretion vested in the judge to exclude evidence as a waste of time in Rule 403(b).

Item (3) calls for a judgment under the particular circumstances whether interrogation tactics entail harassment or undue embarrassment. Pertinent circumstances include the importance of the testimony, the nature of the inquiry, its relevance to credibility, waste of time, and confusion. McCormick § 42. In Alford v. United States, 282 U.S. 687, 694, 51

S.Ct. 218, 75 L.Ed. 624 (1931), the Court pointed out that, while the trial judge should protect the witness from questions which 'go beyond the bounds of proper cross-examination merely to harass, annoy or humiliate,' this protection by no means forecloses efforts to discredit the witness. Reference to the transcript of the prosecutor's cross-examination in Berger v. United States, 295 U.S. 78, 55 S.Ct. 629, 79 L.Ed. 1314 (1935), serves to lay at rest any doubts as to the need for judicial control in this area.

The inquiry into specific instances of conduct of a witness allowed under Rule 608(b) is, of course, subject to this rule."

Subdivision (b) deals with the scope of cross-examination. "In North Carolina the substantive cross-examination is not confined to the subject matter of direct testimony plus impeachment, but may extend to any matter relevant to the issues." Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 35, at 143 (1982). Subdivision (b) rejects the more restricted approach to cross-examination found in Fed. R. Evid. 611(b) and adopts the current North Carolina wide-open cross-examination rule.

Subdivision (c) continues the traditional view that the suggestive powers of the leading question are as general propositions undesirable. Within this tradition numerous exceptions have achieved recognition: The witness who is hostile, unwilling or biased; the child witness or the adult with communication problems; the witness whose recollection is exhausted; and undisputed preliminary matters. 3 Wigmore §§ 774-778; State v. Greene, 285 N.C. 482 (1974). As the Advisory Committee's Note points out: "The matter clearly falls within the area of control by the judge over the mode and order of interrogation and presentation and accordingly is phrased in words of suggestion rather than command."

The Note states that:

"The rule also conforms to tradition in making the use of leading questions on cross-examination a matter of right. The purpose of the qualification 'ordinarily' is to furnish a basis for denying the use of leading questions when the cross-examination is cross-examination in form only and not in fact, as for example the 'cross-examination' of a party by his own counsel after being called by the opponent (savoring more of redirect) or of an insured defendant who proves to be friendly to the plaintiff."

The last sentence of subdivision (c) deals with categories of witnesses automatically regarded and treated as hostile. N.C. Civ. Pro. Rule 43(b) permits leading questions to "an adverse party or an agent or employee of an adverse party, or an officer, director, or employee of a private corporation or of a partnership or association which is an adverse party, or an officer, agent or employee of a state, county or municipal government or agency thereof which is an adverse party." The phrase of the rule "witness identified with" an adverse party is designed to enlarge the category of witnesses who may safely be regarded as hostile without further demonstration. Upon adoption of this rule, N.C. Civ. Pro. Rule 43(b) should be repealed. N.C. Civ. Pro. Rule 30 should be amended to state that depositions are subject to the North Carolina Rules of Evidence.

CASE NOTES

The scope of cross-examination is limited to those matters that are relevant to issues before the jury. State v. Hosey, 79 N.C. App. 196, 339 S.E.2d 414, modified, 318 N.C. 330, 348 S.E.2d 805 (1986).

Scope of Cross-Examination Is Subject to Court's Control. — Cross-Examination of an adverse witness is a matter of right, but the scope of cross-examination is subject to appropriate control by the court. State v. Hosey, 318 N.C. 330, 348 S.E.2d 805 (1986); State v. Allen, 90 N.C. App. 15, 367 S.E.2d 684 (1988).

Although cross-examination is a matter of right, the scope of cross-examination is subject to appropriate control in the sound discretion of the court. State v. Coffey, 326 N.C. 268, 389 S.E.2d 48 (1990), cert. denied, — N.C. —, 421 S.E.2d 360 (1992).

Scope of Testimony on Redirect Examination. — Where witness' testimony on redirect examination went beyond the scope of her testimony during direct and cross-examination but the testimony was relevant and otherwise admissible and after its admission, the trial court provided the defendant an opportunity to recross-examine the witness, the trial court did not abuse its discretion. State v. Barton, 335 N.C. 696, 441 S.E.2d 295 (1994).

Control of Court over Mode and Order of Questioning. — The trial court has authority to exercise reasonable control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule. State v. Allen, 90 N.C. App. 15, 367 S.E.2d 684 (1988).

Where counsel for the defendant asked over 60 questions referencing an action arising out of events occurring some 12 to 14 years earlier and these inquiries related to an extremely remote event, they were minimally probative when compared to their prejudicial effect, and were therefore proscribed by Rule 403. Further, the continued repetitive questioning reflected the harassment and "needless consumption of time" that subsection (a) prohibits. Weston v. Daniels, 114 N.C. App. 418, 442 S.E.2d 69 (1994), cert. denied, 336 N.C. 785, 447 S.E.2d 433 (1994).

Trial court may depart from the regular order of presentation of evidence so as to make that presentation more effective for the ascertainment of the truth, and will be reversed only for abuse of discretion. State v. Brice, 320 N.C. 119, 357 S.E.2d 353 (1987).

Plaintiffs' attempt to generate an exhibit during trial while a witness was undergoing cross-examination, by extracting and charting portions of the testimony, was governed by subsection (a) of this rule, not by Rule 1006, and the trial court acted within its discretion in disallowing it as a kind of premature final argument. Marley v. Graper, 135 N.C. App. 423, 521 S.E.2d 129 (1999).

Harassment of Witness. — Where expert witness was insulted, maligned, continually interrupted and bullied, though she weathered it all with considerable fortitude, the net result may still have been a less than complete, or less than accurate, statement of her opinion; thus, the court could not conclude that the prosecutor's improper conduct toward this witness caused no prejudice to defendant. State v. Sanderson, 336 N.C. 1, 442 S.E.2d 33 (1994).

Consolidation of Testimony Not Improper. — Where the trial court in annexation case allowed consolidation of a fire chief's testimony so that he would not have to be recalled, and where petitioners failed to demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion in allowing the chief to testify as an expert during cross-examination, trial court did not err. Matheson v. City of Asheville, 102 N.C. App. 156, 402 S.E.2d 140 (1991).

The primary purpose of impeachment is to reduce or discount the credibility of a witness for the purpose of inducing the jury to give less weight to his testimony in arriving at the ultimate facts of the case. Any circumstance tending to show a defect in the witness' perception, memory, narration or veracity is relevant to this purpose. Medina v. Town & Country Ford, Inc., 85 N.C. App. 650, 355 S.E.2d 831, appeal of right allowed pursuant to Rule 16(b) and petition allowed as to additional issues, 320 N.C. 513, 358 S.E.2d 521 (1987), aff'd, Baldwin v. Blackledge, 330 F. Supp. 183 (E.D.N.C. 1971).

Use of Videotape on Cross Examination. — The trial court did not err when it refused to allow the defendant to cross examine a witness with a tape recording of a call she made to a 911 operator after the witness testified on direct examination that she did not remember the details of the conversation; the trial judge ruled that the defendant could not play a tape recording on cross-examination, although he might introduce the tape during his case in chief. State v. Mason, 144 N.C. App. 20, 550 S.E.2d 10 (2001).

Rule Applicable to Cross-Examination of Experts. — As to the admission of expert opinions during cross-examination, this Rule provides that the court shall exercise reasonable control over the interrogation of witnesses and the presentation of evidence so as to (1) make the interrogation and presentation effective for the ascertainment of the truth, (2) avoid needless consumption of time, and (3) protect witnesses from harassment or undue embarrassment. Matheson v. City of Asheville, 102 N.C. App. 156, 402 S.E.2d 140 (1991).

Cross-Examination of Expert Upheld. — State's questions regarding an expert's familiarity with relevant diagnostic treatises, reliability or truth of defendant's statements, and the degree of reliance placed upon them by the expert witness in forming his opinion, and its effort to impeach defendant's stated memory loss, were all well within the bounds of a proper cross-examination. State v. Morganherring, 350 N.C. 701, 517 S.E.2d 622 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1024, 120 S. Ct. 1432, 146 L. Ed. 2d 322 (2000).

Substantive cross-examination is not confined to the subject matter of direct testimony plus impeachment, but may extend to any matter relevant to the issues. State v. Freeman, 319 N.C. 609, 356 S.E.2d 765 (1987).

But evidence of defendant's prior use of cocaine and marijuana was irrelevant and inadmissible under § C-1, Rule 608(b), and under Rule subsection (b) of this rule, because defendant was not a key prosecution witness. State v. Wilson, 118 N.C. App. 616, 456 S.E.2d 870, cert. denied, 341 N.C. 424, 461 S.E.2d 768 (1995).

The qualification "ordinarily," used in subsection (c) of this rule, is to furnish a basis for denying the use of leading questions when the cross-examination is cross-examination in form only and not in fact. The authority to sustain objections to leading questions directed to friendly witnesses in such situations is inherent in the discretion granted the trial court in this rule. State v. Hosey, 318 N.C. 330, 348 S.E.2d 805 (1986).

The application of subsection (c) of this rule is within the discretion of the trial judge and the ruling is reversible only for abuse of discretion. State v. Dillard, 90 N.C. App. 318, 368 S.E.2d 442 (1988).

Discretion of Trial Judge to Allow Leading Questions on Direct Examination. — It is within the discretionary power of the trial judge to allow leading questions on direct examination. State v. Riddick, 315 N.C. 749, 340 S.E.2d 55 (1986).

A ruling on the admissibility of a leading question is in the sound discretion of the trial court, and these rulings are reversible only for an abuse of discretion. State v. Howard, 320 N.C. 718, 360 S.E.2d 790 (1987).

Counsel may be allowed to lead a witness on direct examination when the witness has difficulty in understanding the question because of immaturity or advanced age. State v. Riddick, 315 N.C. 749, 340 S.E.2d 55 (1986).

When the witness has difficulty in understanding the question because of age or maturity, or where inquiry is made into a subject of a delicate nature, such as sexual matters, leading questions are necessary to develop the witness' testimony. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

The use of leading questions is a matter of right during cross-examination. State v. Mitchell, 317 N.C. 661, 346 S.E.2d 458 (1986).

Review of Rulings on Leading Questions. — Rulings by the trial judge on the use of leading questions are discretionary and reversible only for an abuse of discretion. State v. Riddick, 315 N.C. 749, 340 S.E.2d 55 (1986); State v. Summerlin, 98 N.C. App. 167, 390 S.E.2d 358, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 143, 394 S.E.2d 183 (1990); State v. Holmes, 101 N.C. App. 229, 398 S.E.2d 873 (1990), aff'd, 330 N.C. 826, 412 S.E.2d 660 (1992).

Leading Question Permitted. — Where the record disclosed that at the time of the crime the prosecuting witness was 14 years old, and that at the time of the trial she was 15, and her testimony, in open court, pertained to sexual matters of a delicate, sensitive, and embarrassing nature, leading questions on direct examination were permissible under such circumstances to develop the witness' testimony. State v. Dalton, 96 N.C. App. 65, 384 S.E.2d 573 (1989).

Because victim was 10 years old at the time of trial and was not only testifying about sexual matters, but was testifying against her father who was present in the courtroom, leading questions were appropriate. State v. Murphy, 100 N.C. App. 33, 394 S.E.2d 300 (1990).

The defendant failed to show abuse of discretion by the court in allowing the use of leading questions when questioning the victim's mother where the witness was having trouble answering questions that were put to her. State v. Cox, 344 N.C. 184, 472 S.E.2d 760 (1996).

The court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the prosecutor to use leading questions to extract the testimony of his chief witness during the defendant's capital murder trial, where the witness was the former girlfriend of the defendant, who had murdered the girlfriend's grandmother and the grandmother's friend, and she was not articulate and was nervous at testifying and seeing the defendant for the first time in a long while. State v. White, 349 N.C. 535, 508 S.E.2d 253 (1998), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1026, 119 S. Ct. 2376, 144 L. Ed. 2d 779 (1999).

Where the record showed that the questions that the defendant objected to during trial were not so much "leading" as they were "bridges" or summaries of testimony, and where the case was long and complicated, the court did not err in allowing the district attorney to direct witness's attention to a certain topic by asking leading questions. State v. Smith, 135 N.C. App. 649, 522 S.E.2d 321 (1999).

Leading Questions Upheld When Delicate Subject Matter Was Involved. — Where the subject matter of the young victim's testimony, whether and how sexual act was committed, was a delicate matter, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion by allowing the district attorney to ask leading questions of the victim. State v. Dillard, 90 N.C. App. 318, 368 S.E.2d 442 (1988).

Leading Question to Refresh Memory Upheld. — The prosecutor's leading question eliciting the fact that the defendant spat on the decedent after shooting him was permissible where he used it in an attempt to refresh the witness' memory. State v. Lesane, 137 N.C. App. 234, 528 S.E.2d 37 (2000).

Misconstruction of Answers by Questioner. — The questioner may not distort the witness' testimony by purposely misconstruing answers and cross-examining the witness on the basis of the misconstruction. State v. Sanderson, 336 N.C. 1, 442 S.E.2d 33 (1994).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in requiring list of defense witnesses so that jurors, during voir dire, could look at the list and answer questions concerning their knowledge of and relationship to any of the witnesses who might be called to testify. State v. Smith, 320 N.C. 404, 358 S.E.2d 329 (1987).

No Abuse of Discretion By Judge. — Where judge did no more than ensure that defense counsel was not consuming the court's time with irrelevant material and, once assured by counsel that the evidence had relevance, the court permitted the questioning to continue without further comment and expressed no opinion on the evidence, the court in no way abused its discretion nor approached the level of interference which would be error.

State v. Harris, 338 N.C. 129, 449 S.E.2d 371 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1100, 115 S. Ct. 1833, 131 L. Ed. 2d 752 (1995).

Cross-Examination of Defendant Upheld. — Where defendant testified in his own behalf and denied his guilt, it was appropriate for the State to ask him to explain, if he could, the State's evidence which was inconsistent with this denial. Such cross-examination properly challenged defendant's credibility, which ultimately was a question for the jury. State v. Freeman, 319 N.C. 609, 356 S.E.2d 765 (1987).

Refusal of Cross-Examination Upheld. — Court's refusal to permit defendant to cross-examine detective about police department's having used defendant as an informant was proper. Defendant's purpose was to show that he had credibility with the police department, but at that time only the State had presented evidence, defendant's credibility had not been attacked, and he was not entitled to bolster it in advance. State v. Burge, 100 N.C. App. 671, 397 S.E.2d 760 (1990).

Questions to Rebuttal Witness. — Impeaching questions about a previous alleged knifing incident asked by prosecutor of rebuttal witness held not to constitute error. State v. Price, 118 N.C. App. 212, 454 S.E.2d 820 (1995).

Cross-Examination of Defendant's Mother. — The prosecutor properly cross-examined the murder defendant's mother regarding a letter she wrote to the defendant stating that she understood the defendant's role in the murder "and everyone else that had a part in it," since the statement went to the issue of the witness' understanding or knowledge that roles or parts were played by the coconspirators in the murder. State v. Brown, 350 N.C. 193, 513 S.E.2d 57 (1999).

Relationship Between Counsel and Witness Should Be Considered. — The rule prohibiting leading questions is not based on a technical distinction between direct examination or cross-examination, but on the alleged friendliness existing between counsel and his witness. Therefore, the trial court should consider the true relationship between the interrogator and the witness in ruling on the propriety of leading questions during either direct examination or cross-examination. State v. Hosey, 318 N.C. 330, 348 S.E.2d 805 (1986).

Findings as to Hostility or Friendliness of Witness. — While the better practice would be for the trial court to make findings and conclusions and declare formally that a witness is friendly to the party cross-examining him or adverse to the party calling him as a witness, when the record on appeal manifestly shows that the witness was only ostensibly the witness of the party calling him or her and was entirely friendly to the party cross-examining him or her, the trial court does not commit reversible error by failing to make such a formal declaration. State v. Hosey, 318 N.C. 330, 348 S.E.2d 805 (1986).

Prohibition of Leading Questions Upheld. — In a prosecution for rape and incest, the trial court did not err by sustaining the State's objections to leading questions asked of defendant's wife, a State's witness who was only nominally adverse to the defendant. State v. Hosey, 318 N.C. 330, 348 S.E.2d 805 (1986).

Although the witness was called to contradict the testimony of a prior witness, defendant failed to argue the exception at trial and failed to cite any case law in support of its application in his brief on appeal; therefore, there was no abuse of discretion where the trial court sustained the timely objection of the State to what was a leading question posed by counsel on direct examination of a non-hostile witness. State v. Wiggins, 136 N.C. App. 735, 526 S.E.2d 207 (2000).

Trial court properly sustained the State's objections to six leading questions put to defendant on direct examination, where defendant had already had an opportunity to deny the charges against him and, therefore, did not need leading questions to help him do that. State v. Kimble, 140 N.C. App. 153, 535 S.E.2d 882 (2000).

Compensation of Expert Witness. — The subject of compensation of a defendant's expert witness is clearly an appropriate matter for cross-examination. State v. Atkins, 349 N.C. 62, 505 S.E.2d 97 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1147, 119 S. Ct. 2025, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1999).

The State may cross-examine a court-appointed and state-funded expert witness about any potential bias resulting from compensation as a defense witness. State v. Lawrence, 352 N.C. 1, 530 S.E.2d 807 (2000).

Cumulative Character Evidence. — It was not error for the trial judge, in a trial for first degree sexual offense, after the defendant had called and examined six character witnesses, to ask him to list his seven remaining character witnesses and have them stand and state their names and addresses, where the jury was informed by the comments of the court and counsel that these witness were present to attest to the defendant's good character and reputation in the community. State v. Ramey, 318 N.C. 457, 349 S.E.2d 566 (1986).

Factors Affecting Mental State. — Defendant was properly permitted to cross-examine plaintiff about other factors in her life which had a bearing upon her mental state such as acts of wrong-doing on the part of her children. Pelzer v. UPS, Inc., 126 N.C. App. 305, 484 S.E.2d 849 (1997), cert. denied, 346 N.C. 549, 488 S.E.2d 808 (1997).

Illustrative Cases. — The prosecutor's questions of a murder defendant's expert witness were well within the bounds of cross-examination, where the defendant's mental health expert had testified that the disparity between the defendant's answers, which were like those that only a profoundly mentally ill, psychotic, or crazy person would have given, and all other indications, which were that he was not profoundly mentally ill, could be interpreted as a cry for help, while the prosecutor's questions merely presented the alternative theory that the defendant was lying. State v. Hipps, 348 N.C. 377, 501 S.E.2d 625 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1180, 119 S. Ct. 1119, 143 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1999).

The trial court properly excluded testimony of defendant and two witnesses regarding the general availability of weapons at the prison where he and the victim were incarcerated where the officer had already testified that he did not know how frequently the victim's cell block was searched and that he could not recall whether he or any other officers had ever found knives during a search of the victim's cell block; where defendant had already testified extensively regarding frequent violence among the inmates and that, during a cell-block search following a violent incident, officers discovered knives in twenty of the twenty-four cells in his and the victim's cell block; and where a former legal services attorney who visited the prison was in no better position than the jury to give his opinion about the prevailing conditions there at the time of the murder. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Caution in the Examination of Physical Evidence by Jury. — The trial court's jury instruction that jury members could wear rubber gloves while examining exhibits did not indicate that the trial judge believed testimony that the defendant had HIV, but rather, was the proper exercise of reasonable control over presentation of evidence. State v. Monk, 132 N.C. App. 248, 511 S.E.2d 332 (1999).

Rule 612. Writing or object used to refresh memory.

(a) While testifying. — If, while testifying, a witness uses a writing or object to refresh his memory, an adverse party is entitled to have the writing or object produced at the trial, hearing, or deposition in which the witness is testifying.

(b) Before testifying. — If, before testifying, a witness uses a writing or object to refresh his memory for the purpose of testifying and the court in its discretion determines that the interests of justice so require, an adverse party is entitled to have those portions of any writing or of the object which relate to the testimony produced, if practicable, at the trial, hearing, or deposition in which the witness is testifying.

(c) Terms and conditions of production and use. — A party entitled to have a writing or object produced under this rule is entitled to inspect it, to cross-examine the witness thereon, and to introduce in evidence those portions which relate to the testimony of the witness. If production of the writing or object at the trial, hearing, or deposition is impracticable, the court may order it made available for inspection. If it is claimed that the writing or object contains privileged information or information not directly related to the subject matter of the testimony, the court shall examine the writing or object in camera, excise any such portions, and order delivery of the remainder to the party entitled thereto. Any portion withheld over objections shall be preserved and made available to the appellate court in the event of an appeal. If a writing or object is not produced, made available for inspection, or delivered pursuant to order under this rule, the court shall make any order justice requires, but in criminal cases if the prosecution elects not to comply, the order shall be one striking the testimony or, if justice so requires, declaring a mistrial. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is a reorganization of Fed. R. Evid. 612 and differs substantively from the federal rule in five ways. The rule omits a reference to the Jencks Act. Also, it states explicitly that it applies to trials, hearings and depositions and that it applies to objects as well as writings. The rule explicitly provides for inspection of the writing or object if production of the object or writing at the trial is impracticable. Finally, subsection (c) adds privileged information to the grounds which may be the basis of an in camera examination and excision by the court.

If the writing is used by the witness while testifying to refresh his memory, the adverse party is entitled to production. If the writing is used before testifying for the purpose of testifying, disclosure is in the discretion of the court. Requiring disclosure of writings used before testifying is a change in North Carolina practice. See, e.g., State v. Cross, 293 N.C. 296 (1977).

As the Advisory Committee's Note points out:

"The purpose of the phrase 'for the purpose of testifying' is to safeguard against using the rule as a pretext for wholesale exploration of an opposing party's files and to insure that access is limited only to those writings which may fairly be said in fact to have an impact upon the testimony of the witness."

The phrase "for the purpose of testifying" read together with the phrase "and the court in its discretion determines that the interests of justice so require" are intended to maintain the work product "privilege" for lawyers and others who assist in preparation for trial and in most instances it is likely that the judge will exercise his discretion in such a manner to prevent discovery of statements used before testifying to refresh a witness' recollection. Saltzburg and Redden, Federal Rules of Evidence Manual, p. 417 (3d ed. 1982).

In subsection (c), by adding privileged information to those items which the court may consider in camera with possible excision of the material, the intention was to make it clear that the rule does not invade the existing authority of the court in areas such as protecting the confidentiality of the informants.

On the other hand, exculpatory writings are available to criminal defendants irrespective of Rule 612. See United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97 (1976); United States v. Nobles, 422 U.S. 225 (1975); Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83 (1963); State v. Hardy, 293 N.C. 105 (1977).

CASE NOTES

Witness Need Not Establish Foundation for Use of Notes. — Defendant's assertion that this rule requires a witness to establish a foundation for the use of notes to refresh his memory was without merit; this rule stands for nothing other than the requirement that an adverse party is entitled to production of the writing or object which a witness used to refresh his or her memory. State v. Gibson, 333 N.C. 29, 424 S.E.2d 95 (1992), overruled on other grounds, 334 N.C. 402, 432 S.E.2d 349 (1993).

Notes Carried to Witness Stand. — It is not error for the trial court to refuse to afford defendant access to notes carried to the witness stand by an investigating officer who does not refer to them during his testimony. State v. Hall, 330 N.C. 808, 412 S.E.2d 883 (1992), citing State v. Jackson, 302 N.C. 101, 273 S.E.2d 666 (1981).

This rule does not provide for the admission into evidence of writings used to refresh a witness' memory, because the admissibility of these writings is subject to the same rules of admissibility that apply to any evidence. State v. Shuford, 337 N.C. 641, 447 S.E.2d 742 (1994).

Applied in In re Helms, 77 N.C. App. 617, 335 S.E.2d 917 (1985).

Rule 613. Prior statements of witnesses.

In examining a witness concerning a prior statement made by him, whether written or not, the statement need not be shown nor its contents disclosed to him at that time, but on request the same shall be shown or disclosed to opposing counsel. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to subdivision (a) of Fed. R. Evid. 613. There are no North Carolina cases on the subject matter of subdivision (a).

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The Queen's Case, 2 Br. & B. 284, 129 Eng. Rep. 976 (1820), laid down the requirement that a cross-examiner, prior to questioning the witness about his own prior statement in writing, must first show it to the witness. Abolished by statute in the country of its origin, the requirement nevertheless gained currency in the United States. This rule abolishes this useless impediment to cross-examination.  Both oral and written statements are included.

The provision for disclosure to counsel is designed to protect against unwarranted insinuations that a statement has been made when the fact is to the contrary.

The rule does not defeat the application of Rule 1002 relating to production of the original when the contents of a writing are sought to be proved. Nor does it defeat the application of Rule 26(b)(3) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, as revised, entitling a person on request to a copy of his own statement, though the operation of the latter may be suspended temporarily."

The federal rule includes a subdivision (b) barring evidence of a prior inconsistent statement unless the witness has been given an opportunity to explain or deny it. Since subdivision (b) is omitted, foundation requirements for admitting inconsistent statements will be governed by case law. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 48 (1982).

CASE NOTES

Statement Unfairly Prejudicial. — Where improperly admitted hearsay statement was admitted under the guise of corroboration, defendant was unfairly prejudiced and was entitled to a new trial. State v. Frogge, 345 N.C. 614, 481 S.E.2d 278 (1997).

Witness's prior statement, which contained information manifestly contradictory to his testimony at trial, did not corroborate his testimony and was improperly admitted under the guise of corroborating testimony made at trial. State v. Frogge, 345 N.C. 614, 481 S.E.2d 278 (1997).

Cited in State v. Frogge, 351 N.C. 576, 528 S.E.2d 893 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 994, 121 S. Ct. 487, 148 L. Ed. 2d 459 (2000).

Rule 614. Calling and interrogation of witnesses by court.

(a) Calling by court. — The court may, on its own motion or at the suggestion of a party, call witnesses, and all parties are entitled to cross-examine witnesses thus called.

(b) Interrogation by court. — The court may interrogate witnesses, whether called by itself or by a party.

(c) Objections. — No objections are necessary with respect to the calling of a witness by the court or to questions propounded to a witness by the court but it shall be deemed that proper objection has been made and overruled. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

Subdivisions (a) and (b) of this rule are identical to Fed. R. Evid. 614(a) and (b).

Subdivision (a) authorizes the court to call witnesses and is consistent with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 37 (1982).

Subdivision (b) authorizes the court to examine witnesses, whether called by itself or by a party, and is consistent with North Carolina practice. Id.

It is anticipated that the court will exercise its authority to call or interrogate a witness only in extraordinary circumstances.

The court may not in calling or interrogating a witness do so in a manner as to suggest an opinion as to the weight of the evidence or the credibility of the witness in violation of G.S. 15A-1222 or G.S. 1A-1, Rule 51(a). Id.

Subdivision (c) differs from Fed. R. Evid. 614(c) by providing for an automatic objection to the calling or interrogation of witnesses by the court. Subdivision (c) is consistent with N. C. Civ. Pro. Rule 46(a)(3) which provides that no objections are necessary with respect to questions propounded to a witness by the court.

CASE NOTES

Clarification of Testimony. — The court may question a witness for the purpose of clarifying the witness' testimony and for promoting a better understanding of it. Such examination must be conducted with care and in a manner which avoids prejudice to either party. State v. Chandler, 100 N.C. App. 706, 398 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

The court properly uses its authority under subsection (b) of this rule when it questions witnesses in order to clarify ambiguous testimony and to enable the court to rule on the admissibility of certain evidence and exhibits. State v. Quick, 329 N.C. 1, 405 S.E.2d 179 (1991).

Questions by judge to expert witness did not denigrate defendant's witness of her evidence, but instead helped to develop testimony favorable to the defense and assist the trial court in its task of deciding whether mitigating circumstances which might later be requested by the defense were in fact supported by the evidence. State v. Spruill, 338 N.C. 612, 452 S.E.2d 279 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 834, 116 S. Ct. 111, 133 L. Ed. 2d 63 (1995).

The court's questioning of witness to clarify the usual practice of mediation at the sheriff's department when trouble was brewing was proper since such questioning did not suggest that the court was expressing an opinion about the legitimacy of such a practice and did not aid the prosecution's case. State v. Pope, 122 N.C. App. 89, 468 S.E.2d 552 (1996).

Trial judge did not err in questioning witnesses where the questions were designed to clarify the sequence of events and the trial court did not state an opinion as to the facts or the witnesses' credibility. State v. Smarr, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 881, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 789 (2001).

When Judge's Question Constitutes Expression of Opinion. — A trial judge's question, propounded for the purpose of clarification, is an expression of opinion only if a jury reasonably could infer that the question intimated an opinion as to a factual issue, the witness' credibility or the defendant's guilt. State v. Ramey, 318 N.C. 457, 349 S.E.2d 566 (1986).

Applied in State v. Hill, 105 N.C. App. 489, 414 S.E.2d 73 (1992).

Cited in State v. Bright, 320 N.C. 491, 358 S.E.2d 498 (1987); Grasty v. Grasty, 125 N.C. App. 736, 482 S.E.2d 752 (1997).

Rule 615. Exclusion of witnesses.

At the request of a party the court may order witnesses excluded so that they cannot hear the testimony of other witnesses, and it may make the order of its own motion. This rule does not authorize exclusion of (1) a party who is a natural person, or (2) an officer or employee of a party that is not a natural person designated as its representative by its attorney, or (3) a person whose presence is shown by a party to be essential to the presentation of his cause, or

(4) a person whose presence is determined by the court to be in the interest of justice. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

This rule is similar to Fed. R. Evid. 615 except that the word "shall" in the first sentence has been changed to "may order witnesses excluded," and the phrase "a person whose presence is determined by the court to be in the interest of justice" has been added as a fourth exception.

The use of "may order witnesses excluded" rather than "shall," as in the federal rule, is intended to preserve discretion in the trial judge, allowing him to take into account such things as the physical setting of the trial. However, the practice should be to sequester witnesses on request of either party unless some reason exists not to.

In North Carolina the usual practice has been to separate witnesses and send them out of the hearing of the court when requested, but this has been discretionary with the trial judge and not a matter of right. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 20 (1982). G.S. 15A-1225, which codifies this practice, should be amended to conform to Rule 615.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The efficacy of excluding or sequestering witnesses has long been recognized as a means of discouraging and exposing fabrication, inaccuracy and collusion. 6 Wigmore §§ 1837-1838. The authority of the judge is admitted, the only question being whether the matter is committed to his discretion or one of right. The rule takes the latter position. No time is specified for making the request.

Several categories of persons are excepted. (1) Exclusion of persons who are parties would raise serious problems of confrontation and due process. Under accepted practice they are not subject to exclusion. 6 Wigmore § 1841. (2) As the equivalent of the right of a natural-person party to be present, a party which is not a natural person is entitled to have a representative present. Most of the cases have involved allowing a police officer who has been in charge of an investigation to remain in court despite the fact that he will be a witness.  Designation of the representative by the attorney rather than by the client may at first glance appear to be an inversion of the attorney-client relationship, but it may be assumed that the attorney will follow the wishes of the client, and the solution is simple and workable.  (3) The category contemplates such persons as an agent who handled the transaction being litigated or an expert needed to advise counsel in the management of the litigation. See 6 Wigmore § 1841, n. 4."

A government investigative agent would be within the second exception. See S. Rept. No. 93-1277, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. (1974). The third category would include an expert listening to testimony for the purpose of testifying in his capacity as an expert.

A fourth exception to Rule 615 was added to provide that the rule does not authorize the exclusion of a person whose presence is determined by the court to be in the interest of justice. For example, when a minor child is testifying the court may determine that it is in the interest of justice for the parent or guardian to be present even though the parent or guardian is to be called subsequently. When this exception is relied upon the court should state the reasons supporting its determination that the presence of the person is in the interest of justice.

CASE NOTES

Purpose of Sequestration. — The aim of sequestration is two-fold; first, it acts as a restraint on witnesses tailoring their testimony to that of earlier witnesses, and second, it aids in detecting testimony that is less than candid. State v. Johnson, 128 N.C. App. 361, 496 S.E.2d 805 (1998).

Denial of Motion to Sequester Witnesses Held Proper. — Where before denying defendant's motion to sequester witnesses, the court determined that there were no eyewitnesses to the crimes and that defendant had copies of the pre-trial statements of the witnesses to use in cross-examination, defendant failed to establish an abuse of discretion in the denial of his motion. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Review on Appeal. — The trial court's ruling on the motion to sequester is reviewable on appeal only upon a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Russell, 84 N.C. App. 383, 352 S.E.2d 922, appeal dismissed, 319 N.C. 677, 356 S.E.2d 784, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 946, 108 S. Ct. 336, 98 L. Ed. 2d 363 (1987); State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990), in light of State v.

Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Applied in State v. Abraham, 338 N.C. 315, 451 S.E.2d 131 (1994); State v. Geddie, 345 N.C. 73, 478 S.E.2d 146 (1996), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 825, 118 S. Ct. 86, 139 L. Ed. 2d 43 (1997).

Article 7.

Opinions and Expert Testimony.

Rule 701. Opinion testimony by lay witness.

If the witness is not testifying as an expert, his testimony in the form of opinions or inferences is limited to those opinions or inferences which are (a) rationally based on the perception of the witness and (b) helpful to a clear understanding of his testimony or the determination of a fact in issue. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 701.

Limitation (a) retains the traditional requirement that lay opinion be based on firsthand knowledge or observation. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence, § 122, at 468 (1982).

Limitation (b) is phrased in terms of requiring testimony to be helpful in resolving issues. This is a different test from the more traditional "collective facts exception" which allows lay opinions or inferences only where a shorthand expression is "necessary" because articulation of more primary components is impossible or highly impracticable. P. Rothstein, Rules of Evidence for United States Courts and Magistrates, at 257 (1980). See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 125, at 474-76 (1982). Nothing in the rule would bar evidence that is commonly referred to as a "shorthand statement of fact." Id. at 476.

As the Advisory Committee's Note points out:

"[N]ecessity as a standard for permitting opinions and conclusions has proved too elusive and too unadaptable to particular situations for purposes of satisfactory judicial administration. The rule assumes that the natural characteristics of the adversary system will generally lead to an acceptable result, since the detailed account carries more conviction than the broad assertion, and a lawyer can be expected to display his witness to the best advantage. If he fails to do so, cross-examination and argument will point up the weakness.  If, despite these considerations, attempts are made to introduce meaningless assertions which amount to little more than choosing up sides, exclusion for lack of helpfulness is called for by the rule."

CASE NOTES

Section 8C-1, Rule 704 does allow the admission of lay opinion evidence on ultimate issues, but to qualify for admission, the opinion must be helpful to the jury. Mobley v. Hill, 80 N.C. App. 79, 341 S.E.2d 46 (1986).

Test for the admissibility of an opinion of either a lay or expert witness under this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 702, respectively, is helpfulness to the trier of fact. In re Wheeler, 87 N.C. App. 189, 360 S.E.2d 458 (1987).

Shorthand Statements of Fact. — This exception includes what are frequently called shorthand statements of fact. The comment "he was enjoying what he was doing" represents an instantaneous conclusion of the witness based on his perception of defendant's appearance, facial expressions, mannerisms, etc., and as such, it is a shorthand statement of fact. State v. Eason, 336 N.C. 730, 445 S.E.2d 917 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1096, 115 S. Ct. 764, 130 L. Ed. 2d 661 (1995).

Witness's testimony that defendant was "going to do something" and that they did not have time to leave before defendant approached, represented an instantaneous conclusion based on observation of a variety of facts, and could be characterized as a "shorthand statement of fact". State v. Johnston, 344 N.C. 596, 476 S.E.2d 289 (1996).

Witnesses' testimony of their impressions of the murder victim, the defendant/wife, and their problematic marital relationship was properly admitted in the wife's murder prosecution since the impressions were based on their personal observations and were as such shorthand statements of fact. State v. Brown,

The witness' statement that it looked to him like the defendant was trying to shoot the decedent in the head was a permissible opinion in the form of a "shorthand statement of fact;" asking the witness to recite the precise position of the decedent, the stance of the defendant, and the angle of the gun would have been impractical. State v. Lesane, 137 N.C. App. 234, 528 S.E.2d 37 (2000).

The following testimony was admissible under this rule as shorthand statements of fact: An officer's testimony that the victim's screaming sounded like somebody fearing for his life and that the crime scene was worse than a hog killing; another officer's testimony that defendant looked guilty when, as defendant saw the officer approaching, he immediately raised his hands; and, finally, the testimony of two other witnesses that defendant appeared calm, relaxed, and without remorse. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Foundation for Lay Person's Opinion Required. — Where there was no foundation showing that the opinion called for was rationally based on a lay witness' perception, the opinion was inadmissible. Matheson v. City of Asheville, 102 N.C. App. 156, 402 S.E.2d 140 (1991).

The trial court properly refused to admit testimony by an officer about the trajectory of a bullet fired from defendant's pistol without some showing that the witness was qualified to testify, either as a lay witness or as an expert. State v. Washington, 141 N.C. App. 354, 540 S.E.2d 388 (2000), cert denied, 353 N.C. 396, 547 S.E.2d 427 (2001).

Instantaneous Conclusions of the Mind. — A witness may state the instantaneous conclusions of the mind as to the appearance, condition, or mental or physical state of persons, animals, and things, derived from observation of a variety of facts presented to the senses at one and the same time. State v. Brown, 350 N.C. 193, 513 S.E.2d 57 (1999).

It is not necessary for a witness to have observed the action described continuously; it is only necessary that the witness have perceived the incident sufficiently to have gained a rational basis on which to formulate an opinion. Eason v. Barber, 89 N.C. App. 294, 365 S.E.2d 672 (1988).

The relevant weight to be given lay opinions is within the province of the jury. State v. Davis, 321 N.C. 52, 361 S.E.2d 724 (1987).

A hypothetical question posed to a lay witness was held impermissible, where nursing home administrator was asked whether a fire station would be able to provide an adequate response to a nursing home fire if a particular road were blocked. Matheson v. City of Asheville, 102 N.C. App. 156, 402 S.E.2d 140 (1991).

Lay Opinion on Speed of Vehicle. — The general rule for admission of opinion testimony on speed is that a person of ordinary intelligence and experience is competent to state his opinion as to the speed of a vehicle when he has had a reasonable opportunity to observe the vehicle and judge its speed. State v. Grice, 131 N.C. App. 48, 505 S.E.2d 166 (1998).

Lay Opinion on Location of Boundary. — Testimony of a lay witness is admissible concerning the location of a boundary in a boundary dispute case. Wrightsville Winds Townhouses Homeowners' Assoc. v. Miller, 100 N.C. App. 531, 397 S.E.2d 345 (1990), cert. denied, 328 N.C. 275, 400 S.E.2d 463 (1991).

Lay Opinion on Acting in Concert. — Where testimony was helpful to a clear understanding of a fact in issue, whether defendant acted in concert, testimony was admissible. State v. Bishop, 343 N.C. 518, 472 S.E.2d 842 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1097, 117 S. Ct. 779, 136 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1997).

Lay Opinion on Ownership of Church Property. — Although trial court may have erred in admitting, over objection, certain lay opinion testimony regarding the ownership of church property, this did not constitute reversible error. Fire Baptized Holiness Church of God of Ams., Inc. v. McSwain, 134 N.C. App. 676, 518 S.E.2d 558 (1999).

Opinion of the Value of Personal Property. — A nonexpert witness who has knowledge of value gained from experience, information, and observation may give his opinion of the value of personal property. Maintenance Equip. Co. v. Godley Bldrs., 107 N.C. App. 343, 420 S.E.2d 199 (1992), cert. denied, 333 N.C. 345, 426 S.E.2d 707 (1993).

Lay Opinion on Profits and Lost Profits. — The trial court properly permitted the plaintiff's witness to testify as to the percentage of profits realized on plaintiff's gross revenues, and as to plaintiff's lost profits due to defendant's use of the cost history records in securing eight contracts where his opinion testimony was based on his recollection of the revenues realized by plaintiff on the contracts and his knowledge, based on experience, of plaintiff's percentage of profit on gross sales. Byrd's Lawn & Landscaping, Inc. v. Smith, 142 N.C. App. 371, 542 S.E.2d 689 (2001).

Lay Opinion on Impressions. — Testimony by crime scene technician that impressions in the dirt around victim's house were similar to the cinder block and rock tied to the victim's body was rationally based on his personal perception and was helpful to the jury. State v. Rick, 126 N.C. App. 612, 486 S.E.2d 449 (1997).

Lay Opinion on Psychiatric Diagnosis. — The admission of testimony by a lay witness that defendant suffered from multiple personality disorder, in violation of this section, was not prejudicial in light of the other evidence properly admitted at trial. State v. Merrill, 138 N.C. App. 215, 530 S.E.2d 608 (2000).

Lay Opinions on Sanity. — The adoption of this rule did not effect a substantive change in the law regarding the admissibility of lay opinions of sanity. State v. Strickland, 321 N.C. 31, 361 S.E.2d 882 (1987).

Under this rule, lay opinions regarding a defendant's insanity are admissible if they are based on first-hand knowledge and if they are helpful to the jury. State v. Davis, 321 N.C. 52, 361 S.E.2d 724 (1987).

The mental condition of another is an appropriate subject for lay opinion. State v. Bond, 345 N.C. 1, 478 S.E.2d 163 (1996), reh'g denied, 345 N.C. 355, 479 S.E.2d 210, cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1124, 117 S. Ct. 2521, 138 L. Ed. 2d 1022 (1997).

Same — Murder Trial. — To offer admissible, lay opinion testimony as to defendant's sanity in a murder trial, witnesses had to have personal knowledge of defendant and their opinions had to be helpful to the jury. However, the fact that neither witness had the opportunity to observe defendant immediately before the crime did not require exclusion of their testimony. State v. Davis, 321 N.C. 52, 361 S.E.2d 724 (1987).

The trial court in a murder case did not err when it allowed the State to ask defendant's wife whether defendant knew the difference between right and wrong at the time of the killing and when it allowed her affirmative response. State v. Strickland, 321 N.C. 31, 361 S.E.2d 882 (1987).

It would have been error not to allow lay witness who had known defendant for 3 to 5 years and had spent several hours with him on the date in question to testify to his opinion as to whether defendant was in his right mind and knew the difference between right and wrong. State v. Strickland, 321 N.C. 31, 361 S.E.2d 882 (1987).

Lay Opinion on Defendant's Remorse. — Trial court did not commit error, much less plain error, in allowing the opinion of an officer, who had spent five hours with the defendant, that he demonstrated no remorse for his previous two murders. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Lay Opinion on Victim's Viability. — Court properly allowed lay opinion that the victim remained alive for a period of time following shooting. State v. Hedgepeth, 350 N.C. 776, 517 S.E.2d 605 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 1274, 146 L. Ed. 2d 223 (2000).

Capacity of Defendant to Commit Rape. — "Rape" is a legal term of art and accordingly witness' opinion testimony concerning whether defendant was "capable of rape" was properly excluded. State v. Najewicz, 112 N.C. App. 280, 436 S.E.2d 132 (1993), cert. denied, 335 N.C. 362, 441 S.E.2d 130 (1994).

Question as to Fault Properly Struck. — In an action for personal injuries arising out of a car accident, the court did not err in striking question and answer as to whether the accident was the fault of one defendant, elicited on cross-examination of one plaintiff. Mobley v. Hill, 80 N.C. App. 79, 341 S.E.2d 46 (1986).

Sound alone is sufficient for a lay witness to give his opinion of the speed of a vehicle in relative terms, such as "fast," "flying by," etc. Hicks v. Reavis, 78 N.C. App. 315, 337 S.E.2d 121 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 553, 344 S.E.2d 7 (1986).

But Not for Giving Opinion on Actual Speed. — Sound alone does not provide sufficient perception for a layman to have a rational basis for giving an opinion on actual speed of a vehicle. Hicks v. Reavis, 78 N.C. App. 315, 337 S.E.2d 121 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 553, 344 S.E.2d 7 (1986).

Opinion on Actual Speed Based on Physical Evidence Is Not Admissible. — With respect to the actual speed of a vehicle, the opinion of a lay or expert witness will not be admitted where he did not observe the accident, but bases his opinion on the physical evidence at the scene. Hicks v. Reavis, 78 N.C. App. 315, 337 S.E.2d 121 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 553, 344 S.E.2d 7 (1986).

Implicit Finding of Lay Witness as Expert. — Although State did not tender lieutenant in city fire department as an expert, the trial court implicitly found him to be an expert on arson, therefore, any error in permitting the witness to state opinions as an expert was harmless. State v. Greime, 97 N.C. App. 409, 388 S.E.2d 594 (1990).

Police sergeant, who also worked part time at a car repair workshop, was qualified to give testimony that he found red oxide primer rather than blood on the inside of defendant's truck. State v. Kandies, 342 N.C. 419, 467 S.E.2d 67 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 894, 117 S. Ct. 237, 136 L. Ed. 2d 167 (1996).

Police Officer's Testimony Regarding Intoxication. — A police officer with more than three years' experience in the enforcement of motor vehicle laws and who had been personally involved in the investigations of nearly 200 driving while impaired cases was competent to express an opinion that the defendant was under the influence of alcohol when he collided with the victims' vehicle. State v. Rich, 132 N.C. App. 440, 512 S.E.2d 441 (1999), aff'd, 351 N.C. 386, 527 S.E.2d 299 (2000).

The opinion testimony of a police officer, who posited that the defendant was impaired at the time of the accident, was admissible for purposes of showing malice; notwithstanding his cross-examination testimony which tended to show that he relied on the moderate to strong odor of alcohol coming from the defendant almost two hours after the accident in forming his opinion, the Supreme Court believed him to have based his opinion not only on the odor of alcohol, but also on his investigation of the accident and upon his experience enforcing traffic laws and dealing with intoxicated drivers. State v. Rich, 351 N.C. 386, 527 S.E.2d 299 (2000).

Where the voluntariness of a defendant's confession was at issue, a police officer who had observed the defendant over an extended period of time, interviewed the defendant, and observed the defendant speaking to other individuals was properly allowed to state his opinion as to whether defendant was intoxicated during their conversation. State v. Patterson, — N.C. App. —, 552 S.E.2d 246, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 856 (2001).

Opinion Based on Personal Observation of Intoxicated Person. — A lay witness who has personally observed a person may give his opinion as to whether that person was under the influence of intoxicants. State v. Adkerson, 90 N.C. App. 333, 368 S.E.2d 434 (1988).

Testimony of a Case Worker and a Juvenile Investigator Upheld. — In prosecution for the first-degree rape of defendant's nine year old stepdaughter, the trial court did not err by allowing a case worker and a juvenile investigator to testify to the characteristics of sexually abused children, as the nature of their jobs and the experience which they possessed made them better qualified than the jury to form an opinion as to the characteristics of abused children. State v. Aguallo, 322 N.C. 818, 370 S.E.2d 676 (1988).

Testimony of Psychological Associate. — Testimony by a licensed psychological associate was admissible under this rule, where she testified that a child sexual abuse victim "illustrated" fellatio and anal intercourse with anatomically correct dolls, and this testimony represented her non-expert instantaneous conclusion based on her perception of the child's appearance, condition, and actions, which constituted a "short-hand statement of fact." State v. Waddell, 130 N.C. App. 488, 504 S.E.2d 84 (1998), aff'd in part and modified in part, 351 N.C. 413, 527 S.E.2d 644 (2000).

Testimony of Detectives At Time of Confession. — The detectives' testimony was properly admitted where their opinions were based upon their personal perception of defendant at the time of the confession and helped the trial court determine the ultimate issue of the voluntariness of the defendant's statement. State v. Johnson, 136 N.C. App. 683, 525 S.E.2d 830 (2000).

Testimony by Police Officer Which Required No Expertise Upheld. — Opinion that two shoes share wear patterns could properly be given by police officer, since it required no expertise, and defendant's argument that this testimony was outside the witness' realm of expertise was untenable. State v. Shaw, 322 N.C. 797, 370 S.E.2d 546 (1988).

Officer's opinion that defendant appeared to be high and that he had consumed an impairing substance, was based on his personal observation and was helpful to the jury as to defendant's condition. Therefore, the trial court correctly allowed him to offer his opinion on this matter. State v. Adkerson, 90 N.C. App. 333, 368 S.E.2d 434 (1988).

Testimony of police officers which stemmed from their personal experience combined with their observation of defendant and was helpful to a clear understanding of a relevant issue — defendant's demeanor shortly after the crime — was admissible under this rule and relevant under Rule 401. State v. Lambert, 341 N.C. 36, 460 S.E.2d 123 (1995).

A police officer did not have to be qualified as an expert to testify that the markings of the shoes worn by the defendant when he was picked up for questioning in an armed robbery were "very consistent" with the shoes worn by the perpetrator in a video. State v. Mewborn, 131 N.C. App. 495, 507 S.E.2d 906 (1998).

The police officer's opinion that the defendant appeared intoxicated was rationally based on her perception, and the trial court did not err in allowing the police officer to answer the question of whether defendant appeared intoxicated. State v. Locklear, 136 N.C. App. 716, 525 S.E.2d 813 (2000).

Arresting officers properly testified as to their opinion that defendant's demeanor was unusually calm after his arrest for murder, as the probative value of the testimony was not substantially outweighed by unfair prejudice. State v. Lloyd, 354 N.C. 76, 552 S.E.2d 596 (2001).

Testimony Upheld. — In a prosecution under § 14-72.1(a) for willfully concealing merchandise, testimony of witness who characterized defendant's activities in store as "concealing" merchandise merely described, in a shorthand form, the actions the witness observed defendant make, and no error was committed. State v. Daye, 83 N.C. App. 444, 350 S.E.2d 514 (1986).

In murder trial, it would not have been error to admit officer's testimony to the effect that he observed that the victim had been shot, as he was stating the instantaneous conclusions of his mind as to the appearance or condition of the victim, and such testimony was admissible as a shorthand statement of facts; thus it was not error for the court to fail to instruct the jury to disregard such testimony. State v. Williams,

Witnesses who were 17 and 18 years old and had only nine and 14 months of driving experience, respectively, were nevertheless competent to testify as to the speed of plaintiff's motorcycle as it approached intersection. Eason v. Barber, 89 N.C. App. 294, 365 S.E.2d 672 (1988).

In a case involving first-degree sexual offense, testimony of one officer that two conversations which he had had, one with another officer and the other with the victim himself, revealed, in his opinion, the same account of the events, as well as testimony of a second officer that the statement he had taken from the victim revealed the same story as the victim had previously related to law enforcement officials, rendered lay opinions based upon the officers' own personal perceptions, which were helpful in determining the precise nature of the sexual offense perpetrated by defendant, and there was no error in the admission of these statements. State v. Rhinehart, 322 N.C. 53, 366 S.E.2d 429 (1988).

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit robbery with a dangerous weapon and robbery with a dangerous weapon, coconspirator's testimony concerning defendant's intent when he said he was going to "do it" met the requirements of this rule, and there was no error in allowing this statement. State v. Colvin, 90 N.C. App. 50, 367 S.E.2d 340, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 608, 370 S.E.2d 249 (1988), holding, furthermore, that if there was any error, it was not prejudicial because there was ample other evidence to prove defendant's involvement in the conspiracy.

Testimony of the wife of a slander plaintiff as to the Japanese perception of lawsuits was properly admitted under this section where the suit involved slanderous statements made to Japanese businessmen and scientists and the trial court found her opinion was helpful to a clear understanding of her testimony. Raymond U v. Duke Univ., 91 N.C. App. 171, 371 S.E.2d 701, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 629, 374 S.E.2d 590 (1988).

Plaintiff demonstrated sufficient personal knowledge to testify regarding his opinion of the fair rental value of the property where he testified he was a real estate developer, that he had owned and developed other lake front property; furthermore, he testified as to the amount he paid for the property he owned and to the amount of revenue generated for defendants from rentals over the disputed property. Zagaroli v. Pollock, 94 N.C. App. 46, 379 S.E.2d 653, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 437, 384 S.E.2d 548 (1989).

In trial on charges of trafficking in marijuana, where customs agent testified that boat parked in front of beach cottage was type often used in drug smuggling, that the repeated travel by vehicle over the same roads indicated that it was involved in a smuggling operation, and that he could identify the smell of marijuana coming from the truck because he had many years of experience smelling marijuana, trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection to these statements since opinions and inferences stated by agent were rationally based on his perceptions, and these statements were helpful to a clear understanding of testimony regarding circumstances related to the investigation which resulted in defendant's arrest. State v. Drewyore, 95 N.C. App. 283, 382 S.E.2d 825 (1989).

Lay witness' statement to the effect that victim had told social worker and policeman "very much the same thing" that she had previously told lay witness was clearly and rationally based on the witness' own perception and was also helpful to the determination of whether and to what extent defendant had sexually abused the victim. As such, it came within the requirements of this rule and was properly admitted. State v. Murphy, 100 N.C. App. 33, 394 S.E.2d 300 (1990).

Testimony of a murder witness as to what he believed the defendant meant when he warned the witness not to tell anyone about what he saw was admissible; it met the requirements of this rule in that it was both rationally based on his perception and it was helpful to the jury in explaining why the witness did not report the victim's death to law enforcement authorities. State v. McElroy, 326 N.C. 752, 392 S.E.2d 67 (1990).

Mother's testimony in rape prosecution that 10-year-old victim had never lied to her before about anything of this magnitude did not constitute improper lay opinion testimony. When read in context, the challenged testimony was helpful to the jury in understanding her testimony and its admission was proper. State v. Love, 100 N.C. App. 226, 395 S.E.2d 429 (1990), cert. denied, appeal dismissed, 328 N.C. 95, 402 S.E.2d 423 (1991).

Testimony of lay witness, a homeowner and member of homeowner's association, concerning location of a boundary was competent, even though it conflicted with testimony of an expert land surveyor. Wrightsville Winds Townhouses Homeowners' Assoc. v. Miller, 100 N.C. App. 531, 397 S.E.2d 345 (1990), cert. denied, 328 N.C. 275, 400 S.E.2d 463 (1991).

A police officer's testimony that, while he was driving "Johnny Gustud" to possible crime scenes, the defendant (who claimed to have multiple personalities and that the "Gustud" personality committed the crimes) "pretended" to be asleep and then woke up as the defendant, was admissible. This rule allows lay opinions when they are "(a) rationally based on the perception of the witness and (b) helpful to a clear understanding of his testimony or the determination of the fact in issue," and the officer's opinion that the defendant "pretended" to be asleep in the patrol car met these criteria. State v. Woodard, 102 N.C. App. 687, 404 S.E.2d 6 (1990), cert. denied, 329 N.C. 504, 407 S.E.2d 550 (1991).

Where, in the course of her testimony, a physician repeated the victim's statements that the defendant had sexually abused her, defendant's objection that the doctor's testimony was improper because it was to the effect that defendant was the perpetrator was without merit. The testimony was derived from information obtained by the doctor in the course of the victim's treatment and evaluation and was admissible. Furthermore, the victim testified at trial and identified defendant as the perpetrator. Therefore, the doctor's testimony corroborates her testimony and was properly admitted on that ground. State v. Speller, 102 N.C. App. 697, 404 S.E.2d 15, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 503, 407 S.E.2d 548 (1991).

In prosecution for first-degree sexual offense and taking indecent liberties with children, the trial court did not err in allowing the deputy to testify, over defendant's objection, that in his opinion defendant appeared to be between 29 and 30 years of age, where his opinion was rationally based on his perception of defendant, it was helpful to the jury in determining the age requirement of the crimes charged, and it was not necessary for the State to prove defendant's exact age in order to convict him of any of the crimes with which he was charged. State v. Banks, 322 N.C. 753, 370 S.E.2d 398 (1988).

In light of strong and unequivocal evidence of direct threats against a woman, made by the defendant while she was in his presence and he was armed with a firearm, there was no reasonable possibility that admitting the opinion testimony of a security guard, who testified that defendant "said something else to me that indicated to me that he was planning to shoot a woman," affected the result reached by the jury at trial. Therefore, any error in the admission of this testimony was harmless. State v. Harvell, 334 N.C. 356, 432 S.E.2d 125 (1993).

Where the detective expressed a lay opinion that he did not believe the witness's pretrial statement, and this opinion was rationally based on his own firsthand knowledge and observations, this opinion was helpful to explain his earlier testimony and was properly admissible under this rule. State v. Westall, 116 N.C. App. 534, 449 S.E.2d 24, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 671, 453 S.E.2d 185 (1994).

Testimony by son and daughter of pedestrian struck by vehicle that plaintiff was in very poor emotional state, that plaintiff's leg was broken in three different places, that plaintiff looked very uncomfortable and that he was bleeding from his left ear which was the ear he had problems hearing out of were merely giving a factual account of what they observed. Thus, defendant's argument that the statements were opinion was without merit. Bowden v. Bell, 116 N.C. App. 64, 446 S.E.2d 816 (1994).

Where witness' testimony was rationally based on his perception, as the witness worked with defendant and routinely overheard defendant's conversations, testimony was admissible opinion testimony by a lay witness. State v. Bishop, 343 N.C. 518, 472 S.E.2d 842 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1097, 117 S. Ct. 779, 136 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1997).

Lay testimony by a co-worker of murder victim was admissible to show the victim's state of mind, where the co-worker testified as to the victim's demeanor during the days prior to her being shot and killed by her ex-husband, including that she was "upset" and "would hold her stomach crying." State v. Childers, 131 N.C. App. 465, 508 S.E.2d 323 (1998).

The testimony of a trooper as to what happens to a vehicle tire when it is towed from an accident scene was not improperly admitted, in violation of this rule, to show the lanes each vehicle was in prior to the accident, which was the ultimate fact in issue. State v. Miller, 142 N.C. App. 435, 543 S.E.2d 201 (2001).

Testimony Held Inadmissible. — Testimony of police officer, testifying as a lay witness on redirect examination, that a "child of that age does not have the necessary information about sexuality to fantasize any of it" was so prejudicial as to warrant a new trial, where the State's case against the defendant was almost totally dependent on the credibility of the victim. State v. Bowman, 84 N.C. App. 238, 352 S.E.2d 437 (1987).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to admit testimony where defendant made no showing that the proffered opinion testimony was rationally based on the perception of the witness or that it would be helpful to a determination of the issue of the distance from which the victim was shot. State v. Shuford, 337 N.C. 641, 447 S.E.2d 742 (1994).

A police officer's testimony was improper opinion, where he was asked if he believed the murder defendant's statement after his arrest concerning the murder of the mother of his child, because there was no indication that this testimony would help the jury to understand his testimony or to make their determination. State v. Owen, 130 N.C. App. 505, 503 S.E.2d 426 (1998), cert. denied, 349 N.C. 372, 525 S.E.2d 188 (1998).

A jail nurse was not qualified to testify as to whether a capital murder defendant appeared to be psychotic upon his admission to jail, where the nurse evaluated the defendant upon his admission to jail following a shooting spree at the business from which he was fired, but the nurse was not an expert witness. State v. Davis, 349 N.C. 1, 506 S.E.2d 455 (1998), cert. denied,

526 U.S. 1161, 119 S. Ct. 2053, 144 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1999).

Admission of Testimony Erroneous But Not Prejudicial. — In a termination of parental rights proceeding, the trial court erroneously, but not prejudicially, admitted a letter from respondent's psychiatrist, who was not tendered as an expert witness, based on a misstatement by counsel for petitioner. In re Brim, 139 N.C. App. 733, 535 S.E.2d 367 (2000).

Rule 702. Testimony by experts.

(a) If scientific, technical or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion.

(b) In a medical malpractice action as defined in G.S. 90-21.11, a person shall not give expert testimony on the appropriate standard of health care as defined in G.S. 90-21.12 unless the person is a licensed health care provider in this State or another state and meets the following criteria:

(1) If the party against whom or on whose behalf the testimony is offered is a specialist, the expert witness must:

a. Specialize in the same specialty as the party against whom or on whose behalf the testimony is offered; or

b. Specialize in a similar specialty which includes within its specialty the performance of the procedure that is the subject of the complaint and have prior experience treating similar patients.

(2) During the year immediately preceding the date of the occurrence that is the basis for the action, the expert witness must have devoted a majority of his or her professional time to either or both of the following:

a. The active clinical practice of the same health profession in which the party against whom or on whose behalf the testimony is offered, and if that party is a specialist, the active clinical practice of the same specialty or a similar specialty which includes within its specialty the performance of the procedure that is the subject of the complaint and have prior experience treating similar patients; or

b. The instruction of students in an accredited health professional school or accredited residency or clinical research program in the same health profession in which the party against whom or on whose behalf the testimony is offered, and if that party is a specialist, an accredited health professional school or accredited residency or clinical research program in the same specialty.

(c) Notwithstanding subsection (b) of this section, if the party against whom or on whose behalf the testimony is offered is a general practitioner, the expert witness, during the year immediately preceding the date of the occurrence that is the basis for the action, must have devoted a majority of his or her professional time to either or both of the following:

(1) Active clinical practice as a general practitioner; or

(2) Instruction of students in an accredited health professional school or accredited residency or clinical research program in the general practice of medicine.

(d) Notwithstanding subsection (b) of this section, a physician who qualifies as an expert under subsection (a) of this Rule and who by reason of active clinical practice or instruction of students has knowledge of the applicable standard of care for nurses, nurse practitioners, certified registered nurse anesthetists, certified registered nurse midwives, physician assistants, or other medical support staff may give expert testimony in a medical malpractice action with respect to the standard of care of which he is knowledgeable of nurses, nurse practitioners, certified registered nurse anesthetists, certified registered nurse midwives, physician assistants licensed under Chapter 90 of the General Statutes, or other medical support staff.

(e) Upon motion by either party, a resident judge of the superior court in the county or judicial district in which the action is pending may allow expert testimony on the appropriate standard of health care by a witness who does not meet the requirements of subsection (b) or (c) of this Rule, but who is otherwise qualified as an expert witness, upon a showing by the movant of extraordinary circumstances and a determination by the court that the motion should be allowed to serve the ends of justice.

(f) In an action alleging medical malpractice, an expert witness shall not testify on a contingency fee basis.

(g) This section does not limit the power of the trial court to disqualify an expert witness on grounds other than the qualifications set forth in this section.

(h) Notwithstanding subsection (b) of this section, in a medical malpractice action against a hospital, or other health care or medical facility, a person may give expert testimony on the appropriate standard of care as to administrative or other nonclinical issues if the person has substantial knowledge, by virtue of his or her training and experience, about the standard of care among hospitals, or health care or medical facilities, of the same type as the hospital, or health care or medical facility, whose actions or inactions are the subject of the testimony situated in the same or similar communities at the time of the alleged act giving rise to the cause of action. (1983, c. 701, s. 1; 1995, c. 309, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 702, except that the words "or otherwise" which appear at the end of the federal rule after the word "opinion" have been deleted.

The rule is identical to G.S. 8-58.13, which should be repealed when Rule 702 becomes effective. The rule is consistent with North Carolina practice. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 134, at 520, n. 25 (1982).

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Qualification of Expert.
III. Expert Opinion Not Admissible.
IV. Expert Opinion Admissible.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

General Construction. — The statute was interpreted to apply as follows: Health care providers other than physicians were governed exclusively by subsection (b). Subsection (c) applied only to physicians who were "general practitioners," while subsection (b) applied only to physicians who were "specialists." Formyduval v. Bunn, 138 N.C. App. 381, 530 S.E.2d 96 (2000).

This rule does not require that claims against hospitals pertaining to administrative or nonclinical issues be certified under § 1A-1, Rule 9(j) as medical malpractice actions since this rule is a rule of evidence, rather than substantive law. Estate of Waters v. Jarman, 144 N.C. App. 98, 547 S.E.2d 142 (2001), cert. denied, 354 N.C. 68, — S.E.2d — (2001).

Expert testimony is properly admissible when such testimony can assist the jury to draw certain inferences from facts because the expert is better qualified. State v. Bullard, 312 N.C. 129, 322 S.E.2d 370 (1984); State v. Knox, 78 N.C. App. 493, 337 S.E.2d 154 (1985); State v. Anderson, 322 N.C. 22, 366 S.E.2d 459, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 975, 109 S. Ct. 513, 102 L. Ed. 2d 548 (1988); State v. Locklear, 349 N.C. 118, 505 S.E.2d 277 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1075, 119 S. Ct. 1475, 143 L. Ed. 2d 559 (1999).

This rule admits expert testimony when it will assist the jury in drawing certain inferences from facts, and when the expert is better qualified than the jury to draw such inferences. State v. Parks, 96 N.C. App. 589, 386 S.E.2d 748 (1989).

In order for one qualified as an expert to present an opinion based upon his specialized knowledge, his opinion must assist the trier of fact. State v. Trent, 320 N.C. 610, 359 S.E.2d 463 (1987).

The test for admissibility of expert testimony is whether the jury can receive appreciable help from the expert witness. State v. Knox, 78 N.C. App. 493, 337 S.E.2d 154 (1985); State v. Anderson, 85 N.C. App. 104, 354 S.E.2d 264, rev'd on other grounds, 322 N.C. 22, 366 S.E.2d 459 (1988).

The test for the admissibility of an opinion of either a lay or expert witness under this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 701, respectively, is helpfulness to the trier of fact. In re Wheeler, 87 N.C. App. 189, 360 S.E.2d 458 (1987).

Section 8C-1, Rule 704 does not eliminate the helpfulness requirement set forth in this rule. Although an expert's opinion testimony is not objectionable merely because it embraces an ultimate issue, it must be of assistance to the trier of fact in order to be admissible. State v. Jackson, 320 N.C. 452, 358 S.E.2d 679 (1987).

Who May Be Experts. — The rule permitting experts to testify to opinions they have formed based on information which is not itself admissible as substantive evidence is not limited to opinions of physicians and other medical experts. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

For witness' testimony to be admissible as expert testimony, the witness must be qualified by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education. The expert only needs to be better qualified than the jury as to the subject at hand, with the testimony being "helpful" to the jury. Whether the witness qualifies as an expert is exclusively within the trial judge's discretion, and is not to be reversed on appeal absent a complete lack of evidence to support his ruling. State v. Davis, 106 N.C. App. 596, 418 S.E.2d 263 (1992), cert. denied, 333 N.C. 347, 426 S.E.2d 710 (1993).

Who May Be a Specialist. — A doctor who is either board certified in a specialty or who holds himself out to be a specialist or limits his practice to a specific field of medicine is properly deemed a "specialist" for purposes of this rule. Formyduval v. Bunn, 138 N.C. App. 381, 530 S.E.2d 96 (2000).

Opinion Evidence Allowed in Certain Cases. — This rule is a rule of admission which allows opinion evidence in certain cases. If a witness, whether or not an expert, has knowledge of facts which would be helpful to a jury in reaching a decision, he may testify to such relevant facts. State v. Fletcher, 322 N.C. 415, 368 S.E.2d 633 (1988).

Basis of Opinion. — While baseless speculation can never "assist" the jury under this rule and is therefore inadmissible, an expert need not reveal the basis of his or her opinion absent a specific request by opposing counsel under § 8C-1, Rule 705. Cherry v. Harrell, 84 N.C. 598, 353 S.E.2d 433, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 167, 358 S.E.2d 49 (1987).

An opinion based upon reviews of evaluations of doctors who had interviewed defendant and personal discussions with doctors in whose care defendant had been placed were just as reliable as an opinion based on a hypothetical question. State v. Daniels, 337 N.C. 243, 446 S.E.2d 298 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 953, 130 L. Ed. 2d 895 (1995).

Personal Interview Not Required. — This rule does not require that an expert personally interview a defendant in order to express an opinion about that defendant's mental condition. State v. Daniels, 337 N.C. 243, 446 S.E.2d 298 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 953, 130 L. Ed. 2d 895 (1995).

Medical testimony did not have to be expressed in terms of reasonable probability or certainty, where the testimony objected to simply stated what the doctor did and did not find in examining and treating plaintiff. Polk v. Biles, 92 N.C. App. 86, 373 S.E.2d 570 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 337, 378 S.E.2d 798 (1989).

"Educated Guess" by Expert. — Defendant's contention that physician admitted to speculating by stating that the figure was a relatively educated guess was without merit. The use of the word "guess" does not render an opinion inadmissible. The physician's choice of words as merely indicated that there was a margin of error (somewhere between ten and twenty percent) in his calculations. The existence of this margin of error also does not affect the admissibility of his testimony. State v. West, 103 N.C. App. 1, 404 S.E.2d 191 (1991).

Reliability of Expert's Scientific Technique. — While the scientific technique on which an expert bases a proffered opinion must be recognized as reliable, absolute certainty of result is not required. The technique must have achieved general acceptance in the relevant scientific community and provide scientific assurance of accuracy and reliability. State v. Catoe, 78 N.C. App. 167, 336 S.E.2d 691 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 380, 344 S.E.2d 1 (1986).

The expert's scientific technique on which he bases his opinion must be such that its accuracy and reliability has become established and recognized. However, the focus is on the reliability of the scientific method rather than its establishment and recognition. State v. Huang, 99 N.C. App. 658, 394 S.E.2d 279 (1990), vacated in part, 107 N.C. App. 710, 421 S.E.2d 812 (1992).

Method of Proof. — Once the trial court has determined that the method of proof is sufficiently reliable as an area for expert testimony, the next level of inquiry is whether the witness testifying at trial is qualified as an expert to apply this method to the specific facts of the case. State v. Goode, 341 N.C. 513, 461 S.E.2d 631 (1995).

There are two overriding reasons for excluding testimony which suggests whether legal conclusions should be drawn or whether legal standards are satisfied; the first is that such testimony invades not the province of the jury but the province of the court to determine the applicable law and to instruct the jury as to that law, and the second reason is that an expert is in no better position to conclude whether a legal standard has been satisfied or a legal conclusion should be drawn than is a jury which has been properly instructed on the standard or conclusion. HAJMM Co. v. House of Raeford Farms, Inc., 328 N.C. 578, 403 S.E.2d 483 (1991).

It is not error for trial court to refuse to admit expert testimony embracing a legal conclusion that the expert is not qualified to make. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

An expert may generally not testify that a certain legal standard has or has not been met. Pelzer v. UPS, Inc., 126 N.C. App. 305, 484 S.E.2d 849 (1997), cert. denied, 346 N.C. 549, 488 S.E.2d 808 (1997).

Attorney Testimony as to Legal Conclusions. — Allowing plaintiffs' expert, an attorney, to testify to his individual interpretation of North Carolina law was improper as it amounted to no more than a jury instruction. Smith v. Childs, 112 N.C. App. 672, 437 S.E.2d 500 (1993).

Testimony Embracing Legal Conclusions Properly Excluded. — Fact that expert "found adult material" at several locations in the county did not provide a sufficient basis to support the admission of his expert testimony concerning whether the average adult in the community would find the materials which defendant was accused of selling to be patently offensive. His study was simply too unfocused and unspecific to provide him with a sufficient basis to give an expert opinion as to whether the average adult applying contemporary community standards would find the magazines at issue to be patently offensive. Thus, the trial court properly exercised its discretion by excluding his expert opinion testimony concerning whether the magazines in question were patently offensive to the average adult, applying contemporary community standards, on the ground that he was no better qualified than the jury to address the question and could not assist the jury. State v. Anderson, 322 N.C. 22, 366 S.E.2d 459, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 975, 109 S. Ct. 513, 102 L. Ed. 2d 548 (1988).

The trial court in a murder case did not err in refusing to admit testimony whereby defendant sought to have the experts tell the jury that certain legal standards had not been met. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

Doctor's opinion that defendant could not have premeditated or deliberated the killings would have been inadmissible as a conclusion that a legal standard had not been met. State v. Rose, 323 N.C. 455, 373 S.E.2d 426 (1988).

Doctor was improperly permitted to testify about the law of voluntary intoxication in North Carolina and its effect on defendant's insanity defense where he stated: "In North Carolina we still hold people responsible for whatever they do, if they are intoxicated"; doctor's testimony offered interpretation of the law implying that if defendant were voluntarily intoxicated, she was responsible for her actions even if her underlying mental disorder might otherwise render her legally insane. State v. Silvers, 323 N.C. 646, 374 S.E.2d 858 (1989).

Expert witness' answer on cross-examination that his opinion about the "improbability" of hair originating from a source other than defendant was based on nonscientific considerations, addressed the credibility of other witnesses and was an expression of opinion as to defendant's guilt and thus violated the Rules of Evidence. State v. Faircloth, 99 N.C. App. 685, 394 S.E.2d 198 (1990).

Value of Professional Association. — The criteria set out in Poore v. Poore, 75 N.C. App. 414, 331 S.E.2d 266, disc. rev. denied, 314 N.C. 543, 335 S.E.2d 316 (1985), are factors for the court to consider in valuing the professional interest, and are not criteria for admissibility of the expert's opinion. McLean v. McLean, 88 N.C. App. 285, 363 S.E.2d 95 (1987), aff'd, 323 N.C. 543, 374 S.E.2d 376 (1988).

What Defendant Is Required to Show. — A defendant is required to make an ex parte threshold showing that the matter subject to expert testimony is likely to be a significant factor in the defense, show that an expert would assist him materially in the preparation of his defense, or show that the denial of expert assistance would deprive him of a fair trial. State v. Abraham, 338 N.C. 315, 451 S.E.2d 131 (1994).

Premeditation. — Where defendant's state of mind at time of killing was the central issue, and without the challenged testimony of the State's expert, the only testimony going to the mens rea of first degree murder was lay opinion testimony that defendant knew right from wrong, and the contradictory testimony of three experts called by defendant regarding defendant's ability to plan or to form specific intent, and where error in allowing State's expert testimony that defendant was capable of premeditating was compounded by the State's argument to the jury, defendant was entitled to a new trial on first degree murder charge. State v. Rose, 327 N.C. 599, 398 S.E.2d 314 (1990).

Failure to Tender Qualified Expert. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it dismissed plaintiff's medical malpractice action with prejudice on the basis that she failed to comply with § 1A-1, Rule 9(j) by tendering as a witness a general surgeon whom she could not have reasonably expected to qualify as an expert witness against defendant general practitioner under this rule. Allen v. Carolina Permanente Med. Group, P.A., 139 N.C. App. 342, 533 S.E.2d 812 (2000).

II. QUALIFICATION OF EXPERT.

Qualification of Expert Within Exclusive Province of Trial Judge. — The determination whether a witness has the requisite level of skill to qualify as an expert witness is ordinarily within the exclusive province of the trial judge, and a finding by the trial judge that the witness possesses the requisite skill will not be reversed on appeal unless there is no evidence to support it. State v. Parks, 96 N.C. 589, 386 S.E.2d 748 (1989).

Surgeon who was board certified in laparoscopic procedures, and was the director of the emergency room of a major university hospital, who examined and diagnosed patients who, after surgery, presented signs and symptoms similar to those of a decedent who died after having a laprascopic cholecystectomy performed to remove her gall bladder, and who instructed residents in the emergency room regarding patients he treated, was qualified to testify as an expert in a medical malpractice action arising from the decedent's death. Sweatt v. Wong, 145 N.C. App. 33, 549 S.E.2d 222 (2001).

Question of Fact. — Whether a witness has the requisite skill to qualify him as an expert is chiefly a question of fact, the determination of which is ordinarily within the exclusive province of the trial judge. State v. Bullard, 312 N.C. 129, 322 S.E.2d 370 (1984).

Discretion of Judge. — The decision to qualify a witness as an expert is ordinarily within the exclusive province of the trial judge or hearing officer. State ex rel. Commissioner of Ins. v. North Carolina Rate Bureau, 75 N.C. App. 201, 331 S.E.2d 124, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 547, 335 S.E.2d 319 (1985).

The decision as to whether scientific opinion evidence is sufficiently reliable and relevant remains largely within the discretion of the trial judge. State v. Catoe, 78 N.C. App. 167, 336 S.E.2d 691 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 380, 344 S.E.2d 1 (1986).

Ordinarily whether a witness qualifies as an expert is exclusively within the discretion of the trial judge and is not to be reversed on appeal absent a complete lack of evidence to support his ruling. State v. Howard, 78 N.C. App. 262, 337 S.E.2d 598 (1985), appeal dismissed, 316 N.C. 198, 341 S.E.2d 581 (1986).

The trial judge is afforded wide latitude of discretion when making a determination about the admissibility of expert testimony. State v. Bullard, 312 N.C. 129, 322 S.E.2d 370 (1984);

State v. Knox, 78 N.C. App. 493, 337 S.E.2d 154 (1985); State v. Mancuso, 321 N.C. 464, 364 S.E.2d 359 (1988).

A trial court is afforded wide latitude in applying this rule and will be reversed only for an abuse of discretion. State v. Parks, 96 N.C. App. 589, 386 S.E.2d 748 (1989).

The trial court's statement to the jury that "[the expert] will be allowed to testify as an expert in the field of DNA analysis if [the jury] finds her to be so qualified" was harmless error, if error at all, where the court, in effect, qualified her as an expert in the field of DNA analysis and permitted her to give expert testimony in this field. State v. McCord, 140 N.C. App. 634, 538 S.E.2d 633 (2000), review denied, 353 N.C. 392 (2001).

The Industrial Commission had the power to determine whether physician was qualified to testify as an expert in stating his opinion as to deceased employee's intoxication at 2:50 p.m. based on a blood alcohol test administered at 5:00 p.m. Torain v. Fordham Drug Co., 79 N.C. App. 572, 340 S.E.2d 111 (1986).

Qualifications of Expert. — It is not necessary that an expert be experienced with the identical subject area in a particular case or that the expert be a specialist, licensed or even engaged in a specific profession. State v. Bullard, 312 N.C. 129, 322 S.E.2d 370 (1984); Robinson v. Seaboard Sys. R.R., 87 N.C. App. 512, 361 S.E.2d 909 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 474, 364 S.E.2d 924 (1988).

To qualify, an expert need not have had experience in the very subject at issue; it is enough that through study or experience the expert is better qualified than the jury to render an opinion regarding the particular subject. State v. Howard, 78 N.C. App. 262, 337 S.E.2d 598 (1985), appeal dismissed, 316 N.C. 198, 341 S.E.2d 581 (1986).

Witnesses who are experts in a field may offer opinion testimony regarding matters within the area of their expertise; if a witness is better qualified than the jury to form an opinion from certain facts, his opinion is admissible. Mills v. New River Wood Corp., 77 N.C. App. 576, 335 S.E.2d 759 (1985).

In the absence of a stipulation, witness whom a party is attempting to qualify as an expert must testify to his qualifications as set forth in this rule. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

An expert need not have had experience in the very subject at issue. It is enough that through study or experience the expert is better qualified than the fact-finder to render the opinion regarding the particular subject. In re Chasse, 116 N.C. App. 52, 446 S.E.2d 855 (1994).

Doctor's lack of clinical experience should not have disqualified him from giving expert opinion testimony. His acknowledged expertise in the field of adolescent sex offenders and his study of articles on treatment of adult sexual offenders made him better qualified than the trial court to render an opinion on the length and efficacy of adult sexual offender therapy, and his testimony, therefore, would have been helpful to the trier of fact. In re Chasse, 116 N.C. App. 52, 446 S.E.2d 855 (1994).

Implicit Qualification as Expert. — Although plaintiff made no request at trial for a finding as to the qualification of defendant as an expert, where the court itself asked for the opinion of defendant, he was implicitly admitted as an expert. Cato Equip. Co. v. Matthews, 91 N.C. App. 546, 372 S.E.2d 872 (1988).

Trial court's overruling of defense counsel's objection to opinion testimony constituted an implicit finding that the witness was an expert. State v. Wise, 326 N.C. 421, 390 S.E.2d 142 (1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 853, 111 S. Ct. 146, 112 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1990).

Although State did not tender lieutenant in city fire department as an expert witness, the trial court implicitly found him to be an expert on arson, therefore, any error in permitting the witness to state opinions as an expert was harmless. State v. Greime, 97 N.C. App. 409, 388 S.E.2d 594 (1990).

Formal Ruling Held Unnecessary. — There was no need for the court to make a formal ruling that the witness was an expert where her qualifications had already been presented to the court. State v. Wise, 326 N.C. 421, 390 S.E.2d 142, cert. denied, 498 U.S. 853, 111 S. Ct. 146, 112 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1990).

Assuming arguendo that the trial court's failure to formally qualify the witness as an expert was error, it was harmless error in light of the evidence of her qualifications, the court's obvious conviction that the witness was an expert, and the fact that the witness' opinion testimony fit within the definition of expert testimony. State v. Wise, 326 N.C. 421, 390 S.E.2d 142, cert. denied, 498 U.S. 853, 111 S. Ct. 146, 112 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1990).

Failure to Lay Sufficient Foundation Showing Expert Had Sufficient Knowledge. — Trial court erred in allowing expert testimony that alleged victim was suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder, where the State failed to lay a sufficient foundation showing expert witness to have sufficient skill, knowledge, or experience in or related to the syndrome to qualify as an expert thereon. State v. Goodwin, 320 N.C. 147, 357 S.E.2d 639 (1987).

Court may not rule that a witness is an expert on the basis that another court has found him to be an expert. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

Licensed Clinical Psychologist. — The witness-doctor who had her masters in psychology, had a Ph.D., and was a licensed clinical psychologist who specialized in anxiety disorders (including PTSD), was well qualified to testify as an expert; her testimony was properly admitted as expert testimony. State v. Chavis, 141 N.C. App. 177, 540 S.E.2d 404 (2000).

Plaintiff's doctor did not have to qualify as a psychiatrist or psychologist to testify that he saw nothing in his examination and treatment of the plaintiff to indicate that she was malingering. Polk v. Biles, 92 N.C. App. 86, 373 S.E.2d 570 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 337, 378 S.E.2d 798 (1989).

Emergency Room Nurses. — Three emergency room nurses were qualified to render their opinions as experts about the possibility that the victim accidentally swallowed the piece of plastic on which he choked to death; nurses are qualified to render expert opinions as to the cause of a physical injury even though they are not licensed to diagnose illnesses or prescribe treatment, and there is no basis for any preference of licensed physicians for such medical testimony. State v. White, 340 N.C. 264, 457 S.E.2d 841 (1995).

Forensic Pathologist. — Witness, who was properly qualified as a forensic pathologist to testify to the nature of the wounds inflicted on a homicide victim and to the cause of her death, was not qualified as an expert on the pattern that a knife blade makes when it is wiped on a shirt. This was a matter of common sense, best left to the jury. State v. Zuniga, 320 N.C. 233, 357 S.E.2d 898, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 959, 108 S. Ct. 359, 98 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1987).

Forensic Serologist. — Forensic serologist qualified as an expert, and his scientific testimony could assist the jury in determining whether defendant killed the victim; thus, he was competent to testify and allowing him to do so did not violate this rule. State v. Daughtry, 340 N.C. 488, 459 S.E.2d 747 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1079, 116 S. Ct. 789, 133 L. Ed. 2d 739 (1996).

Where there was testimony which established that the witness had particularized training and experience in forensic serology, the witness was properly accepted by the trial court as an expert in that area. State v. Hairston, 123 N.C. App. 753, 475 S.E.2d 242 (1996).

Expert in Pediatric Gastroenterology. — Expert's certification in, and practice of, the subspecialty pediatric gastroenterology, did not preclude him under this section from being qualified to testify against defendant-pediatrician; the plaintiff's expert testified that he was "a distinguished professor of pediatrics in the Department of Pediatrics at the University of California" and his testimony as well as his curriculum vitae showed that he had been certified as a pediatrician since 1968. Edwards v. Wall, 142 N.C. App. 111, 542 S.E.2d 258 (2001).

Experts in Child Sexual Abuse Case. — The trial court did not err in qualifying a child sexual abuse counselor and a social worker as experts in child sexual abuse and admitting their testimony, where both witnesses testified to having received advanced degrees in psychology and counseling, to having had extensive experience in evaluating victims of child abuse, and to having testified on numerous prior occasions before the courts of this State as experts in the field of child sexual abuse. State v. Parks, 96 N.C. App. 589, 386 S.E.2d 748 (1989).

Individual who had counseled children suspected of being sexually abused for five years and had interviewed between 500 and 600 children in her capacity as a sexual abuse counselor, and who had a bachelor's degree in psychology, a master's degree in counseling, and had attended specialized training in the areas of sexual abuse counseling and investigation, was properly qualified by the court as an expert in counseling for sexually abused children. State v. Love, 100 N.C. App. 226, 395 S.E.2d 429 (1990), cert. denied, appeal dismissed, 328 N.C. 95, 402 S.E.2d 423 (1991).

Physician who had completed a pediatrics residency, had attended various educational workshops on child sexual abuse, and gave workshops and lectures on child sexual abuse throughout North Carolina, who had seen 300 children for evaluation of suspected sexual abuse, was properly qualified as an expert in the field of child sexual abuse. State v. Love, 100 N.C. App. 226, 395 S.E.2d 429 (1990), cert. denied, appeal dismissed, 328 N.C. 95, 402 S.E.2d 423 (1991).

Actuary. — An individual's educational qualifications and experience as a property and casualty actuary qualified him as an expert witness in a farm owner rate hearing, although he had never before testified in such a hearing. State ex rel. Commissioner of Ins. v. North Carolina Rate Bureau, 75 N.C. App. 201, 331 S.E.2d 124, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 547, 335 S.E.2d 319 (1985).

Arson expert. — Arson expert's testimony that the burning of victim's home was intentional was proper, where the agent had attended over 500 hours of arson investigation courses and numerous seminars organized by the International Association of Arson Investigators, was certified as a fire investigator by the North Carolina Fire and Rescue Commission, had taught classes on arson, and had participated in approximately 125 to 135 arson investigations. State v. Blakeney, 352 N.C. 287, 531 S.E.2d 799 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1117, 121 S. Ct. 868, 148 L. Ed. 2d 780 (2001).

III. EXPERT OPINION NOT ADMISSIBLE.

Failure to Offer Showing as to Qualifications. — The trial court properly refused to admit testimony by officer about the trajectory of a bullet fired from defendant's pistol without some showing that the witness was qualified to testify, either as a lay witness or as an expert. State v. Washington, 141 N.C. App. 354, 540 S.E.2d 388 (2000), cert denied, 353 N.C. 396, 547 S.E.2d 427 (2001).

Expert No Better Qualified Than Jury. — Where doctor was asked to tell members of jury about abrasion over the urethra of victim, doctor's statement that sore area conceivably happened in intercourse that was performed at knife-point or under duress violated this rule; this expert was not any better qualified than jury to have opinion on subject whether intercourse was performed at knife-point or under duress. State v. Marshall, 92 N.C. App. 398, 374 S.E.2d 874 (1988), cert. denied, 328 N.C. 273, 400 S.E.2d 459 (1991).

In negligence action where van collided with garbage truck, trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding meteorologist's testimony regarding visibility conditions in 1985 and 1987; the effect of the sun's glare on drivers is an effect to which any driver heading into the direction of the sun can attest and expert's credentials as a meteorologist made him no more qualified than any other driver to offer an opinion. Smith v. Pass, 95 N.C. App. 243, 382 S.E.2d 781 (1989).

The trial court properly disallowed the plaintiff from using an economist as his expert witness to show the value of his loss of his own services; the jury was capable of rendering a decision on the value of a person's services to himself because such is a matter of common knowledge. Warren v. GMC, 142 N.C. App. 316, 542 S.E.2d 317 (2001).

Trial court did not err in refusing to admit the testimony of doctor regarding the effect of long-term maximum-custody lockup on defendant's behavior and his ability to distinguish between appropriate and inappropriate fears, where the expert was in no better position than the jury to determine that, as the result of long-term imprisonment, certain legal standards had not been met, namely, that defendant did not premeditate and deliberate and that defendant was responding to a threat he genuinely perceived, and where such evidence would tend to confuse rather than help. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Bolstering Children's Testimonies with Evidence Based Solely on Their Own Disclosures. — The trial court's admittance of expert testimony that was not based on a specialized knowledge or expertise and did not assist the jury in understanding or determining a fact in issue was prejudicial and entitled the defendant to a new trial; without any physical evidence of sexual abuse, and based solely on disclosures made by the victims, the expert witnesses' testimonies were inadmissible under this rule. State v. Grover, 142 N.C. App. 411, 543 S.E.2d 179 (2001), aff'd, — N.C. —, 553 S.E.2d 679 (2001).

Chiropractor. — In personal injury action arising out of an automobile accident, chiropractor's testimony as to plaintiff's strain or sprain of a muscle was properly excluded, because such injury and treatment are beyond the field of chiropractic as defined by statute. Ellis v. Rouse, 86 N.C. App. 367, 357 S.E.2d 699 (1987).

Memory Variables Affecting Identification. — For case in which exclusion of expert testimony of a professor of psychology whom defendant offered to provide expert evidence on memory variables affecting eyewitness identification, but who had not interviewed the victim, was upheld, see State v. Knox, 78 N.C. App. 493, 337 S.E.2d 154 (1985).

Paternity of Victim's Child. — In a prosecution for first-degree rape of a female under the age of 13, with expert's testimony concerning the paternity index and evidence of defendant's access before it, jury was in as good a position as expert to determine whether defendant "probably" was father of victim's child. Therefore, expert's testimony that defendant "probably" was father of victim's child was of no assistance to the trier of fact and should have been excluded on that basis. State v. Jackson, 320 N.C. 452, 358 S.E.2d 679 (1987).

Who Was Father in Paternity Action. — Genetics and paternity testing experts should not have been allowed to express their opinions that defendant was the children's father, because allowing an expert to express an opinion as to who is the father tramples upon the jury's domain. Brooks v. Hayes, 113 N.C. App. 168, 438 S.E.2d 420 (1993).

An Expert Is Not Needed to Explain Anatomical Dolls. — There is no need to have an expert evaluate the use of anatomical dolls or explain it to a jury; there is nothing technically complex about it. In fact, it is precisely because the use of the dolls can be readily understood by everyone involved, especially the child, that they are so often employed in the investigation of child abuse. State v. Fletcher, 322 N.C. 415, 368 S.E.2d 633 (1988).

Opinion of Abuse by Defendant. — While doctor's opinion that children were sexually abused was clearly admissible under prior decisions, his opinion that the children were sexually abused by defendant was not. Nonetheless, admission of the evidence was not reversible error. State v. Figured, 116 N.C. App.

Credibility. — In a prosecution for taking indecent liberties with a child, testimony of two witnesses for the State, a pediatrician and a child psychologist, that in their opinion the child had testified truthfully, did not meet the requirements for expert testimony, as it concerned the credibility of a witness, a field in which jurors are supreme and require no assistance, rather than some fact involving scientific, technical or other specialized knowledge, and as character evidence the testimony violated the provisions of § 8C-1, Rules 405(a) and 608. State v. Holloway, 82 N.C. App. 586, 347 S.E.2d 72 (1986).

Tendency to Fabricate. — In prosecution for second degree rape and sexual offense, the trial court erred in permitting the prosecutor to pose a question to an expert in clinical psychology regarding whether the 13-year-old victim had a mental condition which would cause her to fabricate a story about the sexual assault. State v. Heath, 316 N.C. 337, 341 S.E.2d 565 (1986).

Contradictory Testimony. — Where psychologist who examined and administered several tests to defendant concluded his testimony on voir dire by admitting that his opinion as to defendant's capacity to form the specific intent to kill would have been different had he been aware of defendant's confession to the police before making his assessment, it was clear that he doubted his own opinion; this expert opinion testimony, at best, was contradictory and equivocal and could not have been helpful to the trier of fact in making the determination of whether defendant specifically intended to kill the victim. State v. Jackson, 340 N.C. 301, 457 S.E.2d 862 (1995).

Specialists Disqualified from Testifying against General Practitioner. — All three of the plaintiff's witnesses were disqualified from testifying against the defendant, a general practitioner, pursuant to this rule, because they were specialists as that term is used in the statute. One was board certified in oncology; another, in emergency medicine and family practice; and the third held himself out as a specialist in emergency medicine. Consequently, the defendant's motion for a directed verdict was properly granted. Formyduval v. Bunn, 138 N.C. App. 381, 530 S.E.2d 96 (2000).

It was not error to exclude the testimony of a clinical psychologist as to the reactions of sexually abused children, when there was no evidence of the reaction of the child to the incident in the case at issue and the psychologist's testimony would not have been helpful to the jury in reaching a decision. State v. Fletcher, 322 N.C. 415, 368 S.E.2d 633 (1988).

Medical Doctor on Child Abuse. — The opinion testimony of a doctor that the victim/child had been abused was inadmissible where: the doctor's "diagnosis" of the child's sexual abuse was based solely on a psychiatrist's interview—itself inadmissible—with the child; the child's body showed no signs of abuse—no scars, no enlarged vaginal opening, no missing or torn hymen, etc.—and the tests for sexually transmitted disease all came back negative; and the doctor's testimony most likely resulted in a different result than would have been reached otherwise. State v. Bates, 140 N.C. App. 743, 538 S.E.2d 597 (2000).

The failure to admit testimony challenging the undercover procedures used by an undercover agent in obtaining drugs from the defendant did not constitute an abuse of discretion, under this section, where the evidence was already sufficient to prove the drug charges under § 90-95(a) and where the record already contained evidence that the agent used the drugs from the buys and the jury, therefore, had the ability, on its own, to assess the agent's credibility. State v. Mackey, 137 N.C. App. 734, 530 S.E.2d 306 (2000), aff'd, 352 N.C. 650, 535 S.E.2d 555 (2000).

Opinion on Actual Speed Based on Physical Evidence. — With respect to the actual speed of a vehicle, the opinion of a lay or expert witness will not be admitted where he did not observe the accident, but bases his opinion on the physical evidence at the scene. Hicks v. Reavis, 78 N.C. App. 315, 337 S.E.2d 121 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 553, 344 S.E.2d 7 (1986).

One who did not see a vehicle in motion will not be permitted to give an opinion as to its speed. Coley v. Garris, 87 N.C. App. 493, 361 S.E.2d 427 (1987).

Barefoot impression evidence, that is, evidence based on research into the uniqueness of bare feet found inside shoes at crime scenes, was not sufficiently scientifically reliable at the time of trial, but its admission, given the entire record, was harmless. State v. Berry, 143 N.C. App. 187, 546 S.E.2d 145 (2001), review denied, 353 N.C. 729, 551 S.E.2d 439 (2001).

Position of Body Before Shooting. — Trial court did not err in excluding the testimony of a witness as to how a body was positioned before it was shot because the trial court was not satisfied with the witness's expertise to testify in this area and did not believe that the witness's testimony would be helpful. State v. Taylor, 354 N.C. 28, 550 S.E.2d 141 (2001).

Practices And Procedures Used by Narcotics Officer. — The court rightfully refused the testimony of defendant's expert, a private detective and retired police officer of 30 years, where the jury was perfectly capable of judging the improper methods and procedures used by the undercover narcotics officer without the assistance of the expert; the testimony was irrelevant, had insufficient probative value on the facts to be proved, and violated the rule prohibiting expert testimony as to witness credibility, § 8C-1, Rules 405(a) and 608, as read together. State v. Mackey, 352 N.C. 650, 535 S.E.2d 555 (2000).

Likely to Confuse Jury. — Expert testimony was properly excluded where it would have directed the jury's attention away from defendant's actual conduct and confused it with evidence unrelated to the legality of the arrest or the force the officers used in attempting to apprehend defendant. State v. Harden, 344 N.C. 542, 476 S.E.2d 658 (1996).

Prejudicial, Unhelpful Testimony Excluded. — In case involving wife who helped her husband rape juvenile, trial court properly excluded testimony of both director of a nonprofit domestic violence corporation and defense psychologist because it was prejudicial and did little to appreciably help the jury. State v. Owen, 133 N.C. App. 543, 516 S.E.2d 159 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 117, 540 S.E.2d 743 (1999).

IV. EXPERT OPINION ADMISSIBLE.

Physician. — In prosecution for rape and taking indecent liberties with a minor, testimony of a stipulated expert physician and surgeon specializing in family medicine that a child's delay in reporting an incident of child sexual abuse was normal, based on his knowledge, skill, experience, training and education as a physician, was not error where the physician's testimony was used to corroborate the victim's credibility after the defendant's cross-examination attacked her credibility. State v. Bowman, 84 N.C. App. 238, 352 S.E.2d 437 (1987).

While the existence of other possible causes of the plaintiff's ruptured disk might have reduced the weight accorded to the physician's opinion, such other possibilities did not alone render inadmissible the physician's opinion that an automobile accident caused her injury. Cherry v. Harrell, 84 N.C. App. 598, 353 S.E.2d 433, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 167, 358 S.E.2d 49 (1987).

Where the testimony of a duly licensed physician, board certified in family medicine with extensive experience in pediatrics, precisely explained the nature of a child's burns, how such burns are medically evaluated, and how they are treated, and he further testified that the number, location, and severity of the burns was inconsistent with a medical etiology of accidental causation, such testimony was clearly helpful to the court as a fact finder and was properly admitted. In re Hayden, 96 N.C. App. 77, 384 S.E.2d 558 (1989).

There was no error in admitting opinion of two doctors in an assault prosecution where one of the doctors treated the victim's wounds for at least 40 minutes and examined her over the course of several hours on the night she was attacked and the other doctor had been the victim's personal physician for four or five years and examined her the morning after the attack and continued to treat her for two and one-half months afterward. State v. Shubert, 102 N.C. App. 419, 402 S.E.2d 642 (1991).

Where doctor was allowed to testify about defendant's mental state at the time of the murders and gave his opinion that defendant did not form the specific intent to kill, but was not allowed to give his opinion that the defendant "snapped", defendant received a fair trial, free of prejudicial error. State v. Burgess, 345 N.C. 372, 480 S.E.2d 638 (1997).

Forensic Pathologist. — Court did not err by allowing a forensic pathologist to testify that the many bruises he found on the body of a deceased child were not consistent with normal childhood activity. State v. West, 103 N.C. App. 1, 404 S.E.2d 191 (1991).

Expert in pathology was permitted to testify as a victim's cause of death. State v. Johnson, 343 N.C. 489, 471 S.E.2d 409 (1996).

Assistant Medical Examiner. — In a prosecution for murder, the witness' position as Assistant Medical Examiner and his testimony regarding the number of other cases he had seen indicated sufficient expertise such that the trial court did not err in admitting his opinion of the cause of death. State v. Hamilton, 77 N.C. App. 506, 335 S.E.2d 506 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 593, 341 S.E.2d 33 (1986).

Demonstration by Medical Examiner. — It was not error for the court to permit medical examiner to demonstrate with the use of the murder weapon, a .357 magnum, that he, a man approximately the size of the victim, could not shoot himself in the head with the gun from the necessary distance. State v. Benjamin, 83 N.C. App. 318, 349 S.E.2d 878 (1986).

In a prosecution for the rape of a mentally retarded victim, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a psychologist to answer a hypothetical question regarding how the victim would likely have reacted to a sexual advance. State v. Washington, 131 N.C. App. 156, 506 S.E.2d 283 (1998), cert. denied, 352 N.C. 362, 544 S.E.2d 562 (2000).

Chiropractor. — In personal injury action arising out of an automobile accident, the trial court erred in excluding chiropractor's testimony concerning plaintiff's nerve strain or sprain, because such injury and treatment are within the field of chiropractic as defined by statute. Ellis v. Rouse, 86 N.C. App. 367, 357 S.E.2d 699 (1987).

Serologist. — Under the standard set forth in State v. Wade, 296 N.C. 454, 251 S.E.2d 407 (1979), the tests forming the basis of serologist's testimony were sufficiently reliable to support the admission of her expert opinion based upon those tests. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

Foundations for the testimony of expert witnesses who testified regarding spermatozoa, hair and DNA found on female minor's bed, clothes and body were sufficient. State v. Bowers, 135 N.C. App. 682, 522 S.E.2d 332 (1999).

S.B.I. Lab Technician. — Trial court in a murder trial did not commit reversible error by permitting a State Bureau of Investigation laboratory technician to testify as to how a level of gunshot residue could have gotten on the victim's hands, and as to how the failure of the defendant's gunshot residue test to provide conclusive results could have been caused by the passage of 31/2 hours since the time of the shooting and by activity on the part of the defendant. State v. Benjamin, 83 N.C. App. 318, 349 S.E.2d 878 (1986).

Ultrasound Technologist. — In case relating to indecent liberties with a child, where witness testified as to her qualifications as an ultrasound technologist, which included an undergraduate degree, completion of a medical science training program which specialized in ultrasound training, and six years of experience in the field, and her testimony assisted the jury in evaluating two facts in issue, namely, (a) whether intercourse occurred, and (b) the time at which the alleged offense was committed, court did not err in allowing the witness to testify as expert. State v. Fenn, 94 N.C. App. 127, 379 S.E.2d 715, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 548, 385 S.E.2d 504 (1989).

Engineer. — Professional engineer's testimony as to the structure and appearance of a stairway on which plaintiff was injured was based on direct personal knowledge; therefore, this testimony was admissible so long as it was relevant and its probative value was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Newton v. New Hanover County Bd. of Educ., 342 N.C. 554, 467 S.E.2d 58 (1996).

Self-Defense. — Pathologist who performed the autopsy on murder victim was clearly in a position to assist the jury in understanding the nature of the deceased's wound and in determining whether defendant, in fact, acted in self-defense when he shot the deceased, and therefore, he was properly allowed to testify to these matters in the form of an opinion, even though self-defense was an ultimate issue in the case. State v. Saunders, 317 N.C. 308, 345 S.E.2d 212 (1986).

Testimony Based upon Diagnosis Made One Month After Accident. — In negligence action where plaintiff's van collided with defendant's garbage truck, trial court did not err in admitting medical testimony of doctor despite the fact fracture of plaintiff's thoracic vertebrae was diagnosed by doctor approximately one month after the accident; a medical expert is competent to testify as to the cause of suffering alleged by plaintiff and in this case, the doctor, qualified as an expert in the field of orthopedic surgery, testified that in his opinion, based on his evaluation of plaintiff's medical condition, X-rays, bone scan and plaintiff's medical history, the thoracic fracture, originally undiagnosed by doctors immediately after the accident, was caused by the collision in question. Smith v. Pass, 95 N.C. App. 243, 382 S.E.2d 781 (1989).

Expert So Qualified May Testify Regarding Causation. — In medical malpractice case resulting from bilateral hernia operation in which the doctor mistakenly cut plaintiff's penis, the trial court did not violate this section when it allowed plaintiff's expert witness to testify regarding causation. Andrews v. Carr, 135 N.C. App. 463, 521 S.E.2d 269 (1999).

"Psychological autopsy" on decedent, involving interviewing family members and reviewing records to determine the probable cause of death or the decedent's state of mind at the time of his death, was competent and properly admitted for the purpose of determining the mental state of the deceased at the time of his suicide in a workers' compensation proceeding wherein plaintiff alleged that decedent's suicide was caused by a dysthymic disorder (depression) caused by his employment as a police officer. Harvey v. Raleigh Police Dep't, 85 N.C. App. 540, 355 S.E.2d 147, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 631, 360 S.E.2d 86 (1987).

Psychologist's testimony that child victim responded to test questions in an "honest fashion ... admitting that she was in a fair amount of emotional distress" did not constitute an expert opinion as to her character or credibility, but was merely a statement of opinion by a trained professional, based upon personal knowledge and professional expertise, that the test results were reliable because the victim seemed to respond to the questions in an honest fashion. State v. Kennedy, 320 N.C. 20, 357 S.E.2d 359 (1987).

Testimony Regarding the Compentency of Witnesses to Testify. — The testimony of a clinical social worker and licensed psychological associate/counselor was properly admitted as relevant to the issue of the competency of three children to testify. In re Faircloth, 137 N.C. App. 311, 527 S.E.2d 679 (2000).

Test Based on Phadebas Methodology. — The expert witness's testimony established the reliability of the "Phadebas methodology," and therefore was admissible in the defendant's trial for sexual offenses against a 12-year-old girl, where the methodology indicated the presence of saliva on the vaginal test swabs taken from the victim's sexual assault kit, and the testimony was offered by the state to support the victim's testimony that the defendant had put his mouth on her vagina. State v. Dennis, 129 N.C. App. 686, 500 S.E.2d 765 (1998).

Origin of Injuries. — In trial for sexual offense in the first degree, the trial judge did not err in permitting State's rebuttal witness, Chief Medical Examiner for the State, to testify that in his opinion scratch marks on child's back were not consistent with self-mutilation and in allowing pediatrician to offer her opinion that the injuries were neither accidental nor self-inflicted. State v. Kennedy, 320 N.C. 20, 357 S.E.2d 359 (1987).

Expert Opinion on Credibility. — Although Rules 405 and 608, when read together, prohibit an expert witness from commenting on the credibility of another witness, this rule allows expert testimony where the expert's testimony goes to the reliability of a diagnosis and not to the credibility of a rape victim. State v. Marine, 135 N.C. App. 279, 520 S.E.2d 65 (1999).

Credibility of Children Who Report Abuse. — In a prosecution for rape and sexual offense committed against a mentally defective female, the trial court did not err in allowing a pediatrician to testify on the credibility of children in general who report sexual abuse. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

Expert in Child Physical Abuse Case. — In murder trial alleging death by water intoxication, witness, qualified as an expert in pediatric critical care medicine, could relate the sensations that a six-year-old boy would feel after drinking a large quantity of water, which, under normal conditions, would have signaled him to stop drinking. State v. Crawford, 329 N.C. 466, 406 S.E.2d 579 (1991).

Where physicians testified they had experience with the medical conditions known as Battered-Child Syndrome and Shaken-Baby Syndrome, gave detailed explanations of the general nature of these conditions and how they are medically evaluated, and offered opinions as to whether the injuries were consistent with intentionally, as opposed to accidentally, inflicted injuries, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the testimony since it was within each physician's area of expertise, was helpful to the factfinder and did not embrace a legal term of art or conclusion of law. State v. McAbee, 120 N.C. App. 674, 463 S.E.2d 281 (1995).

Testimony from expert in pediatrics and child abuse regarding battered child syndrome was properly admitted. State v. Elliott, 344 N.C. 242, 475 S.E.2d 202 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1106, 117 S. Ct. 1111, 137 L. Ed. 2d 312 (1997).

Expert medical testimony was admissible in a capital murder prosecution, where the testimony of four physicians concerning the severity of the injuries inflicted on the defendant's infant son was relevant and admissible as evidence of the aggravating circumstance that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel in that the evidence attempted to quantify and qualify the infant's injuries for the jury. State v. Atkins, 349 N.C. 62, 505 S.E.2d 97 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1147, 119 S. Ct. 2025, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1999).

Expert in Child Sexual Abuse Case. — An opinion as "to the age at which the children began to understand dates," by an expert in clinical social work particularly in the area of child sexual abuse, was within the realm of expertise of the witness and was of assistance to the jury; therefore, the trial court did not err by allowing the testimony. State v. Weaver, 117 N.C. App. 434, 451 S.E.2d 15 (1994).

Court properly allowed the opinion testimony of expert/doctor where the record indicated that the doctor based her opinions on her own exam of the victim, extensive personal experience examining child sexual abuse victims, knowledge of child sexual abuse studies, and a colleague's notes from an interview with the victim. State v. Crumbley, 135 N.C. App. 59, 519 S.E.2d 94 (1999).

The testimony of a licensed psychological associate was admissible, assuming it was tendered in her capacity as a child sex abuse expert, where her testimony was her opinion based on her specialized expert knowledge concerning what the child had demonstrated by manipulation of anatomically correct dolls, and it was helpful to the jury on the issue of whether the defendant had committed fellatio or anal intercourse on the child. State v. Waddell, 130 N.C. App. 488, 504 S.E.2d 84 (1998), aff'd in part and modified in part, 351 N.C. 413, 527 S.E.2d 644 (2000).

Expert opinion by a psychologist that the victim was sexually abused was admissible pursuant to this section where the expert who specialized in children and adolescents based her testimony on diagnosis made while treating the child on 45 occasions and not just on a repetition of the child's statements. State v. Youngs, 141 N.C. App. 220, 540 S.E.2d 794 (2000).

Exhibition of Characteristics Consistent with Abuse. — Opinion of expert witness that mentally retarded adult exhibited behavioral characteristics consistent with sexual abuse was within the scope of permissible expert testimony, where it was based upon his experience in treating sexually abused mentally retarded persons, his familiarity with research and literature in that field, and his personal examination of the victim. State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 66, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

In trial for sexual offense in the first degree, it was not improper to allow both psychologist and pediatrician to testify concerning the symptoms and characteristics of sexually abused children and to state the opinion that the symptoms exhibited by the victim were consistent with sexual or physical abuse. State v. Kennedy, 320 N.C. 20, 357 S.E.2d 359 (1987).

In a prosecution in which defendant was convicted of taking indecent liberties with a minor, the testimony of social worker and pediatrician as to a child's continued cooperation with a person whom the child has accused of sexual abuse was specialized knowledge, helpful to the jury and well within the fields of expertise of the two witnesses, and as defendant had "opened the door" for this evidence by cross-examining child victim about going to barn alone with defendant after she admitted she was afraid of defendant and did not like to be alone with him, it was also admissible expert testimony that corroborated the testimony of the state's prosecuting witness. State v. Bailey, 89 N.C. App. 212, 365 S.E.2d 651 (1988).

In prosecution in which defendant was convicted of taking indecent liberties with a minor, admission of testimony of psychologist who examined child at the request of DSS as to her anxiousness and anger during his examination of her and his professional expert opinion as to the relationship between her anxiousness and anger and the events which she described during the examination was not error. State v. Bailey, 89 N.C. App. 212, 365 S.E.2d 651 (1988).

Testimony of pediatrician that the physical trauma revealed by her examination of a child was consistent with the abuse which the child alleged had been inflicted upon her, did not comment on the truthfulness of the victim or the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and was properly admitted to assist the jury in understanding the results of the physical examination and their relevancy to the case being tried. State v. Aguallo, 322 N.C. 818, 370 S.E.2d 676 (1988).

Allowing experts to testify as to the symptoms and characteristics of sexually abused children and to state their opinions that the symptoms exhibited by the victim were consistent with sexual or physical abuse is proper. State v. Love, 100 N.C. App. 226, 395 S.E.2d 429 (1990), cert. denied, appeal dismissed, 328 N.C. 95, 402 S.E.2d 423 (1991).

A doctor's testimony that "mothers of abused children usually do not believe the child, and that it was a good sign for the victim to have told her grandmother that defendant abused her," was proper under this rule, since a lay jury could be expected to be unfamiliar with the parental responses to allegations of abuse and the responses of abused children to those to whom they look for help. State v. Speller, 102 N.C. App. 697, 404 S.E.2d 15, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 503, 407 S.E.2d 548 (1991).

Where physician's testimony was not that the victim was believable or that the defendant was guilty or innocent, but related to her expert knowledge of abused children in general and her personal examination of the victim, the testimony was admissible. State v. Speller, 102 N.C. App. 697, 404 S.E.2d 15, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 503, 407 S.E.2d 548 (1991).

Court did not err in allowing a physician to testify in a trial for child abuse that a child would not drink enough water to result in the amount which the deceased child absorbed "voluntarily." The physician testified on cross-examination that "voluntarily" to him meant as the result of the thirst mechanism; and he testified at great length about the thirst mechanism, and the body's tendency to adjust water level to maintain the proper concentration of substances such as sodium. This evidence was well within the doctor's area of expertise and helpful to the jury. State v. West, 103 N.C. App. 1, 404 S.E.2d 191 (1991).

Conversion Reaction in Rape Victims. — Expert testimony regarding post-traumatic stress disorder and conversion reaction in rape victims could be helpful to the jury in understanding the nature and causes of these disorders, as well as the post-assault behavior patterns of the victim. State v. Hall, 330 N.C. 808, 412 S.E.2d 883 (1992).

Expert Testimony on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder. — For case upholding admission of psychologist's testimony on post-traumatic stress disorder suffered by victim, see State v. Strickland, 96 N.C. App. 642, 387 S.E.2d 62 (1990).

If believed, expert testimony regarding post-traumatic stress disorder could be helpful to the jury in understanding the behavioral patterns of sexual assault victims. This court and courts of other jurisdictions have recognized the reliability of post traumatic stress disorder testimony in sexual assault cases. State v. Huang, 99 N.C. App. 658, 394 S.E.2d 279 (1990), vacated in part, 107 N.C. App. 710, 421 S.E.2d 812 (1992).

A Minor's Future Employment Opportunities. — The court properly allowed expert testimony pursuant to this section as to whether plaintiff, a minor injured in an automobile accident, would attend college and the effect of scarring on her future employability where the experts all testified based on their own personal evaluations of the minor, a review of her additional medical records, and their expertise and training. Fox-Kirk v. Hannon, 142 N.C. App. 267, 542 S.E.2d 346 (2001), review denied, 353 N.C. 725, 551 S.E.2d 437 (2001), review dismissed, 353 N.C. 725, 551 S.E.2d 437 (2001).

Testimony on Chronic Alcohol Abuse. — Expert testimony that, as a result of his chronic alcohol abuse, the defendant suffered from organic impairment of brain functioning and from a loss of brain tissue which impaired his ability to think, plan, or reflect could assist the jury in determining a fact at issue — whether the defendant had premeditated and deliberated; therefore, this expert opinion testimony was not rendered inadmissible on the basis that it embraced the issues of premeditation and deliberation and specific intent to kill, which are ultimate issues to be determined by the jury. State v. Daniel, 333 N.C. 756, 429 S.E.2d 724 (1993).

Testimony of Expert Satisfied Helpfulness Test. — In a custody action, trial court did not err in admitting over objection the testimony of psychologist who stated that defendant was better able to meet the needs of the child and who stated her recommendations as to visitation; the testimony of psychologist was within her respective area of expertise and satisfied the helpfulness test for expert opinions under this rule, and the witness was unquestionably in a better position than the trial court to have an opinion on the subject about which she testified. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 93 N.C. App. 639, 379 S.E.2d 93 (1989).

Bloodstain pattern interpretation is an appropriate area for expert testimony. State v. Goode, 341 N.C. 513, 461 S.E.2d 631 (1995).

Bloodstain pattern interpretation is a specialized crime scene technique wherein a specially trained individual studies the blood and the types of stains at the scene of the crime, and then, based upon his knowledge of similar bloodstain characteristics and reproductions of the crime scene, he forms an opinion about what actually occurred at the crime scene. Experts rely upon specific categories of bloodstains which are defined by the way in which they are made. State v. Goode, 341 N.C. 513, 461 S.E.2d 631 (1995).

Blood Spatter Testimony. — Admission of testimony by SBI agent regarding blood spatters, location of wound, and the location of body was properly admitted. State v. East, 345 N.C. 535, 481 S.E.2d 652 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 918, 118 S. Ct. 306, 139 L. Ed. 2d 236 (1997).

Building Code Standards. — Whether or not building met the standards of the Building Code, though not determinative of the issue of negligence, had some probative value as to whether or not defendant failed to keep his store in a reasonably safe condition, and expert testimony on this issue could properly be introduced in a negligence action against store owner. Thomas v. Dixson, 88 N.C. App. 337, 363 S.E.2d 209 (1988).

Expert on Cause of Fires. — In a civil action wherein plaintiff sought to recover proceeds of a fire insurance policy issued to plaintiffs by defendant, the trial court did not err in allowing a professor who had a doctorate in chemical engineering and had taught thermodynamics and heat transfer (the underlying sciences of fire and its propagation), had since 1946 done consulting work for various companies and individuals in forensics in connection with fires and explosions, had been called upon to do investigations with the purpose of giving an opinion as to the cause and origin of fires, and had been previously qualified as an expert to testify within these areas in the courts of this state to testify as an expert on the cause and origin of the fire. Wiles v. North Carolina Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 85 N.C. App. 162, 354 S.E.2d 248, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 517, 358 S.E.2d 533 (1987).

In a case where defendant was convicted of first degree arson, trial court did not err in admitting the opinion testimony of the State's expert witness that the fire was intentionally set; record showed the State's expert witness was a captain in the fire department who had served for nine years as a fire inspector and had received special training in fire investigation; furthermore, his testimony explained, in clear terms, the accepted method for eliminating accidental causes of fires and such testimony was clearly instructive to the jury. State v. English, 95 N.C. App. 611, 383 S.E.2d 436 (1989).

Expert in the field of incendiary fires had sufficient knowledge to form an opinion that the fire was intentionally set. State v. Hales, 344 N.C. 419, 474 S.E.2d 328 (1996).

Opinion Based upon Preliminary Testing. — Though not a positive opinion that substance in cellophane package contained cocaine, analyst's opinion that the substance "could" contain cocaine was properly admissible in trial for trafficking, where the opinion was based upon a preliminary color test with a positive result. State v. White, 104 N.C. App. 165, 408 S.E.2d 871 (1991).

Officer Allowed to Testify as to How Marijuana Is Generally Packaged. — The trial court did not err in allowing officer to testify as to how marijuana was generally packaged since the officer was experienced in drug packaging and his opinion that the marijuana was packaged for private use did not invade the jury's province to pass upon the credibility of the witness or determination of guilt. State v. Chisholm, 90 N.C. App. 526, 369 S.E.2d 375 (1988).

Testimony Based on Blood-Alcohol Analyzer. — Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting Blood-Alcohol Analyzer as a reliable scientific method of proof under subsection (a) of this rule, nor should it have been excluded under § 8C-1, Rule 403, since the probative value of its results were not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or jury confusion, and since both parties had opportunity to either attack or support its reliability. State v. Cardwell, 133 N.C. App. 496, 516 S.E.2d 388 (1999).

Extrapolation of Blood Alcohol Concentration. — In prosecution in which the jury found defendant guilty of DWI and driving on the wrong side, testimony of expert witness that the average person displays a certain rate of decline in blood alcohol concentration (BAC) in the hours after the last consumption of alcohol, and that based on that average rate of decline defendant's BAC, which was .09 some two and one-half hours after the accident, would have been approximately 0.13 at the time of the accident, was not improper. State v. Catoe, 78 N.C. App. 167, 336 S.E.2d 691 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 380, 344 S.E.2d 1 (1986).

Expert on Mitochondrial DNA Analysis. — Trial court properly admitted expert testimony concerning mitochondrial DNA analysis (mtDNA) evidence, despite defendant's assertion that mtDNA testing was not scientifically reliable and that its reasoning and methodology were not properly applied to the facts of the case. State v. Underwood, 134 N.C. App. 533, 518 S.E.2d 231 (1999), cert. dismissed, 352 N.C. 669, 535 S.E.2d 33 (2000).

Expert Held in Better Position Than Jury to Interpret Evidence. — Where three witnesses testified that defendant crossed the center line and struck the Fiesta in the southbound lane, defendant and another witness testified that the accident occurred when the Fiesta slid into the northbound lane, and physical evidence was presented regarding damage to the vehicles, rotation and resting places of the vehicles, gouge marks in the pavement, and distribution of debris, the expert was in a better position than the jury to interpret this evidence and to draw conclusions from it based upon scientific principles. State v. Purdie, 93 N.C. App. 269, 377 S.E.2d 789 (1989).

While admittedly unfamiliar with the specific subject area of sale of law practices in the area, CPA's training and experience gave him knowledge sufficient to render him better qualified than the trier of fact to value an interest in a law practice; therefore, where the trier of fact made the determination that the witness' testimony would be helpful, no error or abuse of discretion was found. McLean v. McLean, 323 N.C. 543, 374 S.E.2d 376 (1988).

Trial court did not err in allowing testimony by doctor that sexual abuse of child was very likely because the doctor was in a better position than the jury to understand the significance of her medical findings. State v. Dick, 126 N.C. App. 312, 485 S.E.2d 88 (1997), cert. denied, 346 N.C. 551, 488 S.E.2d 813 (1997).

Rule 703. Bases of opinion testimony by experts.

The facts or data in the particular case upon which an expert bases an opinion or inference may be those perceived by or made known to him at or before the hearing. If of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences upon the subject, the facts or data need not be admissible in evidence. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 703.

Under the rule, facts or data upon which an expert bases an opinion may be derived from three possible sources. The first is the personal observation of the witness. The second source is presentation at trial by a hypothetical question or by having the expert attend the trial and hear the testimony establishing the facts. The third source consists of presentation of data to the expert outside of court. See Comment, Expert Medical Testimony: Differences Between the North Carolina Rules and the Federal Rules of Evidence 12 W.F.L.R. 833, 837 (1976).

In State v. Wade, 296 N.C. 454 (1978), the Court stated that a "physician, as an expert witness, may give his opinion, including a diagnosis, based either on personal knowledge or observation or on information supplied him by others, including the patient, if such information is inherently reliable even though it is not independently admissible into evidence." Although the rule requires that the facts or data "be of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field" rather than that they be "inherently reliable," the thrust of State v. Wade is consistent with the rule. See W. Blakey, Examination of Expert Witnesses in North Carolina, 61 N.C.L.Rev. 1, 20-32 (1982).

The rule provides that the facts or data need not be admissible in evidence if of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field. In State v. Wade the Court stated that: "If his opinion is admissible the expert may testify to the information he relied on in forming it for the purpose of showing the basis of the opinion." Thus an expert may testify as to the facts upon which his opinion is based, even though the facts would not be admissible as substantive evidence.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality. — The admission into evidence of an expert opinion based upon information which is not itself admissible into evidence does not violate the U.S. Const., Amend. VI guarantee of the right of an accused to confront his accusers where the expert is available for cross-examination. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

Applicability of "Inherently Reliable" Test Prior to Enactment of Rule. — Prior to the enactment of this rule, this court had adopted a policy that allowed experts to give their opinion when the information upon which they relied met an "inherently reliable" test. State v. Allen, 322 N.C. 176, 367 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

"Reasonably Relied Upon" Standard. — Several commentators have suggested that there is little difference in the "inherently reliable" standard adopted by the Supreme Court in State v. Wade, 296 N.C. 454, 251 S.Ed.2d 407 (1979) and the "reasonably relied upon" standard of this rule. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

The plaintiff's statements made to the physician for the purpose of treatment were adequate to support the physician's opinion as a statement "reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field" under this rule. Cherry v. Harrell, 84 N.C. App. 598, 353 S.E.2d 433, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 167, 358 S.E.2d 49 (1987).

Information Commonly Used and Accepted. — Where expert relied on statistical information commonly used and accepted in his field, such evidence was allowed by this rule. State v. Demery, 113 N.C. App. 58, 437 S.E.2d 704 (1993).

This rule is not confined in its application to medical and psychiatric expert testimony. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

Expert need not testify from personal knowledge, as long as the basis for his or her opinion is available in the record or available upon demand. Thompson v. Lenoir Transf. Co., 72 N.C. App. 348, 324 S.E.2d 619 (1985); Liss of Carolina, Inc. v. South Hills Shopping Center, Inc., 85 N.C. App. 258, 354 S.E.2d 549 (1987).

But May Give Opinion Based on Facts Not Otherwise Admissible. — Under this rule, an expert may give his opinion based on facts not otherwise admissible in evidence, provided that the information considered by the expert is of the type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences on the subject. State v. Allen, 322 N.C. 176, 367 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Otherwise Inadmissible Hearsay Evidence May Be Allowed. — The well-established practice has been to admit evidence otherwise inadmissible as hearsay for the purpose of revealing the basis for expert opinion testimony. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 406, 368 S.E.2d 844 (1988).

The substantive facts needed to support an expert's conclusion cannot be supplied by the opinion itself. Barbecue Inn, Inc. v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 88 N.C. App. 355, 363 S.E.2d 362 (1988).

The fact that an expert's opinion is not based on personal observation of the accident scene affects the weight to be accorded the testimony, not its admissibility. State v. Purdie, 93 N.C. App. 269, 377 S.E.2d 789 (1989).

Unless a party specifically objects to the qualification of the expert, a ruling permitting opinion testimony is tantamount to a finding by the trial court that the witness is qualified to state an opinion. State v. Westall, 116 N.C. App. 534, 449 S.E.2d 24, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 671, 453 S.E.2d 185 (1994).

Duty of Trial Judge. — Although this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 705 give plaintiff the right to vigorously cross examine defendant's expert regarding the underlying facts upon which he bases his opinion, it is the duty of the trial judge to exercise sound discretion in controlling the nature and scope of the cross-examination in the interest of justice and in confining the testimony within the rules of competency, relevancy and materiality. McClain v. Otis Elevator Co., 106 N.C. App. 45, 415 S.E.2d 78 (1992).

Court's Determination That Factual Basis of Opinion Was Insufficient. — Under this rule, the trial court could not properly exclude expert's testimony based on its own determination that the factual basis of the opinion was insufficient. Barbecue Inn, Inc. v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 88 N.C. App. 355, 363 S.E.2d 362 (1988).

Expert testimony that a particular cause "could have" or "possibly" produced a particular result is admissible. Barbecue Inn, Inc. v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 88 N.C. App. 355, 363 S.E.2d 362 (1988).

Contents of Psychiatric Report. — Admission into evidence of the contents of a report by a psychiatrist who did not testify at trial, when the substance of such report was revealed to the jury during the State's cross-examination of another psychiatrist, was proper, where the report was a part of the hospital records relied on by the psychiatrist who testified. State v. Mize, 315 N.C. 285, 337 S.E.2d 562 (1985).

Out-of-Court Communication as Basis for Opinion. — This rule has been interpreted to permit an expert witness to rely on an out-of-court communication as a basis for an opinion and to relate the content of that communication to the jury. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 406, 368 S.E.2d 844 (1988).

Testimony Regarding Results of Experiments. — This rule allows experts to rely on the opinions of other experts or upon facts or data not itself admissible as the basis of their own expert opinions. When a witness testifies to results of experiments after giving an opinion which was based on such experiments, such testimony is not hearsay because it is not offered for the truth of the matter, but to show the basis of the opinion. State v. Robinson, 330 N.C. 1, 409 S.E.2d 288 (1991).

Testimony Regarding Experiment Properly Excluded. — Trial court properly sustained the State's objection to testimony by expert witness regarding an identification experiment where expert had not given an opinion specific enough to support admission of testimony regarding the experiment in question. State v. Robinson, 330 N.C. 1, 409 S.E.2d 288 (1991).

An opinion based upon reviews of evaluations of doctors who had interviewed defendant and personal discussions with doctors in whose care defendant had been placed were just as reliable as an opinion based on a hypothetical question. State v. Daniels, 337 N.C. 243, 446 S.E.2d 298 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 953, 130 L. Ed. 2d 895 (1995).

Test Results as Basis for Opinion. — In order to be a proper basis for an expert opinion, test results of the analysis of residues said to indicate cocaine, if otherwise inadmissible, must be of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field. State v. Gary, 78 N.C. App. 29, 337 S.E.2d 70 (1985).

Deposition summaries used by plaintiff's expert witness, although not admissible as substantive evidence, were admissible under this rule for the limited purpose of demonstrating to the jury facts the expert relied upon when forming his opinion. Wolfe v. Wilmington Shipyard, Inc., 135 N.C. App. 661, 522 S.E.2d 306 (1999).

Architect. — The court erred in excluding an architect's opinion as to the cost of repair, especially in view of the fact that the trial took place before the court and not before a jury, where the facts upon which the architect intended to rely in answering the question were already in evidence through defendants' other technical witness. As such, personal knowledge was not a prerequisite for him to give an opinion. Waynick Constr., Inc. v. York, 70 N.C. App. 287, 319 S.E.2d 304, cert. denied, 312 N.C. 624, 323 S.E.2d 926 (1984).

County Medical Examiner. — In prosecution for rape and first-degree sexual offense involving four- and five-year-old victims, trial court did not err in allowing county child medical examiner to testify to his opinion as to the likelihood that the victims had engaged in sexual intercourse, which opinion was not based on personal examination of the victims but was based on his review of the examining doctor's medical reports and conversations with two other physicians regarding the implications of the presence of protozoa trichomonas in very young girls. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Flooding. — Where landowners' experts in an inverse condemnation case based on flooding allegedly caused by an unreliable dam used water flow rates from studies that had used different methodologies, their opinions as to flooding were conclusory, and defense experts gave uncontradicted testimony in opposition, the experts' testimony was unreliable and inadmissible. Davis v. City of Mebane, 132 N.C. App. 500, 512 S.E.2d 450 (1999).

Fingerprint Expert. — Where a fingerprint expert testified that his findings were verified by an out-of-court expert, the opinion of the out-of-court expert thus necessarily formed a part of the basis for the opinion to which the witness testified, and it clearly was reasonable for an expert in the field of fingerprint identification to rely upon such a procedure. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 406, 368 S.E.2d 844 (1988).

Medical testimony did not have to be expressed in terms of reasonable probability or certainty, where the testimony objected to simply stated what doctor did and did not find in examining and treating plaintiff. Polk v. Biles, 92 N.C. App. 86, 373 S.E.2d 570 (1988).

Opinion of Another Physician. — While one physician may not base his opinion solely on the statement of opinion of another physician, when a physician as an expert witness bases an opinion upon reliable information, including a consistent opinion of another physician, the second physician's opinion is admissible. Donavant v. Hudspeth, 318 N.C. 1, 347 S.E.2d 797 (1986) (decided under former § 8-58.14).

Although generally statements by one treating physician to another are inherently reliable, may be used as the basis for an expert opinion, and are admissible in evidence to show the basis for the expert opinion, when the trial judge determines on voir dire that the source of the physician's statement is in fact unreliable, he may exclude the statement as evidence for any purpose. If the opinion of the physician testifying as an expert is based solely on the unreliable statement, the physician should not be allowed to state the opinion. If, on the other hand, the opinion is based upon sufficient additional, reliable facts and data, the trial judge may allow the expert to state his opinion, notwithstanding his statement that he also relied in part upon unreliable information. Donavant v. Hudspeth, 318 N.C. 1, 347 S.E.2d 797 (1986) (decided under former § 8-58.14).

Where undisputed earlier testimony established that a certain individual was part of a medical group charged with evaluating mental health status and that mental health expert relied upon information from that individual in formulating her final diagnosis, this evidence should have been admitted for the purpose of showing the basis for the expert opinion testimony under this rule. State v. Davis, 340 N.C. 1, 455 S.E.2d 627, cert. denied, 516 U.S. 846, 116 S. Ct. 136, 133 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1995).

Waiver of Right to Challenge Qualifications on Appeal. — Where defendant did not object to the qualifications of the witness, but merely objected to the content of the testimony related to specific knowledge of the pellet gun involved in the case, defendant waived the right to challenge the witness's qualification on appeal. State v. Westall, 116 N.C. App. 534, 449 S.E.2d 24, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 671, 453 S.E.2d 185 (1994).

Out-of-Court Expert. — A testifying expert can reasonably rely on the opinion of an out-of-court expert and can testify to the content of that opinion. This accords with case law prior to adoption of the Rules of Evidence. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 406, 368 S.E.2d 844 (1988).

Plaintiff's doctor did not have to qualify as a psychiatrist or psychologist to testify that he saw nothing in his examination and treatment of the plaintiff to indicate that she was malingering. Polk v. Biles, 92 N.C. App. 86, 373 S.E.2d 570 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 337, 378 S.E.2d 798 (1989).

Physician. — The physician's diagnosis and treatment of the plaintiff's injuries constituted a pre-trial personal perception upon which he was entitled to base his opinion pursuant to this rule. Cherry v. Harrell, 84 N.C. App. 598, 353 S.E.2d 433, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 167, 358 S.E.2d 49 (1987).

Serologist. — Under the standard set forth in State v. Wade, 296 N.C. 454, 251 S.Ed.2d 407 (1979), the tests forming the basis of the serologist's testimony were sufficiently reliable to support the admission of her expert opinion based upon those tests. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

Admission of certain opinion testimony by a serologist was not error where the serologist's testimony that his opinion was based on statistics from the State Bureau of Investigation studies conducted between 1979 and 1983 and from scientific journals, both of which are relied on by other experts in his field, laid sufficient foundation to support admission of his expert opinion. State v. Payne, 328 N.C. 377, 402 S.E.2d 582 (1991).

DNA Analysis. — This rule permits an expert to give an opinion based on evidence not otherwise admissible at trial, provided the evidence is of the type reasonably relied upon by other experts in the field; forensic serologist based his opinion on the results of DNA analysis which is admissible in North Carolina. State v. Daughtry, 340 N.C. 488, 459 S.E.2d 747 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1079, 116 S. Ct. 789, 133 L. Ed. 2d 739 (1996).

Genetics Expert. — Trial court did not err by allowing special agent who was qualified as an expert in molecular genetics to testify that person who analyzed SBI database determined 500 samples to be a representative sample upon which the North Carolina population frequency database was developed, where the special agent was obviously familiar with the analysis of the SBI database and the results. State v. Hill, 116 N.C. App. 573, 449 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 670, 453 S.E.2d 183 (1994).

Social Worker. — As an expert witness, a social worker is entitled, pursuant to this rule, to rely upon information received from a children's home official as a basis for her opinion. In re Wheeler, 87 N.C. App. 189, 360 S.E.2d 458 (1987).

Behavioral Characteristics Consistent with Abuse. — Opinion of expert witness that mentally retarded adult exhibited behavioral characteristics consistent with sexual abuse was within the scope of permissible expert testimony, where it was based upon his experience in treating sexually abused mentally retarded persons, his familiarity with research and literature in that field, and his personal examination of the victim. State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder. — For case upholding admission of psychologist's testimony on post-traumatic stress disorder suffered by victim, see State v. Strickland, 96 N.C. App. 642, 387 S.E.2d 62 (1990).

Psychologist's Report. — Psychologist's report was admissible in a sentencing hearing after it was used to cross-examine another witness, where the report included comments from unidentified informants on various aspects of co-defendant's character and upbringing, including the relationship he had with his parents, his prior experience with police, his demeanor, and the influence his brother defendant had over him, all statements used routinely by psychologists to form an opinion. These statements were introduced, not for the truth of the matter asserted, but as nonhearsay evidence to support the psychologist's conclusions. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Admission of Expert Testimony Upheld. — Where plaintiff's expert witness testified regarding his opinion about what the projected net income of plaintiff's store would have been if it had remained in business, and at defendant's request, the witness disclosed the underlying information upon which he based his opinion, which information included records kept for accounting purposes by the expert witness and data supplied to him by plaintiff's management employees, the court did not err in allowing the witness to give his opinion to the loss of profits suffered by plaintiff as a result of defendant's breach of the lease contract. Liss of Carolina, Inc. v. South Hills Shopping Center, Inc., 85 N.C. App. 258, 354 S.E.2d 549 (1987).

Use of the word "guess" regarding his opinion did not render pathologist's testimony inadmissible. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Police captain's testimony indicating that a store had sold sexually explicit materials for several years prior to the time of indictment for dissemination of obscenity tended to show that the corporate defendant and the individual defendants, both of whom began working for the store before the indictment, were aware that the store was selling sexually explicit materials at the time of the alleged conspiracy. Consequently, the trial court properly allowed the testimony. State v. Cinema Blue of Charlotte, Inc., 98 N.C. App. 628, 392 S.E.2d 136, appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 142, 394 S.E.2d 181 (1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1083, 111 S. Ct. 953, 112 L. Ed. 2d 1042 (1991).

Trial court in a murder case did not err in allowing an expert to testify as to the presence and location of defendant's DNA on the victim's clothing; although the expert did not personally take the clothing samples, the expert had reviewed the investigator's report and had viewed the clothing. State v. Fair, — N.C. —, 552 S.E.2d 568, 2001 N.C. LEXIS 944 (2001).

Rule 704. Opinion on ultimate issue.

Testimony in the form of an opinion or inference is not objectionable because it embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 704.

The rule would abrogate the doctrine that excludes evidence in the form of an opinion if it purports to resolve the "ultimate issue" to be decided by the trier of fact.

In State v. Wilkerson, 295 N.C. 559 (1978), the Court held that admissibility of expert opinion depends not on whether it would invade the jury's province, but rather on "whether the witness ... is in a better position to have an opinion ... than is the trier of fact." Professor Brandis states that: "It is hoped that a comparable reexamination of the rule as applied to lay testimony will be forthcoming. The rule has been condemned by thoughtful commentators, and judicial expressions of doubt are not wanting." Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 126, at 480-81 (1982) (footnotes omitted).

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The abolition of the ultimate issue rule does not lower the bars so as to admit all opinions. Under Rules 701 and 702, opinions must be helpful to the trier of fact, and Rule 403 provides for exclusion of evidence which wastes time. These provisions afford ample assurance against the admission of opinions which would merely tell the jury what result to reach, somewhat in the manner of the oath-helpers of an earlier day. They also stand ready to exclude opinions phrased in terms of inadequately explored legal criteria. Thus the question, 'Did T have capacity to make a will?' would be excluded, while the question, 'Did T have sufficient mental capacity to know the nature and extent of his property and the natural objects of his bounty and to formulate a rational scheme of distribution?' would be allowed. McCormick § 12."

CASE NOTES

There are two overriding reasons for excluding testimony which suggests whether legal conclusions should be drawn or whether legal standards are satisfied; the first is that such testimony invades not the province of the jury but the province of the court to determine the applicable law and to instruct the jury as to that law, and the second reason is that an expert is in no better position to conclude whether a legal standard has been satisfied or a legal conclusion should be drawn than is a jury which has been properly instructed on the standard or conclusion. HAJMM Co. v. House of Raeford Farms, Inc., 328 N.C. 578, 403 S.E.2d 483 (1991).

This rule allows testimony on ultimate issues. Welborn v. Roberts, 83 N.C. App. 340, 349 S.E.2d 886 (1986).

And Abrogates Doctrine Excluding Such Testimony. — This rule abrogates the doctrine that opinion testimony should be excluded for the reason that it goes to the ultimate issue which should be decided by the trier of fact. Green Hi-Win Farm, Inc. v. Neal, 83 N.C. App. 201, 349 S.E.2d 614 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 104, 353 S.E.2d 109 (1987).

But Admission Must Be Helpful to Jury. — Section 8C-1, Rule 704 does allow admission of lay opinion evidence on ultimate issues, but to qualify for admission, the opinion must be helpful to the jury. Mobley v. Hill, 80 N.C. App. 79, 341 S.E.2d 46 (1986).

Expert opinion testimony is not rendered inadmissible on the basis that it embraces ultimate issues to be determined by the jury. State v. Boyd, 343 N.C. 699, 473 S.E.2d 327 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1096, 117 S. Ct. 778, 136 L. Ed. 2d 722 (1997).

Expert testimony on the credibility of a witness is not admissible. State v. Huang, 99 N.C. App. 658, 394 S.E.2d 279 (1990), vacated in part, 107 N.C. App. 710, 421 S.E.2d 812 (1992).

Expert Is Not Precluded from Testifying as to Mental Capacity. — This rule plainly provides that an expert witness is not precluded from testifying as to whether a defendant had the capacity to make and carry out plans, or was under the influence of mental or emotional disturbance, merely because such testimony relates to an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact. State v. Shank, 367 N.C. 639, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988), overruling State v. Kirkley, 308 N.C. 196, 302 S.E.2d 144 (1983), and State v. Anderson, 303 N.C. 185, 278 S.E.2d 238 (1981), insofar as they are inconsistent.

But Court May Exclude Testimony Embracing a Conclusion Expert Is Not Qualified to Make. — It is not error for a trial court to refuse to admit expert testimony embracing a legal conclusion that the expert is not qualified to make. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

The trial court in a murder case did not err in refusing to admit testimony whereby defendant sought to have the experts tell the jury that certain legal standards had not been met. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

Capacity to Premeditate. — Since first-degree murder requires premeditation and deliberation, opinion testimony tending to show that a defendant did not have the capacity to premeditate or deliberate is testimony that embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact. Under this rule, such testimony is not thereby rendered inadmissible. State v. Shank, 367 N.C. 639, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988).

Because testimony tending to show that defendant did not have the capacity to premeditate or deliberate was relevant in determining the presence or absence of an element of the offense of murder with which he was charged, and this rule allows opinion testimony even though it relates to an ultimate issue, the trial court committed prejudicial error in not allowing the testimony. State v. Shank, 367 N.C. 639, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988).

Where defendant in first degree murder case called expert who testified that defendant neither knew right from wrong nor was capable of forming specific intent to commit murder, and State called expert to rebut this testimony, trial court erred by admitting State's expert rebuttal evidence. State asked expert "Have you an opinion ... whether or not [defendant] was capable of premeditating murder ...," and expert replied "He was." This testimony was an impermissible opinion concerning whether a legal standard had been met, and, under the circumstances of the case, was not harmless. State v. Rose, 327 N.C. 599, 398 S.E.2d 314 (1990).

Expert testimony that, as a result of his chronic alcohol abuse, the defendant suffered from organic impairment of brain functioning and from a loss of brain tissue which impaired his ability to think, plan, or reflect could assist the jury in determining a fact at issue — whether the defendant had premeditated and deliberated; such expert opinion testimony was not rendered inadmissible on the basis that it embraced the issues of premeditation and deliberation and specific intent to kill, which are ultimate issued to be determined by the jury. State v. Daniel, 333 N.C. 756, 429 S.E.2d 724 (1993).

Opinion on Ultimate Issues in Defending Against Summary Judgment. — Nonexpert opinion on ultimate issues may not be relied on to defend against summary judgment. Whether expert opinion on ultimate issues so presented may be relied on is not clear. Estrada v. Jaques, 70 N.C. App. 627, 321 S.E.2d 240 (1984).

A medical expert's testimony is not limited to conditions he has personally observed. The correct limitation is that facts must be "within his knowledge." State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Legal Conclusions. — The rule that an expert may not testify that a particular legal conclusion or standard has or has not been met remains unchanged by the new Evidence Code, at least where the standard is a legal term of art which carries a specific legal meaning not readily apparent to the witness. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985); Murrow v. Daniels, 85 N.C. App. 401, 355 S.E.2d 204 (1987), rev'd on other grounds, 321 N.C. 494, 364 S.E.2d 392 (1988).

An expert may generally not testify that a certain legal standard has or has not been met. Pelzer v. UPS, Inc., 126 N.C. App. 305, 484 S.E.2d 849 (1997), cert. denied, 346 N.C. 549, 488 S.E.2d 808 (1997).

The trial court correctly excluded portions of an expert witness's affidavit in which he opined that police officers in pursuit of a driver whom they suspected of being intoxicated and who, while fleeing, collided with and killed plaintiff's decedent acted "in a grossly negligent manner and showed a reckless disregard for the safety of others" in "violation of the City of Durham's pursuit policy." Norris v. Zambito, 135 N.C. App. 288, 520 S.E.2d 113 (1999).

Testimony of Attorney as to Legal Conclusions. — The trial court erred by allowing plaintiffs' expert witness, an attorney, to testify as to legal conclusions where the expert's testimony improperly invaded the trial court's province to determine the legal effect of a purchase money note and the guaranty executed in conjunction therewith, as well as the meaning of certain language in these documents. Smith v. Childs, 112 N.C. App. 672, 437 S.E.2d 500 (1993).

Wound Consistent with Intent to Cause Death. — Forensic expert's testimony that one of victim's "gunshot wounds to the head was consistent with an intent to cause death" was admissible. State v. Teague, 134 N.C. App. 702, 518 S.E.2d 573 (1999).

Defendant's Capacity to Rape. — "Rape" is a legal term of art and accordingly witness' opinion testimony concerning whether defendant was "capable of rape" was properly excluded. State v. Najewicz, 112 N.C. App. 280, 436 S.E.2d 132 (1993), cert. denied, 335 N.C. 362, 441 S.E.2d 130 (1994).

"Gross negligence" clearly has legal significance and that characterization by expert witness should not have been permitted. Murrow v. Daniels, 85 N.C. App. 401, 355 S.E.2d 204, rev'd on other grounds, 321 N.C. 494, 364 S.E.2d 392 (1988).

This rule does not eliminate the helpfulness requirement set forth in § 8C-1, Rule 702. Although an expert's opinion testimony is not objectionable merely because it embraces an ultimate issue, it must be of assistance to the trier of fact in order to be admissible. State v. Jackson, 320 N.C. 452, 358 S.E.2d 679 (1987).

Testimony that rape victim suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder is allowed to assist the jury in determining if the rape actually occurred, which expands the use of the testimony is allowed beyond purpose of rebutting defendant's contention that the prosecuting witness consented to intercourse. State v. Huang, 99 N.C. App. 658, 394 S.E.2d 279

(1990), vacated in part, 107 N.C. App. 710, 421 S.E.2d 812 (1992).

Paternity of Victim's Child. — In a prosecution for first-degree rape of a female under the age of 13, with expert's testimony concerning paternity index and evidence of defendant's access before it, jury was in as good a position as expert to determine whether defendant "probably" was father of victim's child. Therefore, expert's testimony that defendant "probably" was father of victim's child was of no assistance to the trier of fact and should have been excluded on that basis. State v. Jackson, 320 N.C. 452, 358 S.E.2d 679 (1987).

"Intentional Injury" in Child Abuse Case. — In a homicide prosecution against the mother of a deceased child, the court did not err by allowing physician to testify that a child's condition and death were the result of an intentional injury where the child ingested seven to nine quarts of water over a two to three hour period. State v. West, 103 N.C. App. 1, 404 S.E.2d 191 (1991).

Existence of Partnership. — In case in which insurance company sought to prove that defendant was liable as a partner for premiums incurred by her ex-husband's business, the trial court did not commit prejudicial error in allowing non-expert witnesses to express their opinions regarding the existence of a partnership. G.R. Little Agency, Inc. v. Jennings, 88 N.C. App. 107, 362 S.E.2d 807 (1987).

Existence or Breach of Fiduciary Relationship. — An expert witness may give an opinion that under the circumstances one party has reposed special confidence in another party, or that one party should act in good faith toward another party, or that one party must act with due regard to the interests of another party. However, the witness may not opine that a fiduciary relationship exists or has been breached. HAJMM Co. v. House of Raeford Farms, Inc., 328 N.C. 578, 403 S.E.2d 483 (1991).

An expert witness should not have been permitted to give his opinion that there was a fiduciary relationship between plaintiff and defendants, that the defendants breached their fiduciary duty, and that a member of defendant's board abused his discretion. HAJMM Co. v. House of Raeford Farms, Inc., 328 N.C. 578, 403 S.E.2d 483 (1991).

Child Abuse. — Expert's opinion as to whether a child had been abused was admissible where the opinion testimony was based upon the witness's overall examination of the victim and expert knowledge concerning the abuse of children, and not solely on the victim's statements. State v. Stancil, — N.C. App. —, 552 S.E.2d 212, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 860 (2001).

Admission of Expert Testimony Upheld. — In prosecution for rape and first-degree sexual offense involving four and five year old victims, trial court did not err in allowing county child medical examiner to testify to his opinion as to the likelihood that the victims had engaged in sexual intercourse, which opinion was not based on personal examination of the victims but was based on his review of the examining doctor's medical reports and conversations with two other physicians regarding the implications of the presence of protozoa trichomonas in very young girls. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Examining physician's failure, in giving his opinion that a penis caused the trauma he observed during his examination of child victim, to qualify his response did not render this testimony as to an ultimate issue improper. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Fact that the opinion testimony of fireman as an expert as to the presence of a flammable liquid embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact did not make it objectionable. State v. Riddick, 315 N.C. 749, 340 S.E.2d 55 (1986).

Trial court did not err in allowing the State's pathologist to testify that, in his opinion, the injuries suffered by the victim "were a proximate cause of her death" some 11 days later. State v. Ledford, 315 N.C. 599, 340 S.E.2d 309 (1986) (decided under former §§ 8-58.12 and 8-58.13).

Pathologist who performed the autopsy on murder victim was clearly in a position to assist the jury in understanding the nature of the deceased's wound and in determining whether defendant, in fact, acted in self-defense when he shot the deceased; therefore, he was properly allowed to testify to these matters in the form of an opinion, even though self-defense was an ultimate issue in the case. State v. Saunders, 317 N.C. 308, 345 S.E.2d 212 (1986).

Testimony of lay persons and experts, in an action brought to settle a boundary dispute, that the boundary to the property was as they had described it was not objectionable merely because it related to an ultimate issue in the case. Welborn v. Roberts, 83 N.C. App. 340, 349 S.E.2d 886 (1986).

The physician's testimony in a personal injury suit involving an automobile accident was not inadmissible for failure to state it was based on "reasonable medical probability." Cherry v. Harrell, 84 N.C. App. 598, 353 S.E.2d 433, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 167, 358 S.E.2d 49 (1987).

In trial for sexual offense in the first degree, it was not improper to allow both psychologist and pediatrician to testify concerning the symptoms and characteristics of sexually abused children and to state the opinion that the symptoms exhibited by the victim were consistent with sexual or physical abuse. State

v. Kennedy, 320 N.C. 20, 357 S.E.2d 359 (1987).

Where doctor gave opinion that defendant did not have specific intent to kill victim, trial court incorrectly ruled that doctor's testimony was inadmissible because it invaded the province of the jury since judge's concern that proffered testimony invaded the province of the jury had been vitiated by statute. State v. Clark, 324 N.C. 146, 377 S.E.2d 54 (1989).

Where three witnesses testified that defendant crossed the center line and struck the victim's automobile in the southbound lane, defendant and another witness testified that the accident occurred when the victim's automobile slid into the northbound lane, and physical evidence was presented regarding damage to the vehicles, rotation and resting places of the vehicles, gouge marks in the pavement, and distribution of debris, the expert was in a better position than the jury to interpret this evidence and to draw conclusions from it based upon scientific principles. State v. Purdie, 93 N.C. App. 269, 377 S.E.2d 789 (1989).

If believed, expert testimony regarding post traumatic stress disorder could be helpful to the jury in understanding the behavioral patterns of sexual assault victims. This court and courts of other jurisdictions have recognized the reliability of post traumatic stress disorder testimony in sexual assault cases. State v. Huang, 99 N.C. App. 658, 394 S.E.2d 279 (1990), vacated in part, 107 N.C. App. 710, 421 S.E.2d 812 (1992).

In an action wherein plaintiff sought a decree quieting title in a certain tract and determining that she had an unrestricted easement from the state road to that tract, the trial court erred in allowing an expert witness, an attorney, to give his opinion that, as a matter of law, plaintiff was entitled to an easement by implication. Williams v. Sapp, 83 N.C. App. 116, 349 S.E.2d 304 (1986).

In a personal injury case in which there was an allegation of excessive speed, where the court charged on excessive speed as an act of negligence, it was prejudicial error to admit the testimony of the highway patrolman as to his opinion of the speed of defendant's vehicle. Fowler v. Graves, 83 N.C. App. 403, 350 S.E.2d 155 (1986).

Where, in the course of her testimony, a physician repeated the victim's statements that the defendant had sexually abused her, defendant's objection that the doctor's testimony was improper (because it was to the effect that defendant was the perpetrator) was without merit. The testimony was derived from information obtained by the doctor in the course of the victim's treatment and evaluation and was admissible. Furthermore, the victim testified at trial and identified defendant as the perpetrator. Therefore, the doctor's testimony corroborated her testimony and was properly admitted on that ground. State v. Speller, 102 N.C. App. 697, 404 S.E.2d 15, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 503, 407 S.E.2d 548 (1991).

Where surveyor was an expert in land survey and his testimony may have helped the jury understand conclusions which could be drawn from the survey maps, his testimony was properly admitted. Beam v. Kerlee, 120 N.C. App. 203, 461 S.E.2d 911 (1995).

Doctor's use of the term "homicidal assault" was not a legal term of art, nor correlated to a criminal offense and the testimony related a proper opinion for an expert in the field of forensic pathology; thus, the trial court did not err in allowing the testimony. State v. Flippen, 344 N.C. 689, 477 S.E.2d 158 (1996).

Testimony of Lay Witness. — The state's objection to the questions posed by defense counsel on the ground that the questions went to an ultimate issue to be decided by the jury was not a proper basis for excluding the expected testimony by a police officer concerning whether he believed the defendant's comments concerning the murder of the mother of his child. State v. Owen, 130 N.C. App. 505, 503 S.E.2d 426 (1998), cert. denied, 349 N.C. 372, 525 S.E.2d 188 (1998).

Rule 705. Disclosure of facts or data underlying expert opinion.

The expert may testify in terms of opinion or inference and give his reasons therefor without prior disclosure of the underlying facts or data, unless an adverse party requests otherwise, in which event the expert will be required to disclose such underlying facts or data on direct examination or voir dire before stating the opinion. The expert may in any event be required to disclose the underlying facts or data on cross-examination. There shall be no requirement that expert testimony be in response to a hypothetical question. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule differs from Fed. R. Evid. 705 in two respects.

Fed. R. Evid. 705 leaves it to the court, rather than opposing counsel, to determine whether to require prior disclosure of the underlying facts. Rule 705 is consistent with G.S. 8-58.14, which should be repealed after the rule is adopted.

The second difference is that the last sentence of this rule does not appear in the Fed. R. Evid. 705. This sentence is identical to G.S. 8-58.12 which should be repealed after this rule is adopted. Although hypothetical questions are no longer required, neither the rule nor G.S. 8-58.12 prohibits their voluntary use.

Prior to 1982, when the facts upon which an opinion was based were within the expert's own knowledge, the court had discretion to permit the expert to give his opinion first and leave the facts to be brought out by cross-examination. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 136 (1982). Facts not within the personal knowledge of the expert had to be incorporated into a hypothetical question and thus disclosed prior to the opinion. Id. The 1981 legislation eliminated the requirement of the hypothetical question and allowed the expert to give his opinion without prior disclosure of the underlying facts unless an adverse party requests otherwise. G.S. 8-58.14 [now repealed]. Upon the request of an adverse party, the judge must require the expert to disclose the underlying facts on direct examination or voir dire before stating the opinion. This rule continues that requirement.

The second sentence of Rule 705 gives the opposing side the right to require disclosure of the underlying facts or data on cross-examination. The cross-examiner is under no compulsion to bring out any facts or data except those unfavorable to the opinion. N.C. Civ. Pro. Rule 26(b)(4) provides for substantial discovery of the facts underlying the opinion prior to trial.

Under Rule 611, the court exercises control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence. The court may allow the opposing party to cross-examine concerning the factual basis of the opinion immediately after the opinion is given rather than at a later point in the trial.

Except where an adverse party requests it, this rule eliminates the requirement that the basis of an expert opinion must be stated. However, the requirement that there must be a basis for the expert opinion would not be abolished. See W. Blakey, Examination of Expert Witnesses in North Carolina, 61 N.C.L.Rev. 1, 9 (1982).

CASE NOTES

This rule is not the equivalent of a request for production of documents, which vehicle is available prior to trial. Fallis v. Watauga Med. Ctr., Inc., 132 N.C. App. 43, 510 S.E.2d 199 (1999), cert. denied, 350 N.C. 308, 534 S.E.2d 589 (1999).

Expert need not testify from personal knowledge, as long as the basis for his or her opinion is available in the record or available upon demand. Thompson v. Lenoir Transf. Co., 72 N.C. App. 348, 324 S.E.2d 619 (1985); Liss of Carolina, Inc. v. South Hills Shopping Center, Inc., 85 N.C. App. 258, 354 S.E.2d 549 (1987).

Whether an expert's opinion is elicited by hypothetical or direct questioning, the opinion need not be based solely on the expert's personal knowledge. Haponski v. Constructor's Inc., 87 N.C. App. 95, 360 S.E.2d 109 (1987).

A medical expert's testimony is not limited to conditions he has personally observed. The correct limitation is that facts must be "within his knowledge." State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Legal Conclusions. — The rule that an expert may not testify that such a particular legal conclusion or standard has or has not been met remains unchanged by the new Evidence Code, at least where the standard is a legal term of art which carries a specific legal meaning not readily apparent to the witness. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

The probative value of defendant's convictions in 1986 were substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice when those convictions were introduced by the state solely to demonstrate the basis of the experts' opinions. State v. Coffey, 336 N.C. 412, 444 S.E.2d 431 (1994).

Although this rule allows a party to elicit evidence of the underlying facts of a witness' opinion, it does not restrict a party from asking otherwise proper questions. Therefore, where the district attorney asked the witness in this case whether it would affect his opinion that the defendant would adjust well to prison if he had heard the defendant had attempted to escape from prison in Virginia, it was well within the scope of proper cross-examination. State v. Reeves, 337 N.C. 700, 448 S.E.2d 802 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1114, 115 S. Ct. 1971, 131 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1995).

Requirement of Hypothetical Question Eliminated. — This rule eliminates the requirement that an expert's opinion testimony be in response to a hypothetical question. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

But Hypothetical Questions Are Still Permitted. — Although under the new Evidence Code hypothetical questions are not required, they are still permitted. Ballenger v. ITT Grinnell Indus. Piping, Inc., 80 N.C. App. 393, 342 S.E.2d 582 (1986); Haponski v. Constructor's, Inc., 87 N.C. App. 95, 360 S.E.2d 109 (1987).

Counsel may form hypothetical question on any theory which can be deduced from the evidence and select as a predicate therefor such facts as the evidence reasonably tends to prove, leaving adversaries to protect themselves on cross-examination. Ballenger v. ITT Grinnell Indus. Piping, Inc., 80 N.C. App. 393, 342 S.E.2d 582 (1986); Haponski v. Constructor's, Inc., 87 N.C. App. 95, 360 S.E.2d 109 (1987), rev'd in part, aff'd in part on rehearing, 83 N.C. App. 55, 348 S.E.2d 814, modified and aff'd, 320 N.C. 155, 357 S.E.2d 683 (1987).

Omission of a material fact from a hypothetical question does not necessarily render the question objectionable or the answer incompetent. Ballenger v. ITT Grinnell Indus. Piping, Inc., 80 N.C. App. 393, 342 S.E.2d 582 (1986).

It is left to the cross-examiner to bring out facts that have been omitted from the hypothetical question and thereby determine if their inclusion would cause the expert to modify or reject his or her earlier opinion. Ballenger v. ITT Grinnell Indus. Piping, Inc., 80 N.C. App. 393, 342 S.E.2d 582 (1986).

Duty of Trial Court. — Although § 8C-1, Rule 703 and this rule give plaintiff the right to vigorously cross examine defendant's expert regarding the underlying facts upon which he bases his opinion, it is the duty of the trial judge to exercise sound discretion in controlling the nature and scope of the cross-examination in the interest of justice and in confining the testimony within the rules of competency, relevancy and materiality. McClain v. Otis Elevator Co., 106 N.C. App. 45, 415 S.E.2d 78 (1992).

Contents of Psychiatric Report. — Admission into evidence of the contents of a report by a psychiatrist who did not testify at trial, when the substance of such report was revealed to the jury during the State's cross-examination of another psychiatrist, was proper, where the report was a part of the hospital records relied on by the psychiatrist who testified. State v. Mize, 315 N.C. 285, 337 S.E.2d 562 (1985).

Where a doctor testified on direct examination that he had obtained records from nine sources as part of his forensic psychological evaluation of defendant, it was proper for the prosecutor during cross examination to question the doctor regarding those records because they were used to formulate his opinion that defendant was suffering from bipolar disorder. State v. Lyons, 343 N.C. 1, 468 S.E.2d 204 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 894, 117 S. Ct. 237, 136 L. Ed. 2d 167 (1996).

Contents of Psychologist's Report. — Defendant was not prejudiced by the State's cross-examination of one expert using another expert psychologist's report during the sentencing phase of his murder trial, where other evidence was much more incriminating and the report actually supported his mitigating circumstances that he grew up in an unstable environment and that he had previous negative experiences with the police. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Performance of Test by Another. — Nothing else appearing, the fact that expert witness did not perform mass spectography herself did not require exclusion of the evidence. State v. Gary, 78 N.C. App. 29, 337 S.E.2d 70 (1985).

Request for Basis for Testimony. — A party who fails to request the specific basis for expert testimony at trial under this rule should have difficulty sustaining a hearsay objection on appeal. State v. Gary, 78 N.C. App. 29, 337 S.E.2d 70 (1985).

When testifying, the expert need not identify the basis of the opinion testimony beforehand, absent a specific request. State v. Gary, 78 N.C. App. 70, 337 S.E.2d 70 (1985); State v. Fletcher, 92 N.C. App. 50, 373 S.E.2d 681 (1988).

While baseless speculation can never "assist" the jury under § 8C-1, Rule 702 and is therefore inadmissible, an expert need not reveal the basis of his or her opinion absent a specific request by opposing counsel under this rule. Cherry v. Harrell, 84 N.C. 598, 353 S.E.2d 433, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 167, 358 S.E.2d 49 (1987).

Only if an adverse party requests disclosure must the trial court require the expert to disclose the underlying facts of his opinion. State v. Baldwin, 330 N.C. 446, 412 S.E.2d 31 (1992).

This rule did not require a defense expert in a medical malpractice trial to provide the raw data on which he based his opinion, where the plaintiff failed to seek the data through pretrial discovery measures or subpoenas, and the plaintiff's counsel was afforded ample opportunity to cross-examine the expert regarding the basis of his opinions. Fallis v. Watauga Med. Ctr., Inc., 132 N.C. App. 43, 510 S.E.2d 199 (1999), cert. denied, 350 N.C. 308, 534 S.E.2d 589 (1999).

Opinion of Another Physician. — While one physician may not base his opinion solely on the statement of opinion of another physician, when a physician as an expert witness bases an opinion upon reliable information, including a consistent opinion of another physician, the second physician's opinion is admissible. Donavant v. Hudspeth, 318 N.C. 1, 347 S.E.2d 797 (1986) (decided under former § 8-58.14).

Although generally statements by one treating physician to another are inherently reliable, may be used as the basis for an expert opinion, and are admissible in evidence to show the basis for the expert opinion, when the trial judge determines on voir dire that the source of the physician's statement is in fact unreliable, he may exclude the statement as evidence for any purpose. If the opinion of the physician testifying as an expert is based solely on the unreliable statement, the physician should not be allowed to state the opinion. If, on the other hand, the opinion is based upon sufficient additional, reliable facts and data, the trial judge may allow the expert to state his opinion notwithstanding his statement that he also relied in part upon unreliable information. Donavant v. Hudspeth, 318 N.C. 1, 347 S.E.2d 797 (1986) (decided under former § 8-58.14).

Work of Other Expert. — Trial court did not err by allowing the State to cross-examine defense's expert witness on the work of a second expert. State v. White, 343 N.C. 378, 471 S.E.2d 593 (1996).

Court Not Obligated to Find Psychiatrist's Opinion Dispositive. — Merely because only one psychiatrist testified at hearing did not mean that the court was obligated to find his opinion dispositive, particularly when some of the underlying data he consulted and partially agreed with had reached a contrary conclusion. State v. Allen, 322 N.C. 176, 367 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Admission of Expert Testimony Upheld. — In prosecution for rape and first-degree sexual offense involving four and five year old victims, trial court did not err in allowing county child medical examiner to testify to his opinion as to the likelihood that the victims had engaged in sexual intercourse, which opinion was not based on personal examination of the victims but was based on his review of the examining doctor's medical reports and conversations with two other physicians regarding the implications of the presence of protozoa trichomonas in very young girls. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Examining physician's failure, in giving his opinion that a male penis caused the trauma he observed during his examination of child victim, to qualify his response did not render this testimony as to an ultimate issue improper. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Where plaintiff's expert witness testified regarding his opinion about what the projected net income of plaintiff's store would have been if it had remained in business, and at defendant's request, the witness disclosed the underlying information upon which he based his opinion, which information included records kept for accounting purposes by the expert witness and data supplied to him by plaintiff's management employees, the court did not err in allowing the witness to given his opinions to the loss of profits suffered by plaintiff as a result of defendant's breach of the lease contract. Liss of Carolina, Inc. v. South Hills Shopping Center, Inc., 85 N.C. App. 258, 354 S.E.2d 549 (1987).

Cross-Examination Upheld — The defendant on trial for nine murders was not prejudiced by the cross-examination of expert witnesses concerning two additional murders he had committed. State v. Wallace, 351 N.C. 481, 528 S.E.2d 326 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1018, 121 S. Ct. 581, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

Testimony Properly Excluded. — Fact that expert "found adult material" at several locations in the county did not provide a sufficient basis to support admission of his expert testimony concerning whether the average adult in the community would find the materials which defendant was accused of selling to be patently offensive. His study was simply too unfocused and unspecific to provide him with a sufficient basis to give an expert opinion as to whether the average adult applying contemporary community standards would find the magazines at issue to be patently offensive. Thus, the trial court properly exercised its discretion by excluding his expert opinion testimony concerning whether the magazines in question in this case were patently offensive to the average adult, applying contemporary community standards, on the ground that he was no better qualified than the jury to address the question and could not assist the jury. State v. Anderson, 322 N.C. 22, 366 S.E.2d 459, cert. denied, 488

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding defendant's statements to psychologist regarding his state of mind at the time of offense. State v. Ballard, 127 N.C. App. 316, 489 S.E.2d 454 (1997), rev'd on other grounds, 349 N.C. 286, 507 S.E.2d 38 (1998).

Denial of defendant's motion for pretrial voir dire of State's expert witnesses was not prejudicial, where defendant had opportunity to obtain evidence on direct and cross-examination. State v. Pretty, 134 N.C. App. 379, 517 S.E.2d 677 (1999), cert. denied, appeal dismissed, 351 N.C. 117, 540 S.E.2d 745 (1999).

Failure to Object to Expert Witness. — Court rejected the defendant pharmacy's argument that § 90-21.12 does not encompass a nationwide standard of care for pharmacists and that the plaintiff's witness's testimony concerning the standard of care applicable to the defendant pharmacist was erroneously based upon a nationwide standard, as not properly before it where defendant failed to move to strike the standard of care testimony by the witness which it challenged on appeal, while presenting on cross-examination essentially the same testimony to which it had objected, and where it failed to object to the tender of the witness as an expert in pharmacy or to request a voir dire hearing pursuant to this rule to explore the bases for his opinion. Brooks v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 139 N.C. App. 637, 535 S.E.2d 55 (2000).

Rule 706. Court appointed experts.

(a) Appointment. — The court may on its own motion or on the motion of any party enter an order to show cause why expert witnesses should not be appointed, and may request the parties to submit nominations. The court may appoint any expert witnesses agreed upon by the parties, and may appoint witnesses of its own selection. An expert witness shall not be appointed by the court unless he consents to act. A witness so appointed shall be informed of his duties by the court in writing, a copy of which shall be filed with the clerk, or at a conference in which the parties shall have opportunity to participate. A witness so appointed shall advise the parties of his findings, if any; his deposition may be taken by any party; and he may be called to testify by the court or any party. He shall be subject to cross-examination by each party, including a party calling him as a witness.

(b) Compensation. — Expert witnesses so appointed are entitled to reasonable compensation in whatever sum the court may allow. The compensation thus fixed is payable from funds which may be provided by law in criminal cases and civil actions and proceedings involving just compensation for the taking of property. In other civil actions and proceedings the compensation shall be paid by the parties in such proportion and at such time as the court directs, and thereafter charged in like manner as other costs.

(c) Disclosure of appointment. — In the exercise of its discretion, the court may authorize disclosure to the jury of the fact that the court appointed the expert witness.

(d) Parties' experts of own selection. — Nothing in this rule limits the parties in calling expert witnesses of their own selection. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 706 except that "for the taking of property" has been inserted in subdivision (b) in lieu of "under the Fifth Amendment".

A trial judge has the discretion to call an expert witness. State v. Horne, 171 N.C. 787 (1916). This rule provides the procedure for calling such a witness.

Subdivision (b) provides the method of compensating experts called by the court but does not require an additional appropriation.

CASE NOTES

Valuation of Professional Practice. — In order to make a distribution of marital property, a court should make specific findings regarding the value of a spouse's professional practice and the existence and value of its goodwill, and should clearly indicate the evidence on which its valuations are based, preferably noting the valuation method or methods on which it relied. The court may appoint an additional expert witness under this rule, if needed. On appeal, if it appears that the trial court reasonably approximated the net value of the practice and its goodwill, if any, based on competent evidence and on a sound valuation method or methods, the valuation will not be disturbed. Poore v. Poore, 75 N.C. App. 414, 331 S.E.2d 266 (1985).

In an equitable distribution action, the trial court has the authority under this rule to appoint an expert witness to appraise the goodwill and other value of plaintiff's practice. Dorton v. Dorton, 77 N.C. App. 667, 336 S.E.2d 415 (1985).

Failure to Question Source or Justification for Fees at Trial. — Party to equitable distribution action waived his right to contend that the trial court failed to make findings concerning (1) how much time appraiser spent in appraising the property; (2) appraiser skills; (3) appraiser's hourly rate for appraisals; (4) the reasonableness of his hourly rate in comparison with other appraisers; and (5) what appraiser did where attorney failed to question appraiser in any way with respect to source or justification for his appraisal fee. Swilling v. Swilling, 329 N.C. 219, 404 S.E.2d 837 (1991).

Fee Upheld. — Where the referee and the parties signed a consent order appointing an expert witness to appraise the business interest-owned by either or both of the parties and submitted a bill for services in the amount of $32,912, the trial court entered an order finding that the total fee requested was appropriate for the time involved and the types of evaluations which were completed. Sharp v. Sharp, 116 N.C. App. 513, 449 S.E.2d 39, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 669, 453 S.E.2d 181 (1994).

Article 8.

Hearsay.

Rule 801. Definitions and exception for admissions of a party-opponent.

The following definitions apply under this Article:

(a) Statement. — A "statement" is (1) an oral or written assertion or (2) nonverbal conduct of a person, if it is intended by him as an assertion.

(b) Declarant. — A "declarant" is a person who makes a statement.

(c) Hearsay. — "Hearsay" is a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted.

(d) Exception for Admissions by a Party-Opponent. — A statement is admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule if it is offered against a party and it is (A) his own statement, in either his individual or a representative capacity, or (B) a statement of which he has manifested his adoption or belief in its truth, or (C) a statement by a person authorized by him to make a statement concerning the subject, or (D) a statement by his agent or servant concerning a matter within the scope of his agency or employment, made during the existence of the relationship or (E) a statement by a coconspirator of such party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 801, except for subdivision (d) which is discussed below.

Subdivision (a) defines "statement" for purposes of the hearsay rule. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The definition of 'statement' assumes importance because the term is used in the definition of hearsay in subdivision (c). The effect of the definition of 'statement' is to exclude from the operation of the hearsay rule all evidence of conduct, verbal or nonverbal, not intended as an assertion. The key to the definition is that nothing is an assertion unless intended to be one.

It can scarcely be doubted that an assertion made in words is intended by the declarant to be an assertion. Hence verbal assertions readily fall into the category of 'statement'. Whether nonverbal conduct should be regarded as a statement for purposes of defining hearsay requires further consideration. Some nonverbal conduct, such as the act of pointing to identify a suspect in a lineup, is clearly the equivalent of words, assertive in nature, and to be regarded as a statement. Other nonverbal conduct, however, may be offered as evidence that the person acted as he did because of his belief in the existence of the condition sought to be proved, from which belief the existence of the condition may be inferred. This sequence is, arguably, in effect an assertion of the existence of the condition and hence properly includable within the hearsay concept.  Admittedly evidence of this character is untested with respect to the perception, memory, and narration (or their equivalents) of the actor, but the Advisory Committee is of the view that these dangers are minimal in the absence of an intent to assert and do not justify the loss of the evidence on hearsay grounds. No class of evidence is free of the possibility of fabrication, but the likelihood is less with nonverbal than with assertive verbal conduct. The situations giving rise to the nonverbal conduct are such as virtually to eliminate questions of sincerity. Motivation, the nature of the conduct, and the presence or absence of reliance will bear heavily upon the weight to be given the evidence.  Similar considerations govern nonassertive verbal conduct and verbal conduct which is assertive but offered as a basis for inferring something other than the matter asserted, also excluded from the definition of hearsay by the language of subdivision (c)."

Subdivision (a) differs from current North Carolina law by excluding from the hearsay rule all evidence of conduct, verbal or nonverbal, not intended as an assertion. Some North Carolina cases have barred evidence of conduct even though the conduct was nonassertive. In other cases, comparable evidence has been admitted, either as nonhearsay or without noticing its possible hearsay nature. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 142 (1982).

With respect to subdivision (a), the Advisory Committee's Note also states:

"When evidence of conduct is offered on the theory that it is not a statement, and hence not hearsay, a preliminary determination will be required to determine whether an assertion is intended. The rule is so worded as to place the burden upon the party claiming that the intention existed; ambiguous and doubtful cases will be resolved against him and in favor of admissibility. The determination involves no greater difficulty than many other preliminary questions of fact."

Subdivision (b), which defines declarant as a person who makes a statement, is consistent with North Carolina practice.

Subdivision (c) defines hearsay as a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The definition follows along familiar lines in including only statements offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted. McCormick § 225; 5 Wigmore § 1361, 6 id. § 1766. If the significance of an offered statement lies solely in the fact that it was made, no issue is raised as to the truth of anything asserted, and the statement is not hearsay.  The effect is to exclude from hearsay the entire category of 'verbal acts' and 'verbal parts of an act,' in which the statement itself affects the legal rights of the parties or is a circumstance bearing on conduct affecting their rights.

The definition of hearsay must, of course, be read with reference to the definition of statement set forth in subdivision (a).

Testimony given by a witness in the course of court proceedings is excluded since there is compliance with all the ideal conditions for testifying."

This definition of hearsay is consistent with the definitions used by North Carolina courts. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 138 (1982). With respect to the definition of hearsay excluding "verbal acts" from the hearsay ban, see Brandis, § 141.

Subdivision (d)(1) of Fed. R. Evid. 801 departs markedly from the common law in North Carolina by excluding from the hearsay ban several statements that come within the common law definition of hearsay. Accordingly, the language of Fed. R. Evid. 801(d), which provides that in certain circumstances prior inconsistent statements, prior consistent statements, and out-of-court identifications are not hearsay, was deleted. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 46 (prior inconsistent statements), §§ 51 and 52 (prior consistent statements); State v. Neville, 175 N.C. 751 (1918) (identification).

Subdivision (d)(2) of Fed. R. Evid. 801 excludes certain admissions of a party-opponent from the hearsay ban by stating that such statements are not hearsay. Subdivision (d) of Rule 801 achieves the same result in a manner consistent with current North Carolina practice by providing that such a statement may be admitted as an exception to the hearsay rule.

Subdivision (d) specifies five categories of statements for which the responsibility of a party is considered sufficient to justify reception in evidence against the party.

With respect to category (A), a party's own statement is the classic example of an admission.

Category (A) is in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence §§ 167, 176 (1982).

With respect to category (B), the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Under established principles an admission may be made by adopting or acquiescing in the statement of another. While knowledge of contents would ordinarily be essential, this is not inevitably so: 'X is a reliable person and knows what he is talking about.' See McCormick § 246, p. 527, n. 15. Adoption or acquiescence may be manifested in any appropriate manner. When silence is relied upon, the theory is that the person would, under the circumstances, protest the statement made in his presence, if untrue. The decision in each case calls for an evaluation in terms of probable human behavior. In civil cases, the results have generally been satisfactory. In criminal cases, however, troublesome questions have been raised by decisions holding that failure to deny is an admission: the inference is a fairly weak one, to begin with; silence may be motivated by advice of counsel or realization that 'anything you say may be used against you'; unusual opportunity is afforded to manufacture evidence; and encroachment upon the privilege against self-incrimination seems inescapably to be involved. However, recent decisions of the Supreme Court relating to custodial interrogation and the right to counsel appear to resolve these difficulties. Hence the rule contains no special provisions concerning failure to deny in criminal cases."

Admission of a statement of which a party has adopted is in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 179 (1982).

With respect to category (C), the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"No authority is required for the general proposition that a statement authorized by a party to be made should have the status of an admission by the party. However, the question arises whether only statements to third persons should be so regarded, to the exclusion of statements by the agent to the principal. The rule is phrased broadly so as to encompass both. While it may be argued that the agent authorized to make statement to his principal does not speak for him, Morgan, Basic Problems of Evidence 273 (1962), communication to an outsider has not generally been thought to be an essential characteristic of an admission. Thus a party's books or records are usable against him, without regard to any intent to disclose to third persons. 5 Wigmore § 1557. See also McCormick § 78, pp. 159-161."

North Carolina courts currently admit statements when an agent is, in fact, authorized to speak for the principal. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 169, at 15 (1982). However, it is unclear whether such statements are admissible when the statement was made only to the principal. Id. at 17. The rule would clarify North Carolina law by encompassing statements by an agent to the principal or to a third party.

With respect to category (D), the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The tradition has been to test the admissibility of statement by agents, as admissions, by applying the usual test of agency. Was the admission made by the agent acting in the scope of his employment? Since few principals employ agents for the purpose of making damaging statements, the usual result was exclusive of the statement. Dissatisfaction with this loss of valuable and helpful evidence has been increasing. A substantial trend favors admitting statements related to a matter within the scope of the agency or employment."

In Hubbard v. R.R., 203 N.C. 675 (1932), the Court states:

"What an agent or employee says relative to an act presently being done by him within the scope of his agency or employment is admissible ... against the principal or employer, but what he says afterwards, and merely narrative of a past occurrence, though his agency or employment may continue as to other matters, or generally, is only hearsay and is not competent as against the principal or employer."

The North Carolina rule has been the subject of several dissenting opinions and has been criticized by Professor Brandis. See Branch v. Dempsey, 265 N.C. 733 (1965) (Sharp, J., dissenting); Pearce v. Telephone Co., 299 N.C. 64 (1980) (Copeland, Carlton and Exum, J.J., dissenting); Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 169 (1982). Rule 801(d)(D) would change North Carolina practice and make admissible any statements related to a matter within the scope of the agency or employment. The only additional requirement is that the statement be made during the existence of the relationship.

With respect to category (E), the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The limitation upon the admissibility of statement of co-conspirators to those made 'during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy' is in the accepted pattern. While the broadened view of agency taken in item (iv) might suggest wider admissibility of statements of co-conspirators, the agency theory of conspiracy is at best a fiction and ought not to serve as a basis for admissibility beyond that already established.  The rule is consistent with the position of the Supreme Court in denying admissibility to statements made after the objectives of the conspiracy have either failed or been achieved. Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U.S. 440, 69 S.Ct. 716, 93 L.Ed. 790 (1949); Wong Sun v. United States, 371 U.S. 471, 490, 83 S.Ct. 407, 9 L.Ed.2d 441 (1963)." Rule 801(d)(E) is in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 173 (1982).

CASE NOTES

Hearsay Defined. — An assertion of one other than the presently testifying witness is hearsay and inadmissible if offered for the truth of the matter asserted; if offered for any other purpose, the assertion is admissible. Livermon v. Bridgett, 77 N.C. App. 533, 335 S.E.2d 753 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 391, 338 S.E.2d 880 (1986).

Hearsay is defined as a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted. If a statement is offered for any other purpose, it is admissible. Hall v. Coplon, 85 N.C. App. 505, 355 S.E.2d 195 (1987).

The erroneous admission of hearsay is not always so prejudicial as to require a new trial. The defendant must still show that there was a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached at trial if the error had not been committed. State v. Hickey, 317 N.C. 457, 346 S.E.2d 646 (1986); State v. Locklear, 322 N.C. 349, 368 S.E.2d 377 (1988).

An act, such as a gesture, can be a statement for purposes of applying rules concerning hearsay. State v. Satterfield, 316 N.C. 55, 340 S.E.2d 52 (1986).

A robbery report containing statements regarding the seizure, at a bus station, of defendant's luggage, which police suspected contained marijuana, was relevant evidence; the statements made to the investigating officer were vital to the identification of defendants as the suspects in the armed robbery and admissible for non-hearsay purposes. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Composite Picture of Perpetrator Not a Statement. — A composite picture of a perpetrator prepared by police pursuant to the directions of a witness to a crime does not constitute a statement. Such a composite picture is the functional equivalent of a photograph in that it merely reflects the perpetrator's likeness, albeit as recorded by the witness' eyes rather than the witness' camera. No assertion or statement is involved. Therefore, a composite picture is not hearsay as defined by subsection (c) of this rule and Rule 802, and does not apply to bar the admission of a composite picture into evidence. State v. Patterson, 332 N.C. 409, 420 S.E.2d 98 (1992).

Agency. — The admission of an un-redacted report, after a redacted report had already been offered in court, and comments made thereon by defendant's manager was proper and not violative of the rules prohibiting hearsay or opinion testimony where the manager of the defendant store was defendant's agent at the time he entered his comments on the incident report and the entry concerned a matter within the scope of his agency. Kilgo v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 138 N.C. App. 644, 531 S.E.2d 883 (2000).

Adoption of Another's Statement as One's Own. — A person may expressly adopt another's statement as his own, or an adoptive admission may be implied from other conduct of a party which manifests circumstantially the party's assent to the truth of a statement made by another person. FCX, Inc. v. Caudill, 85 N.C. App. 272, 354 S.E.2d 767 (1987).

Adoptive admissions fall generally into two categories — those implied from the affirmative act of a party, and those implied from silence or a failure to respond in circumstances that call for a response. FCX, Inc. v. Caudill, 85 N.C. App. 272, 354 S.E.2d 767 (1987).

Defendant's affirmative, though silent, conduct indicating that declarant, who was indicted for the same crime, "had better hush" or "had better shut up," could reasonably be found by a jury to manifest the defendant's adoption or belief in the truth of the declarant's statements, thereby making them admissible under this rule. State v. Hunt, 325 N.C. 187, 381 S.E.2d 453 (1989).

Adoption of Another's Statement as One's Own. — Statements made by others on the videotape, e.g., "this is [defendant]'s big old gun" were inadmissible against him to prove possession of a firearm by a convicted felon because they were not adoptive admissions; the circumstances under which the videotaped third person statements were made were not circumstances where a denial by the defendant would naturally be expected. State v. Sibley, 140 N.C. App. 584, 537 S.E.2d 835 (2000).

Mere possession of a written statement does not manifest an adoption of its contents. FCX, Inc. v. Caudill, 85 N.C. App. 272, 354 S.E.2d 767 (1987).

Request for testing or other information does not automatically establish an adoption of statements contained within the response. FCX, Inc. v. Caudill, 85 N.C. App. 272, 354 S.E.2d 767 (1987).

Statements Admissible to Explain Subsequent Conduct. — Statements of one person to another are admissible to explain the subsequent conduct of the person to whom the statement was made. State v. Coffey, 326 N.C. 268, 389 S.E.2d 48 (1990), cert. denied, — N.C. —, 421 S.E.2d 360 (1992).

Testimony in regard to threat against witness by defendant was not introduced for the truth of the statement, but explained why she did not report the offense in a more timely manner, and it was not hearsay. State v. Lamb, 342 N.C. 151, 463 S.E.2d 189 (1995).

Testimony that a witness' mother called to tell him that a man was at her house and that he went to her house was admissible for the limited purposes of showing what the witness did after the telephone conference with his mother, why he went to her house, and to corroborate another witness' testimony. State v. Call, 349 N.C. 382, 508 S.E.2d 496 (1998).

Testimony by defendant's former cellmate about cellmate's conversations with his attorney about a note the cellmate signed while sharing the cell with defendant was admissible for the limited purpose of explaining that the cellmate signed the note under coercive circumstances, which was why he testified for the State rather than the defendant. State v. Thomas, 350 N.C. 315, 514 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 503, 145 L. Ed. 2d 388 (1999).

The statements by witness outlining her daughter's problems with defendant and her request that someone meet her at the bus stop were introduced to explain why the mother asked the victim to meet her at the bus stop that afternoon and not for the truth of the matter asserted; their admission was, therefore, not in violation of this section. State v. Lesane, 137 N.C. App. 234, 528 S.E.2d 37 (2000).

Statements to Corroborate Child's Testimony. — Out-of-court statements offered for the sole purpose of corroborating six-year-old victim's testimony were not hearsay. State v. Gilbert, 96 N.C. App. 363, 385 S.E.2d 815 (1989).

Testimony by police juvenile investigator as to prior consistent statements made to him after a murder by a child who witnessed the murder was admissible since the officer's testimony corroborated the testimony of the child at trial. State v. Lloyd, 354 N.C. 76, 552 S.E.2d 596 (2001).

Corroboration by Videotape. — Videotape was properly offered and accepted by the court as corroboration of the victim's testimony as the victim's statements were not offered to prove that defendant sexually assaulted the victim, but rather to show that the victim had made a similar, consistent statement to a counselor. State v. Baymon, 336 N.C. 748, 446 S.E.2d 1 (1994).

The date "1/10/97" appearing on the lower lefthand corner of a videotape depicting the defendant handling various weapons was inadmissible hearsay to prove that defendant was in possession of a weapon after the date of his prior felony conviction where the declarant was unknown since there was no testimony as to the identity of the operator of the camera and where the statement, that this video was filmed on 1/10/98, was offered for its truth, e.g., that defendant was in possession of a weapon on that date. State v. Sibley, 140 N.C. App. 584, 537 S.E.2d 835 (2000).

Test on Admissions by Silence. — Regarding admissions by silence, whether the statement is oral or written, the critical inquiry is whether a reasonable person would have denied it under the circumstances. FCX, Inc. v. Caudill, 85 N.C. App. 272, 354 S.E.2d 767 (1987).

Jury's Province to Draw Inferences from Silence. — A response which is not the equivalent of a denial may indicate acquiescence and be considered by the jury for what it is worth; where the evidence leaves the matter in doubt, it is the jury's province to determine whether the remarks were heard and understood, and to draw inferences from the person's silence. State v. Thompson, 332 N.C. 204, 420 S.E.2d 395 (1992).

Statements of a party to an action, spoken or written, have long been admissible against that party as an admission if relevant to the issues and not subject to some specific exclusionary statute or rule. This is still the case under the Rules of Evidence. Karp v. UNC, 78 N.C. App. 214, 336 S.E.2d 640 (1985).

The exception, in subdivision (d)(A) of this rule is available only for statements made by parties to the lawsuit. State v. Shoemaker, 80 N.C. App. 95, 341 S.E.2d 603, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 340, 346 S.E.2d 145 (1986).

Admission by Party Opponent. — Where plaintiff slipped and fell in a grocery store, statements made by the store manager were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule for admissions by a party opponent. Kremer v. Food Lion, Inc., 102 N.C. App. 291, 401 S.E.2d 837 (1991).

Defendant's confession that she killed her stepchild by smothering him by placing a plastic bag over his head was an admission by a party opponent and therefore admissible as substantive evidence of her guilt and to refute her defense of accident. State v. White, 340 N.C. 264, 457 S.E.2d 841 (1995).

In murder prosecution, where defendant was allowed to go to a local funeral home to view her husband accompanied by a sheriff's deputy and a jail matron and both testified that defendant was "pretty hysterical and crying" and that while she stood over the victim's body, she stated twice: "Honey, why did you make me do it?," this statement was an admission which fell squarely within this rule. State v. Lambert, 341 N.C. 36, 460 S.E.2d 123 (1995).

The murder defendant's statement that he would have to "cap someone" if his employer did not stop garnishing his wages was admissible as an admission or statement of a party opponent. State v. White, 131 N.C. App. 734, 509 S.E.2d 462 (1998).

Defendant's comments concerning statements he made to a coworker, to the extent they were hearsay, fell within the exception to the hearsay rule for admissions by a party opponent. State v. Collins, 335 N.C. 729, 440 S.E.2d 559 (1994).

An adverse witness, even the complaining witness in a criminal trial, is not a party to the action. State v. Shoemaker, 80 N.C. App. 95, 341 S.E.2d 603, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 340, 346 S.E.2d 145 (1986).

Out-of-Court Statements Forming Reputation of A Particular Place. — The trial court properly restricted defense counsel from referring to the premises where the defendant's alleged crimes took place as a "crack house," since such evidence was hearsay. State v. Allred, 131 N.C. App. 11, 505 S.E.2d 153 (1998).

State of Mind Exception. — Statements made by the victim shortly before the victim's death that defendant was "very, very jealous," that "she was thinking about breaking up with him," and that "she was tired of his junk" were admissible, under the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Jones, 337 N.C. 198, 446 S.E.2d 32 (1994).

Uncommunicated threats made by decedents against defendant were hearsay but were admissible as state of mind expressions of decedents. State v. Ransome, 342 N.C. 847, 467 S.E.2d 404 (1996).

Defendant's statements amount to party admissions and are therefore admissible under subdivision (d)(A) of this rule. State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988).

That an admission of defendant was contained within a hearsay statement by another individual which was admissible as a prior inconsistent statement did not affect its admissibility because both statements were admissible. State v. Larrimore, 340 N.C. 119, 456 S.E.2d 789 (1995).

Property Valuations as Admission of County. — Evidence of real property valuations made by the county for ad valorem tax purposes is admissible against the county in an eminent domain proceeding as an admission of a party opponent. Craven County v. Hall, 87 N.C. App. 256, 360 S.E.2d 479 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 471, 364 S.E.2d 479 (1988).

Admissions of Party's Attorney. — In North Carolina admissions of attorneys are binding upon their clients, and are generally conclusive. Karp v. UNC, 78 N.C. App. 214, 336 S.E.2d 640 (1985).

Statements by defendant's attorney contained in an affidavit of the plaintiff's attorney were admissible against defendant under subsection (d) of this rule, since they concerned a matter within the scope of the context and scope of the attorney-client representation. Wilson Realty & Constr., Inc. v. Asheboro-Randolph Bd. of Realtors, Inc., 134 N.C. App. 468, 518 S.E.2d 28 (1999).

Defendant's answers to interrogatories, duly signed by defendant's attorney, were admissions of a party opponent, and as such should have been admitted into evidence. Karp v. UNC, 78 N.C. App. 214, 336 S.E.2d 640 (1985).

When Acts and Declarations of Coconspirators Are Admissible. — The acts and declarations of conspirators are admissible against other members of the conspiracy, provided that the state establishes a prima facie case of the conspiracy independently of the declarations sought to be admitted. State v. Nichols, 375 N.C. 303, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988); State v. Fink, 92 N.C. App. 523, 375 S.E.2d 303 (1989); State v. Willis, 332 N.C. 151, 420 S.E.2d 158 (1992).

The hearsay statement by defendant's co-conspirator was admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule because it was made during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy. State v. Williams, 345 N.C. 137, 478 S.E.2d 782 (1996).

State's Burden When Offering Statements of Alleged Co-conspirator. — When attempting to rely on the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule, the State's burden is to produce evidence independent of the statements themselves sufficient to permit the jury to find the existence of an unlawful agreement between two or more persons to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act in an unlawful way or by unlawful means. State v. Cotton, 102 N.C. App. 93, 401 S.E.2d 376, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 501, 407 S.E.2d 543 (1991).

Statements made in reassurance that the transaction which is the subject of a conspiracy will indeed occur are made in furtherance of the conspiracy, and are admissible under subdivision (d)(E) of this rule. State v. Phillips, 88 N.C. App. 526, 364 S.E.2d 196 (1988), rev'd on other grounds, 325 N.C. 222, 381 S.E.2d 325 (1989).

Statements of coconspirators made prior to or subsequent to the conspiracy are not admissible under this exception. State v. Gary, 78 N.C. App. 29, 337 S.E.2d 70 (1985).

Admission of statements of alleged coconspirator, as testified to by agent, made after the conspiracy shown by the evidence had long since ended, constituted prejudicial hearsay testimony and required a new trial. State v. Gary, 78 N.C. App. 29, 337 S.E.2d 70 (1985); State v. Collins, 81 N.C. App. 346, 344 S.E.2d 310.

When Conspiracy Ends. — Ordinarily, a conspiracy ends with the attainment of its criminal objectives, but precisely when this occurs may vary from case to case. When a conspiracy ends for the purposes of subdivision (d)(E) of this rule is a question of fact for the trial court. State v. Gary, 78 N.C. App. 29, 337 S.E.2d 70 (1985).

When a conspiracy ends is a question of fact. State v. Collins, 81 N.C. App. 346, 344 S.E.2d 310.

Evidence held sufficient to establish prima facie the existence of a conspiracy to traffic in cocaine, so as to allow admission of statements of coconspirators. State v. Collins, 81 N.C. App. 346, 344 S.E.2d 310.

Admission of Acts or Declarations of Co-conspirator Before Conspiracy Is Established. — While a prima facie case of conspiracy must be made out before the close of the state's evidence, the courts often permit the state to offer the acts or declarations of a co-conspirator before the prima facie case of conspiracy is sufficiently established. State v. Brooks, 83 N.C. App. 179, 349 S.E.2d 630 (1986).

Ideally, the state should make prima facie showing before tendering co-conspirator's declarations; however, in its discretionary control of the presentation of evidence, the court may admit declarations subject to subsequent proof of the conspiracy. State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988); State v. Fink, 92 N.C. App. 523, 375 S.E.2d 303 (1989).

Testimony by defendant's brother that father told him he would not give defendant a trailer unless he straightened up was not hearsay; testimony tended to show that victim intended to disinherit defendant and to show ill will between defendant and victim. State v. Greene, 324 N.C. 1, 376 S.E.2d 430 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990), overruled in part.

While a prima facie showing of the existence of a conspiracy must be established independently of the statements sought to be admitted, the trial court may use such statements in establishing the times when the conspiracy was entered and terminated. State v. Mahaley, 332 N.C. 583, 423 S.E.2d 58 (1992), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1089, 115 S. Ct. 749, 130 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1995).

Defendant was not entitled to have his co-conspirators' incriminating statements sanitized pursuant to § 15A-927(c)(1) where the statements were admissible against him under subdivision (d)(E) of this rule whether he was tried separately or jointly. State v. Fink, 92 N.C. App. 523, 375 S.E.2d 303 (1989).

Co-conspirator's Statement Properly Admitted. — Statement made by co-conspirator to reassure undercover agent that drug trafficking transaction which was the subject of conspiracy would indeed occur, despite defendant's prolonged absence after she received advance payment, was admissible under this rule, even though defendant absconded with the money involved in the transaction and the crime of trafficking was never completed. State v. Lipford, 81 N.C. App. 464, 344 S.E.2d 307 (1986).

Where, based on defendant's admissions, a jury could find that defendant conspired with co-conspirator to commit armed robbery, the trial court did not err in admitting c-oconspirator's hearsay statements against defendant. State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988).

Evidence was sufficient, independent of out-of-court statements made by co-conspirators, to establish a prima facie case of conspiracy; therefore, the out-of-court statements were properly admitted in evidence. State v. Fink, 92 N.C. App. 523, 375 S.E.2d 303 (1989).

Evidence that an undercover officer arrived at cocaine seller's residence to make a purchase of cocaine and was told to come back in 30 minutes, and of defendant giving seller cocaine without any payment in return, and that the same cocaine was then sold to the undercover officer upon his return to the residence, was a prima facie showing of conspiracy sufficient to admit statements made by the seller under the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Turner, 98 N.C. App. 442, 391 S.E.2d 524 (1990).

Out-of-court statements made by a conspirator in a prosecution for conspiracy to sell and deliver marijuana were not inadmissible hearsay where the actions of the defendant and co-conspirator observed by undercover officers were sufficient evidence to establish prima facie conspiracy. State v. Morris, 102 N.C. App. 541, 402 S.E.2d 845 (1991).

Where there was substantial evidence that the defendant had entered a conspiracy to kill her husband and that a co-conspirator's statements to another co-conspirator were in furtherance of and during the conspiracy, the trial court did not err by admitting testimony of the co-conspirator to whom the statements were made regarding those statements. State v. Mahaley, 332 N.C. 583, 423 S.E.2d 58 (1992), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1089, 115 S. Ct. 749, 130 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1995).

Statement by defendant regarding a murder that he had committed fit within the hearsay exception in Rule 804(b)(3) and within the exception for statements of a co-conspirator in subdivision (d)(E). State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 876, 118 S. Ct. 196, 139 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1024, 118 S. Ct. 1309, 140 L. Ed. 2d 473 (1998).

Alleged hearsay was not admitted for its truth but admitted for impeachment; co-defendant's prior statements were admissible to attack the co-defendant's credibility and the jury was properly instructed that the statements were to be considered as impeaching evidence. State v. Featherson, 145 N.C. App. 134, 548 S.E.2d 828 (2001).

Statement by Accessory. — Statement of defendant, convicted of being an accessory before the fact to murder committed by his girlfriend, to the effect that she was the one who brought up the discussions about killing the victims, constituted hearsay under subsection (a); however, this statement was admissible under subsection (d) as a party admission. State v. Johnson, 340 N.C. 32, 455 S.E.2d 644 (1995).

Claim Estimates By Insurer Properly Excluded as Evidence. — In personal injury action against plaintiff's UIM insurer, admitting claim estimates prepared by the insurer as admissions of a party opponent would unduly prejudice the defense and circumvent the policy of having the jury focus on the facts and not the existence of liability insurance. Braddy v. Nationwide Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 122 N.C. App. 402, 470 S.E.2d 820 (1996).

Evidence Not Hearsay. — Testimony of plaintiff's father as to what his dead mother's gift intentions were with regard to money given to plaintiff and her husband to purchase a house was not hearsay, although it may have been objectionable on other grounds. Hunt v. Hunt, 85 N.C. App. 484, 355 S.E.2d 519 (1987).

Defendant's name and address, written or printed on an envelope or its contents, was neither a written assertion nor conduct which was intended as an assertion, and therefore was not hearsay evidence. Moreover, while the sender's conduct in addressing and mailing the envelope undoubtedly implied that the sender believed that the addressee lived at that address, because no assertion was intended, the evidence was not hearsay and was admissible. State v. Peek, 89 N.C. App. 123, 365 S.E.2d 320 (1988).

Where testimony was not offered to prove that a woman insured victim's life so that she could have him killed, but to prove why the witness contacted the defendants to have the victim killed, the witness' testimony was not hearsay and was properly admitted. State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Murder victim's statement to her son that she did not want defendant to come to her house because he had failed to provide child support was not hearsay, because it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted but to show victim's frustration and impatience with defendant. State v. Faucette, 326 N.C. 676, 392 S.E.2d 71 (1990).

A witness' statement that his wife heard a rape victim say "Are you going to shoot me, too?" was relevant for the limited purpose of explaining why the witness called the sheriff a second time after he heard a commotion outside his house, and the statement was not inadmissible hearsay. State v. Roper, 328 N.C. 337, 402 S.E.2d 600, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 902, 112 S. Ct. 280, 116 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1991).

Statement by murder defendant made in a letter to a witness while defendant was in jail was properly admitted even though the letter itself was not available for examination. State v. Eason, 328 N.C. 409, 402 S.E.2d 809 (1991).

Statements which were offered not to prove the truth of any matter asserted therein, but rather to explain the subsequent conduct of the defendant and his accomplices in shooting detective and the context in which the murder occurred were not hearsay and were admissible. State v. Morston, 336 N.C. 381, 445 S.E.2d 1 (1994).

When evidence of a statement by someone other than the testifying witness is offered for a purpose other than to prove the truth of the matter asserted, the evidence is not hearsay. State v. Reid, 335 N.C. 647, 440 S.E.2d 776 (1994).

Testimony of a defendant's former co-employee was admissiblewhere the defendant shot and killed his former supervisor and others after being fired, and the testimony concerning what was said at the defendant's termination conference a few days before the shooting was relevant to show motive. State v. Davis, 349 N.C. 1, 506 S.E.2d 455 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1161, 119 S. Ct. 2053, 144 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1999).

Statements to a detective by the mother of a child sexually assaulted and murdered by her lover were admissible as prior consistent statements that corroborated and added weight to her trial testimony, where she said that her husband was afraid that her lover would harm the child, that she thought the defendant had harmed the child, that the defendant was angry because he believed the autopsy report was wrong, and that she and her lover tried to get their stories straight. State v. Lee, 348 N.C. 474, 501 S.E.2d 334 (1998).

Witnesses' testimony that they told the victim prior to his murder that he could get a divorce and witness' testimony that the wife/defendant's desire for their daughter to get a job had caused strain in the marriage was not hearsay, since the statements were actually made by the persons testifying and were not offered to prove whether victim could get a divorce. State v. Brown, 350 N.C. 193, 513 S.E.2d 57 (1999).

Testimony regarding whether the defendant had told her brother that the victim/her ex-husband actually forced her to have sex in order to visit her children was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted but was instead, introduced in an attempt to illustrate his state of mind regarding the victim and tended to show motive, and was, therefore, admissible under this section. State v. Merrill, 138 N.C. App. 215, 530 S.E.2d 608 (2000).

Statement by co-conspirator to SBI agent indicating that defendant had told someone "all about it" was offered to support the witness's testimony at trial, not to prove the truth of the matter asserted and, therefore, not inadmissible hearsay. State v. Gell, 351 N.C. 192, 524 S.E.2d 332 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 878, 121 S. Ct. 163, 148 L. Ed. 2d 110 (2000).

The jailer's and deputy sheriff's testimony that inmate said "hurry" or "leave" to defendant as she was departing did not constitute inadmissible hearsay because it was offered to prove that the directive was made, not to prove the truth of any matters asserted. State v. Mitchell, 135 N.C. App. 617, 522 S.E.2d 94 (1999).

Remarks made by defendant, accused of murdering her grandmother in a nursing home, to the police were admissible under this section as an admission of a party opponent. State v. Smith, 135 N.C. App. 649, 522 S.E.2d 321 (1999).

Witness testimony regarding statements made by murder victim regarding the presence of drugs and money in the hotel room where she was staying with a drug dealer were admissible to show what the hearer did based on the victim's statements. State v. McCord, 140 N.C. App. 634, 538 S.E.2d 633 (2000), review denied, 353 N.C. 392 (2001).

Inmate's statement to defendant who murdered another inmate about "that guy" being in the shower was offered to explain the subsequent conduct of defendant in walking toward the shower area and, therefore, was not hearsay; likewise, another inmate's testimony about $ 17.00 that victim owed to defendant did not constitute hearsay, but was relevant to establish a possible motive for the murder. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Testimony of insurance agent as to what victim asked him was admissible, as it was offered merely to establish that victim's husband had submitted her insurance application to him without her knowledge, not for the truth of the matters asserted. State v. Kimble, 140 N.C. App. 153, 535 S.E.2d 882 (2000).

The trial court committed no error under this rule in allowing the jury to hear a small portion of an answering machine message, where the speaker's wife had testified earlier that she was not aware of any conversation between her husband and the plaintiff mother of a boy injured on defendant's amusement ride. Breedlove v. Aerotrim, U.S.A., Inc., 142 N.C. App. 447, 543 S.E.2d 213 (2001).

Evidence Held Admissible. — In prosecution for kidnapping and robbery, it was not error for detective to testify to the actions of defendant's wife in turning over ring and bracelet taken from victim, on grounds that those actions constituted nonverbal statements, excludable as hearsay, where the testimony was only offered to show that detective obtained the jewelry from defendant's wife at defendant's apartment, and was not offered to prove the matter asserted by the wife's nonverbal conduct, i.e., that the items in her possession were the ones identified in the warrant as stolen from the victim. State v. Parker, 81 N.C. App. 443, 344 S.E.2d 330 (1986).

In a case involving negligence of defendant leading to theft of jewelry samples from car trunk, police investigative report was properly received for the limited purpose of showing that a report of the theft was made under this rule, and was also admissible as substantive evidence, as a present sense impression under § 8C-1, Rule 803(1) and under the excited utterance exception in § 8C-1, Rule 803(2). Southern Watch Supply Co. v. Regal Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 82 N.C. App. 21, 345 S.E.2d 453 (1986).

Where affidavit and warrant were not introduced in order to prove the truth of the matters stated therein, but rather, to show that defendant had information, correct or incorrect, that victim was informing on him and his brother, it was not error for the trial judge to admit this evidence. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Where husband and wife stated in affidavit that they told insurer's agent that husband had been convicted of driving under the influence and was being treated for high blood pressure, statements were admissible since they were not offered to prove the truth of the matters contained in the statements but were offered to prove simply that defendant's agent had notice of these matters. Ward v. Durham Life Ins. Co., 325 N.C. 202, 381 S.E.2d 698 (1989).

Court did not abuse its discretion by allowing social workers to testify as to statements made to them by respondent's wife whereby she indicated respondent did not properly care for the children, excessively disciplined them, abused illegal drugs and alcohol in their presence, and was violent in his behavior, as respondent's wife was a party to the action which was brought to determine whether her child was abused and neglected, and her statements to the social workers about her husband's conduct could only be reasonably considered as admissions by her that their child was subjected to conduct in her presence which could be found to be abusive and neglectful. In re Hayden, 96 N.C. App. 77, 384 S.E.2d 558 (1989).

Testimony to the effect that nobody in defendant's presence had said anything to him about anybody having been shot did not fall within the definition of hearsay contained in this rule. This testimony was adduced for the purpose of showing that defendant was not told that anyone had been shot, and its truth depended only on the credibility of the testifying witness; it was relevant to show defendant's firsthand knowledge of the fact that an officer had been shot and thus was admissible to impeach defendant's credibility. State v. Leroux, 326 N.C. 368, 390 S.E.2d 314 (1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 871, 111 S. Ct. 192, 112 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1990).

Statements of one person to another are not hearsay if the statement is made to explain the subsequent conduct of the person to whom the statement was made. State v. Reid, 335 N.C. 647, 440 S.E.2d 776 (1994).

Defendant's statements to victim concerning his crimes against another victim, if relevant, were admissible pursuant to subsection (d) and were relevant because they tended to show that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel and tended to show the murder was part of a course of conduct. State v. Lee, 335 N.C. 244, 439 S.E.2d 547 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 891, 115 S. Ct. 239, 130 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1994).

A police officer's testimony was admissible for corroborative, nonhearsay purposes, where the officer testified as to the statement the friend of the murder defendant gave to police officers, and the testimony was corroborative of the friend's own testimony and was explained to the jury as such. State v. Call, 349 N.C. 382, 508 S.E.2d 496 (1998).

Evidence Held Inadmissible. — Where defendant's father, in response to a police inquiry, showed the police a drawer where a knife was supposedly kept, his conduct was a "statement" within the meaning of subsection (a) of this rule, and as the State offered the evidence to prove the existence of a knife and its use by the defendant as testified to by victim, the testimony was hearsay and inadmissible under § 8C-1, Rule 802. State v. Satterfield, 316 N.C. 55, 340 S.E.2d 52 (1986).

The testimony of two housing authority employees to the effect that defendant's supervisor had told them that deceased had been harassing defendant earlier on the day of the murder was hearsay and inadmissible. State v. Meeks, 320 N.C. 615, 360 S.E.2d 79 (1987).

Defendant's contention that the trial court erred in not allowing him to testify that witness in the car during the killing of a State Trooper said "You don't remember killing a State Trooper?" was without merit as defendant's testimony was hearsay and not within any of the exceptions to the rule prohibiting hearsay. See State v. McQueen, 324 N.C. 118, 377 S.E.2d 38 (1989).

Where a letter's anonymous author stated that defendant was not responsible for victim's death, but that her death had been the result of a "contract" being placed on her life because she had not paid declarant a $5.00 debt, the letter, as offered by defendant, contained inadmissible hearsay as it was offered by a person other than the declarant to prove the truth of the matter asserted — to wit, that it was not defendant but another who killed victim. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further reconsideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Witness's testimony concerning statement made to her that another person had been threatened by defendant was hearsay and was improperly admitted so that defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Allen, 127 N.C. App. 182, 488 S.E.2d 294 (1997).

A witness' affidavit was properly excluded as substantive evidence, where the witness testified at trial that she was not present at the time of the shooting, while her affidavit purportedly included the statement that she was present, but the affidavit was hearsay that fell within no established exception to the hearsay rule and was not inherently trustworthy. State v. Cozart, 131 N.C. App. 199, 505 S.E.2d 906 (1998).

Evidence Not Prejudicially Excluded. — A statement made by the defendant to the arresting officer prior to the arrest was erroneously, but not prejudicially, excluded. State v. Chavis, 141 N.C. App. 177, 540 S.E.2d 404 (2000).

Rule 802. Hearsay rule.

Hearsay is not admissible except as provided by statute or by these rules. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 802 except that the phrase "by statute or by these rules" is used in lieu of the phrase "by these rules or by other rules prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority or by Act of Congress."

Rule 802 provides for the standard exclusion of hearsay evidence; hearsay is simply inadmissible unless an exception is applicable. This is in accord with North Carolina practice. Unless an exception to the hearsay rule is provided in these rules, the courts are not free to create new hearsay exceptions by adjudication. Rules 803(24) and 804(b)(5) allow for the admission of evidence in particular cases, but not for more general policy formulation.

CASE NOTES

Hearsay Defined. — An assertion of one other than the presently testifying witness is hearsay and inadmissible if offered for the truth of the matter asserted; if offered for any other purpose, the assertion is admissible. Livermon v. Bridgett, 77 N.C. App. 533, 335 S.E.2d 753 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 391, 338 S.E.2d 880 (1986).

Exception to Hearsay Rule May Violate Constitutional Guarantees of the Right of Confrontation. — Even if an out-of-court statement properly falls within an exception to the hearsay rule, it nonetheless must be excluded at a criminal trial if it infringes upon the defendant's constitutional right to confrontation. State v. Rogers, 109 N.C. App. 491, 428 S.E.2d 220, cert. denied, 334 N.C. 625, 435 S.E.2d 348 (1993), 511 U.S. 1008, 114 S. Ct. 1378, 128 L. Ed. 2d 54, rehearing denied, 511 U.S. 1102, 114 S. Ct. 1875 (1994).

Where Relevant Hearsay Is Admissible. — Hearsay evidence, even if relevant, is inadmissible unless it is covered by statutory exception, or unless its exclusion deprives a defendant of a trial in accord with fundamental standards of due process. State v. Artis, 325

N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Trustworthiness of Evidence Falling Within Statutory Exception. — A showing that a hearsay statement is inherently trustworthy is established when the evidence falls within a statutory hearsay exception. State v. Jones, 89 N.C. App. 584, 367 S.E.2d 139 (1988).

The "except as otherwise provided ... by statute" exception under both this rule and Rule 1002 clearly covers written statements under § 20-279.21(b)(3). Crowder v. North Carolina Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 79 N.C. App. 551, 340 S.E.2d 127, cert. denied, 316 N.C. 731, 345 S.E.2d 387 (1986).

Hearsay Statements Not Rendered Competent Because They Corroborate Other Evidence. — Where hearsay statements were actually introduced as exhibits, where statements were before the jury as substantive evidence, and where all earlier apparent efforts to restrict their use to impeachment of witness or corroboration of the officer's testimony were mooted by their substantive use, statements should not have been used; since if testimony is not competent as substantive evidence, it is not rendered competent because it tends to corroborate some other witness. State v. Hunt, 324 N.C. 343, 378 S.E.2d 754 (1989).

Composite Picture of Perpetrator Not a Statement. — A composite picture of a perpetrator prepared by police pursuant to the directions of a witness to a crime does not constitute a statement. Such a composite picture is the functional equivalent of a photograph in that it merely reflects the perpetrator's likeness, albeit as recorded by the witness' eyes rather than the witness' camera. No assertion or statement is involved. Therefore, a composite picture is not hearsay as defined by this rule and Rule 801(c), and does not apply to bar the admission of a composite picture into evidence. State v. Patterson, 332 N.C. 409, 420 S.E.2d 98 (1992).

In a criminal prosecution, evidence of the reputation of a place or neighborhood is ordinarily inadmissible hearsay. State v. Harper, 96 N.C. App. 36, 384 S.E.2d 297 (1989).

Trial court's admission of victim's testimony from a domestic violence protective order hearing did not violate his right to confront the witness against him, nor did it violate § 8C-1, Rules 403, 404(b), and 803(3), where the hearsay statements constituted, and were admissible as, statements of declarant's then-existing mental, emotional, or physical condition and where their probative value outweighed their prejudicial effect. State v. Thibodeaux, 352 N.C. 570, 532 S.E.2d 797 (2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1155, 121 S. Ct. 1106, 148 L. Ed. 2d 976 (2001).

Evidence Held Admissible. — Where a witness from the Department of Social Services testified that following an investigation into the alleged sexual abuse of a child the department "unsubstantiated" the charges, the testimony had characteristics of hearsay under this rule; however, its admission was not prejudicial since both plaintiff and defendant presented a considerable amount of conflicting evidence regarding the alleged sexual abuse. Williams v. Williams, 91 N.C. App. 469, 372 S.E.2d 310 (1988).

In a murder trial, where a letter and testimony of the victim's grandmother were offered for the purpose of showing that defendant's motive for killing the victim was because she wished to discontinue their relationship, and cross-examination of defendant was designed to show defendant knew the contents of the letter prior to the homicide, the statements were relevant for the purposes for which they were admitted and their admission into evidence did not violate this rule. State v. Quick, 323 N.C. 675, 375 S.E.2d 156 (1989).

Court did not abuse its discretion by allowing social workers to testify as to statements made to them by respondent's wife whereby she indicated respondent did not properly care for the children, excessively disciplined them, abused illegal drugs and alcohol in their presence, and was violent in his behavior, as respondent's wife was a party to the action which was brought to determine whether her child was abused and neglected and her statements to the social workers about her husband's conduct could only be reasonably considered as admissions by her that their child was subjected to conduct in her presence which could be found to be abusive and neglectful. In re Hayden, 96 N.C. App. 77, 384 S.E.2d 558 (1989).

The father's statement, relayed by the witness, explained why the deputies did not subsequently look for defendant at the father's house and was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but rather to explain the officers' actions, and was, therefore, not hearsay. State v. Westall, 116 N.C. App. 534, 449 S.E.2d 24, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 671, 453 S.E.2d 185 (1994).

The substance of witness's conversation with another detective was not inadmissible hearsay, because it was admitted for the purpose of explaining witness's subsequent conduct and not for the truth of the matter asserted. State v. Earhart, 134 N.C. App. 130, 516 S.E.2d 883 (1999), appeal dismissed, 351 N.C. 112, 540 S.E.2d 372 (1999).

Trial court did not violate this section by allowing prosecutor to cross-examine defendant about testimony provided by a witness for the State earlier in the trial; the prosecutor's reference to the testimony was not hearsay because he referred to it, not to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but to challenge defendant's credibility. State v. Walker, 139 N.C. App. 512, 533 S.E.2d 858 (2000).

Evidence Held Inadmissible. — Testimony of victim's neighbor to the effect that victim had told him that her son (the defendant) had hurt her and that she was afraid of him was hearsay and was not covered by any of the hearsay exceptions provided by § 8C-1, Rules 803 or 804, and thus the trial court erred in admitting this statement. State v. Hollingsworth, 78 N.C. App. 578, 337 S.E.2d 674 (1985).

Where defendant's father, in response to a police inquiry, showed the police a drawer where a knife was supposedly kept, his conduct was a "statement" within the meaning of § 8C-1, Rule 801(a), and as the State offered the evidence to prove the existence of a knife and its use by defendant as testified to by victim, the testimony was hearsay and inadmissible under this rule. State v. Satterfield, 316 N.C. 55, 340 S.E.2d 52 (1986).

Defendant's contention that the trial court erred in not allowing him to testify that witness in the car during the killing of a State Trooper said "You don't remember killing a State Trooper?" was without merit as defendant's testimony was hearsay and not within any of the exceptions to the rule prohibiting hearsay. See State v. McQueen, 323 N.C. 675, 377 S.E.2d 38 (1989).

Where there was no express or implied statement of fact that a "sexual act" occurred, the testimony of witnesses concerning victim's prior statements to the contrary was inadmissible for any purpose. State v. Murphy, 100 N.C. App. 33, 394 S.E.2d 300 (1990).

Witness's testimony concerning statement made to her that another person had been threatened by defendant was hearsay and was improperly admitted so that defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Allen, 127 N.C. App. 182, 488 S.E.2d 294 (1997).

A witness' affidavit was properly excluded as substantive evidence, where the witness testified at trial that she was not present at the time of the shooting as the affidavit was hearsay that fell within no established exception to the hearsay rule and was not inherently trustworthy. State v. Cozart, 131 N.C. App. 199, 505 S.E.2d 906 (1998).

Where the former wife sought to show that her ex-husband harassed her by interfering with her mail, evidence that the postmaster told the wife that the former husband went into the post office each day as the postmaster left for lunch was inadmissible hearsay, as the wife offered no basis for admission under an exception and there was no indication that the postmaster was unavailable. Reis v. Hoots, 131 N.C. App. 721, 509 S.E.2d 198 (1998).

Witness testimony with regard to statements made by respondent mother's aunt, who did not testify, concerning her treatment of her child constituted inadmissible hearsay under this rule and, on remand, should not be considered by the trial court. In re Dula, 143 N.C. App. 16, 544 S.E.2d 591 (2001), aff'd, — N.C. —, 554 S.E.2d 336 (2001).

Rule 803. Hearsay exceptions; availability of declarant immaterial.

The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness:

(1) Present Sense Impression. — A statement describing or explaining an event or condition made while the declarant was perceiving the event or condition, or immediately thereafter.

(2) Excited Utterance. — A statement relating to a startling event or condition made while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition.

(3) Then Existing Mental, Emotional, or Physical Condition. — A statement of the declarant's then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation, or physical condition (such as intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain, and bodily health), but not including a statement of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed unless it relates to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of declarant's will.

(4) Statements for Purposes of Medical Diagnosis or Treatment. — Statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and describing medical history, or past or present symptoms, pain, or sensations, or the inception or general character of the cause or external source thereof insofar as reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment.

(5) Recorded Recollection. — A memorandum or record concerning a matter about which a witness once had knowledge but now has insufficient recollection to enable him to testify fully and accurately, shown to have been made or adopted by the witness when the matter was fresh in his memory and to reflect that knowledge correctly. If admitted, the memorandum or record may be read into evidence but may not itself be received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party.

(6) Records of Regularly Conducted Activity. — A memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, in any form, of acts, events, conditions, opinions, or diagnoses, made at or near the time by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge, if kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity, and if it was the regular practice of that business activity to make the memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, all as shown by the testimony of the custodian or other qualified witness, unless the source of information or the method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness. The term "business" as used in this paragraph includes business, institution, association, profession, occupation, and calling of every kind, whether or not conducted for profit.

(7) Absence of Entry in Records Kept in Accordance with the Provisions of Paragraph (6). — Evidence that a matter is not included in the memoranda, reports, records, or data compilations, in any form, kept in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (6), to prove the nonoccurrence or nonexistence of the matter, if the matter was of a kind of which a memorandum, report, record, or data compilation was regularly made and preserved, unless the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness.

(8) Public Records and Reports. — Records, reports, statements, or data compilations, in any form, of public offices or agencies, setting forth (A) the activities of the office or agency, or (B) matters observed pursuant to duty imposed by law as to which matters there was a duty to report, excluding, however, in criminal cases matters observed by police officers and other law-enforcement personnel, or (C) in civil actions and proceedings and against the State in criminal cases, factual findings resulting from an investigation made pursuant to authority granted by law, unless the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness.

(9) Records of Vital Statistics. — Records or data compilations, in any form, of births, fetal deaths, deaths, or marriages, if the report thereof was made to a public office pursuant to requirements of law.

(10) Absence of Public Record or Entry. — To prove the absence of a record, report, statement, or data compilation, in any form, or the nonoccurrence or nonexistence of a matter of which a record, report, statement, or data compilation, in any form, was regularly made and preserved by a public office or agency, evidence in the form of a certification in accordance with Rule 902, or testimony, that diligent search failed to disclose the record, report, statement, or data compilation, or entry.

(11) Records of Religious Organizations. — Statements of births, marriages, divorces, deaths, legitimacy, ancestry, relationship by blood or marriage, or other similar facts of personal or family history, contained in a regularly kept record of a religious organization.

(12) Marriage, Baptismal, and Similar Certificates. — Statements of fact contained in a certificate that the maker performed a marriage or other ceremony or administered a sacrament, made by a clergyman, public official, or other person authorized by the rules or practices of a religious organization or by law to perform the act certified, and purporting to have been issued at the time of the act or within a reasonable time thereafter.

(13) Family Records. — Statements of fact concerning personal or family history contained in family Bibles, genealogies, charts, engravings on rings, inscriptions on family portraits, engravings on urns, crypts, or tombstones, or the like.

(14) Records of Documents Affecting an Interest in Property. — The record of a document purporting to establish or affect an interest in property, as proof of the content of the original recorded document and its execution and delivery by each person by whom it purports to have been executed, if the record is a record of a public office and an applicable statute authorizes the recording of documents of that kind in that office.

(15) Statements in Documents Affecting an Interest in Property. — A statement contained in a document purporting to establish or affect an interest in property if the matter stated was relevant to the purpose of the document, unless dealings with the property since the document was made have been inconsistent with the truth of the statement or the purport of the document.

(16) Statements in Ancient Documents. — Statements in a document in existence 20 years or more the authenticity of which is established.

(17) Market Reports, Commercial Publications. — Market quotations, tabulations, lists, directories, or other published compilations, generally used and relied upon by the public or by persons in particular occupations.

(18) Learned Treatises. — To the extent called to the attention of an expert witness upon cross-examination or relied upon by him in direct examination, statements contained in published treatises, periodicals, or pamphlets on a subject of history, medicine, or other science or art, established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice. If admitted, the statements may be read into evidence but may not be received as exhibits.

(19) Reputation Concerning Personal or Family History. — Reputation among members of his family by blood, adoption, or marriage, or among his associates, or in the community, concerning a person's birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, death, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, or marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of his personal or family history.

(20) Reputation Concerning Boundaries or General History. — Reputation in a community, arising before the controversy, as to boundaries of or customs affecting lands in the community, and reputation as to events of general history important to the community or state or nation in which located.

(21) Reputation as to Character. — Reputation of a person's character among his associates or in the community.

(22) (Reserved).

(23) Judgment as to Personal, Family or General History, or Boundaries. — Judgments as proof of matters of personal, family or general history, or boundaries, essential to the judgment, if the same would be provable by evidence of reputation.

(24) Other Exceptions. — A statement not specifically covered by any of the foregoing exceptions but having equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, if the court determines that (A) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (B) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (C) the general purposes of these rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence. However, a statement may not be admitted under this exception unless the proponent of it gives written notice stating his intention to offer the statement and the particulars of it, including the name and address of the declarant, to the adverse party sufficiently in advance of offering the statement to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet the statement. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 803, except as noted below. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The exceptions are phrased in terms of nonapplication of the hearsay rule, rather than in positive terms of admissibility, in order to repel any implication that other possible grounds for exclusion are eliminated from consideration.

The present rule proceeds upon the theory that under appropriate circumstances a hearsay statement may possess circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness sufficient to justify nonproduction of the declarant in person at the trial even though he may be available. The theory finds vast support in the many exceptions to the hearsay rule developed by the common law in which unavailability of the declarant is not a relevant factor. The present rule is a synthesis of them, with revisions where modern developments and conditions are believed to make that course appropriate.

In a hearsay situation, the declarant is, of course, a witness, and neither this Rule nor Rule 804 dispenses with the requirement of firsthand knowledge. It may appear from his statement or be inferable from circumstances. See Rule 602."

As the Advisory Committee's Note indicates, the exceptions are phrased in terms of nonapplication of the hearsay rule. Evidence that is otherwise inadmissible may be stricken from a writing.

Exception (1) concerns present sense impressions and Exception (2) concerns excited utterances. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"In considerable measure these two examples overlap, though based on somewhat different theories. The most significant practical difference will lie in the time lapse allowable between event and statement.

The underlying theory of Exception (1) is that substantial contemporaneity of event and statement negative the likelihood of deliberate or conscious misrepresentation. Moreover, if the witness is the declarant, he may be examined on the statement. If the witness is not the declarant, he may be examined as to the circumstances as an aid in evaluating the statement. (Citation omitted.)

The theory of Exception (2) is simply that circumstances may produce a condition of excitement which temporarily stills the capacity of reflection and produces utterances free of conscious fabrication. 6 Wigmore § 1747, p. 135. Spontaneity is the key factor in each instance, though arrived at by somewhat different routes. Both are needed in order to avoid needless niggling.

With respect to the time element, Exception (1) recognizes that in many, if not most, instances precise contemporaneity is not possible, and hence a slight lapse is allowable. Under Exception (2) the standard of measurement is the duration of the state of excitement. 'How long can excitement prevail? Obviously there are no pat answers and the character of the transaction or event will largely determine the significance of the time factor.'"

North Carolina courts have recognized a hearsay exception for spontaneous utterances that is substantially the same as Exception (2). See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 164 (1982). Exception (2) would clarify discordant rulings in this area, particularly as to the element of time. Id. at 650. Exception (1) would be a new exception to the hearsay rule in North Carolina. Id. at 653.

Exception (3) concerns statements of the declarant's then existing mental, emotional or physical condition. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The exclusion of 'statements of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed' is necessary to avoid the virtual destruction of the hearsay rule which would otherwise result from allowing state of mind, provable by a hearsay statement, to serve as the basis for an inference of the happening of the event which produced the state of mind."

Exception (3) is similar to the corresponding North Carolina exception to the hearsay rule. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 161 (1982). However, the North Carolina exception differs from Exception (3) in that in North Carolina declarations that are made in a criminal case after the commission of the crime are generally not included within the exception for fear that admissibility would permit the defendant to create evidence for himself. Id. at 636.

In North Carolina, when the issue is one of undue influence or fraud with respect to the execution of a will, the declarations of a testator are admitted only as corroborative evidence and are not alone sufficient to establish the previous conduct of another person by means of which the alleged fraud was perpetrated or the undue influence exerted. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 163, at 647-48. Exception (3) would change this result and permit such declarations to be admitted as substantive proof.

Exception (4) concerns statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis and treatment. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Even those few jurisdictions which have shied away from generally admitting statements of present condition have allowed them if made to a physician for purposes of diagnosis and treatment in view of the patient's strong motivation to be truthful. The same guarantee of trustworthiness extends to statements of past conditions and medical history, made for purposes of diagnosis or treatment. It also extends to statements as to causation, reasonably pertinent to the same purposes, in accord with the current trend. Statements as to fault would not ordinarily qualify under this latter language. Thus a patient's statement that he was struck by an automobile would qualify but not his statement that the car was driven through a red light. Under the exception the statement need not have been made to a physician. Statements to hospital attendants, ambulance drivers, or even members of the family might be included.

Under current North Carolina practice, statements of past condition made by a patient to a treating physician or psychiatrist, when relevant to diagnosis or treatment and therefore inherently reliable, are admissible to show the basis for the expert's opinion. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 161, at 635 (1982). In some instances, a statement to a nontreating physician is currently admissible. State v. Franks, 300 N.C. 1 (1980). Professor Brandis states that when qualifying as basis for the expert's opinion statements of past condition "should be (though, as yet, they are not) admissible as substantive evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule." Brandis, supra, at 636.

Exception (5) concerns past recollection recorded, which is currently admissible in North Carolina. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 33 (1982).

The phrase "or adopted by a witness" was added by Congress to make it clear that statements adopted by a witness would come within the rule. The language chosen by Congress may be read to suggest that the statement does not qualify for admission unless the witness made the recordation himself or actually adopted the recordation of another. The exception should be construed so as not to require that the recordation of another be actually adopted by the witness. Thus the statement may be one that was made by the witness, one that was adopted by the witness, or one that was made by the witness and recorded by another. This construction would be in accord with North Carolina practice which permits use of the recorded statement if the witness is able to testify that he saw it at a time when the facts were fresh in his memory, and that it actually represented his recollection at the time. See Brandis, supra, at 127.

To prevent a jury from giving too much weight to a written statement that cannot be effectively cross-examined, the last sentence of Exception (5) provides that the memorandum or record may be read into evidence but may not be received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party. Current North Carolina practice apparently permits the writing itself, or a reading thereof by the authenticating witness, to be admitted. Brandis, supra, at 126, n. 75.

Exception (6) concerns records of regularly conducted activity. The exception is derived from the traditional business records exception. The exception is limited to business records, but business is defined to include the records of institutions and associations like schools, churches and hospitals. This appears to be a slight expansion of the current North Carolina business records exception. See Brandis, supra, § 155.

The exception is consistent with North Carolina practice in that the person making the record is not required to have personal knowledge of the transactions entered. See Brandis, supra, § 155, at 617. However, it must be shown that the record was actually based (or it was the regular practice of the activity to base the record) upon a person with knowledge acting pursuant to a regularly conducted activity.

The exception specifically includes both diagnoses and opinions, in addition to acts, events and conditions, as proper subjects of admissible entries. See State v. DeGregory, 285 N.C. 122 (1977).

In addition, the Advisory Committee's Note states that:

"Problems of the motivation of the informant have been a source of difficulty and disagreement.

The formulation of specific terms which would assure satisfactory results in all cases is not possible. Consequently the rule proceeds from the base that records made in the course of a regularly conducted activity will be taken as admissible but subject to authority to exclude if 'the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness.'"

Apparently, there are no North Carolina cases on this point.

The rule is in accord with North Carolina practice in that it includes computer storage. Brandis, supra, § 155, at 619.

Exception (7) concerns the absence of an entry in the records of regularly conducted activity. As the Advisory Committee's Note states: "Failure of a record to mention a matter which would ordinarily be mentioned is satisfactory evidence of its nonexistence." This is existing North Carolina law. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 155 (1982).

Exception (8) differs from Fed. R. Evid. 803(8) in that the word "State" is used in lieu of the word "government".

Part (A) of the exception is for records, reports, statements or data compilations setting forth the activities of the public office or agency. Part (A) is in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 153 (1982).

Part (B) covers matters observed pursuant to duty imposed by law when there is also a duty to report. Part (B) is in general accord with North Carolina practice. Id. In criminal cases, Part (B) does not cover matters observed by police officers and other law enforcement personnel. Note that the right to confrontation may exclude evidence in criminal cases even if the matter is not one observed by law enforcement personnel.

Part (C) covers factual findings resulting from an investigation made pursuant to legal authority. The term "factual findings" is not intended to preclude the introduction of evaluative reports containing conclusions or opinions. Apparently North Carolina courts currently exclude statements in reports that only amount to an expression of opinion. Id. at 609.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Factors which may be of assistance in passing upon the admissibility of evaluative reports include: (1) the timeliness of the investigation ...; (2) the special skill or experience of the official ...; (3) whether a hearing was held and the level at which conducted; (4) possible motivation problems suggested by Palmer v. Hoffman, 318 U.S. 109 ... (1943). Others no doubt could be added.

The formulation of an approach which would give appropriate weight to all possible factors in every situation is an obvious impossibility. Hence the rule, as in Exception (6), assumes admissibility in the first instance but with ample provision for escape if sufficient negative factors are present. In one respect, however, the rule with respect to evaluative reports under item (c) is very specific: they are admissible only in civil cases and against the government in criminal cases in view of the almost certain collision with confrontation rights which would result from their use against the accused in a criminal case."

The phrase "unless the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness" applies to all three parts of the exception.

Public records and reports that are not admissible under Exception (8) are not admissible as business records under Exception (6).

Exception (9) excludes from the hearsay ban records of vital statistics and is similar to G.S. 130-49 [now repealed] and G.S. 130-66 [now repealed].

One purpose of the exception is to admit a death certificate to prove that a death occurred. G.S. 130-66 [now repealed] also provides that a death certificate is prima facie evidence of the cause of death. However, in State v. Watson, 281 N.C. 221 (1972), the Court held that the admission of the "hearsay and conclusory statement" of the cause of death in the victim's death certificate violated the right to confrontation. Exception (9) is not intended to permit the use of statements of the cause of death in a death certificate against a defendant in a criminal case.

Exception (10) concerns the absence of a public record or entry. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The principle of proving nonoccurrence of an event by evidence of the absence of a record which would regularly be made of its occurrence, developed in Exception (7) with respect to regularly conducted activities, is here extended to public records of the kind mentioned in Exceptions (8) and (9). 5 Wigmore § 1633(6), p. 519. Some harmless duplication no doubt exists with Exception (7). ***

The rule includes situations in which absence of a record may itself be the ultimate focal point of inquiry, e.g., People v. Love, 310 Ill. 558, 142 N.E. 204 (1923), certificate of secretary of state admitted to show failure to file documents required by Securities Law, as well as cases where the absence of a record is offered as proof of the nonoccurrence of an event ordinarily recorded."

Exception (10) is similar to G.S. 1A-1, Civ. Pro. Rules 44(b) and 44(c). See also Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 153, at 610 (1982).

Exception (11) concerns records of religious organizations. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Records of activities of religious organizations are currently recognized as admissible at least to the extent of the business records exception to the hearsay rule, 5 Wigmore § 1523, p. 371, and Exception (6) would be applicable. However, both the business record doctrine and Exception (6) require that the person furnishing the information be one in the business or activity. The result is such decisions as Daily v. Grand Lodge, 311 Ill. 184, 142 N.E. 478 (1924), holding a church record admissible to prove fact, date, and place of baptism, but not age of child except that he had at least been born at the time. In view of the unlikelihood that false information would be furnished on occasions of this kind, the rule contains no requirement that the information be in the course of the activity."

Currently in North Carolina records of activities of religious organizations are admissible to the extent of the business records exception to the hearsay rule. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 155 (1982).

Exception (12) concerns marriage, baptismal, and similar certificates. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The principle of proof by certification is recognized as to public officials in Exceptions (8) and (10), and with respect to authentication in Rule 902. The present exception is a duplication to the extent that it deals with a certificate by a public official, as in the case of a judge who performs a marriage ceremony. The area covered by the rule is, however, substantially larger and extends the certification procedure to clergymen and the like who perform marriages and other ceremonies or administer sacraments. Thus certificates of such matters as baptism or confirmation, as well as marriage, are included. In principle they are as acceptable evidence as certificates of public officers. See 5 Wigmore §1645, as to marriage certificates. When the person executing the certificate is not a public official, the self-authenticating character of documents purporting to emanate from public officials, see Rule 902, is lacking and proof is required that the person was authorized and did make the certificate. The time element, however, may safely be taken as supplied by the certificate, once authority and authenticity are established, particularly in view of the presumption that a document was executed on the date it bears."

Under current North Carolina practice, these items are admissible only to the extent they are part of a public record.

Exception (13) concerns family records.

The North Carolina exception for family records is more restrictive in that statements of family history and pedigree are admissible only if the declarant (1) is unavailable; (2) made the statement before the beginning of the controversy; and (3) bore a relationship to the family such that he was likely to have known the truth. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 149 (1982).

Exception (14) concerns records of documents affecting an interest in property. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The recording of title documents is a purely statutory development. Under any theory of the admissibility of public records, the records would be receivable as evidence of the contents of the recorded document, else the recording process would be reduced to a nullity. When, however, the record is offered for the further purpose of proving execution and delivery, a problem of lack of firsthand knowledge by the recorder, not present as to contents, is presented. This problem is solved, seemingly in all jurisdictions, by qualifying for recording only those documents shown by a specified procedure, either acknowledgement or a form of probate, to have been executed and delivered. 5 Wigmore §§ 1647-1651."

Exception (14) is consistent with North Carolina practice. See G.S. 47-20 through 47-20.4; G.S. 47-14; and G.S. 47-17.

Exception (15) concerns statements in documents affecting an interest in property. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Dispositive documents often contain recitals of fact. Thus a deed purporting to have been executed by an attorney in fact may recite the existence of the power of attorney, or a deed may recite that the grantors are all the heirs of the last record owner. Under the rule, these recitals are exempted from the hearsay rule. The circumstances under which dispositive documents are executed and the requirement that the recital be germane to the purpose of the document are believed to be adequate guarantees of trustworthiness, particularly in view of the nonapplicability of the rule if dealings with the property have been inconsistent with the document. The age of the document is of no significance, though in practical application the document will most often be an ancient one."

The extent to which recitals of fact in a deed or other dispositive documents are admissible in North Carolina is not entirely certain. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 152 (1982). Adoption to Exception (15) would somewhat expand admissibility and clarify North Carolina law in this area.

Exception (16) concerns statements in ancient documents. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Authenticating a document as ancient, essentially in the pattern of the common law, as provided in Rule 901(b)(8), leaves open as a separate question the admissibility of assertive statements contained therein as against a hearsay objection. 7 Wigmore § 2145a. Wigmore further states that the ancient document technique of authentication is universally conceded to apply to all sorts of documents, including letters, records, contracts, maps, and certificates, in addition to title documents, citing numerous decisions. Id. § 2145. Since most of these items are significant evidentially only insofar as they are assertive, their admission in evidence must be as a hearsay exception. But see 5 id § 1573, p. 429, referring to recitals in ancient deeds as a 'limited' hearsay exception. The former position is believed to be the correct one in reason and authority. As pointed out in McCormick § 298, danger of mistake is minimized by authentication requirements, and age affords assurance that the writing antedates the present controversy."

North Carolina courts currently recognize as exceptions to the hearsay rule recitals in deeds more than 30 years old. "The North Carolina cases have involved deeds, but it may be assumed that the rule extends here, as it does elsewhere, to other dispositive instruments such as wills and powers of attorney." Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 152, at 604 (1982). Exception (16) would expand the North Carolina exception to include statements in many types of documents more than 20 years old.

Exception (17) concerns market reports and commercial publications. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Ample authority at common law supported the admission in evidence of items falling in this category. While Wigmore's text is narrowly oriented to lists, etc., prepared for the use of a trade or profession, 6 Wigmore § 1702, authorities are cited which include other kinds of publications, for example, newspaper market reports, telephone directories, and city directories. Id. §§ 1702-1706. The basis of trustworthiness is general reliance by the public or by a particular segment of it, and the motivation of the compiler to foster reliance by being accurate."

North Carolina courts have admitted into evidence a variety of published compilations used or relied on by the public or particular professions. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 165 (1982).

Exception (18) concerns learned treatises. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The writers have generally favored the admissibility of learned treatises ..., but the great weight of authority has been that learned treatises are not admissible as substantive evidence though usable in the cross-examination of experts. The foundation of the minority view is that the hearsay objection must be regarded as unimpressive when directed against treatises since a high standard of accuracy is engendered by various factors: the treatise is written primarily and impartially for professionals, subject to scrutiny and exposure for inaccuracy, with the reputation of the writer at stake.  Sound as this position may be with respect to trustworthiness, there is, nevertheless, an additional difficulty in the likelihood that the treatise will be misunderstood and misapplied without expert assistance and supervision. This difficulty is recognized in the cases demonstrating unwillingness to sustain findings relative to disability on the basis of judicially noticed medical texts.  The rule avoids the danger of misunderstanding and misapplication by limiting the use of treatises as substantive evidence to situations in which an expert is on the stand and available to explain and assist in the application of the treatise if desired. The limitation upon receiving the publication itself physically in evidence, contained in the last sentence, is designed to further this policy.

The rule does not require that the witness rely upon or recognize the treatise as authoritative, thus avoiding the possibility that the expert may at the outset block cross-examination by refusing to concede reliance or authoritativeness. Moreover, the rule avoids the unreality of admitting evidence for the purpose of impeachment only, with an instruction to the jury not to consider it otherwise."

Exception (18) is substantially the same as G.S. 8-40.1 [now repealed]. Although [former] G.S. 8-40.1 was modeled after Exception (18), there has been some doubt whether the statements, once received, are substantive evidence or are merely for impeachment or corroboration. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 136, at 543 (1982). It is intended that Exception (18) authorize admission of such statements as substantive evidence.

The last sentence of [former] G.S. 8-40.1 differs from Exception (18) by providing that the statements may not be received as exhibits "unless agreed to by counsel for the parties." The quoted language was viewed as superfluous since evidence excluded by this rule and other rules may be admitted upon stipulation by counsel for the parties.

Exception (19) concerns matters of personal and family history. The advisory Committee's Note states:

"Marriage is universally conceded to be a proper subject of proof by evidence of reputation in the community.  As to such items as legitimacy, relationship, adoption, birth, and death, the decisions are divided.  All seem to be susceptible to being the subject of well founded repute. The 'world' in which the reputation may exist may be family, associates, or community. This world has proved capable of expanding with changing times from the single uncomplicated neighborhood, in which all activities take place, to the multiple and unrelated worlds of work, religious affiliation, and social activity, in each of which a reputation may be generated."

Under current North Carolina law only reputation among family members is admissible concerning matters of family history and pedigree, except for marriage which may be proved by both family and community reputation. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 149, at 599 (1982). Exception (19) would permit proof by reputation among family and associates, or in the community.

Exception (20) concerns reputation as to land boundaries or general history. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The first portion of Exception (20) is based upon the general admissibility of evidence of reputation as to land boundaries and land customs, expanded in this country to include private as well as public boundaries. McCormick § 299, p. 625. The reputation is required to antedate the controversy, though not to be ancient. The second portion is likewise supported by authority, id., and is designed to facilitate proof of events when judicial notice is not available. The historical character of the subject matter dispenses with any need that the reputation antedate the controversy with respect to which it is offered."

Exception (20) is in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 150 (1982).

Exception (21) concerns reputation as to character. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Exception (21) recognizes the traditional acceptance of reputation evidence as a means of proving human character. McCormick §§ 44, 158. The exception deals only with the hearsay aspect of this kind of evidence. Limitations upon admissibility based on other grounds will be found in Rules 404, relevancy of character evidence generally, and 608, character of witness. The exception is in effect a reiteration, in the context of hearsay, of Rule 405(a)."

Exception (21) is consistent with North Carolina practice.

Exception (22) is reserved for future codification. Fed. R. Evid. 803(22) concerns use of a judgment of previous conviction to prove a fact essential to sustain the judgment. Under current North Carolina practice, the judgment or finding of a court generally cannot be used in another case as evidence of the fact found, except where the principle of res judicata is involved. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 143 (1982). By not adopting a hearsay exception for judgments of previous conviction, it is intended that North Carolina practice with respect to previous convictions remain the same.

Exception (23) concerns a judgment as proof of matters of personal, family or general history, or boundaries. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"A hearsay exception in this area was originally justified on the ground that verdicts were evidence of reputation. As trial by jury graduated from the category of neighborhood inquests, this theory lost its validity. It was never valid as to chancery decrees. Nevertheless the rule persisted, though the judges and writers shifted ground and began saying that the judgment or decree was as good evidence as reputation.  The shift appears to be correct, since the process of inquiry, sifting, and scrutiny which is relied upon to render reputation reliable is present in perhaps greater measure in the process of litigation. While this might suggest a broader area of application, the affinity to reputation is strong, and paragraph (23) goes no further, not even including character."

A judgment admitted under this exception is some evidence of the matter essential to the judgment, but is not a binding determination of the matter for purposes of the current proceeding.

Generally, a judgment cannot be used under current North Carolina practice to prove a fact essential to the judgment, except where the principle of res judicata is involved. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 143 (1982).

Exception (24) differs from Fed. R. Evid. 803(24) in that the last sentence of the federal rule does not require written notice. Also, Exception (24) requires the notice to be given sufficiently in advance of offering the statement while Fed. R. Evid. 803(24) requires the notice to be given sufficiently in advance of the trial or hearing.

This exception makes admissible a hearsay statement not specifically covered by any of the previous twenty-three exceptions if the statement has equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness and the court makes the determinations required by the rule. This exception does not contemplate an unfettered exercise of judicial discretion, but it does provide for treating new and presently unanticipated situations which demonstrate a trustworthiness within the spirit of the specifically stated exceptions.

Writing for the majority in State v. Vestal, 278 N.C. 561, 589 (1971), Justice Lake stated that:

"No branch of the law should be less firmly bound to a past century than the rules of evidence. The purpose of the rules of evidence is to assist the jury to arrive at the truth. Exceptions to the hearsay rule, evolved by the experience and wisdom of our predecessors for that purpose, should not be transformed by us into rigid molds precluding all testimony not capable of being squeezed neatly into one of them."

North Carolina courts have admitted hearsay evidence in many instances on the ground that the evidence was part of the "res gestae ". The res gestae formula has been frequently resorted to in cases that would seem to be more appropriately governed by independent hearsay rules. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 158 (1982). The phrase res gestae "has been accountable for so much confusion that it had best be denied any place whatever in legal terminology." U.S. v. Matot, 146 F.2d 197 (2d. Cir. 1944) (Learned Hand). Although evidence previously governed by the res gestae formula may now fall within the specific hearsay exceptions or the catch-all in Exception 24, the res gestae formula should not be relied on by the courts.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Constitutional Restrictions on Use of Hearsay. — A prosecutor is prohibited by U.S. Const., Amend. VI and N.C. Const., Art. I, § 23 from introducing any hearsay evidence in a criminal trial unless two requirements are met. The prosecution must show both the necessity for using the hearsay testimony and the inherent trustworthiness of the original declaration. State v. Gregory, 78 N.C. App. 565, 338 S.E.2d 110 (1985), aff'd, 900 F.2d 705 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 879, 111 S. Ct. 211, 112 L. Ed. 2d 171 (1990).

This rule is virtually identical to the federal rule. Griffin v. Griffin, 81 N.C. App. 665, 344 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

North Carolina law has long prohibited the use of a previous finding of a court as evidence of the fact found in another tribunal. This practice remains the same under the new evidence code. Reliable Properties, Inc. v. McAllister, 77 N.C. App. 783, 336 S.E.2d 108 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 379, 342 S.E.2d 897 (1986), holding, however, that under the circumstances, the admission of testimony about the actions of licensing board did not constitute reversible error.

Evidence Must Be Relevant. — While this rule delineates instances in which evidence will not be excluded simply because such evidence is hearsay, it does not annul the requirement of § 8C-1, Rule 402 that the evidence be relevant. York v. Northern Hosp. Dist., 88 N.C. App. 183, 362 S.E.2d 859 (1987).

Corroborating Testimony. — Hospital nurse's testimony as to what a rape victim told her the day after the rape occurred was practically identical to victim's testimony, and was admissible for the nonhearsay purpose of corroborating victim's testimony. State v. Locklear, 320 N.C. 754, 360 S.E.2d 682 (1987).

Although the State did not specify the purpose for which it offered the testimony of the victim's mother about the victim's out-of-court statement, and defendant did not request a limiting instruction, the trial court, in its final instructions to the jury, informed the jury that evidence of any out-of-court statement was to be received for corroborative purposes only. State v. Ford, 136 N.C. App. 634, 525 S.E.2d 218 (2000).

Section 20-139.1(e1), pertaining to use of a chemical analyst's affidavit in general district court, has effectively created a statutory exception to the hearsay rule. Section 20-139.1(e1) reflects a rationale which complies fully with historically recognized legitimate reasons for exceptions to the general rule against hearsay evidence. State v. Smith, 312 N.C. 361, 323 S.E.2d 316 (1984).

Every writing sought to be admitted must be properly authenticated, and must satisfy the requirements of the "best evidence rule," § 8C-1, Rule 1002, or one of its exceptions, set forth in § 8C-1, Rule 1003, et seq. Furthermore, if offered for a hearsay purpose, the writing must fall within one or more of the exceptions to the hearsay rule established by this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 804. FCX, Inc. v. Caudill, 85 N.C. App. 272, 354 S.E.2d 767 (1987).

The mere admission of incompetent hearsay evidence over proper objection does not require reversal. Rather, the party objecting must also show that the incompetent evidence caused some prejudice. Where the court sits as finder of fact, that party must show that the court relied on the incompetent evidence in making its findings. Best v. Best, 81 N.C. App. 337, 344 S.E.2d 363 (1986), overruled on other grounds, Petersen v. Rowe, 337 N.C. 397, 445 S.E.2d 901 (1994).

Defendant waived his right to appellate review of the admissibility of hearsay evidence under section (3) of this Rule, where he only argued erroneous admission under § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5). State v. Parker, — N.C. App. —, — S.E.2d —, 2000 N.C. App. LEXIS 1107 (Oct. 3, 2000).

Evidence tending to show state of mind is admissible as long as the declarant's state of mind is a relevant issue and the possible prejudicial effect of the evidence does not outweigh its probative value. Griffin v. Griffin, 81 N.C. App. 665, 344 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

No Hearsay Involved in Use of Dolls in Child's Testimony. — Allowing a child to use anatomical dolls to illustrate her testimony was not tendered pursuant to subdivision (24) of this rule, which allows certain hearsay testimony, because no hearsay was involved in the child's testimony. The use of anatomical dolls is not inherently open to suggestiveness by the examiner, if the witness is "other than an expert." State v. Fletcher, 322 N.C. 415, 368 S.E.2d 633 (1988).

II. PRESENT SENSE IMPRESSION.

The underlying theory of the present sense exception to the hearsay rule is that closeness in time between the event and the declarant's statement reduces the likelihood of deliberate or conscious misrepresentation. State v. Reid, 322 N.C. 309, 367 S.E.2d 672 (1988).

The basis of the present sense impression exception is that closeness in time between the event and the declarant's statement reduces the likelihood of deliberate or conscious misrepresentation. State v. Pickens, 346 N.C. 628, 488 S.E.2d 162 (1997).

In order to constitute a present sense impression, a statement must have been made while the declarant was perceiving the event or condition, or immediately thereafter. State v. Maness, 321 N.C. 454, 364 S.E.2d 349 (1988).

Explanation of Event. — Detective's testimony concerning statement made by captain in identification bureau while destroying rape kit involved "explaining an event," i.e., the destruction of the evidence, and because the event and the statement occurred simultaneously and the statement was in explanation, such testimony was admissible under the present sense exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Reid, 322 N.C. 309, 367 S.E.2d 672 (1988).

There is no rigid rule about how long is too long to be considered "immediately thereafter" regarding the present sense impression exception. State v. Clark, 128 N.C. App. 722, 496 S.E.2d 604 (1998).

Nine days later cannot be considered "immediately thereafter" and thus a statement made at that time was not a present sense impression. State v. Maness, 321 N.C. 454, 364 S.E.2d 349 (1988).

Where eyewitness went to notify police immediately after abduction, the officer was on the scene in 10 minutes, and eyewitness then gave him a statement about the event, under the facts his statement was not too remote to be admissible under subdivision (1) of this rule. State v. Odom, 316 N.C. 306, 341 S.E.2d 332 (1986).

Police Report. — In a case involving negligence of defendant leading to theft of jewelry samples from car trunk, police investigative report was properly received for the limited purpose of showing that a report of the theft was made under § 8C-1, Rule 801, and was also admissible as substantive evidence under this rule as a present sense impression and an excited utterance. Southern Watch Supply Co. v. Regal Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 82 N.C. App. 21, 345 S.E.2d 453 (1986).

Statements by Shooting Victim. — Statements made by the victim immediately after the shooting to which three witnesses were allowed to testify, were excited utterances and not excluded by the hearsay rule. State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 900, 118 S. Ct. 248, 139 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1997).

Testimony Held Admissible. — Testimony of mother of murder victim regarding a conversation when victim came over to her mother's house crying and saying that defendant had kicked her out of his house was properly allowed into evidence as a present sense impression by the declarant under subdivision (1) of this rule. State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Where witness saw defendant with a gun in her daughter's yard and attempted to warn her, the daughter's statement to her mother that defendant was looking for the victim was admissible as a present-sense impression. State v. Taylor, 344 N.C. 31, 473 S.E.2d 596 (1996).

III. EXCITED UTTERANCES.

Continuation of Former Practice. — Subdivision (2) of this rule, relating to excited utterances, is merely a continuation of the longstanding rule in this State that exclamations of a bystander concerning a startling or unusual event, made spontaneously and without time for reflection or fabrication, are admissible. State v. Simpson, 77 N.C. App. 586, 335 S.E.2d 526 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 595, 341 S.E.2d 36 (1986).

The "excited utterance" exception of subdivision (2) of this rule is a codification of the common-law exception, spontaneous utterance. State v. Wingard, 317 N.C. 590, 346 S.E.2d 638 (1986).

Statements made while the declarant was under stress caused by a startling event were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Littlejohn, 340 N.C. 750, 459 S.E.2d 629 (1995).

But Not Every Statement Made Under Stress Is Similarly Admissible. — Where defendant was under the stress of a startling event when he made his exculpatory statement, but 25 minutes had elapsed between the fight and the statement, giving him sufficient time to have fabricated a story, admission of the statement as an excited utterance was properly denied. State v. Safrit, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 516, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 727 (2001).

Statement Admissible as Excited Utterance. — Testimony of a witness as to a statement made by a declarant relating to a startling event and made while the declarant was under the stress of that event is not excludable under the hearsay rule. State v. Sneed, 327 N.C. 266, 393 S.E.2d 531 (1990).

Testimony of witness on voir dire that victim told him that defendant attempted to kill her and that victim wanted to move in with witness provided a plausible reason and factual basis for the victim's fear of defendant, which was relevant to show the nature of the victim's relationship with defendant and the impact of the defendant's behavior on the victim's state of mind prior to the murder. State v. Glenn, 333 N.C. 296, 425 S.E.2d 688 (1993).

The rationale for the admissibility of an excited utterance is its trustworthiness. State v. Wingard, 317 N.C. 590, 346 S.E.2d 638 (1986).

The reason for allowing the excited utterances exception is that circumstances may produce a condition of excitement which temporarily stills the capacity of reflection and produces spontaneous and sincere utterances. State v. Reid, 335 N.C. 647, 440 S.E.2d 776 (1994).

In order to fall within the hearsay exception of subdivision (2) of this rule, there must be (1) a sufficiently startling experience suspending reflective thought, and (2) a spontaneous reaction, not one resulting from reflection or fabrication. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

For a statement to qualify as an excited utterance, there must be (1) a sufficiently startling experience suspending reflective thought and (2) a spontaneous reaction, not one resulting from reflection or fabrication. State v. Maness, 321 N.C. 454, 364 S.E.2d 349 (1988).

For a statement to be admitted as an excited utterance there must be (1) a sufficiently startling experience suspending reflective thought and (2) a spontaneous reaction, not one resulting from reflection of fabrication. State v. Pickens, 346 N.C. 628, 488 S.E.2d 162 (1997).

Statements to Police. — Statement, heard by officer arriving at murder scene, that defendant shot the victim fit squarely within the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule and was properly admitted. State v. Pickens, 346 N.C. 628, 488 S.E.2d 162 (1997).

The victim's oral statement to a police officer when he first arrived at her neighbor's house and found her in the back yard, regarding being pursued, beaten and terrorized by defendant, was admissible as an excited utterance. State v. Guice, 141 N.C. App. 177, 541 S.E.2d 474 (2000), cert. dismissed, 353 N.C. 731, 551 S.E.2d 112 (2001).

Statement Made to Police over One Hour After Crime. — Where defendant made exculpatory statement to a police officer over an hour after the crime was discovered, the trial court could properly conclude that he had time to manufacture the statement and did not make it spontaneously. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

A nine-day interval between the event and the statement precludes the statement from being a spontaneous reaction, not one resulting from reflection or fabrication, so as to be admissible as an excited utterance. State v. Maness, 321 N.C. 454, 364 S.E.2d 349 (1988).

Statements Made by Children. — When considering the spontaneity of statements made by young children, there is more flexibility concerning the length of time between the startling event and the statements because the stress and spontaneity upon which the exception is based are often present for longer periods of time in young children than in adults. State v. Boczkowski, 130 N.C. App. 702, 504 S.E.2d 796 (1998).

Statements Made to a Neighbor. — A statement made by defendant's daughter was admissible as an excited utterance even though made in response to questions from a neighbor, where the statement was made several hours after the nine-year-old girl's mother was found dead, and she told the neighbor that her parents had been fighting and she had heard her mother telling the father to "stop." State v. Boczkowski, 130 N.C. App. 702, 504 S.E.2d 796 (1998).

Child Victim's Statements to Grandmother. — Trial court did not err in ruling that three and a half year old victim's statements to her grandmother regarding rape by her father fit into an exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Gregory, 78 N.C. App. 565, 338 S.E.2d 110 (1985), aff'd, 900 F.2d 705 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 879, 111 S. Ct. 211, 112 L. Ed. 2d 171 (1990).

In prosecution for rape of four and five year old victims, grandmother's testimony regarding her conversations with the victims, including the identification of the defendant as the assailant, resulting in their being examined, diagnosed, and treated at hospital, was properly admitted as substantive evidence pursuant to subdivision (4) of this rule, and as an excited utterance under subdivision (2). State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Statement to her grandmother by a two-and-a-half year old child that her mother was dead was an excited utterance and was admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Reeves, 337 N.C. 700, 448 S.E.2d 802 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1114, 115 S. Ct. 1971, 131 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1995).

Statement By Murder Victim. — The murder victim's statements to her brother-in-law that the defendant had held a gun to her head and threatened to kill her were admissible in the defendant's murder trial under the excited utterance exception, where the victim called the brother-in-law immediately after the incident, while she was upset and had not had time to reflect. State v. Murillo, 349 N.C. 573, 509 S.E.2d 752 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 103, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

Statement of Onlooker to Witness Pursuing Thief. — Trial court did not err in allowing witness, in relating her pursuit of thief, to testify that when she lost sight of the man she was pursuing, a nearby woman yelled at her, asked what she was doing, and said that the man had gone into the parking lot, as assuming that the statement was arguably hearsay, it was admissible as a present sense impression or an excited utterance. State v. Markham, 80 N.C. App. 322, 341 S.E.2d 777 (1986).

Statement made by a person standing near the spot where victim was shot, immediately after defendant shot the victim and bent over her with the gun still in his hand, was clearly a statement relating to the startling attack and shooting while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event; as such, it was an excited utterance within the meaning of subdivision (2) of this rule and was admissible into evidence, notwithstanding its hearsay character. State v. Wingard, 317 N.C. 590, 346 S.E.2d 638 (1986).

Statement by Witness to Shooting. — Testimony by witness that codefendant stated "I didn't believe you would shoot him" fits squarely within the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Braxton, 344 N.C. 702, 477 S.E.2d 172 (1996).

Statements by Defendant. — Where defendant saw his brother fall to the floor, bleeding, after being hit over the head with a chair by shooting victim, the defendants statements regarding victim were admissible as excited utterances. State v. Riley, 128 N.C. App. 265, 495 S.E.2d 181 (1998).

Statement to Aunt an Hour After Event. — The trial court properly excluded aunt's testimony on the grounds that it was inadmissible hearsay where defendant first talked to his aunt on the telephone after the shooting from his grandmother's house to tell her where he was and that he was on his way home and defendant did not mention the shooting on the phone but waited until after he had ridden home, an hour after the shooting, to tell her what had happened. State v. Sidberry, 337 N.C. 779, 448 S.E.2d 798 (1994).

Mother's Accusatory Statements. — In prosecution for manufacturing marijuana, the jury was entitled to consider the defendant's mother's excited utterances in the form of accusatory statements, made when she learned that defendant was being arrested, and his responses thereto. State v. Beaver, 317 N.C. 643, 346 S.E.2d 476 (1986).

Statements by Assault Victim. — Statements by defendant's daughter were properly admitted under the excited utterance exception where she described her father's attack on her to a neighbor, to whom she ran for help, and to a police officer and both testified that she was very upset, out of breath, and that her face was bruised and swollen. State v. Coria, 131 N.C. App. 449, 508 S.E.2d 1 (1998).

Statements by Rape Victim to Officer. — Statement made by victim, an 89-year-old woman who had been raped approximately 10 minutes before, to detective was properly submitted at defendant's trial for rape and burglary, where victim died prior to trial from unrelated causes. State v. Murphy, 321 N.C. 72, 361 S.E.2d 745 (1987).

Statements made by a mentally retarded rape victim, who was visibly shaken, that she had been raped less than 30 minutes earlier were properly determined to be excited utterances. State v. Washington, 131 N.C. App. 156, 506 S.E.2d 283 (1998), cert. denied, 352 N.C. 362, 544 S.E.2d 562 (2000).

Statement made by four-year-old victim to her mother, in the presence of her father, within 10 hours after leaving defendant's custody, without hesitation and without prompting by her parents, was a spontaneous reaction to a startling experience, and the trial court properly admitted father's testimony as to victim's statements under the hearsay exception for excited utterances. State v. Jones, 89 N.C. App. 584, 367 S.E.2d 139 (1988).

Child Victim of Sexual Assault. — Because testimony indicated that statements by a child, allegedly the victim of a sexual assault, were (1) spontaneous and not in response to any questioning on the part of the adult to whom they were made, (2) related to the alleged sexual assault, a "startling event," particularly to a young child, and (3) were made only three days after such assault, the testimony was properly admitted pursuant to subdivision (2) of this rule. State v. Rogers, 109 N.C. App. 491, 428 S.E.2d 220, cert. denied, 334 N.C. 625, 435 S.E.2d 348 (1993), 511 U.S. 1008, 114 S. Ct. 1378, 128 L. Ed. 2d 54, rehearing denied, 511 U.S. 1102, 114 S. Ct. 1875 (1994).

In prosecution on two counts of first degree sexual offense (by anal and genital penetration) and one count of taking indecent liberties with a minor child, five year old victim's conversation with classmates on school playground was of such a nature as to have been properly admitted under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule; in the circumstances of this case, the passage of four or five days did not detract from the "spontaneity" of victim's response. State v. Thomas, 119 N.C. App. 708, 460 S.E.2d 349 (1995).

A child sexual abuse victim's statements to her mother and to a police officer were admissible under the excited utterance and existing mental, emotional, and physical condition exceptions to the hearsay rule. State v. Hinnant, 131 N.C. App. 591, 508 S.E.2d 537 (1998).

Statement After Escape from Burning House. — The out-of-court statement of an excited victim, made as much as 15 minutes after escaping from a burning house, falls within the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Kerley, 87 N.C. App. 240, 360 S.E.2d 464 (1987), appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 364 S.E.2d 661 (1988).

Statement by Passenger of Car. — Where defendant's car nearly sideswiped driver's car, driver's statement "he has a gun" offered by passenger was a spontaneous reaction that occurred while declarant was under the stress of this startling experience without the opportunity to reflect on what he was seeing or to fabricate his statement before speaking, and was properly admitted as an excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Gainey, 343 N.C. 79, 468 S.E.2d 227 (1996).

Police Report. — In a case involving negligence of defendant leading to theft of jewelry samples from car trunk, police investigative report was properly received for the limited purpose of showing that a report of the theft was made under § 8C-1, Rule 801, and was also admissible as substantive evidence under this rule as a present sense impression and an excited utterance. Southern Watch Supply Co. v. Regal Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 82 N.C. App. 21, 345 S.E.2d 453 (1986).

Statements Held Not Excited Utterances. — In prosecution on two counts of first degree sexual offense (by anal and genital penetration) and one count of taking indecent liberties with a minor child the statements of out-of-court declarants, classmates of five year old victim, to their mothers — the second level of hearsay contained in the testimony of the mothers — did not fall within the "excited utterance" exception to the hearsay rule; admission of those statements into evidence as "excited utterances" was improper. State v. Thomas, 119 N.C. App. 708, 460 S.E.2d 349 (1995).

Statement by defendant that he had not shot anyone did not meet the excited utterance exception as girlfriend's questioning comment to defendant that she heard he had shot someone was not a sufficiently startling event, and defendant's response could not be considered spontaneous coming five hours after the event. State v. Jackson, 340 N.C. 301, 457 S.E.2d 862 (1995).

IV. MENTAL, EMOTIONAL OR PHYSICAL CONDITION.

Where Evidence Showing Victim's State of Mind Is Admissible. — Evidence tending to show the state of mind of the victim is admissible as long as the declarant's state of mind is relevant to the case. State v. Meekins, 326 N.C. 689, 392 S.E.2d 346 (1990), cert. denied, 334 N.C. 625, 435 S.E.2d 348 (1993), 511 U.S. 1008, 114 S. Ct. 1378, 128 L. Ed. 2d 54 (1994).

Rape victim's state of mind in hospital trauma room was relevant to the issue of whether sexual intercourse was committed by force and against her will. Her statements that she was afraid of the defendant were therefore admissible. State v. Locklear, 320 N.C. 754, 360 S.E.2d 682 (1987).

Statement of Intent to Engage in Future Act. — Subdivision (3) of this rule allows the admission of a hearsay statement of a then-existing intent to engage in a future act. State v. McElrath, 322 N.C. 1, 366 S.E.2d 442 (1988); State v. Taylor, 332 N.C. 372, 420 S.E.2d 414 (1992).

A cellmate's testimony that he had overheard his cellmate plan to frame defendant for a double murder was admissible to show the cellmate's present intent to commit a future act. State v. Rivera, 350 N.C. 285, 514 S.E.2d 720 (1999).

This rule allows the admission of a hearsay statement of a then-existing intent to engage in a future act; therefore, witness's testimony as to other individual's declaration that he wanted to go rob service station was admissible as evidence of that individual's then-existing intent to engage in a future act. State v. Sneed, 327 N.C. 266, 393 S.E.2d 531 (1990).

Subdivision (3) of this rule does not contain a requirement that the declarant's statement must be closely related in time to the future act intended. A review of the cases interpreting subdivision (3) of this rule does not reveal that any such requirement has been read into the statute. State v. Taylor, 332 N.C. 372, 420 S.E.2d 414 (1992).

An inmate's statement to another inmate that he was going to approach defendant about straightening out victim's debt was admissible, under this rule, as evidence of his then-existing intent to engage in a future act. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Failure of the trial court to admit or exclude evidence tending to show a declarant's state of mind will not result in the granting of a new trial absent a showing by defendant that a reasonable possibility exists that a different result would have been reached if the error had not been committed. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

Testimony Offered to Prove Fact Remembered. — The proffered hearsay statement of a child pertained to a memory of the previous day's events and was offered solely for the purpose of proving such events, thus, it was properly excluded by subdivision (3) of this rule. In re Hayden, 96 N.C. App. 77, 384 S.E.2d 558 (1989).

Statement of Belief to Prove Fact Believed. — Defendant could not introduce into evidence a statement allegedly made by murder victim whereby victim stated to her mother that she was going to get killed if "the people" ever caught up with her, as the statement, if uttered, did not constitute a then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation or physical condition, but was plainly a statement of belief to prove the fact believed. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of State v. Simmons, 51 N.C. 21 (1858).

Statements That Merely Recite Facts. — Testimony that victim said he knew the defendant had stabbed someone seventeen times was inadmissible under this section, because the witness did not testify as to an actual statement of emotion by the victim but rather as to her opinion that he acted frightened. State v. Lesane, 137 N.C. App. 234, 528 S.E.2d 37 (2000).

Statement of Intent to Disinherit. — Testimony by defendant's brother that victim told him he would not give defendant a trailer unless he straightened up, was admissible under the state of mind exception since victim's state of mind regarding his intention to disinherit defendant was relevant to the issue of defendant's motive. State v. Greene, 324 N.C. 1, 376 S.E.2d 430 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of 291 N.C. 253, 230 S.E.2d 390 (1976).

Telephone Message. — The trial court did not commit reversible error in its admission into evidence of a telephone message written by victim's next-door neighbor, to victim's roommate, even though the court admitted the statement under the residual hearsay exception found in subdivision (24) of this rule when the court should have admitted it under subdivision (3) as a statement of intent to engage in a future act. State v. McElrath, 322 N.C. 1, 366 S.E.2d 442 (1988).

Statements in victim's diary were not statements of her state of mind but were merely a recitation of facts which described various events; thus, the diary entry was not admissible under the state-of-mind hearsay exception. State v. Hardy, 339 N.C. 207, 451 S.E.2d 600 (1994).

Statement murder victim made to witnesses was admissible as relevant state of mind testimony tending to explain and refute defendant's claims of self-defense and accident. State v. Crawford, 344 N.C. 65, 472 S.E.2d 920 (1996).

A murder victim's statements were admissible in the husband's murder trial under the state of mind exception, where the victim made statements to witnesses that the defendant had threatened to kill her, that he had threatened to make her the next Nicole Simpson, and that he urinated on the kitchen floor and used the victim's hair to wipe it up, because the statements shed light on the victim's state of mind, her emotions, and her physical condition. State v. Hayes, 130 N.C. App. 154, 502 S.E.2d 853 (1998), aff'd, 350 N.C. 79, 511 S.E.2d 302 (1999).

The murder victim's statements to witnesses about his marital and financial difficulties were admissible under the state of mind exception during his wife's murder prosecution, since the statements were not a mere recitation of facts but rebutted the wife's contention that she and the victim had a loving and compassionate relationship. State v. Brown, 350 N.C. 193, 513 S.E.2d 57 (1999).

Evidence as to the murder victim's hearsay statements about her fear of the defendant was admissible under the state of mind hearsay exception. State v. Childers, 131 N.C. App. 465, 508 S.E.2d 323 (1998).

Victim's prior statements were properly admitted to show her state of mind before she was murdered. State v. Kimble, 140 N.C. App. 153, 535 S.E.2d 882 (2000).

Victim's recorded statement bearing directly on his relationship with the defendant at about the time she was alleged to have killed him, which tended to show that he was afraid of the defendant, to disapprove the normal, loving relationship that the defendant contended existed between the two, and to refute any likelihood that he would have slept with the defendant with a loaded and cocked semi-automatic pistol under his pillow, and which corroborated at least one motive for the murder, i.e., the defendant's borrowing money, without the victim's knowledge, which she could not repay, was admissible under subdivision (3) of this rule as evidence tending to show the victim's state of mind, and did not violate defendant's constitutional right of confrontation. State v. Stager, 329 N.C. 278, 406 S.E.2d 876 (1991).

Statement of State of Mind as to Relationship with Defendant. — Testimony regarding murder victim's statements that victim had refused to allow defendant to move in with him and victim knew defendant did not like that were admissible as evidence of victim's state of mind as to his relationship with the defendant. State v. Patterson, — N.C. App. —, 552 S.E.2d 246, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 856 (2001).

Testimony As To Victim's Fear of the Defendant. — The admission of hearsay statements did not violate the defendant's Confrontation Clause rights as set forth in the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution where the testimony was accompanied by descriptions of the victim's emotions or mental state. Statements unaccompanied by such description, such as statements regarding past factual events, were wrongly admitted but no prejudice resulted to the defendant. State v. Lathan, 138 N.C. App. 234, 530 S.E.2d 615 (2000).

The trial court's admission of the victim's testimony from a domestic violence protective order hearing did not violate his right to confront the witness against him, nor did it violate § 8C-1, Rules 403, 404(b), or 803(3), where the hearsay statements constituted, and were admissible as, statements of the declarant's then-existing mental, emotional, or physical condition and where their probative value outweighed their prejudicial effect. State v. Thibodeaux, 352 N.C. 570, 532 S.E.2d 797 (2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1155, 121 S. Ct. 1106, 148 L. Ed. 2d 976 (2001).

Testimony Held Admissible. — Testimony of witnesses that 10-year-old murder victim said she planned to go fishing with "a nice gray-haired man" indicated a clear intent to do a future act, and were admissible under subdivision (3) of this rule as evidence of victim's mental or emotional condition at the time she made the statements. State v. Coffey, 326 N.C. 268, 389 S.E.2d 48 (1990), cert. denied, — N.C. —, 421 S.E.2d 360 (1992).

Conversation between murder victim and her mother wherein victim stated that she had taken out a child support warrant against defendant and had sought advice from an attorney regarding obtaining custody of her children was admissible as a statement of then existing mental or emotional conditions under subdivision (3) of this rule on the date she disappeared. State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Murder victim's statement that she planned to go to see a doctor about a place on her chest where "he" had hit her was a hearsay statement made admissible into evidence by subdivision (3) of this rule, as it went directly to victim's state of mind, emotional status and physical condition on the very date of her disappearance. State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Admission into evidence in murder trial of the scope of a conversation between victim and paralegal three weeks before the murder, to the effect that victim told paralegal about several occasions on which defendant had beaten her in the past and that defendant had threatened to kill her if she tried to take back her children from him, and that paralegal's impression was that victim appeared terrified during the interview was proper under subdivision (3) of this rule as the conversation related directly to victim's existing state of mind and emotional condition. State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Victim's statements to witnesses regarding threats made by defendant on her life and how these threats affected her were admissible under the state-of-mind exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Lynch, 327 N.C. 210, 393 S.E.2d 811 (1990).

Murder victim's statements to her son and sister regarding defendant's threat revealed her then-existing fear of defendant, further explaining why she did not want defendant visiting her home. The prohibition of visits to the home by the defendant was relevant to prove defendant's state of mind, that is, that he knew he was entering the victim's home without consent. State v. Faucette, 326 N.C. 676, 392 S.E.2d 71 (1990).

Testimony concerning murder victim's fear, both shortly after being with defendant and while in the defendant's presence, was relevant, more probative than prejudicial, and therefore admissible. State v. Wynne, 329 N.C. 507, 406 S.E.2d 812 (1991).

Statements made by an alleged victim of a sexual assault during the course of diagnosis by her therapist as a sexually abused child and during her treatment were properly admitted by the trial court under subdivision (4) of this rule. State v. Rogers, 109 N.C. App. 491, 428 S.E.2d 220, cert. denied, 334 N.C. 625, 435 S.E.2d 348 (1993), 511 U.S. 1008, 114 S. Ct. 1378, 128 L. Ed. 2d 54, rehearing denied, 511 U.S. 1102, 114 S. Ct. 1875 (1994).

Defendant's statement to his sister that he was going to meet two guys to buy stolen merchandise was admissible under subsection (3) as a statement of his then-existing intent to engage in a future act. State v. Bryant, 337 N.C. 298, 446 S.E.2d 71 (1994).

Statements made by the victim shortly before the victim's death that defendant was "very, very jealous," that "she was thinking about breaking up with him," and that "she was tired of his junk" were admissible, under the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Jones, 337 N.C. 198, 446 S.E.2d 32 (1994).

Statement by a witness testifying as to the events leading up to shooting was properly admitted pursuant to subsection (3), as evidence of the alleged threats made by defendant to explain the victim's then-existing mental and emotional state. State v. Nixon, 117 N.C. App. 141, 450 S.E.2d 562 (1994).

Murder victim's statements that his marriage "wasn't getting along like it should" and that he was leaving were statements indicating his mental condition at the time they were made and were admissible to rebut defendant's earlier testimony characterizing her marital relationship with the victim as "fine" and "excellent." State v. Lambert, 341 N.C. 36, 460 S.E.2d 123 (1995).

Uncommunicated threats made by decedents against defendant were hearsay but were admissible as state of mind expressions of decedents. State v. Ransome, 342 N.C. 847, 467 S.E.2d 404 (1996).

Victim's statements to his sister that he was depressed, lonely, and upset about his finances were statements indicating his mental condition at the time they were made and were not merely a recitation of facts and were admissible under subsection (3) of this Rule. State v. Westbrooks, 345 N.C. 43, 478 S.E.2d 483 (1996).

Victim's statements to his father about his feelings towards his marriage to the defendant expressed the victim's state of mind. State v. Westbrooks, 345 N.C. 43, 478 S.E.2d 483 (1996).

The victim's state of mind regarding his intention not to give defendant the money defendant wanted was relevant to the issue of defendant's motive. State v. Miller, 344 N.C. 658, 477 S.E.2d 915 (1996).

Victim's statements that she was concerned that defendant was stealing money from the sale of her property and that she planned to get an injunction against defendant to collect the money fell within the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Bishop, 346 N.C. 365, 488 S.E.2d 769 (1997).

The murder victim's statements that she intended to go away for the summer and separate from her husband reflected her state of mind and therefore were admissible in the husband's murder trial to show a motive for the killing. State v. Murillo, 349 N.C. 573, 509 S.E.2d 752 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 103, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

Witnesses' testimony regarding victim's/wife's prior statements was admissible to show her state of mind, despite the fact that the statements also contained descriptions of factual events. State v. Wilds, 130 N.C. App. 195, 515 S.E.2d 466 (1999).

Hearsay objections in capital murder case were properly overruled since statements reflected victim's state of mind and were therefore admissible under this rule. State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

Statements made by victim approximately six months prior to murder, to the effect that she and defendant were not getting along well, that she no longer wanted to be married, that if defendant had not left by May, 1997, she would "push the issue" for him to leave, that defendant told her that one day he would come home and find her dead with her throat cut, and that she believed defendant wanted her to sell her house so he could get some of her money, were admissible under this rule. State v. Aldridge, 139 N.C. App. 706, 534 S.E.2d 629 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 269, 546 S.E.2d 114 (2000).

Murder victim's statements about her frustration with the defendant and her intent to end their marriage were properly introduced into evidence since such statements indicated the victim's mental condition at the time the statements were made and were not merely a recitation of facts, and also related directly to circumstances giving rise to a potential confrontation with the defendant. State v. King, 353 N.C. 457, 546 S.E.2d 570 (2001).

Evidence Improperly Excluded. — Trial court erred in excluding testimony regarding threats made by decedents against defendant where defendant relied upon the theory of self-defense. State v. Ransome, 342 N.C. 847, 467 S.E.2d 404 (1996).

Testimony of witness about telephone conversation with victim which tended to show victim's state of mind was properly admitted. State v. Burke, 343 N.C. 129, 469 S.E.2d 901 (1996).

V. STATEMENTS FOR DIAGNOSIS OR TREATMENT.

Diagnosis for Purpose of Treatment. — The diagnosis for which the exception to the hearsay rule under subdivision (4) of this rule applies should be diagnosis for the purpose of treating a disease. State v. Stafford, 77 N.C. App. 19, 334 S.E.2d 799, writ allowed, 314 N.C. 673, 335 S.E.2d 500 (1985), aff'd, 317 N.C. 568, 346 S.E.2d 463 (1986).

Testimony is only admissible under the medical diagnosis or treatment exception when two inquiries are satisfied: first, the declarant intended to make the statements in order to obtain medical diagnosis or treatment; second, the declarant's statements were reasonably pertinent to medical diagnosis or treatment. Because the record indicated that no one explained to an alleged child sexual abuse victim the importance of truthful answers or the medical purpose for the interview, and because the interview took place in a non-medical environment, and the record did not demonstrate that the victim possessed the requisite intent, the testimony was not admissible. State v. Hinnant, 351 N.C. 277, 523 S.E.2d 663 (2000).

The basis for allowing admission of statements for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment as exceptions to the hearsay rule is that such statements are inherently trustworthy and reliable, for the reason that the patient has an interest in telling or relaying to medical personnel as accurately as possible the cause for the patient's condition. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Statements made for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment are inherently trustworthy and reliable because the patient is motivated to tell the truth in order to receive proper diagnosis or treatment. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

Statements made for the purpose of medical diagnosis and treatment, because of their inherent reliability, are admissible under an exception to the hearsay rule. Statements made to a physician in preparation for trial, however, are considered to be less reliable and are inadmissible hearsay. Williams v. Williams, 91 N.C. App. 469, 372 S.E.2d 310 (1988).

Subdivision (4) of this rule does not limit the permissible testifying recipient of the statement to a treating physician, so long as the purpose of the declarant's statement is to obtain medical treatment for himself. Donavant v. Hudspeth, 318 N.C. 1, 347 S.E.2d 797 (1986).

Subjective record plaintiff kept of her pain fell under the hearsay exception for statements for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment under subsection (4) of this rule. Reed v. Abrahamson, 108 N.C. App. 301, 423 S.E.2d 491 (1992), cert. denied, 333 N.C. 463, 427 S.E.2d 624 (1993).

Statements Inadmissible under This Exception May Be Admissible for Some Other Reason. — While the testimony of the victim's mother—that the victim had explained that defendant touched her in her "private part," was "rubbing her hard," and that it hurt—was improperly admitted under this rule because the record revealed no evidence that the victim made these statements to her mother with the understanding that they would lead to medical treatment, such testimony was admissible to corroborate the victim's trial testimony or as an excited utterance. State v. McGraw, 137 N.C. App. 726, 529 S.E.2d 493 (2000).

Statements of the defendant's mother and wife were inadmissible under this rule because only the statements of the person being diagnosed or treated are excepted from the prohibition against hearsay. State v. Jones, 339 N.C. 114, 451 S.E.2d 826 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1169, 115 S. Ct. 2634, 132 L. Ed. 2d 873, reh'g denied, 515 U.S. 1183, 116 S. Ct. 32, 132 L. Ed. 2d 913 (1995).

Rape victim's statements to medical personnel were properly admissible under subdivision (4), where they were made to medical personnel for the purpose of diagnosis and treatment. State v. Jackson, 320 N.C. 452, 358 S.E.2d 679 (1987).

In a second-degree rape case, where doctor testified he asked the victim if "anything" was put inside her and the victim responded, "Yes", the victim's statements to the doctor were made for the purpose of diagnosis and treatment and were reasonably pertinent to the doctor's diagnosis and treatment; therefore, the question and answer were permitted as an exception to the general hearsay rule. State v. Summers, 92 N.C. App. 453, 374 S.E.2d 631 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 341, 378 S.E.2d 806 (1989).

A child sexual abuse victim's statements to a nurse, social worker, and physician at a hospital were admissible as statements made for the purpose of medical diagnosis where the statements were made soon after the abuse and the child testified that she went to the hospital because defendant "hurt her privacy." State v. Stancil, — N.C. App. —, 552 S.E.2d 212, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 860 (2001).

Statements to Rape Task Force Volunteers. — The hearsay exception under subdivision (4) of this rule was not created to except from the operation of the hearsay rule statements made to persons acting in the capacity of Rape Task Force Volunteers at a time after the victims had already reached the hospital and had received medical treatment and diagnosis. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Statement Six Weeks After Initial Hospitalization. — Statement made by victim to her doctor, identifying her assailant, made at least six weeks after her initial admission to the hospital for treatment, could not have been pertinent to the treatment of her injuries, and was not, therefore, admissible pursuant to subdivision (4) of this rule. State v. Hollingsworth, 78 N.C. App. 578, 337 S.E.2d 674 (1985).

Statements of Child Victim of Sexual Abuse to Physician. — Statements of child victim of sexual abuse were pertinent to diagnosis and treatment as they suggested to physician the nature of the problem, in which, in turn, dictated the type of examination she performed for diagnostic purposes, and additionally, the victim's identification of the defendant as perpetrator was pertinent to continued treatment of victim's possible psychological and emotional problems resulting from the rape. Thus, the victim's statements to the physician were properly admitted under subsection (4) of this rule. State v. Aguallo, 318 N.C. 590, 350 S.E.2d 76 (1986).

In case where defendant was convicted of a sexual offense with a three-year-old female, trial court properly admitted doctor's testimony as to the out-of-court statements of the child pursuant to subdivision (4) of this rule; although doctor never treated the child, the doctor used the statements of the child in making his diagnosis and in recommending follow-up visits with another doctor and, while doctor's examination of the child did prepare him for his testimony at trial, it was clearly not the sole purpose for the examination. In re Lucas, 94 N.C. App. 442, 380 S.E.2d 563 (1989).

Statements of Child Victim of Sexual Abuse to Psychiatrist. — The defendant, convicted by a jury on one count of taking indecent liberties with a minor, was entitled to a new trial where the record on appeal failed to show that the child had a treatment motive when she told a psychiatrist about the defendant's conduct, especially considering that the interview took place in a "child-friendly" room that contained only child-sized furniture and lots of toys, an environment which, according to the Alabama Supreme Court, does not emphasize the need for honesty, and where none of the child's statements about the defendant was spontaneous; in fact, they lacked inherent reliability because of the nature of the psychiatrist's leading questions, the lack of physical evidence of abuse, and where the psychiatrist's testimony was treated as substantive, not corroborative. State v. Bates, 140 N.C. App. 743, 538 S.E.2d 597 (2000).

Statements Made By a Child Abuse Victim to Health Care Professional. — Hearsay testimony concerning statements made by a child to a licensed psychological associate during an evaluation interview by a medical center's child sexual abuse team did not violate the defendant's confrontation rights, where the child was found incompetent to testify, and the statements were found to be trustworthy in that they were made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment, and there was no evidence that law enforcement officials were involved in the decision to evaluate the child. State v. Waddell, 130 N.C. App. 488, 504 S.E.2d 84 (1998), aff'd in part and modified in part, 351 N.C. 413, 527 S.E.2d 644 (2000).

Examining doctor's testimony as to what three and a half year old victim told him, including identification of defendant as the perpetrator of sexual offenses, fell within the statutory exception to the hearsay rule created for statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. The doctor not only needed to know who the perpetrator was in order to plan for the psychological treatment of the victim, but also to comply with the North Carolina child abuse reporting and treatment statutes. State v. Gregory, 78 N.C. App. 565, 338 S.E.2d 110 (1985), aff'd, 900 F.2d 705 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 879, 111 S. Ct. 211, 112 L. Ed. 2d 171 (1990).

Statements of Child Victims to Grandmother. — In prosecution for rape of four- and five-year-old victims, grandmother's testimony regarding her conversations with the victims, including the identification of the defendant as the assailant, resulting in their being examined, diagnosed, and treated at the hospital, was properly admitted as substantive evidence pursuant to the hearsay exception of subdivision (4) of this rule, and as an excited utterance under subdivision (2). State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Statements of Child Victim to Mother. — In child abuse case where mother testified that she took child to see doctor because child complained that her "bottom" hurt and because child had used a sexually explicit four letter word, the doctor actually examined child on visit; therefore, mother's testimony of what she recounted to the doctor was admissible under subdivision (4) of this rule. State v. Britt, 93 N.C. App. 126, 377 S.E.2d 79 (1989), overruled on other grounds, State v. Hartness, 326 N.C. 561, 391 S.E.2d 177 (1990), appeal dismissed, 324 N.C. 544, 380 S.E.2d 772 (1989).

Mother's testimony regarding her conversations with her child was properly admitted as substantive evidence pursuant to subdivision (4) of this rule, where the statements of the child to the mother regarding what defendant allegedly did to her resulted in the child receiving, within 14 days, medical attention at a local hospital, and a subsequent evaluation by doctor, and the child's statements were pertinent to diagnosis and treatment as they suggested to the doctors the nature of the problem which in turn directed the doctors in their examination of the child. In re Lucas, 94 N.C. App. 442, 380 S.E.2d 563 (1989).

A child sexual abuse victim's statements to her mother and to a police officer were admissible under the excited utterance and existing mental, emotional, and physical condition exceptions to the hearsay rule. State v. Hinnant, 131 N.C. App. 591, 508 S.E.2d 537 (1998).

Four-year-old victim's statements to social worker and coordinator and child evaluator for the Duke Child Protection Team were made for the purpose of medical diagnosis, and were properly admitted under this exception. State v. Jones, 89 N.C. App. 584, 367 S.E.2d 139 (1988).

The testimony of a social worker and coordinator and child evaluator for Child Protection Team was properly admitted as substantive evidence under Rule 803(4). State v. Figured, 116 N.C. App. 1, 446 S.E.2d 838 (1994), cert. denied, 339 N.C. 617, 454 S.E.2d 261 (1995).

Statements Made to Expert in Pediatric Social Work. — On the facts, statements made by four year old victim to expert in pediatric social work were for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment, so as to permit admission of testimony that victim told her that juvenile respondent anally penetrated her as a statement for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment within the meaning of this rule. In re J.A., 103 N.C. App. 720, 407 S.E.2d 873 (1991).

Statements Made in Preparing "Rape Trauma Syndrome" Theory. — Testimony of pediatrician regarding statements of the prosecuting witness concerning symptoms she had experienced months earlier, which symptoms he indicated fulfilled some of the criteria for "rape trauma syndrome," was not admissible in defendant's rape trial, where witness' statements were made not for purposes of diagnosis or treatment, but for the purpose of preparing and presenting the State's "rape trauma syndrome" theory at trial. State v. Stafford, 317 N.C. 568, 346 S.E.2d 463 (1986).

Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder. — For case allowing admission of testimony by psychologist on post-traumatic stress disorder suffered by victim, and distinguishing State v. Stafford, 317 N.C. 568, 346 S.E.2d 463 (1986), see State v. Strickland, 96 N.C. App. 642, 387 S.E.2d 62 (1990).

A statement made by one physician to another regarding the nontestifying physician's observations of the patient and statements by yet a third physician regarding his concerns about the patient's condition did not come within the hearsay exception of statements made by a patient to a treating physician. Donavant v. Hudspeth, 318 N.C. 1, 347 S.E.2d 797 (1986) (decided under law in effect prior to this chapter).

Information Relied on by Physician. — A physician, as an expert witness, may render his opinion, including a diagnosis, based either on personal knowledge or observation or on information supplied to him by others, including the patient, if the information is inherently reliable, even though such information is independently admissible into evidence; and if the expert's opinion is admissible, the expert may testify to the information he relied upon in forming it, for the purpose of showing the basis of the opinion. State v. Spangler, 314 N.C. 374, 333 S.E.2d 722 (1985).

Statements made by a victim of child sexual abuse to a psychologist during the course of diagnosis and treatment are admissible. State v. Bullock, 320 N.C. 780, 360 S.E.2d 689 (1987).

Statements made by children to a psychologist counselling them were admissible in custody proceeding as statements made to a psychologist for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. Best v. Best, 81 N.C. App. 337, 344 S.E.2d 363 (1986), overruled on other grounds, Petersen v. Rowe, 337 N.C. 397, 445 S.E.2d 901 (1994).

Statements of Mentally Retarded Victim to Psychologist. — In a prosecution for rape and sexual offense committed against a mentally retarded female, drawings and statements made by the prosecuting witness during interview with psychologist were held admissible. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

Use of Anatomical Dolls to Illustrate Testimony. — The courts of this State have allowed the use of anatomical dolls in sexual abuse cases to illustrate the testimony of child witnesses since the practice is wholly consistent with existing rules governing the use of photographs and other items to illustrate testimony and it conveys the information sought to be elicited, while it permits the child to use a familiar item, thereby making him more comfortable. State v. Chandler, 324 N.C. 172, 376 S.E.2d 728 (1989).

Even though dolls were used to illustrate the testimony of a social worker rather than the abused children, the evidence was still admissible; the demonstration illustrated the social worker's testimony as to the manner in which the children communicated accounts of sexual abuse, and the social worker's demonstration of what she observed each child do with the dolls also corroborated the testimony of each child. State v. Chandler, 324 N.C. 172, 376 S.E.2d 728 (1989).

Statements Held Admissible. — Hearsay statements made to social workers and resulting in medical treatment and diagnosis were properly allowed by trial court. State v. Crumbley, 135 N.C. App. 59, 519 S.E.2d 94 (1999).

Statements Not Admissible. — Defendant's statements to a psychiatrist who saw defendant less than two months before trial and nine months after the killing, and whose interview with defendant was arranged by defense counsel, were not admissible. State v. Harris, 338 N.C. 211, 449 S.E.2d 462 (1994).

The admission of hearsay statements concerning the rape of defendant's stepdaughter as substantive evidence under this section was error entitling him to a new trial where: the record was devoid of evidence that the victim understood she was making the statements for medical purposes, or that the medical purpose of the examination and importance of truthful answers were adequately explained to her; where the two doctors saw her almost three months after her initial examination; and the nurse's hearsay testimony was the only direct evidence of actual penetration. State v. Watts, 141 N.C. App. 104, 539 S.E.2d 37 (2000).

Exclusion Held Harmless. — Trial court's decision to prevent defendant's expert from relating statements made by defendant to him and used by him to form the basis of his expert opinion of defendant's mental state at the time of the homicide, if an abuse of discretion, was harmless error, since the same information was related in answers given by the expert to other questions. State v. Holston, 134 N.C. App. 599, 518 S.E.2d 216 (1999).

VI. RECORDED RECOLLECTION.

Subdivision (5) is a codification of the recorded past recollection rule that existed when the Rules of Evidence were adopted. State v. Nickerson, 320 N.C. 603, 359 S.E.2d 760 (1987).

Used to Refresh Recollection or Impeachment. — Where prior statements were used either to refresh the witnesses' recollections, or to impeach portions of his courtroom testimony which were inconsistent with them, use of the statements was proper. State v. Demery, 113 N.C. App. 58, 437 S.E.2d 704 (1993).

Improperly Admitted Statement Resulted in New Trial. — Defendant was entitled to yet another new trial where a witness' purported summary, allegedly written by an investigating officer who was not called as a witness by the State, was improperly and prejudicially admitted into evidence although it was not admissible as a recorded recollection under subdivision (5) of this rule, did not refresh the witness' recollection, was not properly used to impeach her under Rule 607, and the witness, in fact, objected to parts of the statement. State v. Spinks, 136 N.C. App. 153, 523 S.E.2d 129 (1999).

Record Not Prepared According to Requirements in Subdivision (5) May Still Be Used to Refresh Memory. — In an action to remove the executor of an estate, where the court clerk independently recalled that she had awarded attorneys' fees for services performed by the executor, the clerk was allowed to refresh her memory as to specific services with a list she had prepared after reviewing the estate file and the answer filed by the executor, and there was no abuse of discretion by the judge's refusal to strike the clerk's testimony. Matthews v. Watkins, 91 N.C. App. 640, 373 S.E.2d 133 (1988), aff'd, 324 N.C. 541, 379 S.E.2d 857 (1989).

Where victim testified that when she wrote letter implicating defendant, it did not correctly reflect her knowledge of the events, and she did not know facts that she had forgotten by the time of the trial, the trial court should not have admitted the letter into evidence as a recorded recollection. State v. Hollingsworth, 78 N.C. App. 578, 337 S.E.2d 674 (1985).

Statement Made to Police over Two Hours And Forty Minutes After Crime. — A written statement, given by the victim to a police officer at the hospital two hours and forty-five minutes after the argument with the defendant, was a prior consistent statement that the trial court properly admitted for the limited purpose of corroborating her in-court testimony and was properly read aloud in court (with appropriate portions redacted as requested by defense counsel) although it was not identical to her in-court testimony. State v. Guice, 141 N.C. App. 177, 541 S.E.2d 474 (2000), cert. dismissed, 353 N.C. 731, 551 S.E.2d 112 (2001).

Cellmate's Statements. — Trial judge properly allowed written statements by cellmate to be read to jurors, where witness gave the statements within a reasonable time of having heard them and testified that they were accurate when given, even though he was unable at trial to recall what he knew and said. State v. Leggett, 135 N.C. App. 168, 519 S.E.2d 328 (1999).

VII. RECORDS OF REGULARLY CONDUCTED ACTIVITY.

Constitutionality. — The recorded recollection exception codified under this rule is firmly rooted and not a violation of defendant's constitutional right of confrontation. State v. Leggett, 135 N.C. App. 168, 519 S.E.2d 328 (1999).

"Other qualified witness" has been construed to mean a witness who is familiar with the business entries and the system under which they are made. State v. Miller, 80 N.C. App. 425, 342 S.E.2d 553.

Witness Qualified Despite Lack of Personal Knowledge About Method Used in Obtaining Data. — Defendant-employer's corporate safety specialist's knowledge of and relationship to air sample tests performed for the defendant-employer by a private laboratory were sufficient to qualify him as a "qualified other witness" who could introduce that data under subdivision (6) of this rule; even though the specialist was not personally knowledgeable about the scientific method used in obtaining the data, he was familiar with the system used by his company in obtaining tests and filing the results with his office. Barber v.

Babcock & Wilcox Constr. Co., 98 N.C. App. 203, 390 S.E.2d 341 (1990), rev'd on other grounds on rehearing, 101 N.C. App. 564, 400 S.E.2d 735.

Medical Records. — Subsection (6) explicitly permits use of a record custodian's testimony to establish a foundation for admission of the records; it does not require that this foundation be established by a "medical expert" as sought by defendant; thus, medical records were properly admitted. State v. Woods, 126 N.C. App. 581, 486 S.E.2d 255 (1997).

Hospital Records. — Absent an allegation supported by proof that hospital routine was in some manner deviated from, the entries in a patient's permanent hospital record are inherently reliable and admissible under the business records exception upon authentication by the proponent. State v. Miller, 80 N.C. App. 425, 342 S.E.2d 553, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 711, 347 S.E.2d 448 (1986).

An affidavit from the director of medical records of the hospital stating that the records were being sent by certified mail in response to a subpoena, that the records were authentic copies, and that they were made in the course of business at or near the time of the acts recorded satisfied the requirements of § 8C-1-803(6). Chamberlain v. Thames, 131 N.C. App. 705, 509 S.E.2d 443 (1998).

When Medical Records Must Be Made. — For purposes of the medical records exception, it is not necessary that the notes, records or memoranda be made at or near the time of the accident, but that they be made at or near the time of the treatment rendered to plaintiff. Chamberlain v. Thames, 131 N.C. App. 705, 509 S.E.2d 443 (1998).

Blood Test Results. — The results of defendant driver's blood test, even though hearsay, are nonetheless admissible if they fall within the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Business records are defined to include the records of hospitals. State v. Miller, 80 N.C. App. 425, 342 S.E.2d 553, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 711, 347 S.E.2d 448 (1986).

Authentication of blood test results was not undermined because the person who actually analyzed the blood in the laboratory was not present to testify as a witness. State v. Miller, 80 N.C. App. 425, 342 S.E.2d 553, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 711, 347 S.E.2d 448 (1986).

Highway Accident Reports. — Under subdivision (6) of this rule, highway accident reports may be admissible as a business records exception to the hearsay rule. To be admissible, such reports must be authenticated by their writer, prepared at or near the time of the acts reported, by or from information transmitted by a person with knowledge of the acts, and kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity, with such being a regular practice of that business activity, unless the circumstances surrounding the report indicate a lack of trustworthiness. Wentz v. Unifi, Inc., 89 N.C. App. 33, 365 S.E.2d 198, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 610, 370 S.E.2d 257 (1988).

The trial court properly admitted sections of an authenticated police report, prepared in the regular course of business, containing accident information about a hit-and-run vehicle because the record indicated that the information about that car's positioning, etc. was obtained from witnesses with "first-hand knowledge" and because the defendant did not initially object to the report's contents. Nunnery v. Baucom, 135 N.C. App. 556, 521 S.E.2d 479 (1999).

A federal firearms form which was filled out by defendant and the salesman who sold defendant the murder weapon was clearly admissible under subdivision (6) of this rule. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 125, 362 S.E.2d 513 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2835, 100 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1988).

Records Prepared Ante Litem Motam. — Although a worksheet evidencing lab test results was produced after defendant's arrest, where none of the technicians performing the tests knew of the charges against defendant, the worksheet was prepared ante litem motam for purposes of admission under the business records exception. State v. Deanes, 323 N.C. 508, 374 S.E.2d 249 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1101, 109 S. Ct. 2455, 104 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1989).

Pretrial Release Form. — Where pretrial release officer testified about where correspondence directed to the defendant was sent while defendant was on pretrial release, defendant asserted that because witness was not present when defendant filled in the form and was not the record keeper for the pretrial release office, the witness' testimony was inadmissible hearsay; however, witness' testimony was admissible under the exception to the hearsay rule permitting admission of business records; the witness testified that the record was kept in the ordinary course of the pretrial release office's business, and that while she was not the records custodian for the entire pretrial release office, she had custody and control over defendant's file. State v. Marshall, 94 N.C. App. 20, 380 S.E.2d 360, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 325 N.C. 275, 384 S.E.2d 526 (1989).

Sales Ticket. — Sales ticket and testimony concerning the purchase of ammunition from store was admissible under the business records exception. State v. Ligon, 332 N.C. 224, 420 S.E.2d 136 (1992).

Reservation deposit receipts, photographic copies of checks written to condominium development corporation by potential purchasers as deposits, and receipts for public offering statements signed by the purchaser and sales person were admissible in trial for embezzlement pursuant to the business records exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Rupe, 109 N.C. App. 601, 428 S.E.2d 480 (1993).

Business Records Held Admissible. — Where business records involved evidence of plaintiff's damages as a result of whitened walnut furniture, where records were made in the usual course of plaintiff's business and were made contemporaneously with the occurrences of situations involving the damaged furniture, and where the evidence was identified through the testimony of a witness familiar with the business entries and the system under which they were made and who could have also authenticated the records, the trial court's ruling that this evidence was inadmissible was in error. Steelcase, Inc. v. Lilly Co., 93 N.C. App. 697, 379 S.E.2d 40, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 276, 384 S.E.2d 530 (1989).

Where a witness testified that records were public, kept in the ordinary course of business and prepared under his personal supervision at or near the time of the events depicted in the documents, the witness should have been permitted to testify about the records and their significance; however, since the records themselves were admitted into evidence, any error in refusing the witness permission to read from the records was not prejudicial to defendant. Allen v. Simmons, 99 N.C. App. 636, 394 S.E.2d 478 (1990).

VIII. PUBLIC RECORDS AND REPORTS.

Reports, etc., from Investigation Pursuant to Authority Granted by Law. — Under subdivision (8)(C) of this rule, records, reports or statements, in any form, of public offices or agencies, setting forth factual findings, although hearsay, are admissible against the State in a criminal case if they result from an investigation made pursuant to authority granted by law, unless the sources of information or other circumstances indicate a lack of trustworthiness. State v. Acklin, 317 N.C. 677, 346 S.E.2d 481 (1986).

Driver's License Records. — Instead of being error, receiving the civil part of the revocation order into evidence, to show that defendant's driver's license was revoked and he knew it, was authorized by the public records exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Woody, 102 N.C. App. 576, 402 S.E.2d 848 (1991).

Highway accident reports may be admissible as "official" reports under subdivision (8) of this rule if properly authenticated. Wentz v. Unifi, Inc., 89 N.C. App. 33, 365 S.E.2d 198, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 610, 370 S.E.2d 257 (1988).

Out-of-Court Exculpatory Statements by Defendant to Police Officer. — Subdivision (8) of this rule specifically excludes in criminal cases matters observed by police officers and other law enforcement personnel, and thus out-of-court exculpatory statements made by defendant to police officer were not admissible as public records and reports. State v. Maness, 321 N.C. 454, 364 S.E.2d 349 (1988).

Evidence in a Police Report Properly Admitted. — Testimony of police officer concerning statements made by decedent at the scene of the accident, made via police officer's investigative report, was admissible pursuant to subdivision (6) as a record of regularly conducted activity and subdivision (8) as a public record and report. Keith v. Polier, 109 N.C. App. 94, 425 S.E.2d 723 (1993).

Evidence in a Police Report Properly Excluded. — Police report containing evidence that police officer assumed that another person was the driver and that defendant was only a passenger, was not admissible under the provisions of this section since the evidence had no probative value and was therefore properly excluded. State v. Williams, 90 N.C. App. 615, 369 S.E.2d 832, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 369, 373 S.E.2d 555 (1988).

S.B.I. Reports. — In trial for first-degree rape and first-degree kidnapping, the trial court committed prejudicial error in refusing to admit laboratory reports prepared by two forensic chemists with the State Bureau of Investigation, showing that a hair examination comparison on hairs taken from the victim's head and pubic area and hairs taken from the defendant's pubic area revealed that a pubic hair found in the pubic hair combings received from the victim after the rape was microscopically different from defendant's pubic hairs, and that the semen found was not attributable to defendant. State v. Acklin, 317 N.C. 677, 346 S.E.2d 481 (1986).

National Transportation Safety Board Report. — Where National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) reports contained statements by pilots, witnesses and other non-officials who were not present to testify at trial, trial court properly exercised its discretion in excluding the hearsay portions thereof; to the extent portions were admissible independent of the report, those portions were admissible. Bolick v. Sunbird Airlines, 96 N.C. App. 443, 386 S.E.2d 76 (1989), appeal of right allowed pursuant to N.C.R.A.P., Rule 16(b) and petition denied as to additional issues, 326 N.C. 363, 389 S.E.2d 811 (1990).

Occupational Safety and Health Administration Report. — Trial court was correct to allow author of Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) report to introduce the report and discuss its findings, but not allow him to state the report's conclusion that the accident was caused by brake failure. Haymore v. Thew Shovel Co., 116 N.C. App. 40, 446 S.E.2d 865 (1994).

Undercover officer's written summaries of two drug transactions with defendant were inadmissible hearsay. State v. Harper, 96 N.C. App. 36, 384 S.E.2d 297 (1989).

Error Held Cured by Testimony. — Where plaintiff's attorney's question invited a police officer to express an opinion as to fault in an automobile accident, the question was clearly prohibited. The officer saved the situation, however, by limiting his response to repeating from his report what he had been told about what happened. Since the sum total of the officer's testimony was to disavow any assessment or attribution of fault, the error of the trial court in not sustaining plaintiff's objection was rendered nonprejudicial. Mickens v. Robinson, 103 N.C. App. 52, 404 S.E.2d 359 (1991).

Report Not Within Exception. — Report did not fall within the subsection (8)(C) exception where the report was not the result of "authority granted by law" to conduct an investigation into the murder, there was no assurance that the report contained factual findings that would be admissible, the report was not prepared for the purpose of being introduced against the State in a criminal case, and the prosecution did not have an opportunity to cross-examine the persons interviewed for the report. State v. Hunt, 339 N.C. 622, 457 S.E.2d 276 (1994).

IX. VITAL STATISTICS.

Opinions contained on death certificates are no longer barred by the hearsay rule. In order to be admissible, however, pursuant to subdivision (8) of this rule the opinion expressed must result from an investigation made pursuant to authority granted by law. Segrest v. Gillette, 331 N.C. 97, 414 S.E.2d 334 (1992), reh'g denied, 331 N.C. 97, 414 S.E.2d 334 (1992).

Exclusion of Statements on Death Certificate Held Proper. — In case brought by widow of insured to recover under life insurance policy, coroner's statement on death certificate that the gunshot wound which killed the insured was intentionally self-inflicted was not based on personal knowledge of the events which took place and could only be described as hearsay and conclusory. The admission of such a statement would thwart the fairness of the trial and in essence shift the burden of proof on the issue of the cause of death from defendant to plaintiff. Therefore, the exclusion of this statement on the death certificate was proper. Likewise, statements listing suicide as cause of death in medical examiner's report were properly excluded at trial. Drain v. United Servs. Life Ins. Co., 85 N.C. App. 174, 354 S.E.2d 269, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 630, 360 S.E.2d 85 (1987).

X. LEARNED TREATISES.

Failure to Challenge Reliability of Authority. — A party who fails to challenge the reliability of authority prima facie admissible under subdivision (18) must overcome a presumption of admissibility on appeal. State v. Oliver, 85 N.C. App. 1, 354 S.E.2d 527, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 174, 358 S.E.2d 64 (1987).

Expert Need Not Rely on Treatise. — This rule does not require that the treatise at issue must have been relied on by the expert during his direct examination. Rowan County Bd. of Educ. v. United States Gypsum Co., 103 N.C. App. 288, 407 S.E.2d 860 (1991), aff'd in part, disc. rev. improvidently granted, 332 N.C. 1, 418 S.E.2d 648 (1992).

Learned Treatise Not Shown. — Article about which the state cross-examined doctor was not established as a learned treatise and thus was not admissible as substantive evidence. State v. Lovin, 339 N.C. 695, 454 S.E.2d 229 (1995).

XI. REPUTATION AS TO BOUNDARIES OR GENERAL HISTORY.

Customs Affecting Land. — Reputation as to customs affecting land is not excluded by the hearsay rule, and such evidence is not limited to the lifetime of the witness. Broyhill v. Coppage, 79 N.C. App. 221, 339 S.E.2d 32 (1986); McFadyen v. Olive, 89 N.C. App. 545, 366 S.E.2d 544 (1988).

XII. REPUTATION AS TO CHARACTER.

Questioning by Prosecutor Upheld. — Prosecutor's cross-examination of two of defendant's character witnesses regarding a purported rumor that defendant had an affair with a certain 18-year-old girl and regarding defendant's wife's purported statement that she had "expected something was going on" between defendant and their daughter, were held proper. State v. Wall, 87 N.C. App. 621, 361 S.E.2d 900, cert. denied, 321 N.C. 479, 363 S.E.2d 72 (1987).

XIII. OTHER EXCEPTIONS.

Trials Prior to July 1, 1984. — The requirement that hearsay evidence not falling within a recognized exception to the hearsay rule and offered because of necessity and a reasonable probability of truthfulness may be resorted to only when more probative evidence on the point cannot be procured through reasonable efforts applies to hearsay evidence offered in a trial conducted prior to the effective date of the North Carolina Rules of Evidence. Donavant v. Hudspeth, 318 N.C. 1, 347 S.E.2d 797 (1986).

Subdivision (16) is identical to the federal rule and may be applied to any kind of document. Rowan County Bd. of Educ. v. United States Gypsum Co., 103 N.C. App. 288, 407 S.E.2d 860 (1991), aff'd in part, disc. rev. improvidently granted, 332 N.C. 1, 418 S.E.2d 648 (1992).

Evidence Offered Under Ancient Document Exception. — Evidence offered under this rule is subject to the general requirements applicable to hearsay exceptions, for example, firsthand knowledge by the declarant (which may appear from the statement or be inferable from circumstances) and probative value balanced against the danger of unfair prejudice. Rowan County Bd. of Educ. v. United States Gypsum Co., 103 N.C. App. 288, 407 S.E.2d 860 (1991), aff'd in part, disc. rev. improvidently granted, 332 N.C. 1, 418 S.E.2d 648 (1992).

Trial Court's Inquiry for Admission Under § 8C-1, Rule 803(24) and § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5). — Under Rules 803(24) and 804(b)(5), the trial judge is required to analyze hearsay's admissibility by undertaking a six-part inquiry; specifically, the trial court must determine the following: First, that proper notice was given of the intent to offer hearsay evidence under § 8C-1, Rules 803(24) or 804(b)(5); second, that the hearsay evidence was not specifically covered by any of the other hearsay exceptions; third, that the hearsay evidence possesses certain circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness; fourth, that the evidence is material to the case at bar; fifth, that the evidence is more probative on an issue than any other evidence procurable through reasonable efforts; and sixth, that admission of the evidence will best serve the interests of justice. State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

While trial court erred by not making specific findings for each step in the six-part inquiry into the admissibility of hearsay evidence, the error did not prejudice defendant because the evidence would still have been excluded. While the six-part inquiry is useful to appellate review of the admission of hearsay under § 8C-1, Rule 803(24) or under this rule, its utility is diminished when an appellate court reviews the exclusion of hearsay; in other words, if proffered evidence fails to meet the requirements of one of the inquiry steps, the trial judge's findings concerning the preceding steps are unnecessary. State v. Harris, 139 N.C. App. 153, 532 S.E.2d 850 (2000).

The six-part inquiry employed to evaluate hearsay is very useful when an appellate court reviews the admission of hearsay under subdivision (24) of this rule or § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5), but its utility is diminished when the court reviews the exclusion of hearsay; if proffered evidence fails to meet the requirements of one of the inquiry steps, the trial judge's findings concerning the preceding steps are unnecessary. State v. Hardison, 143 N.C. App. 114, 545 S.E.2d 233 (2001).

Section 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5) Compared. — Section 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5) is a verbatim copy of subdivision (24) of this rule, except that § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5) also requires that the declarant be unavailable before the hearsay may be admitted and subdivision (24) does not. State v. Triplett, 316 N.C. 1, 340 S.E.2d 736 (1986).

Evidence proffered for admission pursuant to subdivision (24) of this rule must be carefully scrutinized by the trial judge within the framework of the rule's requirements. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Because of the residual "catchall" nature of the hearsay exception in subdivision (24) of this rule, it is potentially subject to abuse in the face of unfettered judicial discretion. Accordingly, evidence proffered for admission pursuant to subdivision (24) must be carefully scrutinized by the trial court within the framework of the rule's requirements. State v. McElrath, 322 N.C. 1, 366 S.E.2d 442 (1988).

Court Must Determine Trustworthiness. — Before statements in a letter purportedly written by unavailable declarant could be received into evidence under either this rule or § 8C-1, Rule 804, the trial court had to determine, inter alia, that the surrounding circumstances indicated that the statements were trustworthy. State v. Agubata, 94 N.C. App. 710, 381 S.E.2d 191 (1989).

The trial judge must engage in the inquiry required by the rule prior to admitting or denying proffered hearsay evidence pursuant to subdivision (24) of this rule. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

For case setting out comprehensive requirements for admission of evidence under subdivision (24) of this rule, see State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985), made applicable only to cases the trial of which begins after the certification date of the opinion.

Racial Correlation Between Defendants and Witnesses. — Any judicial suggestion that racial correlation between defendants and witnesses constitutes an important factor in determining the reliability of a witness' testimony is at best inappropriate. State v. Rhome, 120 N.C. App. 278, 462 S.E.2d 656 (1995).

Reliance by the court, however minimal, upon the racial identity of defendant and the witness in admitting the latter's hearsay statement into evidence constituted error. State v. Rhome, 120 N.C. App. 278, 462 S.E.2d 656 (1995).

Availability as Crucial Consideration. — The availability of a witness to testify at trial is a crucial consideration under the residual hearsay exceptions, subdivision (24) of this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 804 (b)(5). The "availability" of the declarant to testify at trial unavoidably enters into the determination of admissibility of a "hearsay" witness' testimony as to out-of-court statements made by the declarant pursuant to either residual hearsay exception. State v. Fearing, 315 N.C. 167, 337 S.E.2d 551 (1985).

The availability of the witness to testify at trial is a crucial consideration under the residual hearsay exceptions, subdivision (24) of this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 804 (b)(5), because usually the live testimony of the declarant will be the more probative evidence on the point for which it is offered. State v. Hollingsworth, 78 N.C. App. 578, 337 S.E.2d 674 (1985).

"Guarantees of Trustworthiness." — In determining whether a statement has the necessary "guarantees of trustworthiness," evidence that the declarant later recanted the statement is relevant. State v. Hollingsworth, 78 N.C. App. 578, 337 S.E.2d 674 (1985).

In determining whether a statement proffered under a "catchall" exception to the hearsay rule possesses circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, certain factors are significant in guiding trial courts; among these factors are (1) assurance of personal knowledge of the declarant of the underlying event; (2) "the declarant's motivation to speak the truth or otherwise; (3) whether the declarant ever recanted the statement"; and (4) the reasons, within the meaning of § 8C-1, Rule 804(a), for the declarant's unavailability. State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

Lack of Circumstances Indicating Statements' Trustworthiness. — Where the only evidence that the purported declarant existed was defendant's statements to that effect, the declarant was not produced at trial and no one other than defendant was produced to testify that the declarant existed or lived at defendants' residence where drugs were found, letters allegedly written by the declarant purporting to admit declarant's ownership of the contraband were properly excluded. State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

Trustworthiness of Child Victim's Out-of-Court Statements in Sexual Abuse Case. — In defendant's trial for first-degree rape of a five-year-old, the victim's out-of-court statements to social worker contained sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness for admission under subdivision (24) of this rule. State v. Deanes, 323 N.C. 508, 374 S.E.2d 249 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1101, 109 S. Ct. 2455, 104 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1989), applying State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Absent a history of fabrication in a child, there is no authority for the proposition that to be motivated to tell the truth a five-year-old must be subject to punishment. State v. Deanes, 323 N.C. 508, 374 S.E.2d 249 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1101, 109 S. Ct. 2455, 104 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1989).

There was no reason to question the truthfulness of a five-year-old simply because she did not initiate conversations with a social worker and doctor to report an incident of child abuse; in cases of sexual abuse, it is often necessary to ask questions designed to help the child describe what happened. State v. Deanes, 323 N.C. 508, 374 S.E.2d 249 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1101, 109 S. Ct. 2455, 104 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1989).

In a rape prosecution, child victim's hearsay statements to police officer and counselor were sufficiently trustworthy to be admitted pursuant to residual hearsay exception of subdivision (24) of this rule despite trial judge's lone statement, found in the transcript of the in camera hearing, that the child "did not seem to understand the consequences of not telling the truth." State v. Holden, 106 N.C. App. 244, 416 S.E.2d 415, appeal dismissed, 332 N.C. 669, 424 S.E.2d 413 (1992).

Expert's testimony regarding defendant's sexual abuse of son was precluded from admission under the residual exception to hearsay where the State declared that "The testimony of [the expert] comes in under the medical diagnosis" and the trial court failed to make any findings of fact and conclusions of law supporting admissibility as residual hearsay; however, its admission was not reversible error because defendant not only did not object to the admission of the testimony at trial, but also stated he thought the testimony as to the examination of the child was admissible, and he failed to show that a different result would have been reached by the jury without the testimony. State v. Waddell, 351 N.C. 413, 527 S.E.2d 644 (2000).

Findings and Conclusions Required for Admission of Hearsay Under Subdivision (24). — Before allowing the admission of hearsay evidence to be presented under subdivision (24) of this rule, the trial judge must enter appropriate statements, rationale, or findings of fact and conclusions of law in the record to support his discretionary decision that such evidence is admissible under that rule. If the record does not comply with these requirements and it is clear that the evidence was admitted pursuant to subdivision (24), its admission must be held to be error. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Notice of Intent to Proffer Statement Under Subdivision (24). — It is the duty of the proponent of a proffered hearsay statement to alert the trial judge that the statement is being offered as a hearsay exception under subdivision (24) of this rule. Should the trial judge determine that notice of the intent to proffer hearsay testimony under subdivision (24) was not given, was inadequate, or was untimely provided, his inquiry must cease and a proffered hearsay statement must be denied admission under subdivision (24). State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

A hearsay statement may not be admitted under subdivision (24) of this rule unless notice (a) is in writing; and (b) is provided to the adverse party sufficiently in advance of offering it to allow him to prepare to meet it; and (c) contains (1) a statement of the proponent's intention to offer the hearsay testimony, (2) the "particulars" of the hearsay testimony, and (3) the name and address of the declarant. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Notice of Intent to Use Hearsay Statements at Trial Held Sufficient. — Although the address of the declarant was not provided as required by State v. Smith, 315 N.C. at 92, 337 S.E.2d at 844 (1985), defense counsel's letter informed the prosecutor that the declarant's address was unknown; therefore, where the prosecutor did not request additional information about the purported declarant's letter or a copy of the letter prior to trial, the notice provided by defense counsel, a full month prior to trial, was sufficient to provide the prosecution with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet the hearsay statements contained in the letter. State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

Admitting Evidence Without Conforming to § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5) Held Reversible Error. — The trial court erred by admitting into evidence the statement given by the child witness in a sexual offense case to the investigating officer without making the specific findings of fact and conclusions of law pursuant to § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5), as required by State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985), and State v. Triplett, 316 N.C. 1, 340 S.E.2d 736 (1986); State v. Benefield, 91 N.C. App. 228, 371 S.E.2d 306, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 367, 323 N.C. 478, 373 S.E.2d 868, 373 S.E.2d 868 (1988).

Failure to Determine Competency of Child Victim. — In a prosecution charging defendant with first-degree rape, incest, and taking indecent liberties with his three-year-old daughter, the trial judge's adoption of counsel's stipulation in concluding that the child victim was incompetent to testify, where he never personally examined or observed the child's demeanor in responding to questions during a voir dire examination, was reversible error, where highly prejudicial testimony was erroneously admitted pursuant to subdivision (24) of this rule and § 8C-1, Rule 804 (b)(5) on the basis of this improperly based conclusion. State v. Fearing, 315 N.C. 167, 337 S.E.2d 551 (1985).

Admission of Child Victim's Statements Where Child Adjudged Incompetent as Witness. — When considering admission of a child victim's statement to a social worker when the child is found to be incompetent as a witness, the confrontation clause and subdivision (24) of this rule require a case-by-case examination of the facts of each case. State v. Deanes, 323 N.C. 508, 374 S.E.2d 249 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1101, 109 S. Ct. 2455, 104 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1989).

State of Mind Exception. — Sister's conversations with victim following attack by defendant were within the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Exum, 128 N.C. App. 647, 497 S.E.2d 98 (1998).

Evidence Admissible to Rebut Testimony And Indicate State of Mind. — The decedent/wife's statements that her husband was jealous and had repeatedly threatened to kill her were admissible although arguably no more than recitations of fact where the facts that she recited tended to show her state of mind as to her marriage, indicated her relationship with the defendant and, therefore, were relevant under Rule 403, and rebutted testimony by the defendant that they had a good marriage. State v. Jones, 137 N.C. App. 221, 527 S.E2d 700 (2000).

Evidence Held Inadmissible. — Trial judge's ruling which in effect allowed testimony of Rape Task Force Volunteer to be considered as substantive evidence in prosecution for rape and first-degree sexual offense involving four or five year old victim constituted reversible error where the record on appeal showed no support for admission of the testimony under subdivision (24) of this rule, and the testimony as to commission of first-degree sexual offense was in direct conflict with the testimony of the victim. State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Defendant's contention that the trial court erred in not allowing him to testify that witness in the car during the killing of a State Trooper said "You don't remember killing a State Trooper?" was without merit as defendant's testimony was hearsay and not within any of the exceptions to the rule prohibiting hearsay. See State v. McQueen, 324 N.C. 118, 377 S.E.2d 38 (1989).

Where there was no express or implied statement of fact that a "sexual act" occurred, the testimony of witnesses concerning victim's prior statements to the contrary was inadmissible for any purpose. State v. Murphy, 100 N.C. App. 33, 394 S.E.2d 300 (1990).

Exclusion Held Proper. — The trial court incorrectly found that defendant failed to give the proper written notice to the prosecutor of his intent to offer hearsay evidence under § 8C-1, Rules 803(24) and 804(b)(5); however, the trial court's findings that the defendant did not satisfy the requirement that "equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness" be shown and the finding that the interests of justice would not be served by the letters' admission into evidence were proper; therefore, the trial court's exclusion of the letters was proper. State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

Rule 804. Hearsay exceptions; declarant unavailable.

(a) Definition of unavailability. — "Unavailability as a witness" includes situations in which the declarant:

(1) Is exempted by ruling of the court on the ground of privilege from testifying concerning the subject matter of his statement; or

(2) Persists in refusing to testify concerning the subject matter of his statement despite an order of the court to do so; or

(3) Testifies to a lack of memory of the subject matter of his statement; or

(4) Is unable to be present or to testify at the hearing because of death or then existing physical or mental illness or infirmity; or

(5) Is absent from the hearing and the proponent of his statement has been unable to procure his attendance (or in the case of a hearsay exception under subdivision (b)(2), (3), or (4), his attendance or testimony) by process or other reasonable means.

A declarant is not unavailable as a witness if his exemption, refusal, claim of lack of memory, inability, or absence is due to the procurement or wrongdoing of the proponent of his statement for the purpose of preventing the witness from attending or testifying.

(b) Hearsay exceptions. — The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule if the declarant is unavailable as a witness:

(1) Former Testimony. — Testimony given as a witness at another hearing of the same or a different proceeding, or in a deposition taken in compliance with law in the course of the same or another proceeding, if the party against whom the testimony is now offered, or, in a civil action or proceeding, a predecessor in interest, had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross, or redirect examination.

(2) Statement Under Belief of Impending Death. — A statement made by a declarant while believing that his death was imminent, concerning the cause or circumstances of what he believed to be his impending death.

(3) Statement Against Interest. — A statement which was at the time of its making so far contrary to the declarant's pecuniary or proprietary interest, or so far tended to subject him to civil or criminal liability, or to render invalid a claim by him against another, that a reasonable man in his position would not have made the statement unless he believed it to be true. A statement tending to expose the declarant to criminal liability is not admissible in a criminal case unless corroborating circumstances clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement.

(4) Statement of Personal or Family History. — (A) A statement concerning the declarant's own birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, or marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of personal or family history, even though declarant had no means of acquiring personal knowledge of the matter stated; or (B) a statement concerning the foregoing matters, and death also, of another person, if the declarant was related to the other by blood, adoption, or marriage or was so intimately associated with the other's family as to be likely to have accurate information concerning the matter declared.

(5) Other Exceptions. — A statement not specifically covered by any of the foregoing exceptions but having equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, if the court determines that (A) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (B) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (C) the general purposes of these rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence. However, a statement may not be admitted under this exception unless the proponent of it gives written notice stating his intention to offer the statement and the particulars of it, including the name and address of the declarant, to the adverse party sufficiently in advance of offering the statement to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet the statement. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 804 except for the last sentence of Exception (3), which is discussed below.

Subdivision (a) defines unavailability. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The definition of unavailability implements the division of hearsay exceptions into two categories by Rules 803 and 804(b).

At common law the unavailability requirement was evolved in connection with particular hearsay exceptions rather than along general lines.  However, no reason is apparent for making distinctions as to what satisfies unavailability for the different exceptions. The treatment in the rule is therefore uniform. ***

Five instances of unavailability are specified:

(1) Substantial authority supports the position that exercise of a claim of privilege by the declarant satisfies the requirement of unavailability (usually in connection with former testimony).  A ruling by the judge is required, which clearly implies that an actual claim of privilege must be made.

(2) A witness is rendered unavailable if he simply refuses to testify concerning the subject matter of his statement despite judicial pressures to do so, a position supported by similar considerations of practicality. ***

(3) The position that a claimed lack of memory by the witness of the subject matter of his statement constitutes unavailability likewise finds support in the cases, though not without dissent. If the claim is successful, the practical effect is to put the testimony beyond reach, as in the other instances. In this instance, however, it will be noted that the lack of memory must be established by the testimony of the witness himself, which clearly contemplates his production and subjection to cross-examination.

(4) Death and infirmity find general recognition as grounds. ***

(5) Absence from the hearing coupled with inability to compel attendance by process or other reasonable means also satisfies the requirement. ***

If the conditions otherwise constituting unavailability result from procurement or wrongdoing of the proponent of the statement, the requirement is not satisfied. The rule contains no requirement that an attempt be made to take the deposition of a declarant."

Under North Carolina law the unavailability requirement varies with respect to particular hearsay requirements.

Under the hearsay exception for former testimony, North Carolina courts recognize grounds (1), (4), and (5). Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 145 (1982). Although grounds (2) and (3) are not explicitly accepted or rejected by existing North Carolina precedents, Professor Brandis asserts that they should be accepted when occasion arises. Id. at 575.

Under the hearsay exception for dying declarations, G.S. 8-51.1 requires that the declarant be dead.

Under the exception for statements against interest, apparently any legitimate reason for unavailability is sufficient. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 147, at 589, n. 80 (1982).

With respect to statements of family history, it was said in the older cases that the declarant must be dead. However, Professor Brandis asserts that any legitimate reason for unavailability should be acceptable. Id. at 597.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"If the conditions otherwise constituting unavailability result from the procurement or wrongdoing of the proponent of the statement, the requirement is not satisfied. The rule contains no requirement that an attempt be made to take the deposition of a declarant."

Exception (1) concerns former testimony.

In North Carolina, the "testimony must have been given at a former trial of the same cause, or a preliminary stage of the same cause, or the trial of another cause involving the issue and subject matter to which the testimony is directed at the current trial." Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 145, at 575-76 (1982) (footnotes omitted). The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The common law did not limit the admissibility of former testimony to that given in an earlier trial of the same case, although it did require identity of issues as a means of insuring that the former handling of the witness was the equivalent of what would now be done if the opportunity were presented. Modern decisions reduce the requirement to 'substantial' identity. McCormick § 233. Since identity of issues is significant only in that it bears on motive and interest in developing fully the testimony of the witness, expressing the matter in the latter terms is preferable. Id."

Also, the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Under the exception, the testimony may be offered (1) against the party against whom it was previously offered or (2) against the party by whom it was previously offered. In each instance the question resolves itself into whether fairness allows imposing, upon the party against whom now offered, the handling of the witness on the earlier occasion. (1) If the party against whom now offered is the one against whom the testimony was offered previously, no unfairness is apparent in requiring him to accept his own prior conduct of cross-examination or decision not to cross-examine. Only demeanor has been lost, and that is inherent in the situation. (2) If the party against whom now offered is the one by whom the testimony was offered previously, a satisfactory answer becomes somewhat more difficult. One possibility is to proceed somewhat along the line of an adoptive admission, i.e., by offering the testimony proponent in effect adopts it. However, this theory savors of discarded concepts of witnesses' belonging to a party, of litigants' ability to pick and choose witnesses, and of vouching for one's own witnesses.  A more direct and acceptable approach is simply to recognize direct and redirect examination of one's own witness as the equivalent of cross-examining an opponent's witness.  Allowable techniques for dealing with hostile, double-crossing, forgetful, and mentally deficient witnesses leave no substance to a claim that one could not adequately develop his own witness at the former hearing. An even less appealing argument is presented when failure to develop fully was the result of a deliberate choice."

North Carolina practice currently permits testimony against the party against whom it was offered. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 145, at 577 (1982). There are no North Carolina cases concerning testimony offered against the party by whom it was previously offered.

With respect to identity of the parties, the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"As a further assurance of fairness in thrusting upon a party the prior handling of the witness, the common law also insisted upon identity of parties, deviating only to the extent of allowing substitution of successors in a narrowly construed privity. Mutuality as an aspect of identity is now generally discredited, and the requirement of identity of the offering party disappears except as it might affect motive to develop the testimony.  The question remains whether strict identity, or privity, should continue as a requirement with respect to the party against whom offered."

North Carolina practice apparently departs from the privity requirement to the extent of allowing former testimony "if the party against whom it was admitted had not merely an opportunity for cross-examination but the same motive for cross-examination as the party against whom it is offered." Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 145, at 577 (1982). Exception (1) permits former testimony in civil cases if a predecessor in interest had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony.

Under certain circumstances, Exception (1) permits a broader use of depositions than does N.C. Civ. Pro. Rule 32. See also G.S. 8-83.

Exception (2) differs from Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(2) in that it omits the phrase "In a prosecution for homicide or in a civil action or proceeding".

The exception is similar to G.S. 8-51.1. Unlike Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(2) which limits admissibility of dying declarations in criminal cases to homicide prosecution, Exception (2) and G.S. 8-51.1 permit dying declarations to be admitted in all types of criminal and civil actions and proceedings. Under G.S. 8-51.1 the declarant must have died from the causes or circumstances on which he commented. Upon adoption of Exception (2), G.S. 8-51.1 should be repealed.

Exception (3) concerns statements against interest and differs from Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(3) as noted below. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The circumstantial guaranty of reliability for declarations against interest is the assumption that persons do not make statements which are damaging to themselves unless satisfied for good reason that they are true.  If the statement is that of a party, offered by his opponent, it comes in as an admission,  and there is no occasion to inquire whether it is against interest, this not being a condition precedent to admissibility of admissions by opponents."

North Carolina cases have recognized declarations against pecuniary or proprietary interest as an exception to the hearsay rule. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 147 (1982). In State v. Haywood, 295 N.C. 709, the North Carolina Supreme Court abandoned the Court's previous approach that excluded from the exception declarations against penal interest.

The last sentence of Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(3) provides that: "A statement tending to expose the declarant to criminal liability and offered to exculpate the accused is not admissible unless corroborating circumstances clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement." Requiring corroborating circumstances to indicate clearly the trustworthiness of statements exculpating the accused while imposing no such requirement with respect to statements implicating the accused raises serious constitutional questions. Accordingly, Exception (3) differs from Fed. R. Evid. 804(b) (3) in that it imposes the requirement of corroborating circumstances with respect to both exculpating and implicating statements.

In Haywood, the Court listed several very restrictive requirements that a declaration against penal interest must meet. The exception should not be construed to add requirements in addition to the requirement that "corroborating circumstances clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement." As the Advisory Committee's Note states: "The requirement of corroboration should be construed in such a manner as to effectuate its purpose of circumventing fabrication."

Declarations against penal interests are admissible in both criminal and civil cases. However, the requirement of corroborating circumstances applies only in criminal cases.

The exception does not purport to deal with questions of the right to confrontation.

Exception (4) concerns statements of personal or family history.

The common law requirement in North Carolina that a declaration in this area must have been made before the beginning of the controversy was dropped in Fed. R. Evid. 804(b) (3), which is identical to this exception, as bearing more appropriately on weight than admissibility. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 149 (1982); Advisory Committee's Note. Unlike North Carolina law that requires that the declarant be dead, Rule 804 merely requires that the declarant be unavailable. See Brandis, supra.

The first part of the rule specifically disclaims any need of firsthand knowledge respecting declarant's own personal history. Advisory Committee's Note.

The second part of the rule deals with declarations concerning the history of another person. North Carolina common law provides that the declarant is qualified if related by blood or marriage. Brandis, supra. In addition, and contrary to the common law in North Carolina, the declarant qualifies under the exception by virtue of intimate association with the family.

The Advisory Committee's Note states that: "The requirement sometimes encountered that when the subject of the statement is the relationship between two other persons the declarant must qualify as to both is omitted. Relationship is reciprocal." There are no North Carolina cases on this point.

Exception (5) is identical to Rule 803(24) and differs from the federal rule. See commentary to Rule 803(24).

VI. Other Exceptions.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Every writing sought to be admitted must be properly authenticated, and must satisfy the requirements of the "best evidence rule," § 8C-1, Rule 1002, or one of its exceptions, set forth in § 8C-1, Rule 1003, et seq. Furthermore, if offered for a hearsay purpose, the writing must fall within one or more of the exceptions to the hearsay rule established by Rule 803 and this rule. FCX, Inc. v. Caudill, 85 N.C. App. 272, 354 S.E.2d 767 (1987).

Written Notice as Condition of Admission. — Admission of a hearsay statement when the declarant is unavailable is conditioned upon the proponent's written notice of his intention to offer the statement to the adverse party sufficiently in advance to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to meet the statement. State v. Howard, 78 N.C. App. 262, 337 S.E.2d 598 (1985), appeal dismissed, 316 N.C. 198, 341 S.E.2d 581 (1986).

Defense counsel failed to give the prosecutor timely, written notice of her intent to use witness' testimony, a prerequisite to admission of evidence under subsection (b)(5). State v. Hester, 343 N.C. 266, 470 S.E.2d 25 (1996).

Notice Held Sufficient. — Defendant received adequate notice of the State's intention to offer hearsay evidence where, almost two months before trial, in compliance with discovery request, the State disclosed the substance of witness's statements, and defendant conceded that he knew the State intended to call witness and, in general, the expected content of his testimony. State v. Bullock, 95 N.C. App. 524, 383 S.E.2d 431 (1989).

State provided timely written notice of intent to offer statements of unavailable witness at trial where: (1) it filed written notice of its intent about one month prior to the pretrial hearing; (2) it attached to that notice a copy of one of the statements as well as an officer's notes concerning the other statement (there is relevancy in a defendant's receipt of the declarant's statement well in advance of trial); and (3) it filed an amended notice providing defendant with a telephone number for the witness and indicating that the witness was living at an unknown address in India. State v. Fowler, 353 N.C. 599, 548 S.E.2d 684 (2001).

Admissibility Upheld Despite Lack of Written Notice. — Where defendants did not receive written notice of prosecution's intention to offer the written statement of the decedent until the morning of the trial, but were given a continuance to prepare to meet the prosecution's proffer of the written statement, and the trustworthiness of the statement was well litigated by cross-examination of the person who took the statement and by approximately 50 pages of direct examination of the attending physician in the presence of the jury and with access to all medical records requested by defendants, it was not error for the court to admit the statement. State v. Howard, 78 N.C. App. 262, 337 S.E.2d 598 (1985), appeal dismissed, 316 N.C. 198, 341 S.E.2d 581 (1986).

Written Notice on Day of Trial. — Written notice of State's intent to offer victim's statements, given to defendant on the day defendant's trial began, when considered in light of prior oral notice, provided defendant a fair opportunity to prepare to meet the statements and to contest their use, and the trial judge did not err by admitting them into evidence. State v. Triplett, 316 N.C. 1, 340 S.E.2d 736 (1986).

This Section Contains Requirements for Unavailability, Not Competency. — The trial court applied an erroneous legal standard in denying respondent father's request to call the children as witnesses because the focus of the voir dire was incorrectly directed to the effect the children's testifying would have on their mental health, rather than upon the ability of the children to understand their obligation to tell the truth and to relate events which they may have seen, heard or experienced; rather than determining whether all or any of them were competent to testify under § 8C-1, Rule 601, the trial court disqualified them as being "unavailable," apparently relying upon the definition of "unavailability" contained in this section, but the question of a potential witness' unavailability becomes relevant only with respect to the admissibility of his hearsay declarations. In re Faircloth, 137 N.C. App. 311, 527 S.E.2d 679 (2000).

Error Was Harmless Beyond a Reasonable Doubt. — Defendant was not entitled to a new trial because the State demonstrated that the error of admitting prejudicial testimony of a co-conspirator was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt since the evidence of defendant's participation in the crimes was overwhelming.

State v. Harris, 136 N.C. App. 611, 525 S.E.2d 208 (2000).

Findings Held Insufficient. — The court failed to make the requisite findings and conclusions necessary in order to admit a letter from the plaintiffs' doctor to plaintiffs' counsel in which the doctor opined that the minor who was injured in a car accident had suffered brain damage; in light of the conflicting testimony by experts at trial and because the opinion of the minor's treating medical doctor for more than two years after the accident carried significant weight, the error was prejudicial, entitling defendants to a new trial. Fox-Kirk v. Hannon, 142 N.C. App. 267, 542 S.E.2d 346 (2001), review denied, 353 N.C. 725, 551 S.E.2d 437 (2001), review dismissed, 353 N.C. 725, 551 S.E.2d 437 (2001).

Defendant waived his right to appellate review of the admissibility of hearsay evidence under § 8C-1, Rule 803(3) where he only argued erroneous admission under subsection (b)(5) of this rule. State v. Parker, — N.C. App. —, — S.E.2d —, 2000 N.C. App. LEXIS 1107 (Oct. 3, 2000).

II. UNAVAILABILITY AS A WITNESS.

Determination of Trustworthiness. — Factors to be considered in determining whether hearsay statements admitted under this rule possess sufficient indicia of trustworthiness are: (1) Assurances of the declarant's personal knowledge of the underlying event; (2) the declarant's motivation to speak the truth or otherwise; (3) whether the declarant recanted the statements; and (4) the practical availability of the declarant at trial for meaningful cross-examination. State v. Stutts, 105 N.C. App. 557, 414 S.E.2d 61 (1992); State v. Chapman, 342 N.C. 330, 464 S.E.2d 661 (1995), cert. denied, 518 U.S. 1023, 116 S. Ct. 2560, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1077 (1996).

As to the admission of hearsay testimony under § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5), the trial court must first find that the declarant is unavailable, and second, the trial court must conduct a six-prong inquiry to determine admissibility; the trial court should consider the following factors when analyzing the question of the third prong, trustworthiness: (1) the declarant's personal knowledge of the underlying event, (2) the declarant's motivation to speak the truth, (3) whether the declarant recanted, and (4) the practical availability of the declarant at trial for meaningful cross-examination. State v. Fowler, 353 N.C. 599, 548 S.E.2d 684 (2001).

Determination of Trustworthiness Necessary. — Before statements in a letter purportedly written by unavailable declarant could be received into evidence under either § 8C-1, Rule 803 or this rule, the trial court had to determine, inter alia, that the surrounding circumstances indicated that the statements were trustworthy. State v. Agubata, 94 N.C. App. 710, 381 S.E.2d 191 (1989).

Trustworthiness Not Shown. — Although the record contained sufficient evidence upon which the trial court could have made sufficient findings of fact and conclusions of law regarding the trustworthiness of statement, it failed to do so; therefore, defendant was awarded a new trial. State v. Dammons, 121 N.C. App. 61, 464 S.E.2d 486 (1995).

Burden of Proof upon Proponent. — Where the author of letter was unknown, and, therefore, there was no evidence as to his or her availability as a witness, the defendant, as the proponent of the evidence, bore the burden of satisfying the requirements of unavailability under this rule. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Good-Faith Effort to Obtain Presence. — A witness is not unavailable for purposes of the (a)(4) exception to the confrontation requirement unless the State has made a good-faith effort to obtain her presence at trial. State v. Swindler, 129 N.C. App. 1, 497 S.E.2d 318 (1998), cert. denied, 348 N.C. 508, 510 S.E.2d 670 (1998), aff'd, 349 N.C. 347, 507 S.E.2d 284 (1998).

The assertion of a conflict of interest due to retention of witness' law firm by the plaintiff subsequent to the first trial was not a privilege under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of this rule, and the trial court erred in finding the witness to be unavailable and in admitting his testimony from the first trial. Asheville Mall, Inc. v. F.W. Woolworth Co., 83 N.C. App. 532, 350 S.E.2d 875 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 402, 354 S.E.2d 709 (1987).

To be admissible at trial, the deposition of an unavailable non-party witness must meet the requirements of both N.C.R. Civ.P. 32 and subdivision (b)(1). Pleasant Valley Promenade v. Lechmere, Inc., 120 N.C. App. 650, 464 S.E.2d 47 (1995).

Court's Consideration of Unavailability Sufficient. — Where judge noted witness was under court order to appear and testify, witness refused, and judge concluded that in witness's statements there was a circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness, trial court clearly took into account the reason for the declarant's unavailability. State v. Bullock, 95 N.C. App. 524, 383 S.E.2d 431 (1989).

Unavailability Requirement Satisfied. — Unavailability requirement was satisfied where the defendant was unable to procure the purported declarant's attendance by process. State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

Where four year old child was unable to answer question put to her regarding sexual abuse due to fear, judge's declaration that the child "is simply going to be unable to testify," amounted to an implicit declaration of unavailability within the meaning of subdivision (a)(4) of this rule and medical testimony was not required for that conclusion; the witness was not unavailable as the result of an existing medical condition, and the trial judge had the opportunity to observe the demeanor of the witness and her inability to respond to questions. In addition, State fulfilled the constitutional requirement of the confrontation clause by showing a good-faith attempt to secure the witness for trial by producing the witness and attempting to elicit her testimony. State v. Chandler, 324 N.C. 172, 376 S.E.2d 728 (1989).

Where the State had subpoenaed potential witness numerous times to appear in court, but was unable to locate her and defendant was made aware that the State was going to use potential witness' statement at trial, the trial court's determination that potential witness was unavailable was sufficient. State v. Dammons, 121 N.C. App. 61, 464 S.E.2d 486 (1995).

Witness's first trial testimony was properly admitted into evidence over defendant's objections where witness was unavailable because he asserted his constitutional right against self-incrimination. State v. Hunt, 339 N.C. 622, 457 S.E.2d 276 (1994).

Witness was unavailable under § 8C-1, Rule 804(a)(5), after the State was unable to determine the witness's exact address in India, and the witness refused to attend proceedings because of the witness's gunshot injuries and fear for the witness's safety, despite the State's offer to pay the witness's travel and other expenses. State v. Fowler, 353 N.C. 599, 548 S.E.2d 684 (2001).

Unavailability Requirement Not Satisfied. — An order to testify from the trial court is an essential component in a declaration of unavailability under § 8C-1, Rule 804(a)(2). State v. Linton, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 572, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 739 (2001).

Suicidal Tendency of Witness. — Where the trial judge not only observed the demeanor of the witness, but heard the testimony of the witness's former psychiatrist that the witness suffered from a mental infirmity such that testifying could make her suicidal, the record supported the trial court's determination that the witness was unavailable. State v. Carter, 338 N.C. 569, 451 S.E.2d 157 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1107, 115 S. Ct. 2256, 132 L. Ed. 2d 263 (1995).

Evidence held to support finding that witness was unavailable so as to allow an admission to the investigating officers. State v. Bowie, 340 N.C. 199, 456 S.E.2d 771 (1995).

Surviving Witness. — The hearsay statements of an unavailable witness were more probative than any other evidence because he was the only surviving victim of the crimes, he was the only eyewitness to the entire event, and he was the closest person to the assailants and therefore had the best opportunity to observe them. State v. Fowler, 353 N.C. 599, 548 S.E.2d 684 (2001).

Diligent Attempt to Produce Witness. — State acted diligently in trying to produce unavailable witness to testify, and it was practically impossible to return him to this country to testify, where: (1) state officials contacted him in India, and he informed them there was no way he would return to the United States to testify; (2) he was not willing to return to this country because his painful injuries made travel difficult and he feared for his safety; (3) the State spoke numerous times with his brother in California in attempts to locate him; (4) the State offered to provide him with police protection during his stay; and (5) the State offered to pay for his airfare, lodging, meals, and care for his injuries during his stay. State v. Fowler, 353 N.C. 599, 548 S.E.2d 684 (2001).

III. FORMER TESTIMONY.

Even though there exists a preference for face-to-face confrontation at trial subsection b(1) recognizes an exception to this requirement. State v. Hunt, 339 N.C. 622, 457 S.E.2d 276 (1994).

Testimony at Preliminary Stage of Same Cause. — When the original witness is unavailable, his testimony at a preliminary stage of the same cause is admissible under the prior testimony exception to the hearsay rule and may be proved by the testimony of a person who heard it. State v. Highsmith, 74 N.C. App. 96, 327 S.E.2d 628, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 119, 332 S.E.2d 486 (1985).

Unavailability Requirement Not Satisfied. — Neither the fact that witnesses failed to remember every detail of killing, nor the fact that they disagreed with officer's account of their out-of-court statements, was sufficient to render them "unavailable" as witnesses for the purposes of this rule. State v. Miller, 330 N.C. 56, 408 S.E.2d 846 (1991).

Testimony from Criminal Trial Offered at Civil Proceeding Held Properly Excluded. — Decedent's father, plaintiff in civil action, was not a party to the criminal proceeding brought against defendant based upon the same facts and had no opportunity to cross examine the proposed witness; therefore, although the state's prosecuting attorney may have had a similar motive to develop the testimony, he was not a predecessor in interest to decedent's estate, and exclusion of the former testimony was correct. Hinnant v. Holland, 92 N.C. App. 142, 374 S.E.2d 152 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 335, 378 S.E.2d 792 (1989).

Testimony Properly Admitted. — Co-conspirator/brother's prior trial testimony was not statutorily inadmissable under subsection (b)(5) where the record supports the court's conclusion that he was unavailable under subsection (a)(2) because he willfully refused to testify at the defendant's trial and where his testimony was trustworthy, material, probative and served the interest of justice: because he had personal knowledge of the underlying events, his prior testimony was material and (in light of his refusal to testify at defendant's trial) more probative than any evidence the State could procure through reasonable efforts. State v. McNeill, 140 N.C. App. 450, 537 S.E.2d 518 (2000).

IV. BELIEF OF IMPENDING DEATH.

Videotape Recording of Identification. — In a murder trial, the trial court did not err in allowing the State to introduce a videotape recording of victim's out-of-court identification of the defendant in a photographic line-up, made one day before his death, when he knew death was imminent. State v. Penley, 318 N.C. 30, 347 S.E.2d 783 (1986).

V. STATEMENT AGAINST INTEREST.

Subdivision (b)(3) of this rule requires a two-pronged analysis. Once a statement is deemed to be against declarant's penal interest, the trial judge must be satisfied that corroborating circumstances clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement if it exposes declarant to criminal liability. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988); State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

The circumstantial guaranty of reliability for declarations against interest is the assumption that persons do not make statements which are damaging to themselves unless they are satisfied for good reasons that they are true. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Co-conspirator's statements against interest must contain "particularized guarantees of trustworthiness" such that adversarial testing would be expected to add little, if anything, to the statements' reliability; the indicia of reliability must be present in the statement itself and not by reference to other evidence presented at trial. State v. Harris, 136 N.C. App. 611, 525 S.E.2d 208 (2000).

Criminal Liability. — Subdivision (b)(3) of this rule requires that in order for a statement to be admissible, it must actually subject the declarant to criminal liability. State v. Singleton, 85 N.C. App. 123, 354 S.E.2d 259, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 516, 358 S.E.2d 530 (1987).

Identity of Declarant. — It is only where the identity of the declarant is revealed in the statement that the guaranty of reliability arises; the statement must actually subject the declarant to criminal liability. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Declarant Must Understand Damaging Potential of Statement. — For a statement to qualify as a declaration against interest the declarant must have understood the damaging potential of his statement, and in the case of an anonymous letter, where the declarant actually believed that the anonymity of the statement shielded him or her from criminal liability, requirement of the hearsay exception had not been fulfilled. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Statement Held Admissible. — Statement by defendant regarding a murder that he had committed fit within the hearsay exception in subdivision (b)(3) and within the exception for statements of a co-conspirator in Rule 801(d)(E). State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 876, 118 S. Ct. 196, 139 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1024, 118 S. Ct. 1309, 140 L. Ed. 2d 473 (1998).

Statements by two witnesses implicating defendant, along with his brother, in the murder of the brother's wife were admissible as statements against interest or, because they were corroborated by other testimony, at any rate, their admission was not prejudicial. State v. Kimble, 140 N.C. App. 153, 535 S.E.2d 882 (2000).

Statements Not Found to Be Against Interest. — are admissible, even though they are themselves neutral as to declarant's interest, if they are integral to a larger statement which is against declarant's interest. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Where collateral statements, inculpatory to defendant, made by murder victim-declarant were part and parcel of his disserving statement, were integral to the larger statement made by victim to deputy, and were essential to an understanding of victim's motivation in making disserving statement to deputy, the trial judge was correct in admitting this collateral material, since it actually tended to fortify the initial statement's disserving aspects. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Statements made by arrestee to defendant admitting that LSD found in a box underneath the defendant while in arrestee's car belongs to arrestee and not to defendant were not admissible as statements made against arrestee's penal interests under subdivision (b)(3) because it is simply not a crime to know that drugs do not belong to a particular individual. State v. Eggert, 110 N.C. App. 614, 430 S.E.2d 699 (1993).

VI. OTHER EXCEPTIONS.

Trial Prior to July 1, 1984. — The requirement that hearsay evidence not falling within a recognized exception to the hearsay rule and offered because of necessity and a reasonable probability of truthfulness may be resorted to only when more probative evidence on the point cannot be procured through reasonable efforts applies to hearsay evidence offered in a trial conducted prior to the effective date of the North Carolina Rules of Evidence. Donavant v. Hudspeth, 318 N.C. 1, 347 S.E.2d 797 (1986).

Section 8C-1, Rule 803(24) Compared. — Subdivision (b)(5) of this rule is a verbatim copy of § 8C-1, Rule 803(24), except that subdivision (b)(5) also requires that the declarant be unavailable before the hearsay may be admitted and § 8C-1, Rule 803(24) does not. State v. Triplett, 316 N.C. 1, 340 S.E.2d 736 (1986).

Requirements for Admission of Hearsay Under Subdivision (b)(5). — Just as in § 8C-1, Rule 803(24) cases, before hearsay testimony can be admitted under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule, the trial judge must engage in the six-part inquiry prescribed in State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985). In cases under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule, though, the trial judge first must find that the declarant is unavailable before commencing the six-part inquiry. However, the requirements of State v. Triplett, 316 N.C. 1, 340 S.E.2d 736 (1986). For annotations covering the Smith case, see analysis line XIII Other Exceptions, under Rule 803, above.

Before hearsay testimony can be admitted under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule, the trial judge must first find that the declarant is unavailable, and then engage in a six-part inquiry, as follows: (1) Has proper notice been given? (2) Is the hearsay not specifically covered elsewhere? (3) Is the statement trustworthy? (4) Is the statement material? (5) Is the statement more probative on the issue than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts? (6) Will the interests of justice be best served by admission? Phillips & Jordan Inv. Corp. v. Ashblue Co., 86 N.C. App. 186, 357 S.E.2d 1, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 633, 360 S.E.2d 92 (1987).

Under § 8C-1, Rules 803(24) and 804(b)(5), the trial judge is required to analyze hearsay's admissibility by undertaking a six-part inquiry; specifically, the trial court must determine the following: First, that proper notice was given of the intent to offer hearsay evidence under § 8C-1, Rule 803(24) or 804(b)(5); second, that the hearsay evidence is not specifically covered by any of the other hearsay exceptions; third, that the hearsay evidence possesses certain circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness; fourth, that the evidence is material to the case at bar; fifth, that the evidence is more probative on an issue than any other evidence procurable through reasonable efforts; and sixth, that admission of the evidence will best serve the interests of justice. State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

While no showing of necessity or trustworthiness is required for the other firmly rooted hearsay exceptions, a showing of necessity and trustworthiness is required for statements admitted under the catch-all exception to the hearsay rule to avoid violating the constitutional right to confrontation. State v. Wagoner, 131 N.C. App. 285, 506 S.E.2d 738 (1998).

While the trial court erred by not making specific findings for each step in the six-part inquiry into the admissibility of hearsay evidence, the error did not prejudice defendant because the evidence would still have been excluded. While the six-part inquiry is useful to appellate review of the admission of hearsay under this rule or under § 8C-1, Rule 803(24), its utility is diminished when an appellate court reviews the exclusion of hearsay; in other words, if proffered evidence fails to meet the requirements of one of the inquiry steps, the trial judge's findings concerning the preceding steps are unnecessary. State v. Harris, 139 N.C. App. 153, 532 S.E.2d 850 (2000).

Availability as Crucial Consideration. — The availability of a witness to testify at trial is a crucial consideration under the residual hearsay exceptions, § 8C-1, Rule 803(24) and subdivision (b)(5) of this rule. The "availability" of the declarant to testify at trial unavoidably enters into the determination of admissibility of a "hearsay" witness' testimony as to out-of-court statements made by the declarant pursuant to either residual hearsay exception. State v. Fearing, 315 N.C. 167, 337 S.E.2d 551 (1985).

The availability of the witness to testify at trial is a crucial consideration under the residual hearsay exceptions of § 8C-1, Rule 803(24) and subdivision (b)(5) of this rule, because usually the live testimony of the declarant will be the more probative evidence on the point for which it is offered. State v. Hollingsworth, 78 N.C. App. 578, 337 S.E.2d 674 (1985).

The degree of detail required in the finding of unavailability will depend on the circumstances of the particular case. State v. Triplett, 316 N.C. 1, 340 S.E.2d 736 (1986).

"Guarantees of Trustworthiness." — In determining whether a statement has the necessary "guarantees of trustworthiness," evidence that the declarant later recanted the statement is relevant. State v. Hollingsworth, 78 N.C. App. 578, 337 S.E.2d 674 (1985).

Threshold determination of trustworthiness is the most significant requirement of admissibility under the residual hearsay exception. Findings of fact and conclusions of law as to the trustworthiness requirement must appear in the record. State v. Moore, 87 N.C. App. 156, 360 S.E.2d 293 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 477, 364 S.E.2d 664 (1988).

Circumstances Indicating Trustworthiness. — Murder victim's statements to her attorney concerning defendant were admissible under the "catch-all" exception to hearsay; the attorney-client relationship was sufficient guaranty of trustworthiness to admit the statements. State v. Faucette, 326 N.C. 676, 392 S.E.2d 71 (1990).

Factors in Determining Whether Statement Possesses Equivalent Guarantees of Trustworthiness. — In determining whether a hearsay statement possesses "equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness," the trial court should consider, inter alia: (1) The declarant's relationship with both the defendant and the government; (2) the declarant's motivation; (3) the extent of the declarant's personal knowledge; (4) whether the declarant ever recanted the statement; and (5) the practical availability of the declarant at trial for cross-examination. This list is not all inclusive and other factors may be considered when appropriate. State v. McLaughlin, 316 N.C. 175, 340 S.E.2d 102 (1986), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 321 N.C. 267, 362 S.E.2d 280 (1987).

In weighing the "circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness" of a hearsay statement for purposes of subdivision (b)(5) of this rule, the trial judge must consider, among other factors, (1) assurances of the declarant's personal knowledge of the underlying events; (2) the declarant's motivation to speak the truth or otherwise; (3) whether the declarant has ever recanted the statement; and (4) the practical availability of the declarant at trial for meaningful cross-examination. Also pertinent are factors such as the nature and character of the statement and the relationship of the parties. State v. Triplett, 316 N.C. 1, 340 S.E.2d 736 (1986).

A trial judge should consider a number of factors in determining whether a hearsay statement possesses sufficient indicia of trustworthiness to be admitted under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule. Among these factors are: (1) the declarant's personal knowledge of the underlying event; (2) the declarant's motivation to speak the truth; (3) whether the declarant recanted; and (4) the reason, within the meaning of subsection (a) of this rule, for the declarant's unavailability. However, this list is not inclusive, and other factors may be considered when appropriate. State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988).

In determining whether a statement proffered under a "catchall" exception to the hearsay rule possesses circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, certain factors are significant in guiding trial courts; among these factors are (1) assurance of personal knowledge of the declarant of the underlying event; (2) "the declarant's motivation to speak the truth or otherwise; (3) whether the declarant ever recanted the statement"; and (4) the reasons, within the meaning of § 8C-1, Rule 804(a), for the declarant's unavailability. State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

The six-part inquiry employed to evaluate hearsay is very useful when an appellate court reviews the admission of hearsay under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule or § 8C-1, Rule 803(24), but its utility is diminished when the court reviews the exclusion of hearsay; if proffered evidence fails to meet the requirements of one of the inquiry steps, the trial judge's findings concerning the preceding steps are unnecessary. State v. Hardison, 143 N.C. App. 114, 545 S.E.2d 233 (2001).

When a statement sought to be admitted under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule nearly fits an enumerated exception, it has a degree of circumstantial trustworthiness which is relevant to the ultimate determination the trial court must make. State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988).

Independent verification, while not alone sufficient to enable the trial court to admit an absent witness' statement under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule, provides a useful basis for evaluating its trustworthiness. State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988).

Findings and Conclusions. — In order for a statement to fall within the hearsay "catchall" exception of subsection (b)(5) of this rule, the statement must not be admissible under any other exception to the hearsay rule. Detailed findings of fact are not required, but the trial judge must enter his conclusion in the record. State v. Moore, 87 N.C. App. 156, 360 S.E.2d 293 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 477, 364 S.E.2d 664 (1988).

Lack of Circumstances Indicating Statements' Trustworthiness. — Where the only evidence that the purported declarant existed was defendant's statements to that effect, the declarant was not produced at trial and no one other than defendant was produced to testify that the declarant existed or lived at defendants' residence where drugs were found, letters allegedly written by the declarant purporting to admit declarant's ownership of the contraband were properly excluded. State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

Trustworthiness Not To Be Based on Corroborating Evidence. — The trial court committed prejudicial error in basing its determination of statement's trustworthiness on the presence of corroborating evidence. State v. Downey, 127 N.C. App. 167, 487 S.E.2d 831 (1997).

Trustworthiness of Statement by Child. — The circumstances of each challenged hearsay statement by a child sexual abuse victim showed sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness for admission under the catch-all exception to the hearsay rule, where the child spoke with personal knowledge of the underlying events and had no motive to lie, she demonstrated how the defendant abused her by placing her finger in an anatomically correct female doll's vagina, and she never recanted her statements about the defendant. State v. Wagoner, 131 N.C. App. 285, 506 S.E.2d 738 (1998).

Otherwise Inadmissible Evidence as Basis for Expert Opinion. — The well-established practice has been to admit evidence otherwise inadmissible as hearsay for the purpose of revealing the basis for expert opinion testimony. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 406, 368 S.E.2d 844 (1988).

A testifying expert can reasonably rely on the opinion of an out-of-court expert and can testify to the content of that opinion. This accords with case law prior to adoption of the Rules of Evidence. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 406, 368 S.E.2d 844 (1988).

Out-of-Court Communication. — This rule has been interpreted to permit an expert witness to rely on an out-of-court communication as a basis for an opinion and to relate the content of that communication to the jury. State v. Jones, 322 N.C. 406, 368 S.E.2d 844 (1988).

Inability of Witness to Tell Truth from Fantasy. — Finding a witness unavailable to testify because of an inability to tell truth from fantasy prevents that witness' out-of-court statements from possessing guarantees of trustworthiness to be admissible at trial under the residual exception set forth in subdivision (b)(5) of this rule. State v. Stutts, 105 N.C. App. 557, 414 S.E.2d 61 (1992).

Current Inability of Witness to Tell Truth From Fantasy Not Relevant. — The trial court's conclusion that a child victim of alleged sexual abuse was incompetent to testify two years later did not invalidate her prior statements made truthfully with personal knowledge where nothing indicated that the child was incapable of telling the truth or distinguishing reality from imagination at the time of the sexual abuse. State v. Wagoner, 131 N.C. App. 285, 506 S.E.2d 738 (1998).

Failure to Determine Competency of Child Victim. — In a prosecution charging defendant with first-degree rape, incest, and taking indecent liberties with his three-year-old daughter, the trial judge's adoption of counsel's stipulation in concluding that the child victim was incompetent to testify, where he never personally examined or observed the child's demeanor in responding to questions during a voir dire examination, was reversible error, where highly prejudicial testimony was erroneously admitted pursuant to § 8C-1, Rule 803(24) and subdivision (b)(5) of this rule on the basis of this improperly based conclusion. State v. Fearing, 315 N.C. 167, 337 S.E.2d 551 (1985).

Statements by murder victim, not knowing of his impending death, in which he identified the defendant as the person who shot him, held admissible under this rule as other exceptions. State v. Penley, 318 N.C. 30, 347 S.E.2d 783 (1986).

Necessity Shown. — In the circumstance where the State's case depended mainly on child sex abuse victim's statements and the child was incompetent to testify, the unavailability of the victim due to incompetency and the evidentiary importance of the victim's statements adequately demonstrated the necessity prong of this test. State v. Wagoner, 131 N.C. App. 285, 506 S.E.2d 738 (1998).

Admission of Evidence Upheld. — Statements by the victim to her daughter and to a friend, describing prior attacks upon her by the defendant (her son) and her fear of the defendant, possessed the "circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness" necessary under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule. State v. Triplett, 316 N.C. 1, 340 S.E.2d 736 (1986).

Absent witness' statement held to contain sufficient circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness to be admitted under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule. State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988).

Where the victim testified that defendant stated "they are never going to take me in again alive," the statement was probative of defendant's knowledge of his guilt, and defendant made no showing that the probative value of the statement was substantially outweighed by its prejudicial effect. State v. Charles, 92 N.C. App. 430, 374 S.E.2d 658 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 338, 378 S.E.2d 800 (1989).

Assault victim's statements to a police officer and to her neighbor were properly admitted where defendant was given notice of the State's intention to use the statements one week before trial and where the victim's testimony was the only eye-witness account of the beatings. State v. Shubert, 102 N.C. App. 419, 402 S.E.2d 642 (1991).

Where witness testified to events about which only she could have known, made statements against her penal interest regarding her use of illegal drugs and participation in prostitution, was incarcerated for much of the time between the interview and the trial, and never attempted to recant her statement which was made to a law enforcement officer, the hearsay testimony possessed sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness to be constitutionally admissible under this rule. State v. Peterson, 337 N.C. 384, 446 S.E.2d 43 (1994).

A victim-declarant's statements to a law enforcement officer describing (i) ill will between the defendant and herself and fear of the defendant and (ii) prior attacks by the defendant and the victim's fear are likely to possess the required guarantees. State v. Baker, 338 N.C. 526, 451 S.E.2d 574 (1994).

There was no error in admitting hearsay statements identifying defendant as the person who poured gasoline on victim and set her on fire where the statements were made to a nurse and the victim was deceased. State v. Tyler, 346 N.C. 187, 485 S.E.2d 599 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1001, 118 S. Ct. 571, 139 L. Ed. 2d 411 (1998).

Recorded oral statement to police by co-conspirator's girlfriend, who was murdered after the statement was given, was trustworthy and properly admitted. State v. Hurst, 127 N.C. App. 54, 487 S.E.2d 846 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1031, 118 S. Ct. 1324, 140 L. Ed. 2d 486 (1998).

A murder victim's statement possessed circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness and was admissible in her husband's murder trial under the residual hearsay exception, where the victim told a witness that her husband had threatened to make her the next Nicole Simpson, that he had followed her to the bank, and that the victim told her husband that the money she withdrew was her "get out" money and that she was leaving him. State v. Hayes, 130 N.C. App. 154, 502 S.E.2d 853 (1998), aff'd, 350 N.C. 79, 511 S.E.2d 302 (1999).

Where victim was unavailable to testify against defendant/father, evidence and findings supported the trial court's admission of hearsay statements under this rule. State v. Pretty, 134 N.C. App. 379, 517 S.E.2d 677 (1999), cert. denied, appeal dismissed, 351 N.C. 117, 540 S.E.2d 745 (1999).

Admission of Evidence Held Harmless. — Failure of the trial court to determine specifically that murder victim's statement to her attorney was not covered by any explicit exception to the hearsay rule was error, but the error was harmless where the evidence of defendant's guilt was overwhelming. State v. Faucette, 326 N.C. 676, 392 S.E.2d 71 (1990).

Evidence Held Inadmissible. — Where statement made by defendant's alleged accomplice was not made under oath or under a threat of perjury, the defendant did not have the opportunity to cross-examine him as to the veracity of the statement, and he made the statement to gain favor with the police and in hopes of a favorable plea bargain, but later recanted, claiming that the police drafted the statement and that he signed it under coercion by his attorney, the totality of the circumstances surrounding the confession justified the conclusion that it lacked the required "equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness" to be admitted under the residual exception of subdivision (b)(5) of this rule. State v. McLaughlin, 316 N.C. 175, 340 S.E.2d 102 (1986), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 321 N.C. 267, 362 S.E.2d 280 (1987).

The trial court erred by admitting into evidence the statement given by the child witness in a sexual offense case to the investigating officer without making the specific findings of fact and conclusions of law pursuant to § 8C-1, Rule 804(b)(5), as required by State v. Smith, 315 N.C. 76, 337 S.E.2d 833 (1985), and State v. Triplett, 316 N.C. 1, 340 S.E.2d 736 (1986). State v. Benefield, 91 N.C. App. 228, 371 S.E.2d 306, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 367, 323 N.C. 478, 373 S.E.2d 868, 373 S.E.2d 868 (1988).

The trial court incorrectly found that defendant failed to give the proper written notice to the prosecutor of his intent to offer hearsay evidence under § 8C-1, Rules 803(24) and 804(b)(5); however, the trial court's finding that the defendant did not satisfy the requirement that "equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness" be shown and the finding that the interests of justice would not be served by the letters' admission into evidence were proper; therefore, the trial court's exclusion of the letters was proper. State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

Defendant's contention that the trial court erred in not allowing him to testify that witness in the car during the killing of a State Trooper said "You don't remember killing a State Trooper?" was without merit as defendant's testimony was hearsay and not within any of the exceptions to the rule prohibiting hearsay. State v. McQueen, 324 N.C. 118, 377 S.E.2d 38 (1989).

Trial court properly refused to admit letter which was not a statement against penal interest because witness had already entered a guilty plea and was serving a sentence for the murder when the letter was written. State v. Pickens, 346 N.C. 628, 488 S.E.2d 162 (1997).

The notice requirement of subdivision (b)(5) of this rule should be construed flexibly, in light of the express policy of providing a party with a fair opportunity to meet the proffered evidence. State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988).

By giving defendant additional time to prepare to meet absent witness' statement, and to locate him if possible, the court ensured that notice provisions of subdivision (b)(5) of this rule were met. State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988).

Notice Held Sufficient. — Defendant held to have been provided with a fair opportunity to meet absent witness' statement, so that the notice given by the prosecutor of his intention to admit the statement was sufficient under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule. State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988).

Although the address of the declarant was not provided as required by State v. Smith, 315 N.C. at 92, 337 S.E.2d at 844 (1985), defense counsel's letter informed the prosecutor that the declarant's address was unknown; therefore, where the prosecutor did not request additional information about the purported declarant's letter or a copy of the letter prior to trial, the notice provided by defense counsel, a full month prior to trial, was sufficient to provide the prosecution with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet the hearsay statements contained in the letter. State v. Agubata, 92 N.C. App. 651, 375 S.E.2d 702 (1989).

Statement Inadmissible. — Trial court did not err in excluding the testimony of three defense witnesses that a man who died before trial had stated that he knew that the defendant did not commit the attempted robbery and murder for which defendant was charged, because the trustworthiness of the statement exposing the declarant to criminal liability was not clearly indicated by corroborating circumstances. State v. Wardrett, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 214, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 651 (2001).

Rule 805. Hearsay within hearsay.

Hearsay included within hearsay is not excluded under the hearsay rule if each part of the combined statements conforms with an exception to the hearsay rule provided in these rules. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 805. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"On principle it scarcely seems open to doubt that the hearsay rule should not call for exclusion of a hearsay statement which includes a further hearsay statement when both conform to the requirements of a hearsay exception. Thus a hospital record might contain an entry of the patient's age based on information furnished by his wife. The hospital record would qualify as a regular entry except that the person who furnished the information was not acting in the routine of the business. However, her statement independently qualifies as a statement of pedigree (if she is unavailable) or as a statement made for purposes of diagnosis or treatment, and hence each link in the chain falls under sufficient assurance. Or, further to illustrate, a dying declaration may incorporate a declaration against interest by another declarant. See McCormick § 290, p. 611."

Rule 805 is consistent with North Carolina practice. See, e.g., State v. Connley, 295 N.C. 327 (1978).

CASE NOTES

National Transportation Safety Board Report. — Where National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) reports contained statements by pilots, witnesses and other non-officials who were not present to testify at trial, trial court properly exercised its discretion in excluding the hearsay portions thereof; to the extent portions were admissible independent of the report, those portions were admissible. Bolick v. Sunbird Airlines, 96 N.C. App. 443, 386 S.E.2d 76 (1989), appeal of right allowed pursuant to N.C.R.A.P., Rule 16(b) and petition denied as to additional issues, 326 N.C. 363, 389 S.E.2d 811 (1990).

Cited in Ferguson v. Williams, 101 N.C. App. 265, 399 S.E.2d 389 (1991); State v. Hurst, 127 N.C. App. 54, 487 S.E.2d 846 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1031, 118 S. Ct. 1324, 140 L. Ed. 2d 486 (1998).

Rule 806. Attacking and supporting credibility of declarant.

When a hearsay statement has been admitted in evidence, the credibility of the declarant may be attacked, and if attacked may be supported, by any evidence which would be admissible for those purposes if declarant had testified as a witness. Evidence of a statement or conduct by the declarant at any time, inconsistent with his hearsay statement, is not subject to any requirement that he may have been afforded an opportunity to deny or explain. If the party against whom a hearsay statement has been admitted calls the declarant as a witness, the party is entitled to examine him on the statement as if under cross-examination. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 806 except that the phrase "or a statement defined in 801(d)(2)(C), (D), or (E)" has been omitted from the first sentence. Fed. R. Evid. 801 treats admissions by a party-opponent as statements that are not hearsay. Since Rule 801 treats such statements as exceptions to the hearsay rule, the above phrase is superfluous.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The declarant of a hearsay statement which is admitted in evidence is in effect a witness. His credibility should in fairness be subject to impeachment and support as though he had in fact testified. See Rules 608 and 609. There are however, some special aspects of the impeaching of a hearsay declarant which require consideration. These special aspects center upon impeachment by inconsistent statement, arise from factual differences which exist between the use of hearsay and an actual witness and also between various kinds of hearsay, and involve the question of applying to declarants the general rule disallowing evidence of an inconsistent statement to impeach a witness unless he is afforded an opportunity to deny or explain. ***

The principal difference between using hearsay and an actual witness is that the inconsistent statement will in the case of the witness almost inevitably of necessity in the nature of things be a prior statement, which it is entirely possible and feasible to call to his attention, while in the case of hearsay the inconsistent statement may well be a subsequent one, which practically precludes calling it to the attention of the declarant. The result of insisting upon observation of this impossible requirement in the hearsay situation is to deny the opponent, already barred from cross-examination, any benefit of this important technique of impeachment. The writers favor allowing the subsequent statement. McCormick § 37, p. 69; 3 Wigmore § 1033. ***

When the impeaching statement was made prior to the hearsay statement, differences in the kinds of hearsay appear which arguably may justify differences in treatment. If the hearsay consisted of a simple statement by the witness, e.g., a dying declaration or a declaration against interest, the feasibility of affording him an opportunity to deny or explain encounters the same practical impossibility as where the statement is a subsequent one, just discussed, although here the impossibility arises from the total absence of anything resembling a hearing at which the matter could be put to him. The courts by a large majority have ruled in favor of allowing the statement to be used, under these circumstances. McCormick § 37, p. 69; 3 Wigmore § 1033. If, however, the hearsay consists of former testimony or a deposition, the possibility of calling the prior statement to the attention of the witness or deponent is not ruled out, since the opportunity to cross-examine was available. It might thus be concluded that with former testimony or depositions the conventional foundation should be insisted upon. Most of the cases involve depositions, and Wigmore describes them as divided. 3 Wigmore § 1031. Deposition procedures at best are cumbersome and expensive, and to require the laying of the foundation may impose an undue burden. Under the federal practice, there is no way of knowing with certainty at the time of taking a deposition whether it is merely for discovery or will ultimately end up in evidence. With respect to both former testimony and depositions the possibility exists that knowledge of the statement might not be acquired until after the time of the cross-examination. Moreover, the expanded admissibility of former testimony and depositions under Rule 804(b)(1) calls for a correspondingly expanded approach to impeachment. The rule dispenses with the requirement in all hearsay situations, which is readily administered and best calculated to lead to fair results."

In Hooper v. Moore, 48 N.C. 428 (1856), the court stated that in order to impeach the credibility of a declarant by showing an inconsistent statement made before the time when a deposition was taken, the declarant must be given an opportunity to explain. Professor Brandis is uncertain whether the requirement of an opportunity to explain bars proof of statements or conduct showing bias on the part of a hearsay declarant not present to testify; but in his view it should not. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 48, p. 183 (1982).

The provision for cross-examination of a declarant upon his hearsay statement is a corollary of general principles of cross-examination and is consistent with North Carolina practice. See N.C. Civ. Pro. Rule 32(c).

CASE NOTES

Where the witness had formed an opinion as to the prosecuting witness' character for truth and veracity based on personal knowledge gained in the course of her position as prosecuting witness' supervisor, this threshold requirement was all that was needed in order to allow her to testify as to such opinion. State v. Morrison, 84 N.C. App. 41, 351 S.E.2d 810, cert. denied 319 N.C. 408, 354 S.E.2d 724 (1987).

Rebuttal Evidence Admitted. — Evidence of an out-of-court declarant's inconsistent statements was admissible under this rule to impeach his credibility, where declarant's inculpatory statements regarding his involvement in the crime and exculpating the defendant were admitted pursuant to the defendant's motion. State v. Small, 131 N.C. App. 488, 508 S.E.2d 799 (1998).

ARTICLE 9.

Authentication and Identification.

Rule 901. Requirement of authentication or identification.

(a) General provision. — The requirement of authentication or identification as a condition precedent to admissibility is satisfied by evidence sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question is what its proponent claims.

(b) Illustrations. — By way of illustration only, and not by way of limitation, the following are examples of authentication or identification conforming with the requirements of this rule:

(1) Testimony of Witness with Knowledge. — Testimony that a matter is what it is claimed to be.

(2) Nonexpert Opinion on Handwriting. — Nonexpert opinion as to the genuineness of handwriting, based upon familiarity not acquired for purposes of the litigation.

(3) Comparison by Trier or Expert Witness. — Comparison by the trier of fact or by expert witnesses with specimens which have been authenticated.

(4) Distinctive Characteristics and the Like. — Appearance, contents, substance, internal patterns, or other distinctive characteristics, taken in conjunction with circumstances.

(5) Voice Identification. — Identification of a voice, whether heard firsthand or through mechanical or electronic transmission or recording, by opinion based upon hearing the voice at any time under circumstances connecting it with the alleged speaker.

(6) Telephone Conversations. — Telephone conversations, by evidence that a call was made to the number assigned at the time by the telephone company to a particular person or business, if (A) in the case of a person, circumstances, including self-identification, show the person answering to be the one called, or (B) in the case of a business, the call was made to a place of business and the conversation related to business reasonably transacted over the telephone.

(7) Public Records or Reports. — Evidence that a writing authorized by law to be recorded or filed and in fact recorded or filed in a public office, or a purported public record, report, statement, or data compilation, in any form, is from the public office where items of this nature are kept.

(8) Ancient Documents or Data Compilations. — Evidence that a document or data compilation, in any form, (A) is in such condition as to create no suspicion concerning its authenticity, (B) was in a place where it, if authentic, would likely be, and (C) has been in existence 20 years or more at the time it is offered.

(9) Process or System. — Evidence describing a process or system used to produce a result and showing that the process or system produces an accurate result.

(10) Methods Provided by Statute. — Any method of authentication or identification provided by statute. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 901 except that in example (10) the word "statute" is inserted in lieu of the phrase "Act of Congress or by other rules prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority."

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Subdivision (a). Authentication and identification represent a special aspect of relevancy.  Thus a telephone conversation may be irrelevant because on an unrelated topic or because the speaker is not identified. The latter aspect is the one here involved. Wigmore describes the need for authentication as "an inherent logical necessity." 7 Wigmore § 2129, p. 564.

This requirement of showing authenticity or identity falls in the category of relevancy dependent upon fulfillment of a condition of fact and is governed by the procedure set forth in Rule 104(b).

The common law approach to authentication of documents has been criticized as an 'attitude of agnosticism,' McCormick, Cases on Evidence 388, n. 4 (3rd ed. 1956), as one which 'departs sharply from men's customs in ordinary affairs,' and as presenting only a slight obstacle to the introduction of forgeries in comparison to the time and expense devoted to proving genuine writings which correctly show their origin on their face, McCormick § 185, pp. 395, 396. Today, such available procedures as requests to admit and pretrial conference afford the means of eliminating much of the need for authentication or identification. Also, significant inroads upon the traditional insistence on authentication and identification have been made by accepting as at least prima facie genuine items of the kind treated in Rule 902, infra. However, the need for suitable methods of proof still remains, since criminal cases pose their own obstacles to the use of preliminary procedures, unforeseen contingencies may arise, and cases of genuine controversy will still occur."

Subdivision (a) is in accord with North Carolina practice.

With respect to subdivision (b), the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The treatment of authentication and identification draws largely upon the experience embodied in the common law and in statutes to furnish illustrative applications of the general principle set forth in subdivision (a). The examples are not intended as an exclusive enumeration of allowable methods but are meant to guide and suggest, leaving room for growth and development in this area of the law.

The examples relate for the most part to documents, with some attention given to voice communications and computer printouts. As Wigmore noted, no special rules have been developed for authenticating chattels. Wigmore, Code of Evidence § 2086 (3rd ed. 1942).

It should be observed that compliance with requirements of authentication or identification by no means assures admission of an item into evidence, as other bars, hearsay for example, may remain.

Example (1) contemplates a broad spectrum ranging from testimony of a witness who was present at the signing of a document to testimony establishing narcotics as taken from an accused and accounting for custody through the period until trial, including laboratory analysis."

Example (1) is in accord with North Carolina practice.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Example (2) states conventional doctrine as to lay identification of handwriting, which recognizes that a sufficient familiarity with the handwriting of another person may be acquired by seeing him write, by exchanging correspondence, or by other means, to afford a basis for identifying it on subsequent occasions. McCormick § 189.  Testimony based upon familiarity acquired for purposes of the litigation is reserved to the expert under the example which follows."

Example (2) is in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 197 (1982).

Example (3) is comparison by the trier of fact or by expert witnesses with specimens that have been authenticated. In State v. LeDuc, 306 N.C. 62 (1982), the Court permitted handwriting comparisons by the jury unaided by lay or expert testimony. G.S. 8-40, which should be repealed upon enactment of this rule, requires that the exemplar used for comparison be "proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine". However, the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The history of common law restrictions upon the technique of proving or disproving the genuineness of a disputed specimen of handwriting through comparison with a genuine specimen, by either the testimony of expert witnesses or direct viewing by the triers themselves, is detailed in 7 Wigmore §§ 1991-1994. In breaking away, the English Common Law Procedure Act of 1854, 17 and 18 Vict., c. 125, § 27, cautiously allowed expert or trier to use exemplars 'proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine' for purposes of comparison. The language found its way into numerous statutes in this country, e.g., California Evidence Code §§ 1417, 1418. While explainable as a measure of prudence in the process of breaking with precedent in the handwriting situation, the reservation to the judge of the question of the genuineness of exemplars and the imposition of an unusually high standard of persuasion are at variance with the general treatment of relevancy which depends upon fulfillment of a condition of fact. Rule 104(b). No similar attitude is found in other comparison situations, e.g., ballistics comparison by jury ... or by experts ... and no reason appears for its continued existence in handwriting cases. Consequently Example (3) sets no higher standard for handwriting specimens and treats all comparison situations alike, to be governed by Rule 104(b).

Precedent supports the acceptance of visual comparison as sufficiently satisfying preliminary authentication requirements for admission in evidence. ***

Example (4). The characteristics of the offered item itself, considered in the light of circumstances, afford authentication techniques in great variety. Thus a document or telephone conversation may be shown to have emanated from a particular person by virtue of its disclosing knowledge of facts known peculiarly to him ...; similarly, a letter may be authenticated by content and circumstances indicating it was in reply to a duly authenticated one.  Language patterns may indicate authenticity or its opposite."

Example (4) is in accord with North Carolina practice. See generally Brandis, supra, §§ 195, 236.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Example (5). Since aural voice identification is not a subject of expert testimony, the requisite familiarity may be acquired either before or after the particular speaking which is the subject of the identification, in this respect resembling visual identification of a person rather than identification of handwriting. Cf. Example (2), supra."

Example (5) is in accord with North Carolina practice. See generally Brandis, supra, § 96.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Example (6). The cases are in agreement that a mere assertion of his identity by a person talking on the telephone is not sufficient evidence of the authenticity of the conversation and that additional evidence of his identity is required. The additional evidence need not fall in any set pattern. Thus the content of his statements or the reply technique, under Example (4), supra, or voice identification, under Example (5), may furnish the necessary foundation. Outgoing calls made by the witness involve additional factors bearing upon authenticity. The calling of a number assigned by the telephone company reasonably supports the assumption that the listing is correct and that the number is the one reached. If the number is that of a place of business, the mass of authority allows an ensuing conversation if it relates to business reasonably transacted over the telephone, on the theory that the maintenance of the telephone connection is an invitation to do business without further identification. Otherwise, some additional circumstance of identification of the speaker is required. The authorities divide on the question whether the self-identifying statement of the person answering suffices. Example (6) answers in the affirmative on the assumption that usual conduct respecting telephone calls furnish adequate assurances of regularity, bearing in mind that the entire matter is open to exploration before the trier of fact."

Part (A) of Example (6) is in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis, supra, § 96. Part (B) permits identity to be established by evidence that the call was made to a place of business and the conversation related to business reasonably transacted over the telephone. There are no North Carolina cases directly on this point.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Example (7). Public records are regularly authenticated by proof of custody, without more. McCormick § 191; 7 Wigmore §§ 2158, 2159. The example extends the principle to include data stored in computers and similar methods, of which increasing use in the public records area may be expected."

Example (7) is in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis, supra, § 195.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Example (8). The familiar ancient document rule of the common law is extended to include data stored electronically or by other similar means. Since the importance of appearance diminishes in this situation, the importance of custody or place where found increases correspondingly. This expansion is necessary in view of the widespread use of methods of storing data in forms other than conventional written records.

Any time period selected is bound to be arbitrary. The common law period of 30 years is here reduced to 20 years, with some shift of emphasis from the probable unavailability of witnesses to the unlikeliness of a still viable fraud after the lapse of time. ***

The application of Example (8) is not subject to any limitation to title documents or to any requirement that possession, in the case of a title document, has been consistent with the document. See McCormick § 190."

Example (8) is in accord with North Carolina practice, except that the period of 30 years is reduced to 20 years. See Brandis, supra, § 196.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Example (9) is designed for situations in which the accuracy of a result is dependent upon a process or system which produces it. X-rays afford a familiar instance. Among more recent developments is the computer.... Example (9) does not, of course, foreclose taking judicial notice of the accuracy of the process or system."

Example (9) is in accord with North Carolina practice.

Example (10) makes clear that methods of authentication provided by the Rules of Civil Procedure or other statutes are not intended to be superseded. Illustrative are the provisions for authentication of official records in Civil Procedure Rule 44 and for the authentication of depositions in Civil Procedure Rule 30(f).

CASE NOTES

Every writing sought to be admitted must be properly authenticated, and must satisfy the requirements of the "best evidence rule," § 8C-1, Rule 1002, or one of its exceptions, set forth in § 8C-1, Rule 1003, et seq. Furthermore, if offered for a hearsay purpose, the writing must fall within one or more of the exceptions to the hearsay rule established by Rules 803 and 804. FCX, Inc. v. Caudill, 85 N.C. App. 272, 354 S.E.2d 767 (1987).

Authentication under this rule is only one prerequisite to admissibility. The document still must satisfy other pertinent evidentiary standards. Concrete Serv. Corp. v. Investors Group, Inc., 79 N.C. App. 678, 340 S.E.2d 755, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 333, 346 S.E.2d 137 (1986).

Compliance with the facial requirements of subsection (a) of this rule does not mean (i) that an exhibit automatically qualifies as relevant under § 8C-1, Rule 401 or (ii) if relevant, that it is admissible under § 8C-1, Rule 802. State v. Patterson, 103 N.C. App. 195, 405 S.E.2d 200, aff'd, 332 N.C. 409, 420 S.E.2d 98 (1992).

Testimony of Mother Regarding Handwriting. — Where the victim's mother testified that she was familiar with her daughter's handwriting, that the letter was written in her daughter's handwriting and that she recognized the signature as that of her daughter, there was sufficient evidence of authenticity to support the trial court's admission of letter into evidence. State v. Alston, 341 N.C. 198, 461 S.E.2d 687 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1148, 116 S. Ct. 1021, 134 L. Ed. 2d 100 (1996).

Post-Accident Drug Test. — Trial court did not err in admitting laboratory report of post-accident drug test as a business record. Conner v. Continental Indus. Chem., Inc., 123 N.C. App. 70, 472 S.E.2d 176 (1996).

Stipulation that a document is genuine authenticates a document. Olympic Prods. Co. v. Roof Sys., 88 N.C. App. 315, 363 S.E.2d 367 (1988).

Identity of telephone caller may be established by direct or circumstantial evidence anytime throughout the development of the case. Santora, McKay & Ranieri v. Franklin, 79 N.C. App. 585, 339 S.E.2d 799 (1986).

It is not necessary that proof of identification of telephone caller be made before introduction of evidence of the conversation. Santora, McKay & Ranieri v. Franklin, 79 N.C. App. 585, 339 S.E.2d 799 (1986).

Identification of telephone caller may be established by evidence that the caller disclosed knowledge of facts known peculiarly to him. Santora, McKay & Ranieri v. Franklin, 79 N.C. App. 585, 339 S.E.2d 799 (1986).

But Not Merely by Statement of His Name. — When there is no other evidence to authenticate the identity of speaker who placed call except that he stated his name, the evidence is inadmissible as hearsay. Santora, McKay & Ranieri v. Franklin, 79 N.C. App. 585, 339 S.E.2d 799 (1986).

However, the State's failure to properly authenticate telephone calls was not reversible error; the witnesses who testified about these phone calls did not recognize the defendant's voice but simply accepted the caller's self-identification. State v. Jones, 137 N.C. App. 221, 527 S.E2d 700 (2000).

Fact that defendant was the sole occupant of the residence in which documents were found was sufficient for them to be admitted into evidence; the weight given the evidence was for the jury to decide. State v. Mercer, 89 N.C. App. 714, 367 S.E.2d 9 (1988).

Jury Review of Writings. — Before handwritings may be submitted to a jury for its comparison, the trial court must satisfy itself that there is enough similarity between the genuine handwriting and the disputed handwriting such that the jury could reasonably infer that the disputed handwriting is also genuine. State v. Owen, 130 N.C. App. 505, 503 S.E.2d 426 (1998), cert. denied, 349 N.C. 372, 525 S.E.2d 188 (1998).

Authentication of Tape Recording. — Under this rule, testimony as to accuracy based on personal knowledge is all that is required to authenticate a tape recording, and a recording that so authenticated is admissible if it was legally obtained and contains otherwise competent evidence. State v. Stager, 329 N.C. 278, 406 S.E.2d 876 (1991).

The authentication requirements of this rule have superseded and replaced the seven-pronged test in State v. Lynch, 279 N.C. 1, 181 S.E.2d 561 (1971), for the admission of tape-recorded evidence. State v. Stager, 329 N.C. 278, 406 S.E.2d 876 (1991).

The trial court erred by excluding a tape recording offered to impeach testimony of co-conspirator based on improper foundation, where a witness had sufficient personal knowledge of coconspirator's voice to properly identify her voice from a prior relationship, and the State and defendant stipulated to the date of the tape recording. State v. Withers, 111 N.C. App. 340, 432 S.E.2d 692, cert. denied, 335 N.C. 180, 438 S.E.2d 207 (1993).

Photographs Held Properly Authenticated. — Where the witness clearly indicated that the photographs accurately portrayed what he had observed, the photographs were properly authenticated for illustrative purposes. State v. Alston, 91 N.C. App. 707, 373 S.E.2d 306 (1988).

Right of Way Agreement Held Authenticated. — Copy of a right of way agreement accompanied by certification signed by the manager of the Right of Way Branch of the Department of Transportation held authenticated. DOT v. Bollinger, 121 N.C. App. 606, 468 S.E.2d 796 (1996).

Ancient Documents or Data Compilations. — Documents relating to laboratory experiments were admissible pursuant to subdivision (b)(8) of this rule, where suspicion concerning the authenticity of the documents was raised by their condition or internal consistency; their archival locations were logical for authentic documents; and they had been in existence for more than 20 years. Rowan County Bd. of Educ. v. United States Gypsum Co., 103 N.C. App. 288, 407 S.E.2d 860 (1991), aff'd in part, disc. rev. improvidently granted, 332 N.C. 1, 418 S.E.2d 648 (1992).

Admission of police officer's testimony concerning identification of defendant's voice heard over a radio transmitter was proper even though officer had never previously heard defendant's voice over a radio transmitter; police officer had personally known defendant for several years and had had conversations with defendant on several occasions prior to defendant's arrest. State v. Mullen, 98 N.C. App. 472, 391 S.E.2d 520 (1990).

Evidence Held Admissible. — Where witness testified concerning his familiarity with defendant's handwriting, there was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's admission of handwritten letter into evidence. State v. Wiggins, 334 N.C. 18, 431 S.E.2d 755 (1993).

Where victim identified paper writing as the yellow paper on which she wrote the statement for detective and testified that the handwriting on the papers was her handwriting when she was eight years old and detective testified that he gave her a blank yellow legal pad and asked her to write down what the defendant had done to her, the written statement was authenticated by the testimony of victim and detective. State v. Woody, 124 N.C. App. 296, 477 S.E.2d 462 (1996).

The trial court properly determined that the previously authenticated signature of a murder defendant was similar enough to the signature on a letter written to the murder victim to allow the letter to be admitted into evidence, even though there was no expert testimony on the similarity of the signatures. State v. Owen, 130 N.C. App. 505, 503 S.E.2d 426 (1998), cert. denied, 349 N.C. 372, 525 S.E.2d 188 (1998).

A 911 audiotape was properly authenticated where (1) an employee of the 911 center testified that the tape was an exact copy of the digital telephone recording made the night of the incident at issue, and that he had listened both to the original and to the copy and that they were identical, (2) the employee identified the voices of 911 emergency center employees on the tape, and (3) a witness and the defendant testified that they could identify the other voices on the tape. State v. Rourke, 143 N.C. App. 672, 548 S.E.2d 188 (2001).

A pornographic videotape seized from defendant's residence, which one of the victims of his sexual offense testified she and the other victim watched with him, was properly authenticated by an officer's testimony that it was the same videotape the officer had seized. State v. Williamson, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 54, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 945 (2001).

Evidence Held Inadmissible. — The best evidence rule was implicated when defendants handed witness a memorandum and asked him what it said. Because witness denied receiving the memorandum, the exhibit was not authenticated; as a result, it was not admissible, and witness could not testify about its contents. Hedgecock Bldrs. Supply Co. v. White, 92 N.C. App. 535, 375 S.E.2d 164 (1989).

Failure to Object at Trial. — Defendant did not object at trial to any lack of proper authentication of incriminating photographs; therefore he could not on appeal assign error to the admissibility of the photographs on this ground. State v. Terry, 329 N.C. 191, 404 S.E.2d 658 (1991).

Because the State laid a sufficient foundation to establish the trustworthiness of the Mutual Aid Agreement between Robeson County and all police departments in the county, and because defendant neither moved to pass the agreement among the jurors nor cross-examine the police captain on its contents, defendant could not subsequently complain that the jurors never saw the detailed provisions of the agreement. State v. Locklear, 136 N.C. App. 716, 525 S.E.2d 813 (2000).

Applied in State v. Ruiz, 77 N.C. App. 425, 335 S.E.2d 32 (1985); State v. Holder, 331 N.C. 462, 418 S.E.2d 197 (1992); State v. Gibson, 333 N.C. 29, 424 S.E.2d 95 (1992); State v. Baker, 112 N.C. App. 410, 435 S.E.2d 812 (1993).

Stated in State v. Lee, 335 N.C. 244, 439 S.E.2d 547 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 891, 115 S. Ct. 239, 130 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1994).

Rule 902. Self-authentication.

Extrinsic evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to admissibility is not required with respect to the following:

(1) Domestic Public Documents Under Seal. — A document bearing a seal purporting to be that of the United States, or of any state, district, commonwealth, territory or insular possession thereof, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or of a political subdivision, department, officer, or agency thereof, and a signature purporting to be an attestation or execution.

(2) Domestic Public Documents Not Under Seal. — A document purporting to bear the signature in his official capacity of an officer or employee of any entity included in paragraph (1) hereof, having no seal, if a public officer having a seal and having official duties in the district or political subdivision of the officer or employee certifies under seal that the signer has the official capacity and that the signature is genuine.

(3) Foreign Public Documents. — A document purporting to be executed or attested in his official capacity by a person authorized by the laws of a foreign country to make the execution or attestation, and accompanied by a final certification as to the genuineness of the signature and official position (A) of the executing or attesting person, or (B) of any foreign official whose certificate of genuineness of signature and official position relates to the execution or attestation or is in a chain of certificates of genuineness of signature and official position relating to the execution or attestation. A final certification may be made by a secretary of embassy or legation, consul general, consul, vice consul, or consular agent of the United States, or a diplomatic or consular official of the foreign country assigned or accredited to the United States. If reasonable opportunity has been given to all parties to investigate the authenticity and accuracy of official documents, the court may, for good cause shown, order that they be treated as presumptively authentic without final certification or permit them to be evidenced by an attested summary with or without final certification.

(4) Certified Copies of Public Records. — A copy of an official record or report or entry therein, or of a document authorized by law to be recorded or filed and actually recorded or filed in a public office, including data compilations in any form, certified as correct by the custodian or other person authorized to make the certification, by certificate complying with paragraph (1), (2), or (3) or complying with any law of the United States or of this State.

(5) Official Publications. — Books, pamphlets, or other publications purporting to be issued by public authority.

(6) Newspapers and Periodicals. — Printed materials purporting to be newspapers or periodicals.

(7) Trade Inscriptions and the Like. — Inscriptions, signs, tags, or labels purporting to have been affixed in the course of business and indicating ownership, control, or origin.

(8) Acknowledged Documents. — Documents accompanied by a certificate of acknowledgment executed in the manner provided by law by a notary public or other officer authorized by law to take acknowledgments.

(9) Commercial Paper and Related Documents. — Commercial paper, signatures thereon, and documents relating thereto to the extent provided by general commercial law.

(10) Presumptions Created by Law. — Any signature, document, or other matter declared by any law of the United States or of this State to be presumptively or prima facie genuine or authentic. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule differs from Fed. R. Evid. 902 in that the phrase "or the Panama Canal Zone" has been deleted from paragraph (1). Paragraph (4) differs from the federal rule in that the phrase "any law of the United States or of this State" has been substituted in lieu of the phrase "of this Rule or complying with any Act of Congress or rule prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority." Paragraph (10) differs from the federal rule in that the phrase "any law of the United States or of this State" is used in lieu of the phrase "Act of Congress".

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Case law and statutes have, over the years, developed a substantial body of instances in which authenticity is taken as sufficiently established for purposes of admissibility without extrinsic evidence to that effect, sometimes for reasons of policy but perhaps more often because practical considerations reduce the possibility of unauthenticity to a very small dimension. The present rule collects and incorporates these situations, in some instances expanding them to occupy a larger area which their underlying considerations justify. In no instance is the opposite party foreclosed from disputing authenticity."

Paragraph (1) provides that a document bearing the seal of an officer of the government and a signature purporting to be an attestation or execution does not require extrinsic evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to admissibility. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 153, at 610 (1982). The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The acceptance of documents bearing a public seal and signature, most often encountered in practice in the form of acknowledgments or certificates authenticating copies of public records is actually of broad application. Whether theoretically based in whole or in part upon judicial notice, the practical underlying considerations are that forgery is a crime and detection is fairly easy and certain. 7 Wigmore § 2161, p. 638...."

Paragraph (2) is derived from Federal Civil Procedure Rule 44. North Carolina Civil Procedure Rule 44, which is similar, should be amended to conform to Rule 902. Paragraph (2) applies to documents as well as public records. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"While statutes are found which raise a presumption of genuineness of purported official signatures in the absence of an official seal, 7 Wigmore § 2167 ... the greater ease of effecting a forgery under these circumstances is apparent. Hence this paragraph of the rule calls for authentication by an officer who has a seal. Notarial acts by members of the armed forces and other special situations are covered in paragraph (10)."

Paragraph (3) is derived from Federal Civil Procedure Rule 44(a) (2), which was amended in 1966 to provide for greater clarity, efficiency, and flexibility in the procedure for authenticating copies of foreign official records. North Carolina Civil Procedure Rule 44 should be amended to conform to Rule 902. Paragraph (3) applies to public documents rather than being limited to public records.

Paragraph (4) is confined to official records and reports, and documents authorized to be recorded or filed and actually recorded or filed. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The common law and innumerable statutes have recognized the procedure of authenticating copies of public records by certificate. The certificate qualifies as a public document, receivable as authentic when in conformity with paragraphs (1), (2), or (3).  It will be observed that the certification procedure here provided extends only to public records, reports, and recorded documents, all including data compilations, and does not apply to public documents generally. Hence documents provable when presented in original form under paragraphs (1), (2), or (3) may not be provable by certified copy under paragraph (4)."

G.S. 1A-1, Rule 44, G.S. 8-34, G.S. 8-35, G.S. 8-18, G.S. 8-20, G.S. 47-31, and G.S. 47-34 should be amended to conform to Rule 902.

Paragraph (5) has the same effect as North Carolina Civil Procedure Rule 44(a), which should be amended to conform to Rule 902. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Dispensing with preliminary proof of the genuineness of purportedly official publications, most commonly encountered in connection with statutes, court reports, rules, and regulations, has been greatly enlarged by statutes and decisions. 5 Wigmore § 1684. Paragraph (5), it will be noted, does not confer admissibility upon all official publications; it merely provides a means whereby their authenticity may be taken as established for purposes of admissibility. Rule 44(a) of the Rules of Civil Procedure has been to the same effect."

Paragraph (6) changes North Carolina practice by providing that printed materials purporting to be newspapers or periodicals are self-authenticating. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The likelihood of forgery of newspapers or periodicals is slight indeed. Hence no danger is apparent in receiving them. Establishing the authenticity of the publication may, of course, leave still open questions of authority and responsibility for items therein contained. See 7 Wigmore § 2150."

Paragraph (7) changes North Carolina practice by providing that inscriptions, signs, tags, or labels purporting to have been affixed in the course of business and indicating ownership, control, or origin are self-authenticating. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Several factors justify dispensing with preliminary proof of genuineness of commercial and mercantile labels and the like. The risk of forgery is minimal. Trademark infringement involves serious penalties. Great efforts are devoted to inducing the public to buy in reliance on brand names, and substantial protection is given them."

Paragraph (8) extends the exception for acknowledged title documents to include other acknowledged documents. The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"In virtually every state, acknowledged title documents are receivable in evidence without further proof. Statutes are collected in 5 Wigmore § 1676. If this authentication suffices for documents of the importance of those affecting titles, logic scarcely permits denying this method when other kinds of documents are involved."

Paragraph (9) provides that commercial paper, signatures thereon, and documents relating thereto are authenticated to the extent provided by general commercial law. The term "general commercial law" refers to the Uniform Commercial Code, except that federal commercial law will apply when federal commercial paper is involved. Pertinent provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code are G.S. 25-1-202, 25-3-307, and 25-3-510, dealing with third-party documents, signatures on negotiable instruments, protests, and statements of dishonor.

Paragraph (10) provides for the authentication of any signature, document, or other matter declared by any federal or North Carolina statute to be presumptively or prima facie genuine or authentic.

CASE NOTES

Cause of Death — Death Certificate. — In case brought by widow of insured to recover under life insurance policy, coroner's statement on death certificate that the gunshot wound which killed the insured was intentionally self-inflicted was not based on personal knowledge of the events which took place and could only be described as hearsay and conclusory. The admission of such a statement would thwart the fairness of the trial and in essence shift the burden of proof on the issue of the cause of death from defendant to plaintiff. Therefore, the exclusion of this statement on the death certificate was proper. Drain v. United Servs. Life Ins. Co., 85 N.C. App. 174, 354 S.E.2d 269, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 630, 360 S.E.2d 85 (1987).

Same — Medical Examiner's Report. — In case brought by widow of insured to recover under life insurance policy, statements listing suicide as the cause of death in medical examiner's report were properly excluded at trial. Drain v. United Servs. Life Ins. Co., 85 N.C. App. 174, 354 S.E.2d 269, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 630, 360 S.E.2d 85 (1987).

Excerpts from Publication. — The trial court did not err in allowing plaintiffs to present excerpts from a publication in opposition to the motion for summary judgment hearing where the publication was self-authenticating and could be admitted without any extrinsic showing of legitimacy pursuant to this section. Pierson v. Cumberland County Civic Ctr. Comm'n, 141 N.C. App. 628, 540 S.E.2d 810 (2000).

Rule 903. Subscribing witness' testimony unnecessary.

The testimony of a subscribing witness is not necessary to authenticate a writing unless required by the laws of the jurisdiction whose laws govern the validity of the writing. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 903.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The common law required that attesting witnesses be produced or accounted for. Today the requirement has generally been abolished except with respect to documents which must be attested to be valid, e.g., wills in some states."

The requirement of proof by the attesting witness was abolished by G.S. 8-38, which should be repealed upon enactment of Rule 903. Rule 903 is not intended to affect the method and manner of proving instruments for registration.

ARTICLE 10.

Contents of Writings, Recordings and Photographs.

Rule 1001. Definitions.

For the purposes of this Article the following definitions are applicable:

(1) Writings and Recordings. — "Writings" and "recordings" consist of letters, words, sounds, or numbers, or their equivalent, set down by handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photographing, magnetic impulse, mechanical or electronic recording, or other form of data compilation.

(2) Photographs. — "Photographs" include still photographs, x-ray films, video tapes, and motion pictures.

(3) Original. — An "original" of a writing or recording is the writing or recording itself or any counterpart intended to have the same effect by a person executing or issuing it. An "original" of a photograph includes the negative or any print therefrom. If data are stored in a computer or similar device, any printout or other output readable by sight, shown to reflect the data accurately, is an "original."

(4) Duplicate. — A "duplicate" is a counterpart produced by the same impression as the original, or from the same matrix, or by means of photography, including enlargements and miniatures, or by mechanical or electronic re-recording, or by chemical reproduction, or by other equivalent techniques which accurately reproduce the original. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 1001 except that the word "sounds" has been added to paragraph (1) between "words" and "or numbers".

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Paragraph (1). Traditionally the rule requiring the original centered upon accumulations of data and expressions affecting legal relations set forth in words and figures. This meant that the rule was one essentially related to writings. Present day techniques have expanded methods of storing data, yet the essential form which the information ultimately assumes for usable purposes is words and figures. Hence the considerations underlying the rule dictate its expansion to include computers, photographic systems, and other modern developments."

Paragraph (1) clarifies North Carolina law by providing that the best evidence rule applies to recordings and photographs. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 190 (1982).

With respect to Paragraph (3), the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"In most instances, what is an original will be self-evident and further refinement will be unnecessary. However, in some instances particularized definition is required. A carbon copy of a contract executed in duplicate becomes an original, as does a sales ticket carbon copy given to a customer. While strictly speaking the original of a photograph might be thought to be only the negative, practicality and common usage require that any print from the negative be regarded as a original. Similarly, practicality and usage confer the status or original upon any computer printout."

Paragraph (3) is substantially in accord with North Carolina practice. See Brandis, supra, § 190; G.S. 55-37.1 [see now G.S. 55-16-01] and G.S. 55A-27.1.

With respect to Paragraph (4), the Advisory Committee's Note states:

"The definition describes 'copies' produced by methods possessing an accuracy which virtually eliminates the possibility of error. Copies thus produced are given the status of originals in large measure by Rule 1003, infra. Copies subsequently produced manually, whether handwritten or typed, are not within the definition. It should be noted that what is an original for some purposes may be a duplicate for others. Thus a bank's microfilm record of checks cleared is the original as a record. However, a print offered as a copy of a check whose contents are in controversy is a duplicate."

Rule 1002. Requirement of original.

To prove the content of a writing, recording, or photograph, the original writing, recording, or photograph is required, except as otherwise provided in these rules or by statute. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 1002.

The rule is the familiar "best evidence rule" expanded to include explicitly writings, recordings, and photographs, as defined in Rule 1001(1) and (2), supra. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 190, at 100 (1982). However, the requirement for the original is overridden in many instances by other rules such as Rule 1003, which allows duplicates to be admitted.

The rule in North Carolina is consistent with Rule 1002 in that it requires the original of a writing only when its content is sought to be proved. Id.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Application of the rule requires a resolution of the question whether contents are sought to be proved. Thus an event may be proved by nondocumentary evidence, even though a written record of it was made. If, however, the event is sought to be proved by the written record, the rule applies. For example, payment may be proved without producing the written receipt which was given. Earnings may be proved without producing books of account in which they are entered.  Nor does the rule apply to testimony that books or records have been examined and found not to contain any reference to a designated matter.

The assumption should not be made that the rule will come into operation on every occasion when use is made of a photograph in evidence. On the contrary, the rule will seldom apply to ordinary photographs. In most instances a party wishes to introduce the item and the question raised is the propriety of receiving it in evidence. Cases in which an offer is made of the testimony of a witness as to what he saw in a photograph or motion picture, without producing the same, are most unusual. The usual course is for a witness on the stand to identify the photograph or motion picture as a correct representation of events which he saw or of a scene with which he is familiar. In fact he adopts the picture as his testimony, or, in common parlance, uses the picture to illustrate his testimony. Under these circumstances, no effort is made to prove the contents of the picture, and the rule is inapplicable. ***

On occasion, however, situations arise in which contents are sought to be proved. Copyright, defamation, and invasion of privacy by photograph or motion picture fall in this category. Similarly as to situations in which the picture is offered as having independent probative value, e.g., automatic photograph of bank robber.  The most commonly encountered of this latter group is of course, the X-ray, with substantial authority calling for production of the original.

It should be noted, however, that Rule 703, supra, allows an expert to give an opinion based on matters not in evidence, and the present rule must be read as being limited accordingly in its application. Hospital records which may be admitted as business records under Rule 803(6) commonly contain reports interpreting X-rays by the staff radiologist, who qualifies as an expert, and these reports need not be excluded from the records by the instant rule."

CASE NOTES

"Best Evidence" Rule Articulated. — The so-called "best evidence" rule merely requires the exclusion of secondary evidence offered to prove the contents of a document whenever the original document itself is available. United States Leasing Corp. v. Everett, Creech, Hancock & Herzig, 88 N.C. App. 418, 363 S.E.2d 665, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 329, 369 S.E.2d 364 (1988).

Every writing sought to be admitted must be properly authenticated, and must satisfy the requirements of this rule, the "best evidence rule," or one of its exceptions, set forth in § 8C-1, Rule 1003, et seq. Furthermore, if offered for a hearsay purpose, the writing must fall within one or more of the exceptions to the hearsay rule established by § 8C-1, Rules 803 and 804. FCX, Inc. v. Caudill, 85 N.C. App. 272, 354 S.E.2d 767 (1987).

To prove the content of a writing, the original is usually required. Concrete Serv. Corp. v. Investors Group, Inc., 79 N.C. App. 678, 340 S.E.2d 755, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 333, 346 S.E.2d 137 (1986).

If a party elects to prove an independent fact through the content of a writing, the best evidence rule applies and if the writing cannot be introduced in evidence, the rule prohibits inquiry into its contents to establish the fact. Hedgecock Bldrs. Supply Co. v. White, 92 N.C. App. 535, 375 S.E.2d 164 (1989).

When Document Must Be Produced. —

This rule, better known as the "best evidence rule," requires the production of a document only where the contents or terms of the document are in question. Drain v. United Servs. Life Ins. Co., 85 N.C. App. 174, 354 S.E.2d 269, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 630, 360 S.E.2d 85 (1987).

Best Evidence Rule Not Applicable. — Where detective was not attempting to prove the contents of the tape recording or the transcript of the recorded statement given by defendant, but used the transcript of the recorded statement to refresh his personal recollection of defendant's responses to the questions asked, the "best evidence" rule did not apply. State v. Brown, 335 N.C. 477, 439 S.E.2d 589 (1994).

Best Evidence Rule Not Violated. — Where trial court admitted testimony of witness regarding papers she had found in house where she lived with defendant and where witness testified that in collecting defendant's personal belongings at request of defendant's parents she came upon folder containing papers that related to life insurance policy on victim and in which she saw defendant's name listed first as beneficiary, admission of testimony did not violate best evidence rule since contents of policy insuring life of defendant's husband were not in question and witness's testimony as to policy was collateral. State v. Clark, 324 N.C. 146, 377 S.E.2d 54 (1989).

Failure to Produce Best Evidence. — Where defendant sought not only to introduce document, but also to prove that its contents were what he claimed they were, i.e., a list of bank accounts with the names of the persons authorized to sign on them, for this purpose original signature cards clearly were the best evidence, and as no reason was given for their nonproduction, the court did not err in excluding the document. Concrete Serv. Corp. v. Investors Group, Inc., 79 N.C. App. 678, 340 S.E.2d 755, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 333, 346 S.E.2d 137 (1986).

The "except as otherwise provided ... by statute" exception under both § 8C-1, Rule 802 and this rule clearly covers written statements under § 20-279.21(b)(3). Crowder v. North Carolina Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 79 N.C. App. 551, 340 S.E.2d 127, cert. denied, 316 N.C. 731, 345 S.E.2d 387 (1986).

The order in which notes written by defendant were read and introduced as exhibits had no bearing on whether the writing itself violated the best evidence rule, and in view of the fact that the State produced the original notes in proving the contents of the notes, there was no violation of the best evidence rule. State v. Wingard, 317 N.C. 590, 346 S.E.2d 638 (1986).

Applied in State v. Jones, 98 N.C. App. 342, 391 S.E.2d 52 (1990); State v. Walker, 343 N.C. 216, 469 S.E.2d 919 (1996); State v. York, 347 N.C. 79, 489 S.E.2d 380 (1997).

Rule 1003. Admissibility of duplicates.

A duplicate is admissible to the same extent as an original unless (1) a genuine question is raised as to the authenticity of the original or (2) in the circumstances it would be unfair to admit the duplicate in lieu of the original. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 1003.

Rule 1003 departs from the common law in North Carolina and other jurisdictions by providing that a duplicate is admissible to the same extent as an original unless a genuine question as to the authenticity of the original is raised or it would be unfair to admit the duplicate in the particular case. Traditionally, in North Carolina no special showing has been necessary in order to require production of the original.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"When the only concern is with getting the words or other contents before the court with accuracy and precision, then a counterpart serves equally as well as the original, if the counterpart is the product of a method which insures accuracy and genuineness. By definition in Rule 1001(4), supra, a 'duplicate' possesses this character. Therefore, if no genuine issue exists as to authenticity and no other reason exists for requiring the original, a duplicate is admissible under the rule. Other reasons for requiring the original may be present when only a part of the original is reproduced and the remainder is needed for cross-examination or may disclose matters qualifying the part offered or otherwise useful to the opposing party."

Courts should be liberal in permitting questions of genuineness to be raised. The court should examine the quality of the duplicate, the specificity and sincerity of the challenge, the importance of the evidence to the case, and the burdens of producing the original before determining whether a genuine question of authenticity is raised.

CASE NOTES

"Best Evidence" Rule Articulated. — The so-called "best evidence" rule merely requires the exclusion of secondary evidence offered to prove the contents of a document whenever the original document itself is available. United States Leasing Corp. v. Everett, Creech, Hancock & Herzig, 88 N.C. App. 418, 363 S.E.2d 665, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 329, 369 S.E.2d 364 (1988).

Every writing sought to be admitted must be properly authenticated, and must satisfy the requirements of the "best evidence rule," § 8C-1, Rule 1002, or one of its exceptions, set forth in this rule. Furthermore, if offered for a hearsay purpose, the writing must fall within one or more of the exceptions to the hearsay rule established by § 8C-1, Rules 803 and 804. FCX, Inc. v. Caudill, 85 N.C. App. 272, 354 S.E.2d 767 (1987).

Duplicate trust agreement was admissible, where the original trust agreement had not been located despite plaintiff's attempt to issue a subpoena duces tecum to defendant. Investors Title Ins. Co. v. Herzig, 101 N.C. App. 127, 398 S.E.2d 659 (1990), rev'd on other grounds, 330 N.C. 681, 413 S.E.2d 269 (1992).

Rule 1004. Admissibility of other evidence of contents.

The original is not required, and other evidence of the contents of a writing, recording, or photograph is admissible if:

(1) Originals Lost or Destroyed. — All originals are lost or have been destroyed, unless the proponent lost or destroyed them in bad faith; or

(2) Original Not Obtainable. — No original can be obtained by any available judicial process or procedure; or

(3) Original in Possession of Opponent. — At a time when an original was under the control of a party against whom offered, he was put on notice, by the pleadings or otherwise, that the contents would be a subject of proof at the hearing, and he does not produce the original at the hearing; or

(4) Collateral Matters. — The writing, recording, or photograph is not closely related to a controlling issue. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 1004.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Basically the rule requiring the production of the original as proof of contents has developed as a rule of preference: if failure to produce the original is satisfactorily explained, secondary evidence is admissible. The instant rule specifies the circumstances under which production of the original is excused.

The rule recognizes no 'degrees' of secondary evidence."

Paragraph (1) provides that loss or destruction of the original, unless due to bad faith of the proponent, is a satisfactory explanation of nonproduction. See McCormick § 201. This paragraph is consistent with current North Carolina practice. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 192 (1982).

Paragraph (2) provides that when the original is in the possession of a third person, inability to procure it from him by resort to process or other judicial procedure is a sufficient explanation of nonproduction. The Advisory Committee's Note states that: "Judicial procedure includes subpoena duces tecum as an incident to the taking of a deposition in another jurisdiction. No further showing is required. See McCormick § 202." Extreme expense and inconvenience in obtaining the document will not constitute unavailability.

Paragraph (3) is consistent with North Carolina practice in that secondary evidence of the contents of a writing is admissible if the opponent who is in possession of the original fails, after notice, to produce it at the trial. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 193 (1982). The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"A party who has an original in his control has no need for the protection of the rule if put on notice that proof of contents will be made. He can ward off secondary evidence by offering the original. The notice procedure here provided is not to be confused with orders to produce or other discovery procedures, as the purpose of the procedure under this rule is to afford the opposite party an opportunity to produce the original, not to compel him to do so. McCormick § 203."

Under the rule, notice may be given by the pleadings. There are no North Carolina cases on this point.

Paragraph (4) is consistent with North Carolina cases in that production of the original is not required if the writing is only collaterally involved in the case. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 191 (1982). The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"While difficult to define with precision, situations arise in which no good purpose is served by production of the original. Examples are the newspaper in an action for the price of publishing defendant's advertisement, Foster-Holcomb Investment Co. v. Little Rock Publishing Co., 151 Ark. 449, 236 S.W. 597 (1922), and the streetcar transfer of plaintiff claiming status as a passenger, Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Carroll, 206 Ill. 318, 68 N.E. 1087 (1903). Numerous cases are collected in McCormick § 200, p. 412, n. 1."

Applied in State v. Jarrell, 133 N.C. App. 264, 515 S.E.2d 247 (1999).

Rule 1005. Public records.

The contents of an official record, or of a document authorized to be recorded or filed and actually recorded or filed, including data compilations in any form, if otherwise admissible, may be proved by copy, certified as correct in accordance with Rule 902 or testified to be correct by a witness who has compared it with the original. If a copy which complies with the foregoing cannot be obtained by the exercise of reasonable diligence, then other evidence of the contents may be given. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 1005.

Admission of certified copies of registered instruments and official records are currently governed by G.S. 8-18, G.S. 8-34, and G.S. 1A-1, Rule 44.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Public records call for somewhat different treatment. Removing them from their usual place of keeping would be attended by serious inconvenience to the public and to the custodian. As a consequence judicial decisions and statutes commonly hold that no explanation need be given for failure to produce the original of a public record. McCormick § 204; 4 Wigmore §§ 1215-1228. This blanket dispensation from producing or accounting for the original would open the door to the introduction of every kind of secondary evidence of contents of public records were it not for the preference given certified or compared copies. Recognition of degrees of secondary evidence in this situation is an appropriate quid pro quo for not applying the requirement of producing the original."

Rule 1006. Summaries.

The contents of voluminous writings, recordings, or photographs which cannot conveniently be examined in court may be presented in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation. The originals, or duplicates, shall be made available for examination or copying, or both, by other parties at a reasonable time and place. The court may order that they be produced in court. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 1006.

Where documents are so voluminous that it would be impracticable to produce and examine them in court, North Carolina Courts have allowed a qualified witness to testify to the results of his examination of the documents. Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 192 (1982).

CASE NOTES

When Summary May Be Excluded. — A summary is properly excluded from evidence if it does not fairly represent the underlying document. Coman v. Thomas Mfg. Co., 105 N.C. App. 88, 411 S.E.2d 626, cert. denied, 331 N.C. 284, 417 S.E.2d 249 (1992).

Plaintiffs' attempt to generate an exhibit during trial while a witness was undergoing cross-examination, by extracting and charting portions of the testimony, was governed by § 8C-1-611(a), not by this rule, and the trial court acted within its discretion in disallowing it as a kind of premature final argument. Marley v. Graper, 135 N.C. App. 423, 521 S.E.2d 129 (1999).

Rule 1007. Testimony or written admission of party.

Contents of writings, recordings, or photographs may be proved by the testimony or deposition of the party against whom offered or by his written admission, without accounting for the nonproduction of the original. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 1007.

This rule is consistent with North Carolina practice in that the original writing need not be produced where the opponent admits that the copy offered in evidence is correct. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 192, at 113 (1982). The rule clarifies North Carolina law by not allowing proof of contents by oral evidence of an oral admission. See Norcum v. Savage, 140 N.C. 472 (1906). The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"While the parent case, Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664, 151 Eng. Rep. 579 (Exch. 1840), allows proof of contents by evidence of an oral admission by the party against whom offered, without accounting for nonproduction of the original, the risk of inaccuracy is substantial and the decision is at odds with the purpose of the rule giving preference to the original. See 4 Wigmore § 1255. The instant rule follows Professor McCormick's suggestion of limiting this use of admissions to those made in the course of giving testimony or in writing. McCormick § 208, p. 424. The limitation, of course, does not call for excluding evidence of an oral admission when nonproduction of the original has been accounted for and secondary evidence generally has become admissible. Rule 1004, supra."

Rule 1008. Functions of court and jury.

When the admissibility of other evidence of contents of writings, recordings, or photographs under these rules depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the question whether the condition has been fulfilled is ordinarily for the court to determine in accordance with the provisions of Rule 104. However, when an issue is raised (a) whether the asserted writing ever existed, or (b) whether another writing, recording, or photograph produced at the trial is the original, or (c) whether other evidence of contents correctly reflects the contents, the issue is for the trier of fact to determine as in the case of other issues of fact. (1983, c. 701, s. 1.)

COMMENTARY

This rule is identical to Fed. R. Evid. 1008.

The Advisory Committee's Note states:

"Most preliminary questions of fact in connection with applying the rule preferring the original as evidence of contents are for the judge, under the general principles announced in Rule 104, supra. Thus, the question whether the loss of the originals has been established, or of the fulfillment of other conditions specified in Rule 1004, supra, is for the judge. However, questions may arise which go beyond the mere administration of the rule preferring the original and into the merits of the controversy. For example, plaintiff offers secondary evidence of the contents of an alleged contract, after first introducing evidence of loss of the original, and defendant counters with evidence that no such contract was ever executed. If the judge decides that the contract was never executed and excludes the secondary evidence, the case is at an end without ever going to the jury on a central issue. Levin, Authentication and Content of Writings, 10 Rutgers L. Rev. 632, 644 (1956). The latter portion of the instant rule is designed to insure treatment of these situations as raising jury questions. The decision is not one for uncontrolled discretion of the jury but is subject to the control exercised generally by the judge over jury determinations. See Rule 104(b), supra."

Although there are no North Carolina cases directly on point, Rule 1008 follows the division of function between the court and the jury with respect to competency and conditional relevancy. See Brandis on North Carolina Evidence § 8 (1982).

Article 11.

Miscellaneous Rules.

Rule 1101. Applicability of rules.

(a) Proceedings generally. — Except as otherwise provided in subdivision (b) or by statute, these rules apply to all actions and proceedings in the courts of this State.

(b) Rules inapplicable. — The rules other than those with respect to privileges do not apply in the following situations:

(1) Preliminary Questions of Fact. — The determination of questions of fact preliminary to admissibility of evidence when the issue is to be determined by the court under Rule 104(a).

(2) Grand Jury. — Proceedings before grand juries.

(3) Miscellaneous Proceedings. — Proceedings for extradition or rendition; first appearance before district court judge or probable cause hearing in criminal cases; sentencing, or granting or revoking probation; issuance of warrants for arrest, criminal summonses, and search warrants; proceedings with respect to release on bail or otherwise.

(4) Contempt Proceedings. — Contempt proceedings in which the court is authorized by law to act summarily. (1983, c. 701, s. 1; 1983 (Reg. Sess., 1984), c. 1037, s. 14; 1985, c. 509, s. 2.)

COMMENTARY

This rule resembles Fed. R. Evid. 1101 with appropriate modifications.

Subdivision (b)(1) restates, for convenience, the provisions of the second sentence of Rule 104(a), supra. See Advisory Committee's Note to that rule.

Current North Carolina practice with respect to voir dire, sentencing hearings, probation revocation hearings, and juvenile proceedings is not meant to be changed by adoption of these rules.

CASE NOTES

Admission of Speculative Evidence. — Testimony by defendant's friend tending to suggest that defendant would have a positive impact on young people visiting prison was purely speculative and therefore properly held inadmissible; evidence was not admissible to rebut the State's evidence that defendant would not be useful to society in prison and would be a danger to unarmed civilians in prison. State v. Davis, 353 N.C. 1, 539 S.E.2d 243 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 95, 151 L. Ed. 2d 55 (2001).

Rules Not Applicable to Sentencing Proceedings. — Although the North Carolina Rules of Evidence do not apply to sentencing proceedings, they may be helpful as a guide to reliability and relevance. State v. Bond, 345 N.C. 1, 478 S.E.2d 163 (1996), reh'g denied, 345 N.C. 355, 479 S.E.2d 210, cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1124, 117 S. Ct. 2521, 138 L. Ed. 2d 1022 (1997); State v. Strickland, 346 N.C. 443, 488 S.E.2d 194 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1078, 118 S. Ct. 858, 139 L. Ed. 2d 757 (1998).

In sentencing proceedings the Rules of Evidence do not limit the trial courts discretion over the scope of cross-examination because they do not apply. State v. Warren, 347 N.C. 309, 492 S.E.2d 609 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1109, 118 S. Ct. 1681, 140 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1998).

The admissibility of mitigating evidence during the penalty phase is not constrained by the Rules of Evidence, although the trial judge must determine the admissibility of such evidence subject to general rules excluding evidence that is repetitive, unreliable, or lacking an adequate foundation. State v. Locklear, 349 N.C. 118, 505 S.E.2d 277 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1075, 119 S. Ct. 1475, 143 L. Ed. 2d 559 (1999).

During a capital sentencing proceeding, the State must be permitted to present any competent evidence supporting the imposition of the death penalty. State v. Holden, 346 N.C. 404, 488 S.E.2d 514 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1126, 118 S. Ct. 1074, 140 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1998).

Because the rules of evidence do not apply in capital sentencing proceedings, a trial court has great discretion to admit any evidence relevant to sentencing. State v. Thomas, 350 N.C. 315, 514 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 503, 145 L. Ed. 2d 388 (1999).

The trial court did not violate this section in allowing the admission of testimony regarding defendant's temperament, a fight defendant had with his girlfriend at work, an alleged statement by defendant that he smoked marijuana, and a high school homework assignment that showed defendant's knowledge of drugs, as the testimony was competent, relevant evidence of defendant's character and did not violate his right to a fundamentally fair capital sentencing proceeding. State v. Davis, 353 N.C. 1, 539 S.E.2d 243 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 95, 151 L. Ed. 2d 55 (2001).

Applied in State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct. 951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

Article 1.

Jury Commissions, Preparation of Jury Lists, and Drawing of Panels.

§ 9-1. Jury commission in each county; membership; selection; oath; terms; expenses of jury system.

Not later than July 1, 1967, there shall be appointed in each county a jury commission of three members. One member of the commission shall be appointed by the senior regular resident superior court judge, one member by the clerk of superior court, and one member by the board of county commissioners. The appointees shall be qualified voters of the county, and shall serve for terms of two years. Appointees may be reappointed to successive terms. A vacancy in the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment, for the unexpired term. Each commissioner shall take an oath or affirmation that, without favor or prejudice, he will honestly perform the duties of a member of the jury commission during his term of service. The compensation of commissioners shall be fixed by the board of county commissioners, and shall be paid from the general fund of the county. All expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of this Chapter and to administer the jury system, including all data processing, document processing, supplies, postage, and other similar expenses, except as otherwise provided in this Chapter, shall be paid from the general fund of the county, except that the clerk of superior court shall furnish clerical or other personnel assistance, as the commission may reasonably require. (1967, c. 218, s. 1; 1981, c. 720, s. 3; 1991, c. 729, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

Deviations from the statutory norm do not automatically constitute reversible error absent an express statutory provision to the contrary. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

In order to justify a motion to quash an indictment upon grounds that statutory procedures were violated in the compilation of the jury list, a party must show corrupt intent, systematic discrimination in the compilation of the list, or irregularities which affect the actions of the jurors actually drawn and summoned. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Compilation of Jury List by Two-Person Commission. — Defendant failed to present any evidence that the two-person commission which acted when the third commissioner was killed acted with corrupt intent, or that the use of a two-person instead of three-person commission resulted in either systematic discrimination in the compilation of the jury list or irregularities which affected the actions of the jurors actually drawn and summoned. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Stated in State v. Harbison, 293 N.C. 474, 238 S.E.2d 449 (1977); State v. Vaughn, 296 N.C. 167, 250 S.E.2d 210 (1978).

§ 9-2. Preparation of jury list; sources of names.

(a) It shall be the duty of the jury commission beginning July 1, 1981, (and each biennium thereafter) to prepare a list of prospective jurors qualified under this Chapter to serve in the biennium beginning January 1, 1982, (and each biennium thereafter). Instead of providing a list for an entire biennium, the commission may prepare a list each year if the senior regular resident superior court judge requests in writing that it do so.

(b) In preparing the list, the jury commission shall use the voter registration records of the county. The commission may use fewer than all the names from the voter list if it uses a random method of selection. The commission may use other sources of names deemed by it to be reliable.

(c) Effective July 1, 1983, the list of licensed drivers residing in each county, as supplied to the county by the Division of Motor Vehicles pursuant to G.S. 20-43.4, shall also be required as a source of names for use by the commission in preparing the jury list.

(d) When more than one source is used to prepare the jury list the jury commission shall take randomly a sample of names from the list of registered voters and each additional source used. The same percentage of names must be selected from each list. The names selected from the voter registration list shall be compared with the entire list of names, from the second source. Duplicate names shall be removed from the voter registration sample, and the remaining names shall then be combined with the sample of names selected from the second source to form the jury list. If more than two source lists are used, the same procedure must be used to remove duplicates.

(e) As an alternative to the procedure set forth in subsection (d), the jury commission may merge the entire list of names of each source used, remove the duplicate names, and randomly select the desired number of names to form the jury list.

(f) The jury list shall contain not less than one and one-quarter times and not more than three times as many names as were drawn for jury duty in all courts in the county during the previous biennium, or, if an annual list is being prepared as requested under subsection (a) of this section the jury list shall contain not less than one and one-quarter times and not more than three times as many names as were drawn for jury duty in all courts in the county during the previous year but in no event shall the list include fewer than 500 names, except that in counties in which a different panel of jurors is selected for each day of the week, there is no limit to the number of names that may be placed on the jury list.

(g) The custodian of the appropriate election registration records in each county shall cooperate with the jury commission in its duty of compiling the list required by this section.

(h) As used in this section "random" or "randomly" refers to a method of selection that results in each name on a list having an equal opportunity to be selected. III. Proof of Discrimination.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Editor's Note. — Many of the annotations under this section are from cases decided prior to the 1981 amendments.

The plan in this section for the selection and drawing of jurors is constitutional and provides a jury system completely free of discrimination to any cognizable group. State v. Cornell, 281 N.C. 20, 187 S.E.2d 768 (1972); State v. Foddrell, 291 N.C. 546, 231 S.E.2d 618 (1977); State v. Hardy, 293 N.C. 105, 235 S.E.2d 828 (1977).

Constitutionality of Former Chapter. — See State v. Wilson, 262 N.C. 419, 137 S.E.2d 109 (1964).

Power of State to Prescribe Qualifications of Jurors. — Absent discrimination by race or other identifiable group or class, a state is at liberty to prescribe such qualifications for jurors as it deems proper without offending U.S. Const., Amend. XIV. State v. Rogers, 275 N.C. 411, 168 S.E.2d 345, cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1024, 90 S. Ct. 599, 24 L. Ed. 2d 518 (1970).

The legislative intent of this section is to provide a system for objective selection of veniremen. State v. Avery, 299 N.C. 126, 261 S.E.2d 803 (1980).

The procedure set forth in this Article is objective and systematic. State v. Hough, 299 N.C. 245, 262 S.E.2d 268 (1980).

Technical and insubstantial violations of the statutes regulating jury selection in this Chapter are not sufficient to vitiate a jury list or afford a challenge to the array. State v. Massey, 316 N.C. 558, 342 S.E.2d 811 (1986).

Deviations from the statutory norm do not automatically constitute reversible error absent an express statutory provision to the contrary. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

In order to justify a motion to quash an indictment upon grounds that statutory procedures were violated in the compilation of the jury list, a party must show corrupt intent, systematic discrimination in the compilation of the list, or irregularities which affect the actions of the jurors actually drawn and summoned. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Provisions of Former § 9-1 as to Jury List Directory and Not Mandatory. — See State v. Smarr, 121 N.C. 669, 28 S.E. 549 (1897); State v. Perry, 122 N.C. 1018, 29 S.E. 384 (1898); State v. Bonner, 149 N.C. 519, 63 S.E. 84 (1908); State v. Brown, 233 N.C. 202, 63 S.E.2d 99, cert. denied, 341 U.S. 943, 71 S. Ct. 997, 95 L. Ed. 1369 (1951); State v. Yoes, 271 N.C. 616, 157 S.E.2d 386 (1967).

Special Statute Allowing Other Method. — Where a statute creating a special criminal court for certain counties allows every facility to the accused for getting a fair and impartial jury, it is not unconstitutional because it does not follow the same methods of drawing the jury which are provided for by the superior courts. State v. Jones, 97 N.C. 469, 1 S.E. 680 (1887).

The trial judge in a murder trial did not err in denying defendant's motion for funds to employ a statistician to review the jury venire in the county over a substantial period of time to determine whether the jury commission failed to perform its statutory duty when compiling the jury venire from which defendant's jury would be selected where defendant presented no evidence that the new jury selection process in the county was discriminatory, or that the services of a statistician would have resulted in the selection of a more favorable jury. State v. Massey, 316 N.C. 558, 342 S.E.2d 811 (1986).

Applied in State v. Barnwell, 17 N.C. App. 299, 194 S.E.2d 63 (1973); State v. Hubbard, 19 N.C. App. 431, 199 S.E.2d 146 (1973); State v. Lynch, 300 N.C. 534, 268 S.E.2d 161 (1980); State v. II. SOURCES OF LIST.

A jury commission is not limited to the sources specifically designated by this section. State v. Cornell, 281 N.C. 20, 187 S.E.2d 768 (1972).

Selection of Names only from Certain Letters of Alphabet. — Names for the list of grand and petit jurors were not chosen arbitrarily or nonsystematically in violation of this section where every fourth name from the tax list was taken only from the letters A, B, C, D and M rather than from the entire alphabet. However, the practice of choosing names only from certain letters of the alphabet is not approved, since this section seems to contemplate systematic selection of names from the entire alphabet. State v. King, 299 N.C. 707, 264 S.E.2d 40 (1980).

Jury List Not Discriminatory Because Made from Tax List. — A jury list is not discriminatory merely because it is made from the tax list. The tax list is perhaps the most comprehensive list available for the names of male citizens. State v. Wilson, 262 N.C. 419, 137 S.E.2d 109 (1964) (decided under former § 9-1).

A jury list is not discriminatory or unlawful because it is drawn from the tax list of the county. State v. Cornell, 281 N.C. 20, 187 S.E.2d 768 (1972).

Even if the tax lists contained a disproportionate male-female ratio, such disproportion did not result from a systematic, arbitrary and intentionally discriminatory process on the part of the jury commission. State v. Tant, 16 N.C. App. 113, 191 S.E.2d 387, cert. denied, 282 N.C. 429, 192 S.E.2d 839 (1972); 414 U.S. 938, 94 S. Ct. 240, 38 L. Ed. 2d 165 (1973).

But commissioners are not limited to use of tax list, and the use of other lists might result in the selection of more women jurors. State v. Wilson, 262 N.C. 419, 137 S.E.2d 109 (1964) (decided under former § 9-1).

Failure to Use List of Names Not Appearing on Tax Lists. — The fact that the county commissioners did not also use a list of names of persons who do not appear on the tax lists does not show racial discrimination in the selection of prospective jurors. State v. Rogers, 275 N.C. 411, 168 S.E.2d 345 (1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1024, 90 S. Ct. 599, 24 L. Ed. 2d 518 (1970).

Use of a jury box containing only the names of property owners is not per se discriminatory as to race and does not unfairly narrow the choice of jurors so as to impinge defendant's statutory or constitutional rights. State v. Rogers, 275 N.C. 411, 168 S.E.2d 345, cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1024, 90 S. Ct. 599, 24 L. Ed. 2d 518 (1970).

Mere irregularity on the part of the jury commissioners in preparing the jury list, unless obviously, designedly or intentionally discriminatory, will not vitiate the list or afford a basis for a challenge to the array. State v. Tant, 16 N.C. App. 113, 191 S.E.2d 387, cert. denied, 282 N.C. 429, 192 S.E.2d 839 (1972); 414 U.S. 938, 94 S. Ct. 240, 38 L. Ed. 2d 165 (1973).

Jury Commission Need Not Ascertain Validity of Procedures Used in Compiling Lists. — To hold that a jury commission must ascertain the validity of the procedures used by independent bodies in compiling tax and voter registration lists before using such lists as sources of names of prospective jurors would be to impose an impossible burden. State v. Tant, 16 N.C. App. 113, 191 S.E.2d 387, cert. denied, 282 N.C. 429, 192 S.E.2d 839 (1972); 414 U.S. 938, 94 S. Ct. 240, 38 L. Ed. 2d 165 (1973).

Removal of Certain Names from Lists. — Where commissioners laid aside names of several persons, otherwise qualified, because they did not know whether they were residents of the county, and the jury list was completed by the names of other duly qualified persons, if there was any irregularity it did not affect the action of the jurors so drawn and summoned. State v. Wilcox, 104 N.C. 847, 10 S.E. 453 (1889) (decided under former § 9-1).

Merely purging the jury list of the names of those who had not paid their taxes, without adding any new names thereto, does not vitiate the venire in the absence of bad faith or corruption on the part of the county commissioners. State v. Dixon, 131 N.C. 808, 42 S.E. 944 (1902) (decided under former § 9-1).

Rejection of prospective jurors for want of good moral character and sufficient intelligence was available to the county commissioners as a general objection only when the jury list was being prepared, and not after the names were in the box. State v. Speller, 229 N.C. 67, 47 S.E.2d 537 (1948); State v. Wilson, 262 N.C. 419, 137 S.E.2d 109 (1964) (decided under former § 9-1).

Compilation of List in 1981. — Commission was not required to use as a source of names the list of licensed drivers residing in the county, where in accord with subsection (a) of this section, the jury list for the county for the biennium beginning January 1, 1982, was compiled November 23 and 24, 1981, as at that time subsection (c) of this section was not in effect, even though the trial began in October 1983. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

III. PROOF OF DISCRIMINATION.

Discrimination on Account of Race. — See State v. Daniels, 134 N.C. 641, 46 S.E. 743 (1904); State v. Brown, 233 N.C. 202, 63 S.E.2d 99, cert. denied, 341 U.S. 943, 71 S. Ct. 997, 95 L. Ed. 1369 (1951); Miller v. State, 237 N.C. 29, 74 S.E.2d 513, cert. denied, 345 U.S. 930, 73 S. Ct. 792, 97 L. Ed. 1360 (1953); Rice v. Rigsby, 259 N.C. 506, 131 S.E.2d 469 (1963); State v. Wilson, 262 N.C. 419, 137 S.E.2d 109 (1964).

How Prima Facie Case of Purposeful Discrimination Established. — The petitioner has the initial burden of establishing a prima facie case of purposeful discrimination. A prima facie case of jury discrimination can be established through a showing of a substantial disparity between the percentage of black residents in the county as a whole and on the jury lists, or by a showing of such disparity between the percentages of black residents on the tax rolls, from which the jury lists are drawn, and on the jury lists. Such a showing is strengthened where the disparity originated, at least in part, at the one point in the selection process where the jury commissioners invoked their subjective judgment rather than objective criteria. Parker v. Ross, 330 F. Supp. 13 (E.D.N.C. 1971), rev'd on other grounds, 470 F.2d 1092 (4th Cir. 1972).

The disparity between the percentage of black residents over 21 years of age in a county (45.5%) and on the jury list (4.5%) constituted a prima facie case of systematic exclusion of black residents from the county grand and petit jury lists. Parker v. Ross, 330 F. Supp. 13 (E.D.N.C. 1971), rev'd on other grounds, 470 F.2d 1092 (4th Cir. 1972).

To establish a prima facie case of systematic racial exclusion, defendants are generally required to produce not only statistical evidence establishing that black residents were underrepresented on the jury, but also evidence that the selection procedure itself was not racially neutral, or that for a substantial period in the past relatively few black residents have served on the juries of the county notwithstanding a substantial black population therein, or both. State v. Foddrell, 291 N.C. 546, 231 S.E.2d 618 (1977).

In order to establish a prima facie case that there has been a violation of the requirement that a jury be composed of persons who represent a fair cross section of the community, defendant must document that the group alleged to have been excluded is a distinctive group; that the representation of the group in question within the venire is not fair and reasonable with respect to the number of such persons in the community; and that this underrepresentation is due to systematic exclusion of the group in the jury selection process. State v. Price, 301 N.C. 437, 272 S.E.2d 103 (1980).

Distinctiveness of Excluded Group. — In determining whether a group is distinctive or cognizable for the purpose of a challenge to a jury selection plan, three factors which must be considered are whether there is some quality or attribute in existence which defines or limits the membership of the alleged group, whether there is a cohesiveness of attitudes, ideas, or experiences which serves to distinguish the purported group from the general social mileau, and whether a community of interest must be present within the alleged group which may not be represented by other segments of the populace. State v. Price, 301 N.C. 437, 272 S.E.2d 103 (1980).

The North Carolina Supreme Court does not recognize "young people" between the ages of 18 and 29 as a distinct group for the purpose of determining whether a jury panel represents a fair cross section of the community. State v. Price, 301 N.C. 437, 272 S.E.2d 103 (1980).

Effect of State's Failure to Justify Disparity. — If a prima facie case of jury discrimination is proven, the State must justify the disparity. However, the State's failure to do so does not mean that a guilty defendant must go free. The State may indict and try him again by the procedure which conforms to constitutional requirements. Parker v. Ross, 330 F. Supp. 13 (E.D.N.C. 1971), rev'd on other grounds, 470 F.2d 1092 (4th Cir. 1972).

Sample of 40 Jurors Insufficient. — A small sample of 40 jurors from the master list of jurors of a county alone was insufficient to establish a systematic exclusion of blacks from the jury pool. State v. McNeill, 326 N.C. 712, 392 S.E.2d 78 (1990).

Discrimination Not Established. — There was no systematic exclusion of blacks, women and 18- through 21-year-olds where jury commissions used a neutral systematic selection procedure (e.g., every 6th name) in selecting names from the source lists as required by this section, and it appeared that the only criteria used in striking names from the jury lists were the permissible disqualifications set out in § 9-3. State v. Hardy, 293 N.C. 105, 235 S.E.2d 828 (1977).

Although the defendant's proof showed that during the period in question blacks made up 17.1 percent of the jury pool but 31.1 percent of the county's population, and young people between the ages of 18 and 29 made up 22.5 percent of the jury pool but 33.3 percent of the county's population, the defendant failed to show that such misrepresentation was the result of a systematic exclusion of those groups by the jury selection process, since the jury commission had fairly and reasonably selected every second name from the county tax listing and every third name from the county voter registration list. State v. Price, 301 N.C. 437, 272 S.E.2d 103 (1980).

Where the evidence showed that jury lists were compiled in strict compliance with this section, the mere fact that only 15 percent of the jury pool was black in a county in which the population was 24 percent black was insufficient to show systematic discrimination. State v. Taylor, 304 N.C. 249, 283 S.E.2d 761 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3552, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398, rehearing denied, 463 U.S. 1249, 104 S. Ct. 37, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1456 (1983).

Where defendant failed to present evidence showing a gross discrepancy between the percentage of non-whites in a jury venire randomly selected by computer from the county voter registration list prescribed by this section as a master list, defendant's challenges under U.S. Const., Amends. VI and XIV to the grand jury and petit jury venire would be rejected. State v. Avery, 315 N.C. 1, 337 S.E.2d 786 (1985), aff'd, 315 N.C. 1, 383 S.E.2d 591 (1989).

Where although the jury commissioners failed to strictly comply with this section and §§ 9-2.1 and 9-5, all of the evidence tended to negate any corrupt intent, discrimination, or irregularities which affected the actions of the jurors actually drawn and summoned, and the trial judge found, on competent evidence, that the jurors were randomly selected, both from the voter list and the driver's license list, and that the selection of the master jury list was in substantial compliance with the law, there was no justification for a dismissal of the indictment or challenge to the array on grounds that statutory procedures were violated in the compilation of the jury list. State v. Massey, 316 N.C. 558, 342 S.E.2d 811 (1986).

Requiring Defense Counsel to Investigate Jury Selection Procedures. — It places no undue burden on defense counsel to require them to make investigations into jury composition and selection procedures with regard to possible systematic racial exclusion prior to the time of trial, so long as the time between retention or appointment of counsel, the date the jury panel is drawn, and the date of trial is not so brief as to make such investigation impractical. State v. Harbison, 293 N.C. 474, 238 S.E.2d 449 (1977).

Reasonable Time Allowed Defendant to Investigate Improper Procedures. — A defendant must be allowed a reasonable time and opportunity to inquire into and present evidence regarding the alleged systematic exclusion of black persons because of their race from serving on the grand or petit jury in his case. Whether he was afforded a reasonable time and opportunity must be determined from the facts in each particular case. State v. Harbison, 293 N.C. 474, 238 S.E.2d 449 (1977).

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Use of Less Than All Names on Tax and Voter Registration Lists. — See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Fred P. Parker, Wayne County Attorney, 40 N.C.A.G. 129 (1969).

Commission's Control of List Ceases Upon Preparation of List. — See opinion of Attorney General to Honorable Louise S. Allen, 42 N.C.A.G. 260 (1973).

§ 9-2.1. Alternate procedure in certain counties.

(a) In counties having access to electronic data processing equipment, the functions of preparing and maintaining custody of the list of prospective jurors, the procedure for drawing and summoning panels of jurors, and the procedure for maintaining records of names of jurors who have served, been excused, been delayed in service, or been disqualified, may be performed by this equipment, except that decisions as to mental or physical competency of prospective jurors shall continue to be made by jury commissioners. The procedure for performing these functions by electronic data processing equipment shall be in writing, adopted by the jury commission, and kept available for public inspection in the office of the clerk or court. The procedure must effectively preserve the authorized grounds for disqualification, the right of public access to the list of prospective jurors, and the time sequence for drawing and summoning a jury panel.

(b) To facilitate random selection of jurors, all the names on the biennial jury list may be sorted into random order before the first venire is drawn. Thereafter, names may be selected sequentially from the randomized list without further randomization, except as required by G.S. 15A-1214. Public access to the jury list as required by G.S. 9-4 shall be limited to an alphabetical listing of the names. Access to the randomized list shall be prohibited. (1977, c. 220, s. 1; 1981, c. 430, s. 3; 1985, c. 368.)

CASE NOTES

Technical and insubstantial violations of the statutes regulating jury selection in this Chapter are not sufficient to vitiate a jury list or afford a challenge to the array. State v. Massey, 316 N.C. 558, 342 S.E.2d 811 (1986).

To establish a prima facie case of violation of the requirement that a jury be composed of persons who represent a fair cross-section of the community, the defendant must document (1) that the group alleged to have been excluded is a distinctive group, (2) that the representation of the group in question within the venire is not fair and reasonable with respect to the number of such persons in the community, and (3) that this underrepresentation is due to systematic exclusion of the group in the jury-selection process. State v. Riggs, 79 N.C. App. 398, 339 S.E.2d 676 (1986).

Noncompliance with Statutory Requirement Not Necessarily Discrimination. — Where defendant did no more than allege that the requirement in this section that the procedure for composing the jury list be available for public inspection in the clerk's office was violated, defendant did not make a prima facie case of discrimination. The mere failure to follow the statutory requirement, without a showing or allegation of how such failure affected defendant, is not a sufficient basis to quash the jury list. State v. Riggs, 79 N.C. App. 398, 339 S.E.2d 676 (1986).

Discrimination Not Established. — Where although the jury commissioners failed to strictly comply with this section and §§ 9-2 and 9-5, all of the evidence tended to negate any corrupt intent, discrimination, or irregularities which affected the actions of the jurors actually drawn and summoned, and the trial judge found, on competent evidence, that the jurors were randomly selected, both from the voter list and the driver's license list, and that the selection of the master jury list was in substantial compliance with the law, there was no justification for a dismissal of the indictment or challenge to the array on this basis that statutory procedures were violated in the compilation of the jury list. State v. Massey, 316 N.C. 558, 342 S.E.2d 811 (1986).

Surgeon in a malpractice action was not prejudiced by the use of the alternative method for selecting a jury pool authorized by § 9-2.1 merely because civilian employees of the county sheriff's office entered a password that commanded data processing equipment to randomly produce a list of prospective jurors. Sweatt v. Wong, 145 N.C. App. 33, 549 S.E.2d 222 (2001).

§ 9-3. Qualifications of prospective jurors.

All persons are qualified to serve as jurors and to be included on the jury list who are citizens of the State and residents of the county, who have not served as jurors during the preceding two years, who are 18 years of age or over, who are physically and mentally competent, who can hear and understand the English language, who have not been convicted of a felony or pleaded guilty or nolo contendere to an indictment charging a felony (or if convicted of a felony or having pleaded guilty or nolo contendere to an indictment charging a felony have had their citizenship restored pursuant to law), and who have not been adjudged non compos mentis. Persons not qualified under this section are subject to challenge for cause. (1806, c. 694, P.R.; Code, ss. 1722, 1723; 1889, c.

559; 1897, cc. 117, 539; 1899, c. 729; Rev., s. 1957; C.S., s. 2312; 1947, c. 1007, s. 1; 1967, c. 218, s. 1; 1971, c. 1231, s. 1; 1973, c. 230, ss. 1, 2; 1977, c. 711, s. 10.)

CASE NOTES

The North Carolina plan which imposes a two-year lapse in preparation of new jury lists is constitutional and provides a jury system completely free of discrimination to any cognizable group. State v. Kirby, 15 N.C. App. 480, 190 S.E.2d 320, appeal dismissed, 281 N.C. 761, 191 S.E.2d 363 (1972).

Constitutionality of Excusal Based on Language. — An excusal, under this section, based on a juror's inability to understand the English language, is not a violation of N.C. Const., Article 1, § 26. State v. Smith, 352 N.C. 531, 532 S.E.2d 773 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1419, 149 L. Ed. 2d 360 (2001).

Inability to Understand English. — The defendant was not entitled to a mistrial after a prospective juror who responded to two of the prosecutor's questions in Spanish was excused for cause, because his subsequent English responses revealed that his inability to understand English made him unqualified to serve as a juror under this section; any arguable error in not ordering the minimal dialogue in Spanish to be translated for the record was, given the wholly proper excusal, without prejudicial effect. State v. Smith, 352 N.C. 531, 532 S.E.2d 773 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1419, 149 L. Ed. 2d 360 (2001).

The law guarantees the right of trial by a proper jury; that is to say, a jury possessing the qualifications contemplated by law. It was the manifest purpose of the legislature that all those and only those citizens who possess the proper qualifications of character and intelligence should be selected to serve on juries. State v. Ingram, 237 N.C. 197, 74 S.E.2d 532 (1953).

Mere Showing of Violation of Statutory Procedures Does Not Merit Quashing Indictment. — In the absence of statutory language indicating that preparation of jury lists shall be void if the directions of the act be not strictly observed, a mere showing of a violation of the statutory procedures will not merit the quashing of an indictment. State v. Vaughn, 296 N.C. 167, 250 S.E.2d 210 (1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 935, 99 S. Ct. 2060, 60 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1979).

Corrupt Intent, Discrimination or Irregularities Must Be Shown. — In order to justify a dismissal of an indictment on grounds that statutory procedures were violated in the compilation of the jury list, a party must show either corrupt intent, discrimination, or irregularities which affect the actions of the jurors actually drawn and summoned. State v. Vaughn, 296 N.C. 167, 250 S.E.2d 210 (1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 935, 99 S. Ct. 2060, 60 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1979).

And even a showing that certain qualified persons were improperly disqualified would not require a dismissal of an indictment absent a showing of corrupt intent or systematic discrimination in the compilation of the list, or a showing of the presence upon the grand jury itself of a member not qualified to serve. State v. Vaughn, 296 N.C. 167, 250 S.E.2d 210 (1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 935, 99 S. Ct. 2060, 60 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1979).

The judge is not required to make findings in the absence of evidence that any qualified person was excluded from jury service, and in the absence of contradictory and conflicting evidence as to the material facts. State v. Vaughn, 296 N.C. 167, 250 S.E.2d 210 (1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 935, 99 S. Ct. 2060, 60 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1979).

There was no systematic exclusion of blacks, women and 18- through 21-year-olds where jury commissions used a neutral systematic selection procedure (e.g., every 6th name) in selecting names from the source lists as required by § 9-2, and it appeared that the only criteria used in striking names from the jury lists were the permissible disqualifications set out in this section. State v. Hardy, 293 N.C. 105, 235 S.E.2d 828 (1977).

In order for a defendant to preserve his exception to the court's denial of a challenge for cause, he must (1) excuse the challenged juror with a peremptory challenge, (2) exhaust his peremptory challenges before the panel is completed, and (3) thereafter seek, and be denied peremptory challenge to an additional juror. State v. Spencer, 37 N.C. App. 739, 246 S.E.2d 837 (1978).

Mere Summons Does Not Disqualify Person for Two Years. — It is actual service as a juror rather than a mere summons for jury duty which disqualifies him for service for the next two years. State v. Berry, 35 N.C. App. 128, 240 S.E.2d 633, cert. denied, 294 N.C. 737, 244 S.E.2d 155 (1978).

The absence from the jury list of the names of persons between the ages of 18 and 21 during the period from July 21, 1971, the effective date of the amendment of this section lowering the age requirement for jurors from 21 years to 18 years, and September 21, 1971, the date of defendant's trial, was not unreasonable and did not constitute systematic exclusion of this age group from jury service. State v. Cornell, 281 N.C. 20, 187 S.E.2d 768 (1972); State v. Harris, 281 N.C. 542, 189 S.E.2d 249 (1972); State v. Barnwell, 17 N.C. App. 299, 194 S.E.2d 63, cert. denied, 283 N.C. 106, 194 S.E.2d 634 (1973).

The petit jury which served at the trial of a 20-year-old defendant was not invalidated by the fact that the jury list had not been revised to include the names of persons under 21 years of age. State v. Long, 14 N.C. App. 508, 188 S.E.2d 690 (1972).

Alienage. — Alienage is disqualification of a juror. Hinton v. Hinton, 196 N.C. 341, 145 S.E. 615 (1928).

That a juror had forfeited his citizenship by reason of conviction of a criminal offense was ground for challenge of the juror for cause under former § 9-1. Young v. Southern Mica Co., 237 N.C. 644, 75 S.E.2d 795 (1953).

Challenges in Particular Actions, for Bias, etc. — Former § 9-1, providing that good and lawful men, required by the Constitution to serve on juries, should be men found by the county commissioners to have paid taxes for the preceding year, of good moral character, and of sufficient intelligence, did not abolish challenges to jurors, in particular actions, for bias, interest, kinship, etc. State v. Vick, 132 N.C. 995, 43 S.E. 626 (1903).

Juror Must Qualify to Be Sworn in at the Beginning of Court. — Court committed no error in excusing a juror, where the transcript revealed that at the time jury selection commenced, the juror had previously served on a federal jury within two years and was not immediately qualified to serve in the instant case; the court could not, as defendant suggested, move the juror to a later panel and then swear her in at the time she was called. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Dismissal of Jurors Held Harmless. — The court's dismissal of six prospective jurors after unrecorded, private bench discussions was harmless where the preliminary questioning of prospective jurors did not result in the rejection of any juror whom defendant was entitled to have on the panel or the seating of any juror whom defendant was entitled to reject either for cause or peremptorily. State v. Cummings, 353 N.C. 281, 543 S.E.2d 844 (2001).

Stated in Glover v. North Carolina, 301 F. Supp. 364 (E.D.N.C. 1969); United States v. McLean, 904 F.2d 216 (4th Cir. 1990).

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Person's Mental and Physical Competency Must Be Considered Each Time Person's Name Appears on Prospective Jury List. — See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. J.C. Taylor, 43 N.C.A.G. 292 (1973).

§ 9-4. Preparation and custody of list.

As the jury list is prepared, the name and address of each qualified person selected for the list shall be written on a separate card. The cards shall then be alphabetized and permanently numbered, the numbers running consecutively with a different number on each card. These cards shall constitute the jury list for the county. They shall be filed with the register of deeds of the county, together with a statement of the sources used and procedures followed in preparing the list. The list shall be kept under lock and key, but shall be available for public inspection during regular office hours. (1967, c. 218, s. 1; 1969, c. 205, s. 2.)

CASE NOTES

It places no undue burden on defense counsel to require them to make investigations into jury composition and selection procedures with regard to possible systematic racial exclusion prior to the time of trial, so long as the time between retention or appointment of counsel, the date the jury panel is drawn, and the date of trial is not so brief as to make such investigation impractical. State v. Harbison, 293 N.C. 474, 238 S.E.2d 449 (1977).

Reasonable Time Allowed Defendant to Investigate Improper Procedures. — A defendant must be allowed a reasonable time and opportunity to inquire into and present evidence regarding the alleged systematic exclusion of black persons because of their race from serving on the grand or petit jury in his case. Whether he was afforded a reasonable time and opportunity must be determined from the facts in each particular case. State v. Harbison, 293 N.C. 474, 238 S.E.2d 449 (1977).

§ 9-5. Procedure for drawing panel of jurors; numbers drawn.

The board of county commissioners in each county shall provide the clerk of superior court with a jury box, the construction and dimensions of which shall be prescribed by the administrative officer of the courts. At least 30 days prior to January 1 of any year for which a list of prospective jurors has been prepared, a number of discs, squares, counters or markers equal to the number of names on the jury list shall be placed in the jury box. The discs, squares, counters, or markers shall be uniform in size, weight, and appearance, and may be made of any suitable material. They shall be numbered consecutively to correspond with the numbers on the jury list. The jury box shall be of sufficient size to hold the discs, squares, counters or markers so that they may be easily shaken and mixed, and the box shall have a hinged lid through which the discs, squares, counters or markers can be drawn. The lid shall have a lock, the key to which shall be kept by the clerk of superior court.

At least 30 days prior to any session or sessions of superior or district court requiring a jury, the clerk of superior court or his assistant or deputy shall, in public, after thoroughly shaking the box, draw therefrom the number of discs, squares, counters, or markers equal to the number of jurors required for the session or sessions scheduled. For each week of a superior court session, the senior resident superior court judge for the district or set of districts as defined in G.S. 7A-41.1(a) in which the county is located shall specify the number of jurors to be drawn. For each week of a district court jury session, the chief district judge of the district court district in which the county is located shall specify the number of jurors to be drawn. Pooling of jurors between or among concurrent sessions of various courts is authorized in the discretion of the senior regular resident superior court judge. When pooling is utilized, the senior regular resident superior court judge, after consultation with the chief district judge when a district court jury is required, shall specify the total number of jurors to be drawn for such concurrent sessions. When grand jurors are needed, nine additional numbers shall be drawn.

As the discs, squares, counters, or markers are drawn, they shall be separately stored by the clerk until a new jury list is prepared.

The clerk of superior court shall deliver the list of numbers drawn from the jury box to the register of deeds, who shall match the numbers received with the numbers on the jury list. The register of deeds shall within three days thereafter notify the sheriff to summon for jury duty the persons on the jury list whose numbers are thus matched. The persons so summoned may serve as jurors in either the superior or the district court, or both, for the week for which summoned. Jurors who serve each week shall be discharged at the close of the weekly session or sessions, unless actually engaged in the trial of a case, and then they shall not be discharged until their service in that case is completed. Sess., 1988), c. 1037, s. 38.)

CASE NOTES

No language in this Chapter requires the clerk personally, or through an assistant or deputy clerk, to make the random drawing of names of those on the panel from the box so as to render illegal such drawing by someone else. State v. Vinson, 287 N.C. 326, 215 S.E.2d 60 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 902, 96 S. Ct. 3204, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1206 (1976).

Former § 9-3 Partly Mandatory and Partly Directory. — See State v. Watson, 104 N.C. 735, 10 S.E. 705 (1889); State v. Perry, 122 N.C. 1018, 29 S.E. 384 (1898); Moore v. Navassa Guano Co., 130 N.C. 229, 41 S.E. 293 (1902); State v. Banner, 149 N.C. 519, 63 S.E. 84 (1908).

Technical and insubstantial violations of the statutes regulating jury selection in this Chapter are not sufficient to vitiate a jury list or afford a challenge to the array. State v. Massey, 316 N.C. 558, 342 S.E.2d 811 (1986).

No Discrimination Established. — Where although the jury commissioners failed to strictly comply with this section and §§ 9-2 and 9-2.1, all of the evidence tended to negate any corrupt intent, discrimination, or irregularities which affected the actions of the jurors actually drawn and summoned, and the trial judge found, on competent evidence, that the jurors were randomly selected, both from the voter list and the driver's license list, and that the selection of the master jury list was in substantial compliance with the law, there was no justification for a dismissal of the indictment or challenge to the array on the basis that statutory procedures were violated in the compilation of the jury list. State v. Massey, 316 N.C. 558, 342 S.E.2d 811 (1986).

Applicability of Notice Provision. — The thirty day notice provision in this section did not apply to the trial court's selection of supplemental jurors under § 9-11. State v. Dickens, 346 N.C. 26, 484 S.E.2d 553 (1997).

§ 9-6. Jury service a public duty; excuses to be allowed in exceptional cases; procedure.

(a) The General Assembly hereby declares the public policy of this State to be that jury service is the solemn obligation of all qualified citizens, and that excuses from the discharge of this responsibility should be granted only for reasons of compelling personal hardship or because requiring service would be contrary to the public welfare, health, or safety.

(b) Pursuant to the foregoing policy, each chief district court judge shall promulgate procedures whereby he or any district court judge of his district court district designated by him, prior to the date that a jury session (or sessions) of superior or district court convenes, shall receive, hear, and pass on applications for excuses from jury duty. The procedures shall provide for the time and place, publicly announced, at which applications for excuses will be heard, and prospective jurors who have been summoned for service shall be so informed. In counties located in a district or set of districts as defined in G.S. 7A-41.1(a) which have a trial court administrator, the chief district judge may assign the duty of passing on applications for excuses from jury service to the administrator. In all cases concerning excuses, the clerk of court or the trial court administrator shall notify prospective jurors of the disposition of their excuses.

(c) A prospective juror excused by a judge in the exercise of the discretion conferred by subsection (b) may be required by the judge to serve as a juror in a subsequent session of court. If required to serve subsequently, the juror shall be considered on such occasion the same as if he were a member of the panel regularly summoned for jury service at that time.

(d) A judge hearing applications for excuses from jury duty shall excuse any person disqualified under § 9-3.

(e) The judge shall inform the clerk of superior court of persons excused under this section, and the clerk within 10 days shall so notify the register of deeds, who shall note the excuse on the juror's card and file it separately from the jury list.

(f) The discretionary authority of a presiding judge to excuse a juror at the beginning of or during a session of court is not affected by this section. (1967,

c. 218, s. 1; 1969, c. 205, ss. 4, 5; 1971, c. 377, s. 30; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1207, s. 1; 1981, c. 430, s. 2; 1985, c. 609, s. 2; 1987 (Reg. Sess., 1988), c. 1037, s. 47.)

CASE NOTES

Communication which constitutes harassment of jurors is not protected speech. Burgess v. Busby, 142 N.C. App. 393, 544 S.E.2d 4 (2001).

Judges' Power to Excuse Jurors. — Although subsection (f) of this section provides that superior court judges have the power to excuse jurors, this power must be exercised within the constraints of constitutional requirements. State v. Cole, 331 N.C. 272, 415 S.E.2d 716 (1992).

This section places the process of juror excusals within the discretion of the district court judge, and a defendant is not entitled to a new trial for improper jury excusals in the absence of evidence of corrupt intent, discrimination, or irregularities which affected the actions of the jurors actually drawn and summoned. State v. Leary, 344 N.C. 109, 472 S.E.2d 753 (1996).

Decisions concerning the excusal of prospective jurors are matters of discretion left to the trial court. State v. Neal, 346 N.C. 608, 487 S.E.2d 734 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1125, 118 S. Ct. 1072, 140 L. Ed. 2d 131 (1998).

Failure to Strictly Comply with Section Not Grounds for New Trial. — Although it was clear that the district court judge failed to strictly comply with the provisions of this section governing the excusal of jurors, the alleged statutory irregularities did not constitute error; defendant was not entitled to a new trial because the evidence tended to negate any corrupt intent, discrimination or irregularities which affected the action of the jurors actually drawn and summoned. State v. Murdock, 325 N.C. 522, 385 S.E.2d 325 (1989).

But Compliance with Section Suggested. — Although the actions of the trial judge did not result in error, the Supreme Court would suggest that district court judges excuse jurors only in keeping with the language and the spirit of this section. State v. Murdock, 325 N.C. 522, 385 S.E.2d 325 (1989).

Admonishment of Juror. — It is not improper for a judge to admonish a prospective juror for taking a position solely for the purpose of being excused from jury duty. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

The selection process authorized by subsection (b) is essentially a pretrial screening process which is delegated to the district court, rather than a part of the capital trial. State v. McCarver, 341 N.C. 364, 462 S.E.2d 25 (1995), cert denied, 517 U.S. 1110, 116 S. Ct. 1332, 134 L. Ed. 2d 482 (1996).

Right to Be Present at Pretrial Jury Selection. — The Supreme Court declined to extend the unwaivable right to be present at every stage of a capital trial to pretrial jury selection matters. State v. McCarver, 341 N.C. 364, 462 S.E.2d 25 (1995), cert denied, 517 U.S. 1110, 116 S. Ct. 1332, 134 L. Ed. 2d 482 (1996).

The Dismissal of Jurors Outside of Defendant's Presence Before Trial Upheld. — The trial court did not commit error in excusing prospective jurors prior to the calling of defendant's case as the defendant had no right to be present at that time because his trial had not yet begun. Furthermore, the defendant failed to demonstrate corrupt intent or that he was prejudiced by the jury that was impaneled. State v. Hyde, 352 N.C. 37, 530 S.E.2d 281 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1114, 121 S. Ct. 862, 148 L. Ed. 2d 775 (2001).

Juror Properly Excused. — Where prospective juror had a medical history including coronary bypass surgery and an addiction to Valium and stated that thinking about the case was "bringing the problem back" and stated that the stress of being a prospective juror awakened him in the middle of the night, the trial court properly exercised its discretion in excusing a prospective juror whose health was possibly in jeopardy. State v. Neal, 346 N.C. 608, 487 S.E.2d 734 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1125, 118 S. Ct. 1072, 140 L. Ed. 2d 131 (1998).

Trial judge's failure to record his ex parte communication with one prospective juror as required by § 15A-1241 was harmless error, where the record adequately revealed the substance of the unrecorded conversation, and the juror was properly excused under subsection (a) of this section and § 9-6.1 because "he was over sixty-five." State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

Stated in State v. Harbison, 293 N.C. 474, 238 S.E.2d 449 (1977).

§ 9-6.1. Excuses on account of age.

Any person summoned as a juror who is 65 years or older may establish his exemption without appearing in person by filing a signed statement of the ground of his exemption with the chief district judge of that district, or the district judge or trial court administrator designated by him pursuant to G.S. 9-6(b) at any time five days before the date upon which he is summoned to appear. In the case of supplemental jurors summoned under G.S. 9-11, such notice may be given when summoned. In case the chief district judge, or the judge or trial court administrator designated by him pursuant to G.S. 9-6(b), shall reject the request for exemption, the prospective juror shall be immediately notified by the trial court administrator or the clerk of court by telephone, letter, or personally. (1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1207, s. 2; 1981, c. 9, ss. 1, 2; c. 430, ss. 4, 5.)

CASE NOTES

Juror Properly Excused. — Trial judge's failure to record his ex parte communication with one prospective juror as required by § 15A-1241 was harmless error, where the record adequately revealed the substance of the unrecorded conversation, and the juror was properly excused under this section and § 9-6(a) and 9-6.1 because "he was over sixty-five." State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

§ 9-7. Removal of names of jurors who have served from jury list; retention.

As persons are summoned for jury service, the cards upon which their names appear shall be withdrawn from the jury list and filed separately. The date for which each juror serves shall be noted on his card.

All cards removed from the jury list because of service, or having been excused from service, or because of disqualification, shall be retained for reference in compiling the next jury list. When the succeeding list has been prepared, the list of persons who have served shall be retained for a period of two years. (1967, c. 218, s. 1.)

§§ 9-8, 9-9: Repealed by Session Laws 1967, c. 218, s. 1.

Editor's Note. — Section 9-9, which derived from Session Laws 1967, c. 218, s. 1, was repealed effective Jan. 1, 1968, by its own terms.

ARTICLE 2.

Petit Jurors.

§ 9-10. Summons to jurors.

(a) The register of deeds shall, within three days after the receipt of numbers drawn, deliver the list of prospective jurors to the sheriff of the county, who shall summon the persons named therein. The summons shall be served personally, or by leaving a copy thereof at the place of residence of the juror, or by telephone or first-class mail, at least 15 days before the session of court for which the juror is summoned. Service by telephone, or by first-class mail if mailed to the correct current address of the juror on or before the fifteenth day before the day the court convenes, shall be valid and binding on the person served, and he shall be bound to appear in the same manner as if personally served. The summons shall contain information as to the time, place, and authority before whom applications for excuses from jury service may be heard.

(b) All summons served personally or by mail under this section or under G.S. 9-11 shall inform the prospective juror that persons 65 years of age or older are entitled to establish in writing exemption from jury service for good cause, shall contain a statement for claiming such exemption and stating the cause and a place for the prospective juror's signature, and shall state the mailing address of the clerk of superior court and the date by which such request for exemption must be received. (1779, c. 157, ss. 4, 6, P.R.; R.C., c. 31, s. 29; 1868-9, c. 9, s. 12; Code, s. 1733; Rev., s. 1976; C.S., s. 2320; 1967, c. 218, s. 1; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1207, s. 3; 1985, c. 609, s. 3.)

Cross References. — As to penalty for disobeying summons, see § 9-13.

CASE NOTES

Jury Summons Not Improper. — Where the clerk's office mailed jury summons to prospective jurors and many of the people summoned did not send back a notification of service, the fact that the clerk's office and the sheriff's department attempted to contact some of the prospective jurors did not create a suspicion of impropriety. State v. Barnard, 346 N.C. 95, 484 S.E.2d 382 (1997).

§ 9-11. Supplemental jurors; special venire.

(a) If necessary, the court may, without using the jury list, order the sheriff to summon from day to day additional jurors to supplement the original venire. Jurors so summoned shall have the same qualifications and be subject to the same challenges as jurors selected for the regular jury list. If the presiding judge finds that service of summons by the sheriff is not suitable because of his direct or indirect interest in the action to be tried, the judge may appoint some suitable person in place of the sheriff to summon supplemental jurors. The clerk of superior court shall furnish the register of deeds the names of those additional jurors who are so summoned and who report for jury service.

(b) The presiding judge may, in his discretion, at any time before or during a session direct that supplemental jurors or a special venire be selected from the jury list in the same manner as is provided for the selection of regular jurors. Jurors summoned under this subsection may be discharged by the court at any time during the session and are subject to the same challenges as regular jurors, and to no other challenges. (1779, c. 156, s. 69, P.R.; 1830, c. 27; R.C., c. 31, s. 29; c. 35, ss. 30, 31; Code, ss. 1733, 1738, 1739, 1740; 1887, c. 53; 1889, c. 441; 1897, c. 364; Rev., ss. 1967, 1968, 1973, 1974, 1975, 3265, 3602; 1911, c. 15; 1913, c. 31, ss. 1, 2; 1915, c. 210; C.S., ss. 2321, 2322, 2338, 2339, 2340, 4635; 1967, c. 218, s. 1; 1969, c. 205, s. 6.)

CASE NOTES

The language of this section is clear and unambiguous, and its provisions authorize the trial judge to order the summoning of supplemental jurors in order to ensure orderly, uninterrupted, and speedy trials. State v. Fountain, 282 N.C. 58, 191 S.E.2d 674 (1972); State

v. Wilson, 313 N.C. 516, 330 S.E.2d 450 (1985).

Discretion of Judge. — See State v. Brogden, 111 N.C. 656, 16 S.E. 170 (1892); State v. Smarr, 121 N.C. 669, 28 S.E. 549 (1897); State v. Levy, 187 N.C. 581, 122 S.E. 386 (1924); State v. Casey, 212 N.C. 352, 193 S.E. 411 (1937), overruled on other grounds, 248 N.C. 695, 104 S.E.2d 837 (1958); State v. Strickland, 229 N.C. 201, 49 S.E.2d 469 (1948).

A motion for a change of venue or for a special venire from another county, upon the ground that the minds of the residents in the county in which the crime was committed had been influenced against the defendant, is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. State v. Ledbetter, 4 N.C. App. 303, 167 S.E.2d 68 (1969).

Discretion of Judge. — The section neither explicitly nor impliedly requires the judge to wait a certain amount of time so that a particular number of summonses can be served. State v. Mebane, 106 N.C. App. 516, 418 S.E.2d 245, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 670, 424 S.E.2d 414 (1992).

Discretion of Selecting Officer. — Where an officer is empowered to select and summon talesmen he is vested with some discretion. It is his right and duty to use his best judgment in securing men of intelligence, courage, and good moral character, but he must act with entire impartiality. State v. White, 6 N.C. App. 425, 169 S.E.2d 895 (1969); State v. Nolen, 144 N.C. App. 172, 550 S.E.2d 783 (2001).

Sheriff Not Always Disqualified Where Deputy Testifies. — The legislature did not intend to disqualify sheriffs from summoning extra jurors in all cases in which deputy sheriffs testify. If this were so, the legislature would have designated some other official to summon extra jurors. If the sheriff were disqualified from summoning jurors in every case in which a defendant feels the sheriff is harassing him, there would be few if any sheriffs qualified to summon a juror. State v. Yancey, 58 N.C. App. 52, 293 S.E.2d 298 (1982).

Testimony by a person in the sheriff's office does not disqualify the sheriff from summoning supplemental jurors to hear the matter. State v. Barnard, 346 N.C. 95, 484 S.E.2d 382 (1997).

The mere fact that the sheriff and the chief deputy were testifying in case did not preclude members of the department from contacting jurors who failed to acknowledge their service of the summons. State v. Barnard, 346 N.C. 95, 484 S.E.2d 382 (1997).

Clerical Communications. — Where prospective jurors were contacted by the sheriff himself from a list he had received, and the sheriff merely asked the persons contacted if they had received their summons and if they intended to appear in court, the communication was pretrial and simply a clerical one assuring that the prospective jurors had been served with the summons. State v. Barnard, 346 N.C. 95, 484 S.E.2d 382 (1997).

There is no statutory or case authority prescribing the methods by which tales jurors must be selected. State v. White, 6 N.C. App. 425, 169 S.E.2d 895 (1969).

Nowhere in the statute is there a provision delineating discretionary restrictions to be placed on an officer in fulfilling the court's order. The statutory recognition that tales jurors may be needed and the statutory language used contemplate a system easily and expeditiously administered. To place procedural restrictions unnecessarily on their selection would defeat the purpose of the system, which is to facilitate the dispatch of the business of the court. State v. White, 6 N.C. App. 425, 169 S.E.2d 895 (1969).

Tales jurors are selected infrequently and only to provide a source from which to fill the unexpected needs of the court. They must still possess the statutory qualifications and are still subject to the same challenges as regular jurors and may be examined by both parties on voir dire. In order to retain the flexibility needed in the administration of such a system, the summoning official must be permitted some discretion, whether he be located in a relatively small community or a more heavily populated area, and to restrict the discretion placed in the summoning official, without proven cause, is to presume he is not worthy of the office which he holds. State v. White, 6 N.C. App. 425, 169 S.E.2d 895 (1969).

Mere Possibility of Discrimination Does Not Make Panel Objectionable. — Obviously it would be possible for a sheriff, sent out to execute an order of the court under this section to discriminate in the selection of persons to be summoned. This mere possibility does not make the panel actually summoned by him objectionable where the record shows that he did not so discriminate. State v. White, 6 N.C. App. 425, 169 S.E.2d 895 (1969).

Accused was not prejudiced because he was not furnished a list of persons called as supplemental jurors, where it became necessary to summon them after the court had properly excluded jurors from the original venire. State v. Fountain, 282 N.C. 58, 191 S.E.2d 674 (1972).

Discretion of Sheriff. — Absent proof that a sheriff violated the discretionary trust placed in him by § 9-11, he should remain free to use his best judgment in carrying out the orders of the court. State v. Nolen, 144 N.C. App. 172, 550 S.E.2d 783 (2001).

The defendant was not prejudiced when the trial court ordered the sheriff to randomly recruit jurors in the middle of the jury selection process, in light of the fact that the defendant failed to exhaust his peremptory challenges. At this time, only one juror remained to be seated. The twelfth juror seated was one of the supplemental jurors, but the defendant still had one peremptory challenge remaining. State v. Wilson, 313 N.C. 516, 330 S.E.2d 450 (1985).

Special Venire Selected Without Partiality. — A challenge to the array on the ground that the sheriff and his deputies, under instructions by the sheriff, selected for the special venire freeholders of good character, who had not served on the jury within the past two years and who lived in townships in the county other than the township in which the crime was committed and townships contiguous thereto, was properly refused, the action of the sheriff and the deputies showing no partiality, misconduct and irregularity in making out the list. State v. Dixon, 215 N.C. 438, 2 S.E.2d 371 (1939).

A challenge to jury selection under § 9-11 is sustainable when there is a partiality or misconduct on the sheriff's part or some irregularity in making out the list. State v. Nolen, 144 N.C. App. 172, 550 S.E.2d 783 (2001).

The failure of the trial judge to sign the order for a special venire does not alone invalidate the special venire, it having been ordered and summoned in all other respects in conformity with statute. State v. Anderson, 228 N.C. 720, 47 S.E.2d 1 (1948).

Order Substantially a Special Writ of Venire Facias. — A written order entitled as of the action, commanding the sheriff to summon a special venire of twenty-five freeholders from the body of the county to appear on a specified date to act as jurors in the case, is in substance a special writ of venire facias. State v. Anderson, 228 N.C. 720, 47 S.E.2d 1 (1948).

Challenge for Cause. — Under this section where a special venire has been ordered by the court for the trial of a capital felony, the veniremen, being selected by the sheriff in his discretion, not from the jury box, are subject to the same challenges for cause as tales jurors. State v. Avant, 202 N.C. 680, 163 S.E. 806 (1932).

Objections Made by Challenges to the Array. — Objections to the special venire based on partiality, misconduct of the sheriff, or irregularity in making out the jury list, are properly made by challenges to the array. State v. Shaw, 284 N.C. 366, 200 S.E.2d 585 (1973).

A motion challenging the array of special jurors was properly denied where the motion did not challenge the order of the court directing the sheriff to select six supplemental jurors, nor the action of the sheriff in selecting the jurors, nor contend that black persons were systematically excluded by the sheriff in his selection of the six jurors. State v. Hollingsworth, 11 N.C. App. 674, 182 S.E.2d 26 (1971).

Special Venire Exhausted. — When a special venire is exhausted without completing the jury, the court may order a further venire to be summoned at once from the bystanders. State v. Stanton, 118 N.C. 1182, 24 S.E. 536 (1896).

Accessory May Be Tried by Special Venire. — Where two persons are indicted for murder, one as principal and the other as accessory before the fact, the latter may be tried by a jury selected from a special venire ordered in the case. State v. Register, 133 N.C. 746, 46 S.E. 21 (1903).

Applicability of Notice Provision. — The thirty day notice provision in § 9-5 did not apply to the trial court's selection of supplemental jurors under this section. State v. Dickens, 346 N.C. 26, 484 S.E.2d 553 (1997).

Applied in State v. Brown, 13 N.C. App. 261, 185 S.E.2d 471 (1971).

Cited in State v. Geddie, 345 N.C. 73, 478 S.E.2d 146 (1996), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 825, 118 S. Ct. 86, 139 L. Ed. 2d 43 (1997).

§ 9-12. Supplemental jurors from other counties.

(a) On motion of any party or the State, or on his own motion, any judge of the superior court, if he is of the opinion that it is necessary in order to provide a fair trial in any case, and regardless of whether he will preside over the trial of that case, may order as many jurors as he deems necessary to be summoned from any county or counties in the district or set of districts as defined in G.S. 7A-41.1(a) in which the county of trial is located or in any adjoining district or set of districts. These jurors shall be selected and shall serve in the manner provided for selection and service of supplemental jurors selected from the jury list. These jurors shall be subject to the same challenges as other jurors, except challenges for nonresidence in the county of trial.

(b) Transportation may be furnished in lieu of mileage.

(c) Repealed by Session Laws 1971, c. 377, s. 32. (1913, c. 4, ss. 1, 2; C.S., s. 473; 1931, c. 308; 1933, c. 248; 1961, c. 110; 1967, c. 218, s. 1; 1971, c. 377, s. 32; 1987 (Reg. Sess., 1988), c. 1037, s. 48.)

CASE NOTES

Editor's Note. — Some of the cases below were decided under former § 1-86.

Discretion of Court. — The trial judge, when he refused defendant's motion to remove an action for homicide to another county, in the exercise of his sound discretion, could have had the jurors summoned from any adjoining county, or from any county in the same judicial district, or had jurors drawn from the jury box of such county. State v. Kincaid, 183 N.C. 709, 110 S.E. 612 (1922); State v. Baxter, 208 N.C. 90, 179 S.E. 450 (1935), decided under former § 1-86.

The granting of a solicitor's (now district attorney's) motion that the jury be drawn from the body of another county is within the court's discretion. State v. Shipman, 202 N.C. 518, 163 S.E. 657 (1932).

A motion for change of venue or, in the alternative, that a jury be summoned from another county, on the ground that defendant could not obtain a fair trial because of widespread and unfavorable publicity, was addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and where the record disclosed that the trial judge conducted a hearing, read all the affidavits, and examined the press releases, juror selected stated that he could render a verdict uninfluenced by the publicity, and defendant did not exhaust his peremptory challenges, abuse of discretion in denying the motion was not disclosed. State v. Porth, 269 N.C. 329, 153 S.E.2d 10 (1967), decided under former § 1-86.

The motion of the defendants that a jury be summoned from another county was addressed to the sound discretion of the presiding judge. State v. Yoes, 271 N.C. 616, 157 S.E.2d 386 (1967).

A defendant's motion for a change of venue and his alternative motion for a special venire from another county were addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court. State v. Penley, 6 N.C. App. 455, 170 S.E.2d 632 (1969).

This section places the matter of ordering jurors to be summoned from another county in the sound discretion of the judge of the superior court. State v. Edwards, 286 N.C. 140, 209 S.E.2d 789 (1974).

Order Tantamount to Denial of Motion to Remove. — When the judge entered an order directing that venire of jurors be drawn from another county to serve as jurors in the trial, it was tantamount to a denial of a motion to remove the cases to another county for trial. State v. Moore, 258 N.C. 300, 128 S.E.2d 563 (1962), decided under former § 1-86.

Order Justified. — Due to the prior trials and the widespread publicity, the court on motion of the State was justified in ordering the trial jury drawn from another county. State v. Cutshall, 281 N.C. 588, 189 S.E.2d 176 (1972).

Review of Discretion. — A judge's order, entered by virtue of authority vested in him by this section, is not reviewable, unless there has been a manifest abuse of his discretion. State v. Childs, 269 N.C. 307, 152 S.E.2d 453 (1967), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2278, 29 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1971), decided under former § 1-86.

A motion for change of venue or for a special venire may be granted or denied in the discretion of the trial judge, and his decision in the exercise of such discretion is not reviewable in the Court of Appeals unless gross abuse of discretion is shown. State v. Ledbetter, 4 N.C. App. 303, 167 S.E.2d 68 (1969).

A defendant's motions for a change of venue or for a special venire from another county, on the ground that he could not get a fair and impartial trial in the county because of extensive publicity and public discussion of the cases, were addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court, whose ruling in denying these motions was not disturbed on appeal because (1) the newspaper articles filed in support of the motions were not unduly inflammatory in nature, (2) the articles were published three months prior to the trial and there was no evidence of repeated or excessive publication, and (3) those of the prospective jurors who had read the newspaper accounts stated that they could return an impartial verdict. State v. Penley, 6 N.C. App. 455, 170 S.E.2d 632 (1969).

The courts have consistently held that a motion for removal to an adjacent county or to cause a jury to be selected from an adjacent county on the grounds of unfavorable publicity is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and that, absent a showing of abuse of discretion, the decision of the trial court is not reviewable. State v. Jackson, 24 N.C. App. 394, 210 S.E.2d 876, rev'd on other grounds, 287 N.C. 470, 215 S.E.2d 123 (1975).

Motions for change of venue or special venire are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge and, absent abuse of discretion, his rulings will not be disturbed on appeal. State v. Brower, 289 N.C. 644, 224 S.E.2d 551 (1976); State v. Hopper, 292 N.C. 580, 234 S.E.2d 580 (1977).

Applied in State v. Roseboro, 276 N.C. 185, 171 S.E.2d 886 (1970); State v. Jackson, 287 N.C. 470, 215 S.E.2d 123 (1975); Kinston City Bd. of Educ. v. Board of Comm'rs, 29 N.C. App. 544, 225 S.E.2d 145 (1976).

Cited in State v. Mitchell, 283 N.C. 462, 196 S.E.2d 736 (1973).

§ 9-13. Penalty for disobeying summons.

Every person summoned to appear as a juror who has not been excused, and who fails to appear and attend until duly discharged, shall be subject to a fine of not more than fifty dollars ($50.00), to be imposed by the court, unless he renders an excuse deemed sufficient. The forfeiture so imposed if not paid forthwith shall be entered as a judgment against the defaulting juror, and the clerk of superior court shall issue an execution against his estate. (1779, c. 157, s. 4, P.R.; 1783, c. 189, P.R.; 1806, c. 694, P.R.; R.C., c. 31, s. 30; Code, ss. 405, 1734; Rev., s. 1977; C.S., s. 2323; 1967, c. 218, s. 1.)

Legal Periodicals. — For article, "Filling the Box: Responding to Jury Duty Avoidance," see 23 N.C. Cent. L.J. 1 (1997).

§ 9-14. Jury sworn; judge decides competency.

The clerk shall, at the beginning of court, swear all jurors who have not been selected as grand jurors. Each juror shall swear or affirm that he will truthfully and without prejudice or partiality try all issues in criminal or civil actions that come before him and render true verdicts according to the evidence. Nothing herein shall be construed to disallow the usual challenges in law to the whole jury so sworn or to any juror; and if by reason of such challenge any juror is withdrawn from a jury being selected to try a case, his place on that jury shall be taken by another qualified juror. The presiding judge shall decide all questions as to the competency of jurors. (1790, c. 321, P.R.; 1822, c. 1133, s. 1, P.R.; R.C., c. 31, s. 34; Code, s. 405; Rev., s. 1966; C.S., s. 2324; 1967, c. 218, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Challenge to Jurors.
III. Competency of Jurors.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Administering Oath to Prospective Jurors. — The phrase "at the beginning of court," as it applies to the swearing of prospective jurors, refers to the beginning of the term of court, as opposed to the beginning of an individual trial, which may be civil or criminal. State v. McNeill, 349 N.C. 634, 509 S.E.2d 415 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 102, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

The presiding judge has the duty to supervise the examination of prospective jurors. State v. Allen, 322 N.C. 176, 367 S.E.2d 626 (1988); State v. Green, 336 N.C. 142, 443 S.E.2d 14, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1046, 115 S. Ct. 642, 130 L. Ed. 2d 547 (1994).

Regulation of the manner and extent of inquiries on voir dire rests largely in the trial judge's discretion. State v. Allen, 322 N.C. 176, 367 S.E.2d 626 (1988); State v. Green, 336 N.C. 142, 443 S.E.2d 14, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1046, 115 S. Ct. 642, 130 L. Ed. 2d 547 (1994).

Administration of Oath During Voir Dire. — The State's failure to administer an oath requiring prospective jurors to "tell the truth" during voir dire did not taint jury selection or violate defendant's right to a fair and impartial trial, where the jurors took the statutorily prescribed oath prior to trial and there was no evidence to show that the jury was unqualified to sit, or that he had been prejudiced in any way. State v. McNeill, 349 N.C. 634, 509 S.E.2d 415 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 102, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

The trial court was not required to ask prospective jurors to swear to tell the truth during jury voir dire State v. Hyde, 352 N.C. 37, 530 S.E.2d 281 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1114, 121 S. Ct. 862, 148 L. Ed. 2d 775 (2001).

Juror Must Qualify to Be Sworn in at the Beginning of Court. — Court committed no error in excusing a juror, where the transcript revealed that at the time jury selection commenced, the juror had previously served on a federal jury within two years and was not immediately qualified to serve in the instant case; the court could not, as defendant suggested, move the juror to a later panel and then swear her in at the time she was called. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

A defendant is not entitled to a jury of his selection or choice, but only to a jury selected pursuant to law and without unconstitutional discrimination against a class or substantial group of the community from which the jury panel is drawn. He has no vested right to a particular juror. State v. Atkinson, 275 N.C. 288, 167 S.E.2d 241 (1969), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2283, 29 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1971).

Applied in State v. Boyd, 287 N.C. 131, 214 S.E.2d 14 (1975); State v. Vinson, 287 N.C. 326, 215 S.E.2d 60 (1975); State v. Wetmore, 287 N.C. 344, 215 S.E.2d 51 (1975); State v. Fleming, 350 N.C. 109, 512 S.E.2d 720 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 941, 120 S. Ct. 351, 145 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1999).

Cited in State v. Waddell, 279 N.C. 442, 183 S.E.2d 644 (1971); State v. Moye, 12 N.C. App. 178, 182 S.E.2d 814 (1971); State v. Zigler, 42 N.C. App. 148, 256 S.E.2d 479 (1979); State v. Wright, 52 N.C. App. 166, 278 S.E.2d 579 (1981); State v. Thomas, 344 N.C. 639, 477 S.E.2d 450 (1996), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 824, 118 S. Ct. 84, 139 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1997).

II. CHALLENGE TO JURORS.

The right of challenge is not one to accept, but to reject. It is not given for the purpose of enabling the defendant, or the State, to pick a jury, but to secure an impartial one. State v. Allred, 275 N.C. 554, 169 S.E.2d 833 (1969); State v. Chavis, 24 N.C. App. 148, 210 S.E.2d 555 (1974), appeal dismissed, 287 N.C. 261, 214 S.E.2d 434 (1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1080, 96 S. Ct. 868, 47 L. Ed. 2d 91 (1976).

It has been held in many cases that the right to challenge a juror for cause is given to afford a litigant fair opportunity to remove objectionable jurors, and was not intended to enable him to select a jury of his own choosing. See Blevins v. Erwin Cotton Mills Co., 150 N.C. 493, 64 S.E. 428 (1909).

A party has no right to seat a particular juror, but only to reject one who is prejudiced against him. State v. Duvall, 50 N.C. App. 684, 275 S.E.2d 842, rev'd on other grounds, 304 N.C. 557, 284 S.E.2d 495 (1981).

Opinion of Juror. — The expression of an opinion is sometimes ground for challenge, but is not if the juror states that the opinion could be eliminated and a fair and impartial verdict rendered. State v. Bailey, 179 N.C. 724, 102 S.E. 406 (1920); State v. Winder, 183 N.C. 776, 111 S.E. 530 (1922).

The challenge for this cause can be made only by that party against whom the opinion was formed and expressed. State v. Benton, 19 N.C. 196 (1836).

A juror may be examined as to opinions honestly formed, and honestly expressed, manifesting a bias of judgment, not referable to personal partiality, or malevolence; but if the opinion has been made up and expressed under circumstances which involve dishonor and guilt, and where such expression may be visited with punishment, he ought not to be required to testify so as to incriminate himself. State v. Benton, 19 N.C. 196 (1836); State v. Mills, 91 N.C. 581 (1884).

In an indictment for illegal sale of liquor, challenges for cause, in that the jurors belonged to the Anti-Saloon League, were properly disallowed, where the jurors had taken no part in prosecuting or aiding in the prosecution of the defendant. State v. Sultan, 142 N.C. 569, 54 S.E. 841 (1906).

The desire of a prospective juror to affirm rather than take an oath is not, of itself, cause for challenge in this State. State v. Atkinson, 275 N.C. 288, 167 S.E.2d 241 (1969), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2283, 29 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1971); State v. Harris, 283 N.C. 46, 194 S.E.2d 796, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 850, 94 S. Ct. 143, 38 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1973).

Relationship Between Juror and Party. — A juror, who was related to the defendant by blood or marriage within the ninth degree of kinship, was properly rejected when challenged by the State for cause on that ground. State v. Allred, 275 N.C. 554, 169 S.E.2d 833 (1969); State v. Watson, 281 N.C. 221, 188 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1043, 93 S. Ct. 537, 34 L. Ed. 2d 493 (1972).

Relationship Between Juror and Witness. — A relationship within the ninth degree between a juror and a State's witness, standing alone, is not legal ground for challenge for cause. Where such relationship exists and is known and recognized by the juror, a defendant's challenge for cause should be rejected only if it should appear clearly that, under the circumstances of the particular case, the challenged juror would have no reason or disposition to favor his kinsman by giving added weight to his testimony or otherwise. State v.

Allred, 275 N.C. 554, 169 S.E.2d 833 (1969); State v. Watson, 281 N.C. 221, 188 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1043, 93 S. Ct. 537, 34 L. Ed. 2d 493 (1972).

Relationship of Juror to District Attorney. — The trial court did not err in the denial of defendant's challenge for cause directed to the district solicitor's (now district attorney's) father-in-law being a juror, where the challenge was denied only after the juror stated, upon being questioned by the court, that he would not convict on his relationship to the solicitor (now district attorney), and after it was ascertained that the district solicitor (now district attorney) was not prosecuting defendant's case. State v. Watson, 281 N.C. 221, 188 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1043, 93 S. Ct. 537, 34 L. Ed. 2d 493 (1972).

As to exclusion of juror for nonresidence, see State v. Bullock, 63 N.C. 570 (1869); State v. Upton, 170 N.C. 769, 87 S.E. 328 (1915).

As to exclusion for employment by party, see Oliphant v. Atlantic C.L.R.R., 171 N.C. 303, 88 S.E. 425 (1916).

Excluding Jurors for Opposition to Capital Punishment. — Under the decision of Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 88 S. Ct. 1770, 20 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1968), a sentence of death cannot be carried out if the jury that imposed or recommended it was chosen by excluding veniremen for cause simply because they voiced general objections to the death penalty or expressed conscientious or religious scruples against its infliction. State v. Ruth, 276 N.C. 36, 170 S.E.2d 897 (1969).

Judgment of the superior court sentencing defendant to death for first-degree murder had to be vacated under the decision of Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 88 S. Ct. 1770, 20 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1968), where the trial court allowed the State's challenges for cause to seven prospective jurors who stated simply a general objection to or conscientious scruples against capital punishment, notwithstanding the trial occurred prior to the Witherspoon decision, since that decision was fully retroactive. State v. Ruth, 276 N.C. 36, 170 S.E.2d 897 (1969).

A trial judge should allow challenge for cause when a venireman is not willing to consider all possible penalties provided by State law and when the venireman is unalterably committed to vote against the death penalty, regardless of the evidence which might be presented at trial. State v. Watson, 281 N.C. 221, 188 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1043, 93 S. Ct. 537, 34 L. Ed. 2d 493 (1972).

In a capital case, if a prospective juror states that under no circumstances could he vote for a verdict that would result in the imposition of the death penalty no matter how aggravated the case and regardless of the evidence shown, the trial court can properly dismiss the juror upon a challenge for cause. State v. Fowler, 285 N.C. 90, 203 S.E.2d 803 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3212, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1212 (1976).

In a capital case a juror may be properly challenged for cause if he indicates he could not return a verdict of guilty knowing the penalty would be death, even though the State proved to him by the evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused was guilty of the capital crime charged. State v. Honeycutt, 285 N.C. 174, 203 S.E.2d 844 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3205, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1207 (1976).

In a first-degree murder trial, where prospective juror stated that knowing that the death penalty would be imposed he did not feel that he could vote for a verdict of guilty even though he was satisfied of defendant's guilt, the trial judge, in his discretion, and at the request of the prospective juror, in excusing the prospective juror did not commit prejudicial error. State v. Waddell, 289 N.C. 19, 220 S.E.2d 293 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3211, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1210 (1976).

Time of Challenge. — The court may, in its discretion, permit a juror to be challenged by the State for cause, after he has been tendered to the defendant and before the jury is impaneled. State v. Green, 95 N.C. 611 (1886).

Excusing Unchallenged Juror. — The trial judge could excuse a juror, before the jury was impaneled, although the solicitor (now district attorney) had passed him to the defendant and had not challenged him for cause. State v. Vick, 132 N.C. 995, 43 S.E. 626 (1903).

It is the right and duty of the court to see that a competent, fair and impartial jury is impaneled and, to that end, the court, in its discretion, may excuse a prospective juror without a challenge by either party. It is immaterial that this is done as the result of information voluntarily disclosed by the prospective juror without questioning. State v. Atkinson, 275 N.C. 288, 167 S.E.2d 241 (1969), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2283, 29 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1971); State v. Harris, 283 N.C. 46, 194 S.E.2d 796, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 850, 94 S. Ct. 143, 38 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1973).

It is the duty of the trial judge to see that a competent, fair and impartial jury is impaneled, and to that end the judge may, in his discretion, excuse a prospective juror even without challenge from either party. State v. Waddell, 289 N.C. 19, 220 S.E.2d 293 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3211, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1210 (1976).

Method of Taking Advantage of Error. — The action of a trial judge in determining the qualifications of a juryman, if erroneous, was ground for a challenge to the array by a motion to quash and set aside the entire panel, and in the absence of such challenge a defendant could not be allowed to take advantage of the alleged error after trial and judgment. State v. Moore, 120 N.C. 570, 26 S.E. 697 (1897).

The erroneous allowance of an improper challenge for cause did not entitle the adverse party to a new trial, so long as only those who were competent and qualified to serve were actually impaneled upon the jury which tried his case. This was especially true where the adverse party did not exhaust his peremptory challenges. State v. Atkinson, 275 N.C. 288, 167 S.E.2d 241 (1969), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2283, 29 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1971); State v. Harris, 283 N.C. 46, 194 S.E.2d 796, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 850, 94 S. Ct. 143, 38 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1973).

III. COMPETENCY OF JURORS.

The question of whether a juror is competent is one for the trial judge to determine in his discretion, and his rulings thereon are not reviewable on appeal unless accompanied by some imputed error of law. State v. Blount, 4 N.C. App. 561, 167 S.E.2d 444 (1969); State v. Johnson, 280 N.C. 281, 185 S.E.2d 698 (1972); State v. Watson, 281 N.C. 221, 188 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1043, 93 S. Ct. 537, 34 L. Ed. 2d 493 (1972); State v. Cameron, 17 N.C. App. 229, 193 S.E.2d 485 (1972), aff'd, 283 N.C. 191, 195 S.E.2d 481 (1973); State v. Harris, 283 N.C. 46, 194 S.E.2d 796, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 850, 94 S. Ct. 143, 38 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1973); State v. Noell, 284 N.C. 670, 202 S.E.2d 750 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 902, 96 S. Ct. 3203, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1205 (1976).

The trial court has broad discretion in the voir dire selection of jurors, and the exercise of the party's right to examine prospective jurors should be carefully supervised by the trial court. State v. Wood, 20 N.C. App. 267, 201 S.E.2d 231 (1973).

The competency of jurors to serve is left largely to the sound legal discretion of the trial judge, and his rulings thereon are not subject to review on appeal unless accompanied by some imputed error of law. State v. Chavis, 24 N.C. App. 148, 210 S.E.2d 555 (1974), appeal dismissed, 287 N.C. 261, 214 S.E.2d 434 (1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1080, 96 S. Ct. 868, 47 L. Ed. 2d 91 (1976).

Ruling on motion for competency of jurors is discretionary with the trial judge and will not be reviewed absent a showing of abuse of discretion or an error of law. State v. Moore, 24 N.C. App. 582, 211 S.E.2d 470 (1975).

Decisions as to a juror's competency at the time of selection and his continued competency to serve are matters resting in the trial judge's sound discretion and are not subject to review unless accompanied by some imputed error of law. State v. Waddell, 289 N.C. 19, 220 S.E.2d 293 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3211, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1210 (1976).

Unquestionably the trial judge is vested with broad discretionary powers in determining the competency of jurors and that discretion will not ordinarily be disturbed on appeal. State v. Lee, 292 N.C. 617, 234 S.E.2d 574 (1977).

The trial judge is vested with broad discretion in determining the competency of the jurors. State v. Duvall, 50 N.C. App. 684, 275 S.E.2d 842, rev'd on other grounds, 304 N.C. 557, 284 S.E.2d 495 (1981).

The trial judge is empowered to decide all questions regarding the competency of jurors. His decision as to a juror's competency is a matter vested in his sound discretion and will be reversed only upon a demonstration that he abused this discretion. State v. King, 311 N.C. 603, 320 S.E.2d 1 (1984).

Review of Discretion. — The rulings of the judge on questions as to the competency of jurors are not subject to review on appeal unless accompanied by some imputed error of law. State v. DeGraffenreid, 224 N.C. 517, 31 S.E.2d 523 (1944); State v. Davenport, 227 N.C. 475, 42 S.E.2d 686 (1947); State v. Suddreth, 230 N.C. 239, 52 S.E.2d 924 (1949); State v. Gibbs, 5 N.C. App. 457, 168 S.E.2d 507 (1969); State v. Johnson, 280 N.C. 281, 185 S.E.2d 698 (1972); State v. Noell, 284 N.C. 670, 202 S.E.2d 750 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 902, 96 S. Ct. 3203, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1205 (1976); State v. Tatum, 291 N.C. 73, 229 S.E.2d 562 (1976); State v. Sweezy, 291 N.C. 366, 230 S.E.2d 524 (1976).

Where a juror in a homicide trial had sister of deceased as one of his passengers in a four-mile automobile trip, the defendant moved to set aside the verdict. The juror stated upon oath that he did not know that his passenger was the sister of the deceased, and the court found upon investigation that the case was not discussed during the ride. It was held that exception to refusal of motion was not reviewable. State v. Suddreth, 230 N.C. 239, 52 S.E.2d 924 (1949).

The trial court's findings, upon supporting evidence, that persons of defendant's race were not excluded from the petit jury on account of race, were conclusive on appeal, and defendant's exception to the overruling of his challenge to the array on that ground presented no reviewable question of law. State v. Reid, 230 N.C. 561, 53 S.E.2d 849, cert. denied, 338 U.S. 876, 70 S. Ct. 138, 94 L. Ed. 537 (1949).

Defendant moved for a new trial on the ground that during the trial he discussed the case with one of the jurors before recognizing him as a juror. The court found that the defendant had not shown that he was in anywise prejudiced by the occurrence, and denied defendant's motion for a new trial. The ruling of the court was not reviewable. State v. Scott, 242 N.C. 595, 89 S.E.2d 153 (1955).

A ruling in respect to the impartiality of a juror presents no question of law for review. State v. Chavis, 24 N.C. App. 148, 210 S.E.2d 555 (1974), appeal dismissed, 287 N.C. 261, 214 S.E.2d 434 (1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1080, 96 S. Ct. 868, 47 L. Ed. 2d 91 (1976).

Defendant seeking to establish on appeal that the exercise of judicial discretion constituted reversible error must show harmful prejudice as well as clear abuse of discretion. State v. Young, 287 N.C. 377, 214 S.E.2d 763 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3207, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1208 (1976).

§ 9-15. Questioning jurors without challenge; challenges for cause.

(a) The court, and any party to an action, or his counsel of record shall be allowed, in selecting the jury, to make direct oral inquiry of any prospective juror as to the fitness and competency of any person to serve as a juror, without having such inquiry treated as a challenge of such person, and it shall not be considered by the court that any person is challenged as a juror until the party shall formally state that such person is so challenged.

(b) It shall not be a valid cause for challenge that any juror, regular or supplemental, is not a freeholder or has not paid the taxes assessed against him.

(c) In civil cases if any juror has a suit pending and at issue in the court in which he is serving, he may be challenged for cause, and he shall be withdrawn from the trial panel, and may be withdrawn from the venire in the discretion of the presiding judge. In criminal cases challenges are governed by Article 72, Selecting and Impaneling the Jury, of Chapter 15A of the General Statutes. (1806, c. 694, P.R.; 1868-9, c. 9, s. 7; Code, s. 1728; Rev., s. 1960; 1913, c. 31, ss. 5, 6, 7; C.S., ss. 2316, 2325, 2326; 1933, c. 130; 1967, c. 218, s. 1; 1973, c. 95; 1977, c. 711, s. 11.)

I. IN GENERAL.

A motion to examine jurors individually, rather than collectively, is directed to the sound discretion which the trial court possesses for regulating the jury selection process. State v. Thomas, 294 N.C. 105, 240 S.E.2d 426 (1978).

Defendant seeking to establish on appeal that the exercise of judicial discretion constituted reversible error must show harmful prejudice as well as clear abuse of discretion. State v. Young, 287 N.C. 377, 214 S.E.2d 763 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3207, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1208 (1976).

The questioning of jurors in defendant's absence erroneously deprived defendant of his right to be present at his trial, but the error was harmless where the court was satisfied here beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant's absence during the preliminary questioning of prospective jurors did not result in the rejection of any juror whom defendant was entitled to have on the panel or the seating of any juror whom defendant was entitled to reject either for cause or peremptorily. State v. Payne, 328 N.C. 377, 402 S.E.2d 582 (1991).

Applied in State v. Soyars, 332 N.C. 47, 418 S.E.2d 480 (1992).

Quoted in State v. Crummy, 107 N.C. App. 305, 420 S.E.2d 448, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 669, 424 S.E.2d 411 (1992).

II. QUESTIONING PROSPECTIVE JURORS.

A. Nature and Scope of Inquiry.

Purpose of Voir Dire. — The voir dire examination of jurors is a right secured to the defendant by the statutes and has a definite double purpose: first, to ascertain whether there exist grounds for challenge for cause; and, second, to enable counsel to exercise intelligently the peremptory challenges allowed by law. State v. Allred, 275 N.C. 554, 169 S.E.2d 833 (1969); State v. Dawson, 281 N.C. 645, 190 S.E.2d 196 (1972); State v. Carey, 285 N.C. 497, 206 S.E.2d 213 (1974); State v. Young, 287 N.C. 377, 214 S.E.2d 763 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3207, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1208 (1976); In re Will of Worrell, 35 N.C. App. 278, 241 S.E.2d 343, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 90, 244 S.E.2d 263 (1978); State v. Brown, 39 N.C. App. 548, 251 S.E.2d 706, cert. denied, 297 N.C. 302, 254 S.E.2d 923 (1979); State v. Bracey, 303 N.C. 112, 277 S.E.2d 390 (1981).

The purpose of the voir dire examination and the exercise of challenges, either peremptory or for cause, is to eliminate extremes of partiality and to assure both the defendant and the State that the persons chosen to decide the guilt or innocence of the accused will reach that decision solely upon the evidence produced at trial. State v. Honeycutt, 285 N.C. 174, 203 S.E.2d 844 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3205, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1207 (1976).

The primary purpose of the voir dire of prospective jurors is to select an impartial jury. State v. Lee, 292 N.C. 617, 234 S.E.2d 574 (1977); In re Will of Worrell, 35 N.C. App. 278, 241 S.E.2d 343, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 90, 244 S.E.2d 263 (1978).

The voir dire examination of jurors allowed by this section serves the dual purpose of ascertaining whether grounds exist for challenge for cause to enable counsel to exercise intelligently the peremptory challenges allowed by law. State v. Brown, 53 N.C. App. 82, 280 S.E.2d 31, cert. denied, 304 N.C. 197, 285 S.E.2d 102 (1981).

Any party to an action, whether civil or criminal, is entitled to inquire into the fitness and competency of any prospective juror. State v. Wood, 20 N.C. App. 267, 201 S.E.2d 231 (1973).

The right of inquiry concerning a prospective juror's competency and fitness to serve may be exercised by or on behalf of the defendant as well as the State. State v. Carey, 285 N.C. 497, 206 S.E.2d 213 (1974).

Each defendant is entitled to full opportunity to face the prospective jurors, make diligent inquiry into their fitness to serve, and to exercise his right to challenge those who are objectionable to him. State v. Boykin, 291 N.C. 264, 229 S.E.2d 914 (1976); State v. Thomas, 294 N.C. 105, 240 S.E.2d 426 (1978).

Prospective jurors may be asked questions which will elicit information not per se a ground for challenge in order that the party, propounding the question, may exercise intelligently his or its peremptory challenges. State v. Jarrette, 284 N.C. 625, 202 S.E.2d 721 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3205, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1206 (1976).

Questions Regarding Right to Make a Will. — In view of the possibility that many people, for one reason or another, do not agree with the statutory right of a person to make a will, propounders of a will should be allowed to question prospective jurors with respect to their feelings on that question. In re Will of Worrell, 35 N.C. App. 278, 241 S.E.2d 343, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 90, 244 S.E.2d 263 (1978).

Questioning of Jurors by Court or by Counsel. — Although this section assures a defendant of the right to have due inquiry made as to the competency and fitness of any person to serve as a juror, the actual questioning of prospective jurors to elicit the pertinent information may be conducted either by the court or by counsel for the State and counsel for the defendant. The trial judge, in his discretion, may decide which course to pursue in a particular case. State v. Dawson, 281 N.C. 645, 190 S.E.2d 196 (1972); State v. Harris, 283 N.C. 46, 194 S.E.2d 796, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 850, 94 S. Ct. 143, 38 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1973); State v. Girley, 27 N.C. App. 388, 219 S.E.2d 301 (1975), cert. denied, 289 N.C. 141, 220 S.E.2d 799 (1976).

Prohibiting Ambiguous or Confusing Questions. — Discretion over the inquiry on voir dire was properly exercised when the trial court prohibited ambiguous or confusing hypothetical questions. State v. Denny, 294 N.C. 294, 240 S.E.2d 437 (1978).

Refusal of Court to Ask Question Requested by Counsel. — If the court, when it conducted the questioning, declined to ask a question requested by the defendant's counsel, an exception should have been noted so that an appellate court could consider the propriety, pertinence and substance of such question. This procedure avoids repetitive questioning without precluding or restricting any inquiry suggested and requested by defendant's counsel, and is not violative of this section or otherwise objectionable. State v. Dawson, 281 N.C. 645, 190 S.E.2d 196 (1972).

Effect of District Attorney's Improper Statements During Voir Dire. — In a capital case, improper statements made by a district attorney in the presence of prospective jurors during their voir dire examination may well be as prejudicial as a similar statement made by him during argument to the jury. State v. Hines, 286 N.C. 377, 211 S.E.2d 201 (1975).

Regulation of Voir Dire Rests in Trial Judge's Discretion. — Counsel's exercise of the right to inquire into the fitness of jurors is subject to the trial judge's close supervision, and the regulation of the manner and the extent of the inquiry rests largely in the trial judge's discretion. State v. Bryant, 282 N.C. 92, 191 S.E.2d 745 (1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 987, 93 S. Ct. 1516, 36 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1973); State v. Bracey, 303 N.C. 112, 277 S.E.2d 390 (1981).

Regulation of the manner and the extent of the inquiry on voir dire rests largely in the trial judge's discretion. State v. Young, 287 N.C. 377, 214 S.E.2d 763 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3207, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1208 (1976).

Counsel's exercise of the right to inquire into the fitness of jurors is subject to the trial judge's close supervision. The regulation of the manner and the extent of the inquiry rests largely in the trial judge's discretion. State v. Boykin, 291 N.C. 264, 229 S.E.2d 914 (1976).

The manner and extent of the inquiry of prospective jurors are matters committed largely to the discretion of the trial judge and are subject to his close supervision. State v. Denny, 294 N.C. 294, 240 S.E.2d 437 (1978).

Judge's Discretion Is Subject to Review. — While the regulation of the manner and extent of the inquiry on voir dire rests largely in the trial judge's discretion, his exercise of discretion is not absolute and is subject to review on appeal. In re Will of Worrell, 35 N.C. App. 278, 241 S.E.2d 343, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 90, 244 S.E.2d 263 (1978).

B. Concerning Capital Punishment.

Voir Dire Should Be Based on Questions Phrased in Witherspoon Language. — Since Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 88 S. Ct. 1770, 20 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1968) has so clearly specified the ultimate questions that must be answered, the voir dire examination of prospective jurors should be based on questions phrased in Witherspoon language, because unless this course is followed, new trials will often be necessary in cases otherwise free from prejudicial error. State v. Monk, 286 N.C. 509, 212 S.E.2d 125 (1975).

Propriety of Examining Jurors' Attitudes. — In order to ensure a fair trial before an unbiased jury, it is entirely proper in a capital case for both the State and the defendant to make appropriate inquiry concerning a prospective juror's moral or religious scruples, beliefs, and attitudes toward capital punishment. State v. Honeycutt, 285 N.C. 174, 203 S.E.2d 844 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3205, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1207 (1976); State v. Hunt, 289 N.C. 403, 222 S.E.2d 234, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 809, 97 S. Ct. 46, 50 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1976).

In a capital case both the State and the defendant may, on the voir dire examination of prospective jurors, make inquiry concerning a prospective juror's moral or religious scruples, his beliefs and attitudes toward capital punishment, to the end that both the defendant and the State may be ensured a fair trial before an unbiased jury. State v. Britt, 285 N.C. 256, 204 S.E.2d 817 (1974).

In many capital cases solicitors (now district attorneys) may ask prospective jurors whether they have moral or religious scruples against capital punishment, and if so, whether they are willing to consider all of the penalties provided by law, or are irrevocably committed to vote against a verdict carrying the death penalty regardless of the facts and circumstances that might be revealed by the evidence. State v. Carey, 285 N.C. 497, 206 S.E.2d 213 (1974).

There was no error in permitting questions to be propounded to prospective jurors concerning their views about the death penalty. State v. Williams, 286 N.C. 422, 212 S.E.2d 113 (1975).

Scope of Inquiries Is Within Control and Supervision of Court. — The extent of the inquiries to prospective jurors concerning their attitudes toward capital punishment remains under the control and supervision of the trial judge. State v. Williams, 286 N.C. 422, 212 S.E.2d 113 (1975).

III. CHALLENGES FOR CAUSE.

Purpose. — The right to challenge is not given so as to allow a party to pick a jury, but so that he may obtain an impartial jury. State v. Bryant, 282 N.C. 92, 191 S.E.2d 745 (1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 987, 93 S. Ct. 1516, 36 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1973).

Excluding Jurors for Opposition to Capital Punishment. — If a prospective juror states that under no circumstances could he vote for a verdict that would result in the imposition of the death penalty no matter how aggravated the case and regardless of the evidence shown, the trial court can properly dismiss the juror upon a challenge for cause. State v. Avery, 286 N.C. 459, 212 S.E.2d 142 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3209, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1209 (1976).

Jurors who indicated they were irrevocably committed to vote against a verdict carrying the death penalty regardless of the facts and circumstances that might be revealed by the evidence were properly excused for cause. State v. Monk, 286 N.C. 509, 212 S.E.2d 125 (1975); State v. Foddrell, 291 N.C. 546, 231 S.E.2d 618 (1977).

Where juror voiced general reservations about the death penalty, but made no affirmative, unequivocal statement that she was unwilling to consider the death penalty or that she was irrevocably committed to vote against it regardless of the facts and circumstances that might be revealed by the evidence, she was erroneously excused for cause. State v. Monk, 286 N.C. 509, 212 S.E.2d 125 (1975).

In a first-degree murder trial where prospective juror stated that knowing that the death penalty would be imposed he did not feel that he could vote for a verdict of guilty even though he was satisfied of defendant's guilt, the trial judge, in his discretion, and at the request of the prospective juror, in excusing the prospective juror did not commit prejudicial error. State v. Waddell, 289 N.C. 19, 220 S.E.2d 293 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3211, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1210 (1976).

It is settled law that a challenge for cause should be sustained where the venireman challenged states unmistakably that he would, by reason of the death penalty, automatically vote against conviction without regard to any evidence developed at trial. State v. Smith, 291 N.C. 505, 231 S.E.2d 663 (1977).

Veniremen may not be challenged for cause simply because they voice general objections to the death penalty or express conscientious or religious scruples against its infliction. State v. Foddrell, 291 N.C. 546, 231 S.E.2d 618 (1977).

Erroneous allowance of an improper challenge for cause did not entitle the adverse party to a new trial, so long as only those who were competent and qualified to serve were actually impaneled upon the jury which tried his case. State v. Monk, 286 N.C. 509, 212 S.E.2d 125 (1975).

Excusal of Juror Without Challenge by Party. — In spite of the last phrase of subsection (a) of this section, it is the right and duty of the court to see that a competent, fair and impartial jury is impaneled and, to that end, the court, in its discretion, may excuse a prospective juror without a challenge by either party. State v. Smith, 290 N.C. 148, 226 S.E.2d 10 (1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 932, 97 S. Ct. 339, 50 L. Ed. 2d 301 (1976).

IV. DISQUALIFIED JURORS.

Subsection (c) is designed to protect the prospective juror's adversary in his pending case rather than to protect parties to cases in which he might serve as a juror. State v. Williams, 293 N.C. 102, 235 S.E.2d 248 (1977).

Subsection (c) subjects a litigant, rather than a witness, to disqualification as a juror when he has a suit pending and at issue in the court in which he is called to serve as a juror. State v. Williams, 293 N.C. 102, 235 S.E.2d 248 (1977).

§ 9-16. Exemption from civil arrest.

No sheriff or other officer shall arrest under civil process any juror during his attendance at or going to and returning from any session of the superior or district court. Any such arrest shall be invalid, and the defendant on motion shall be discharged. (1779, c. 157, s. 10, P.R.; R.C., c. 31, s. 31; Code, s. 1735; Rev., s. 1979, C.S., s. 2328; 1967, c. 218, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

Section Does Not Repeal Common-Law Exemption. — This section does not by implication repeal the common-law exemption of nonresidents from service of process while in the State in attendance in court either as witnesses or as suitors. Cooper v. Wyman, 122 N.C. 784, 29 S.E. 947 (1898). See Greenlief v. People's Bank, 133 N.C. 292, 45 S.E. 638 (1903).

§ 9-17. Jurors impaneled to try case furnished with accommodations; separation of jurors.

A jury, impaneled to try any cause, shall be put in charge of an officer of the court and shall be furnished with such accommodations as the court may order, and the accommodations shall be paid for by the parties or by the State, as ordered by the presiding judge. When sequestration of the jury is ordered in a criminal case, however, the State shall pay for all accommodations of jurors.

The presiding judge, in his discretion, may direct any jury to be sequestered while it has a case or issue under consideration. (1876-7, c. 173; Code, s. 1736; 1889, c. 44; Rev., s. 1978, C.S., s. 2327; 1947, c. 1007, s. 2; 1967, c. 218, s. 1; 1977, c. 711, s. 12.)

CASE NOTES

No Federal Constitutional Issue Presented. — Petitioner's contention that he was denied a fair and impartial trial in that the jurors were not sequestered does not present a federal constitutional issue. It is a matter of state procedural law and does not reach constitutional proportions. Baldwin v. Blackledge, 330 F. Supp. 183 (E.D.N.C. 1971).

Whether or not a jury is to be sequestered is within the discretion of the trial court. There being no showing of an obvious abuse of discretion, the matter is not subject to review. Baldwin v. Blackledge, 330 F. Supp. 183 (E.D.N.C. 1971).

A motion for the sequestration of witnesses is addressed to the discretion of the court. State v. Monk, 291 N.C. 37, 229 S.E.2d 163 (1976).

Effect on Verdict of Refusal to Furnish Refreshments. — Where a jury retired at 11 A.M., to consider their verdict, which was returned at 3 P.M. such verdict could not be impeached on the grounds that the sheriff declined to give them refreshments, except water, until they agreed on a verdict, or until the judge should tell him to take them to dinner. Gaither v. Hascall-Richards Steam Generator Co., 121 N.C. 384, 28 S.E. 546 (1897).

Applied in State v. Swift, 290 N.C. 383, 226 S.E.2d 652 (1976).

§ 9-18. Alternate jurors.

(a) Civil Cases. Whenever the presiding judge deems it appropriate, one or more alternate jurors may be selected in the same manner as the regular trial panel of jurors in the case. Each party shall be entitled to two peremptory challenges as to each such alternate juror, in addition to any unexpended challenges the party may have after the selection of the regular trial panel. Alternate jurors shall be sworn and seated near the jury with equal opportunity to see and hear the proceedings and shall attend the trial at all times with the jury and shall obey all orders and admonitions of the court to the jury. When the jurors are ordered kept together in any case, the alternate jurors shall be kept with them. An alternate juror shall receive the same compensation as other jurors and, except as hereinafter provided, shall be discharged upon the final submission of the case to the jury. If before that time any juror dies, becomes incapacitated or disqualified, or is discharged for any reason, an alternate juror shall become a part of the jury and serve in all respects as those selected on the regular trial panel. If more than one alternate juror has been selected, they shall be available to become a part of the jury in the order in which they were selected.

(b) Criminal Cases. Procedures relating to alternate jurors in criminal cases are governed by Article 72, Selecting and Impaneling the Jury, of Chapter 15A of the General Statutes. (1931, c. 103; 1939, c. 35; 1951, cc. 82, 1043; 1967, c. 218, s. 1; 1977, c. 406, ss. 3-5; c. 711, s. 13; 1979, c. 711, s. 2.)

CASE NOTES

The essential attributes of trial by jury guaranteed by former N.C. Const., Art. I, § 13 (now see N.C. Const., Art. I, § 24), are the number of jurors, their impartiality and a unanimous verdict, the alternate not being technically a juror until a member of the jury has died or been discharged and the alternate is made a juror by order of the court, and the verdict being finally returned by the unanimous verdict of 12 good and lawful persons. State v. Dalton, 206 N.C. 507, 174 S.E. 422 (1934).

Requirements of this section and N.C. Const., Art. I, § 24 are mandatory. State v. Bindyke, 288 N.C. 608, 220 S.E.2d 521 (1975).

Defendant Cannot Assent to Trial by More Than 12 Jurors. If a defendant in a felony trial cannot consent to a trial by fewer than 12 jurors, it is clear that he cannot assent to deliberations by more than 12. State v. Rowe, 30 N.C. App. 115, 226 S.E.2d 231 (1976).

Participation of Alternate Juror in Deliberation Is Error. — A decision that a deliberation by 13 jurors is error is compelled both by this section and by the appellate decisions of the State. State v. Alston, 21 N.C. App. 544, 204 S.E.2d 860 (1974).

And Alternate Juror's Presence in Jury Room Is Reversible Error Per Se. — Where the alternate juror was not discharged when the jury retired as required by this section, and although the record showed that the court corrected its mistake after only three or four minutes had elapsed, and the alternate did not participate in the deliberation and verdict of the other 12, his brief visit to the jury room was reversible error per se. State v. Bindyke, 288 N.C. 608, 220 S.E.2d 521 (1975); State v. Rowe, 30 N.C. App. 115, 226 S.E.2d 231 (1976).

At any time an alternate juror is in the jury room during deliberations, he participates by his presence and, whether he says little or nothing, his presence will void the trial. State v. Rowe, 30 N.C. App. 115, 226 S.E.2d 231 (1976).

The presence of an alternate juror, either during the entire period of deliberation preceding the verdict, or his presence at any time during the deliberations of the 12 regular jurors, is a fundamental irregularity of constitutional proportions which requires a mistrial or vitiates the verdict, if rendered. And this is the result notwithstanding the fact that the defendant's counsel consented, or failed to object, to the presence of the alternate. State v. Rowe, 30 N.C. App. 115, 226 S.E.2d 231 (1976).

The presence of an alternate juror in the jury room during the jury's deliberations violates N.C. Const., Art. I, § 24 and this section, and constitutes reversible error per se. State v. Turner, 48 N.C. App. 606, 269 S.E.2d 270 (1980).

If alternate juror's presence in jury room is inadvertent and momentary, and it occurs under circumstances from which it can be clearly seen or immediately determined that the jury has not begun its function as a separate entity, then the rule of per se reversible error is not applicable. State v. Bindyke, 288 N.C. 608, 220 S.E.2d 521 (1975).

Inquiry into Effect of Presence of Alternate Juror. — If the judge, from his trial experience and knowledge of the circumstances of the particular case, believes it probable that the jury has not begun its consideration of the evidence, he may properly recall the jury and the alternate and, in open court, inquire of them whether there had been any discussion of the case. If the answer is "no," the alternate will be excused and the jury returned to consider its verdict. If the answer is "yes," there must be a mistrial. No inquiry into the extent or nature of the deliberations is permissible. State v. Bindyke, 288 N.C. 608, 220 S.E.2d 521 (1975).

Article 3.

Peremptory Challenges.

§ 9-19. Peremptory challenges in civil cases.

The clerk, before a jury is impaneled to try the issues in any civil suit, shall read over the names of the prospective jurors in the presence and hearing of the parties or their counsel; and the parties, or their counsel for them, may challenge peremptorily eight jurors without showing any cause therefor, and the challenges shall be allowed by the court. (1796, c. 452, s. 2, P.R.; 1812, c. 833, P.R.; R.C., c. 31, s. 35; Code, s. 406; Rev., s. 1964; C.S., s. 2331; 1935, c. 475, s. 1; 1965, c. 1182; 1967, c. 218, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

Peremptory Challenge Defined. — A peremptory challenge is a challenge which may be made or omitted according to the judgment, will, or caprice of the party entitled thereto, without assigning any reason therefor, or being required to assign a reason therefor. State ex rel. Freeman v. Ponder, 234 N.C. 294, 67 S.E.2d 292 (1951).

Peremptory Challenges on Basis of Race Prohibited. — N.C. Const., Art. I, § 26, proscribes peremptory challenges to jurors on the basis of race in civil cases as well as criminal cases. Jackson v. Housing Auth., 321 N.C. 584, 364 S.E.2d 416 (1988).

Reasons for Challenge Need Not Be Given. — A party's reason for peremptorily challenging could not be inquired into. Dupree v. Virginia Home Ins. Co., 92 N.C. 417 (1885).

Not a Right to Select Jurors. — As in the case of challenges for cause, the right is given to challenge but such right does not constitute the right to select jurors. Ives v. Atlantic & N.C.R.R., 142 N.C. 131, 55 S.E. 74 (1906); Medlin v. Simpson, 144 N.C. 397, 57 S.E. 24 (1907).

A litigant cannot exercise more peremptory challenges than the number allowed to him by law. State ex rel. Freeman v. Ponder, 234 N.C. 294, 67 S.E.2d 292 (1951).

Number of Plaintiffs or Defendants Immaterial. — Whether there are one or more plaintiffs or defendants, only eight peremptory challenges to the jury on either side are allowable. Bryan v. Harrison, 76 N.C. 360 (1877); State ex rel. Freeman v. Ponder, 234 N.C. 294, 67 S.E.2d 292 (1951).

In a quo warranto proceeding, the general statutory right to eight peremptory challenges devolving upon the relators as all the parties on one side of the case was not annulled or impaired by their assertion that justice lay with one of the defendants or by the latter's concurrence in that assertion. State ex rel. Freeman v. Ponder, 234 N.C. 294, 67 S.E.2d 292 (1951).

Challenge After Acceptance. — Where a juror has been accepted it is error to permit a peremptory challenge. Dunn v. Wilmington & W.R.R., 131 N.C. 446, 42 S.E. 862 (1902).

Transcript of Jury Voir Dire Must Be Provided to Reviewing Court. — As a rule of practice, counsel who seek to rely upon an alleged impropriety in the jury selection process must provide the reviewing court with the relevant portions of the transcript of the jury voir dire. Jackson v. Housing Auth., 321 N.C. 584, 364 S.E.2d 416 (1988).

§ 9-20. Civil cases having several defendants; challenges apportioned; discretion of judge.

When there are two or more defendants in a civil action, the presiding judge, if it appears that there are antagonistic interests between the defendants, may in his discretion apportion among the defendants the challenges now allowed by law, or he may increase the number of challenges to not exceeding six for each defendant or class of defendants representing the same interest. In either event, the same number of challenges shall be allowed each defendant or class of defendants representing the same interest. The decision of the judge as to the nature of the interests and number of challenges shall be final. (1905, c. 357; Rev., s. 1965; C.S., s. 2332; 1967, c. 218, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

No Authority to Allot a Defendant More than Six Challenges. — Having found that the interests of the defendants were antagonistic, this section authorized the trial judge in his discretion to either apportion between them the eight peremptory challenges allotted to the defendants or to increase the peremptory challenges of each defendant up to a maximum of six; it did not authorize the judge to allot either defendant more than six peremptory challenges. Shuford v. McIntosh, 104 N.C. App. 201, 408 S.E.2d 747 (1991).

Decision of Trial Judge is Final. — This section, which creates the exception to the general rule laid down by § 9-19 regarding peremptory challenges, clothes with finality the decision of the trial judge as to how many challenges the several defendants will be allowed. State ex rel. Freeman v. Ponder, 234 N.C. 294, 67 S.E.2d 292 (1951).

§ 9-21. Peremptory challenges in criminal cases governed by Chapter 15A.

Peremptory challenges in criminal cases are governed by Article 72, Selecting and Impaneling the Jury, of Chapter 15A of the General Statutes. (22 Hen. VIII, c. 14, s. 6; 33 Edw. I, c. 4; 1777, c. 115, s. 85, P.R.; 1801, c. 592, s. 1, P.R.; 1812, c. 833, P.R.; 1826, c. 9; 1827, c. 10; R.S., c. 35, ss. 19, 21; R.C., c. 35, ss. 32, 33; 1871-2, c. 39; Code, ss. 1199, 1200; 1887, c. 53; Rev., ss. 3263, 3264; 1907, c. 415; 1913, c. 31, ss. 3, 4; C.S., ss. 4633, 4634; 1935, c. 475, ss. 2, 3; 1967, c. 218, s. 1; 1969, c. 205, s. 7; 1971, c. 75; 1977, c. 711, s. 14.)

Article 5.

Discharge of Jurors Prohibited.

§ 9-32. Discharge of juror unlawful.

(a) No employer may discharge or demote any employee because the employee has been called for jury duty, or is serving as a grand juror or petit juror.

(b) Any employer who violates any provision of this section shall be liable in a civil action for reasonable damages suffered by an employee as a result of the violation, and an employee discharged or demoted in violation of this section shall be entitled to be reinstated to his former position. The burden of proof shall be upon the employee.

(c) The statute of limitations for actions under this section shall be one year pursuant to G.S. 1-54. (1987, c. 702, s. 1.)

10A-14. Notaries ex officio.
10A-15. [Repealed.]
10A-16. Acts of notaries public in certain instances validated.
10A-17. Certain notarial acts validated.

§ 10A-1. Short title.

This act is the Notary Public Act and may be cited by that name. (1991, c. 683, s. 2.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2001-450, s. 4, provides: "The Department of the Secretary of State may study the Notary Public Act, Chapter 10A of the General Statutes, and conforming amendments that may be needed to other sections of the General Statutes, and report any recommendations for changes, including recommended legislation, to the 2002 Regular Session of the 2001 General Assembly."

§ 10A-2. Purposes.

This Chapter shall be construed and applied to advance its underlying purposes, which are:

(1) To promote, serve, and protect the public interests.
(2) To simplify, clarify, and modernize the law governing notaries.
(3) To prevent fraud and forgery. (1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1998-228, s. 1.)

§ 10A-3. Definitions.

The following definitions apply in this Chapter:

(1) Acknowledgment. — A notarial act in which a notary certifies that a signer, whose identity is personally known to the notary or proven on the basis of satisfactory evidence, has admitted, in the notary's presence, having signed a document voluntarily.
(2) Commission. — The written authority to perform a notarial act.
(2a) Director. — The Director of the Notary Section of the Department of the Secretary of State.
(3) Notarial act, notary act, and notarization. — Any act that a notary is empowered to perform under G.S. 10A-9.
(4) Notary public and notary. — A person commissioned to perform notarial acts under this Chapter.
(5) Oath or affirmation. — A notarial act in which a notary certifies that a person made a vow or affirmation in the presence of the notary, with reference made to a Supreme Being for an oath and with no reference made to a Supreme Being for an affirmation.
(6) Official misconduct. — Either of the following:
   a. A notary's performance of a prohibited act or failure to perform a mandated act set forth in this Chapter or any other law in connection with notarization.
   b. A notary's performance of a notarial act in a manner found by the Secretary to be negligent or against the public interest.

(7) Personal knowledge of identity. — Familiarity with an individual resulting from interactions with that individual over a period of time sufficient to eliminate every reasonable doubt that the individual has the identity claimed.

(8) Satisfactory evidence of identity. — Identification of an individual based on either of the following:

a. One current document issued by a federal or state government with the individual's photograph.

b. Identification by a credible person who is personally known to the notary and who has personal knowledge of the individual's identity.

(8a) Secretary. — The Secretary of State.

(9) Verification or proof. — A notarial act in which a notary certifies that a signer, whose identity is personally known to the notary or proven on the basis of satisfactory evidence, has, in the notary's presence, voluntarily signed a document and taken an oath or affirmation concerning the document. (1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1998-228, s. 2.)

§ 10A-4. Commissioning.

(a) Except as provided in subsection (c) of this section, the Secretary shall commission as a notary any qualified person who submits an application in accordance with this Chapter.

(b) A person qualified for a notarial commission shall meet all of the following requirements:

(1) Be at least 18 years of age.

(2) Reside or work in this State.

(3) Satisfactorily complete a course of study that is approved by the Secretary and consists of not less than three hours nor more than six hours of classroom instruction provided by community colleges throughout the State, unless the person is a licensed member of the Bar of this State.

(4) Purchase and keep as a reference a manual approved by the Secretary that describes the duties, authority, and ethical responsibilities of notaries public.

(5) Submit an application containing no significant misstatement or omission of fact. The application form shall be provided by the Secretary and be available at the register of deeds office in each county. Every application shall bear the signature of the applicant written with pen and ink, and the signature shall be acknowledged by the applicant before a person authorized to administer oaths. The applicant shall also obtain the recommendation of one publicly elected official in North Carolina whose recommendation shall be contained on the application.

(6) Pay a nonrefundable fee of thirty dollars ($30.00).

(c) The Secretary may deny an application for commission or recommission as a notary if any of the following applies to the applicant:

(1) The applicant has been convicted of a crime involving dishonesty or moral turpitude.

(1a) The applicant has been convicted of a felony and the applicant's rights have not been restored.

(2) The applicant has had a notarial commission or professional license revoked, suspended, or restricted by this or any other state.

(3) The applicant has engaged in official misconduct, whether or not disciplinary action resulted.

(4) The applicant knowingly uses false or misleading advertising in which the applicant as a notary represents that the applicant has powers, duties, rights or privileges that the applicant does not possess by law.

(5) The applicant is found by a court of this State or any other state to have engaged in the unauthorized practice of law.

(d), (e) Repealed by Session Laws 1998-228, s. 3, effective January 1, 1999. (Code, ss. 3304, 3305; Rev., ss. 2347, 2348; C.S., s. 3172; 1927, c. 117; 1959, c. 1161, s. 2; 1969, c. 563, s. 1; c. 912, s. 1; 1973, c. 680, s. 1; 1983, c. 427, ss. 1, 2; c. 713, s. 22; 1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1995, c. 226, s. 1; 1998-228, s. 3; 1999-337, s. 3(a); 2001-450, s. 1.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2001-450, s. 4, provides: "The Department of the Secretary of State may study the Notary Public Act, Chapter 10A of the General Statutes, and conforming amendments that may be needed to other sections of the General Statutes, and report any recommendations for changes, including recommended legislation, to the 2002 Regular Session of the 2001 General Assembly."

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-450, s. 1, effective January 1, 2002, and applicable to acts committed on or after that date, added subdivisions (c)(4) and (c)(5).

CASE NOTES

Editor's Note. — The cases below were decided under prior law.

Origin. — The office of notary public has long been known both to the civil and to the common law. State ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Knight, 169 N.C. 333, 85 S.E. 418 (1915).

In Loan Co. v. Turrell, 19 Ind. 469, it was said: "The office originated in the early Roman jurisprudence, and was known in England before the Conquest." State ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Knight, 169 N.C. 333, 85 S.E. 418 (1915).

Modern Status of Office. — The office of notary public is in most of the states a state office, although in few states it has been regarded as a county office, and its functions, once simple, have now a wider scope. State ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Knight, 169 N.C. 333, 85 S.E. 418 (1915).

Who Is Eligible. — It has been said that "at common law a minor is eligible to the position of notary public." State ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Knight, 169 N.C. 333, 85 S.E. 418 (1915). But see now subdivision (b)(1) of this section.

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Editor's Note. — The opinions below were issued under prior law.

Oath of Office for Notary Public. — The notary public to be duly qualified should now take the oath of office before the register of deeds, not the clerk of the superior court. See opinion of Attorney General to Mrs. Susan Lobinger, Governor's Office, 40 N.C.A.G. 605 (1969).

Copy of Commissions Issued to Non-Residents. — Along with the Secretary of State maintaining a copy of the commissions issued to non-residents, the register of deeds in the county wherein the appointee either works or intends to perform his notary functions should be sent such commission. If the appointee will be working in more than one county, a copy of the commission should be sent to each county. See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Ludelle Hatley, Notaries Public Deputy, Department of the Secretary of State, 55 N.C.A.G. 51 (1985).

Requirement of Being Registered Voter Not Constitutional. — The requirement of former § 10-1.1 of being a registered voter in North Carolina in order to be a notary violated the privileges and immunity clause of U.S. Const., Art. IV, § 2. See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Ludelle Hatley, Notaries Public Deputy, Department of the Secretary of State, 55 N.C.A.G. 51 (1985).

Under former Chapter 10, the Secretary of State had no authority to require that a notary applicant be employed in this State. See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Ludelle Hatley, Notaries Public Deputy, Department of the Secretary of State, 55 N.C.A.G. 51 (1985).

A person who cannot read or write cannot hold a notary commission. See opinion of Attorney General to Ludelle R. Hatley, Notaries Public Deputy, Secretary of State's Office, 57 N.C.A.G 1 (1987).

§ 10A-5. Length of term and jurisdiction.

A person commissioned under this Chapter may perform notarial acts in any part of this State for a term of five years, unless the commission is revoked under G.S. 10A-13(d) or resigned under G.S. 10A-13(c). (1891, c. 248; Rev., s. 2351; C.S., s. 3176; 1973, c. 680, s. 1; 1991, c. 683, s. 2.)

§ 10A-6. Recommissioning.

An applicant for recommissioning as a notary shall submit a new application and comply anew with the provisions of G.S. 10A-4, except that the applicant shall not be required to complete the course of study described in subdivision (b)(3) nor to obtain the recommendation of a publicly elected official. (1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1995, c. 226, s. 2.)

§ 10A-7. Instructor's certification.

(a) The course of study required by G.S. 10A-4(b) shall be taught by an instructor certified in accordance with rules adopted by the Secretary. An instructor must meet the following requirements to be certified to teach a course of study for notaries public:

(1) Complete and pass a six-hour instructor's course taught by the Director or other person approved by the Secretary.
(2) Have six months of active experience as a notary public.
(3) Maintain a current commission as a notary public.
(4) Purchase the current notary public guidebook.
(5) Pay a nonrefundable fee of fifty dollars ($50.00).

(b) Certification to teach a course of study for notaries public shall be effective for two years. A certification may be renewed by passing a recertification course taught by the Director or other person approved by the Secretary and by paying a nonrefundable fee of fifty dollars ($50.00).

(c) The following people may be certified to teach a course of study for notaries public without meeting the requirements of subdivisions (a)(2), (a)(3), and (a)(5) of this section, and they may renew their certification without paying the renewal fee, so long as they remain actively employed in the capacities named:

(1) Registers of deeds.
(2) Clerks of court.
(3) The Director. (1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1998-212, s. 29A.9(a); 1998-228, s. 4; 1999-337, s. 3(b).)

§ 10A-8. Oath of office.

If granted, a commission shall be sent to the register of deeds of the county where the appointee lives or works and a copy of the letter of transmittal sent to the appointee. The appointee shall appear before the register of deeds to which the commission was delivered within 90 days of commissioning and shall be duly qualified by taking the general oath of office prescribed in G.S. 11-11 and the oath prescribed for officers in G.S. 11-7. The notary shall then place the appointee's signature in a book designated as "The Record of Notaries Public." This Record shall contain the name and signature of the notary, the effective date and expiration date of the commission, the date the oath was administered, and the date of any revocation or resignation. The Record shall constitute the official record of the qualification of notaries public. The register of deeds shall deliver the commission to the notary following completion of the requirements of this section and shall notify the Secretary of State of the delivery.

If the appointee does not appear before the register of deeds within 90 days, the appointee must reapply for commissioning and the register of deeds must return the commission to the Secretary of State. If the appointee reapplies within one year of the granting of the commission, the Secretary of State may waive requirements of subdivisions G.S. 10A-4(b)(3) and (4). (Code, ss. 3304, 3305; Rev., ss. 2347, 2348; C.S., s. 3173; 1969, c. 912, s. 2; 1973, c. 680, s. 1; 1991, c. 683, s. 2.)

Editor's Note. — The opinion below was issued under prior law.

Oath of Office for Notary Public. — The notary public to be duly qualified should now take the oath of office before the register of deeds, not the clerk of the superior court. See opinion of Attorney General to Mrs. Susan Lobinger, Governor's Office, 40 N.C.A.G. 605 (1969).

§ 10A-9. Powers and limitations.

(a) A notary may perform any of the following notarial acts:
(1) Acknowledgments.
(2) Oaths and affirmations.
(3) Verifications or proofs.

(b) A notarial act shall be attested by all of the following:
(1) The signature of the notary, exactly as shown on the notary's commission.
(2) The readable appearance of the notary's name, either from the notary's signature or from the notary's typed, printed, or embossed name near the signature.
(3) The clear and legible appearance of the notary's stamp or seal.
(4) A statement of the date the notary's commission expires.

(c) A notary is disqualified from performing a notarial act if any of the following apply:
(1) The notary is a signer of or is named, other than as a trustee in a deed of trust, in the document that is to be notarized.
(2) The notary will receive directly from a transaction connected with the notarial act any commission, fee, advantage, right, title, interest, cash, property, or other consideration exceeding in value the fees specified in G.S. 10A-10, other than fees or other consideration paid for services rendered by a licensed attorney, a licensed real estate broker or salesperson, a motor vehicle dealer, or a banker.

(d) A notarial act performed in another jurisdiction by a notary public of that jurisdiction is valid to the same extent as if it had been performed by a notary commissioned under this Chapter.

(e) Commissioned officers on active duty in the United States armed forces who are authorized under 10 U.S.C. § 936 to perform notarial acts may perform the acts for persons serving in or with the United States armed forces, their spouses, and their dependents.

(f) The Secretary of State and register of deeds in the county in which a notary qualified may certify to the commission of the notary.

(g) A notary public who is not an attorney licensed to practice law in this State who advertises the person's services as a notary public in a language other than English, by radio, television, signs, pamphlets, newspapers, other written communication, or in any other manner, shall post or otherwise include with the advertisement the notice set forth in this subsection in English and in the language used for the advertisement. The notice shall be of conspicuous size, if in writing, and shall state: "I AM NOT AN ATTORNEY

LICENSED TO PRACTICE LAW IN THE STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, AND I MAY NOT GIVE LEGAL ADVICE OR ACCEPT FEES FOR LEGAL ADVICE." If the advertisement is by radio or television, the statement may be modified but must include substantially the same message.

(h) A notary public who is not an attorney licensed to practice law in this State is prohibited from representing or advertising that the notary public is an "immigration consultant" or expert on immigration matters unless the notary public is an accredited representative of an organization recognized by the Board of Immigration Appeals pursuant to Title 8, Part 292, Section 2(a-e) of the Code of Federal Regulations (8 CFR 292.2(a-e)).

(i) A notary public who is not an attorney licensed to practice law in this State is prohibited from rendering any service that constitutes the unauthorized practice of law.

(j) A notary public required to comply with the provisions of subsection (g) of this section shall prominently post at the notary public's place of business a schedule of fees established by law, which a notary public may charge. The fee schedule shall be written in English and in the non-English language in which the notary services were solicited, and shall contain the notice required in subsection (g) of this section, unless the notice is otherwise prominently posted at the notary public's place of business. (1866, c. 30; 1879, c. 128; Code, s. 3307; Rev., ss. 2350, 2351a, 2352; C.S., ss. 3175, 3177, 3179; 1951, c. 1006, s. 1; 1953, c. 836; 1961, c. 733; 1967, c. 24, s. 22; c. 984; 1973, c. 680, s. 1; 1977, c. 375, s. 5; 1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1998-228, s. 5; 2001-450, s. 2; 2001-487, s. 121.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2001-450, s. 4, provides: "The Department of the Secretary of State may study the Notary Public Act, Chapter 10A of the General Statutes, and conforming amendments that may be needed to other sections of the General Statutes, and report any recommendations for changes, including recommended legislation, to the 2002 Regular Session of the 2001 General Assembly."

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-450, s. 2, as amended by Session Laws 2001-487, s. 121, effective January 1, 2002, and applicable to acts committed on or after that date, added subsections (g) through (j).

CASE NOTES

Editor's Note. — The cases below were decided under prior law.

Scope of Powers. — A notary public is recognized by the universal law of civilized and commercial nations, but his powers are confined to the authentication of commercial papers and to the protesting of bills of exchange and the like. Benedict, Hall & Co. v. Hall, 76 N.C. 113 (1877).

By statute in this State the powers of notaries public have been extended beyond those which were incident to the office by the universal law merchant, and pertained to the presentment of bills of exchange for acceptance or payment and the protest thereof for nonpayment or refusal to accept; they may now take and certify the acknowledgment or proof of powers of attorney, mortgages, deeds and other instruments of writing, etc. McNeal Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Woltman, Keith & Co., 114 N.C. 178, 19 S.E. 109 (1894).

Duty in Taking Acknowledgments. — The notary was required "to take and certify the acknowledgment or proof" and this imposed upon him the duty of ascertaining (1) that the persons who presented themselves were the grantors in the deed; (2) that they acknowledged the executions of it; (3) that the wife signed the deed freely and voluntarily, and that she voluntarily assented thereto. Young v. Jackson, 92 N.C. 144 (1885); Darden v. Neuse & Trent River Steamboat Co., 107 N.C. 437, 12 S.E. 46 (1890); State ex rel. Att'y Gen. v. Knight, 169 N.C. 333, 85 S.E. 418 (1915).

Acknowledgment Is a Judicial or Quasi Judicial Act. — An acknowledgment of a deed, taken before a notary public, is a judicial, or at least a quasi judicial, act. Long v. Crews, 113 N.C. 256, 18 S.E. 499 (1893).

Protest as Evidence. — The protest of a notary establishes the facts stated in it in respect to each and all of these points to the full extent the notary could do it if he were examined as a witness and were believed. McNeal Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Woltman, Keith & Co., 114 N.C. 178, 19 S.E. 109 (1894).

This was for convenience of commerce and to dispense with the necessity of bringing witnesses from a distance or of taking depositions to prove the facts certified to in the protest, the certificate being prima facie true. Elliott v. White, 51 N.C. 98 (1858); McNeal Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Woltman, Keith & Co., 114 N.C. 178, 19 S.E. 109 (1894).

Certificate as Prima Facie Evidence. — The certificate of the notary established prima facie that electors were sworn as required by statute when they signed the affidavits accompanying their absentee ballots. State ex rel. Owens v. Chaplin, 229 N.C. 797, 48 S.E.2d 37 (1948).

With the extension of the powers of notaries to take probate of deeds, the same quality attaches to their certificates of probate or acknowledgment; it is prima facie evidence of the truth of its pertinent recitals. McNeal Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Woltman, Keith & Co., 114 N.C. 178, 19 S.E. 109 (1894).

Notary Public Was Not Disqualified to Act Because He Was Employed by Grantee. — A notary public was not disqualified to take acknowledgment of grantors and privy examination of married women to conveyances of land when he was an employee of the grantee, without any interest in the land conveyed. Smith v. Ayden Lumber Co., 144 N.C. 47, 56 S.E. 555 (1907).

Where a notary public was interested in a deed of trust, he was disqualified to take the acknowledgment, his attempted action was a nullity, and such defect could not be cured by probate upon such acknowledgment before the clerk and registration. Long v. Crews, 113 N.C. 256, 18 S.E. 499 (1893).

Signing of documents for corporation solely in capacity as notary public. — Where defendant signed subcontractor corporation's applications for payment solely in her capacity as a notary public, she did not act in her capacity as director of the corporation or certify the documents individually; therefore, it was error to include her as named individual defendant in issues and instructions submitted to the jury in an action for fraud and gross negligence based upon representations contained in the applications. Myers & Chapman, Inc. v. Thomas G. Evans, Inc., 323 N.C. 559, 374 S.E.2d 385 (1988), rehearing denied, 324 N.C. 117, 377 S.E.2d 235 (1989).

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Editor's Note. — The opinions below were issued under prior law.

A person who cannot read or write cannot hold a notary commission. See opinion of Attorney General to Ludelle R. Hatley, Notaries Public Deputy, Secretary of State's Office, 57 N.C.A.G 1 (1987).

Verification by Partner of Firm Representing Client. — It is not advisable for a notary who is also a partner in a law firm acting of counsel to an attorney filing a divorce complaint to notarize the verification of the client. A divorce complaint which is not properly notarized is subject to dismissal. See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. James Lee Knight, Notary Public, Guilford County, 58 N.C.A.G. 35 (1988).

When one partner of Firm A appears as attorney for a plaintiff in a divorce proceeding, the other partners in the firm also "appear," and they could be prohibited under § 47-8 from notarizing the verification of the client. This would be true whether or not the firm appears as "of counsel" to the individual partner on the face of the complaint or answer. Therefore, such practice should be avoided, and an attorney/notary who acts in this fashion proceeds at his own risk. See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. James Lee Knight, Notary Public, Guilford County, 58 N.C.A.G. 35 (1988).

Pleadings not requiring verification by one of the parties are not subject to dismissal if they are verified anyway and a partner of the firm representing that client acts as the notary. However, § 47-8 would still seem to say that that partner is without power to act as notary in that situation. The signature of the attorney signing the pleadings would be adequate under § 1A-1, Rule 11(a). See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. James Lee Knight, Notary Pubic, Guilford County, 58 N.C.A.G. 35 (1988).

It Is Essential That Notary Specify Expiration Date of His Commission. — See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Alex T. Wood, Register of Deeds, Franklin County, 41 N.C.A.G. 225 (1971).

§ 10A-10. Fees of notaries.

The maximum fees that may be charged by a notary for notarial acts are as follows:

(1) For acknowledgments, three dollars ($3.00) per signature.

(2) For oaths or affirmations without a verification or proof, three dollars ($3.00) per person.

(3) For verifications or proofs, three dollars ($3.00) per signature. (Code, s. 3749; 1889, c. 446; 1895, c. 296; 1903, c. 734; Rev., s. 2800; C.S., s. 3178; 1973, c. 680, s. 1; 1977, c. 429, ss. 1, 2; 1981, c. 872; 1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1998-228, s. 6.)

CASE NOTES

Editor's Note. — The case below was decided under prior law.

Fees Created by Statute. — The fees of notaries public are created and regulated by statute. Price & Luca Cider & Vinegar Co. v. Carroll, 124 N.C. 555, 32 S.E. 959 (1899).

§ 10A-11. Notarial stamp or seal.

A notary public shall provide and keep an official stamp or seal. The stamp or seal shall clearly show and legibly reproduce under photographic methods, when embossed, stamped, impressed, or affixed to a document, the name of the notary exactly as it appears on the commission, the name of the county in which appointed and qualified, the words "North Carolina" or an abbreviation thereof, and the words "Notary Public". The official stamp or seal, as it appears on a document, may contain a permanently imprinted or a handwritten expiration date of the notary's commission. A notary public shall replace a seal that has become so worn that it can no longer clearly show or legibly reproduce under photographic methods the information required by this section. The stamp or seal is the property and responsibility of the notary whose name appears on it. However, upon revocation, the notary shall immediately surrender the stamp or seal to the Secretary. (1973, c. 680, s. 1; 1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1998-228, s. 7.)

Cross References. — As to validation of certain acts of notaries public where notarial seals on documents contain certain errors, see § 10A-16(b). As to validation of deeds and probate and registration thereof where notarial seals have been omitted, see §§ 47-102 and 47-103.

CASE NOTES

Editor's Note. — The cases below were decided under prior law.

Courts Take Judicial Notice. — It was said in Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U.S. 546, 1 S. Ct. 418, 27 L. Ed. 254 (1882): "The court will take judicial notice of the seals of notaries public, for they are officers recognized by the commercial law of the world." State ex rel. Att'y Gen. v. Knight, 169 N.C. 333, 85 S.E. 418 (1915).

Name in Seal. — The statute authorizing a notary public to take acknowledgment of deeds did not formerly require that his name or any name be used in the notarial seal, and the seal appended to the certificate was presumably his in the absence of evidence to the contrary; hence, where the fact of the execution of deed by a notary public was adjudged to have been proved by such seal and certificate, it was not rebutted by the mere fact that the notary signed his name "Geo. Theo. Somner" and the seal had on it the name of "Theo. Somner." Deans v. Pate, 114 N.C. 194, 19 S.E. 146 (1894). But see now § 10A-9.

Failure to Attest by Seal. — A motion for judgment for want of an answer was properly allowed when the complaint was duly verified and what purported to be the verification of the answer was attested only by a person signing his name with the letters "N. P." added thereto, but without an official seal. Tucker v. Inter-States Life Ass'n, 112 N.C. 796, 17 S.E. 532 (1893).

Under prior law, the acknowledgment of a deed before a notary public in due form was not defective because not attested by his notarial seal. Peel v. Corey, 196 N.C. 79, 144 S.E. 559 (1928).

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Editor's Note. — The opinion below was issued under prior law.

Notarial Stamp Need Not Contain the Word "Stamp". — See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Mark Stewart, Guilford County Register of Deeds, 40 N.C.A.G. 604 (1970).

§ 10A-12. Enforcement and penalties.

(a) Any person who holds himself or herself out to the public as a notary or who performs notarial acts and is not commissioned is guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor.

(b) Any notary who takes an acknowledgment or performs a verification or proof without personal knowledge of the signer's identity or without satisfactory evidence of the signer's identity is guilty of a Class 2 misdemeanor.

(c) Any notary who takes an acknowledgment or performs a verification or proof knowing it is false or fraudulent is guilty of a Class I felony.

(d) Any person who knowingly solicits or coerces a notary to commit official misconduct is guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor.

(e) For purposes of enforcing this Chapter, the law enforcement agents of the Department of the Secretary of State have statewide jurisdiction and have all of the powers and authority of law enforcement officers when executing arrest warrants. The agents have the authority to assist local law enforcement agencies in their investigations and to initiate and carry out, on their own or in coordination with local law enforcement agencies, investigations of violations of this Chapter.

(f) The Secretary of State, through the Attorney General, may seek injunctive relief against any notary public who violates the provisions of this Chapter. Nothing in this Chapter diminishes the authority of the North Carolina State Bar.

(g) A violation of G.S. 10A-9(h) or (i) constitutes a deceptive trade practice under G.S. 75-1.1. (1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1993, c. 539, ss. 6-8, 1121; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c); 1995, c. 226, s. 4; 2001-450, s. 3.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2001-450, s. 4, provides: "The Department of the Secretary of State may study the Notary Public Act, Chapter 10A of the General Statutes, and conforming amendments that may be needed to other sections of the General Statutes, and report any recommendations for changes, including recommended legislation, to the 2002 Regular Session of the 2001 General Assembly."

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-450, s. 3, effective January 1, 2002, and applicable to acts committed on or after that date, added subsections (f) and (g).

§ 10A-13. Change of status.

(a) Within 30 days after the change of a notary's residence address, the notary shall notify the Secretary of State, by certified or registered mail, and provide a signed notice of the change, giving both the old and new addresses.

(b) Within 30 days after changing names, a notary shall notify the Secretary of State of the change by submitting a new application. The Secretary of State shall cancel the notary's commission under the old name, issue a commission under the new name, direct the notary to reappear before the register of deeds to take the oath of office, and direct the register of deeds to correct The Record of Notaries Public.

(c) A notary who resigns a commission shall deliver to the Secretary of State, by certified or registered mail, a notice indicating the effective date of resignation. Notaries who neither reside nor work in the State shall resign their commission.

(d) The Secretary of State may revoke a notarial commission on any ground for which an application for a commission may be denied under G.S. 10A-4(c). The Secretary of State may revoke the commission of a notary who fails to administer an oath or affirmation when performing a notarial act that requires the administering of an oath or affirmation. (1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1995, c. 226, s. 3.)

§ 10A-14. Notaries ex officio.

(a) The clerks of the superior court may act as notaries public in their several counties by virtue of their offices as clerks and may certify their notarial acts only under the seals of their respective courts. Assistant and deputy clerks of superior court, by virtue of their offices, may perform the following notarial acts and may certify these notarial acts only under the seals of their respective courts:

(1) Oaths and affirmations.

(2) Verifications or proofs.

Upon completion of the course of study provided for in G.S. 10A-4(b), assistant and deputy clerks of superior court may, by virtue of their offices, perform all other notarial acts and may certify these notarial acts only under the seals of their respective courts. A course of study attended only by assistant and deputy clerks of superior court may be taught at any mutually convenient location agreed to by the Secretary and the Administrative Officer of the Courts.

(b) Registers of deeds may act as notaries public in their several counties by virtue of their offices as registers of deeds and may certify their notarial acts only under the seals of their respective offices. Assistant and deputy registers of deeds, by virtue of their offices, may perform the following notarial acts and may certify these notarial acts only under the seals of their respective offices:

(1) Oaths and affirmations.

(2) Verifications or proofs.

Upon completion of the course of study provided for in G.S. 10A-4(b), assistant and deputy registers of deeds may, by virtue of their offices, perform all other notarial acts and may certify these notarial acts only under the seals of their respective offices. A course of study attended only by assistant and deputy registers of deeds may be taught at any mutually convenient location agreed to by the Secretary and the North Carolina Association of Registers of Deeds.

(c) The Director may act as a notary public by virtue of the Director's employment in the Department of the Secretary of State and may certify a notarial act performed in that capacity under the seal of the Secretary of State.

(d) Unless otherwise provided by law, a person designated a notary public by this section may charge a fee for a notarial act performed in accordance with G.S. 10A-10. The fee authorized by this section is payable to the governmental unit or agency by whom the person is employed.

(e) Nothing in this section shall authorize a person to act as a notary public other than in the performance of the official duties of the person's office unless the person complies fully with the requirements of G.S. 10A-4. (1833, c. 7, ss. 1, 2; R.C., c. 75, s. 3; Code, s. 3306; Rev., s. 2349; C.S., s. 3174; 1973, c. 680, s. 1; 1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1998-228, s. 8.)

CASE NOTES

Editor's Note. — The case below was decided under prior law.

A clerk of the superior court is, by virtue of his office, a notary public, and the taking of acknowledgments must be referred to the exercise of his notarial authority. Lawrence v. Hodges, 92 N.C. 672 (1885).

§ 10A-15: Repealed by Session Laws 1998-228, s. 9, effective November 6, 1998.

§ 10A-16. Acts of notaries public in certain instances validated.

(a) Any acknowledgment taken and any instrument notarized by a person prior to qualification as a notary public but after commissioning or recommissioning as a notary public, or by a person whose notary commission has expired, is hereby validated. The acknowledgment and instrument shall have the same legal effect as if the person qualified as a notary public at the time the person performed the act.

(b) All documents bearing a notarial seal in which the date of the expiration of the notary's commission is stated, whether correctly or erroneously, or having a notarial seal that does not contain a readable impression of the notary's name, or contains an incorrect spelling of the notary's name, or that does not bear the name of the notary exactly as it appears on the commission, as required by G.S. 10A-11, or where the signature does not comport exactly with the name on the notary commission or on the notary seal, as required by G.S. 10A-9, or contains typed, printed, drawn, or handwritten material added to the seal, fails to contain the words "North Carolina or the abbreviation "N. C.", or contains correct information except that instead of the abbreviation for North Carolina contains the abbreviation for another state are validated and given the same legal effect as if the errors had not occurred.

(c) All deeds of trust in which the notary was named in the document as a trustee only are validated.

(d) This section applies to notarial acts performed on or before April 15, 2001. (1945, c. 665; 1947, c. 313; 1949, c. 1; 1953, c. 702; 1961, cc. 483, 734; 1965, c. 37; 1969, c. 83; c. 716, s. 1; 1971, c. 229, s. 1; 1973, c. 680, s. 1; 1977, c. 734, s. 1; 1979, c. 226, s. 2; c. 643, s. 1; 1981, c. 164, ss. 1, 2; 1983, c. 205, s. 1; 1985, c. 71, s. 1; 1987, c. 277, s. 9; 1989, c. 390, s. 9; 1991, c. 683, s. 2; 1997-19, s. 1; 1997-469, s. 2; 1998-228, s. 10; 1999-21, s. 2; 2001-154, s. 1.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1991, c. 489, s. 9, effective July 2, 1991, amended repealed § 10-12(d), so as to validate acts of certain notaries done prior to January 1, 1991.

Session Laws 1991, c. 543, s. 3, effective July 4, 1991, enacted repealed § 10-18, validating acts of notaries concerning certain deeds of trust recorded prior to January 1, 1991.

Session Laws 1991, c. 683, s. 4 provides in part: "Except as provided in G.S. 10A-16, as enacted by this act, this act does not affect the validity of notarial acts performed prior to the effective date [October 1, 1991]."

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-154, s. 1, effective May, 31, 2001, inserted "or that does not bear the name of the notary exactly as it appears on the commission, as required by G.S. 10A-11, or where the signature does not comport exactly with the name on the notary commission or on the notary seal, as required by G.S. 10A-9" following the second occurrance of "notary's name" in subsection (b); and substituted "April 15, 2001" for "February 28, 1999" at the end of subsection (d).

§ 10A-17. Certain notarial acts validated.

(a) Any acknowledgment taken and any instrument notarized by a person whose notarial commission was revoked on or before January 30, 1997, is hereby validated.

(b) This section applies to notarial acts performed on or before August 1, 1998. (1999-21, s. 1.)

Article 1.

General Provisions.

§ 11-1. Oaths and affirmations to be administered with solemnity.

Whereas, lawful oaths for discovery of truth and establishing right are necessary and highly conducive to the important end of good government; and being most solemn appeals to Almighty God, as the omniscient witness of truth and the just and omnipotent avenger of falsehood, and whereas, lawful affirmations for the discovery of truth and establishing right are necessary and highly conducive to the important end of good government, therefore, such oaths and affirmations ought to be taken and administered with the utmost solemnity. (1777, c. 108, s. 2, P.R.; R.C., c. 76, s. 1; Rev., s. 2353; C.S., s. 3188; 1985, c. 156, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

Editor's Note. — The cases below were decided prior to the 1985 amendment to this section, which provided for affirmations.

The "solemnity" applies not only to the substance of the oath, but to the form and manner of taking it and of administering it. State v. Davis, 69 N.C. 383 (1873).

Double Sanction to Oath of Witness. — The law requires two guarantees of the truth of what a witness is about to state; he must be in the fear of punishment by the laws of man, and he must also be in the fear of punishment by the laws of God, if he states what is false; in other words, there must be a temporal and also a religious sanction to his oath. Shaw v. Moore, 49 N.C. 25 (1856).

Sufficiency of Belief. — A person who believes in the obligation of an oath on the Bible; who believes in God and Jesus Christ, and that God will punish in this world, all violators of his law, and that the sinner will inevitably be punished in this world for each and every sin committed; but who believes that there will be no punishment after death, and that in another world all will be happy and equal to the angels, is competent to be sworn. Shaw v. Moore, 49 N.C. 25 (1856).

In Omychund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 19, and Wiles, 538, it was decided that a Gentoo, who did not believe in either the Old or New Testament, but who believed in a God, as the Creator of the Universe, and believed that he was a rewarder of those who do well, and an avenger of those who do ill, according to the common law, could be sworn in that form which was the most sacred and obligatory upon his religious sense. The case established the rule to be, that an infidel is competent to be sworn, provided he believes in the existence of a Supreme Being, who punishes the wicked, without reference to the time of punishment. Shaw v. Moore, 49 N.C. 25 (1856).

Finding of the Judge Conclusive. — The finding of the judge as to the competency of a witness to take an oath is conclusive, and not reviewable. State v. Pitt, 166 N.C. 268, 80 S.E. 1060 (1914).

Objection to Manner of Administering After Verdict. — Where a juror was sworn in the presence of the defendant, and his counsel let him acquiesce in the manner in which the oath was taken, to permit him to object after the verdict would simply make a trial not a decision upon the merits but a series of pitfalls for the State. Not having spoken when he was called upon to speak, the prisoner would not be heard after the verdict has gone against him. State v. Ward, 9 N.C. 443 (1823); Briggs v. Byrd, 34 N.C. 377 (1851); State v. Patrick, 48 N.C. 443 (1856); State v. Boon, 82 N.C. 637 (1880); State v. Council, 129 N.C. 511, 39 S.E. 814 (1901).

Failure to Administer. — In State v. Gee, 92 N.C. 756 (1885), where a witness was not sworn at all, the court held that this was not ground of objection after verdict. State v. Council, 129 N.C. 511, 39 S.E. 814 (1901).

Objection to Oath of Incompetent After Verdict. — Where a juror was incompetent to be sworn because he was an atheist (State v. Davis, 80 N.C. 412 (1879)) and the objection was not discovered till after verdict, setting aside the verdict rested in the discretion of the trial judge. State v. Lamber, 93 N.C. 618 (1885); State v. Council, 129 N.C. 511, 39 S.E. 814 (1901).

§ 11-2. Administration of oaths.

Judges and other persons who may be empowered to administer oaths, shall (except in the cases in this Chapter excepted) require the party to be sworn to lay his hand upon the Holy Scriptures, in token of his engagement to speak the truth and in further token that, if he should swerve from the truth, he may be justly deprived of all the blessings of that holy book and made liable to that vengeance which he has imprecated on his own head. (1777, c. 108, s. 2, P.R.; R.C., c. 76, s. 1; Code, s. 3309; Rev., s. 2354; C.S., s. 3189; 1941, c. 11; 1971, c. 381, s. 9; 1985, c. 756, s. 2.)

CASE NOTES

Application to Witnesses. — Every witness, except as otherwise provided, must be sworn in the matter stated in this section. State v. Davis, 69 N.C. 383 (1873).

Sufficiency of Juror's Oath. — An oath administered to a juror in the manner prescribed by statute is sufficient; the juror need not repeat the words "so help me God." State v. Paylor, 89 N.C. 539 (1883).

Ministerial Act. — The administration of an oath is a ministerial act and may be done by anyone in the presence and by the direction of the court, but is the act of the court. State v. Knight, 84 N.C. 789 (1881).

Partially Directory. — As to the form of the oath, when it is prescribed by statute, the statute is to be construed in some sense as directory only, so far at least that a departure from the words, in matter not of substance but of form merely, does not exempt the person taking it from the pains of perjury. State v. Mazon, 90 N.C. 676 (1884).

Validity of Irregular Oath. — To hold invalid an oath that did not follow the very words of the statute could prove disastrous to the public interests. State v. Mazon, 90 N.C. 676 (1884).

Juror's Oath in Capital Cases. — Although the omission of the words "you swear" at the commencement of the oath of jurors in a capital case looks awkward and mars the comeliness of judicial proceedings, it does not vitiate the oath. State v. Owen, 72 N.C. 605 (1875).

The manner of swearing is merely a form adapted to the religious belief of the general mass of citizens for the sake of convenience and uniformity. State v. Pitt, 166 N.C. 268, 80 S.E. 1060 (1914).

Presumption. — The administration of an oath to a witness is an official act of the court; and it being shown affirmatively that an oath was administered to the defendant in open court on the Bible, a presumption arises that it was rightly done. State v. Mace, 86 N.C. 668 (1882).

Willful Violation. — The general rule is that a willful violation of such an oath in a material matter is perjury, and no other is. State v. Davis, 69 N.C. 383 (1873).

When Deputy Clerk May Administer. — The deputy of the clerk of the superior court is authorized to take the affidavit of the plaintiff in an action of claim and delivery. Jackson v. Buchanan, 89 N.C. 74 (1883).

A deputy sheriff is not authorized to administer oath to homestead appraisers. Oates v. Munday, 127 N.C. 439, 37 S.E. 457 (1900).

Cited in State v. Beal, 199 N.C. 278, 154 S.E. 604 (1930).

§ 11-3. Administration of oath with uplifted hand.

When the person to be sworn shall be conscientiously scrupulous of taking a book oath in manner aforesaid, he shall be excused from laying hands upon, or touching the Holy Gospel; and the oath required shall be administered in the following manner, namely: He shall stand with his right hand lifted up towards heaven, in token of his solemn appeal to the Supreme God, and also in token that if he should swerve from the truth he would draw down the vengeance of heaven upon his head, and shall introduce the intended oath with these words, namely:

I, A.B., do appeal to God, as a witness of the truth and the avenger of falsehood, as I shall answer the same at the great day of judgment, when the secrets of all hearts shall be known (etc., as the words of the oath may be). (1777, c. 108, s. 3, P.R.; R.C., c. 76, s. 2; Code, s. 3310; Rev., s. 2355; C.S., s. 3190.)

CASE NOTES

Conscientious Scruples. — If the usual form of oaths upon the Holy Evangelists is dispensed with and an "appeal" or "affirmation" is substituted, it must appear that the person sworn had conscientious scruples, or else the "appeal" or "affirmation" is invalid. State v. Davis, 69 N.C. 383 (1873); Pearre v. Folb, 123 N.C. 239, 31 S.E. 475 (1898).

Presumption as to Witness. — When a witness comes before a tribunal to be sworn it is to be presumed that he has settled the point with himself in what manner he will be sworn, and he should make it known to the officer of the court; and should he be sworn with uplifted hand, though not conscientiously scrupulous of swearing on the Gospels, and depose falsely, he subjects himself to the pains and penalties of perjury. State v. Whisenhurst, 9 N.C. 458 (1823).

Presumption as to Manner. — Where it appeared that the registrar (now chief judge) administered the prescribed oath to electors, but that he did not swear them on the Bible, it would be inferred, in the absence of direct proof to the contrary, that the oath was taken with uplifted hand, as specified by this section, and was accepted as a valid mode of administering it, by both the registrar and the elector. Administering the oath in such manner was sufficient to meet the requirements of the election law. State ex rel. DeBerry v. Nicholson, 102 N.C. 465, 9 S.E. 545 (1889).

Cited in State v. Beal, 199 N.C. 278, 154 S.E. 604 (1930).

§ 11-4. Affirmation in lieu of oath.

When a person to be sworn shall have conscientious scruples against taking an oath in the manner prescribed by G.S. 11-2, 11-3, or 11-7, he shall be permitted to be affirmed. In all cases the words of the affirmation shall be the same as the words of the prescribed oath, except that the word "affirm" shall be substituted for the word "swear" and the words "so help me God" shall be deleted. (1777, c. 108, s. 4, P.R.; c. 115, s. 42, P.R.; 1819, c. 1019, P.R.; 1821, c. 1112, P.R.; R.C., c. 76, s. 3; Code, s. 3311; Rev., s. 2356; C.S., s. 3191; 1985, c. 756, s. 3.)

Cited in State v. Davis, 69 N.C. 383 (1873); State v. Beal, 199 N.C. 278, 154 S.E. 604 (1930).

§ 11-5. Oaths of corporations.

In all cases where a corporation is appointed administrator, executor, collector, or to any other fiduciary position, of which fiduciary an oath is required by law, such oath may be taken by such corporation by and through any officer or agent of said corporation who is authorized by law to verify pleadings in behalf of such corporation; and any oath so taken shall be valid as the oath of such corporation. Any oath heretofore taken in the manner aforesaid in behalf of a corporation as such fiduciary is hereby validated as the oath of such corporation. (1919, c. 89, ss. 1, 2; C.S., s. 3192.)

§ 11-6: Repealed by Session Laws 1985, c. 756, s. 4.

Cross References. — As to oath to support the Constitution of the United States, see now § 11-7.

§ 11-7. Oath or affirmation to support Constitutions; all officers to take.

Every member of the General Assembly and every person elected or appointed to hold any office of trust or profit in the State shall, before taking office or entering upon the execution of the office, take and subscribe to the following oath:

"I, _____, do solemnly and sincerely swear that I will support the Constitution of the United States; that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to the State of North Carolina, and to the constitutional powers and authorities which are or may be established for the government thereof; and that I will endeavor to support, maintain and defend the Constitution of said State, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, to the best of my knowledge and ability; so help me God." (1781, c. 342, s. 1, P.R.; R.C., c. 76, s. 4; Code, s. 3312; Rev., s. 2358; C.S., s. 3194; 1985, c. 756, s. 5.)

Cross References. — As to oaths required of public officers, see N.C. Const., Art. VI, § 7. As to penalty for failure to take oath before entering on the duties of office, see § 128-5.

CASE NOTES

Oath Incidental. — The oath required of public officers is merely incidental to and constitutes no part of the office. State ex rel. Clark v. Stanley, 66 N.C. 59 (1872).

Failure to Take Oath. — Public officers who have not taken the required oaths of office are not entitled to the salaries attached to such offices. Wiley v. Worth, 61 N.C. 171 (1867).

Duty of Attorney General. — The Attorney General of North Carolina is a constitutional officer, and he is required to take an oath which among other things binds him to support, maintain and defend the Constitution of North Carolina not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States. It is but a small step from the language of this oath to the proposition asserted by the Attorney General that his duty includes the defense of statutes of this State against charges of unconstitutionality. Hendon v. North Carolina State Bd. of Elections, 633 F. Supp. 454 (W.D.N.C. 1986).

§ 11-7.1. Who may administer oaths of office.

(a) Except as otherwise specifically required by statute, an oath of office may be administered by:

(1) A justice, judge, magistrate, clerk, assistant clerk, or deputy clerk of the General Court of Justice, a retired justice or judge of the General Court of Justice, or any member of the federal judiciary;

(2) The Secretary of State;
(3) A notary public;
(4) A register of deeds;
(5) A mayor of any city, town, or incorporated village;
(5a) A chairman of the board of commissioners of any county;
(6) A member of the House of Representatives or Senate of the General Assembly;
(7) The clerk of any county, city, town or incorporated village.

(b) The administration of an oath by any judge of the Court of Appeals prior to March 7, 1969, is hereby validated. (1953, c. 23; 1969, c. 44, s. 25; c. 499; c. 713, s. 1; 1971, c. 381, s. 10; 1977, c. 344, s. 2; 1979, c. 757; 1981, c. 682, s. 2; 1983, c. 648, s. 1; 1995, c. 147, s. 1.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1983, c. 648, s. 2, provided: "The administration of an oath by any county, city or town clerk prior to date of ratification is hereby validated." The act was ratified June 30, 1983.

Session Laws 1987, c. 620, s. 6 provides that any oath of office taken by a register of deeds before a person authorized to administer oaths as defined in this section and not before the board of county commissioners is validated.

§ 11-8. When deputies may administer.

In all cases where any civil officer, in the discharge of his duties, is permitted by the law to administer an oath, the deputy of such officer, when discharging such duties, shall have authority to administer it, provided he is a sworn officer; and the oath thus administered by the deputy shall be as obligatory as if administered by the principal officer, and shall be attended with the same penalties in case of false swearing. (1836, c. 27, s. 2; R.C., c. 76, s. 7; Code, s. 3316; Rev., s. 2359; C.S., s. 3195.)

§ 11-9. Administration by certain officers.

The chairman of the board of county commissioners and the chairman of the board of education of the several counties may administer oaths in any matter or hearing before their respective boards. (1889, c. 529; 1899, c. 89; Rev., s. 2362; C.S., s. 3196.)

CASE NOTES

§ 11-10. When county surveyors may administer oaths.

The county surveyors of the several counties are empowered to administer oaths to all such persons as are required by law to be sworn in making partition of real estate, in establishing boundaries and in surveying vacant lands under warrants. (1881, c. 144; Code, s. 3314; Rev., s. 2361; C.S., s. 3197; 1959, c. 879, s. 4.)

Treasurer for a County

I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that, according to the best of my skill and ability, I will execute impartially the office of treasurer for the county of _____, in all things according to law; that I will duly and faithfully account for all public moneys that may come into my hands, and will not, directly or indirectly, apply the same, or any part thereof, to any other use than by law directed; so help me, God.

Witness to Depose before the Grand Jury

You swear (or affirm) that the evidence you shall give to the grand jury, upon this bill of indictment against A. B., shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; so help you, God.

Witness in a Capital Trial

You swear (or affirm) that the evidence you shall give to the court and jury in this trial, between the State and the prisoner at the bar, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; so help you, God.

Witness in a Criminal Action

You swear (or affirm) that the evidence you shall give to the court and jury in this action between the State and A. B. shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; so help you, God.

Witness in Civil Cases

You swear (or affirm) that the evidence you shall give to the court and jury in this cause now on trial, wherein A. B. is plaintiff and C. D. defendant, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; so help you, God.

Witness to Prove a Will

You swear (or affirm) that you saw C. D. execute (or heard him acknowledge the execution of) this writing as his last will and testament; that you attested it in his presence and at his request; and that at the time of its execution (or at the time the execution was acknowledged) he was, in your opinion, of sound mind and disposing memory; so help you, God.

Witness before a Legislative Committee or Commission

You swear (or affirm) that the testimony you shall give to the committee (or commission) shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; so help you, God.

General Oath

Any officer of the State or of any county or township, the term of whose oath is not given above, shall take an oath in the following form:

I, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that I will well and truly execute the duties of the office of _____ according to the best of my skill and ability, according to law; so help me, God. (R.C., c. 76, s. 6; 1874-5, c. 58, s. 2; Code, ss. 3057, 3315; 1903, c. 604; Rev., s. 2360; C.S., s. 3199; 1947, c. 71; 1959, c. 879, s. 5; 1967, c. 218, s. 2; 1969, c. 1190, ss. 50, 51; 1971, c. 381, s. 11; 1977, c. 344, s. 3; 1989 (Reg. Sess., 1990), c. 953; 1995, c. 379, s. 10; 1997-14, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

Disclosures Not Prohibited by Grand Jurors' Oath. — The grand jurors' oath of secrecy does not prohibit the disclosure in court of proceedings before the grand jury whenever the ends of justice require it. State v. Colson, 262 N.C. 506, 138 S.E.2d 121 (1964).

Action of the grand jury in returning two fictitious bills of indictment charging undercover agents with narcotics violations, including the undercover agent who was the principal witness against defendant, was improper, but did not necessarily taint all processes of that grand jury so as to require as a matter of law that a bill of indictment charging defendant with transportation of marijuana be quashed. State v. Long, 14 N.C. App. 508, 188 S.E.2d 690 (1972).

The desire of a prospective juror to affirm rather than take an oath is not, of itself, cause for challenge in this State. State v. Atkinson, 275 N.C. 288, 167 S.E.2d 241 (1969), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2283, 29 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1971); State v. Harris, 283 N.C. 46, 194 S.E.2d 796, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 850, 94 S. Ct. 143, 38 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1973).

Jury Need Not Be Resworn for Prosecution of Less Than Capital Offense. — Where, upon an indictment charging homicide, the solicitor (now district attorney) announced that he was not seeking a higher verdict than murder in the second degree, the prosecution was no longer for a capital offense, and it was not required that the jury be again sworn to try the particular prosecution, but under the provisions of this section it was sufficient that the jurors and all others summoned as jurors for the session of court were administered an oath to truly try all issues which would come before the jury during the term. State v. Smith, 268 N.C. 659, 151 S.E.2d 596 (1966), cert. denied, 386 U.S. 1032, 87 S. Ct. 1481, 18 L. Ed. 2d 593 (1967).

Duty of Judge to Determine Constitutionality of Properly Challenged Statute. — Implicit in the sworn duties of a judge is the duty to determine whether a statute is consistent with the State and federal Constitutions when the validity of that statute is properly challenged by a litigant appearing in a case before him. State ex rel. Edmisten v. Tucker, 312 N.C. 326, 323 S.E.2d 294 (1984).

Statutory Construction.

Sec.
12-1. [Repealed.]
12-2. Repeal of statute not to affect actions.
12-3. Rules for construction of statutes.
12-3.1. Fees and charges by agencies.
12-4. Construction of amended statute.

§ 12-1: Repealed by Session Laws 1957, c. 783, s. 3.

§ 12-2. Repeal of statute not to affect actions.

The repeal of a statute shall not affect any action brought before the repeal, for any forfeitures incurred, or for the recovery of any rights accruing under such statute. (1830, c. 44; R.C., c. 108, s. 1; 1879, c. 163; 1881, c. 48; Code, s. 3764; Rev., s. 2830; C.S., s. 3948.)

CASE NOTES

Section Not Obligatory. — As the laws of our legislature do not bind another, except insofar as they may be absolute contracts, this section must be taken as merely a rule of construction having no application where the intention of the legislature clearly and explicitly appears to the contrary. Dyer v. Ellington, 126 N.C. 941, 36 S.E. 177 (1900).

The general rule is that a statute will be given prospective effect only, unless the law in question clearly forbids such a construction. Corporation of Elizabeth City v. Commissioners of Pasquotank, 146 N.C. 539, 60 S.E. 416 (1908); Mann v. Allen, 171 N.C. 219, 88 S.E. 235 (1916); Waddill v. Masten, 172 N.C. 582, 90 S.E. 694 (1916).

In case of a remedial legislation, the general rule is not so insistent, and such statutes are not infrequently given retrospective effect where the language permits and such a construction will best promote the meaning and purpose of the legislature. Waddill v. Masten, 172 N.C. 582, 90 S.E. 694 (1916).

Maxim "Leges Posteriores Priores Contrarias Abrogant". — To give operation to the maxim, leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant, the latter law must be in conflict with the former; therefore, when a later statute is almost in ipsissimis verbis with a former one, there is no repeal of the former. Kesler v. Smith, 66 N.C. 154 (1872).

Repeals by implication are not favored by the law. State v. Williams, 286 N.C. 422, 212 S.E.2d 113 (1975).

Action Commenced Before Repeal. — By express terms of this section, the repeal of a statute does not affect an action theretofore commenced under it. Smith v. Morganton Ice Co., 159 N.C. 151, 74 S.E. 961 (1912).

Same — For Penalty or Forfeiture. — Under the provisions of this section a suit for a forfeiture or penalty is not discontinued by a repeal of the statute giving the penalty. State v. Williams, 97 N.C. 455, 2 S.E. 55 (1887); Epps v. Smith, 121 N.C. 157, 28 S.E. 359 (1897); Lexington Grocery Co. v. Southern R.R., 136 N.C. 396, 48 S.E. 801 (1904).

A vested right of action is property in the same sense in which tangible things are property, and is equally protected against interferences. Where it springs from contract, or from the principles of the common law, it is not competent for the legislature to take it away. Williams v. Atlantic C.L.R.R., 153 N.C. 360, 69 S.E. 402 (1910).

Limitation of Actions. — While the legislature has the power to extend or reduce the time in which an action may be brought, this is subject to the restriction that when the limitation is shortened, a reasonable time must be given for the commencement of an action before the statute works a bar. Strickland v. Draughan, 91 N.C. 103 (1884).

Repeal After Services Rendered. — Where a statute was in force when certain services were rendered, it was held that the plaintiff's right had become absolute, and no subsequent repeal could invalidate it. Copple v. Commissioners, 138 N.C. 127, 50 S.E. 574 (1905).

Subject Matter Destroyed by Statute Pending Appeal. — Where, pending an appeal, the subject matter of the action is destroyed or a statute giving the cause of action is repealed, the appellate court will not go into consideration of the abstract question as to which party ought to have prevailed in order to adjudicate the costs, but the judgment below as to costs will be allowed to stand. Wikel v. Board of Comm'rs, 120 N.C. 451, 27 S.E. 117 (1897); Brinson v. Duplin County, 173 N.C. 137, 91 S.E. 708 (1917).

Right of Informer. — An informer had, in a certain sense, an inchoate right when he brought his suit, but he had no vested right to the penalty until judgment. Hence, until his right became vested, it could not be destroyed by the legislature. Dyer v. Ellington, 126 N.C. 941, 36 S.E. 177 (1900).

Action to Recover Arrearages of Taxes. — An action pending to recover arrearages of taxes, brought under an act authorizing the collection of unpaid taxes for past years, was not affected by the repeal of such statute. City of Wilmington v. Cronly, 122 N.C. 388, 30 S.E. 9 (1898).

Modes of Procedure. — Statutes which change modes of procedure may govern suits pending at the time of their enactment. Sumner v. Miller, 64 N.C. 688 (1870).

Mere Court Procedure. — The rule that statutes may be construed to have retrospective effect does not prevail when they concern mere matters of court procedure before action instituted, or the substitution or designation of new parties deemed necessary to a proper determination of a controversy or authorized to maintain and enforce a recognized or existent right. Waddill v. Masten, 172 N.C. 582, 90 S.E. 694 (1916).

Changing Rules of Evidence. — An act of the legislature changing the rules of evidence cannot be construed as operating retrospectively so as to affect existing rights. Lowe v. Harris, 112 N.C. 472, 17 S.E. 539 (1893).

General Rule in Criminal Actions. — The repeal of a statute pending a prosecution for an offense which it creates arrests the prosecution and withdraws all authority to pronounce judgment, even after conviction. State v. Williams, 97 N.C. 455, 2 S.E. 55 (1887); State v. Massey, 103 N.C. 356, 9 S.E. 632 (1889).

Where a repealing statute contains a saving clause as to crimes committed prior to the repeal or as to pending prosecutions, the offender may be tried and punished under the old law. State v. Williams, 286 N.C. 422, 212 S.E.2d 113 (1975).

Legislative Authority to Increase Punishment. — The legislature has no more authority to give a retroactive effect to a statute making the punishment for an offense already created more severe, than to subject persons to punishment under a criminal statute passed after the commission of the act for which they may be indicted. The provision of the federal Constitution, which forbids the enactment by a state of any ex post facto law, could, in either event, be invoked for the protection of the person charged. State v. Williams, 97 N.C. 455, 2 S.E. 55 (1887); State v. Ramsour, 113 N.C. 642, 18 S.E. 707 (1893).

§ 12-3. Rules for construction of statutes.

In the construction of all statutes the following rules shall be observed, unless such construction would be inconsistent with the manifest intent of the General Assembly, or repugnant to the context of the same statute, that is to say:

(1) Singular and Plural Number, Masculine Gender, etc. — Every word importing the singular number only shall extend and be applied to several persons or things, as well as to one person or thing; and every word importing the plural number only shall extend and be applied to one person or thing, as well as to several persons or things; and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to females as well as to males, unless the context clearly shows to the contrary.

(2) Authority, to Three or More Exercised by Majority. — All words purporting to give a joint authority to three or more public officers or other persons shall be construed as giving such authority to a majority of such officers or other persons, unless it shall be otherwise expressly declared in the law giving the authority.

(3) "Month" and "Year". — The word "month" shall be construed to mean a calendar month, unless otherwise expressed; and the word "year," a calendar year, unless otherwise expressed; and the word "year" alone shall be equivalent to the expression "year of our Lord." When a statute refers to a period of one or more months and the last month does not have a date corresponding to the initial date, the period shall expire on the last day of the last month.

(4) Leap Year, How Counted. — In every leap year the increasing day and the day before, in all legal proceedings, shall be counted as one day.

(5) "Oath" and "Sworn". — The word "oath" shall be construed to include "affirmation," in all cases where by law an affirmation may be substituted for an oath, and in like cases the word "sworn" shall be construed to include the word "affirmed."

(6) "Person" and "Property". — The word "person" shall extend and be applied to bodies politic and corporate, as well as to individuals, unless the context clearly shows to the contrary. The words "real property" shall be coextensive with lands, tenements and hereditaments. The words "personal property" shall include moneys, goods, chattels, choses in action and evidences of debt, including all things capable of ownership, not descendable to heirs at law. The word "property" shall include all property, both real and personal.

(7) "Preceding" and "Following". — The words "preceding" and "following," when used by way of reference to any section of a statute, shall be construed to mean the section next preceding or next following that in which such reference is made; unless when some other section is expressly designated in such reference.

(8) "Seal". — In all cases in which the seal of any court or public office shall be required by law to be affixed to any paper issuing from such court or office, the word "seal" shall be construed to include an impression of such official seal, made upon the paper alone, as well as an impression made by means of a wafer or of wax affixed thereto.

(9) "Will". — The term "will" shall be construed to include codicils as well as wills.

(10) "Written" and "in Writing". — The words "written" and "in writing" may be construed to include printing, engraving, lithographing, and any other mode of representing words and letters: Provided, that in all cases where a written signature is required by law, the same shall be in a proper handwriting, or in a proper mark.

(11) "State" and "United States". — The word "state," when applied to the different parts of the United States, shall be construed to extend to and include the District of Columbia and the several territories, so called; and the words "United States" shall be construed to include the said district and territories and all dependencies.

(12) "Imprisonment for One Month," How Construed. — The words "imprisonment for one month," wherever used in any of the statutes, shall be construed to mean "imprisonment for thirty days."

(13) "Governor," "Senator," "Solicitor," "Elector," "Executor," "Administrator," "Collector," "Juror," and "Auditor". — The words "Governor," "Senator," "district attorney," "elector," "executor," "administrator," "collector," "juror," "auditor," and any other words of like character shall when applied to the holder of such office, or occupant of such position, be words of common gender, and they shall be a sufficient designation of the person holding such office or position, whether the holder be a man or woman. (21 Hen. III; R.S., c. 31, s. 113; R.C., c. 31, s. 108; c. 108; Code, s. 3765; Rev., s. 2831; C.S., s. 3949; 1921, c. 30; 1973, c. 47, s. 2; 1977, c. 446, s. 4.)

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Words Given Ordinary Meaning. — When construing a statute the words used therein will be given their ordinary meaning, unless it appears from the context that they should be taken in a different sense. Abernethy v. Board of Comm'rs, 169 N.C. 631, 86 S.E. 577 (1915).

Void for Vagueness. — If a statute be so vague in its terms as to convey no definite meaning to the court or a ministerial officer, it is void. State v. Partlow, 91 N.C. 550 (1884).

Words Cannot Be Construed Away. — The court has no power or right to strike out words or to construe them away. Nance v. Southern Ry., 149 N.C. 366, 63 S.E. 116 (1908).

The statutory inclusion of certain things implies the exclusion of others. Alford v. Shaw, 327 N.C. 526, 398 S.E.2d 445 (1990).

Specific Words Followed by General Words. — Where particular and specific words or acts, the subject of a statute, are followed by general words, the latter must, as a rule, and by a proper interpretation, be confined to acts and things of the same kind. State v. Craig, 176 N.C. 740, 97 S.E. 400 (1918).

Proviso. — As a general rule in the construction of statutes, a proviso will be considered as a limitation upon the general words preceding, and as excepting something therefrom, but this rule is not absolute, and the meaning of the proviso will be ascertained by the language used in it. Traders Nat'l Bank v. Lawrence Mfg. Co., 96 N.C. 298, 3 S.E. 363 (1887).

Proviso Prevails over Purview. — Where a proviso in a statute was directly contrary to the purview of the statute, the proviso was good and not the purview, because the proviso spoke the later intention of the legislature. Orinoco Supply Co. v. Masonic & E. Star Home, 163 N.C. 513, 79 S.E. 964 (1913).

Particular Statute Controls over General Statute. — Where one statute deals with a subject in detail with reference to a particular situation and another statute deals with the same subject in general and comprehensive terms, the particular statute will be construed as controlling in the particular situation, unless it clearly appears that the General Assembly intended to make the general act controlling in regard thereto. State v. Leeper, 59 N.C. App. 199, 296 S.E.2d 7, cert. denied, 307 N.C. 272, 299 S.E.2d 218 (1982).

Applied in State v. Camp, 59 N.C. App. 38, 295 S.E.2d 766 (1982); Wade v. Wade, 72 N.C. App. 372, 325 S.E.2d 260 (1985); Sharpe v. Worland, 137 N.C. App. 82, 527 S.E.2d 75 (2000).

II. DETERMINATION OF INTENT AND MEANING.

A. In General.

When Statute Is Clear. — It is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation, or, where the words have a definite and precise meaning, to go elsewhere in search of conjecture in order to restrict or extend the meaning. Statutes should be read and understood according to the natural and most obvious import of the language without resorting to subtle and forced construction for the purpose of either limiting or extending their operation. Hamilton v. Rathbone, 175 U.S. 414, 20 S. Ct. 155, 44 L. Ed. 219 (1899); Nance v. Southern Ry., 149 N.C. 366, 63 S.E. 116 (1908); State v. Carpenter, 173 N.C. 767, 92 S.E. 373 (1917).

Where the language of a statute is clear and unambiguous there is no room for judicial construction and the courts must give it its plain and definite meaning; the courts are without power to interpolate, or superimpose, provisions and limitations not contained therein. Begley v. Employment Sec. Comm'n, 50 N.C.

App. 432, 274 S.E.2d 370 (1981).

When Statute Is Ambiguous. — It is well-settled law in this state that when the language of a statute is unclear or ambiguous, a court may interpret the language of the statute in accordance with what the court presumed the legislature intended. Carolina Truck & Body Co. v. GMC, 102 N.C. App. 262, 402 S.E.2d 135, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 266, 407 S.E.2d 831 (1991).

When Court May Interpolate Necessary Words. — When it is necessary to carry out the clear meaning of a statute, and to make it sensible and effective, the court may interpolate the words necessary thereto, which were evidently omitted, as appears from the context, or silently understand them to be incorporated in it. Fortune v. Buncombe County Comm'rs, 140 N.C. 322, 52 S.E. 950 (1905); Abernethy v. Board of Comm'rs, 169 N.C. 631, 86 S.E. 577 (1915).

Where Language Is of Doubtful Meaning. — In interpreting a statute where the language is of doubtful meaning, the court will reject an interpretation which would make the statute harsh, oppressive, inequitable and unduly restrictive of primary private rights. Nance v. Southern Ry., 149 N.C. 366, 63 S.E. 116 (1908).

A statute should not be construed in such manner as to render it partly ineffective or inefficient if another construction will make it effective. State v. Williams, 286 N.C. 422, 212 S.E.2d 113 (1975).

Law Existing at Time of Enactment. — To discover the true meaning of a statute, consideration should be given the law as it existed at the time of its enactment, the public policy as declared in judicial opinions and legislative acts, the public interest, and the purpose of the act in question. Kendall v. Stafford, 178 N.C. 461, 101 S.E. 15 (1919).

Objects Embraced. — The meaning of a statute in respect to what it has reference and the objects it embraces, as well as in other respects, is to be ascertained by appropriate means and indicia, such as the purposes appearing from the statute taken as a whole, the phraseology, the words ordinary or technical, the law as it prevailed before the statute, the mischief to be remedied, the remedy, the end to be accomplished, statutes in pari materia, the preamble, the title, and other like means. State v. Partlow, 91 N.C. 550 (1884).

Doctrine of the Last Antecedent. — By what is known as the doctrine of the last antecedent, relative and qualifying words, phrases, and clauses ordinarily are to be applied to the word or phrase immediately preceding and, unless the context indicates a contrary intent, are not to be construed as extending to or including others more remote. HCA Crossroads Residential Ctrs. Inc. v. North Carolina Dep't of Human Resources, 327 N.C. 573, 398 S.E.2d 466 (1990).

Doctrine of last antecedent is not an absolute rule, however, but merely one aid to the discovery of legislative intent. HCA Crossroads Residential Ctrs. Inc. v. North Carolina Dep't of Human Resources, 327 N.C. 573, 398 S.E.2d 466 (1990).

Misdescription or Misnomer. — The question was fully considered by the Supreme Court in Fortune v. Commissioners, 140 N.C. 322, 52 S.E. 950 (1905), and the court there said: "A misdescription or misnomer in a statute will not vitiate the enactment or render it inoperative, provided the means of identifying the person or thing intended, apart from the erroneous description, are clear, certain, and convincing." Under this rule we may call to our aid anything in the act itself, or even in the alleged erroneous description, which sufficiently points to something else as furnishing certain evidence of what was meant, though the reference to the extraneous matter may not in itself be full and accurate. The rule, even when literally or strictly construed, does not require that the erroneous description shall be altogether rejected in making the search for the true meaning; but it may be used in connection with anything outside of the statute to which it refers and which itself, when examined, makes the meaning clear. The erroneous description may in this way be helped out by extraneous evidence. Toomey v. Goldsboro Lumber Co., 171 N.C. 178, 88 S.E. 215 (1916).

The title of a statute is no part thereof. State v. Welsh, 10 N.C. 404 (1824). But it may be construed when the meaning is doubtful. State v. Woolard, 119 N.C. 779, 25 S.E. 719 (1896).

It cannot control the text when it is clear. Blue v. McDuffie, 44 N.C. 131 (1852); Jones v. Hartford Ins. Co., 88 N.C. 499 (1883); Hines & Battle v. Wilmington & W.R.R., 95 N.C. 434 (1886); State v. Woolard, 119 N.C. 779, 25 S.E. 719 (1896). This is especially true as to the headings of a section in the Code. Cram v. Cram, 116 N.C. 288, 21 S.E. 197 (1895); State v. Brown, 249 N.C. 271, 106 S.E.2d 232 (1958).

B. Legislative Intent.

Motive and Purpose of Legislature. — If the language of a statute is doubtful, and the intention of the legislature is clear, the former will be construed in the latter; but where the language is plain, the courts cannot look into the motive or purpose of the legislature in the enactment of the law. State v. Eaves, 106 N.C. 752, 11 S.E. 370 (1890).

A statute must be construed, if possible, so as to give effect to every part of it, it being presumed that the legislature did not intend any of its provisions to be surplusage. State v. Williams, 286 N.C. 422, 212 S.E.2d 113 (1975).

Where a literal reading of a statute will lead to absurd results, the reason and purpose of the law shall control and the strict letter thereof shall be disregarded. Taylor v. Crisp, 286 N.C. 488, 212 S.E.2d 381 (1975).

Same — Understanding of Individual. — Whatever may be the views and purposes of those who procure the enactment of a statute, the legislature contemplates that its intention shall be ascertained from its words as embodied in it. And courts are not at liberty to accept the understanding of any individual as to the legislative intent. State v. Boon, 1 N.C. 103, N.C. (Tayl.) 6 (1801); Drake v. Drake, 15 N.C. 110 (1833); Adams v. Turrentine, 30 N.C. 147 (1847); State v. Melton, 44 N.C. 49 (1852); Blue v. McDuffie, 44 N.C. 131 (1852); State v. Partlow, 91 N.C. 550 (1884).

Same — Affidavit of Individual Legislators. — In interpreting a statute it was not permissible to show its intent and meaning by affidavit of legislators, for such had to be gathered from the act itself. Goins v. Board of Trustees, 169 N.C. 736, 86 S.E. 629 (1915).

Indicia Bearing on Intent. — The legislative intent will be ascertained by such indicia as the purposes appearing from the statute taken as a whole, the phraseology, the words ordinary or technical, the law as it prevailed before the statute, the mischief to be remedied, the remedy, the end to be accomplished, statutes in pari materia, the preamble, the title, and other like means. State v. White, 58 N.C. App. 558, 294 S.E.2d 1 (1982).

When a statute is unclear in its meaning, the courts will interpret it to give effect to the legislative intent. State v. White, 58 N.C. App. 558, 294 S.E.2d 1 (1982).

Effectuation of Purpose. — Where the language used is ambiguous, or admits of more than one meaning, it is to be taken in such a sense as will conform to the scope of the act and effectuate its objects. State v. Partlow, 91 N.C. 550 (1884); Fortune v. Buncombe County Comm'rs, 140 N.C. 322, 52 S.E. 950 (1905).

Harmonizing Context. — It is the duty of the court to adopt that sense which harmonizes best with the context, and promotes in the fullest manner the apparent policy and objects of the legislature. Nance v. Southern Ry., 149 N.C. 366, 63 S.E. 116 (1908).

As to Whether Statute Mandatory or Directory. — There is no absolutely formal test for determining whether a statutory provision is to be considered mandatory or directory. The meaning and intention of the legislature must govern; and these are to be ascertained, not only from the phraseology of the provision, but also by considering its nature, its design, and the consequences which would follow from construing it in the one way or the other. Spruill v. Davenport, 178 N.C. 364, 100 S.E. 527 (1919).

The use of inapt, inaccurate or improper terms or phrases will not invalidate the statute, provided the real meaning of the legislature can be gathered from the context or from the general purpose and tenor of the enactment. Fortune v. Buncombe County Comm'rs, 140 N.C. 322, 52 S.E. 950 (1905).

Mistakes or Omissions. — Legislative enactments are not to be defeated on account of mistakes or omissions, any more than other writings, provided the intention of the legislature can be collected from the whole statute. If the mistake renders the intention doubtful, the courts will look to the title and preamble as well as the body or purview of the act for assistance in arriving at it, and not until all these fail can the act be held inoperative. Toomey v. Goldsboro Lumber Co., 171 N.C. 178, 88 S.E. 215 (1916).

Impossible Requirements. — In the construction of a statute the court will avoid attributing to the legislature the intention to punish the failure to do an impossible thing. Garrison v. Southern Ry., 150 N.C. 575, 64 S.E. 578 (1909).

III. SIMILAR AND RELATED ACTS.

A. In General.

Words and Phrases in One Statute Read in a Subsequent Act. — Words and phrases, the meaning of which in a statute have been ascertained, when read in a subsequent statute, are to be understood in the same sense. And where the terms of a statute which has received judicial construction are used in a later statute, whether passed by the legislature of the same state or county, or by that of another, that construction is to be given to the later statute. It is presumed that the legislature which passed the latter statute knew the judicial construction which had been placed on the former one, and such a construction becomes a part of the law. Bridgers v. Taylor, 102 N.C. 86, 8 S.E. 893 (1889).

Permissible to Look at Other Statutes. — To ascertain the mischief which an act of the legislature was intended to remove, it is permissible, in the interpretation thereof, to consider other statutes, related to the particular subject, or to one under construction. Abernethy v. Board of Comm'rs, 169 N.C. 631, 86 S.E. 577 (1915); In re Hickerson, 235 N.C. 716, 71 S.E.2d 129 (1952).

It is not permissible, if it can be reasonably avoided, to put such a construction upon a law as will raise a conflict between different parts of it, but effect should be given to each and every clause and provision. But when there is no way of reconciling conflicting clauses of a statute and nothing to indicate which the legislature regarded as of paramount importance, force should be given to those clauses which would make the statute in harmony with the other legislation on the same subject, and which would tend most completely to secure the rights of all persons affected by such legislation. State Bd. of Agriculture v. White Oak Buckle Drainage Dist., 177 N.C. 222, 98 S.E. 597 (1919).

B. Statutes in Pari Materia.

Statutes relating to the same subject matter should be construed in connection with each other as together constituting one law, giving effect to all parts of the statute when possible; and the history of the legislation may be considered in the effort to ascertain the uniform and consistent purpose of the legislature. Allen v. Town of Reidsville, 178 N.C. 513, 101 S.E. 267 (1919).

Statutes relating to the same subject should be construed in pari materia, in such a way as to give effect, if possible, to all provisions without destroying the meaning of the statutes involved. Carolina Truck & Body Co. v. GMC, 102 N.C. App. 262, 402 S.E.2d 135, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 266, 407 S.E.2d 831 (1991).

Same — Apparent Conflict. — Where two statutes on the same subject, or on related subjects, are apparently in conflict with each other they are to be reconciled, by construction, so far as may be, on any fair hypothesis, and validity and effect given to both, if this can be done without destroying the evident intent and meaning of the later act. Peoples Bank v. Loven, 172 N.C. 666, 90 S.E. 948 (1916); State Bd. of Agriculture v. White Oak Buckle Drainage Dist., 177 N.C. 222, 98 S.E. 597 (1919).

Acts of Same Session of Legislature. — All acts of the same session of the legislature upon the same subject matter are considered as one act, and must be construed together, under the doctrine of "in pari materia." They should be considered in pari materia, whether passed at the same session or not. State ex rel. Wilson v. Jordan, 124 N.C. 683, 33 S.E. 139 (1899).

Where there are different statutes in pari materia, though made at different times, or even where they have expired, and not referring to each other, they shall be taken and considered together as one system, and as explanatory of each other. State ex rel. Wilson v. Jordan, 124 N.C. 683, 33 S.E. 139 (1899).

Act Declaratory of Intent of Previous Act. — An act of the legislature declaratory of the intent of a previous act will not control the judiciary in the construction of the first act in actions prior to the declaratory act. Rodwell v. Harrison, 132 N.C. 45, 43 S.E. 540 (1903).

Private and Local Acts. — Private as well as local acts are, as a whole, and in every clause, unaffected by any repugnant provision of the general law. State v. Womble, 112 N.C. 862, 17 S.E. 491 (1893).

C. Amendatory and Repealing Acts.

When Act Purports to Be Amendatory. — Where a statute refers to a prior legislative enactment, and in the caption and body of the act purports to be amendatory, substituting and amending different sections, the legislative intent cannot be construed to repeal the former act. Toomey v. Goldsboro Lumber Co., 171 N.C. 178, 88 S.E. 215 (1916).

Amended and Amending Acts Construed Together. — Where an amendment to an existing statute is enacted, the proper method of arriving at their true intent and meaning is by construing them together. Keith v. Lockhart, 171 N.C. 451, 88 S.E. 640 (1916); Township Rd. Comm'n v. Board of Comm'rs, 178 N.C. 61, 100 S.E. 122 (1919).

When Amendatory Act Refers to Wrong Section. — If a section in an amendatory act refers to a section of the act amended by number, and the section referred to does not express the legislative intent, but another section is found which does express that intent, the reference will be treated as being made to the latter section. Toomey v. Goldsboro Lumber Co., 171 N.C. 178, 88 S.E. 215 (1916).

Erroneous Statement of Date. — An act of the legislature subsequent to and in amendment of a former act of the same session and correcting an ambiguity therein, is not invalidated by the fact that the date of ratification of the amended act is erroneously stated, provided it sufficiently appears beyond cavil, what prior act is referred to. State v. Woolard, 119 N.C. 779, 25 S.E. 719 (1896).

Rules for Construing Repealing Acts. — "Upon a perusal of the authorities it appears that the courts have universally given their sanction to the following rules of construction: (1) That the law does not favor a repeal of an older statute by a later one by mere implication. State ex rel. County Trustee v. Woodside, 30 N.C. 104 (1847); Simonton v. Lanier, 71 N.C. 498 (1874). (2) The implication, in order to be operative, must be necessary, and if it arises out of repugnancy between the two acts the later abrogates the older only to the extent that it is inconsistent and irreconcilable with it. A later and older statute will, if it is possible and reasonable to do so, be always construed together, so as to give effect not only to the distinct parts or provisions of the latter, not inconsistent with the new law, but to give effect to the older law as a whole, subject only to restrictions or modifications of its meaning, where such seems to have been the legislative purpose. A law will not be deemed repealed because some of its provisions are repeated in a subsequent statute, except insofar as the latter plainly appears to have been intended by the legislature as a substitute. State v. Custer, 65 N.C. 339 (1871). (3) Where a later or revising statute clearly covers the whole subject matter of antecedent acts, and it plainly appears to have been the purpose of the legislature to give expression in it to the whole law on the subject, the latter is held to be repealed by a necessary implication." Winslow v. Morton, 118 N.C. 486, 24 S.E. 417 (1896).

When Acts Irreconcilably Inconsistent. — A later statute repeals, by implication, an older statute, with which it is irreconcilably inconsistent, to the extent of such repugnancy. But the two statutes must be reconciled if that can be done by any fair construction. State v. Massey, 103 N.C. 356, 9 S.E. 632 (1889).

Repeal of Act Giving Forfeiture. — The repeal of an act of assembly giving a forfeiture for an offense is a repeal of all forfeitures incurred under the act repealed, unless there be a special exception to the contrary. Governor v. Howard, 5 N.C. 465 (1810).

Repeal of Repealing Act. — The repeal of a statute repealing a former statute leaves the latter in force. Brinkley v. Swicegood, 65 N.C. 626 (1871).

Implied Repeal by Lessening Degree of Crime. — It is perfectly settled as a rule of construction that if, by the common or statute law, an offense, for example, be a felony, and subsequent statute by an enactment merely affirmatively lessen its grade or mitigate the punishment, the latter is to that extent an implied repeal of the former. State v. Upchurch, 31 N.C. 454 (1849).

IV. STATUTES STRICTLY CONSTRUED.

A. In General.

In Derogation of Common Law. — A statute in derogation of the common law must be strictly construed. Swift & Co. v. Tempelos, 178 N.C. 487, 101 S.E. 8 (1919).

Acts Limiting Rights to Contract. — Statutes restricting or disabling persons capable of contracting in the making of contracts, being in derogation of common right, and especially those penal in their nature, must be strictly construed. W.C. Marriner & Bro. v. John L. Roper Co., 112 N.C. 164, 16 S.E. 906 (1893).

Acts Restricting Private Acts. — Statutes which restrict the private rights of persons or the use of property in which the public has no concern should be strictly construed. Nance v. Southern Ry., 149 N.C. 366, 63 S.E. 116 (1908).

Statutes depriving courts of jurisdiction once attached are strictly construed, and every requirement of such statute must be met before the court will yield its jurisdiction. State v. Sullivan, 110 N.C. 513, 14 S.E. 796 (1892).

Statutes providing for forfeitures should be strictly construed and not extended beyond the meaning of the words employed. Skinner v. Thomas, 171 N.C. 98, 87 S.E. 976 (1916).

Ordinarily a strict or narrow construction is applied to statutory exceptions to the operation of laws. News & Observer Publishing Co. v. Interim Bd. of Educ., 29 N.C. App. 37, 223 S.E.2d 580 (1976).

Local Lien Law. — A lien law applicable to certain counties only was local in its nature, and being contrary to the general lien laws of the State, had to be strictly construed. Orinoco Supply Co. v. Masonic & E. Star Home, 163 N.C. 513, 79 S.E. 964 (1913).

A remedial statute should be liberally construed, according to its intent, so as to advance the remedy and repress the evil. Cape Lookout Co. v. Gold, 167 N.C. 63, 83 S.E. 3 (1914).

B. Criminal Statutes.

Rule for Construction of Penal Statutes. — Penal statutes must be strictly construed, and the plaintiff, before he is entitled to recover the penalty, must bring his case strictly within the language and meaning of the statute. They must be construed sensibly, as all other instruments, but not liberally, so as to stretch their meaning beyond what the words will warrant. Coble v. Schoffner, 75 N.C. 42 (1876); State v. Godfrey, 97 N.C. 507, 1 S.E. 779 (1887); Sears v. Whitaker, 136 N.C. 37, 48 S.E. 517 (1904); Alexander v. Atlantic C.L.R.R., 144 N.C. 93, 56 S.E. 697 (1907); Hamlet Grocery Co. v. Southern Ry., 170 N.C. 241, 87 S.E. 57 (1915).

Rule Explained. — The rule that a penal statute must be strictly construed, means no more than that the court, in ascertaining the meaning of such a statute, cannot go beyond the plain meaning of the words and phraseology employed in search of an intention not certainly implied by them, and when there is a reasonable doubt as to the meaning of the words used in the statute, the court will not give them such an interpretation as to impose the penalty, nor will the purpose of the statute be extended by implication, so as to embrace cases not clearly within its meaning. Hines & Battle v. Wilmington & W.R.R., 95 N.C. 434 (1886).

Supplying Omission and Strained Constructions. — As a matter of policy it is more dangerous for the appellate court to usurp the powers of the legislative department by supplying omissions in, or putting strained constructions upon, criminal statutes, than that some criminals should go unpunished. State v. Massey, 103 N.C. 356, 9 S.E.2d 632 (1889).

Whether a criminal intent is a necessary element of a statutory offense is a matter of construction to be determined from the language of the statute in view of its manifest purpose and design. State v. Abrams, 29 N.C. App. 144, 223 S.E.2d 516 (1976).

A statute will not be construed to operate retrospectively so as to take away a penalty or condone a crime unless such intention is clearly expressed. State v. Williams, 286 N.C. 422, 212 S.E.2d 113 (1975).

V. CONSTRUCTION IN ACCORD WITH CONSTITUTION.

A. Construction.

General Rule. — Whenever an act of the legislature can be so construed and applied as to avoid conflict with the Constitution, and give it the force of law, such construction will be adopted by the court. State v. Pool, 74 N.C. 402 (1876).

Unconstitutionality of the statute must appear clearly. State v. White, 58 N.C. App. 558, 294 S.E.2d 1 (1982).

Construction so as to Avoid Constitutional Question. — If a statute is reasonably susceptible of two constructions, one of which will raise a serious question as to its constitutionality and the other will avoid such question, the courts should construe the statute so as to avoid the constitutional question. In re Arcadia Dairy Farms, Inc., 289 N.C. 456, 223 S.E.2d 323 (1976).

If the statute is susceptible of two interpretations, one constitutional and the other unconstitutional, the former will be adopted. State v. White, 58 N.C. App. 558, 294 S.E.2d 1 (1982).

Presumption in Favor of Validity. — Every presumption is in favor of the validity of an act of the legislature and all doubts are resolved in support of the act. Lowery v. School Trustees, 140 N.C. 33, 52 S.E. 267 (1905); In re Denial of Approval to Issue Hous. Bonds, 307 N.C. 52, 296 S.E.2d 281 (1982).

When the constitutionality of a statute is challenged, "every presumption is to be indulged in favor of its validity." Martin v. North Carolina Hous. Corp., 277 N.C. 29, 175 S.E.2d 665 (1970); State v. White, 58 N.C. App. 558, 294 S.E.2d 1 (1982).

Existence of Facts Preserving Constitutionality Presumed. — If the constitutionality of a statute depends on the existence of certain facts and circumstances, the existence of such facts and circumstances will generally be presumed for the purpose of giving validity to the statute, if such a state of facts can reasonably be presumed to exist, and if any such facts may be reasonably conceived in the mind of the court. This rule does not apply if the evidence is to the contrary, or if facts judicially known or proved, compel otherwise. Martin v. North Carolina Hous. Corp., 277 N.C. 29, 175 S.E.2d 665 (1970).

When the constitutionality of a statute depends on the existence or nonexistence of certain facts and circumstances, the existence of such facts and circumstances will generally be presumed for the purpose of giving validity to the statute, if such a state of facts can reasonably be presumed to exist, and if any such facts may be reasonably conceived in the mind of the court. In re Denial of Approval to Issue Hous. Bonds, 307 N.C. 52, 296 S.E.2d 281 (1982).

Valid and Invalid Portions of Same Act. — Where there are distinct and valid provisions of a statute, with unconstitutional provisions, the two portions of the law being separate and it appearing from a perusal of the statute that the legislature intended the valid portion to be effective independently of the invalid part, the valid provisions may be enforced. Archer v. Joyner, 173 N.C. 75, 91 S.E. 699 (1917).

If the invalid portions can be separated from the rest, and if, after their excision, there remains a complete, intelligible, and valid statute capable of being executed, and conforming to the general purpose and intent of the legislature as shown in the act, the same will not be adjudged unconstitutional in toto, but sustained to that extent. Keith v. Lockhart, 171 N.C. 451, 88 S.E. 640 (1916).

That position, however, is not allowed to prevail when the parts of the statute are so connected and dependent, the one upon the other, that to eliminate one will work substantial change to the portion which remains. If the unconstitutional clause cannot be rejected without causing the statute to enact what the legislature did not intend, the whole statute must fall. Riggsbee v. Town of Durham, 94 N.C. 800 (1886); State ex rel. Greene v. Owen, 125 N.C. 212, 34 S.E. 424 (1899); Keith v. Lockhart, 171 N.C. 451, 88 S.E. 640 (1916). See State v. Godwin, 123 N.C. 697, 31 S.E. 221 (1898).

Resort to Implication. — Courts may resort to an implication to sustain an act, but not to destroy it. Lowery v. School Trustees, 140 N.C. 33, 52 S.E. 267 (1905).

B. Effect.

Liability of Public Officer Under Unconstitutional Act. — An individual officeholder is not required to be wiser than the whole people represented in their General Assembly; therefore, he is not indictable for obeying an unconstitutional legislative act; nor is he indictable for refusing to perform certain duties under a former law repealed by a subsequent unconstitutional statute, until at least after a decision by competent authority. State v. Godwin, 123 N.C. 697, 31 S.E. 221 (1898).

When Court Reverses Itself Decision Not Retroactive. — Where property rights are acquired in accordance with a decision of the Supreme Court, in the interpretation of a statute, which is subsequently overruled, the effect of the later decision will not be retroactive in effect. S.W. Fowle & Son v. Ham, 176 N.C. 12, 96 S.E. 639 (1918).

VI. DEFINITIONS.

Subdivision (1) of this section was intended to avoid the very awkward expressions, "such person or persons," "he, she, or they," "himself or themselves," to be met with in some badly drawn statutes. Von Glahn v. Harris, 73 N.C. 323 (1875).

"Person" Extends to "Persons". — The word "person" is construed to extend to "persons" under the authority of subdivision (1) of this section. State v. Wilkerson, 98 N.C. 696, 3 S.E. 683 (1887); State v. Dunn, 134 N.C. 663, 46 S.E. 949 (1904).

Authority to Three or More. — The authority granted by a statute to a board of property appraisers was not terminated by the death of one of its five members so long as three or more of them remained. Ballard v. City of Charlotte, 235 N.C. 484, 70 S.E.2d 575 (1952).

Month. — The lunar month, when spoken of in statutes, consists of twenty-eight days; a calendar month contains the number of days ascribed to it in the calendar, varying from twenty-eight to thirty-one. State v. Upchurch, 72 N.C. 146 (1875). In this respect our statute has adopted the computation of the civil instead of the common law. Satterwhite v. Burwell, 51 N.C. 92 (1858); State v. Faust, 254 N.C. 101, 118 S.E.2d 769.

The term "thirty days" and the term "one month" are not synonymous, although where the particular calendar month is composed of exactly thirty days the number of days involved happen to be the same. Kennedy v. Pilot Life Ins. Co., 4 N.C. App. 77, 165 S.E.2d 676 (1969).

Three Calendar Months. — Plaintiff had three calendar months, not 90 days, in which to file an action; thus, the trial court erred in dismissing plaintiff's cause of action based on the statute of limitations. Storey v. Hailey, 114 N.C. App. 173, 441 S.E.2d 602 (1994).

The words "twelve months," in the absence of any legislative definition of the word "month" and the word "year," will be interpreted to mean twelve calendar, not lunar, months. Muse v. London Assurance Corp., 108 N.C. 240, 13 S.E. 94 (1891); Green v. Patriotic Order Sons of America, 242 N.C. 78, 87 S.E.2d 14 (1955); Kennedy v. Pilot Life Ins. Co., 4 N.C. App. 77, 165 S.E.2d 676 (1969).

Subdivision (6) Does Not Affect Constitution. — The provisions of subdivision (6) of this section could not affect the meaning of the terms employed in the Constitution; indeed, it purports to apply only to statutes, and to them, when the meaning is manifestly otherwise than as therein provided and defined. Redmond v. Commissioners of Tarboro, 106 N.C. 122, 10 S.E. 845 (1890).

"Property" Used in Limited Sense. — While the term "property," in its broadest and most general signification, embraces all kinds of property, including choses in action, rights and credits, and the like things, it is very often and conveniently used in its limited sense, and this is so notwithstanding the statutory provision. Redmond v. Commissioners of Tarboro, 106 N.C. 122, 10 S.E. 845 (1890).

The word "estate" has a broader meaning than the word "property." The latter word could not include choses in action, unless there be something in the context which would require it to receive this interpretation, except by force of the definition contained in this section. Vaughan v. Town of Murfreesboro, 96 N.C. 317, 2 S.E. 676 (1887).

A chose in action is property, and embraced in the terms of subdivision (6) of this section. Winfree v. Bagley, 102 N.C. 515, 9 S.E. 198 (1889).

A promissory note or due bill being an "evidence of debt" is embraced in the term "personal property." State v. Sneed, 121 N.C. 614, 28 S.E. 365 (1897).

Money. — While the word "property" in its legal sense ordinarily includes money, yet where it can be seen from other parts of a will in which it is used that it was not intended, that interpretation will be given it by the court with which the testator had evidently employed it. Patterson v. Wilson, 101 N.C. 584, 8 S.E. 229 (1888).

§ 12-3.1. Fees and charges by agencies.

(a) Authority. — Only the General Assembly has the power to authorize an agency to establish or increase a fee or charge for the rendering of any service or fulfilling of any duty to the public. In the construction of a statute, unless that construction would be inconsistent with the manifest intent of the General Assembly or repugnant to the context of the statute, the legislative grant of authority to an agency to make and promulgate rules shall not be construed as a grant of authority to the agency to establish by rule a fee or a charge for the rendering of any service or fulfilling of any duty to the public, unless the statute expressly provides for the grant of authority to establish a fee or charge for that specific service. Notwithstanding any other law, an agency's establishment or increase of a fee or charge shall not go into effect until one of the following conditions has been met:

(1) The General Assembly has enacted express authorization of the amount of the fee or charge to be established or increased and the purpose of that fee or charge.

(2) The General Assembly has enacted general authorization for the agency to establish or increase the fee or charge, and the agency has consulted with the Joint Legislative Commission on Governmental Operations on the amount and purpose of the fee or charge to be established or increased.

(b) Definitions. — The following definitions apply in this section:

(1) Agency. — Every agency, institution, board, commission, bureau, department, division, council, member of the Council of State, or officer of the legislative, executive or judicial branches of State government. The term does not include counties, cities, towns, villages, other municipal corporations or political subdivisions of the State or any agencies of these subdivisions, the University of North Carolina, community colleges, hospitals, county or city boards of education, other local public districts, units, or bodies of any kind, or private corporations created by act of the General Assembly.

(2) Rule. — Every rule, regulation, ordinance, standard, and amendment thereto adopted by any agency, including rules and regulations regarding substantive matters, standards for products, procedural rules for complying with statutory or regulatory authority or requirements and executive orders of the Governor.

(c) Exceptions. — This section does not apply to any of the following:

(1) Rules establishing fees or charges to State, federal or local governmental units.

(2) A reasonable fee or charge for copying, transcripts of public hearings, State publications, or mailing a document or other item.

(3) Reasonable registration fees covering the cost of a conference or workshop.

(4) Reasonable user fees covering the cost of providing data processing services. (1979, c. 559, s. 1; 1981, c. 695, ss. 1, 2; 1987, c. 564, s. 35; 1991, c. 418, s. 6; 2001-427, s. 8(a).)

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-427, s. 8(a), effective September 28, 2001, in subsection (a), added the subsection catchline, the first and last sentences, and subdivisions (1) and (2); in subsection (b), added the subsection catchline, rewrote the introductory language, which read "For purposes of this section," and inserted the subdivision designations; in subdivision (b)(1), added the subdivision catchline, deleted "'Agency' means" at the beginning of the first sentence, at the beginning of the second sentence, substituted "The term" for "'Agency'" and substituted "these" for "such"; in subdivision (b)(2), added the subdivision catchline, deleted "'Rule' means" at the beginning of the text, and substituted "including" for "and includes"; and added the subsection catchline for subsection (c).

§ 12-4. Construction of amended statute.

Where a part of a statute is amended it is not to be considered as having been repealed and reenacted in the amended form; but the portions which are not altered are to be considered as having been the law since their enactment, and the new provisions as having been enacted at the time of the amendment.

Whenever the General Assembly (i) enacts a bill which purports to amend an existing general statute by deleting, adding, or substituting specific words or figures, and (ii) such bill also purports to set out the wording of the amended statute, or a portion thereof, as it will read after the amendment is accomplished, and (iii) there is a variance between the latter and the former, then, in such case, the latter shall control and be presumed to express the amendatory intent of the General Assembly. (1868-9, c. 270, s. 22; 1870-1, c. 111; Code, s. 3766; Rev., s. 2832; C.S., s. 3950; 1971, c. 115.)

CASE NOTES

Discovering Legislative Intent of Original Enactment Through Amendatory Legislation. — An amendment to an act may be resorted to for the discovery of the legislative intention in the enactment amended, as where the act amended is ambiguous. Taylor v. Crisp, 286 N.C. 488, 212 S.E.2d 381 (1975).

Amending Act Presumed Not to Repeal. — Where a statute only undertakes to amend one already on the statute books, it will be presumed that it did not intend to repeal it, unless there is an express repealing clause. State v. Massey, 97 N.C. 465, 2 S.E. 445 (1887); State v. Broadway, 157 N.C. 598, 72 S.E. 987 (1911).

Repeals by implication are not favored by the law. State v. Williams, 286 N.C. 422, 212 S.E.2d 113 (1975).

Amendment of a statute operates from its enactment, leaving in force the portions which are not altered. Nichols v. Board of Councilmen, 125 N.C. 13, 34 S.E. 71 (1899).

Nonconflicting Portions of Original Act Remain in Force. — Where a statute is amended, all portions of the original act which are not in conflict with the provisions of the amendment remain in the force with the same meaning and effect that they had before the amendment. Rice v. Rigsby, 259 N.C. 506, 131 S.E.2d 469 (1963); Begley v. Employment Sec. Comm'n, 50 N.C. App. 432, 274 S.E.2d 370 (1981).

Bill of Indictment. — If a statute creating an offense is amended in any important particular, a bill of indictment for an offense committed before the act was amended, but which was found after the passage of the amending act, should charge the offense under the old act, and contain an averment that the offense was committed before the amendment was passed. State v. Massey, 97 N.C. 465, 2 S.E. 445 (1887).

Misdemeanor Made Punishable by Fine or Imprisonment. — A public-local law making an act a misdemeanor was not repealed by a statute making the same offense for the first time punishable by "a fine or imprisonment in the discretion of the court," and a felony for the second offense, the latter statute expressly stating in the heading of the chapter that it was amendatory, and for the better enforcement of the former statute, and that it was to take effect from and after its ratification; and where the prohibited offense had been committed prior to the enactment of the latter act, it was punishable under the prior law. State v. Mull, 178 N.C. 748, 101 S.E. 89 (1919).

Where amendatory legislation carries a saving clause as to prior offenses, the law as it stood at the time of the offense is applied to the prosecution and sentencing of the violator. State v. Williams, 286 N.C. 422, 212 S.E.2d 113 (1975).

Reenactment Contemporaneous with Repeal. — It was held in State v. Williams, 117 N.C. 753, 23 S.E. 250 (1895), that: "The reenactment by the legislature of a law in the terms of a former law at the same time it repeals the former law, is not, in contemplation of law, a repeal, but it is a reaffirmance of the former law, whose provisions are thus continued without any intermission." State v. Sutton, 100 N.C. 474, 6 S.E. 687 (1888); State ex rel. Walser v. Bellamy, 120 N.C. 212, 27 S.E. 113 (1897); State v. Southern Ry., 125 N.C. 666, 34 S.E. 527 (1899).

Chapter 13.

Citizenship Restored.

Sec.
13-1. Restoration of citizenship.
13-2. Issuance and filing of certificate or order of restoration.
13-3. Issuance, service and filing of warrant of unconditional pardon.
13-4. Endorsement of warrant, service and filing of conditional pardon.
13-5 through 13-10. [Repealed.]

§ 13-1. Restoration of citizenship.

Any person convicted of a crime, whereby the rights of citizenship are forfeited, shall have such rights automatically restored upon the occurrence of any one of the following conditions:

(1) The unconditional discharge of an inmate by the State Department of Correction or the North Carolina Department of Correction, of a probationer by the State Department of Correction, or of a parolee by the Department of Correction; or of a defendant under a suspended sentence by the court.

(2) The unconditional pardon of the offender.

(3) The satisfaction by the offender of all conditions of a conditional pardon.

(4) With regard to any person convicted of a crime against the United States, the unconditional discharge of such person by the agency of the United States having jurisdiction of such person, the unconditional pardon of such person or the satisfaction by such person of a conditional pardon.

(5) With regard to any person convicted of a crime in another state, the unconditional discharge of such person by the agency of that state having jurisdiction of such person, the unconditional pardon of such person or the satisfaction by such person of a conditional pardon. (1971, c. 902; 1973, c. 251; c. 1262, s. 10; 1977, c. 813, s. 1; 1991, c. 274, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

Legislative Intent. — The 1971 General Assembly, in rewriting this Chapter, intended to substantially relax the requirements necessary for a convicted felon to have his citizenship restored. These requirements were further relaxed by the 1973 amendments to this Chapter. State v. Currie, 284 N.C. 562, 202 S.E.2d 153 (1974).

Statute Revising This Chapter Given Retroactive Application. — Chapter 251, Session Laws of 1973, which revised this Chapter, must be given retroactive application in order to be constitutionally valid. State v. Currie, 19 N.C. App. 241, 198 S.E.2d 491 (1973), aff'd, 284 N.C. 562, 202 S.E.2d 153 (1974).

Though the 1973 revision of this section was enacted after a defendant was indicted for felonious possession of a firearm, it was applicable. State v. Williams, 20 N.C. App. 639, 202 S.E.2d 284 (1974).

Loss of citizenship does not form a part of the judgment of the court, but follows as a consequence of such judgment. State v. Jones, 82 N.C. 685 (1880).

Restoration of rights of citizenship under subdivision (4) does not meet the requirements of 18 U.S.C. § 1203(2), which exempts certain felons from the federal prohibition against possession of firearms, unless it expressly authorizes the possession of firearms.

United States v. Hardin, 696 F.2d 1078 (4th Cir. 1982).

Proof of Violation of 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1). — In North Carolina, to support a conviction for possession of a firearm by an ex-felon in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1), the government must prove, at a minimum, that the defendant possessed a firearm within five years of release from supervision resulting from the prior North Carolina felony. Otherwise, he would as a matter of law stand in the same shoes as any other person who had not been previously convicted of a felony. United States v. Essick, 935 F.2d 28 (4th Cir. 1991).

Because defendant's state felony conviction occurred within five years of a firearm offense, under North Carolina Felony Firearms Act (§ 14-415) the defendant's civil rights could not have been fully restored, and the government proved a firearm possession violation despite the fact that it did not independently establish that defendant's civil rights had not been restored at the time of his firearm possession. United States v. Thomas, 52 F.3d 82 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 885, 116 S. Ct. 226, 133 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1995.

Repeal of Exemption from Firearms Act. — When the Firearms Act became law in 1971, felons were not automatically restored to full citizenship immediately on their release from prison; however, those felons whose citizenship rights had been restored were exempt from the Act. Then in 1973, North Carolina amended the General Statutes to restore felons to full citizenship immediately upon their unconditional discharge under this Chapter. When it became apparent that this would make virtually all felons exempt from the Firearms Act the General Assembly repealed the exemption (former § 14-415.2) for felons whose citizenship rights had been restored. United States v. McLean, 904 F.2d 216 (4th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 875, 111 S. Ct. 203, 112 L. Ed. 2d 164 (1990).

Stated in United States v. McLean, 904 F.2d 216 (4th Cir. 1990); United States v. King, 119 F.3d 290 (4th Cir. 1997).

Cited in Young v. Southern Mica Co., 237 N.C. 644, 75 S.E.2d 795 (1953).

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

An ex-felon found in possession of a firearm could be prosecuted under the Felony Firearms Act, even though he may have lawfully possessed it prior to the December 1, 1995, amendment since his restoration of rights under this chapter, when read in conjunction with § 14-415.1, expressly prohibits the possession of firearms regardless of the date of felony conviction; the General Assembly clearly intended § 14-415.1's application to be retroactive. See opinion of Attorney General to Michael P. Martin, Assistant Chief Counsel, Department of the Treasury Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms, 1997 N.C.A.G. 52 (8/21/97).

§ 13-2. Issuance and filing of certificate or order of restoration.

(a) The agency, department, or court having jurisdiction over the inmate, probationer, parolee or defendant at the time his rights of citizenship are restored under the provisions of G.S. 13-1(1) shall immediately issue a certificate or order in duplicate evidencing the offender's unconditional discharge and specifying the restoration of his rights of citizenship.

The original of such certificate or order shall be promptly transmitted to the clerk of the General Court of Justice in the county where the official record of the case from which the conviction arose is filed. The clerk shall then file the certificate or order without charge with the official record of the case.

(b) In the case of a person convicted of a crime against another state or the United States, whose rights to citizenship have been restored according to G.S. 13-1, the following provisions shall apply:

(1) It shall be the duty of the clerk of the court in the county where such person resides, upon a showing by such person or his representative that the conditions of G.S. 13-1 have been met, to issue the certificate evidencing the offender's unconditional discharge and specifying the restoration of his rights of citizenship. For purposes of this subsection, the fulfillment of the conditions of G.S. 13-1 shall be considered met upon the presentation to the clerk of any paper writing from the agency of any other state or of the United States which had jurisdiction over such person, which shows that the conditions of G.S. 13-1 have been met.

(2) The certificate described in subdivision (b)(1) shall be filed by the clerk of the General Court of Justice in the county in which such person resides.

The provisions of this subsection apply equally to conditional and unconditional pardons by the governor of any other state or by the President of the United States, as well as unconditional discharges by the agency of another state or of the United States having jurisdiction over said person. (1971, c. 902; 1973, c. 251; 1977, c. 813, s. 2; 1991, c. 274, s. 2.)

Stated in United States v. Essick, 935 F.2d 28 (4th Cir. 1991).

§ 13-3. Issuance, service and filing of warrant of unconditional pardon.

In the event the rights of citizenship are restored by an unconditional pardon as specified in G.S. 13-1(2), the Governor, under the provisions of G.S. 147-23, shall issue his warrant therefor specifying the restoration of rights of citizenship to the offender; and the officer to whom the Governor issues his warrant to effect the release of the offender shall deliver a copy of the warrant to the offender under the provisions of G.S. 147-25. The original warrant bearing the officer's return as specified in G.S. 147-25 shall be filed by the clerk of the General Court of Justice without charge in the county where the official record of the case from which the conviction arose is filed. (1971, c. 902; 1973, c. 251.)

§ 13-4. Endorsement of warrant, service and filing of conditional pardon.

When the offender has satisfied all of the conditions of a conditional pardon, and his rights of citizenship have been restored under the provisions of G.S. 13-1(3), the Governor shall issue an endorsement to the original warrant which specified the conditions of the pardon. Such endorsement shall acknowledge that the offender has satisfied all of the conditions of the pardon.

The Governor shall then deliver the endorsement to the officer specified in G.S. 147-25 for service and delivery to the clerk. Service and delivery to the clerk and filing by the clerk shall be done in accordance with the provisions of G.S. 13-3 so that the endorsement reflecting satisfaction of all conditions of the pardon will be served and recorded as if it were a warrant of unconditional pardon. (1973, c. 251.)

SUBCHAPTER I. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

ARTICLE 1.

Felonies and Misdemeanors.

§ 14-1. Felonies and misdemeanors defined.

A felony is a crime which:
(1) Was a felony at common law;
(2) Is or may be punishable by death;
(3) Is or may be punishable by imprisonment in the State's prison; or
(4) Is denominated as a felony by statute.

Any other crime is a misdemeanor. (1891, c. 205, s. 1; Rev., s. 3291; C.S., s. 4171; 1967, c. 1251, s. 1.)

Cross References. — As to statute of limitations for misdemeanors, see § 15-1.

Legal Periodicals. — For article on punishment for crime in North Carolina, see 17 N.C.L. Rev. 205 (1939).

tions in two civil rights cases, see 43 N.C.L. Rev. 667 (1965).

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality. — This section was held to be constitutional in State v. Lytle, 138 N.C. 738, 51 S.E. 66 (1905).

Common-Law Provisions. — Up to the time this section was passed the somewhat arbitrary common-law rule was followed as to what crimes were felonies, and what were misdemeanors and under that, conspiracy, and even such grave crimes as perjury and forgery, were misdemeanors. State v. Mallett, 125 N.C. 718, 34 S.E. 651 (1899), aff'd, 181 U.S. 589, 21 S. Ct. 730, 45 L. Ed. 1015 (1901); State v. Holder, 153 N.C. 606, 69 S.E. 66 (1910). See State v. Hill, 91 N.C. 561 (1884).

Punishment Determines Classification of Offenses. — By this section, North Carolina adopted the rule, then almost universally prevalent, by which the nature of the punishment determined the classification of offenses; those which could be punished capitally or by imprisonment in the penitentiary were felonies (as to which there was no statute of limitations), and all others were misdemeanors, as to which prosecutions in this State were barred by two years. State v. Mallett, 125 N.C. 718, 34 S.E. 651 (1899), aff'd, 181 U.S. 589, 21 S. Ct. 730, 45 L. Ed. 1015 (1901).

The measure of punishment is the test of the nature of a crime, whether felony or misdemeanor. State v. Hyman, 164 N.C. 411, 79 S.E. 284 (1913); Jones v. Brinkley, 174 N.C. 23, 93 S.E. 372 (1917).

Offense Need Not Be Specified. — It is not necessary to prescribe that an act is a misdemeanor or felony, as the punishment affixed determines that. State v. Lewis, 142 N.C. 626, 55 S.E. 600 (1906).

Penitentiary Unknown to Common Law. — The penitentiary, being a modern device, was unknown to the common law; therefore, punishment in the penitentiary could not be imposed by the common law. State v. McNeill, 75 N.C. 15 (1876).

The use of the word "penitentiary" in prescribing the punishment for one convicted under a criminal statute has the same legal significance as the words "State's prison," both meaning the place of punishment in which convicts sentenced to imprisonment and hard labor are confined by the authority of law. State v. Burnett, 184 N.C. 783, 115 S.E. 57 (1922).

Concurrence of General and Local Laws. — This State's general prohibition statutes, prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors, expressly provided that they would not have the effect of repealing local or special statutes upon the subject, but they would continue in full force and in concurrence with the general law except where otherwise provided by law; and where the local law applicable made the offense a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment, in the county jail or penitentiary not exceeding two years, etc., the person convicted thereunder was guilty of a felony, by this section, and the two-year statute of limitations was not a bar to the prosecution. State v. Burnett, 184 N.C. 783, 115 S.E. 57 (1922).

Conspiracy. — A conspiracy to commit a felony is a felony and a conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor is a misdemeanor. State v. Abernethy, 220 N.C. 226, 17 S.E.2d 25 (1941), holding that a conspiracy to interfere with election officials in the discharge of their duties was a misdemeanor.

An assault with intent to commit rape is a felony. State v. Gay, 224 N.C. 141, 29 S.E.2d 458 (1944).

Suicide. — At common law suicide was a felony, and attempted suicide was a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment. State v. Willis, 255 N.C. 473, 121 S.E.2d 854 (1961).

An attempt to commit suicide is an indictable misdemeanor in North Carolina. State v. Willis, 255 N.C. 473, 121 S.E.2d 854 (1961).

Attempt to commit a felony is a misdemeanor, absent statutory provisions to the contrary. State v. Hageman, 307 N.C. 1, 296 S.E.2d 433 (1982).

Fair Sentencing Act. — Although the principal provisions of the Fair Sentencing Act are codified in Chapter 15A, Article 81A, the act resulted in revisions to other portions of the general statutes. See e.g., Chapter 14, Articles 1, 2, 2A, 33; Chapter 15A, Articles 58, 81A, 82, 83, 85, 85A, 89, 91; Chapter 148, Article 2, and Chapter 162, Article 4. State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

For discussion of the historical background, policies, purposes, and implementation of the new Fair Sentencing Act, see State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

Applied in State v. Johnson, 227 N.C. 587,

42 S.E.2d 685 (1947); State v. Miller, 237 N.C. 427, 75 S.E.2d 242 (1953); State v. Roberts, 276 N.C. 98, 171 S.E.2d 440 (1970).

Stated in State v. Glidden, 76 N.C. App. 653, 334 S.E.2d 101 (1985).

§ 14-2.2. Sentencing of a person convicted of a Class A, B, B1, B2, C, D, or E felony who used, displayed, or threatened to use or display a firearm during the commission of the crime; confiscation and disposition of a firearm used in a felony.

(a) If a person is convicted of a Class A, B, B1, B2, C, D, or E felony and the person used, displayed, or threatened to use or display a firearm during the commission of the felony, the person shall, in addition to the punishment for the underlying felony, be sentenced to a minimum term of imprisonment for 60 months as provided by G.S. 15A-1340.16A.

The court shall not suspend any sentence imposed under this section and shall not place a person sentenced under this section on probation for the sentence imposed under this section. Sentences imposed pursuant to this section shall be consecutive to all other sentences imposed and shall begin at the expiration of any other sentence being served by the person.

(b) Subsection (a) of this section does not apply in any of the following circumstances:

(1) The person is not sentenced to an active term of imprisonment.

(2) The evidence of the use, display, or threatened use or display of a firearm is needed to prove an element of the underlying Class A, B, B1, B2, C, D, or E felony.

(3) The person did not actually possess a firearm about his or her person.

(c) When a person is found to have personally used a firearm in the commission or attempted commission of a felony and the firearm is owned by that person, or the serial number on the firearm has been defaced such that ownership is not traceable, the court shall order that the firearm be confiscated and disposed of in any of the ways provided by G.S. 14-269.1 that the court in its discretion deems appropriate.

(d) Repealed by Session Laws 1994, Extra Session, c. 22, s. 19(b), effective October 1, 1994. (1979, c. 760, s. 2; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1316, ss. 34, 47, 48; 1981,

Cross References. — As to structured sentencing of persons convicted of crimes, effective October 1, 1994, see § 15A-1340.10 et seq.

Editor's Note. — Subsection (a) was amended by Session Laws 1994, Extra Session, c. 22, s. 19(a), in the coded bill drafting format provided by § 120-20.1. Without engrossing the amendment added a sentence to the end of the first paragraph in subsection (a) which read "Evidence of the use, display, or threatened use or display of a firearm that is needed to prove an element of the underlying felony shall not be used to establish the enhancement under this section." This language is similar to present subsection (b)(2). The section has been set out in the form above at the direction of the Revisor of Statutes.

§ 14-2.3. Forfeiture of gain acquired through felonies.

(a) Except as is otherwise provided in Article 3 of Chapter 31A, in the case of any violation of a general statute constituting a felony other than a nonwillful homicide, any money or other property or interest in property acquired thereby shall be forfeited to the State of North Carolina, including any profits, gain, remuneration, or compensation directly or indirectly collected by or accruing to any felon.

(b) An action to recover such property shall be brought by either a District Attorney or the Attorney General pursuant to G.S. 1-532. The action must be brought within three years from the date of the conviction for the felony.

(c) Nothing in this section shall be construed to require forfeiture of any money or property recovered by law-enforcement officers pursuant to the investigation of a felony when the money or property is readily identifiable by the owner or guardian of the property or is traceable to him. (1981, c. 840, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

This section describes a category of contraband which is not per se illegal to possess at all times but is only derivatively subject to seizure due to its connection with illegal acts. State v. Triplett, 70 N.C. App. 341, 318 S.E.2d 913, cert. denied, 312 N.C. 497, 322 S.E.2d 564 (1984).

This section authorizes the forfeiture of property characterized not by its use in a particular crime but as the acquired result of a crime. State v. Triplett, 70 N.C. App. 341, 318 S.E.2d 913, cert. denied, 312 N.C. 497, 322 S.E.2d 564 (1984).

§ 14-2.4. Punishment for conspiracy to commit a felony.

(a) Unless a different classification is expressly stated, a person who is convicted of a conspiracy to commit a felony is guilty of a felony that is one class lower than the felony he or she conspired to commit, except that a conspiracy to commit a Class A or Class B1 felony is a Class B2 felony, a conspiracy to commit a Class B2 felony is a Class C felony, and a conspiracy to commit a Class I felony is a Class 1 misdemeanor.

(b) Unless a different classification is expressly stated, a person who is convicted of a conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor is guilty of a misdemeanor that is one class lower than the misdemeanor he or she conspired to commit, except that a conspiracy to commit a Class 3 misdemeanor is a Class 3 misdemeanor. (1983, c. 451, s. 1; 1993, c. 538, s. 5; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, s. 12; c. 24, s. 14(b).)

CASE NOTES

A criminal conspiracy is an agreement between two or more persons to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act in an unlawful way or by unlawful means. State v. Massey, 76 N.C. App. 660, 334 S.E.2d 71, supersedeas allowed, 314 N.C. 672, 335 S.E.2d 325 (1985).

In order for a defendant to be found guilty of a conspiracy, it must be established by competent evidence that the defendant entered into an unlawful confederation for the criminal purposes alleged. State v. Massey, 76 N.C. App. 660, 334 S.E.2d 71, supersedeas allowed, 314 N.C. 672, 335 S.E.2d 325 (1985).

Proof of Conspiracy. — While a conspiracy may be established from circumstantial evidence, there must be evidence to prove the agreement directly or such a state of facts that an agreement may be legally inferred. State v. Massey, 76 N.C. App. 660, 334 S.E.2d 71, supersedeas allowed, 314 N.C. 672, 335 S.E.2d 325 (1985).

If a conspiracy is to be proved by inferences drawn from the evidence, such evidence must point unerringly to the existence of a conspiracy. State v. Massey, 76 N.C. App. 660, 334 S.E.2d 71, supersedeas allowed, 314 N.C. 672, 335 S.E.2d 325 (1985).

For case where proof of conspiracy to commit murder was held sufficient, see State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of State v. Carey, 288 N.C. 254, 218 S.E.2d 387 (1975), overruled in part.

Proof of conspiracy held insufficient where the State's evidence indicated that the defendant wished her ex-husband dead, that they disagreed about custody, that she was present when her brother and husband discussed a plan for "taking care" of the victim, that someone made a long-distance phone call to the victim the night before his murder, that defendant borrowed ten dollars to take the kids camping on the day of the murder, that defendant participated in efforts to hide the victim's body and personal belongings, and initially attempted to deceive law enforcement officers regarding his disappearance. State v. Merrill, 138 N.C. App. 215, 530 S.E.2d 608 (2000).

The presumptive term for conspiracy is three years. State v. Arnold, 329 N.C. 128, 404 S.E.2d 822 (1991).

Conspiracy and accessory before the fact are separate crimes which do not merge, because accessory before the fact requires actual commission of the contemplated felony, while conspiracy does not, and conspiracy requires an agreement, while an accessory need not agree to anything. State v. Fie, 80 N.C. App. 577, 343 S.E.2d 248 (1986), rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 626, 359 S.E.2d 774 (1987).

Acting in Concert. — In order to convict a defendant under a theory of acting in concert, it is not necessary that the defendant personally commit all the acts required to constitute the crime charged. When two or more persons act together with the common purpose to commit robbery, each is held responsible for the acts of the other done in the commission of the robbery. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

Evidence held to show a single conspiracy to feloniously break or enter various Durham retail stores within a four month period, and not 10 separate conspiracies to break or enter on 10 separate occasions. State v. Medlin, 86 N.C. App. 114, 357 S.E.2d 174 (1987).

Convictions of both felonious conspiracy to commit felonious breaking and entering and felonious conspiracy to commit felonious larceny could not both be allowed to stand where there was evidence of only one agreement. State v. Hicks, 86 N.C. App. 36, 356 S.E.2d 595 (1987).

Sufficient evidence existed to allow a jury to decide whether the defendant engaged in two conspiracies instead of one where the State presented evidence about the abandonment of the first attack, the time interval between the assaults, and the different motivations for the crimes. State v. Choppy, 141 N.C. App. 32, 539 S.E.2d 44 (2000).

Conviction for Conspiracy and Substantive Offense. — It is a fundamental principle of substantive criminal law that a defendant may properly be convicted of, and punished for, both conspiracy and the substantive offense which the defendant conspired to commit. Therefore, defendant was properly convicted of, and punished for, both conspiracy to commit murder and first degree murder. State v. Morston, 336 N.C. 381, 445 S.E.2d 1 (1994).

Conspiracy to Commit Murder. — Defendant took advantage of position of trust or confidence where victim of conspiracy to commit murder was defendant's husband. State v. Arnold, 329 N.C. 128, 404 S.E.2d 822 (1991).

Dismissal of Charges as to One Coconspirator. — Dismissal of charges pursuant to a plea agreement does not constitute an acquittal at law; therefore, in the absence of inconsistent verdicts for the same conspiracy (i.e., where all but one of the accused in the conspiracy has received an acquittal), the conviction of the sole remaining conspirator would not be set aside. State v. Gibson, 333 N.C. 29, 424 S.E.2d 95 (1992), overruled on other grounds, 334 N.C. 402, 432 S.E.2d 349 (1993).

Cited in State v. Clark, 324 N.C. 146, 377 S.E.2d 54 (1989); State v. Manning, 327 N.C. 608, 398 S.E.2d 319 (1990).

§ 14-2.5. Punishment for attempt to commit a felony or misdemeanor.

Unless a different classification is expressly stated, an attempt to commit a misdemeanor or a felony is punishable under the next lower classification as the offense which the offender attempted to commit. An attempt to commit a Class A or Class B1 felony is a Class B2 felony, an attempt to commit a Class B2 felony is a Class C felony, an attempt to commit a Class I felony is a Class 1 misdemeanor, and an attempt to commit a Class 3 misdemeanor is a Class 3 misdemeanor. (1993, c. 538, s. 6; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, s. 11; c. 24, s. 14(b).)

§ 14-2.6. Punishment for solicitation to commit a felony or misdemeanor.

(a) Unless a different classification is expressly stated, a person who solicits another person to commit a felony is guilty of a felony that is two classes lower than the felony the person solicited the other person to commit, except that a solicitation to commit a Class A or Class B1 felony is a Class C felony, a solicitation to commit a Class B2 felony is a Class D felony, a solicitation to commit a Class H felony is a Class 1 misdemeanor, and a solicitation to commit a Class I felony is a Class 2 misdemeanor.

(b) Unless a different classification is expressly stated, a person who solicits another person to commit a misdemeanor is guilty of a Class 3 misdemeanor. (1993, c. 538, s. 6.1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, s. 13; c. 24, s. 14(b).)

§ 14-3. Punishment of misdemeanors, infamous offenses, offenses committed in secrecy and malice, or with deceit and intent to defraud, or with ethnic animosity.

(a) Except as provided in subsections (b) and (c), every person who shall be convicted of any misdemeanor for which no specific classification and no specific punishment is prescribed by statute shall be punishable as a Class 1 misdemeanor. Any misdemeanor that has a specific punishment, but is not assigned a classification by the General Assembly pursuant to law is classified as follows, based on the maximum punishment allowed by law for the offense as it existed on the effective date of Article 81B of Chapter 15A of the General Statutes:

(1) If that maximum punishment is more than six months imprisonment, it is a Class 1 misdemeanor;

(2) If that maximum punishment is more than 30 days but not more than six months imprisonment, it is a Class 2 misdemeanor; and

(3) If that maximum punishment is 30 days or less imprisonment or only a fine, it is a Class 3 misdemeanor.

Misdemeanors that have punishments for one or more counties or cities pursuant to a local act of the General Assembly that are different from the generally applicable punishment are classified pursuant to this subsection if not otherwise specifically classified.

(b) If a misdemeanor offense as to which no specific punishment is prescribed be infamous, done in secrecy and malice, or with deceit and intent to defraud, the offender shall, except where the offense is a conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor, be guilty of a Class H felony.

(c) If any Class 2 or Class 3 misdemeanor is committed because of the victim's race, color, religion, nationality, or country of origin, the offender shall be guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor. If any Class A1 or Class 1 misdemeanor offense is committed because of the victim's race, color, religion, nationality, or country of origin, the offender shall be guilty of a Class I felony. (R.C., c. 34, s. 120; Code, s. 1097; Rev., s. 3293; C.S., s. 4173; 1927, c. 1; 1967, c. 1251, s. 3; 1979, c. 760, s. 5; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1316, ss. 2, 47, 48; 1981, c. 63, s. 1; c. 179, s. 14; 1991, c. 702, s. 2; 1993, c. 538, s. 7; 1994, Ex. CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Infamous Offenses, etc., Generally.
III. Particular Offenses.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Constitutionality. — The punishment provisions of subsection (a) of this section are not unconstitutional. State v. Hullender, 8 N.C. App. 41, 173 S.E.2d 581 (1970).

Section Places Ceiling on Court's Power to Punish. — The maximum provided in this section and § 14-2 places a ceiling on the court's power to punish by imprisonment when a ceiling is not otherwise fixed by law. Jones v. Ross, 257 F. Supp. 798 (E.D.N.C. 1966).

This section has reference to misdemeanors other than those created by Article 3 of Chapter 20 of the General Statutes, which relates to motor vehicles. State v. Massey, 265 N.C. 579, 144 S.E.2d 649 (1965).

This section does not mean that the court may not place offenders on probation, or make use of other State facilities and services in proper cases. State v. Willis, 255 N.C. 473, 121 S.E.2d 854 (1961).

Common-Law Offenses. — Misdemeanors made punishable as at common law, or punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, can be punished by fine, or imprisonment in the county jail, or both. State v. McNeill, 75 N.C. 15 (1876); State v. Powell, 94 N.C. 920 (1886); State v. Brown, 253 N.C. 195, 116 S.E.2d 349 (1960).

If a statute prohibits a matter of public grievance, or commands a matter of public convenience, all acts or omissions contrary to the prohibition or command of the statute are misdemeanors at common law, notwithstanding the fact that no punishment is prescribed in the statute. State v. Bloodworth, 94 N.C. 918 (1886).

Discretion of Trial Judge. — Where the extent of the punishment is referred to the discretion of the trial judge, his sentence may not be interfered with by the appellate court, except in case of manifest and gross abuse. State v. Willer, 94 N.C. 904 (1886); State v. Smith, 174 N.C. 804, 93 S.E. 910 (1917).

The fact that others tried on similar charges are given shorter sentences is not ground for legal objection, the punishment imposed in a particular case, if within statutory limits, being within the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Best, 11 N.C. App. 286, 181

S.E.2d 138, cert. denied, 279 N.C. 350, 182 S.E.2d 582 (1971).

Punishment "in the discretion of the court" is not specific punishment and, hence, is governed by the limits (ten years for felonies and two years for misdemeanors) prescribed in this section and § 14-2. State v. Adams, 266 N.C. 406, 146 S.E.2d 505 (1966).

Punishment Provisions of This Section and § 14-277. — While § 14-277(d) provides in pertinent part that a violation of both subsections (a) and (b) of § 14-277 is a misdemeanor, it also provides that a violation of § 14-277(a) is punishable under subsection (a) of this section and a violation of § 14-277(b) is punishable under § 14-277(d). The punishment provisions of subsection (a) of this section and § 14-277(d) vary. State v. Chisholm, 90 N.C. App. 526, 369 S.E.2d 375 (1988).

Where Felony and Misdemeanor Counts Are Consolidated for Judgment. — Where defendant was tried and convicted upon an indictment charging felonious breaking and entering and misdemeanor larceny, and both counts were consolidated for judgment, the fact that the one sentence imposed was in excess of that permissible upon conviction of the misdemeanor was immaterial and was not prejudicial where it did not exceed that permitted upon conviction of the felony. State v. Cleary, 9 N.C. App. 189, 175 S.E.2d 749 (1970).

Where Statute Is Repealed Before Judgment. — Where a statute prescribing the punishment for a crime is expressly and unqualifiedly repealed after such crime has been committed, but before final judgment, though after conviction, no punishment can be imposed. State v. Cress, 49 N.C. 421 (1857); State v. Nutt, 61 N.C. 20 (1866); State v. Long, 78 N.C. 571 (1878); State v. Massey, 103 N.C. 356, 9 S.E. 632 (1889); State v. Biggers, 108 N.C. 760, 12 S.E. 1024 (1891); State v. Perkins, 141 N.C. 797, 53 S.E. 735 (1906).

Excessive Punishment. — The word "or," in criminal statutes, cannot be interpreted to mean "and," when the effect is to aggravate the offense or increase the punishment. And so where a statute provides that a party guilty of the offense created by it shall be fined or imprisoned, the court has no power to both fine and imprison. State v. Walters, 97 N.C. 489, 2 S.E. 539 (1887).

A sentence of imprisonment for five years in the county jail and a recognizance of $500.00 to keep the peace for five years after the expiration thereof upon a defendant convicted of assault and battery is excessive and therefore unconstitutional. State v. Driver, 78 N.C. 423 (1878).

The maximum punishment for a general misdemeanor is two years. State v. Burris, 3 N.C. App. 35, 164 S.E.2d 52 (1968).

A misdemeanor punishable in the discretion of the court means a maximum of two years. Atkins v. City of Charlotte, 296 F. Supp. 1068 (W.D.N.C. 1969).

Same — Not Cruel or Unusual. — It is well settled that when no time is fixed by the statute, an imprisonment for two years will not be held cruel and unusual. State v. Driver, 78 N.C. 423 (1878); State v. Miller, 94 N.C. 904 (1886); State v. Farrington, 141 N.C. 844, 53 S.E. 954 (1906).

Where Common-Law Offense Is Altered by Statute. — Where the grade of a common-law offense has been made higher by statute, the indictment must conclude against the statute, but when the punishment has been mitigated, it may conclude at common law. State v. Lawrence, 81 N.C. 522 (1879).

Effect of Consent of Defendant. — No consent of the defendant can confer a jurisdiction which is denied to the court by the law, and any punishment imposed, other than that prescribed for the offense, is illegal. In re Schenck, 74 N.C. 607 (1876).

Failure to Instruct on Lesser-Included Offense. — Where there was substantial evidence which would have supported a reasonable finding that defendant committed the lesser-included offense of attempted murder, the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury on the lesser-included offense of attempted murder. State v. Collins, 334 N.C. 54, 431 S.E.2d 188 (1993).

Jurisdiction. — The superior court did not have jurisdiction where the indictment failed to allege the elements of a felony. State v. Bell, 121 N.C. App. 700, 468 S.E.2d 484 (1996).

Applied in State v. Mounce, 226 N.C. 159, 36 S.E.2d 918 (1946); State v. Thompson, 3 N.C. App. 231, 164 S.E.2d 391 (1968); State v. Batiste, 5 N.C. App. 511, 168 S.E.2d 510 (1969); State v. Crabb, 9 N.C. App. 333, 176 S.E.2d 39 (1970); State v. Shirley, 12 N.C. App. 440, 183 S.E.2d 880 (1971); State v. Wade, 14 N.C. App. 414, 188 S.E.2d 714 (1972); State v. Lewis, 17 N.C. App. 117, 193 S.E.2d 455 (1972); State v. Toler, 18 N.C. App. 149, 196 S.E.2d 295 (1973); Lawrence v. State, 18 N.C. App. 260, 196 S.E.2d 623 (1973); State v. Puryear, 30 N.C. App. 719, 228 S.E.2d 536 (1976); State v. Preston, 73 N.C. App. 174, 325 S.E.2d 686 (1985); State v. Lee, 88 N.C. App. 478, 363 S.E.2d 656 (1988).

II. INFAMOUS OFFENSES, ETC., GENERALLY.

Intent of Subsection (b). — When the legislature used the words "done in secrecy and malice, or with deceit and intent to defraud," its manifest purpose was to describe offenses in which either secrecy and malice, or the employment of deceit with intent to defraud, are elements necessary to their criminality as defined by law. State v. Hageman, 307 N.C. 1, 296 S.E.2d 433 (1982).

Subsection (b) and the reported cases leave some lack of certainty as to what crimes may be designated and punished as infamous. State v. Keen, 25 N.C. App. 567, 214 S.E.2d 242 (1975).

"Infamous" Refers to Nature of Offense. — A statute which names the punishment for all misdemeanors, where no specific punishment is prescribed, and provides that if the offense be "infamous," it shall be punished as a felony, necessarily refers to the degrading nature of the offense, and not to the measure of punishment. State v. Surles, 230 N.C. 272, 52 S.E.2d 880 (1949); State v. Mann, 77 N.C. App. 654, 335 S.E.2d 772 (1985), modified on other grounds, 317 N.C. 164, 345 S.E.2d 365 (1986).

Meaning of "infamous" must be determined with reference to the degrading nature of the offense and not the measure of punishment. State v. Hageman, 307 N.C. 1, 296 S.E.2d 433 (1982).

In determining whether an offense is "infamous" and shall be punished as a felony for that reason under subsection (b) of this section, the courts look to the nature of the offense. State v. Glidden, 317 N.C. 557, 346 S.E.2d 470 (1986).

What Is an "Infamous" Crime. — A crime is "infamous" within the meaning of the statute if it is an act of depravity, involves moral turpitude, and reveals a heart devoid of social duty and a mind fatally bent on mischief. State v. Glidden, 317 N.C. 557, 346 S.E.2d 470 (1986).

In determining whether a misdemeanor is an offense "done in secrecy and malice," the courts must apply a definitional test and determine whether both "secrecy and malice" are necessary or inherent elements of the offense. State v. Glidden, 317 N.C. 557, 346 S.E.2d 470 (1986).

Fact That Misdemeanor Is Infamous Affects Only Punishment. — Under North Carolina law a determination that a misdemeanor is infamous affects only the punishment. United States v. MacCloskey, 682 F.2d 468 (4th Cir. 1982).

The grade or class of a crime is determined by the punishment prescribed therefor and not the nomenclature of the statute, a felony being a crime punishable by death or imprisonment in the State prison, and while all misdemeanors for which no punishment is prescribed are punishable as misdemeanors at common law, where the offense is infamous, or done in secrecy or malice, or with deceit and intent to defraud, it is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail or State prison, under this section, and is a felony. State v. Harwood, 206 N.C. 87, 173 S.E. 24 (1934).

Anonymous or Threatening Letters. — Subsection (b) of this section and § 14-394, relating to anonymous or threatening letters, set up different punishment levels for the same criminal act without discriminating against any class of defendants, and do not violate equal protection. State v. Glidden, 76 N.C. App. 653, 334 S.E.2d 101 (1985), rev'd on other grounds, 317 N.C. 557, 346 S.E.2d 470 (1986).

III. PARTICULAR OFFENSES.

Attempting to receive stolen property is not a crime of the same degree as attempted robbery, attempted burglary and an attempt to commit a crime against nature. Nor does the crime of attempted receipt of stolen property include secrecy, malice, deceit or intent to defraud as necessary elements. State v. Hageman, 307 N.C. 1, 296 S.E.2d 433 (1982).

Assaults. — Upon the ruling in State v. Rippy, 127 N.C. 516, 37 S.E. 148 (1900), overruled on other grounds, State v. Blackmon, 260 N.C. 352, 132 S.E.2d 880 (1963), § 14-33, bearing directly on the case of assaults, with or without intent to kill, making provision for punishment of such offenses, is to be regarded as specific, within the meaning of this section, and entirely withdraws the case of assault from the operation of this section. State v. Smith, 174 N.C. 804, 93 S.E. 910 (1917).

Conspiracy to Charge with Infanticide. — A conspiracy to charge one with infanticide, being only a common-law misdemeanor, is not punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary. State v. Jackson, 82 N.C. 565 (1880).

Conspiracy to violate the liquor law is a misdemeanor and punishable as at common law, that is, by fine or imprisonment, or both. State v. Brown, 253 N.C. 195, 116 S.E.2d 349 (1960).

Larceny. — The punishment upon conviction of the misdemeanor of larceny may not exceed two years. State v. Cleary, 9 N.C. App. 189, 175 S.E.2d 749 (1970).

Where an indictment charged larceny of property of the value of $200.00 (now $400.00) or less, but contained no allegation the larceny was from a building by breaking and entering, the crime charged was a misdemeanor for which the maximum prison sentence was two years, notwithstanding all the evidence tended to show the larceny was accomplished by means of a felonious breaking and entering. State v. Bowers, 273 N.C. 652, 161 S.E.2d 11 (1968).

Attempt to Obtain Property by False Pretense. — Any attempt to obtain property by false pretense necessarily is done with intent to deceive. By its plain language subsection (b) of this section makes any attempt to obtain property by false pretenses a felony. State v. Page, 32 N.C. App. 478, 232 S.E.2d 460, cert. denied, 292 N.C. 643, 235 S.E.2d 64 (1977).

Destruction of Public Records. — A plea of guilty to an indictment charging defendant with wilfully, feloniously, secretly, and maliciously giving aid and assistance to his codefendant by manufacturing evidence, altering and destroying original records in the office of the Secretary of Revenue, was a confession of a felony under this section, although § 14-76 designates such offense as a misdemeanor. State v. Harwood, 206 N.C. 87, 173 S.E. 24 (1934).

An attempt to commit burglary constitutes a felony and is punishable by imprisonment in the State prison for a term not in excess of ten years, since it is an infamous offense or done in secrecy and malice, or both, within the purview of the statute. State v. Surles, 230 N.C. 272, 52 S.E.2d 880 (1949).

An attempt to break and enter is a misdemeanor punishable under subsection (a) of this section. State v. Hageman, 307 N.C. 1, 296 S.E.2d 433 (1982).

Attempted Robbery. — An attempt to commit common-law robbery is an infamous crime. State v. McNeely, 244 N.C. 737, 94 S.E.2d 853 (1956); State v. Mann, 77 N.C. App. 654, 335 S.E.2d 772 (1985), modified on other grounds, 317 N.C. 164, 345 S.E.2d 365 (1986).

An attempt to commit robbery with firearms is an infamous offense. State v. Parker, 262 N.C. 679, 138 S.E.2d 496 (1964), overruled on other grounds, 320 N.C. 589, 359 S.E.2d 776 (1987).

While at common law an attempt to commit a felony was a misdemeanor, the Supreme Court has held that an attempt to commit the offense of common-law robbery is an infamous crime, and by virtue of subsection (b) has been converted into a felony. State v. Bailey, 4 N.C. App. 407, 167 S.E.2d 24 (1969).

An attempt to commit robbery is an infamous crime. State v. Best, 11 N.C. App. 286, 181 S.E.2d 138, cert. denied, 279 N.C. 350, 182 S.E.2d 582 (1971).

Common-Law Robbery. — Common-law robbery is an infamous crime which consists of the felonious taking of money or goods of any value from the person of another or in his presence against his will, by violence or putting him in fear. State v. Mann, 77 N.C. App. 654, 335 S.E.2d 772 (1985), modified on other grounds, 317 N.C. 164, 345 S.E.2d 365 (1986).

Solicitation to commit common-law robbery is an infamous crime within the meaning of this section. State v. Mann, 317 N.C. 164, 345 S.E.2d 365 (1986).

Solicitation to Commit Murder. — Since it appears to be settled that conspiracy to murder is an infamous offense and punishable as a felony, and that solicitation to commit murder is but one step away from conspiracy to murder, sentence of not less than five nor more than 10 years was authorized by law. State v. Keen, 25 N.C. App. 567, 214 S.E.2d 242 (1975).

Solicitation to commit murder constitutes an "infamous" offense. United States v. MacCloskey, 682 F.2d 468 (4th Cir. 1982).

An attempt to commit murder is an infamous misdemeanor specifically elevated by subsection (b) to the status of a Class H felony. State v. Collins, 334 N.C. 54, 431 S.E.2d 188 (1993).

Assault upon Female Child. — In a prosecution charging assault with intent to commit rape, where at the conclusion of the State's evidence defendant tendered a plea of guilty of an assault upon a female, and the court accepted defendant's plea and found as a fact that the female referred to was a child nine years of age and defendant was 34 years of age, and also, that the assault was aggravated, shocking and outrageous, the accepted plea was for a misdemeanor under § 14-33 and not for an "infamous offense" punishable as a felony, and judgment that the defendant be confined to the State's prison for not less than eight nor more than 10 years, was a violation of this section. State v. Tyson, 223 N.C. 492, 27 S.E.2d 113 (1943).

Attempt to Commit Crime Against Nature. — While an attempt to commit a felony is a misdemeanor, when such misdemeanor is infamous, or done in secrecy and malice, or with deceit and intent to defraud, it is punishable by imprisonment in the State's prison, and is made a felony by this section, and an attempt to commit the crime against nature is infamous and is punishable by imprisonment in the State's prison as a felony within the definition of this section. State v. Spivey, 213 N.C. 45, 195 S.E. 1 (1938); State v. Mintz, 242 N.C. 761, 89 S.E.2d 463 (1955).

An attempt to commit the crime against nature is an infamous act within the meaning of this section and is punishable as a felony. State v. Harward, 264 N.C. 746, 142 S.E.2d 691 (1965).

Solicitation to commit a crime against nature cannot be construed as an attempt to commit a crime against nature; solicitation to commit a crime against nature is therefore not an "infamous misdemeanor" under this section; and the superior court therefore did not have original jurisdiction of such a charge. State v. Tyner, 50 N.C. App. 206, 272 S.E.2d 626 (1980), cert. denied, 302 N.C. 633, 280 S.E.2d 451 (1981); State v. Mann, 77 N.C. App. 654, 335 S.E.2d 772 (1985), modified on other grounds, 317 N.C. 164, 345 S.E.2d 365 (1986).

Driving While License Permanently Revoked. — A maximum term of 18 months and a minimum term of 12 months does not exceed the statutory maximum for the crime of driving while license permanently revoked. Since only the minimum punishment of not less than one year is specified in § 20-28(b), this statute must be read together with this section, applicable to motor vehicle misdemeanors contained in sections other than Article 3 of Chapter 20, to find the maximum term of imprisonment. State v. Wells, 59 N.C. App. 682, 298 S.E.2d 73 (1982), cert. denied, 308 N.C. 194, 302 S.E.2d 248 (1983).

Transmitting Unsigned Threatening Letter. — The misdemeanor of transmitting an unsigned threatening letter in violation of § 14-394 does not fall within any of the classes of misdemeanors made felonious by subsection (b) of this section. State v. Glidden, 317 N.C. 557, 346 S.E.2d 470 (1986).

Attempted Kidnapping. — To elevate the misdemeanor offense of attempted second degree kidnapping to a Class H felony under subsection (b), the indictment must specifically state that the offense was infamous, or done in secrecy and malice, or done with deceit and intent to defraud. State v. Bell, 121 N.C. App. 700, 468 S.E.2d 484 (1996).

§ 14-3.1. Infraction defined; sanctions.

(a) An infraction is a noncriminal violation of law not punishable by imprisonment. Unless otherwise provided by law, the sanction for a person found responsible for an infraction is a penalty of not more than one hundred dollars ($100.00). The proceeds of penalties for infractions are payable to the county in which the infraction occurred for the use of the public schools.

(b) The procedure for disposition of infractions is as provided in Article 66 of Chapter 15A of the General Statutes. (1985, c. 764, s. 1; 1985 (Reg. Sess., 1986), c. 852, s. 17.)

§ 14-4. Violation of local ordinances misdemeanor.

(a) Except as provided in subsection (b), if any person shall violate an ordinance of a county, city, town, or metropolitan sewerage district created under Article 5 of Chapter 162A, he shall be guilty of a Class 3 misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars ($500.00). No fine shall exceed fifty dollars ($50.00) unless the ordinance expressly states that the maximum fine is greater than fifty dollars ($50.00).

(b) If any person shall violate an ordinance of a county, city, or town regulating the operation or parking of vehicles, he shall be responsible for an infraction and shall be required to pay a penalty of not more than fifty dollars ($50.00). CASE NOTES

In General. — While the town or city government has no right to make criminal law, the legislature has made the violation of ordinances a criminal offense. Board of Educ. v. Town of Henderson, 126 N.C. 689, 36 S.E. 158 (1900); State v. Higgs, 126 N.C. 1014, 35 S.E. 473 (1900), overruled on other grounds, Small v. Councilmen of Edenton, 146 N.C. 527, 60 S.E. 413 (1908); State v. Barrett, 243 N.C. 686, 91 S.E.2d 917 (1956).

Section makes violation of a municipal ordinance a criminal offense. Walker v. City of Charlotte, 262 N.C. 697, 138 S.E.2d 501 (1964).

The violation of a valid municipal ordinance is a misdemeanor. Frosty Ice Cream, Inc. v. Hord, 263 N.C. 43, 138 S.E.2d 816 (1964).

The legislature in enacting this section made criminal what would otherwise be civil penalties for violations of ordinances. Cauble v. City of Asheville, 301 N.C. 340, 271 S.E.2d 258 (1980).

Prior to Section Violation Not Punishable. — Prior to the passage of this section there was no way provided for the enforcement of obedience to town ordinances; a violation of such ordinances was not a misdemeanor. State v. Parker, 75 N.C. 249 (1876); School Dirs. v. City of Asheville, 137 N.C. 503, 50 S.E. 279 (1905).

Jurisdiction. — The superior court has no original jurisdiction to try indictments for violation of town ordinances. State v. White, 76 N.C. 15 (1877); State v. Threadgill, 76 N.C. 17 (1877).

Costs of Prosecutions. — The criminal offenses created by the violation of town ordinances under this section are State prosecutions, in the name of the State, or for violation of the criminal law of the State, and at the expense of the State (State v. Higgs, 126 N.C. 1014, 35 S.E. 473 (1900)), overruled on other grounds, Small v. Councilmen of Edenton, 146 N.C. 527, 60 S.E. 413 (1908), and the city cannot be charged with the costs of such prosecutions. Board of Educ. v. Town of Henderson, 126 N.C. 689, 36 S.E. 158 (1900).

Ordinance Must Conform to State Law. — It is uniformly held that a town ordinance in violation of a valid State statute appertaining to the question is void. Shaw v. Kennedy, 4 N.C. 591 (1817); State v. Austin, 114 N.C. 855, 19 S.E. 919 (1894); State v. Beacham, 125 N.C. 652, 34 S.E. 447 (1899); State v. Prevo, 178 N.C. 740, 101 S.E. 370 (1919).

And Violation of an Invalid Ordinance Is No Offense. — The violation of a valid ordinance is, under the provision of this section, a misdemeanor, but it is not a criminal offense to disregard one enacted without authority. State v. Hunter, 106 N.C. 796, 11 S.E. 366 (1890), overruled on other grounds, State v. Mobley, 240 N.C. 476, 83 S.E.2d 100 (1954); State v. Webber, 107 N.C. 962, 12 S.E. 598 (1890).

Acting contrary to the provisions of a municipal ordinance is made a misdemeanor by this section. Notwithstanding the all-inclusive language of the statute, guilt must rest on the violation of a valid ordinance. If the ordinance is not valid, there can be no guilt. State v. McGraw, 249 N.C. 205, 105 S.E.2d 659 (1958).

Same — Burden on State. — Where the State failed to show that the original act of incorporation authorized the enactment of an ordinance, it failed to make out the case, for the legislature never intended to make the violation of a void ordinance an indictable misdemeanor. State v. Threadgill, 76 N.C. 17 (1877).

Upon the prosecution of a criminal action for the violation of a city ordinance under this section the State must show that the ordinance in question was a valid one, as well as the violation as charged in the warrant. State v. Hunter, 106 N.C. 796, 11 S.E. 366 (1890), overruled on other grounds, State v. Mobley, 240 N.C. 476, 83 S.E.2d 100 (1954); State v. Snipes, 161 N.C. 242, 76 S.E. 243 (1912); State v. Prevo, 178 N.C. 740, 101 S.E. 370 (1919).

Failure to Prescribe Penalty. — The violation of a valid town ordinance is made a misdemeanor by this section, and the defense that the ordinance did not prescribe a penalty therefor is untenable. State v. Razook, 179 N.C. 708, 103 S.E. 67 (1920).

Where Fine Is Provided It Must Be Certain. — An ordinance which imposes a fine is invalid if it is not certain as to the amount of the fine. State v. Irvin, 126 N.C. 989, 35 S.E. 430 (1900).

Provision for Arrest Void. — When a municipal ordinance imposed a penalty for its violation, and provided that the offender should be "arrested and fined $25.00 upon conviction thereof," it was held that so much of the ordinance as provided for the arrest was void, but the other provisions were valid. State v. Earhardt, 107 N.C. 789, 12 S.E. 426 (1890).

Conviction for Fighting Held No Bar to Prosecution for Assault. — A conviction of violating a city ordinance punishing the disturbance of the good order and quiet of the town by fighting was not a bar to a prosecution by the State for an assault. State v. Taylor, 133 N.C. 755, 46 S.E. 5 (1903).

Personal Notice to Offender Sufficient. — The requirement of the charter of a city or town that its ordinances shall be printed and published, was to bring such ordinances to the attention of the public, and where personal notice was given to an offender thereunder who afterwards committed the offense prohibited, the requirement of publication, etc., was not necessary for a conviction. State v. Razook, 179 N.C. 708, 103 S.E. 67 (1920).

Defects in Warrant May Be Waived. — Ordinarily defects in the form of a warrant for violating a city ordinance may be waived, and usually it is so considered when a plea of not guilty is entered by the defendants. State v. Prevo, 178 N.C. 740, 101 S.E. 370 (1919).

Form of Indictment. — It is not necessary, in indictments for violations of city ordinances, to set out the ordinance in the warrant. It is sufficient to refer to it by such indicia, as point it out with sufficient certainty. State v. Merritt, 83 N.C. 677 (1881); State v. Cainan, 94 N.C. 880 (1886).

In an indictment under an ordinance for loud and boisterous swearing, it is not necessary to set out the words used by the defendant. State v. Cainan, 94 N.C. 880 (1886).

Fines Used to Maintain Public Schools. — All the fines collected upon prosecutions for violations of the criminal laws of the State, whether for violations of ordinances made criminal by this section, or by other criminal statutes belong to the common school fund of the county; they are thus appropriated by the North Carolina Constitution, and cannot be diverted or withheld from this fund without violating the State Constitution. Cauble v. City of Asheville, 301 N.C. 340, 271 S.E.2d 258 (1980).

Same — Parking Violations. — Moneys voluntarily paid by motorists to a city upon citations for violations of a city overtime parking ordinance constitute a penalty or fine collected for breach of a State penal law and should be used exclusively for maintaining free public schools in the county pursuant to N.C. Const., Art. IX, § 7, since violation of a city ordinance is also a violation of this section, which makes the violation of a local ordinance a misdemeanor. Cauble v. City of Asheville, 301 N.C. 340, 271 S.E.2d 258 (1980).

Applied in State v. Walker, 265 N.C. 482, 144 S.E.2d 419 (1965); Brown v. Brannon, 399 F. Supp. 133 (M.D.N.C. 1975).

Article 2.

Principals and Accessories.

§§ 14-5, 14-5.1: Repealed by Session Laws 1981, c. 686, s. 2.

Cross References. — For present provisions as to punishment of accessories before the fact, see § 14-5.2.

§ 14-5.2. Accessory before fact punishable as principal felon.

All distinctions between accessories before the fact and principals to the commission of a felony are abolished. Every person who heretofore would have been guilty as an accessory before the fact to any felony shall be guilty and punishable as a principal to that felony. However, if a person who heretofore would have been guilty and punishable as an accessory before the fact is convicted of a capital felony, and the jury finds that his conviction was based solely on the uncorroborated testimony of one or more principals, coconspirators, or accessories to the crime, he shall be guilty of a Class B2 felony. (1981, c. 686, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, s. 6.)

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Editor's Note. — Most of the cases below were decided under former § 14-5 and prior statutory provisions.

Legislative Intent. — The North Carolina legislature abolished all distinctions between accessories before the fact and principals in the commission of felonies by enacting this section. State v. Bond, 345 N.C. 1, 478 S.E.2d 163 (1996), reh'g denied, 345 N.C. 355, 479 S.E.2d 210, cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1124, 117 S. Ct. 2521, 138 L. Ed. 2d 1022 (1997).

Underlying Principle. — It is a well-established principle that where two agree to do an unlawful act, each is responsible for the act of the other, provided it be done in pursuance of the original understanding, or in furtherance of the common purpose. State v. Simmons, 51 N.C. 21 (1858).

What Constitutes One a Party to an Offense. — A person is a party to an offense if he either actually commits the offense or does some act which forms a part thereof, or if he assists in the actual commission of the offense or of any act which forms part thereof, or directly or indirectly counsels or procures any person to commit the offense or to do any act forming a part thereof. To constitute one a party to an offense it has been held to be essential that he be concerned in its commission in some affirmative manner, as by actual commission of the crime or by aiding and abetting in its commission and it has been regarded as a general proposition that no one can be properly convicted of a crime to the commission of which he has never expressly or impliedly given his assent. State v. Spears, 268 N.C. 303, 150 S.E.2d 499 (1966).

History of Offense at Common Law. — Accessory before the fact was a common-law offense. State v. Sauls, 29 N.C. App. 457, 224 S.E.2d 702, rev'd on other grounds, 291 N.C. 253, 230 S.E.2d 390 (1976), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 916, 97 S. Ct. 2178, 53 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1977).

At common law an accessory before the fact could only be convicted when tried at the same time with the principal, and after conviction of the principal, or after the principal had been tried, convicted and sentenced. State v. Duncan, 28 N.C. 98 (1845); State v. Jones, 101 N.C. 719, 8 S.E. 147 (1888).

At common law an accessory before the fact could only be convicted when tried at the same time as the principal, or after trial and conviction of the principal. State v. Jones, 101 N.C. 719, 8 S.E. 147 (1888).

In enacting § 14-5, North Carolina recognized accessory before the fact as a substantive felony, making it no longer necessary to first convict the principal in order to convict an accessory. State v. Partlow, 272 N.C. 60, 157 S.E.2d 688 (1967); State v. Philyaw, 291 N.C. 312, 230 S.E.2d 370 (1976), decided under provisions of former § 14-5.

But the rule that an accessory could not be tried and convicted before the principal had no application as between two principals in first and second degrees. State v. Jarrell, 140 N.C. 391, 53 S.E. 137 (1906).

At common law, one who encouraged or aided another in committing a crime, but who was not himself present at the commission of the crime, was classified as an accessory before the fact, a separate offense. State v. Walden, 75 N.C. App. 79, 330 S.E.2d 271 (1985).

An Accessory Is Guilty of Natural or Probable Consequences. — An accessory is guilty of any other crimes committed by the principal which are the natural or probable consequence of the common purpose. State v. Ruffin, 90 N.C. App. 705, 370 S.E.2d 275 (1988).

Accessories before the fact, who do not actually commit the crime, and may not have been present, can be convicted of first-degree murder under a theory of aiding and abetting. State v. Bond, 345 N.C. 1, 478 S.E.2d 163 (1996), reh'g denied, 345 N.C. 355, 479 S.E.2d 210, cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1124, 117 S. Ct. 2521, 138 L. Ed. 2d 1022 (1997).

Cases Under Former §§ 14-5, 14-5.1, and 14-6 Still Applicable. — The language of this section indicates that the essential elements of the offense have not changed. The legislature merely abolished the difference in guilt and sentencing treatment between the principal to the felony and an accessory in repealing §§ 14-5, 14-5.1 and 14-6 and replacing them with this section. Therefore, cases decided under the repealed statutes delineating the essential elements of accessory before the fact of felony are applicable to cases brought under the new statute. State v. Woods, 307 N.C. 213, 297 S.E.2d 574 (1982).

Cases decided before the enactment of this section delineating the essential elements of accessory before the fact of felony are applicable to cases brought under this section. State v. Walden, 75 N.C. App. 79, 330 S.E.2d 271 (1985).

Establishing Theory of Acting in Concert. — Under the circumstances of this case, where victim was murdered in her own home, evidence of an unidentified latent fingerprint in addition to those of defendant supported the jury instruction concerning the theory of acting in concert. State v. Smart, 99 N.C. App. 730, 394 S.E.2d 475 (1990), discretionary review denied, 328 N.C. 576, 403 S.E.2d 520 (1991).

Acquittal of the named principal on charges of first-degree murder required, as a matter of law, that defendant's plea of guilty to accessory before the fact to second-degree murder be set aside; this rule prevailed whether the defendant, prior to the acquittal of the principal, has been tried and found guilty of a felony on the theory that he was an accessory before the fact, or has pled guilty to being an accessory before the fact to the felony. State v. Suites, 109 N.C. App. 373, 427 S.E.2d 318 (1993).

Fair Sentencing Act. — Although the principal provisions of the Fair Sentencing Act are codified in Chapter 15A, Article 81A, the act resulted in revisions to other portions of the General Statutes. See e.g., Chapter 14, Articles 1, 2, 2A, 33; Chapter 15A, Articles 58, 81A, 82, 83, 85, 85A, 89, 91; Chapter 148, Article 2, and Chapter 162, Article 4. State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

For discussion of the historical background, policies, purposes, and implementation of the new Fair Sentencing Act, see State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

Applied in State v. Maynard, 65 N.C. App. 612, 309 S.E.2d 581 (1983); State v. Fletcher, 66 N.C. App. 36, 310 S.E.2d 787 (1984).

II. ELEMENTS OF THE OFFENSE.

Who Is Accessory Before the Fact. — An accessory before the fact is one who was absent from the scene when the crime was committed but who procured, counseled, commanded or encouraged the principal to commit it. State v. Benton, 276 N.C. 641, 174 S.E.2d 793 (1970); State v. Wiggins, 16 N.C. App. 527, 192 S.E.2d 680 (1972); State v. Squire, 292 N.C. 494, 234 S.E.2d 563, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 998, 98 S. Ct. 638, 54 L. Ed. 2d 493 (1977).

An accessory before the fact is one who furnishes the means to carry on the crime, whose acts bring about the crime through the agency of or in connection with the perpetrators, who is a confederate, who instigates a crime. State v. Sauls, 29 N.C. App. 457, 224 S.E.2d 702, rev'd on other grounds, 291 N.C. 253, 230 S.E.2d 390 (1976), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 916, 97 S. Ct. 2178, 53 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1977).

For a defendant, not actually or constructively present at the scene, to be criminally responsible for the acts of others as an accessory before the fact, it must be shown that he counseled, or procured, or commanded the others to perpetrate the crime. State v. Sauls, 29 N.C. App. 457, 224 S.E.2d 702, rev'd on other grounds, 291 N.C. 253, 230 S.E.2d 390 (1976), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 916, 97 S. Ct. 2178, 53 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1977).

To render one guilty as an accessory before the fact, he must have had the requisite criminal intent; and it has been said that he must have the same intent as the principal. It is well settled, however, that he need not necessarily have intended the particular crime committed by the principal; an accessory is liable for any criminal act which in the ordinary course of things was the natural or probable consequence of the crime that he advised or commanded. State v. Hewitt, 33 N.C. App. 168, 234 S.E.2d 468 (1977).

An accessory before the fact is one who procures, counsels, commands or encourages the principal to commit a crime. State v. Furr, 292 N.C. 711, 235 S.E.2d 193, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 924, 98 S. Ct. 402, 54 L. Ed. 2d 281 (1977).

In this State, one who procures another to commit murder is an accessory before the fact to murder. State v. Furr, 292 N.C. 711, 235 S.E.2d 193, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 924, 98 S. Ct. 402, 54 L. Ed. 2d 281 (1977).

Under this section a defendant not actually or constructively present at the scene is guilty and punishable as a principal if it be shown that he counseled or procured or commanded the others to perpetrate the crime. State v. Bradley, 67 N.C. App. 81, 312 S.E.2d 519 (1984).

To convict a defendant on the theory of being an accessory before the fact, the State must also show that the principal committed the crime. State v. Ruffin, 90 N.C. App. 705, 370 S.E.2d 275 (1988).

To convict a defendant on the theory of being an accessory before the fact, the State must also show that the principal committed the crime. State v. Ruffin, 90 N.C. App. 705, 370 S.E.2d 275 (1988).

An accessory before the fact is one who is absent from the scene when the crime was committed but who procured, counselled, commanded or encouraged the principal to commit it. State v. Ruffin, 90 N.C. App. 705, 370 S.E.2d 275 (1988).

In order to convict defendant for murder in the first degree as an accessory before the fact, the State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that (1) the principal committed murder in the first degree; (2) defendant was not present when the murder occurred; and (3) defendant procured, counseled or commanded murderer to commit the crime. State v. Arnold, 329 N.C. 128, 404 S.E.2d 822 (1991).

The essential elements of accessory before the fact to murder are (i) the defendant must have counseled, procured, commanded, encouraged, or aided the principal in the commission of the murder; (ii) the principal must have committed the murder; and (iii) the defendant must not have been present when the murder was committed. State v. Westbrooks, 345 N.C. 43, 478 S.E.2d 483 (1996).

Solicitation to commit murder is a lesser included offense of murder as an accessory before the fact. State v. Westbrooks, 345 N.C. 43, 478 S.E.2d 483 (1996).

The concept of accessory before the fact has been held to presuppose some arrangement with respect to the commission of the crime in question. State v. Chavis, 24 N.C. App. 148, 210 S.E.2d 555 (1974), appeal dismissed, 287 N.C. 261, 214 S.E.2d 434 (1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1080, 96 S. Ct. 868, 47 L. Ed. 2d 91 (1976).

There May Be Accessories Before the Fact to Murder in Both Degrees. — Since malice, express or implied, is a constituent element of murder in any degree, there may be accessories before the fact to the crime of murder in both degrees. State v. Benton, 276 N.C. 641, 174 S.E.2d 793 (1970).

Admittedly the concept of accessory before the fact presupposes some arrangement between the accessory and the principal with respect to the commission of the crime. It does not follow, however, that there can be no accessory before the fact to second-degree murder, which imports a specific intent to do an unlawful act. State v. Benton, 276 N.C. 641, 174 S.E.2d 793 (1970).

There may, of course, be accessories before the fact in all kinds of murder with deliberation, or premeditation, or malice aforethought, including murder in the second degree, which involves malice. State v. Benton, 276 N.C. 641, 174 S.E.2d 793 (1970).

Intent May Be Inferred. — The intent to aid or the showing of a felonious purpose may be inferred from the defendant's actions and his relation to the perpetrators. There need be no express words communicating the intent to aid or indicating that defendant shared a felonious purpose. State v. Pryor, 59 N.C. App. 1, 295 S.E.2d 610 (1982).

Elements of crime of being accessory after the fact are separate and distinct from those involved in crimes of being principal or accessory before the fact. State v. Cabey, 307 N.C. 496, 299 S.E.2d 194 (1983).

Conspiracy and accessory before the fact are separate crimes which do not merge, because accessory before the fact requires actual commission of the contemplated felony, while conspiracy does not, and conspiracy requires an agreement while an accessory need not agree to anything. State v. Fie, 80 N.C. App. 577, 343 S.E.2d 248 (1986), rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 626, 359 S.E.2d 774 (1987).

Actual or constructive presence is no longer required to prove a crime under an aiding and abetting theory. State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997), cert.

denied, 522 U.S. 900, 118 S. Ct. 248, 139 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1997).

What Must Be Proven. — The elements necessary to be proved in order to sustain a conviction for accessory before the fact were: (1) that defendant counseled, procured or commanded the principal to commit the offense; (2) that defendant was not present when the principal committed the offense; and (3) that the principal committed the offense. State v. Hunter, 290 N.C. 556, 227 S.E.2d 535 (1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1093, 97 S. Ct. 1106, 51 L. Ed. 2d 539 (1977); State v. Philyaw, 291 N.C. 312, 230 S.E.2d 370 (1976); State v. Sauls, 291 N.C. 253, 230 S.E.2d 390 (1976), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 916, 97 S. Ct. 2178, 53 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1977); State v. Saults, 294 N.C. 722, 242 S.E.2d 801 (1978); State v. Woods, 307 N.C. 213, 297 S.E.2d 574 (1982).

There were several things that must have concurred in order to justify the conviction of one as an accessory before the fact: (1) That he advised and agreed, or urged the parties or in some way aided them to commit the offense. (2) That he was not present when the offense was committed. (3) That the principal committed the crime. State v. Bass, 255 N.C. 42, 120 S.E.2d 580 (1961); State v. Benton, 275 N.C. 378, 167 S.E.2d 775 (1969); State v. Chavis, 24 N.C. App. 148, 210 S.E.2d 555 (1974), appeal dismissed, 287 N.C. 261, 214 S.E.2d 434 (1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1080, 96 S. Ct. 868, 47 L. Ed. 2d 91 (1976); State v. Branch, 288 N.C. 514, 220 S.E.2d 495 (1975), cert. denied, 433 U.S. 907, 97 S. Ct. 2971, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1091 (1977).

Causation of a crime by an alleged accessory is not "inherent" in the accessory's counsel, procurement, command or aid of the principal perpetrator. State v. Davis, 319 N.C. 620, 356 S.E.2d 340 (1987), disavowing statement to the contrary in State v. Hunter, 290 N.C. 556, 227 S.E.2d 535 (1976).

The elements of accessory before the fact to murder are as follows: (1) Defendant must have counseled, procured, commanded, encouraged, or aided the principal to murder the victim; (2) the principal must have murdered the victim; and (3) defendant must not have been present when the murder was committed. State v. Davis, 319 N.C. 620, 356 S.E.2d 340 (1987).

What Constitutes Counseling, Procuring and Commanding. — At a meeting of a board of commissioners of a town, at which the mayor presided, a report of the cemetery committee was adopted recommending that unless parties, who had taken lots in the town cemetery and had not paid for them, should pay the amount due within 60 days on notice, the bodies buried in such lots should be removed to the free part of such cemetery. In reply to a question of one of the commissioners as to the legal right to remove the bodies, the mayor said: "The way is open, go ahead and remove them." It was held, therefore, that the mayor was individually guilty of counseling, procuring and commanding an act within the meaning of former § 14-5, making accessory before the fact a substantive crime. State v. McLean, 121 N.C. 589, 28 S.E. 140 (1897).

The term "counsel" as used in former § 14-5 describes the offense of a person who, not actually doing the felonious act, by his will contributed to it or procured it to be done. State v. Hewitt, 33 N.C. App. 168, 234 S.E.2d 468 (1977).

The meaning of the word "command," as applied to the case of principal and accessory is, where a person, having control over another, as a master over his servant, orders a thing to be done. State v. Mann, 2 N.C. 4 (1891).

What Must Be Proven — Murder. — In cases where a defendant is prosecuted as an accessory before the fact to murder, the State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the actions or statements of the defendant somehow caused or contributed to the actions of the principal, which in turn caused the victim's death. State v. Davis, 319 N.C. 620, 356 S.E.2d 340 (1987).

The elements of accessory before the fact to murder are as follows: (1) Defendant must have counseled, procured, commanded, encouraged, or aided the principal to murder the victim; (2) the principal must have murdered the victim; and (3) defendant must not have been present when the murder was committed. State v. Davis, 319 N.C. 620, 356 S.E.2d 340 (1987).

When Defendant Is "Present". — In order to determine whether a defendant is present, the court must determine whether "he is near enough to render assistance if need be and to encourage the actual perpetration of the felony." State v. Glaze, 37 N.C. App. 155, 245 S.E.2d 575 (1978).

Constructive Presence. — The actual distance of a person from the place where a crime is perpetrated is not always material in determining whether the person is constructively present. A person is deemed to be constructively present if he is near enough to render assistance if need be and to encourage the actual perpetration of the felony. State v. Wiggins, 16 N.C. App. 527, 192 S.E.2d 680 (1972).

Evidence tending to show that defendant drove the automobile that carried men to a store, that to the knowledge of defendant the men entered the store, armed, that defendant stayed with the car, that later they were together when police stopped them and that defendant told police where they could find the stolen money, was sufficient to support an inference that defendant was constructively present at the time of the robbery. State v. Torain, 20 N.C. App. 69, 200 S.E.2d 665 (1973), cert. denied, 284 N.C. 622, 202 S.E.2d 278 (1974).

The actual distance of a person from the place where a crime is perpetrated is not always material in determining whether the person is constructively present. A guard who has been posted to give warning or the driver of a "get-away" car may be constructively present at the scene of a crime although stationed a convenient distance away. State v. Pryor, 59 N.C. App. 1, 295 S.E.2d 610 (1982).

Remaining in Vicinity of Offense. — A person may be guilty as an aider and abettor if that person accompanies the actual perpetrator to the vicinity of the offense and, with the knowledge of the actual perpetrator, remains in that vicinity for the purpose of aiding and abetting in the offense and sufficiently close to the scene of the offense to render aid in its commission, if needed, or to provide a means by which the actual perpetrator may get away from the scene upon the completion of the offense. State v. Pryor, 59 N.C. App. 1, 295 S.E.2d 610 (1982).

Larceny conviction was valid where the evidence showed that defendant procured the commission of the larceny, because the distinction that formerly existed between principals and accessories before the fact has been abolished. State v. Cartwright, 81 N.C. App. 144, 343 S.E.2d 557 (1986).

Where the idea of stealing from victim came from defendant who told the principals that he wanted tools, that victim's shop and mobile home were always left unlocked and that the keys were in victim's car and truck, there was sufficient evidence to find the defendant guilty of accessory before the fact to first-degree burglary, accessory to the fact to felonious entering, and accessory before the fact to felonious larceny. State v. Marr, 342 N.C. 607, 467 S.E.2d 236 (1996).

Evidence of Procuring and Participating Sufficient to Deny Motion to Dismiss. — Where defendant took the principals to a dwelling at night, armed them and told them to "rough up" the inhabitants, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss or to set aside his conviction of first-degree burglary on grounds that he neither procured nor participated in breaking and entering. State v. Ruffin, 90 N.C. App. 705, 370 S.E.2d 275 (1988).

Trafficking. — Defendants may be convicted of the substantive offense of trafficking in cocaine if they were accessories before the fact. State v. Agudelo, 89 N.C. App. 640, 366 S.E.2d 921 (1988), overruled on other grounds, State v. Barnes, 324 N.C. 539, 380 S.E.2d 118 (1989).

III. PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

A. In General.

Jurisdiction Where Accessorial Acts Occur Outside State. — This State may constitutionally assert jurisdiction over a defendant who commits the crime of accessory before the fact to a felony committed within the State when the counselling, procuring or commanding took place without the State. State v. Darroch, 305 N.C. 196, 287 S.E.2d 856, cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1138, 102 S. Ct. 2969, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1356 (1982).

Prior Conviction of Principals Unnecessary. — Under the provisions of former § 14-5 it was not required that the principals be first convicted of the charge of murder to convict the accessories thereto, either before or after the fact, upon sufficient evidence. State v. Jones, 101 N.C. 719, 8 S.E. 147 (1888); State v. Walton, 186 N.C. 485, 119 S.E. 886 (1923).

It is not necessary to first convict principals in order to convict an accessory to a crime. State v. Partlow, 272 N.C. 60, 157 S.E.2d 688 (1967).

But Guilt of Principal Must Be Established Beyond Reasonable Doubt. — In order to warrant the conviction of an accessory, the guilt of the principal must be established to the same degree of certainty as if he himself were on trial, that is, beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Benton, 275 N.C. 378, 167 S.E.2d 775 (1969).

No Conviction of Accessory Where Principal Is Acquitted. — Former § 14-5 did not change the common-law rule that an acquittal of the principal was an acquittal of the accessory. State v. Jones, 101 N.C. 719, 8 S.E. 147 (1888).

Because indictment charging defendant with assaulting victim specifically named as principal the person whom the defendant aided and abetted, and the principal was acquitted of assaulting the victim at a subsequent separate trial, because the named principal was acquitted, defendant's conviction for aiding and abetting that assault had to be vacated. State v. Byrd, 122 N.C. App. 497, 470 S.E.2d 548 (1996).

Effect of Acquittal of One of Several Principals. — Where there are three charged as principals with murder, the acquittal of one of them, the others having fled the jurisdiction of the court, does not of itself acquit the prisoners on trial as accessories before or after the fact, when the evidence of their guilt of the offense charged is sufficient both as to them as accessories and the principals directly charged with the murder. State v. Walton, 186 N.C. 485, 119 S.E. 886 (1923).

Failure to Raise Acquittal of Principal on Appeal. — Where indictment charging defendant with robbery was amended at the close of evidence to allege that defendant acted as an aider and abettor, principal was acquitted of robbery at subsequent separate trial, but defendant did not argue on appeal that his conviction for robbery should be reversed on the basis that principal was acquitted of robbery, the appellate court would not address the issue and defendant's conviction for aiding and abetting robbery was not reversed. State v. Byrd, 122 N.C. App. 497, 470 S.E.2d 548 (1996).

New Trial Where Conviction of Principal Is Vacated. — Where the conviction of the principal has been vacated by an order for a new trial, a new trial as to the alleged abettor defendant must also be ordered. State v. Spencer, 18 N.C. App. 499, 197 S.E.2d 232 (1973).

Sentences Imposed Need Not Be Equal. — There is no rule of law that sentences imposed upon defendants for a crime jointly committed by them must be equal. State v. Barrow, 292 N.C. 227, 232 S.E.2d 693 (1977).

Sentences for Capital Felonies. — Although it was error for the trial court to fail to submit the special question to the jury regarding the basis of its verdict on the capital murder charge, since under the law in effect prior to October 1, 1994, both a Class A felony and a Class B felony required mandatory life sentences, the defendant was not prejudiced by the trial court's error. State v. Larrimore, 340 N.C. 119, 456 S.E.2d 789 (1995).

B. Indictment.

What Indictment Must Aver. — It is not necessary to allege maliciousness in the indictment. State v. Saults, 294 N.C. 722, 242 S.E.2d 801 (1978).

Allegation of Underlying Felony. — In order to state a violation of former § 14-5, the indictment had to allege an underlying felony. State v. Hanson, 57 N.C. App. 595, 291 S.E.2d 912 (1982).

Indictment Charging Principal Felony Is Sufficient. — In cases controlled by this section, an indictment charging the principal felony will support trial and conviction as an accessory before the fact. State v. Gallagher, 313 N.C. 132, 326 S.E.2d 873 (1985).

C. Evidence.

The record of the conviction of a principal felon is admissible on the trial of the accessory, and is conclusive evidence of the conviction of the principal, and prima facie evidence of his guilt. State v. Chittem, 13 N.C. 49 (1828).

But not until judgment has been rendered on the verdict. State v. Duncan, 28 N.C. 98 (1845).

Sufficiency of Evidence. — Testimony that the accused had asked the person convicted of the murder of her husband to kill him, and that he accomplished the act the morning afterwards at the place she designated, was sufficient for a conviction of murder as an accessory before the fact. State v. Jones, 176 N.C. 702, 97 S.E. 32 (1918).

D. Instructions.

Instruction on Elements of Offense. — The State offered substantial evidence of each and every element of, and the judge properly instructed the jury on, accessory before the fact of felony, i.e., that: (1) the defendant counseled, procured or commanded the principal(s) to commit the offense; (2) the defendant was not present when the principal(s) committed the offense; and (3) the principals committed the offense. State v. Walden, 75 N.C. App. 79, 330 S.E.2d 271 (1985).

Instruction on Conspiracy. — Evidence sufficient to show defendant's involvement in a criminal conspiracy does not itself establish defendant's liability as a party to the substantive felony committed as a result of the conspiracy; it is reversible error for the court to so instruct the jury. State v. Small, 301 N.C. 407, 272 S.E.2d 128 (1980).

Instructions on Heinous, Atrocious or Cruel Aggravating Circumstance Applied to Accessory. — Court rejected defendant's contention that the submission of the especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel aggravating circumstance violated his rights under the North Carolina and United States Constitutions because it impermissibly allowed the jury to find the existence of an aggravating circumstance based solely upon his codefendants' actions; although defendant was not present when his grandmother who adopted him and his nephew were stabbed and burned to death, defendant admitted to planning the murders and enlisting his codefendants to perform them. State v. Brewington, 352 N.C. 489, 532 S.E.2d 496 (2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1165, 121 S. Ct. 1126, 148 L. Ed. 2d 992 (2001).

Instruction on Second Degree Murder Held Error. — Where the state sought to prove murder by use of the "accessory before the fact" theory, the trial court erred in submitting second degree murder as a possible jury verdict since on the evidence presented the jury rationally could have only either convicted or acquitted her of first degree murder. State v. Arnold, 98 N.C. App. 518, 392 S.E.2d 140 (1990), aff'd, 329 N.C. 128, 404 S.E.2d 822 (1991).

Where trial court's instructions made no mention of the necessary causal connection between defendant's alleged statements and principal's actions, simply stating that defendant should be found guilty if the jury found that principal murdered victim and that defendant "knowingly instigated, counseled or procured" the murder, the jury was not adequately instructed with respect to the chain of causation necessary to a conviction of accessory before the fact to murder. State v. Davis, 319 N.C. 620, 356 S.E.2d 340 (1987).

No Error in Declining to Submit Accessory Before the Fact as Lesser Included

Offense. — Defendant was at least constructively present when the killing occurred; therefore, it was not error to decline to submit to the jury as a possible verdict accessory before the fact of murder as a lesser included offense. State v. Willis, 332 N.C. 151, 420 S.E.2d 158 (1992).

The defendant was not entitled to an instruction on accessory before the fact, since he was constructively present at the crime scene, where he dropped the perpetrator off at the scene of the robbery-murder knowing that a crime of some type was to take place, and he stayed to help the perpetrator flee the scene. State v. White, 131 N.C. App. 734, 509 S.E.2d 462 (1998).

§ 14-6: Repealed by Session Laws 1981, c. 686, s. 2.

§ 14-7. Accessories after the fact; trial and punishment.

If any person shall become an accessory after the fact to any felony, whether the same be a felony at common law or by virtue of any statute made, or to be made, such person shall be guilty of a crime, and may be indicted and convicted together with the principal felon, or after the conviction of the principal felon, or may be indicted and convicted for such crime whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice. Unless a different classification is expressly stated, that person shall be punished for an offense that is two classes lower than the felony the principal felon committed, except that an accessory after the fact to a Class A or Class B1 felony is a Class C felony, an accessory after the fact to a Class B2 felony is a Class D felony, an accessory after the fact to a Class H felony is a Class 1 misdemeanor, and an accessory after the fact to a Class I felony is a Class 2 misdemeanor. The offense of such person may be inquired of, tried, determined and punished by any court which shall have jurisdiction of the principal felon, in the same manner as if the act, by reason whereof such person shall have become an accessory, had been committed at the same place as the principal felony, although such act may have been committed without the limits of the State; and in case the principal felony shall have been committed within the body of any county, and the act by reason whereof any person shall have become accessory shall have been committed within the body of any other county, the offense of such person guilty of a felony as aforesaid may be inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in either of said counties: Provided, that no person who shall be once duly tried for such felony shall be again indicted or tried for the same offense. CASE NOTES

In General. — An accessory after the fact is one who, after a felony has been committed, with knowledge that the felony has been committed, renders personal assistance to the felon in any manner to aid him to escape arrest or punishment knowing, at the time, the person so aided has committed a felony. State v. Potter, 221 N.C. 153, 19 S.E.2d 257 (1942); State v. Williams, 17 N.C. App. 39, 193 S.E.2d 452 (1972), cert. denied, 282 N.C. 675, 194 S.E.2d 155 (1973).

An accessory after the fact under this section is one who, knowing that a felony has been committed by another, receives, relieves, comforts or assists such other, the felon, or in any manner aids him to escape arrest or punishment. State v. Squire, 292 N.C. 494, 234 S.E.2d 563, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 998, 98 S. Ct. 638, 54 L. Ed. 2d 493 (1977).

"Accessory After the Fact" Is a Substantive Crime. — Accessory after the fact is a substantive crime. State v. McIntosh, 260 N.C. 749, 133 S.E.2d 652 (1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 939, 84 S. Ct. 1345, 12 L. Ed. 2d 302 (1964).

Armed robbery under § 14-87 differs in fact and in law from accessory after the fact under this section. State v. McIntosh, 260 N.C. 749, 133 S.E.2d 652 (1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 939, 84 S. Ct. 1345, 12 L. Ed. 2d 302 (1964).

The offense of being an accessory after the fact to manslaughter is a substantive felony offense. State v. Martin, 30 N.C. App. 166, 226 S.E.2d 682 (1976).

And Not a Lesser Degree of the Principal Crime. — See State v. McIntosh, 260 N.C. 749, 133 S.E.2d 652 (1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 939, 84 S. Ct. 1345, 12 L. Ed. 2d 302 (1964).

Hence, Participant in Felony Cannot Be Accessory. — A participant in a felony may no more be an accessory after the fact than one who commits larceny may be guilty of receiving the goods which he himself had stolen. State v. McIntosh, 260 N.C. 749, 133 S.E.2d 652 (1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 939, 84 S. Ct. 1345, 12 L. Ed. 2d 302 (1964).

Nor Can Acquittal as Accessory Bar Prosecution for Principal Crime. — An acquittal of a charge of accessory after the fact of armed robbery will not support a plea of former jeopardy in a subsequent prosecution of the same defendant for armed robbery. State v. McIntosh, 260 N.C. 749, 133 S.E.2d 652 (1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 939, 84 S. Ct. 1345, 12 L. Ed. 2d 302 (1964).

Effect of Principal's Acquittal on an Accessory After the Fact. — This section does not permit the conviction of an accessory after the fact to a felony committed by a named principal if that named principal is acquitted. State v. Robey, 91 N.C. App. 198, 371 S.E.2d 711, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 479, 373 S.E.2d 874 (1988).

Accessory Before and After the Fact Distinguished. — The elements of the crime of being an accessory after the fact are separate and distinct from those involved in the crimes of being a principal or an accessory before the fact. State v. Cabey, 307 N.C. 496, 299 S.E.2d 194 (1983).

Elements of Offense. — In order to convict a defendant of being an accessory after the fact under this section, the State must prove the following: (1) the felony has been committed by the principal; (2) the alleged accessory gave personal assistance to that principal to aid in his escaping detection, arrest, or punishment; and (3) the alleged accessory knew the principal committed the felony. State v. Duvall, 50 N.C. App. 684, 275 S.E.2d 842, rev'd on other grounds, 304 N.C. 557, 284 S.E.2d 495 (1981).

Under this section, the State had to prove three things in its prosecution of defendant as an accessory after the fact: (1) the principal committed a felony; (2) the alleged accomplice personally aided the principal in his attempts to avoid criminal liability by any means calculated to assist him in doing so; and (3) the accomplice gave such help with knowledge that the principal had committed a felony. State v. Fearing, 304 N.C. 499, 284 S.E.2d 479 (1981).

In order to prove a person was an accessory after the fact three essential elements must be shown: (1) a felony was committed; (2) the accused knew that the person he received, relieved or assisted was the person who committed the felony; and (3) the accused rendered assistance to the felon personally. State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982).

In a prosecution for accessory after the fact under this section, the State need only show that the defendant knew: (1) That a felony had been committed; (2) that the principal had committed it; and (3) that the defendant rendered assistance to the principal personally. State v. Upright, 72 N.C. App. 94, 323 S.E.2d 479 (1984), cert. denied, 313 N.C. 513, 329 S.E.2d 400; 313 N.C. 610, 332 S.E.2d 82 (1985).

Same — Robbery. — On a charge of accessory after the fact to robbery the State must show: (1) robbery, (2) the accused knew of it and (3) possessing that knowledge, he assisted the robber in escaping detection, arrest and punishment. State v. McIntosh, 260 N.C. 749, 133 S.E.2d 652 (1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 939, 84 S. Ct. 1345, 12 L. Ed. 2d 302 (1964); State v. Cox, 37 N.C. App. 356, 246 S.E.2d 152, appeal dismissed, 295 N.C. 649, 248 S.E.2d 253 (1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 930, 99 S. Ct. 1268, 59 L. Ed. 2d 487 (1979).

Same — Rape. — To convict parents of the accused as accessories to the crime of rape, the State had the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt these essentials of the offense charged, namely: (1) That the son had actually committed the alleged crime of rape; (2) that the parents knew that the son had committed the alleged crime of rape; and (3) that the parents assisted the son in his efforts to avoid detection, arrest and punishment. State v. Overman, 284 N.C. 335, 200 S.E.2d 604 (1973).

Same — Manslaughter. — To constitute a person an accessory after the fact to manslaughter, these essentials must appear: (1) manslaugher must have been committed; (2) the accused must know that manslaughter has been committed by the person received, relieved or assisted; (3) the accessory must render assistance to the felon personally. State v. Martin, 30 N.C. App. 166, 226 S.E.2d 682 (1976).

One cannot become an accessory after the fact until the offense has become an accomplished fact. — Thus, a person cannot be convicted as an accessory after the fact to a murder because he aided the murderer to escape, when the aid was rendered after the mortal wound was given but before death ensued, as a murder is not complete until the death results. State v. Williams, 229 N.C. 348, 49 S.E.2d 617 (1948).

The crime of accessory after the fact has its beginning after the principal offense has been committed. State v. McIntosh, 260 N.C. 749, 133 S.E.2d 652 (1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 939, 84 S. Ct. 1345, 12 L. Ed. 2d 302 (1964).

Joinable Offenses. — Being an accessory after the fact and aiding and abetting are joinable offenses. State v. Jewell, 104 N.C. App. 350, 409 S.E.2d 757 (1991), aff'd, 331 N.C. 379, 416 S.E.2d 3 (1992).

The offenses of accessory after the fact of a felony and being an aider and abettor to that felony are joinable offenses for purposes of indictment and trial, even though a defendant cannot be convicted of both. State v. Jewell, 104 N.C. App. 350, 409 S.E.2d 757 (1991), aff'd, 331 N.C. 379, 416 S.E.2d 3 (1992).

Aiding and Abetting as Aggravating Factor. — When a defendant pleads guilty to being an accessory after the fact of a crime, should the trial court find by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant aided and abetted in the commission of that crime, it may use this factor in aggravation of defendant's sentence on the accessory charge. State v. Jewell, 104 N.C. App. 350, 409 S.E.2d 757 (1991), aff'd, 331 N.C. 379, 416 S.E.2d 3 (1992).

It is not necessary that the aid given by the accessory after the fact be effective to enable the felon to escape all or a part of his punishment. State v. Martin, 30 N.C. App. 166, 226 S.E.2d 682 (1976).

Effect of Directed Verdict to Principal Offense. — Since the crime of accessory after the fact has its beginning after the principal offense has been committed, a directed verdict of not guilty of armed robbery does not decide the issue of whether the defendant joined the criminal scheme after the robbery was complete. State v. Cox, 37 N.C. App. 356, 246 S.E.2d 152, appeal dismissed, 295 N.C. 649, 248 S.E.2d 253 (1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 930, 99 S. Ct. 1268, 59 L. Ed. 2d 487 (1979).

A directed verdict of not guilty of armed robbery only removes the issues of whether defendant participated as a principal robber or whether he aided and abetted in the commission of the robbery. The possibility remains that after the robbery was committed, the defendant assisted the felons by transporting them in his car from the scene of the crime. State v. Cox, 37 N.C. App. 356, 246 S.E.2d 152, appeal dismissed, 295 N.C. 649, 248 S.E.2d 253 (1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 930, 99 S. Ct. 1268, 59 L. Ed. 2d 487 (1979).

A directed verdict of not guilty of armed robbery foreclosed the State from subsequent prosecutions of defendant for armed robbery or for any lesser included offenses of armed robbery. But accessory after the fact of armed robbery is not a lesser included offense of armed robbery. Therefore, general double jeopardy motions would not bar the trial of defendant on charges of accessory after the fact to armed robbery. State v. Cox, 37 N.C. App. 356, 246 S.E.2d 152, appeal dismissed, 295 N.C. 649, 248 S.E.2d 253 (1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 930, 99 S. Ct. 1268, 59 L. Ed. 2d 487 (1979).

A receiver of stolen goods is not an accessory after the fact. State v. Tyler, 85 N.C. 569 (1881).

Accepting part of the proceeds of a crime does not make one an accessory after the fact; rather, it constitutes the crime of receiving stolen goods. State v. Lewis, 58 N.C. App. 348, 293 S.E.2d 638 (1982), cert. denied, 311 N.C. 766, 321 S.E.2d 152 (1983).

Evidence Prejudicial to Both Charged Felon and Accessory After the Fact. — Where the court found prejudicial error in the proof that an alleged murderer committed the charged felony, and therefore awarded her a new trial, and the State had used the same evidence to also prove defendant was an accessory-after-the-fact, defendant was also entitled to a new trial. State v. Robey, 91 N.C. App. 198, 371 S.E.2d 711, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 479, 373 S.E.2d 874 (1988).

Evidence Held Sufficient. — The state presented sufficient evidence of the elements of accessory after the fact to withstand a motion to dismiss. State v. Barnes, 116 N.C. App. 311, 447 S.E.2d 478 (1994).

Evidence Held Insufficient. — Evidence that defendant removed his truck from the scene of the crimes after the truck had been used to facilitate the crimes was insufficient to support verdict of accessory after the fact of breaking or entering and larceny. State v. Fie, 80 N.C. App. 577, 343 S.E.2d 248 (1986), rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 626, 359 S.E.2d 774 (1987).

Evidence that witness was accessory after the fact did not subject her testimony to rules relating to accomplice testimony. State v. Cabey, 307 N.C. 496, 299 S.E.2d 194 (1983).

Instruction Not Warranted. — The trial court did not err in failing to instruct as to one defendant on the offenses of accessory before and accessory after the fact to the crimes of armed robbery and murder where the evidence showed that both defendants were present at the scene and were acting together in the commission of the armed robbery, and that the murders occurred in furtherance of their common purpose to commit this crime or as a natural consequence thereof. State v. Oliver, 302 N.C. 28, 274 S.E.2d 183 (1981).

Applied in State v. Poole, 25 N.C. App. 715, 214 S.E.2d 774 (1975).

Article 2A.

Habitual Felons.

§ 14-7.1. Persons defined as habitual felons.

Any person who has been convicted of or pled guilty to three felony offenses in any federal court or state court in the United States or combination thereof is declared to be an habitual felon. For the purpose of this Article, a felony offense is defined as an offense which is a felony under the laws of the State or other sovereign wherein a plea of guilty was entered or a conviction was returned regardless of the sentence actually imposed. Provided, however, that federal offenses relating to the manufacture, possession, sale and kindred offenses involving intoxicating liquors shall not be considered felonies for the purposes of this Article. For the purposes of this Article, felonies committed before a person attains the age of 18 years shall not constitute more than one felony. The commission of a second felony shall not fall within the purview of this Article unless it is committed after the conviction of or plea of guilty to the first felony. The commission of a third felony shall not fall within the purview of this Article unless it is committed after the conviction of or plea of guilty to the second felony. Pleas of guilty to or convictions of felony offenses prior to July 6, 1967, shall not be felony offenses within the meaning of this Article. Any felony offense to which a pardon has been extended shall not for the purpose of this Article constitute a felony. The burden of proving such pardon shall rest with the defendant and the State shall not be required to disprove a pardon. (1967, c. 1241, s. 1; 1971, c. 1231, s. 1; 1979, c. 760, s. 4; 1981, c. 179, s. 10.)

CASE NOTES

Enhanced Punishment Is Constitutional. — The Legislature is not constitutionally prohibited from enhancing punishment for habitual offenders. State v. Todd, 313 N.C. 110, 326 S.E.2d 249 (1985).

The Legislature has acted within constitutionally permissible bounds in enacting legislation designed to identify habitual criminals and to authorize enhanced punishment. State v. Todd, 313 N.C. 110, 326 S.E.2d 249 (1985).

The habitual felon provisions of G.S. §§ 14-7.1 et seq. (the Habitual Felon Act) do not violate N.C. Const., Art. I, § 6. State v. Wilson, 139 N.C. App. 544, 533 S.E.2d 865 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 279, 546 S.E.2d 395 (2000); State v. Skipper, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 690, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 984 (2001).

Procedures Are Constitutional. — The procedures set forth in §§ 14-7.1 through 14-7.6 comport with the defendant's federal and state constitutional guarantees. State v. Todd, 313 N.C. 110, 326 S.E.2d 249 (1985).

Purpose. — The primary purpose of a recidivist statute is to deter repeat offenders and, at some point in the life of one who repeatedly commits criminal offenses serious enough to be punished as felonies, to segregate that person from the rest of society for an extended period of time. This segregation and its duration are based not merely on that person's most recent offense, but also on the propensities he has demonstrated over a period of time during which he has been convicted of and sentenced for other crimes. State v. Aldridge, 76 N.C. App. 638, 334 S.E.2d 107 (1985).

The only reason for establishing that an accused is an habitual felon is to enhance the punishment which would otherwise be appropriate for the substantive felony which he has allegedly committed while in such a status. State v. Thomas, 82 N.C. App. 682, 347 S.E.2d 494 (1986), cert. denied, 320 N.C. 637, 360 S.E.2d 102 (1987); State v. Penland, 89 N.C. App. 350, 365 S.E.2d 721 (1988).

Persons Intended to Be Affected. — The manifest intent of the General Assembly in enacting the Habitual Felon Act was to insure lengthier sentences for those persons who repeatedly violate the criminal laws of this State. Nowhere in the Act is there any indication that the Act was intended to apply only to those persons who repeatedly violate the same criminal law, and the court declined to write any such requirement into the law. State v. Hodge, 112 N.C. App. 462, 436 S.E.2d 251 (1993).

Being an habitual felon is not a crime but is a status, the attaining of which subjects a person thereafter convicted of a crime to an increased punishment for that crime. The status itself, standing alone, will not support a criminal sentence. State v. Allen, 292 N.C. 431, 233 S.E.2d 585 (1977).

Being an habitual felon is not a substantive crime. State v. Thomas, 82 N.C. App. 682, 347 S.E.2d 494 (1986), cert. denied, 320 N.C. 637, 360 S.E.2d 102 (1987).

Being an habitual felon is not a crime but is a status. The status itself, standing alone, will not support a criminal sentence, and a court may not treat the violation of the Habitual Felon Act as a substantive offense. State v. Penland, 89 N.C. App. 350, 365 S.E.2d 721 (1988).

Because this section simply defines certain persons to be habitual felons, who, as such, are subject to greater punishment for criminal offenses, being an habitual felon is not a crime and cannot support, standing alone, a criminal sentence; rather, being an habitual felon is a status justifying an increased punishment for the principal felony. State v. Priddy, 115 N.C. App. 547, 445 S.E.2d 610, cert. denied, 337 N.C. 805, 449 S.E.2d 751 (1994).

Being an habitual felon is not a crime but is a status, which subjects the individual subsequently convicted of a crime to increased punishment for that crime. State v. Patton, 119 N.C. App. 229, 458 S.E.2d 230 (1995), rev'd on other grounds, 342 N.C. 633, 466 S.E.2d 708 (1996).

Trial court erred in imposing a habitual felon sentence in a separate judgment from principal felony convictions, and directing that the latter run at the expiration of the habitual felon sentence; on remand, the court should calculate defendant's prior record level pursuant to § 15A-1340.14 and impose sentences upon the "underlying felonies as . . . Class C felonies." State v. Wilson, 139 N.C. App. 544, 533 S.E.2d 865 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 279, 546 S.E.2d 395 (2000).

Failure to Include Status in Indictment. — Trial court had jurisdiction to try the defendant as habitual felon even though indictments for the underlying felonies did not charge the defendant with being a habitual felon; the principal felony indictment did not need to refer to the defendant's alleged status as a habitual offender and defendant received adequate notice by separate indictment of the State's intent to prosecute her as a habitual felon. State v. Sanders, 95 N.C. App. 494, 383 S.E.2d 409, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 712, 388 S.E.2d 470 (1989).

Separate Hearing to Determine Status Not Required. — The Habitual Felons Act does not authorize an independent proceeding to determine defendant's status as a habitual felon separate from the prosecution of a predicate substantive felony; the habitual felon indictment is necessarily ancillary to the indictment for the substantive felony. State v. Cheek, 339 N.C. 725, 453 S.E.2d 862 (1995).

A separate habitual felon indictment is not required for each substantive felony indictment. State v. Patton, 342 N.C. 633, 466 S.E.2d 708 (1996).

This Article does not authorize an independent proceeding to establish a defendant's status as an habitual felon. One must be charged as an habitual felon prior to the entry of a plea or a conviction on the substantive offense. Hyman v. Garrison, 567 F. Supp. 588 (E.D.N.C. 1983).

Properly construed, this article clearly contemplates that when one who has already attained the status of an habitual felon is indicted for the commission of another felony, that person may then be also indicted in a separate bill as being an habitual felon. It is likewise clear that the proceeding by which the State seeks to establish that a defendant is an habitual felon is necessarily ancillary to a pending prosecution for the "principal," or substantive, felony. Hyman v. Garrison, 567 F. Supp. 588 (E.D.N.C. 1983).

Admission of Habitual Felon Status. — Where admission of evidence showing that defendant previously had been adjudicated an habitual felon could not have affected the outcome of defendant's habitual felon proceeding, such evidence was not improperly admitted. State v. Bishop, 343 N.C. 518, 472 S.E.2d 842 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1097, 117 S. Ct.

779, 136 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1997).

The prosecution may not use the conviction of the substantive felony to satisfy the requirements of this article. Simply stated, a person may not be indicted as an habitual felon until he is indicted for his fourth felony offense. Hyman v. Garrison, 567 F. Supp. 588 (E.D.N.C. 1983).

1973 Plea of Nolo Contendere. — Sentence entered in 1973 (before the enactment of § 15A-1022), pursuant to plea of nolo contendere was not conviction for purposes of this section. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

A no contest plea is a "conviction" within the meaning of this section. State v. Jackson, 128 N.C. App. 626, 495 S.E.2d 916 (1998), review dismissed, 349 N.C. 287, 507 S.E.2d 37 (1998).

"Conviction", in the context of this section, includes final judgments entered upon the entry of a no contest plea, provided the no contest plea was entered after July 1, 1975. State v. Jackson, 128 N.C. App. 626, 495 S.E.2d 916 (1998), review dismissed, 349 N.C. 287, 507 S.E.2d 37 (1998).

Fair Sentencing Act. — Although the principal provisions of the Fair Sentencing Act are codified in Chapter 15A, Article 81A, the act resulted in revisions to other portions of the general statutes. See e.g., Chapter 14, Articles 1, 2, 2A, 33; Chapter 15A, Articles 58, 81A, 82, 83, 85, 85A, 89, 91; Chapter 148, Article 2, and Chapter 162, Article 4. State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

For discussion of the historical background, policies, purposes, and implementation of the new Fair Sentencing Act, see State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

Structured Sentencing Act. — The Habitual Felon Act, §§ 14-7.1 to 14-7.6 is different than the Structured Sentencing Act, §§ 15A-1340.10 to 15A-1340.23, but does not conflict with that act; the Habitual Offender Act elevates a convicted person's status within structured sentencing so that the person is eligible for a longer minimum and maximum sentence. State v. Parks, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 695, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 982 (2001).

The Structured Sentencing Act, §§ 15A-1340.10 to 15A-1340.23 may be applied together with the Habitual Felon Act, §§ 14-7.1 to 14-7.6, as long as diffferent convictions justify the application of each. State v. Parks, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 695, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 982 (2001).

Basis of Sentencing Habitual Felon. — In sentencing a habitual felon, the duration of the sentence is based not only on the defendant's most recent offense, but on his past criminal conduct as well. State v. Aldridge, 76 N.C. App. 638, 334 S.E.2d 107 (1985).

Consideration of Aggravating Factors. — The sentencing court can rely on certain prior criminal convictions to aggravate a current sentence; however, the court cannot consider as separate aggravating factors both the status of being an habitual felon and the felonies underlying the habitual felon adjudication. State v. Kirkpatrick, 345 N.C. 451, 480 S.E.2d 400 (1997).

Sentence on Conviction as Habitual Felon. — Upon a conviction as an habitual felon, the court must sentence the defendant for the underlying felony as a Class C felon. State v. Penland, 89 N.C. App. 350, 365 S.E.2d 721 (1988).

Sentence Enhancement. — The State did not present substantial evidence that third conviction relied upon to enhance sentence as a habitual felon was a felony, where State presented it's evidence regarding the questioned offense through a court clerk who read the contents of an out of state indictment and judgment for the offense, the indictment did not charge defendant with felonious possession of stolen property, and did not recite that defendant pled guilty to a felony or was sentenced as a felon, and there was no certification from any official that the offense to which defendant pled was a felony in that state at the time. State v. Lindsey, 118 N.C. App. 549, 455 S.E.2d 909 (1995).

Use of Prior Convictions. — Defendant's prior convictions will either serve to establish his status as an habitual felon pursuant to § 15-7.1 or to increase his prior record level pursuant to § 15A-1340.14(b)(1-5); the existence of prior convictions may not be used to increase a defendant's sentence pursuant to both provisions at the same time. State v. Bethea, 122 N.C. App. 623, 471 S.E.2d 430 (1996).

Section 14-7.6 does not prohibit the use of convictions used to establish the defendant's status as an habitual offender to assign points pursuant to § 15A-1340(b)(6) and (b)(7), because these provisions address the gravity and circumstances of the offense, rather than the mere existence of a prior offense. State v. Bethea, 122 N.C. App. 623, 471 S.E.2d 430 (1996).

This section did not prohibit defendant's felony sentence from being enhanced on the grounds that he was an habitual felon when elements necessary to prove that he was an habitual felon were the same as those elements which were used to support the underlying felony. State v. Misenheimer, 123 N.C. App. 156, 472 S.E.2d 191 (1996).

Where the indictment referenced a principal felony which was subsequently dismissed; the principal felony was not an essential element of being an habitual felon and was, therefore, treated as surplusage and ignored. State v. Bowens, 140 N.C. App. 217, 535 S.E.2d 870 (2000).

Imposition of a 30-year sentence for a habitual felon who under the facts could have received a maximum sentence of life imprisonment under § 14-1.1 was within constitutional limits and did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment. State v. Aldridge, 76 N.C. App. 638, 334 S.E.2d 107 (1985).

Change of Date on Indictment. — It was the fact that another felony was committed, not its specific date, which was the essential question in the habitual felon indictment; therefore, because the date alleged in the indictment was neither an essential nor a substantial fact as to the charge of habitual felon, the trial court properly allowed the state to change a date in the habitual felon indictment. State v. Locklear, 117 N.C. App. 255, 450 S.E.2d 516 (1994).

Separate Judgment and Commitment Held Error. — In prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon upon a law enforcement officer and being an habitual felon, the trial court erred in sentencing defendant in a separate judgment and commitment as an habitual felon. State v. Penland, 89 N.C. App. 350, 365 S.E.2d 721 (1988).

Notice to Defendant of Habitual Offender Allegation Required Before Plea. — Defendant must have notice of the allegation of habitual felon status at the time of his plea to the underlying substantive felony charge. State v. Oakes, 113 N.C. App. 332, 438 S.E.2d 477, cert. denied, 336 N.C. 76, 445 S.E.2d 43 (1994).

Trial court did not err in considering defendant's prior adjudication as an habitual felon as a nonstatutory aggravating factor when sentencing defendant for uttering an instrument bearing a forged endorsement. State v. Kirkpatrick, 123 N.C. App. 86, 472 S.E.2d 371 (1996), aff'd, 346 N.C. 451, 480 S.E.2d 400 (1997).

Applied in State v. Moore, 102 N.C. App. 434, 402 S.E.2d 435 (1991); State v. Gentry, 135 N.C. App. 107, 519 S.E.2d 68 (1999); State v. Brown, — N.C. App. —, 552 S.E.2d 234, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 864 (2001).

§ 14-7.2. Punishment.

When any person is charged by indictment with the commission of a felony under the laws of the State of North Carolina and is also charged with being an habitual felon as defined in G.S. 14-7.1, he must, upon conviction, be sentenced and punished as an habitual felon, as in this Chapter provided, except in those cases where the death penalty or a life sentence is imposed. (1967, c. 1241, s. 2; 1981, c. 179, s. 11.)

CASE NOTES

Being an habitual felon is not a crime, but is a status the attaining of which subjects a person thereafter convicted of a crime to an increased punishment for that crime. The status itself, standing alone, will not support a criminal sentence. State v. Allen, 292 N.C. 431, 233 S.E.2d 585 (1977).

The only reason for establishing that an accused is an habitual felon is to enhance the punishment which would otherwise be appropriate for the substantive felony which he has allegedly committed while in such a status. The effect of such a proceeding is to enhance the punishment of those found guilty of crime who are also shown to have been convicted of other crimes in the past. State v. Allen, 292 N.C. 431, 233 S.E.2d 585 (1977).

Quoted in State v. Keyes, 56 N.C. App. 75, 286 S.E.2d 861 (1982); State v. Bowens, 140 N.C. App. 217, 535 S.E.2d 870 (2000).

Cited in State v. Denning, 316 N.C. 523, 342 S.E.2d 855 (1986).

§ 14-7.3. Charge of habitual felon.

An indictment which charges a person who is an habitual felon within the meaning of G.S. 14-7.1 with the commission of any felony under the laws of the State of North Carolina must, in order to sustain a conviction of habitual felon, also charge that said person is an habitual felon. The indictment charging the defendant as an habitual felon shall be separate from the indictment charging him with the principal felony. An indictment which charges a person with being an habitual felon must set forth the date that prior felony offenses were committed, the name of the state or other sovereign against whom said felony offenses were committed, the dates that pleas of guilty were entered to or convictions returned in said felony offenses, and the identity of the court wherein said pleas or convictions took place. No defendant charged with being an habitual felon in a bill of indictment shall be required to go to trial on said charge within 20 days of the finding of a true bill by the grand jury; provided, the defendant may waive this 20-day period. (1967, c. 1241, s. 3.)

CASE NOTES

One basic purpose behind this Chapter is to provide notice to defendant that he is being prosecuted for some substantive felony as a recidivist. Failure to provide such notice where the State accepts a guilty plea on the substantive felony charge may well vitiate the plea itself as not being knowingly entered with full understanding of the consequences. State v. Allen, 292 N.C. 431, 233 S.E.2d 585 (1977); State v. Winstead, 78 N.C. App. 180, 336 S.E.2d 721 (1985).

Applicability of § 14-7.4 to this Section. — Section 14-7.4 by its own terms specifically applies to conviction of habitual felons under this section. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

"Habitual felon" is a status, and once attained, such status is never lost. State v. Creason, 123 N.C. App. 495, 473 S.E.2d 771 (1996), aff'd, 346 N.C. 165, 484 S.E.2d 525 (1997).

Habitual Felon Indictment Ancillary to Indictment for Substantive Felony. — The Habitual Felons Act does not authorize an independent proceeding to determine defendant's status as a habitual felon separate from the prosecution of a predicate substantive felony; the habitual felon indictment is necessarily ancillary to the indictment for the substantive felony. State v. Cheek, 339 N.C. 725, 453 S.E.2d 862 (1995).

An habitual felon indictment must be supported by a valid indictment on a substantive charge. State v. Winstead, 78 N.C. App. 180, 336 S.E.2d 721 (1985).

The habitual felon indictment must be filed prior to the defendant's pleading in the substantive felony case. State v. Little, 126 N.C. App. 262, 484 S.E.2d 835 (1997).

Specific Reference to Predicate Felony Not Required. — Nothing in the plain wording of this section requires a specific reference to the predicate substantive felony in the habitual felon indictment. State v. Cheek, 339 N.C. 725, 453 S.E.2d 862 (1995).

Separate Indictment Charging Defendant as Habitual Felon Contemplated. — Properly construed, this Chapter clearly contemplates that when one who has already attained the status of an habitual felon is indicted for the commission of another felony, that person may then be also indicted in a separate bill as being an habitual felon. State v. Allen, 292 N.C. 431, 233 S.E.2d 585 (1977).

Separate Indictments Valid. — This section does not require that the indictment charging defendant with the underlying felony must also charge that defendant is an habitual felon; where defendant was charged in one bill of indictment with felonious possession of cocaine, and in a separate bill of indictment with being an habitual felon, the indictments were not invalid. State v. Hodge, 112 N.C. App. 462, 436 S.E.2d 251 (1993).

A separate habitual felon indictment is not required for each substantive felony indictment. State v. Patton, 342 N.C. 633, 466 S.E.2d 708 (1996).

Defective Indictment. — Since it is clear from the indictment that prior to its return all the substantive felony proceedings upon which it is based had been prosecuted to completion and there was no pending felony prosecution to which the habitual felon proceeding could attach as an ancillary proceeding, the indictment on motion of the defendant should have been dismissed for failure of the bill to charge a cognizable offense. State v. Allen, 292 N.C. 431, 233 S.E.2d 585 (1977).

Where the habitual felon indictment did not refer to any underlying felony with which defendant was charged, defendant's indictment as an habitual offender was fatally flawed and the trial court erred in enhancing defendant's sentence on that basis. State v. Farrior, 117 N.C. App. 429, 451 S.E.2d 332 (1994), cert. granted, 340 N.C. 116, 455 S.E.2d 663 (1995).

Trivial Amendment to Sufficient Indictment Irrelevant. — The amending of three indictments to include the words "in North Carolina" was irrelevant where the original indictment itself was not flawed and thus any attempt to correct a perceived flaw was harmless for the amendment could not have in any way prejudiced defendant. State v. Montford, 137 N.C. App. 495, 529 S.E.2d 247 (2000).

New Indictment. — Where there had been no entry of judgment or sentence as to the substantive underlying felony, until judgment was entered upon defendant's conviction of that substantive underlying felony, there remained a pending, uncompleted felony prosecution to which a new habitual felon indictment could attach. State v. Oakes, 113 N.C. App. 332, 438 S.E.2d 477, cert. denied, 336 N.C. 76, 445 S.E.2d 43 (1994).

Charges in Separate Counts of Same Indictment. — Although defendant was charged with the underlying felony, common law robbery, and with being an habitual felon, in separate counts of the same bill of indictment rather than in separate bills of indictment this procedure did not violate this section. State v. Young, 120 N.C. App. 456, 462 S.E.2d 683 (1995).

The statute does not require that the indictment charging a defendant with habitual felon status be contained in a separate bill of indictment. State v. Young, 120 N.C. App. 456, 462 S.E.2d 683 (1995).

Indictment Held Sufficient. — Indictment charging defendant with being an habitual felon which expressly set forth each of the underlying felonies of which defendant was charged and convicted as being in violation of an enumerated "North Carolina General Statute," contained a sufficient statement of the name of the state or sovereign against whom the felonies were committed to comport with the requirements of this section. State v. Williams, 99 N.C. App. 333, 393 S.E.2d 156 (1990).

A habitual felon indictment citing the defendant's conviction for "the felony of breaking and entering buildings in violation of N.C.G.S. [§] 14-54" was sufficient because the indictment clearly stated defendant had been convicted of felony breaking and entering, contained the date the felony was committed, the court in which he was convicted, the number assigned to the case, and the date of the conviction and, therefore, provided him with adequate notice of the underlying felony. State v. Briggs, 137 N.C. App. 125, 526 S.E.2d 678 (2000).

Habitual felon indictment complied with this section. State v. Smith, 112 N.C. App. 512, 436 S.E.2d 160 (1993).

Running of 20-Day Period. — Under this section, the 20-day period runs from the time the grand jury returns an indictment on the habitual felon charge. State v. Winstead, 78 N.C. App. 180, 336 S.E.2d 721 (1985).

Collateral Attack. — Defendant cannot collaterally attack a prior conviction which is the basis of a habitual felon charge. State v. Creason, 123 N.C. App. 495, 473 S.E.2d 771 (1996), aff'd, 346 N.C. 165, 484 S.E.2d 525 (1997).

Scope of Review. — When appealing the use of a prior conviction as a partial basis for an habitual felon indictment, inquiries are permissible only to determine whether the State gave defendant proper notice that he was being prosecuted for some substantive felony as a recidivist pursuant to this section. State v. Creason, 123 N.C. App. 495, 473 S.E.2d 771 (1996), aff'd, 346 N.C. 165, 484 S.E.2d 525 (1997).

Applied in State v. Todd, 313 N.C. 110, 326 S.E.2d 249 (1985); State v. Netcliff, 116 N.C. App. 396, 448 S.E.2d 311 (1994), overruled on other grounds, State v. Patton, 342 N.C. 633, 466 S.E.2d 708 (1996).

§ 14-7.4. Evidence of prior convictions of felony offenses.

In all cases where a person is charged under the provisions of this Article with being an habitual felon, the record or records of prior convictions of felony offenses shall be admissible in evidence, but only for the purpose of proving that said person has been convicted of former felony offenses. A prior conviction may be proved by stipulation of the parties or by the original or a certified copy of the court record of the prior conviction. The original or certified copy of the court record, bearing the same name as that by which the defendant is charged, shall be prima facie evidence that the defendant named therein is the same as the defendant before the court, and shall be prima facie evidence of the facts set out therein. (1967, c. 1241, s. 4; 1981, c. 179, s. 12.)

CASE NOTES

Applicability. — This section by its own terms specifically applies to conviction of habitual felons under § 14-7.3. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

The "prima facie evidence" provisions of this section do not unconstitutionally shift the burden of proof to the defendant on the essential element of identity but merely create a presumption that allows the jury to decide whether the elements of the crime have been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Hairston, 137 N.C. App. 352, 528 S.E.2d 29 (2000).

Notes Need Not Be In Identical Order. — Requirement that document bear "same name as that by which the defendant is charged" does not mean that names must be identical in order for document to be prima facie evidence that defendant named in document is same as defendant before court. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

A faxed certified copy of a criminal record was admissible under this section to prove defendant's status as an habitual felon; the exhibit's reliability was bolstered below by defendant's own admission under oath that he indeed was convicted of the crimes listed therein. State v. Wall, 141 N.C. App. 529, 539 S.E.2d 692 (2000).

Names Held to Be "Same Name". — Names "Martin Bernard Petty" and "Martin Petty" are the "same name" for purposes of this section. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

Where the documents introduced to prove defendant's prior conviction for breaking and entering were all identified as accurate copies of the originals, and each of the documents indicated that defendant's name was "Michael Hodge," for purposes of this section "Michael Hodge" and "William Michael Hodge" were the same name, and the documents at issue therefore constituted prima facie evidence that the defendant named in the prior case was the same as the defendant before the court. State v. Hodge, 112 N.C. App. 462, 436 S.E.2d 251 (1993).

Age Discrepancy. — Any discrepancy between actual age of defendant at time of conviction and his age as reflected on record of conviction goes to weight of evidence and not its admissibility. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

Nolo Contendere Plea Entered Prior to Enactment of Chapter 15A. — Use of conviction resulting from nolo contendere plea entered prior to enactment of § 15A-1022 as one of three prior felony convictions required by § 14-7.1 to support charge of being habitual felon was improper, as rule at that time was that nolo contendere plea was neither admission nor adjudication of guilt. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

The trial court erred by sentencing the defendant as an habitual felon where the issue was not submitted to the jury and the record did not show that he pleaded guilty to being an habitual felon; a stipulation, in the absence of an inquiry by the trial court to establish a record of a guilty plea, is not tantamount to a guilty plea. State v. Gilmore, 142 N.C. App. 465, 542 S.E.2d 694 (2001).

Applied in State v. Wilson, 139 N.C. App. 544, 533 S.E.2d 865 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 279, 546 S.E.2d 395 (2000).

Cited in State v. Denning, 316 N.C. 523, 342 S.E.2d 855 (1986).

§ 14-7.5. Verdict and judgment.

When an indictment charges an habitual felon with a felony as above provided and an indictment also charges that said person is an habitual felon as provided herein, the defendant shall be tried for the principal felony as provided by law. The indictment that the person is an habitual felon shall not be revealed to the jury unless the jury shall find that the defendant is guilty of the principal felony or other felony with which he is charged. If the jury finds the defendant guilty of a felony, the bill of indictment charging the defendant as an habitual felon may be presented to the same jury. Except that the same jury may be used, the proceedings shall be as if the issue of habitual felon were a principal charge. If the jury finds that the defendant is an habitual felon, the trial judge shall enter judgment according to the provisions of this Article. If the jury finds that the defendant is not an habitual felon, the trial judge shall pronounce judgment on the principal felony or felonies as provided by law. (1967, c. 1241, s. 5.)

CASE NOTES

The proceeding by which the State seeks to establish that defendant is an habitual felon is necessarily ancillary to a pending prosecution for the "principal," or substantive, felony. The Chapter does not authorize a proceeding independent from the prosecution of some substantive felony for the sole purpose of establishing a defendant's status as an habitual felon. State v. Allen, 292 N.C. 431, 233 S.E.2d 585 (1977).

A defendant charged as a habitual felon is not defending himself against the predicate substantive felony, but against a charge that he has at least three prior felony convictions; the trial for the substantive felony is held first, and only after defendant is convicted of the substantive felony is the habitual felon indictment revealed to, and considered by, the jury. State v. Cheek, 339 N.C. 725, 453 S.E.2d 862 (1995).

Habitual Offender Statute Attaches Upon Third Conviction. — Defendant became an habitual offender when he was convicted of the third offense; however the jury's role in convicting the defendant as an habitual offender was still essential since it assured that the State had proven the fact of the three qualifying convictions to the jury's satisfaction. State v. Brown, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 428, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 976 (2001).

This section applies only to the indictment and not to the erroneous admission of oral evidence on cross-examination. State v. Thompson, 141 N.C. App. 698, 543 S.E.2d 160 (2001), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 396, 548 S.E.2d 157 (2001).

Principal Felony Indictment Need Not Mention Recidivist Status. — The legislature did not intend the first indictment notifying the defendant of the substantive charge against him to include a mention of the defendant's recidivist status. State v. Keyes, 56 N.C. App. 75, 286 S.E.2d 861 (1982).

This section does not give criminal defendant the right to inform the jury, during a principal felony trial, of the possible maximum sentence which might be imposed upon him at an habitual felon adjudication if he is found guilty of the principal offenses. State v. Wilson, 139 N.C. App. 544, 533 S.E.2d 865 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 279, 546 S.E.2d 395 (2000).

Jury Need Not Be Re-empaneled. — When, as contemplated by this section, the same jury considers both the principal felony and the question of defendant's recidivism, it is not necessary to re-empanel a jury once that jury has been properly empaneled pursuant to § 15A-1216. State v. Todd, 313 N.C. 110, 326 S.E.2d 249 (1985).

Pending, Uncompleted Felony Conviction Required. — Where there had been no entry of judgment or sentence as to the substantive underlying felony, until judgment was entered upon defendant's conviction of that substantive underlying felony, there remained a pending, uncompleted felony prosecution to which a new habitual felon indictment could attach. State v. Oakes, 113 N.C. App. 332, 438 S.E.2d 477, cert. denied, 336 N.C. 76, 445 S.E.2d 43 (1994).

New Habitual Felon Indictment Did Not Result in Former Jeopardy. — Although habitual felon indictment was joined for trial with one underlying charge, the indictment was quashed before defendant was placed on trial upon the charge that he was an habitual felon. The subsequent indictment alleging defendant's status as an habitual felon was still part of, and ancillary to, the prosecution of defendant for an underlying felony, for which no judgment had been entered, and there was no former jeopardy. State v. Oakes, 113 N.C. App. 332, 438 S.E.2d 477, cert. denied, 336 N.C. 76, 445 S.E.2d 43 (1994).

The trial court erred by sentencing the defendant as an habitual felon where the issue was not submitted to the jury and the record did not show that he pleaded guilty to being an habitual felon; a stipulation, in the absence of an inquiry by the trial court to establish a record of a guilty plea, is not tantamount to a guilty plea. State v. Gilmore, 142 N.C. App. 465, 542 S.E.2d 694 (2001).

§ 14-7.6. Sentencing of habitual felons.

When an habitual felon as defined in this Article commits any felony under the laws of the State of North Carolina, the felon must, upon conviction or plea of guilty under indictment as provided in this Article (except where the felon has been sentenced as a Class A, B1, or B2 felon) be sentenced as a Class C felon. In determining the prior record level, convictions used to establish a person's status as an habitual felon shall not be used. Sentences imposed under this Article shall run consecutively with and shall commence at the expiration of any sentence being served by the person sentenced under this section. (1967, c. 1241, s. 6; 1981, c. 179, s. 13; 1993, c. 538, s. 9; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, ss. 15, 16; c. 24, s. 14(b); 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 767, s. 16.)

CASE NOTES

Being an habitual felon is not a crime, but is a status the attaining of which subjects a person thereafter convicted of a crime to an increased punishment for that crime. The status itself, standing alone, will not support a criminal sentence. State v. Allen, 292 N.C. 431, 233 S.E.2d 585 (1977).

Being an habitual felon is not a substantive crime. State v. Thomas, 82 N.C. App. 682, 347 S.E.2d 494 (1986), cert. denied, 320 N.C. 637, 360 S.E.2d 102 (1987).

Being an habitual felon is not a crime but is a status. The status itself, standing alone, will not support a criminal sentence, and a court may not treat the violation of the Habitual Felon Act as a substantive offense. State v. Penland, 89 N.C. App. 350, 365 S.E.2d 721 (1988).

The only reason for establishing that an accused is an habitual felon is to enhance the punishment which would otherwise be appropriate for the substantive felony which he has allegedly committed while in such a status. The effect of such a proceeding is to enhance the punishment of those found guilty of crime who are also shown to have been convicted of other crimes in the past. State v. Allen, 292 N.C. 431, 233 S.E.2d 585 (1977).

The only reason for establishing that an accused is an habitual felon is to enhance the punishment which would otherwise be appropriate for the substantive felony which he has allegedly committed while in such a status. State v. Thomas, 82 N.C. App. 682, 347 S.E.2d 494 (1986), cert. denied, 320 N.C. 637, 360 S.E.2d 102 (1987); State v. Penland, 89 N.C. App. 350, 365 S.E.2d 721 (1988).

Basis of Sentencing Habitual Felon. — In sentencing a habitual felon, the duration of the sentence is based not only on the defendant's most recent offense, but on his past criminal conduct as well. State v. Aldridge, 76 N.C. App. 638, 334 S.E.2d 107 (1985).

Use of Prior Convictions. — Defendant's prior convictions will either serve to establish his status as an habitual felon pursuant to § 15-7.1 or to increase his prior record level pursuant to § 15A-1340.14(b)(1-5); the existence of prior convictions may not be used to increase a defendant's sentence pursuant to both provisions at the same time. State v. Bethea, 122 N.C. App. 623, 471 S.E.2d 430 (1996).

Sentence on Conviction as Habitual Felon. — Upon a conviction as an habitual felon, the court must sentence the defendant for the underlying felony as a Class C felon. State v. Penland, 89 N.C. App. 350, 365 S.E.2d 721 (1988).

Sentence Upon Subsequent Conviction. — An habitual felon who is convicted of a subsequent felony is sentenced as a Class C felon which has a presumptive term of 15 years and a maximum term of life imprisonment. State v. Patton, 119 N.C. App. 229, 458 S.E.2d 230 (1995), rev'd on other grounds, 342 N.C. 633, 466 S.E.2d 708 (1996).

This section did not prohibit defendant's felony sentence from being enhanced on the grounds that he was an habitual felon when elements necessary to prove that he was an habitual felon were the same as those elements which were used to support the underlying felony. State v. Misenheimer, 123 N.C. App. 156, 472 S.E.2d 191 (1996).

Sentence Upon Subsequent Conviction. — There is nothing in this section and § 15A-1340.14(d) to prohibit the court from using one conviction obtained in a single calendar week to establish habitual felon status and using another separate conviction obtained the same week to determine prior record level. State v. Truesdale, 123 N.C. App. 639, 473 S.E.2d 670 (1996).

Imposition of a 30-year sentence for a habitual felon who under the facts could have received a maximum sentence of life imprisonment under § 14-1.1 is within constitutional limits and does not constitute cruel and unusual punishment. State v. Aldridge, 76 N.C. App. 638, 334 S.E.2d 107 (1985).

Separate Judgment and Conviction Held Error. — In prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon upon a law enforcement officer and being an habitual felon, the trial court erred in sentencing defendant in a separate judgment and commitment as an habitual felon. State v. Penland, 89 N.C. App. 350, 365 S.E.2d 721 (1988).

Increased Sentence on Resentencing Upheld. — Where defendant's case was remanded on appeal on grounds that defendant was improperly given a separate sentence in an habitual felon court, it was not error for the trial court to increase defendant's sentence on resentencing from three years to 15 years. State v. Kirkpatrick, 89 N.C. App. 353, 365 S.E.2d 640 (1988).

Prior Crimes Relevant to Habitual Felon Status and to Aggravating Factors. — Evidence of a kidnapping defendant's prior crimes was properly used to establish the status of a habitual felon as well as to establish the aggravating factor of prior felony convictions to increase the presumptive sentence of the underlying felony. State v. Roper, 328 N.C. 337, 402 S.E.2d 600, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 902, 112 S. Ct. 280, 116 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1991).

But Status and Underlying Felonies Are Not Separate Factors. — The sentencing court can rely on certain prior criminal convictions to aggravate a current sentence; however, the court cannot consider as separate aggravating factors both the status of being an habitual felon and the felonies underlying the habitual felon adjudication. State v. Kirkpatrick, 345 N.C. 451, 480 S.E.2d 400 (1997).

Trial court did not err in using three felony convictions to increase defendant's prior record level where each of those convictions had been consolidated for judgment with a felony conviction used to establish habitual felon status. State v. Truesdale, 123 N.C. App. 639, 473 S.E.2d 670 (1996).

Construction with Other Laws. — This section does not prohibit the use of convictions used to establish the defendant's status as a habitual offender to assign points pursuant to § 15A-1340(b)(6) and (b)(7), because these provisions address the gravity and circumstances of the offense, rather than the mere existence of a prior offense. State v. Bethea, 122 N.C. App. 623, 471 S.E.2d 430 (1996).

Trial court did not err in considering defendant's prior adjudication as an habitual felon as a nonstatutory aggravating factor when sentencing defendant for uttering an instrument bearing a forged endorsement. State v. Kirkpatrick, 123 N.C. App. 86, 472 S.E.2d 371 (1996), aff'd, 346 N.C. 451, 480 S.E.2d 400 (1997).

Applied in State v. Aldridge, 67 N.C. App. 655, 314 S.E.2d 139 (1984); State v. Todd, 313 N.C. 110, 326 S.E.2d 249 (1985).

Article 2B.

Violent Habitual Felons.

§ 14-7.7. Persons defined as violent habitual felons.

(a) Any person who has been convicted of two violent felonies in any federal court, in a court of this or any other state of the United States, or in a combination of these courts is declared to be a violent habitual felon. For purposes of this Article, "convicted" means the person has been adjudged guilty of or has entered a plea of guilty or no contest to the violent felony charge, and judgment has been entered thereon when such action occurred on or after July 6, 1967. This Article does not apply to a second violent felony unless it is committed after the conviction or plea of guilty or no contest to the first violent felony. Any felony to which a pardon has been extended shall not, for the purposes of this Article, constitute a felony. The burden of proving a pardon shall rest with the defendant, and this State shall not be required to disprove a pardon. Conviction as an habitual felon shall not, for purposes of this Article, constitute a violent felony.

(b) For purposes of this Article, "violent felony" includes the following offenses:

(1) All Class A through E felonies.

(2) Any repealed or superseded offense substantially equivalent to the offenses listed in subdivision (1).

(3) Any offense committed in another jurisdiction substantially similar to the offenses set forth in subdivision (1) or (2). (1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, ss. 31, 32; 2000-155, s. 14.)

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2000-155, s. 14, effective September 1, 2000, and applicable to offenses committed on or after that date, substituted "similar to the offenses" for "equivalent to the offenses" in subdivision (b)(3).

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality. — The violent habitual felon statute is not unconstitutional on its face. State v. Mason, 126 N.C. App. 318, 484 S.E.2d 818 (1997), cert denied, 354 N.C. 72, — S.E.2d — (2001) .

Punishment as a violent habitual felon does not constitute double jeopardy. State v. Stevenson, 136 N.C. App. 235, 523 S.E.2d 734 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 368, 543 S.E.2d 144 (2000).

Separate Indictments. — Where defendant was charged in one bill of indictment with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury, and in a separate bill of being a violent habitual felon, defendant's argument that he was not legally charged as a violent habitual felon because the charge was in a separate indictment was without merit. State v. Mason, 126 N.C. App. 318, 484 S.E.2d 818 (1997), cert denied, 354 N.C. 72, — S.E.2d — (2001) .

Contents of Indictment. — A habitual felon indictment is not required to specifically refer to the predicate substantive felony because the defendant is not defending himself against the predicate substantive felony, but against the charge that he has been previously convicted of the required number of felonies. State v. Mason, 126 N.C. App. 318, 484 S.E.2d 818 (1997), cert denied, 354 N.C. 72, — S.E.2d — (2001) .

Violent Felony. — Assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury is also a violent felony for which a defendant may be punished as an habitual violent offender. State v. Mason, 126 N.C. App. 318, 484 S.E.2d 818 (1997), cert denied, 354 N.C. 72, — S.E.2d — (2001) .

Evidence of Prior Violent Felonies. — The state established prima facie evidence of the defendant's prior violent felonies, where it placed into evidence certified copies of the defendant's previous convictions for armed robbery. State v. Mewborn, 131 N.C. App. 495, 507 S.E.2d 906 (1998).

Defendant's 1992 conviction in California of the North Carolina equivalent of an "attempt" to commit a second degree sexual offense, although classified as a Class H felony at the time, was classified as a Class D felony and could be used for the purposes of a conviction under this section. State v. Stevenson, 136 N.C. App. 235, 523 S.E.2d 734 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 368, 543 S.E.2d 144 (2000).

Collateral Estoppel. — Where defendant was acquitted on a charge of being a violent habitual felon, his later trial on the same charge, involving a different primary offense but the same two predicate offenses, was barred by collateral estoppel. State v. Safrit, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 516, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 727 (2001).

Cited in State v. Smith, 139 N.C. App. 209, 533 S.E.2d 518 (2000).

§ 14-7.8. Punishment.

When a person is charged by indictment with the commission of a violent felony and is also charged with being a violent habitual felon as defined in G.S. 14-7.7, the person must, upon conviction, be sentenced in accordance with this Article, except in those cases where the death penalty is imposed. (1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, s. 31.)

§ 14-7.9. Charge of violent habitual felon.

An indictment that charges a person who is a violent habitual felon within the meaning of G.S. 14-7.7 with the commission of any violent felony must, in order to sustain a conviction of violent habitual felon, also charge that the person is a violent habitual felon. The indictment charging the defendant as a violent habitual felon shall be separate from the indictment charging the defendant with the principal violent felony. An indictment that charges a person with being a violent habitual felon must set forth the date that prior violent felonies were committed, the name of the state or other sovereign against whom the violent felonies were committed, the dates of convictions of the violent felonies, and the identity of the court in which the convictions took place. A defendant charged with being a violent habitual felon in a bill of indictment shall not be required to go to trial on that charge within 20 days after the finding of a true bill by the grand jury unless the defendant waives this 20-day period. (1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, s. 31.)

CASE NOTES

Name of State. — The name of the state against whom the violent felonies were committed need not be expressly stated if the indictment sufficiently indicates the state. State v. Mason, 126 N.C. App. 318, 484 S.E.2d 818 (1997), cert denied, 354 N.C. 72, — S.E.2d — (2001).

Replacement of Technically Deficient Indictment. — Due process was not violated where the state obtained a second indictment charging the defendant as a violent habitual felon after the first indictment was technically-deficient because the defendant had not been sentenced for his armed robbery conviction and because the first indictment placed him on notice that he was being tried as a violent habitual felon. State v. Mewborn, 131 N.C. App. 495, 507 S.E.2d 906 (1998).

§ 14-7.10. Evidence of prior convictions of violent felonies.

In all cases where a person is charged under this Article with being a violent habitual felon, the records of prior convictions of violent felonies shall be admissible in evidence, but only for the purpose of proving that the person has been convicted of former violent felonies. A prior conviction may be proved by stipulation of the parties or by the original or a certified copy of the court record of the prior conviction. The original or certified copy of the court record, bearing the same name as that by which the defendant is charged, shall be prima facie evidence that the defendant named therein is the same as the defendant before the court, and shall be prima facie evidence of the facts set out therein. (1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, s. 31.)

CASE NOTES

Certified Copies of Conviction Sufficient. — The state established prima facie evidence of the defendant's prior violent felonies, where it placed into evidence certified copies of the defendant's previous convictions for armed robbery. State v. Mewborn, 131 N.C. App. 495, 507 S.E.2d 906 (1998).

§ 14-7.11. Verdict and judgment.

When an indictment charges a violent habitual felon with a violent felony as provided in this Article and an indictment also charges that the person is a violent habitual felon as provided in this Article, the defendant shall be tried for the principal violent felony as provided by law. The indictment that the person is a violent habitual felon shall not be revealed to the jury unless the jury finds that the defendant is guilty of the principal violent felony or another violent felony with which the defendant is charged. If the jury finds the defendant guilty of a violent felony, the bill of indictment charging the defendant as a violent habitual felon may be presented to the same jury. Except that the same jury may be used, the proceedings shall be as if the issue of violent habitual felon were a principal charge. If the jury finds that the defendant is a violent habitual felon, the trial judge shall enter judgment according to the provisions of this Article. If the jury finds that the defendant is not a violent habitual felon, the trial judge shall pronounce judgment on the principal violent felony or felonies as provided by law. (1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, s. 31.)

§ 14-7.12. Sentencing of violent habitual felons.

A person who is convicted of a violent felony and of being a violent habitual felon must, upon conviction (except where the death penalty is imposed), be sentenced to life imprisonment without parole. Life imprisonment without parole means that the person will spend the remainder of the person's natural life in prison. The sentencing judge may not suspend the sentence and may not place the person sentenced on probation. Sentences for violent habitual felons imposed under this Article shall run consecutively with and shall commence at the expiration of any other sentence being served by the person. (1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, s. 31.)

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality. — The violent habitual felon statute is not unconstitutional on its face. State v. Mason, 126 N.C. App. 318, 484 S.E.2d 818 (1997), cert denied, 354 N.C. 72, — S.E.2d — (2001) .

The term "life imprisonment without parole" falls within the meaning of the constitutional term "imprisonment," so the sentence was authorized by the Constitution. State v. Allen, 346 N.C. 731, 488 S.E.2d 188 (1997).

Purpose. — Former § 15A-1380.5 allowed a defendant not already benefited by the merciful hand of the Governor to have his case reviewed by a superior court judge; it increases a defendant's chance of parole prior to the end of his natural life. State v. Allen, 346 N.C. 731, 488 S.E.2d 188 (1997).

Applied in State v. Safrit, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 516, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 727 (2001).

ARTICLE 2C.

Continuing Criminal Enterprise.

§ 14-7.20. Continuing criminal enterprise.

(a) Any person who engages in a continuing criminal enterprise shall be punished as a Class H felon and in addition shall be subject to the forfeiture prescribed in subsection (b) of this section.

(b) Any person who is convicted under subsection (a) of this section of engaging in a continuing criminal enterprise shall forfeit to the State of North Carolina:

(1) The profits obtained by the person in the enterprise, and

(2) Any of the person's interest in, claim against, or property or contractual rights of any kind affording a source of influence over, such enterprise.

(c) For purposes of this section, a person is engaged in a continuing criminal enterprise if:

(1) The person violates any provision of this Chapter, the punishment of which is a felony; and
(2) The violation is a part of a continuing series of violations of this Chapter:
a. Which are undertaken by the person in concert with five or more other persons with respect to whom the person occupies a position of organizer, a supervisory position, or any other position of management; and
b. From which the person obtains substantial income or resources. (1995, c. 378, s. 1.)

SUBCHAPTER II. OFFENSES AGAINST THE STATE.

ARTICLE 3.

Rebellion.

§ 14-8. Rebellion against the State.

If any person shall incite, set on foot, assist or engage in a rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the State of North Carolina or the laws thereof, or shall give aid or comfort thereto, every person so offending in any of the ways aforesaid shall be guilty of a felony, and shall be punished as a Class F felon. § 14-10. Secret political and military organizations forbidden.

If any person, for the purpose of compassing or furthering any political object, or aiding the success of any political party or organization, or resisting the laws, shall join or in any way connect or unite himself with any oath-bound secret political or military organization, society or association of whatsoever name or character; or shall form or organize or combine and agree with any other person or persons to form or organize any such organization; or as a member of any secret political or military party or organization shall use, or agree to use, any certain signs or grips or passwords, or any disguise of the person or voice, or any disguise whatsoever for the advancement of its object, and shall take or administer any extrajudicial oath or other secret, solemn pledge, or any like secret means; or if any two or more persons, for the purpose of compassing or furthering any political object, or aiding the success of any political party or organization, or circumventing the laws, shall secretly assemble, combine or agree together, and the more effectually to accomplish such purposes, or any of them, shall use any certain signs, or grips, or passwords, or any disguise of the person or voice, or other disguise whatsoever, or shall take or administer any extrajudicial oath or other secret, solemn pledge; or if any persons shall band together and assemble to muster, drill or practice any military evolutions except by virtue of the authority of an officer recognized by law, or of an instructor in institutions or schools in which such evolutions form a part of the course of instruction; or if any person shall knowingly permit any of the acts and things herein forbidden to be had, done or performed on his premises, or on any premises under his control; or if any person being a member of any such secret political or military organization shall not at once abandon the same and separate himself entirely therefrom, every person so offending shall be guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor. CASE NOTES

Ku Klux Klan Held Ineligible for School Exemption. — It is beyond peradventure that the school exemption to this section's prohibition on engaging in military evolutions does not apply to a group like the Carolina Knights of the Ku Klux Klan that is engaged in practicing guerilla warfare aimed at subverting the government. Person v. Miller, 854 F.2d 656 (4th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1011, 109 S. Ct. 1119, 103 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1989).

There was ample evidence from which the jury could find that defendant violated this section where the chief military officer of the state listed those organizations authorized to conduct military operations and the list did not include the defendant's organization and he explicitly stated that neither defendant nor defendant's agent, was to his knowledge authorized by law to conduct military operations in North Carolina and also testified that in addition to high school and college ROTC programs, the state has only one accredited military academy. Person v. Miller, 854 F.2d 656 (4th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1011, 109 S. Ct. 1119, 103 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1989).

Article 4.

Subversive Activities.

§ 14-11. Activities aimed at overthrow of government; use of public buildings.

It shall be unlawful for any person, by word of mouth or writing, willfully and deliberately to advocate, advise or teach a doctrine that the government of the United States, the State of North Carolina or any political subdivision thereof shall be overthrown or overturned by force or violence or by any other unlawful means. It shall be unlawful for any public building in the State, owned by the State of North Carolina, any political subdivision thereof, or by any department or agency of the State or any institution supported in whole or in part by State funds, to be used by any person for the purpose of advocating, advising or teaching a doctrine that the government of the United States, the State of North Carolina or any political subdivision thereof should be overthrown by force, violence or any other unlawful means. (1941, c. 37, s. 1.)

Legal Periodicals. — For comment on this section, see 19 N.C.L. Rev. 466 (1941).

§ 14-12. Punishment for violations.

Any person or persons violating any of the provisions of this Article shall, for the first offense, be guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor and be punished accordingly, and for the second offense shall be punished as a Class H felon. (1941, c. 37, s. 2; 1979, c. 760, s. 5; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1316, s. 47; 1981, c. 63, s. 1; c. 179, s. 14; 1993, c. 539, s. 11; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c).)

Cross References. — For structured sentencing provisions effective October 1, 1994, see § 15A-1340.10 et seq.

§ 14-12.1. Certain subversive activities made unlawful.

It shall be unlawful for any person to:

(1) By word of mouth or writing advocate, advise or teach the duty, necessity or propriety of overthrowing or overturning the government of the United States or a political subdivision of the United States by force or violence; or,

(2) Print, publish, edit, issue or knowingly circulate, sell, distribute or publicly display any book, paper, document, or written or printed matter in any form, containing or advocating, advising or teaching the doctrine that the government of the United States or a political subdivision of the United States should be overthrown by force, violence or any unlawful means; or,

(3) Organize or help to organize or become a member of or voluntarily assemble with any society, group or assembly of persons formed to teach or advocate the doctrine that the government of the United States or a political subdivision of the United States should be overthrown by force, violence or any unlawful means.

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be punished as a Class H felon.

Whenever two or more persons assemble for the purpose of advocating or teaching the doctrine that the government of the United States or a political subdivision of the United States should be overthrown by force, violence or any unlawful means, such an assembly is unlawful, and every person voluntarily participating therein by his presence, aid or instigation, shall be punished as a Class H felon.

Every editor or proprietor of a book, newspaper or serial and every manager of a partnership or incorporated association by which a book, newspaper or serial is issued, is chargeable with the publication of any matter contained in such book, newspaper or serial. But in every prosecution therefor, the defendant may show in his defense that the matter complained of was published without his knowledge or fault and against his wishes, by another who had no authority from him to make the publication and whose act was disavowed by him as soon as known.

No person shall be employed by any department, bureau, institution or agency of the State of North Carolina who has participated in any of the activities described in this section, and any person now employed by any department, bureau, institution or agency and who has been or is engaged in any of the activities described in this section shall be forthwith discharged. Evidence satisfactory to the head of such department, bureau, institution or agency of the State shall be sufficient for refusal to employ any person or cause for discharge of any employee for the reasons set forth in this paragraph. (1947, c. 1028; 1953, c. 675, s. 2; 1979, c. 760, s. 5; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1316, s. 47; 1981, c. 63, s. 1; c. 179, s. 14.)

Article 4A.

Prohibited Secret Societies and Activities.

§ 14-12.2. Definitions.

The terms used in this Article are defined as follows:

(1) The term "secret society" shall mean any two or more persons organized, associated together, combined or united for any common purpose whatsoever, who shall use among themselves any certain grips, signs or password, or who shall use for the advancement of any of their purposes or as a part of their ritual any disguise of the person, face or voice or any disguise whatsoever, or who shall take any extrajudicial oath or secret solemn pledge or administer such oath or pledge to those associated with them, or who shall transact business and advance their purposes at secret meeting or meetings which are tiled and guarded against intrusion by persons not associated with them.

(2) The term "secret political society" shall mean any secret society, as hereinbefore defined, which shall at any time have for a purpose the hindering or aiding the success of any candidate for public office, or the hindering or aiding the success of any political party or organization, or violating any lawfully declared policy of the government of the State or any of the laws and constitutional provisions of the State.

(3) The term "secret military society" shall mean any secret society, as hereinbefore defined, which shall at any time meet, assemble or engage in a venture when members thereof are illegally armed, or which shall at any time have for a purpose the engaging in any venture by members thereof which shall require illegal armed force or in which illegal armed force is to be used, or which shall at any time muster, drill or practice any military evolutions while illegally armed. (1953, c. 1193, s. 1.)

Legal Periodicals. — For comment on this Article, see 31 N.C.L. Rev. 401 (1953).

§ 14-12.3. Certain secret societies prohibited.

It shall be unlawful for any person to join, unite himself with, become a member of, apply for membership in, form, organize, solicit members for, combine and agree with any person or persons to form or organize, or to encourage, aid or assist in any way any secret political society or any secret military society or any secret society having for a purpose the violating or circumventing the laws of the State. (1953, c. 1193, s. 2.)

§ 14-12.4. Use of signs, grips, passwords or disguises or taking or administering oath for illegal purposes.

It shall be unlawful for any person to use, agree to use, or to encourage, aid or assist in the using of any signs, grips, passwords, disguise of the face, person or voice, or any disguise whatsoever in the furtherance of any illegal secret political purpose, any illegal secret military purpose, or any purpose of violating or circumventing the laws of the State; and it shall be unlawful for any person to take or administer, or agree to take or administer, any extrajudicial oath or secret solemn pledge to further any illegal secret political purpose, any illegal secret military purpose, or any purpose of violating or circumventing the laws of the State. (1953, c. 1193, s. 3.)

§ 14-12.5. Permitting, etc., meetings or demonstrations of prohibited secret societies.

It shall be unlawful for any person to permit or agree to permit any members of a secret political society or a secret military society or a secret society having for a purpose the violating or circumventing the laws of the State to meet or to hold any demonstration in or upon any property owned or controlled by him. (1953, c. 1193, s. 4.)

§ 14-12.6. Meeting places and meetings of secret societies regulated.

Every secret society which has been or is now being formed and organized within the State, and which has members within the State shall forthwith provide or cause to be provided for each unit, lodge, council, group of members, grand lodge or general supervising unit a regular meeting place in some building or structure, and shall forthwith place and thereafter regularly keep a plainly visible sign or placard on the immediate exterior of such building or structure or on the immediate exterior of the meeting room or hall within such building or structure, if the entire building or structure is not controlled by such secret society, bearing upon said sign or placard the name of the secret society, the name of the particular unit, lodge, council, group of members, grand lodge or general supervising unit thereof and the name of the secretary, officer, organizer or member thereof who knows the purposes of the secret society and who knows or has a list of the names and addresses of the members thereof, and as such secretary, officer, organizer or member dies, removes, resigns or is replaced, his or her successor's name shall be placed upon such sign or placard; any person or persons who shall hereafter undertake to form and organize any secret society or solicit membership for a secret society within the State shall fully comply with the foregoing provisions of this section before forming and organizing such secret society and before soliciting memberships therein; all units, lodges, councils, groups of members, grand lodge and general supervising units of all secret societies within the State shall hold all of their secret meetings at the regular meeting place of their respective units, lodges, councils, group of members, grand lodge or general supervising units or at the regular meeting place of some other unit, lodge, council, group of members, grand lodge or general supervising unit of the same secret society, and at no other place unless notice is given of the time and place of the meeting and the name of the secret society holding the meeting in some newspaper having circulation in the locality where the meeting is to be held at least two days before the meeting. (1953, c. 1193, s. 5.)

§ 14-12.7. Wearing of masks, hoods, etc., on public ways.

No person or persons at least 16 years of age shall, while wearing any mask, hood or device whereby the person, face or voice is disguised so as to conceal the identity of the wearer, enter, be or appear upon any lane, walkway, alley, street, road, highway or other public way in this State. (1953, c. 1193, s. 6; 1983, c. 175, ss. 1, 10; c. 720, s. 4.)

§ 14-12.8. Wearing of masks, hoods, etc., on public property.

No person or persons shall in this State, while wearing any mask, hood or device whereby the person, face or voice is disguised so as to conceal the identity of the wearer, enter, or appear upon or within the public property of any municipality or county of the State, or of the State of North Carolina. (1953, c. 1193, s. 7.)

§ 14-12.9. Entry, etc., upon premises of another while wearing mask, hood or other disguise.

No person or persons at least 16 years of age shall, while wearing a mask, hood or device whereby the person, face or voice is disguised so as to conceal the identity of the wearer, demand entrance or admission, enter or come upon or into, or be upon or in the premises, enclosure or house of any other person in any municipality or county of this State. (1953, c. 1193, s. 8; 1983, c. 175, ss. 2, 10; c. 720, s. 4.)

§ 14-12.10. Holding meetings or demonstrations while wearing masks, hoods, etc.

No person or persons at least 16 years of age shall while wearing a mask, hood or device whereby the person, face or voice is disguised so as to conceal the identity of the wearer, hold any manner of meeting, or make any demonstration upon the private property of another unless such person or persons shall first obtain from the owner or occupier of the property his or her written permission to do so, which said written permission shall be recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the county in which said property is located before the beginning of such meeting or demonstration. (1953, c. 1193, s. 9; 1983, c. 175, ss. 3, 10; c. 720, s. 4.)

§ 14-12.11. Exemptions from provisions of Article.

The following are exempted from the provisions of G.S. 14-12.7, 14-12.8, 14-12.9, 14-12.10 and 14-12.14:

(1) Any person or persons wearing traditional holiday costumes in season;
(2) Any person or persons engaged in trades and employment where a mask is worn for the purpose of ensuring the physical safety of the wearer, or because of the nature of the occupation, trade or profession;
(3) Any person or persons using masks in theatrical productions including use in Mardi Gras celebrations and masquerade balls;

(4) Persons wearing gas masks prescribed in civil defense drills and exercises or emergencies; and

(5) Any person or persons, as members or members elect of a society, order or organization, engaged in any parade, ritual, initiation, ceremony, celebration or requirement of such society, order or organization, and wearing or using any manner of costume, paraphernalia, disguise, facial makeup, hood, implement or device, whether the identity of such person or persons is concealed or not, on any public or private street, road, way or property, or in any public or private building, provided permission shall have been first obtained therefor by a representative of such society, order or organization from the governing body of the municipality in which the same takes place, or, if not in a municipality, from the board of county commissioners of the county in which the same takes place.

Provided, that the provisions of this Article shall not apply to any preliminary meetings held in good faith for the purpose of organizing, promoting or forming a labor union or a local organization or subdivision of any labor union nor shall the provisions of this Article apply to any meetings held by a labor union or organization already organized, operating and functioning and holding meetings for the purpose of transacting and carrying out functions, pursuits and affairs expressly pertaining to such labor union. (1953, c. 1193, s. 10.)

§ 14-12.12. Placing burning or flaming cross on property of another or on public street or highway.

(a) It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to place or cause to be placed on the property of another in this State a burning or flaming cross or any manner of exhibit in which a burning or flaming cross, real or simulated, is a whole or a part, without first obtaining written permission of the owner or occupier of the premises so to do.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to place or cause to be placed on the property of another in this State or on a public street or highway, a burning or flaming cross or any manner of exhibit in which a burning or flaming cross real or simulated, is a whole or a part, with the intention of intimidating any person or persons or of preventing them from doing any act which is lawful, or causing them to do any act which is unlawful. (1953, c. 1193, s. 11; 1967, c. 522, ss. 1, 2.)

CASE NOTES

§ 14-12.13. Placing exhibit with intention of intimidating, etc., another.

It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to place or cause to be placed anywhere in this State any exhibit of any kind whatsoever, while masked or unmasked, with the intention of intimidating any person or persons, or of preventing them from doing any act which is lawful, or of causing them to do any act which is unlawful. (1953, c. 1193, s. 12.)

§ 14-12.14. Placing exhibit while wearing mask, hood, or other disguise.

It shall be unlawful for any person or persons, while wearing a mask, hood or device whereby the person, face or voice is disguised so as to conceal the identity of the wearer, to place or cause to be placed at or in any place in the State any exhibit of any kind whatsoever, with the intention of intimidating any person or persons, or of preventing them from doing any act which is lawful, or of causing them to do any act which is unlawful. (1953, c. 1193, s. 13; 1967, c. 522, s. 3.)

§ 14-12.15. Punishment for violation of Article.

All persons violating any of the provisions of this Article, except for G.S. 14-12.12(b), 14-12.13, and 14-12.14, shall be guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor. All persons violating the provisions of G.S. 14-12.12(b), 14-12.13, and 14-12.14 shall be punished as a Class I felon. (1953, c. 1193, s. 14; 1967, c. 602; 1979, c. 760, s. 5; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1316, s. 47; 1981, c. 63, s. 1; c. 179, s. 14; 1993, c. 539, s. 12; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c).)

Article 5.

Counterfeiting and Issuing Monetary Substitutes.

§ 14-13. Counterfeiting coin and uttering coin that is counterfeit.

If any person shall falsely make, forge or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged or counterfeited, or willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging or counterfeiting the resemblance or similitude or likeness of any coin of gold or silver which is in common use and received in the discharge of contracts by the citizens of the State; or shall pass, utter, publish or sell, or attempt to pass, utter, publish or sell, or bring into the State from any other place with intent to pass, utter, publish or sell as true, any such false, forged or counterfeited coin, knowing the same to be false, forged or counterfeited, with intent to defraud any person whatsoever, every person so offending shall be punished as a Class I felon. (1811, c. 814, s. 3, P.R.; R.C., c. 34, s. 64; Code, s. 1035; Rev., s. 3422; C.S., s. 4181; 1979, c. 760, s. 5; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1316, s. 47; 1981, c. 63, s. 1; c. 179, s. 14; 1993, c. 539, s. 1123; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c); 1995, c. 379, s. 1(a).)

Cross References. — For structured sentencing provisions effective October 1, 1994, see § 15A-1340.10 et seq. As to forgery, see § 14-119 et seq.

§ 14-14. Possessing tools for counterfeiting.

If any person shall have in his possession any instrument for the purpose of making any counterfeit similitude or likeness of any coin made of gold or silver which is in common use and received in discharge of contracts by the citizens of the State, and shall be duly convicted thereof, the person so offending shall be punished as a Class I felon. (1811, c. 814, s. 4, P.R.; R.C., c. 34, s. 65; Code, s. 1036; Rev., s. 3423; C.S., s. 4182; 1979, c. 760, s. 5; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1316, s. 47; 1981, c. 63, s. 1; c. 179, s. 14; 1993, c. 539, s. 1124; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c); 1995, c. 379, s. 1(b).)

CASE NOTES

Indictment Sufficient. — An indictment charging defendant with having in his possession "one pair of dies, upon which were made the likeness, similitude, figure and resemblance of the sides of a lawful Spanish milled silver dollar, etc., for the purpose of making and counterfeiting money in the likeness and similitude of Spanish milled silver dollars," was held to charge, with sufficient certainty, the offense designated in this section. State v. Collins, 10 N.C. 191 (1824).

§ 14-15. Issuing substitutes for money without authority.

If any person or corporation, unless the same be expressly allowed by law, shall issue any bill, due bill, order, ticket, certificate of deposit, promissory note or obligation, or any other kind of security, whatever may be its form or name, with the intent that the same shall circulate or pass as the representative of, or as a substitute for, money, he shall be guilty of a Class 3 misdemeanor and only punishable by a fine not to exceed the sum of fifty dollars ($50.00); and if the offender be a corporation, it shall in addition forfeit its charter. Every person or corporation offending against this section, or aiding or assisting therein, shall be guilty of a Class 3 misdemeanor and only punishable by a fine not to exceed fifty dollars ($50.00). (R.C., c. 36, s. 5; Code, s. 2493; 1895, c. 127; Rev., s. 3711; C.S., s. 4183; 1993, c. 539, s. 13; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c).)

Local Modification. — Cumberland: 1933, c. 33; Currituck: 1933, c. 328.

CASE NOTES

In General. — Act of 1816, c. 900, which was very similar to this section, was held constitutional and the intent in so issuing the notes, etc., was held an essential ingredient of the offense. In State v. Humphreys, 19 N.C. 555 (1837).

§ 14-16. Receiving or passing unauthorized substitutes for money.

If any person or corporation shall pass or receive, as the representative of, or as the substitute for, money, any bill, check, certificate, promissory note, or other security of the kind mentioned in G.S. 14-15, whether the same be issued within or without the State, such person or corporation, and the officers and agents of such corporation aiding therein, who shall offend against this section shall be guilty of a Class 3 misdemeanor and only punishable by a fine not to exceed five dollars ($5.00). (R.C., c. 36, s. 6; Code, s. 2494; 1895, c. 127; Rev., s. 3712; C.S., s. 4184; 1993, c. 539, s. 14; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c).)

CASE NOTES

Applicability. — Section making it an offense to "pass and receive" bank notes did not apply to a bank, but the bank should be penalized under another section which made it unlawful to make and issue notes of a less denomination than $3.00. State v. Bank of Fayetteville, 48 N.C. 450 (1856).

Article 5A.

Endangering Executive, Legislative, and Court Officers.

§ 14-16.6. Assault on executive, legislative, or court officer.

(a) Any person who assaults any legislative officer, executive officer, or court officer, or any person who makes a violent attack upon the residence, office, temporary accommodation or means of transport of any one of those officers in a manner likely to endanger the officer, shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished as a Class I felon.

(b) Any person who commits an offense under subsection (a) and uses a deadly weapon in the commission of that offense shall be punished as a Class F felon.

(c) Any person who commits an offense under subsection (a) and inflicts serious bodily injury to any legislative officer, executive officer, or court officer, shall be punished as a Class F felon. (1981, c. 822, s. 1; 1993, c. 539, s. 1125; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c); 1999-398, s. 1.)

§ 14-16.7. Threats against executive, legislative, or court officers.

(a) Any person who knowingly and willfully makes any threat to inflict serious bodily injury upon or to kill any legislative officer, executive officer, or court officer, shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished as a Class I felon.

(b) Any person who knowingly and willfully deposits for conveyance in the mail any letter, writing, or other document containing a threat to inflict serious bodily injury upon or to kill any legislative officer, executive officer, or court officer, shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished as a Class I felon. (1981, c. 822, s. 1; 1993, c. 539, s. 1126; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c); 1999-398, s. 1.)

§ 14-16.8. No requirement of receipt of the threat.

In prosecutions under G.S. 14-16.7 of this Article it shall not be necessary to prove that any legislative officer, executive officer, or court officer actually received the threatening communication or actually believed the threat. (1981, c. 822, s. 1; 1999-398, s. 1.)

§ 14-16.9. Officers-elect to be covered.

Any person who has been elected to any office covered by this Article but has not yet taken the oath of office shall be considered to hold the office for the purpose of this Article and G.S. 114-15. (1981, c. 822, s. 1.)

§ 14-16.10. Definitions.

The following definitions apply in this Article:

(1) Court officer. — Magistrate, clerk of superior court, acting clerk, assistant or deputy clerk, judge, or justice of the General Court of Justice; district attorney, assistant district attorney, or any other attorney designated by the district attorney to act for the State or on behalf of the district attorney; public defender or assistant defender; court reporter; juvenile court counselor as defined in G.S. 7B-1501(18a).

(2) Executive officer. — A person named in G.S. 147-3(c).

(3) Legislative officer. — A person named in G.S. 147-2(1), (2), or (3). (1999-398, s. 1; 2001-490, s. 2.35.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1999-398, s. 3, made this section effective December 1, 1999, and applicable to offenses committed on or after that date.

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-490, s. 2.35, effective June 30, 2001, in subdivision (1), inserted "juvenile" preceding "court counselor," and substituted "G.S. 7B-1501(18a)" for "G.S. 7B-1501(5)."

SUBCHAPTER III. OFFENSES AGAINST THE PERSON.

ARTICLE 6.

Homicide.

§ 14-17. Murder in the first and second degree defined; punishment.

A murder which shall be perpetrated by means of a nuclear, biological, or chemical weapon of mass destruction as defined in G.S. 14-288.21, poison, lying in wait, imprisonment, starving, torture, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration or attempted perpetration of any arson, rape or a sex offense, robbery, kidnapping, burglary, or other felony committed or attempted with the use of a deadly weapon shall be deemed to be murder in the first degree, a Class A felony, and any person who commits such murder shall be punished with death or imprisonment in the State's prison for life without parole as the court shall determine pursuant to G.S. 15A-2000, except that any such person who was under 17 years of age at the time of the murder shall be punished with imprisonment in the State's prison for life without parole. Provided, however, any person under the age of 17 who commits murder in the first degree while serving a prison sentence imposed for a prior murder or while on escape from a prison sentence imposed for a prior murder shall be punished with death or imprisonment in the State's prison for life without parole as the court shall determine pursuant to G.S. 15A-2000. All other kinds of murder, including that which shall be proximately caused by the unlawful distribution of opium or any synthetic or natural salt, compound, derivative, or preparation of opium, or cocaine or other substance described in G.S. 90-90(1) d., when the ingestion of such substance causes the death of the user, shall be deemed murder in the second degree, and any person who commits such murder shall be punished as a Class B2 felon. (1893, cc. 85, 281; Rev., s. 3631; C.S., s. 4200; 1949, c. 299, s. 1; 1973, c. 1201, s. 1; 1977, c. 406, s. 1; 1979, c. 682, s. 6; 1979, c. 760, s. 5; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1251, ss. 1, 2; c. 1316, s. 47; 1981, c. 63, s. 1; c. 179, s. 14; c. 662, s. 1; 1987, c. 693; 1989, c. 694; 1993, c. 539, s. 112; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 21, s. 1; c. 22, s. 4; c. 24, s. 14(c); 2001-470, s. 2.))

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2001-470, s. 5, provides that prosecutions for offenses occurring before the effective date of the act (November 28, 2001) are not abated or affected by the act, and the statutes that would be applicable but for the act remain applicable to those prosecutions.

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-470, s. 2, effective November 28, 2001, and applicable to offenses committed on or after that date, inserted "a nuclear, biological, or chemical weapon of mass destruction as defined in G.S. 14-288.21" in the first sentence of the section.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Section Not Unconstitutionally Vague. — In light of the common understanding of what defines torture, the section is not unconstitutionally vague and puts a reasonable person on notice of what is forbidden. State v. Crawford, 329 N.C. 466, 406 S.E.2d 579 (1991).

Failure of this section to define the term "deadly weapon" does not result in the statute being unconstitutionally vague. Furthermore, because North Carolina cases provide adequate notice of what constitutes a deadly weapon, a defendant is not deprived of due process. State v. Jones, 133 N.C. App. 448, 516 S.E.2d 405 (1999), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, and remanded, 353 N.C. 159, 538 S.E.2d 917 (2000).

Prior to 1893 there were no degrees of murder in North Carolina. Any unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, express or implied, was murder and punishable by death. State v. Benton, 276 N.C. 641, 174 S.E.2d 793 (1970); State v. Talbert, 282 N.C. 718, 194 S.E.2d 822 (1973); State v. Watkins, 283 N.C. 17, 194 S.E.2d 800, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1000, 94 S. Ct. 353, 38 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1973).

The degrees of homicide may be defined as follows: Murder in the first degree is the unlawful killing of another human being with malice and with premeditation and deliberation. Murder in the second degree is the unlawful killing of another human being with malice but without premeditation and deliberation. Voluntary manslaughter is the killing of another human being without malice and without premeditation and deliberation under the influence of some passion or heat of blood produced by adequate provocation. State v. Watson, 338 N.C. 168, 449 S.E.2d 694 (1994), overruled on other grounds, State v. Richardson, 341 N.C. 585, 461 S.E.2d 724 (1995).

There are two kinds of provocation relating to the law of homicide: One is that level of provocation which negates malice and reduces murder to voluntary manslaughter; the other is provocation sufficient to incite defendant to act suddenly and without deliberation. State v. Watson, 338 N.C. 168, 449 S.E.2d 694 (1994), overruled on other grounds, State v. Richardson, 341 N.C. 585, 461 S.E.2d 724 (1995).

Section Divides Murder into Four Classes. — This section does not divide first degree murder into separate offenses, each of which has its own essential elements, but divides the offense into four distinct classes, according to the proof required for each. State v. Brown, 320 N.C. 179, 358 S.E.2d 1, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 970, 108 S. Ct. 467, 98 L. Ed. 2d 406 (1987).

Purpose of Classifying Degrees of Murder. — This section intended to select out of all murders denounced those that were more heinous because committed with premeditation and deliberation, or in the perpetration or attempted perpetration of a felony, etc., as murder in the first degree, punishable with death, and leave other murders deemed less heinous as murder in the second degree, punishable by imprisonment. State v. Smith, 221 N.C. 278, 20 S.E.2d 313 (1942).

For history of this section, see State v. Kirksey, 227 N.C. 445, 42 S.E.2d 613 (1947); State v. Davis, 305 N.C. 400, 290 S.E.2d 574 (1982); State v. Strickland, 307 N.C. 274, 298 S.E.2d 645 (1983).

Repeal of Former § 15-162.1. — The repeal of § 15-162.1, relating to guilty pleas, leaving this section intact, showed the 1969 legislature's intent for this section to stand alone. State v. Atkinson, 275 N.C. 288, 167 S.E.2d 241 (1969), death sentence rev'd, Atkinson v. North Carolina, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2283, 29 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1971).

The repeal of § 15-162.1 did not modify, change, add to, or take from this section. State v. Hill, 276 N.C. 1, 170 S.E.2d 885 (1969), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2287, 29 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1971); State v. Roseboro, 276 N.C. 185, 171 S.E.2d 886 (1970), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2289, 29 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1971); Garner v. State, 8 N.C. App. 109, 174 S.E.2d 92 (1970).

Former § 15-162.1 did not alter this section, which is capable of standing alone. State v. Roseboro, 276 N.C. 185, 171 S.E.2d 886 (1970), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2289, 29 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1971); Garner v. State, 8 N.C. App. 109, 174 S.E.2d 92 (1970).

Applicability of Common-Law Definition. — By the Act of 1893, c. 85 (this section), the crime of murder has been divided into two degrees, first and second. The common-law definition and description are still applicable to the crime in the second degree; but it takes more than this to constitute murder in the first degree — the killing must be willful, deliberate and premeditated, and this must be shown by the State beyond a reasonable doubt before it is justified in asking a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. State v. Rhyne, 124 N.C. 847, 33 S.E. 128 (1899).

The statutes where murder is divided into two degrees have not, as a general rule, added to or taken away any ingredient of murder at common law, and every murder at common law is murder under the statutes. See State v. Rhyne, 124 N.C. 847, 33 S.E. 128 (1899); State v. Dalton, 178 N.C. 779, 101 S.E. 548 (1919); State v. Streeton, 231 N.C. 301, 56 S.E.2d 649 (1949).

This section does not give any new definition of murder, but permits that to remain as it was at common law. The section simply selects out of all murders denounced by common law those deemed more heinous on account of the mode of their perpetration, classifies them as murder in the first degree, and provides a greater punishment for them than that prescribed for "all other kinds of murder," which it denominates murder in the second degree. State v. Streeton, 231 N.C. 301, 56 S.E.2d 649 (1949).

The common-law "year and a day" rule has become "obsolete," within the meaning of that term as used in § 4-1, and the rule is no longer part of the common law of North Carolina for any purpose. State v. Vance, 328 N.C. 613, 403 S.E.2d 495 (1991).

A person is criminally responsible for a homicide only if his act caused or directly contributed to the death of the victim. State v. Brock, 305 N.C. 532, 290 S.E.2d 566 (1982), overruled on other grounds, State v. Taylor, 337 N.C. 597, 447 S.E.2d 360 (1994).

The corpus delicti in criminal homicide involves two elements: (1) the fact of the death, and (2) the existence of the criminal agency of another as the cause of death. State v. Jensen, 28 N.C. App. 436, 221 S.E.2d 717 (1976); State v. Perdue, 320 N.C. 51, 357 S.E.2d 345 (1987).

The corpus delicti consists of two requirements in homicide cases: (1) There must be a corpse or circumstantial evidence so strong and cogent that there can be no doubt of the death, and (2) the criminal agency must be shown. State v. Carroll, 85 N.C. App. 696, 355 S.E.2d 844, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 514, 358 S.E.2d 523 (1987).

Criminal Agency of Another. — Evidence of "criminal agency of another," as that phrase has been used in defining the corpus delicti in homicide cases, means evidence which tends to show that the deceased died not as the result of natural or accidental causes, but by the hand of another. State v. Perdue, 320 N.C. 51, 357 S.E.2d 345 (1987).

Proof Required in Homicide Cases. — In homicide cases, as in all criminal cases, the State must show that a crime was committed and that defendant committed it. State v. Perry, 293 N.C. 97, 235 S.E.2d 52 (1977); State v. Head, 79 N.C. App. 1, 338 S.E.2d 908 (1986).

In any prosecution for a homicide the State must prove two things: (1) That the deceased died by virtue of a criminal act; and (2) that the act was committed by the defendant. State v. Jones, 280 N.C. 60, 184 S.E.2d 862 (1971); State v. McCall, 286 N.C. 472, 212 S.E.2d 132 (1975), death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 912, 97 S. Ct. 301, 50 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1976); State v. Furr, 292 N.C. 711, 235 S.E.2d 193, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 924, 98 S. Ct. 402, 54 L. Ed. 2d 281 (1977); State v. Hooper, 79 N.C. App. 93, 339 S.E.2d 70 (1986), rev'd on other grounds, 318 N.C. 680, 351 S.E.2d 286 (1987).

Proof Must Be Beyond Reasonable Doubt. — It makes no difference whether the State is relying on circumstantial or direct evidence, or both, the evidence must produce in the mind of the jurors a moral certainty of the defendant's guilt, otherwise the State has not proven his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Westbrook, 279 N.C. 18, 181 S.E.2d 572 (1971), death sentence vacated, 408 U.S. 939, 92 S. Ct. 2873, 33 L. Ed. 2d 761 (1972).

Burden on State to Show Jurisdiction. — In a murder prosecution, the defendant's challenge to jurisdiction alleging the insufficiency of the evidence to show that the murder was committed in this State is not an affirmative defense. Rather, the State has the burden to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the courts of this State have jurisdiction to try the accused. Former cases to the contrary are no longer authoritative. State v. Batdorf, 293 N.C. 486, 238 S.E.2d 497 (1977).

Inversion of Order of Proof on Motion to Suppress Did Not Shift Burden. — In a prosecution for first-degree murder, the trial court did not err in requiring defendant to present his evidence before the State put on its evidence during a hearing on defendant's motion to suppress, and there was no merit to defendant's contention that the inversion of the order of proof resulted in a shift of the burden of proof, since the order of proof is merely a matter of practice without legal effect; there was nothing in the trial court's order denying defendant's motion to suppress to indicate that the trial judge believed otherwise; and defendant was not prejudiced by the order of proof because it resulted in his having to call one of the State's principal witnesses as his own. State v. Temple, 302 N.C. 1, 273 S.E.2d 273 (1981).

A killing done with malice and not in self-defense is murder, even though the person killed may have been seeking to effect an unlawful arrest upon the defendant. State v. Sanders, 295 N.C. 361, 245 S.E.2d 674 (1978), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 973, 102 S. Ct. 523, 70 L. Ed. 2d 392 (1981).

Use of Deadly Weapon. — In the absence of evidence of mitigating or justifying factors, all killings accomplished through the intentional use of a deadly weapon are deemed to be malicious and unlawful. State v. Porter, 326 N.C. 489, 391 S.E.2d 144 (1990).

Hands as Deadly Weapons. — When a strong or mature person makes an attack by hands alone on a small child, the jury may infer that the hands were used as deadly weapons. State v. Pierce, 346 N.C. 471, 488 S.E.2d 576 (1997).

Separate sentences for attempted first degree murder and assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill did not result in double jeopardy where each offense required proof of at least one element that the other did not. State v. Peoples, 141 N.C. App. 115, 539 S.E.2d 25 (2000).

Attempt to Kill Is Not Murder. — An attempt only, to kill, with the most diabolical intent, may be moral, but cannot be legal, murder. State v. Scates, 50 N.C. 420 (1858).

Principals and Accessories Distinguished. — The North Carolina law of homicide still maintains a careful distinction between principals and accessories. State v. Furr, 292 N.C. 711, 235 S.E.2d 193, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 924, 98 S. Ct. 402, 54 L. Ed. 2d 281 (1977).

There May Be Accessories to Murder in Both Degrees. — Since malice, express or implied, is a constituent element of murder in any degree, there may be accessories before the fact to the crime of murder in both degrees. State v. Benton, 276 N.C. 641, 174 S.E.2d 793 (1970).

Admittedly the concept of accessory before the fact presupposes some arrangement between the assessory and the principal with respect to the commission of the crime. It does not follow, however, that there can be no accessory before the fact to second-degree murder, which imports a specific intent to do an unlawful act. State v. Benton, 276 N.C. 641, 174 S.E.2d 793 (1970).

An accessory before the fact may be tried for first-degree murder although the principal has pled guilty to second-degree murder. State v. Larrimore, 340 N.C. 119, 456 S.E.2d 789 (1995).

Acting in Concert. — Under the principle of acting in concert, a person may be found guilty of an offense if he is present at the scene of the crime and the evidence is sufficient to show that he is acting together with another who does the acts necessary to constitute the crime pursuant to a common plan or purpose to commit the crime. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Independent Act by Subsequent Perpetrator. — If one man inflicts a mortal wound, of which the victim is languishing, and then a second kills the deceased by an independent act, we cannot imagine how the first can be said to have killed him, without involving the absurdity of saying that the deceased was killed twice. In such a case, the two persons could not be indicted as joint murderers, because there was no understanding, or connection between them. State v. Gibson, 333 N.C. 29, 424 S.E.2d 95 (1992), overruled on other grounds, 334 N.C. 402, 432 S.E.2d 349 (1993) (citing State v. Scates, 50 N.C. (5 Jones) 420, 423-24 (1848)).

One who procures another to commit murder is an accessory before the fact to murder. State v. Furr, 292 N.C. 711, 235 S.E.2d 193, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 924, 98 S. Ct. 402, 54 L. Ed. 2d 281 (1977).

The elements of being an accessory before the fact to murder are: (1) That defendant counseled, procured, commanded, encouraged or aided the principal to murder the victim; (2) that the principal did murder the victim; and (3) that defendant was not present when the crime was committed. State v. Sams, 317 N.C. 230, 345 S.E.2d 179 (1986); State v. Davis, 319 N.C. 620, 356 S.E.2d 340 (1987).

In cases where a defendant is prosecuted as an accessory before the fact to murder, the State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the actions or statements of the defendant somehow caused or contributed to the actions of the principal, which in turn caused the victim's death. State v. Davis, 319 N.C. 620, 356 S.E.2d 340 (1987).

Where one incites or employs a mental defective to kill another the question whether the employer is guilty as a principal depends upon whether the defective was criminally responsible for his act under the McNaughten rule. If the agent is legally responsible for his own acts, the instigator is only an accessory before the fact if he is absent when the crime is committed. State v. Benton, 276 N.C. 641, 174 S.E.2d 793 (1970).

Venue Allegations and Proof Not in Fatal Variance. — Where indictment alleged that felony murder occurred in Buncombe County and the evidence disclosed that the kidnapping, an essential element of the crime, occurred in Buncombe County, there was no fatal variance between the allegations in the indictment and proof at trial that victim actually died in Ashe County. State v. Vines, 317 N.C. 242, 345 S.E.2d 169 (1986).

Murder and Conspiracy Not Merged. — Failure of the trial judge to merge defendant's convictions when he granted codefendant's motion for merger of conspiracy conviction with first-degree murder conviction neither violated defendant's equal protection rights nor constituted error, where the evidence established that codefendant was not present at the actual murder, and his liability for the murder was predicated solely on his participation in the conspiracy, while defendant, on the other hand, not only conspired to murder victim, but actually participated in killing her. State v. Lowery, 318 N.C. 54, 347 S.E.2d 729 (1986).

Kidnapping Conviction Vacated. — Where the placing of a gag over the victim's mouth could not have been the proximate cause of her death without the binding of her hands and feet, which prevented the removal of the gag, so that the victim's death would not have occurred without these other ligatures, the restraint of the victim which resulted in her murder was indistinguishable from the restraint used by the State to support the kidnapping charge, and defendant's kidnapping conviction would be vacated. State v. Prevette, 317 N.C. 148, 345 S.E.2d 159 (1986).

First degree kidnapping is not a lesser included offense of murder. State v. Fernandez, 346 N.C. 1, 484 S.E.2d 350 (1997).

First degree kidnapping requires the State to prove facts not required to prove murder, and it addresses a distinct evil, the kidnapping of and failure to release the victim in a safe place or condition; thus, at least one essential element of each crime is not an element of the other. State v. Fernandez, 346 N.C. 1, 484 S.E.2d 350 (1997).

The charging of both felonious assault and attempted murder as to each victim was not error although these charges arose out of the same incident; substantial evidence existed against defendant of every essential element of both. State v. Washington, 141 N.C. App. 354, 540 S.E.2d 388 (2000), cert denied, 353 N.C. 396, 547 S.E.2d 427 (2001).

Killing of Viable But Unborn Child Is Not Murder. — Where second count charged that defendant unlawfully, willfully and feloniously did of malice aforethought kill and murder baby girl, a viable but unborn child, in violation of this section, trial judge improperly denied defendant's motion to dismiss second count of indictment since unlawful, willful and felonious killing of viable but unborn child is not murder within meaning of this section. State v. Beale, 324 N.C. 87, 376 S.E.2d 1 (1989).

Jurisdiction Shown. — Evidence as a whole amounted to a prima facie showing of jurisdiction sufficient to carry the case to the jury and to permit the jury to infer that the murder took place in this state, where the evidence tended to show that there was a breaking and entering at the victim's home, that acts of violence took place there, and that the cement block and rock used by the killer to sink the victim's body in creek were taken from the victim's yard; a reasonable inference from this evidence is that the victim was dead when the cement block and rock were taken from her yard and placed in her car with her body for use in its disposal. State v. Rick, 342 N.C. 91, 463 S.E.2d 182 (1995).

Instruction on Burden to Prove Jurisdiction Required. — Where the defendant challenged the facts of jurisdiction, but the trial court did not instruct the jury as to which party bore the burden of proving jurisdiction and that if the jury was unconvinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the murder, or the essential elements of murder, occurred in North Carolina, it should return a special verdict so indicating, it was necessary to remand the case for a new trial on the charge of second-degree murder. State v. Rick, 342 N.C. 91, 463 S.E.2d 182 (1995).

II. MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE GENERALLY.

Murder in the first degree is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice and with premeditation and deliberation. State v. Payne, 213 N.C. 719, 197 S.E. 573 (1938); State v. Hawkins, 214 N.C. 326, 199 S.E. 284 (1938); State v. Starnes, 220 N.C. 384, 17 S.E.2d 346 (1941); State v. Chavis, 231 N.C. 307, 56 S.E.2d 678 (1949); State v. Lamm, 232 N.C. 402, 61 S.E.2d 188 (1950); State v. Brown, 249 N.C. 271, 106 S.E.2d 232 (1958); State v. Downey, 253 N.C. 348, 117 S.E.2d 39 (1960); State v. Faust, 254 N.C. 101, 118 S.E.2d 769, cert. denied, 368 U.S. 851, 82 S. Ct. 85, 7 L. Ed. 2d 49 (1961); State v. Moore, 275 N.C. 198, 166 S.E.2d 652 (1969); State v. Robbins, 275 N.C. 537, 169 S.E.2d 858 (1969); State v. Reams, 277 N.C. 391, 178 S.E.2d 65 (1970), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 840, 92 S. Ct. 133, 30 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1971), overruled on other grounds, State v. Worsley, 336 N.C. 268, 443 S.E.2d 68 (1994); State v. Duboise, 279 N.C. 73, 181 S.E.2d 393 (1971); State v. Calloway, 305 N.C. 747, 291 S.E.2d 622 (1982); State v. Russell Council Judge, 308 N.C. 658, 303 S.E.2d 817 (1983); State v. Hamlet, 312 N.C. 162, 321 S.E.2d 837 (1984); State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985); State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673 (1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1986); State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986); State v. Jackson, 317 N.C. 1, 343 S.E.2d 814 (1986), vacated on other grounds, Jackson v. North Carolina, 479 U.S. 1077, 107 S. Ct. 1271, 94 L. Ed. 2d 133 (1987); State v. Saunders, 317 N.C. 308, 345 S.E.2d 212 (1986); State v. Fisher, 318 N.C. 512, 350 S.E.2d 334 (1986); State v. Bonney, 329 N.C. 61, 405 S.E.2d 145 (1991); State v. Geddie, 345 N.C. 73, 478 S.E.2d 146 (1996), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 825, 118 S. Ct. 86, 139 L. Ed. 2d 43 (1997).

Murder in the first degree is sometimes defined briefly as murder in the second degree plus premeditation. State v. Benton, 276 N.C. 641, 174 S.E.2d 793 (1980).

Murder in the first degree differs from murder in the second degree in that it requires premeditation and deliberation. State v. Marshall, 304 N.C. 167, 282 S.E.2d 422 (1981).

For discussion of language found in this section which defines murder in the first degree, see State v. Strickland, 307 N.C. 274, 298 S.E.2d 645 (1983).

Elements of First-Degree Murder. — In order to convict a defendant of first-degree murder the State is required to produce evidence which satisfies the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that he unlawfully killed a person with malice and in the execution of an actual specific intent to kill, formed after premeditation and deliberation. State v. Hamby, 276 N.C. 674, 174 S.E.2d 385 (1970), death sentence vacated, 408 U.S. 937, 92 S. Ct. 2862, 33 L. Ed. 2d 754 (1972); State v. Sanders, 276 N.C. 598, 174 S.E.2d 487 (1970), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2290, 29 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1971); State v. Mitchell, 288 N.C. 360, 218 S.E.2d 332 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3209, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1210 (1976).

Elements of First Degree Murder. — The elements required for conviction of first degree murder are (1) the unlawful killing of another human being; (2) with malice; and (3) with premeditation and deliberation. State v. Haynesworth, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 103, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 990 (2001).

Motive Is Not an Essential Element. — It is not necessary to a conviction of murder that the State prove motive. State v. Adams, 136 N.C. 617, 48 S.E. 589 (1904); State v. McDowell, 145 N.C. 563, 59 S.E. 690 (1907); State v. Van Landingham, 283 N.C. 589, 197 S.E.2d 539 (1973).

But Its Presence or Absence May Be Considered. — Motive is not an essential element of murder; however, while not necessary to be proven, motive or the absence of motive is a circumstance to be considered. State v. Barnwell, 17 N.C. App. 299, 194 S.E.2d 63, cert. denied, 283 N.C. 106, 194 S.E.2d 634 (1973).

Circumstances to Be Considered. — There is premeditation and deliberation when there are jury findings of (1) an absence of provocation on the part of the deceased, (2) the dealing of lethal blows by the defendants after the deceased had been rendered helpless, and (3) a killing accomplished in a brutal manner through the infliction of numerous mortal wounds. State v. Johnston, 331 N.C. 680, 417 S.E.2d 228 (1992).

In the context of attempted first-degree murder, circumstances that may tend to prove premeditation and deliberation include: (1) lack of provocation by the intended victim or victims; (2) conduct and statements of the defendant both before and after the attempted killing; (3) threats made against the intended victim or victims by the defendant; and (4) ill will or previous difficulty between the defendant and intended victim or victims. State v. Cozart, 131 N.C. App. 199, 505 S.E.2d 906 (1998).

The State's case may be strengthened by the showing of a motive when the evidence is circumstantial. State v. Turner, 143 N.C. 641, 57 S.E. 158 (1907); State v. Stratford, 149 N.C. 483, 62 S.E. 882 (1908); State v. Van Landingham, 283 N.C. 589, 197 S.E.2d 539 (1973).

It is not required that the State show motive for a killing, but evidence of motive, if otherwise admissible, is not only competent, but often very important, in strengthening the evidence for the prosecution. State v. Richards, 294 N.C. 474, 242 S.E.2d 844 (1978).

And motive may be shown to identify the prisoner as the perpetrator of the crime, and to establish malice, deliberation, and premeditation. State v. Adams, 138 N.C. 688, 50 S.E. 765 (1905); State v. Wilkins, 158 N.C. 603, 73 S.E. 992 (1912).

But motive, standing alone, is insufficient to support a conviction for murder. State v. Lee, 34 N.C. App. 106, 237 S.E.2d 315 (1977), aff'd, 294 N.C. 299, 240 S.E.2d 449 (1978).

A specific intent to kill is an essential element of first degree murder. State v. Duncan, 282 N.C. 412, 193 S.E.2d 65 (1972).

A specific intent to kill is a necessary constituent of the elements of premeditation and deliberation in first degree murder. State v. Propst, 274 N.C. 62, 161 S.E.2d 560 (1968); State v. Robbins, 275 N.C. 537, 169 S.E.2d 858 (1969); State v. Sparks, 285 N.C. 631, 207 S.E.2d 712 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 905, 96 S. Ct. 3213, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1212 (1976); State v. McLaughlin, 286 N.C. 597, 213 S.E.2d 238 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3206, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1208 (1976); State v. Cooper, 286 N.C. 549, 213 S.E.2d 305 (1975); State v. Shepherd, 288 N.C. 346, 218 S.E.2d 176 (1975); State v. Hammonds, 290 N.C. 1, 224 S.E.2d 595 (1976).

Before a conviction for murder can be had, an unlawful and intentional taking of another's life must be shown. Sometimes the intent may be imputed by reason of the killing with a deadly weapon, or by circumstances which indicate a reckless indifference to human life, but it must always exist before a charge of murder can be sustained. State v. Stitt, 146 N.C. 643, 61 S.E. 566 (1908).

It is the duty of the State to allege and prove that the killing, though done with a deadly weapon, was intentional or willful. State v. Phillips, 264 N.C. 508, 142 S.E.2d 337 (1965).

The act of killing, and the guilty intent, must concur to constitute the offense. State v. Scates, 50 N.C. 420 (1858).

The intent to kill must arise from a fixed determination previously formed after weighing the matter. State v. Myers, 309 N.C. 78, 305 S.E.2d 506 (1983); State v. Welch, 316 N.C. 578, 342 S.E.2d 789 (1986).

Burden of Persuasion as to Intent. — On the element of a deliberate and premeditated specific intent to kill in a first-degree murder case defendant has no burden of persuasion at all; the burden of persuasion on the existence of this element remains throughout the trial on the State. State v. Mash, 323 N.C. 339, 372 S.E.2d 532 (1988).

Formation of Intent. — The deliberate strangling of a person to death, taken in consideration with the statement of the victim that if her son left the room the defendant would kill her, and with her plea to the defendant to let her write a letter to her son before he killed her, presents sufficient evidence of intent to kill to submit to the jury. State v. Norman, 331 N.C. 738, 417 S.E.2d 233 (1992).

There was evidence from which a jury could find the defendant formed the intent to kill his wife for some period of time before the killing where the defendant said that as he was arguing with his wife, he remembered what a friend had told him about his son's passing out after holding his breath and the defendant decided to choke his wife until she passed out. State v. Norman, 331 N.C. 738, 417 S.E.2d 233 (1992).

State Must Show That Defendant Had Formed Purpose to Kill Deceased. — Before a conviction for murder in the first degree can be had, the State must show that the prisoner had formed, prior to the killing, with deliberation and premeditation, a purpose to kill deceased. State v. Terry, 173 N.C. 761, 92 S.E. 154 (1917); State v. Benson, 183 N.C. 795, 111 S.E. 869 (1922), overruled on other grounds, State v. Phillips, 264 N.C. 508, 142 S.E.2d 337 (1965). See 5 N.C.L. Rev. 364.

If the circumstances of the killing show a formed design to take life of deceased, the crime is murder in the first degree. State v. Walker, 173 N.C. 780, 92 S.E. 327 (1917); State v. Cain, 178 N.C. 724, 100 S.E. 884 (1919).

If defendant resolved in his mind a fixed purpose to kill his wife and thereafter, because of that previously formed intention and not because of any legal provocation on her part, he deliberately and intentionally shot her, the three essential elements of murder in the first degree, i.e., premeditation, deliberation, and malice, concurred. State v. Moore, 275 N.C. 198, 166 S.E.2d 652 (1969); State v. Martin, 303 N.C. 246, 278 S.E.2d 214, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 933, 102 S. Ct. 431, 70 L. Ed. 2d 240, rehearing denied, 454 U.S. 1117, 102 S. Ct. 693, 70 L. Ed. 2d 655 (1981).

But where defendant, intending to kill a certain person, by mistake inflicts fatal injuries on another, he is guilty in the same degree as though he had killed the person intended, and therefore an instruction that if the jury should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant intended to kill a certain person with malice and with premeditation and deliberation and that by mistake he shot and killed deceased, defendant would be guilty of murder in the first degree is without error. State v. Burney, 215 N.C. 598, 3 S.E.2d 24 (1939).

Where Intent and Act Are Simultaneous There Is No Murder in First Degree. — Where the intent to kill is formed simultaneously with the act of killing, the homicide is not murder in the first degree. State v. Dowden, 118 N.C. 1145, 24 S.E. 722 (1896); State v. Barrett, 142 N.C. 565, 54 S.E. 856 (1906).

Where the killing was the product of a specific intent to kill formed under the influence of the provocation of the quarrel or struggle itself, then there would be no deliberation and hence no murder in the first degree. State v. Misenheimer, 304 N.C. 108, 282 S.E.2d 791 (1981).

Although there may have been time for deliberation, if the purpose to kill was formed and immediately executed in a passion, especially if the passion was aroused by a recent provocation or by mutual combat, the murder is not deliberate and premeditated. State v. Misenheimer, 304 N.C. 108, 282 S.E.2d 791 (1981).

If the accused previously procured a weapon for the purpose of using it, and does use it, the offense is ordinarily murder. State v. Johnson, 172 N.C. 920, 90 S.E. 426 (1916).

Intent May Be Proved by Circumstantial Evidence. — Intent, a necessary element of murder in the second degree, is a mental attitude which can rarely be proved by direct evidence. It must ordinarily be proved by circumstances from which it can be inferred. State v. Hugenberg, 34 N.C. App. 91, 237 S.E.2d 327, cert. denied, 293 N.C. 591, 238 S.E.2d 151 (1977).

And Is Question for Jury. — The jury alone may determine whether an intentional killing has been established where no judicial admission of the fact is made by the defendant. State v. Todd, 264 N.C. 524, 142 S.E.2d 154 (1965).

Culpable negligence may not be used to satisfy the intent requirements for a first-degree murder charge under this section. State v. Jones, 353 N.C. 159, 538 S.E.2d 917 (2000).

Premeditation and Deliberation Are Essential Elements of First Degree Murder. — For a conviction of murder in the first degree the killing must be done with willful premeditation and determination. State v. McKay, 150 N.C. 813, 63 S.E. 1059 (1909); State v. Baldwin, 152 N.C. 822, 68 S.E. 148 (1910).

The law is fixed by the statute, that the killing must be willful, upon premeditation and with deliberation, and where there is no evidence tending to prove this, the jury should be so instructed, and the question of guilt on the charge of murder in the first degree ought not to be submitted to them. State v. Rhyne, 124 N.C. 847, 33 S.E. 128 (1899).

To convict a defendant of murder in the first degree, when the killing was not perpetrated by one of the means specified by this section and was not committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate a felony, the State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing was with premeditation and deliberation. State v. Cooper, 286 N.C. 549, 213 S.E.2d 305 (1975); Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

The evidence was sufficient to support conviction for murder by lying in wait where defendant entered victim's home while he was sleeping, armed himself, watched the victim come out of his room and followed him to the laundry room where he shot him. State v. Aikens, 342 N.C. 567, 467 S.E.2d 99 (1996).

Where defendant had to move from hallway into living room to retrieve gun and then return to shoot victim and afterwards defendant concealed the body and rifle and drove them to another town to dispose of them, the evidence permitted a reasonable inference that defendant premeditated and deliberated killing. State v. Jones, 342 N.C. 628, 467 S.E.2d 233 (1996).

And Must Be Shown in Addition to Presumption of Malice. — The presumption which arises from the use of a deadly weapon in the commission of a homicide is that the killing was unlawful and that it was done with malice, which constitutes murder in the second degree, and in order for such homicide to constitute murder in the first degree the State must show beyond a reasonable doubt that it was done with premeditation and deliberation. State v. Miller, 197 N.C. 445, 149 S.E. 590 (1929); State v. Perry, 209 N.C. 604, 184 S.E. 545 (1936); State v. Floyd, 226 N.C. 571, 39 S.E.2d 598 (1946); State v. Propst, 274 N.C. 62, 161 S.E.2d 560 (1968).

Unless Murder Was Committed by Means Specifically Stated in Section. — This section's plain language requires proof of premeditation only in a murder committed by some means not specifically stated in the statute. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

When a homicide is perpetrated by means of poison, lying in wait, imprisonment, starving or torture, the means and method used involves planning and purpose. Hence, the law presumes premeditation and deliberation. The act speaks for itself. State v. Dunheen, 224 N.C. 738, 32 S.E.2d 322 (1944).

Premeditation and Deliberation Generally. — Premeditation means that the act was thought out beforehand for some length of time, however short, but no particular amount of time is necessary for the mental process of premeditation. Deliberation means an intent to kill carried out in a cool state of blood, in furtherance of a fixed design for revenge or to accomplish an unlawful purpose and not under the influence of a violent passion, suddenly aroused by lawful or just cause or legal provocation. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

Premeditation and deliberation generally must be established by circumstantial evidence, because they ordinarily are not susceptible to proof by direct evidence. "Premeditation" means that the defendant formed the specific intent to kill the victim some period of time, however short, before the actual killing. "Deliberation" means an intent to kill executed by the defendant in a cool state of blood, in furtherance of a fixed design for revenge or to accomplish an unlawful purpose and not under the influence of a violent passion, suddenly aroused by lawful or just cause or legal provocation. State v. Bonney, 329 N.C. 61, 405 S.E.2d 145 (1991).

"Premeditation" means that the act was thought out beforehand for some length of time, however short, but no particular amount of time is necessary for the mental process of premeditation. State v. Cozart, 131 N.C. App. 199, 505 S.E.2d 906 (1998).

"Deliberation" means an intent to kill, carried out in a cool state of blood, in furtherance of a fixed design for revenge or to accomplish an unlawful purpose and not under the influence of a violent passion, suddenly aroused by lawful or just cause or legal provocation. State v. Cozart, 131 N.C. App. 199, 505 S.E.2d 906 (1998).

Premeditation and Deliberation Embrace Term "Malice Aforethought". — "Malice aforethought" was a term used in defining murder prior to the time of the adoption of this section dividing murder into degrees. As then used it did not mean an actual, express or preconceived disposition, but imported an intent, at the moment, to do without lawful authority, and without the pressure of necessity, that which the law forbade. As used in this section, the term premeditation and deliberation is more comprehensive and embraces all that is meant by aforethought, and more. State v. Hightower, 226 N.C. 62, 36 S.E.2d 649 (1946); State v. Benton, 276 N.C. 641, 174 S.E.2d 793 (1970).

Premeditation is a prior determination to do the act. State v. Cameron, 166 N.C. 379, 81 S.E. 748 (1914); State v. Bowser, 214 N.C. 249, 199 S.E. 31 (1938); State v. Hamilton, 19 N.C. App. 436, 199 S.E.2d 159, cert. denied, 284 N.C. 256, 200 S.E.2d 656 (1973); State v. Baggett, 293 N.C. 307, 237 S.E.2d 827 (1977); State v. Poole, 298 N.C. 254, 258 S.E.2d 339 (1979).

Premeditation means thought of beforehand, for some length of time, however short. State v. Benson, 183 N.C. 795, 111 S.E. 869 (1922), overruled on other grounds, State v. Phillips, 264 N.C. 508, 142 S.E.2d 337 (1965); State v. Hawkins, 214 N.C. 326, 199 S.E. 284 (1938); State v. Chavis, 231 N.C. 307, 56 S.E.2d 678 (1949); State v. Lamm, 232 N.C. 402, 61 S.E.2d 188 (1950); State v. Brown, 249 N.C. 271, 106 S.E.2d 232 (1958); State v. Faust, 254 N.C. 101, 118 S.E.2d 769, cert. denied, 368 U.S. 851, 82 S. Ct. 85, 7 L. Ed. 2d 49 (1961); State v. Sanders, 276 N.C. 598, 174 S.E.2d 487 (1970), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2290, 29 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1971); State v. Reams, 277 N.C. 391, 178 S.E.2d 65 (1970), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 840, 92 S. Ct. 133, 30 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1971), overruled on other grounds, State v. Worsley, 336 N.C. 268, 443 S.E.2d 68 (1994); State v. Fountain, 282 N.C. 58, 191 S.E.2d 674 (1972); State v. Britt, 285 N.C. 256, 204 S.E.2d 817 (1974); State v. Bush, 289 N.C. 159, 221 S.E.2d 333, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 809, 97 S. Ct. 46, 50 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1976); State v. Davis, 289 N.C. 500, 223 S.E.2d 296, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 809, 97 S. Ct. 47, 50 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1976); State v. Smith, 290 N.C. 148, 226 S.E.2d 10, cert. denied, 429 U.S. 932, 97 S. Ct. 339, 30 L. Ed. 2d 301 (1976); State v. Biggs, 292 N.C. 328, 233 S.E.2d 512 (1977); State v. Cates, 293 N.C. 462, 238 S.E.2d 465 (1977); State v. Thomas, 294 N.C. 105, 240 S.E.2d 426 (1978); State v. Hill, 294 N.C. 320, 240 S.E.2d 794 (1978); State v. Barbour, 295 N.C. 66, 243 S.E.2d 380 (1978); State v. Corn, 303 N.C. 293, 278 S.E.2d 221 (1981); State v. Hutchins, 303 N.C. 321, 279 S.E.2d 788 (1981); State v. Marshall, 304 N.C. 167, 282 S.E.2d 422 (1981); State v. Calloway, 305 N.C. 747, 291 S.E.2d 622 (1982); State v. Tysor, 307 N.C. 679, 300 S.E.2d 366 (1983); State v. Lowery, 309 N.C. 763, 309 S.E.2d 232 (1983); State v. Hamlet, 312 N.C. 162, 321 S.E.2d 837 (1984); State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985); State v. Fields, 315 N.C. 191, 337 S.E.2d 518 (1985); State v. Welch, 316 N.C. 578, 342 S.E.2d 789 (1986); State v. Saunders, 317 N.C. 308, 345 S.E.2d 212 (1986).

Premeditation means that defendant formed the specific intent to kill the victim for some period of time, however short, before the actual killing. State v. Misenheimer, 304 N.C. 108, 282 S.E.2d 791 (1981); State v. Truesdale, 340 N.C. 229, 456 S.E.2d 299 (1995).

"Premeditation" means that defendant formed the specific intent to kill for a period of time, however short, before the killing. State v. Lyons, 340 N.C. 646, 459 S.E.2d 770 (1995).

Deliberation does not require brooding or reflection for any appreciable length of time, but imports the execution of an intent to kill in a cool state of blood without legal provocation, and in furtherance of a fixed design. State v. Britt, 285 N.C. 256, 204 S.E.2d 817 (1974); State v. Myers, 299 N.C. 671, 263 S.E.2d 768 (1980); State v. Hutchins, 303 N.C. 321, 279 S.E.2d 788 (1981).

Deliberation means that the action was done in a cool state of blood and does not require reflection or brooding for an apparent length of time, but rather an intention to kill executed by defendant in furtherance of a fixed design to gratify a feeling of revenge or to accomplish some unlawful purpose and not under the influence of a violent passion, suddenly aroused by just cause or legal provocation. State v. Bush, 289 N.C. 159, 221 S.E.2d 333, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 809, 97 S. Ct. 46, 50 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1976).

Deliberation Means That the Act Is Done in Cool State of Blood. — It does not mean brooding over it or reflecting upon it for a week, a day or an hour, or any other appreciable length of time, but it means an intention to kill, executed by the defendant in a cool state of blood, in furtherance of a fixed design to gratify a feeling of revenge, or to accomplish some unlawful purpose, and not under the influence of a violent passion, suddenly aroused by some lawful or just cause or legal provocation. State v. Benson, 183 N.C. 795, 111 S.E. 869 (1922), overruled on other grounds, State v. Phillips, 264 N.C. 508, 142 S.E.2d 337 (1965); State v. Bowser, 214 N.C. 249, 199 S.E. 31 (1938); State v. Hawkins, 214 N.C. 326, 199 S.E. 284 (1938); State v. Chavis, 231 N.C. 307, 56 S.E.2d 678 (1949); State v. Lamm, 232 N.C. 402, 61 S.E.2d 188 (1950); State v. Brown, 249 N.C. 271, 106 S.E.2d 232 (1958); State v. Faust, 254 N.C. 101, 118 S.E.2d 769, cert. denied, 368 U.S. 851, 82 S. Ct. 85, 7 L. Ed. 2d 49 (1961); State v. Reams, 277 N.C. 391, 178 S.E.2d 65 (1970), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 840, 92 S. Ct. 133, 30 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1971), overruled on other grounds, State v. Worsley, 336 N.C. 268, 443 S.E.2d 68 (1994); State v. Fountain, 282 N.C. 58, 191 S.E.2d 674 (1972); State v. Hamilton, 19 N.C. App. 436, 199 S.E.2d 159, cert. denied, 284 N.C. 256, 200 S.E.2d 656 (1973); State v. Barbour, 295 N.C. 66, 243 S.E.2d 380 (1978); State v. Poole, 298 N.C. 254, 258 S.E.2d 339 (1979); State v. Forrest, 321 N.C. 186, 362 S.E.2d 252 (1987).

Deliberation means an intention to kill, executed by the defendant in a cool state of blood, in furtherance of a fixed design or to accomplish some unlawful purpose, and not under the influence of a violent passion, suddenly aroused by some lawful or just cause or legal provocation. State v. Sanders, 276 N.C. 598, 174 S.E.2d 487 (1970), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2290, 29 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1971); State v. Biggs, 292 N.C. 328, 233 S.E.2d 512 (1977); State v. Marshall, 304 N.C. 167, 282 S.E.2d 422 (1981); State v. Bush, 307 N.C. 152, 297 S.E.2d 563 (1982); State v. Tysor, 307 N.C. 679, 300 S.E.2d 366 (1983); State v. Russell Council Judge, 308 N.C. 658, 303 S.E.2d 817 (1983); State v. Lowery, 309 N.C. 763, 309 S.E.2d 232 (1983); State v. Hamlet, 312 N.C. 162, 321 S.E.2d 837 (1984); State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985); State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673 (1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1986); State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986); State v. Fisher, 318 N.C. 512, 350 S.E.2d 334 (1986).

Deliberation means an intention to kill, executed by defendant in a cool state of blood, in furtherance of a fixed design or to accomplish some unlawful purpose. State v. Davis, 289 N.C. 500, 223 S.E.2d 296, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 809, 97 S. Ct. 47, 50 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1976); State v. Smith, 290 N.C. 148, 226 S.E.2d 10, cert. denied, 429 U.S. 932, 97 S. Ct. 339, 50 L. Ed. 2d 301 (1976); State v. Cates, 293 N.C. 462, 238 S.E.2d 465 (1977); State v. Thomas, 294 N.C. 105, 240 S.E.2d 426 (1978); State v. Hill, 294 N.C. 320, 240 S.E.2d 794 (1978).

Deliberation means revolving over in the mind. A deliberate act is one done in a cool state of blood in furtherance of some fixed design. State v. Robbins, 275 N.C. 537, 169 S.E.2d 858 (1969).

An unlawful killing is committed with deliberation if it is done in a "cool state of blood," without legal provocation, and in furtherance of a fixed design to gratify a feeling of revenge, or to accomplish some unlawful purpose. State v. Corn, 303 N.C. 293, 278 S.E.2d 221 (1981); State v. Calloway, 305 N.C. 747, 291 S.E.2d 622 (1982); State v. Russell Council Judge, 308 N.C. 658, 303 S.E.2d 817 (1983); State v. Myers, 309 N.C. 78, 305 S.E.2d 506 (1983); State v. Welch, 316 N.C. 578, 342 S.E.2d 789 (1986); State v. Saunders, 317 N.C. 308, 345 S.E.2d 212 (1986).

Deliberation means that the defendant formed the intent to kill in a cool state of blood and not as a result of a violent passion due to sufficient provocation. State v. Truesdale, 340 N.C. 229, 456 S.E.2d 299 (1995).

"Deliberation" means that defendant formed an intent to kill and carried out that intent in a cool state of blood, in furtherance of a fixed design for revenge or other unlawful purpose and not under the influence of a violent passion, suddenly aroused by some lawful or just cause or legal provocation. State v. Lyons, 340 N.C. 646, 459 S.E.2d 770 (1995).

A defendant is said to have deliberated over a killing if he acted in a cool state of blood, in furtherance of a fixed design for revenge or to accomplish an unlawful purpose, and he was not under the influence of a violent passion suddenly aroused by lawful or just cause or legal provocation. State v. Owen, 130 N.C. App. 505, 503 S.E.2d 426 (1998), cert. denied, 349 N.C. 372, 525 S.E.2d 188 (1998).

And That the Intent Was Formed Likewise. — Deliberation means that the intent to kill was formed while defendant was in a cool state of blood and not under the influence of a violent passion suddenly aroused by sufficient provocation. State v. Misenheimer, 304 N.C. 108, 282 S.E.2d 791 (1981); State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of 414 U.S. 1000, 94 S. Ct. 353, 38 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1973).

"Cool state of blood" does not mean the absence of passion and emotions, but an unlawful killing is deliberate and premeditated if done pursuant to a fixed design to kill, notwithstanding that defendant was angry or in an emotional state at the time, unless such anger or emotion was such as to disturb the faculties and reason. State v. Britt, 285 N.C. 256, 204 S.E.2d 817 (1974); State v. Marshall, 304 N.C. 167, 282 S.E.2d 422 (1981); State v. Saunders, 317 N.C. 308, 345 S.E. 212 (1986); State v. Fisher, 318 N.C. 512, 350 S.E.2d 334 (1986).

In the context of determining the existence of deliberation, however, the term "cool state of blood" does not mean an absence of passion and emotion. One may deliberate, may premeditate, and may intend to kill after premeditation and deliberation, although prompted and, to a large extent, controlled by passion at the time. State v. Bonney, 329 N.C. 61, 405 S.E.2d 145 (1991).

"Deliberation" means that the intent to kill was formed while the defendant was in a cool state of blood and not under the influence of a violent passion suddenly aroused by sufficient provocation. In the context of determining the existence of deliberation, however, the term "cool state of blood" does not mean 'an absence of passion and emotion'". State v. Vause, 328 N.C. 231, 400 S.E.2d 57 (1991).

And the requirement of a cool state of blood does not mean that the defendant must be calm or tranquil. Premeditation and deliberation may be present even though the defendant is angry at the time of the killing, if he acts in the furtherance of a fixed design to kill. State v. Hamilton, 19 N.C. App. 436, 199 S.E.2d 159, cert. denied, 284 N.C. 256, 200 S.E.2d 656 (1973); State v. Fields, 315 N.C. 191, 337 S.E.2d 518 (1985).

But Defendant's Emotion Must Not Have Disturbed His Faculties or Reason. — The term "cool state of blood" does not mean that the defendant must be calm or tranquil or display the absence of emotion; rather, the defendant's anger or emotion must not have been such as to disturb the defendant's faculties and reason. State v. Tysor, 307 N.C. 679, 300 S.E.2d 366 (1983).

The phrase "cool state of blood" means that the defendant's anger or emotion must not have been such as to overcome the defendant's reason. State v. Hamlet, 312 N.C. 162, 321 S.E.2d 837 (1984); State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673 (1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1986); State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

Passion does not always reduce the crime of murder, since a man may deliberate, may premeditate, and may intend to kill after premeditation and deliberation, although prompted and to a large extent controlled by passion at the time; if the design to kill was formed with deliberation and premeditation, it is immaterial that defendant was in a passion or excited when the design was carried into effect. State v. Misenheimer, 304 N.C. 108, 282 S.E.2d 791 (1981).

An unlawful killing is deliberate and premeditated if done pursuant to a fixed design to kill, notwithstanding that defendant was angry or in an emotional state at the time, unless such anger or emotion was such as to disturb the faculties and reason. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of State v. Spaulding, 288 N.C. 397, 219 S.E.2d 178 (1975).

Killing committed during the course of a quarrel or scuffle may constitute first-degree murder provided defendant formed the intent to kill in a cool state of blood before the quarrel or scuffle began and the killing during the quarrel was the product of this earlier formed intent. State v. Misenheimer, 304 N.C. 108, 282 S.E.2d 791 (1981).

The fact that there was a quarrel does not preclude the possibility that the defendant formed the intent to kill with premeditation and deliberation. State v. Russell Council Judge, 308 N.C. 658, 303 S.E.2d 817 (1983).

No particular period of time is necessary to constitute premeditation and deliberation for a conviction of murder in the first degree. If the purpose to kill at all events has been deliberately formed, the interval which elapses before its execution is immaterial. State v. Coffey, 174 N.C. 814, 94 S.E. 416 (1917); State v. Holdsclaw, 180 N.C. 731, 105 S.E. 181 (1920).

Weighing the purpose to kill long enough to form a fixed design, and the putting of such design into execution at a future period, no matter how long deferred, constitutes premeditation and deliberation sufficient to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree. State v. Dowden, 118 N.C. 1145, 24 S.E. 722 (1896).

Where one forms a purpose to take the life of another and weighs this purpose in his mind ltent. State v. Misenheimer, 304 N.C. 108, 282 S.E.2d 791 (1981).

The fact that there was a quarrel does not preclude the possibility that the defendant formed the intent to kill with premeditation and deliberation. State v. Russell Council Judge, 308 N.C. 658, 303 S.E.2d 817 (1983).

No particular period of time is necessary to constitute premeditation and deliberation for a conviction of murder in the first degree. If the purpose to kill at all events has been deliberately formed, the interval which elapses before its execution is immaterial. State v. Coffey, 174 N.C. 814, 94 S.E. 416 (1917); State v. Holdsclaw, 180 N.C. 731, 105 S.E. 181 (1920).

Weighing the purpose to kill long enough to form a fixed design, and the putting of such design into execution at a future period, no matter how long deferred, constitutes premeditation and deliberation sufficient to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree. State v. Dowden, 118 N.C. 1145, 24 S.E. 722 (1896).

Where one forms a purpose to take the life of another and weighs this purpose in his mind long enough to form a fixed design or determination to kill at a subsequent time, no matter how soon or how late, and pursuant thereto kills, this would be a killing with premeditation and deliberation and would be murder in the first degree. State v. Bock, 288 N.C. 145, 217 S.E.2d 513 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3208, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1209 (1976).

Premeditation means thought over beforehand for some length of time, however short, but no particular time is required for the mental process of premeditation. State v. Robbins, 275 N.C. 537, 169 S.E.2d 858 (1969); State v. Myers, 299 N.C. 671, 263 S.E.2d 768 (1980); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673 (1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1986); State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986); State v. Fisher, 318 N.C. 512, 350 S.E.2d 334 (1986).

And deliberation and premeditation need not be of any perceptible length of time. State v. Bynum, 175 N.C. 777, 95 S.E. 101 (1917); State v. Burney, 215 N.C. 598, 3 S.E.2d 24 (1939); State v. Hammonds, 216 N.C. 235, 4 S.E.2d 439 (1939).

No fixed length of time is required for the mental processes of premeditation and deliberation constituting first-degree murder. State v. Hutchins, 303 N.C. 321, 279 S.E.2d 788 (1981).

The killing of a human being after the fixed purpose to do so has been formed, for however short a time, is sufficient for the conviction of murder in the first degree. State v. Walker, 173 N.C. 780, 92 S.E. 327 (1917).

It Is Sufficient if Premeditation and Deliberation Occur Prior to the Killing. — No fixed length of time is required for the mental processes of premeditation and deliberation constituting an element of the offense of murder in the first degree, and it is sufficient if these processes occur prior to, and not simultaneously with, the killing. State v. Walters, 275 N.C. 615, 170 S.E.2d 484 (1969); State v. Perry, 276 N.C. 339, 172 S.E.2d 541 (1970).

Premeditation is thought beforehand for some length of time, however short. No particular length of time is required; it is sufficient if the process of premeditation occurred at any point prior to the killing. State v. Myers, 309 N.C. 78, 305 S.E.2d 506 (1983); State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Time for Premeditation Varies with Circumstances. — The true test for premeditation is not the duration of time as much as it is the extent of the reflection and the time for premeditation would naturally vary with different individuals and under differing circumstances. State v. Buchanan, 287 N.C. 408, 215 S.E.2d 80 (1975), overruled on other grounds, State v. Leach, 340 N.C. 236, 456 S.E.2d 785 (1995).

Proof of Premeditation and Deliberation Is Proof of Intent to Kill. — Since a specific intent to kill is a necessary constituent of the elements of premeditation and deliberation, proof of premeditation and deliberation is also proof of intent to kill. State v. Lowery, 309 N.C. 763, 309 S.E.2d 232 (1983); State v. Quesinberry, 319 N.C. 228, 354 S.E.2d 446 (1987), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated and remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, 328 N.C. 288, 401 S.E.2d 632 (1991).

Premeditation and Deliberation Must Usually Be Proved by Circumstantial Evidence. — Premeditation and deliberation are not ordinarily susceptible of proof by direct evidence and therefore must usually be proved by circumstantial evidence. State v. Watson, 222 N.C. 672, 24 S.E.2d 540 (1943); State v. Faust, 254 N.C. 101, 118 S.E.2d 769, cert. denied, 368 U.S. 851, 82 S. Ct. 85, 7 L. Ed. 2d 49 (1961); State v. Walters, 275 N.C. 615, 170 S.E.2d 484 (1969); State v. Perry, 276 N.C. 339, 172 S.E.2d 541 (1970); State v. Sanders, 276 N.C. 598, 174 S.E.2d 487 (1970), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2290, 29 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1971); State v. Duncan, 282 N.C. 412, 193 S.E.2d 65 (1972); State v. Van Landingham, 283 N.C. 589, 197 S.E.2d 539 (1973); State v. Hamilton, 19 N.C. Calloway, 305 N.C. 747, 291 S.E.2d 622 (1982); State v. Hamlet, 312 N.C. 162, 321 S.E.2d 837 (1984); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673 (1986); State v. Quesinberry, 319 N.C. 228, 354 S.E.2d 446 (1987), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, 328 N.C. 288, 401 S.E.2d 632 (1991).

Premeditation and deliberation usually are not proved by direct evidence but by actions and circumstances surrounding the killing. State v. Truesdale, 340 N.C. 229, 456 S.E.2d 299 (1995).

Premeditation and deliberation are processes of the mind and are not subject to proof by direct evidence but must be proved, if at all, by circumstantial evidence. State v. Vause, 328 N.C. 231, 400 S.E.2d 57 (1991).

Since They Involve Processes of the Mind. — Since premeditation and deliberation refer to processes of the mind, they must almost always be proved, if at all, by circumstantial evidence. State v. Potter, 295 N.C. 126, 244 S.E.2d 397 (1978); State v. Corn, 303 N.C. 293, 278 S.E.2d 221 (1981); State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985); State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985); State v. Fisher, 318 N.C. 512, 350 S.E.2d 334 (1986).

Premeditation and deliberation relate to mental processes and ordinarily are not readily susceptible to proof by direct evidence. Instead, they usually must be proved by circumstantial evidence. State v. Jackson, 317 N.C. 1, 343 S.E.2d 814 (1986), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 479 U.S. 1077, 107 S. Ct. 1271, 94 L. Ed. 2d 133 (1987); 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2289, 29 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1971).

Prosecutor's Statements that Jury Could Infer Premeditation from Circumstances Held Permissible. — Where defendant was convicted of murdering victim by strangulation, prosecutor's statements did not impermissibly eliminate the State's burden to prove the elements of premeditation and deliberation; because the prosecutor was arguing that the jury could infer premeditation and deliberation from the circumstances and manner in which defendant killed the victim, the argument was not an incorrect statement of law. State v. Richardson, 328 N.C. 505, 402 S.E.2d 401 (1991).

Circumstances to Be Considered in Determining Premeditation and Deliberation. — Among the circumstances to be considered in determining whether a killing was with premeditation and deliberation are: (1) want of provocation on the part of the deceased; (2) the conduct and statements of the defendant before and after the killing; (3) threats and declarations of the defendant before and during the course of the occurrence giving rise to the death of the deceased; (4) ill-will or previous difficulty between the parties; (5) the dealing of lethal blows after the deceased has been felled and rendered helpless; and (6) evidence that the killing was done in a brutal manner. State v. Hamlet, 312 N.C. 162, 321 S.E.2d 837 (1984); State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985); State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673 (1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1986); State v. Jackson, 317 N.C. 1, 343 S.E.2d 814 (1986), vacated on other grounds, Jackson v. North Carolina, 479 U.S. 1077, 107 S. Ct. 1271, 94 L. Ed. 2d 133 (1987); State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986); State v. Fisher, 318 N.C. 512, 350 S.E.2d 334 (1986); State v. Lloyd, 89 N.C. App. 630, 366 S.E.2d 912, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 483, 370 S.E.2d 231, 370 S.E.2d 232 (1988).

For additional cases setting out some or all of the above circumstances as factors to be considered in determining whether a killing was with premeditation and deliberation, see State v.

Hawkins, 214 N.C. 326, 199 S.E. 284 (1938); State v. Chavis, 231 N.C. 307, 56 S.E.2d 678 (1949); State v. Lamm, 232 N.C. 402, 61 S.E.2d 188 (1950); State v. Barbour, 295 N.C. 66, 243 S.E.2d 380 (1978); State v. Potter, 295 N.C. 126, 244 S.E.2d 397 (1978); State v. Myers, 299 N.C. 671, 263 S.E.2d 768 (1980); State v. Corn, 303 N.C. 293, 278 S.E.2d 221 (1981); State v. Calloway, 305 N.C. 747, 291 S.E.2d 622 (1982); State v. Hamlet, 312 N.C. 162, 321 S.E.2d 837 (1984); State v. Saunders, 317 N.C. 308, 345 S.E.2d 212 (1986); State v. Harris, 323 N.C. 112, 371 S.E.2d 689 (1988).

Among the circumstances that may be considered in determining whether a killing was with premeditation and deliberation are (1) a lack of provocation on the part of the deceased, (2) the conduct and statements of the defendant before and after the killing, (3) the dealing of lethal blows after the deceased has been felled and rendered helpless, (4) evidence that the killing was done in a brutal manner, and (5) the nature and number of the victim's wounds. State v. Quesinberry, 319 N.C. 228, 354 S.E.2d 446 (1987), aff'd, 325 N.C. 125, 381 S.E.2d 681 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Quesinberry, 328 N.C. 288, 401 S.E.2d 632 (1991); State v. Holshouser, 15 N.C. App. 469, 190 S.E.2d 420 (1972).

Among other circumstances to be considered in determining whether a killing was with premeditation and deliberation are: (1) want of provocation on the part of the deceased; (2) the conduct and statements of the defendant before and after the killing; (3) threats and declarations of the defendant before and during the course of the occurrence giving rise to the death of the deceased; (4) ill-will or previous difficulty between the parties; (5) the dealing of lethal blows after the deceased has been felled and rendered helpless; and (6) evidence that the killing was done in a brutal manner. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

Among other circumstances from which premeditation and deliberation may be inferred are (1) lack of provocation on the part of the deceased, (2) the conduct and statements of the defendant before and after the killing, (3) threats and declarations of the defendant before and during the occurrence giving rise to the death of the deceased, (4) ill-will or previous difficulty between the parties, (5) the dealing of lethal blows after the deceased has been felled and rendered helpless, (6) evidence that the killing was done in a brutal manner, and (7) the nature and number of the victim's wounds. State v. Vause, 328 N.C. 231, 400 S.E.2d 57 (1991).

Same — Brutality. — Evidence tending to show that defendant stabbed his victim no less than thirty-nine times and that he stabbed her repeatedly with sufficient force to bend the first knife he used before he picked up a second knife to complete the murderous attack permitted a reasonable finding that the killing was especially brutal and the defendant struck many of the deadly blows after the victim had been felled and rendered helpless. Such evidence, standing alone, was substantial evidence tending to show premeditation and deliberation. State v. Vause, 328 N.C. 231, 400 S.E.2d 57 (1991).

Same — Previous Hostile Feelings and Prior Assaults. — Previously existing hostile feelings between defendant and deceased, a prior assault upon the deceased by defendant, the use of grossly excessive force and killing in an unusually brutal way have all been held to be circumstances tending to show premeditation and deliberation. State v. Patterson, 288 N.C. 553, 220 S.E.2d 600 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3211, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1211 (1976).

In a prosecution for murder in the first degree, malice on the part of defendant could be established by inference from the use of a deadly weapon and by surrounding circumstances which included two earlier assaults and accusations concerning deceased's romantic relationship with defendant's wife. State v. Alston, 44 N.C. App. 72, 259 S.E.2d 767 (1979), cert. denied, 304 N.C. 589, 290 S.E.2d 709 (1981).

Same — Nature and Number of Wounds. — The nature and number of the victims' wounds is one circumstance from which an inference of premeditation and deliberation can be drawn. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982); State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673 (1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1986); State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986); State v. Fisher, 318 N.C. 512, 350 S.E.2d 334 (1986).

In determining whether a defendant acted after premeditation and deliberation, the nature of wounds to a victim is a circumstance to be considered. State v. Bearthes, 329 N.C. 149, 405 S.E.2d 170 (1991).

Same — Unseemly Conduct Toward and Concealment of Body. — Any unseemly conduct toward the corpse of the person slain, or any indignity offered it by the slayer, and also concealment of the body, are evidence of express malice, and of premeditation and deliberation in the slaying, depending, of course, upon the particular circumstances of the case. State v. Westbrook, 279 N.C. 18, 181 S.E.2d 572 (1971), death sentence vacated, 408 U.S. 939, 92 S. Ct. 2873, 33 L. Ed. 2d 761 (1972).

Same — Vicious and Brutal Slaying. — Premeditation and deliberation may be inferred from the vicious and brutal slaying of a human being. State v. Reams, 277 N.C. 391, 178 S.E.2d 65 (1970), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 840, 92 S. Ct. 133, 30 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1971), overruled on other grounds, State v. Worsley, 336 N.C. 268, 443 S.E.2d 68 (1994).

The ingredients of premeditation and deliberation necessary in first-degree murder may be inferred from the vicious and brutal circumstances of the homicide indicating a complete lack of provocation and a viciousness which demonstrates that death was the actor's objective. State v. DeGregory, 285 N.C. 122, 203 S.E.2d 794 (1974).

State Must Prove Premeditation and Deliberation in Death by Strangulation. — Because strangulation is not among the methods of killing expressly established by this section as murder in the first degree, the State must prove premeditation and deliberation. State v. Richardson, 328 N.C. 505, 402 S.E.2d 401 (1991).

Inference of Malice from Attack on Infant. — Where defendant had nearly exclusive care of 30 day old child on the day in question, and testimony that fatal blows received by the victim likely occurred very shortly, perhaps a minute, before death, it was proper to instruct the jury that malice could be inferred from the attack of human hands alone. State v. Perdue, 320 N.C. 51, 357 S.E.2d 345 (1987).

The jury's finding of malice required for a second-degree murder conviction was supported by the State's evidence that defendant's blood alcohol level was 0.113 three hours after the accident, that the collision occurred in the victim's lane of travel, and that, at the time of the accident, charges of driving while impaired and driving while license revoked were pending against defendant. State v. Gray, 137 N.C. App. 345, 528 S.E.2d 46 (2000).

Where an adult has exclusive custody of a child for a period of time, and during such time the child suffers injuries which are neither self-inflicted nor accidental, the evidence is sufficient to create an inference that the adult inflicted the injuries. State v. Perdue, 320 N.C. 51, 357 S.E.2d 345 (1987).

No Presumption of Premeditation and Deliberation from Use of Deadly Weapon. — Premeditation and deliberation necessary to constitute murder in the first degree are not presumed from a killing with a deadly weapon. State v. Chavis, 231 N.C. 307, 56 S.E.2d 678 (1949); State v. Reams, 277 N.C. 391, 178 S.E.2d 65 (1970), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 840, 92 S. Ct. 133, 30 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1971), overruled on other grounds, State v. Worsley, 336 N.C. 268, 443 S.E.2d 68 (1994). See also, State v. Hawkins, 214 N.C. 326, 199 S.E. 284 (1938); State v. Lamm, 232 N.C. 402, 61 S.E.2d 188 (1950); State v. Brown, 249 N.C. 271, 106 S.E.2d 232 (1958).

Argument Not Grossly Improper. — In first-degree murder trial where prosecutor stated that deliberation meant a "cold-blooded murder" and that it did not include the case where a man comes home and "finds his wife shacked up there with somebody," such an example offered for the sake of comparison was not so grossly improper as to require the trial court to intervene ex mero motu. State v. Porter, 326 N.C. 489, 391 S.E.2d 144 (1990).

Instruction on Deliberation and Premeditation — Held Proper. — An instruction on deliberation that so long as the killing was the product of premeditation and deliberation it was murder in the first degree, notwithstanding that the execution thereof might have been done while the defendant was in a state of anger, passion, or emotional excitement, was a correct statement of law. State v. Potter, 295 N.C. 126, 244 S.E.2d 397 (1978).

Judge's instruction to the jury in a first-degree murder case that the jury, in determining premeditation and deliberation, may consider the "absence of provocation", did not express a court opinion that there was no evidence of provocation in the case. State v. Fowler, 285 N.C. 90, 203 S.E.2d 803 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3212, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1212 (1976).

Where evidence showed there was blood throughout the house, the victim was found against the base of the couch, and she had many slash wounds on her body, including two deep wounds capable of causing death, this evidence supported the state's theory that defendant slashed the victim as she attempted to escape from him, chased her into the living room where she fell to the floor, and then stabbed her to death; therefore, the trial court did not err in instructing the jury that premeditation and deliberation may be proved by "the infliction of lethal blows after the victim was felled." State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990), in light of State v. Wilkerson, 295 N.C. 559, 247 S.E.2d 905 (1978).

Preliminary Question of Sufficiency of Evidence to Be Determined by Court. — In a first-degree murder prosecution, the trial court must determine the preliminary question whether the evidence, in its light most favorable to the State, is sufficient to permit the jury to make a legitimate inference and finding that the defendant, after premeditation and deliberation, formed a fixed purpose to kill and thereafter accomplished the purpose. State v. Walters, 275 N.C. 615, 170 S.E.2d 484 (1969).

In order for the trial court to submit a charge of first-degree murder to the jury, there must have been substantial evidence presented from which a jury could determine that the defendant intentionally shot and killed the victim with malice, premeditation and deliberation. "Substantial evidence" is that amount of relevant evidence that a reasonable mind might accept as sufficient to support a conclusion. State v. Myers, 309 N.C. 78, 305 S.E.2d 506 (1983).

Attempt. — The offense of "attempted first degree felony murder" does not exist under North Carolina law, as this charge is a logical impossibility in that it would require the defendant to intend what is by definition an unintentional result. State v. Lea, 126 N.C. App. 440, 485 S.E.2d 874 (1997).

Evidence Held Sufficient. — Testimony of facts and circumstances which occurred after the commission of a homicide which tended to show a preconceived plan formed and carried out by the prisoner in detail, resulting in his actual killing of the deceased by two pistol shots, without excuse, with evidence that he thereafter stated he had done as he had intended, was competent upon the question of deliberation and premeditation, under the evidence in the case, to sustain a verdict of murder in the first degree. State v. Westmoreland, 181 N.C. 590, 107 S.E. 438 (1921).

Defendant's want of provocation, absence of excuse, lack of justification, and statement that he shot a person "to prove a point", all permitted, if not compelled, a legitimate inference of premeditation and deliberation. State v. Rich, 277 N.C. 333, 177 S.E.2d 422 (1970).

Where there was no evidence that the deceased had any weapon or at any time offered any threat to defendant, the want of provocation and absence of any excuse or justification, coupled with the other evidence, permitted a legitimate inference of premeditation and deliberation and was sufficient to be submitted to the jury on the issue of murder in the first degree. State v. Duncan, 282 N.C. 412, 193 S.E.2d 65 (1972).

The want of provocation, the absence of any excuse or justification for the shooting, the number of shots fired or attempted to be fired, and the fact that defendant ran immediately after the shooting, coupled with the other evidence, permitted a legitimate inference of premeditation and deliberation, and was sufficient to be submitted to the jury on the issue of murder in the first degree. State v. Sparks, 285 N.C. 631, 207 S.E.2d 712 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 905, 96 S. Ct. 3213, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1212 (1976).

State's evidence was sufficient to be submitted to the jury on the issue of defendant's guilt of conspiracy to commit murder, where there was evidence that defendant had discussed the murder with another and the means by which it might be accomplished, that defendant sent the coconspirator a picture of the victim for identification purposes, that defendant sent sums of money to the coconspirator, and that after an unsuccessful attempt was made upon the victim's life, defendant had stated to a friend, who had introduced her to the coconspirator, that the coconspirator knew somebody who would "finish the job." State v. Graham, 24 N.C. App. 591, 211 S.E.2d 805, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 262, 214 S.E.2d 434 (1975).

Where defendant was not harmed by the victim in any way and did not believe that he would have had any difficulty in defending himself against her, and the victim's death was an unnecessary and senseless killing; where the 55 stab wounds constituted grossly excessive force; and where force which would have been lethal had the victim not already been dead was applied when an automobile was driven over her felled body, the evidence was sufficient to take the issue of defendant's guilt of first-degree murder to the jury. State v. Bock, 288 N.C. 145, 217 S.E.2d 513 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3208,

49 L. Ed. 2d 1209 (1976).

In a prosecution for first-degree murder, the evidence was sufficient to withstand a motion for nonsuit where it tended to show that deceased died as a result of a gunshot wound inflicted by a shot fired from a trailer; defendant, a short time before the shooting, had test fired a 12 gauge shotgun; 12 gauge shotgun wadding was found in a straight line between the trailer and the bodies after the shooting; a freshly-fired 12 gauge shotgun was later found in defendant's house hidden between the quilts and mattress of the bed; and defendant was the only person in the trailer when the fatal shots were fired. State v. McCall, 289 N.C. 512, 223 S.E.2d 303, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 912, 97 S. Ct. 301, 50 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1976).

Evidence held sufficient to establish that victim was dead, and to allow the reasonable inference that she died by criminal agency and that the criminal agent was the defendant, despite the fact that her body was never found. State v. Head, 79 N.C. App. 1, 338 S.E.2d 908, cert. denied, 316 N.C. 736, 345 S.E.2d 395 (1986).

Evidence held sufficient for the jury to determine that the defendant intentionally killed robbery victim with premeditation and deliberation. State v. Welch, 316 N.C. 578, 342 S.E.2d 789 (1986).

For additional cases in which evidence of first degree murder was held sufficient, see State v. Faust, 254 N.C. 101, 118 S.E.2d 769, cert. denied, 368 U.S. 851, 82 S. Ct. 85, 7 L. Ed. 2d 49 (1961); State v. Sanders, 276 N.C. 598, 174 S.E.2d 487 (1970), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2290, 29 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1971); State v. Fields, 315 N.C. 191, 337 S.E.2d 518 (1985); State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673 (1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1986); State v. Triplett, 316 N.C. 1, 340 S.E.2d 736 (1986); State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), sentence vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990), in light of 302 N.C. 401, 279 S.E.2d 356 (1981); State v. Ward, 286 N.C. 304, 210 S.E.2d 407 (1974).

Evidence held sufficient to support a finding of premeditation and deliberation in the murder of a victim who was brutally beaten to death. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

Evidence held sufficient to prove premeditation and deliberation so as to support a conviction for first degree murder caused by the gagging and resultant suffocation of the victim. State v. Prevette, 317 N.C. 148, 345 S.E.2d 159 (1986).

Evidence held sufficient to permit the jury to draw reasonable inferences that defendant acted with premeditation and deliberation when he shot and killed the deceased. State v. Saunders, 317 N.C. 308, 345 S.E.2d 212 (1986).

Evidence of defendant's conduct and threatening statements both before and after the killing was strong evidence of premeditation and deliberation, and was sufficient to permit the jury to find premeditation and deliberation beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Joplin, 318 N.C. 126, 347 S.E.2d 421 (1986).

Evidence held sufficient to support convictions of first-degree murder and conspiracy to commit murder. State v. Lowery, 318 N.C. 54, 347 S.E.2d 729 (1986).

Evidence held sufficient to show provocation, premeditation and deliberation on the part of defendant, who inflicted multiple stab wounds on victim. State v. Fisher, 318 N.C. 512, 350 S.E.2d 334 (1986).

Evidence held to constitute substantial evidence of each element of armed robbery and first-degree murder committed with premeditation and deliberation, and of defendant as the perpetrator. State v. Williams, 319 N.C. 73, 352 S.E.2d 428 (1987).

Where the defendant, who barricaded himself, his sister, and her two children, one of whom was only eight-months-old, in a railroad car for three days, was repeatedly offered both food and liquids for himself and the children, but refused to accept them or to release the children, even though negotiators warned the defendant that the baby would dehydrate, there was sufficient evidence from which a reasonable mind might conclude that the defendant had the requisite specific intent to kill the infant who died of dehydration. State v. Evangelista, 319 N.C. 152, 353 S.E.2d 375 (1987).

A person is criminally responsible for a homicide if his act caused or directly contributed to the death of the victim. Where the testimony of the pathologist was that hammer blows to the head caused the victim's death, and the cause of death tentatively cited by the emergency room physician, namely, myocardial infarction, was, according to the physician's own testimony, not medically conclusive, even if the jury had perceived that testimony as contradicting the findings of the forensic pathologist, such contradictions and discrepancies were for the jury to resolve and did not warrant dismissal. State v. Quesinberry, 319 N.C. 228, 354 S.E.2d 446 (1987), aff'd, 325 N.C. 125, 381 S.E.2d 681 (1989), sentence vacated and remanded for consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of., death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding,.

Evidence held sufficient to permit submission of issue of premeditation and deliberation to the jury. State v. Stocks, 319 N.C. 437, 355 S.E.2d 492 (1987).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to dismiss first degree murder charge at the close of all the evidence, where physician testified that the victim died of pneumonia, but that there was a direct relationship between the gunshot wound and the pneumonia. State v. Penley, 318 N.C. 30, 347 S.E.2d 783 (1986).

Where victims, whose bodies were found in isolated areas of north Durham County, had been shot multiple times at close range, and both had close or contact wounds to the back, neck, face, and head behind the left ear, and there was no evidence of any provocation by either victim, the brutal method of these killings provided substantial evidence that the killer premeditated and deliberated. State v. Robbins, 319 N.C. 465, 356 S.E.2d 279, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 918, 108 S. Ct. 269, 98 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1987).

Evidence held sufficient to support a finding of premeditation and deliberation, as well as malice, by defendant in death of her 30 day old infant. State v. Perdue, 320 N.C. 51, 357 S.E.2d 345 (1987).

Evidence as to premeditation and deliberation held sufficient, where such evidence indicated that three victims in two different rooms suffered multiple wounds which were inflicted from a .22-caliber semi-automatic rifle. Defendant's contention that the ability to fire so rapidly negated the inference of premeditation based solely upon the number of wounds, and did not support the inference that the victims had already been felled before the lethal wounds were inflicted, was without merit. State v. Austin, 320 N.C. 276, 357 S.E.2d 641, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 916, 108 S. Ct. 267, 98 L. Ed. 2d 224 (1987).

There was sufficient evidence from which the jury could properly have inferred premeditation and deliberation, where a pathologist testified that the killing was accomplished by a person stabbing the victim through the neck, partially removing the knife, and then plunging it home again. State v. Zuniga, 320 N.C. 233, 357 S.E.2d 898 (1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 959, 108 S. Ct. 359, 98 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1987).

Evidence held sufficient to support defendant's conviction for murder in the first degree based upon premeditation and deliberation. State v. Rasor, 319 N.C. 577, 356 S.E.2d 328 (1987); State v. Hager, 320 N.C. 77, 357 S.E.2d 615 (1987).

Evidence that defendant and deceased were the only persons in the home, that deceased was shot in the back from a distance of approximately two feet or point blank through some sheets and that the gun had to be cocked before it would fire, requiring 13 pounds of pressure, was sufficient for the jury to find defendant guilty of first degree murder. State v. Childress, 321 N.C. 226, 362 S.E.2d 263 (1987).

Evidence held sufficient to convict defendant of first-degree murder. State v. Nichols, 321 N.C. 616, 365 S.E.2d 561 (1988).

Evidence held sufficient to show that defendant acted with premeditation and deliberation when he shot state trooper. State v. Bray, 321 N.C. 663, 365 S.E.2d 571 (1988).

Evidence held sufficient to convict defendant of first-degree murder on theories of both premeditation and deliberation and felony-murder. State v. James, 321 N.C. 676, 365 S.E.2d 579 (1988).

The cumulative effect of actions and statements by defendant was more than sufficient evidence of a deliberate and premeditated killing so as to support a judgment of first degree murder. State v. Battle, 322 N.C. 69, 366 S.E.2d 454, cert. denied, 487 U.S. 1220, 108 S. Ct. 2876, 101 L. Ed. 2d 911 (1988).

Evidence held sufficient to show that defendant choked victim to death with premeditation and deliberation. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).
