Subsection (a) of this section permits a defendant to contest the validity of a search warrant by attacking the good faith of the affiant in providing the information, and not by attacking the factual accuracy of the information relied upon to establish probable cause. State v. Kramer, 45 N.C. App. 291, 262 S.E.2d 693, cert. denied, 300 N.C. 200, 269 S.E.2d 627 (1980).

Standing to Move for Suppression. — Where the search and seizure was directed to a rifle in a friend's residence, defendant came within the class who can only claim prejudice through the use of evidence gathered as a consequence of a search or seizure directed to someone else. This class is not one for whose sake the constitutional protection is given. Thus defendant was not the victim of an invasion of privacy and had no standing to object to the introduction of the evidence. State v. Nickerson, 13 N.C. App. 125, 185 S.E.2d 326 (1971), cert. denied, 280 N.C. 304, 186 S.E.2d 179; 408 U.S. 925, 92 S. Ct. 2503, 33 L. Ed. 2d 336 (1972).

Trespassers Have No Standing to Challenge Search of Premises. — Defendants had no standing to challenge the lawfulness of a search of a premises occupied by defendants where defendants were trespassers on the property, notwithstanding the State relied on the doctrine of recent possession of stolen property found in the premises in prosecuting defendants for breaking and entering and larceny. State v. Eppley, 14 N.C. App. 314, 188 S.E.2d 758, rev'd on other grounds, 282 N.C. 249, 192 S.E.2d 441 (1972).

Defendants were not prejudiced by the trial court's denial of their motion for a voir dire examination on the question of the legality of a search of the premises occupied by defendants, where the evidence showed that defendants were trespassers on the premises and had no standing to contest the validity of the search. State v. Eppley, 14 N.C. App. 314, 188 S.E.2d 758, rev'd on other grounds, 282 N.C. 249, 192 S.E.2d 441 (1972).

Findings of Fact. — Upon voir dire hearing, the court should receive evidence and make findings of fact. In this respect there is no distinction between the admissibility of a confession and the admissibility of evidence obtained by a search without a warrant. The determining fact in each of these instances is whether the confession or the consent to the search was given voluntarily and without compulsion by the officers. State v. Vestal, 278 N.C. 561, 180 S.E.2d 755 (1971).

Creason, 313 N.C. 122, 326 S.E.2d 24 (1985); State v. Monserrate, 125 N.C. App. 22, 479 S.E.2d 494 (1997).

II. IDENTITY OF INFORMANT.

The privilege of allowing the identity of an informant to remain confidential is not absolute. When an accused can show that disclosure is essential to a fair determination of defendant's rights under the Fourth and Fifth Amendments, nondisclosure is rendered erroneous. State v. Craver, 70 N.C. App. 555, 320 S.E.2d 431 (1984).

When Disclosure of Informant's Identity Required. — Ordinarily, a defendant is not necessarily entitled to elicit the name of a confidential informant. But when the disclosure of the informer's identity, or of the contents of his communication, is relevant and helpful to the defense of the accused, or is essential to fair determination of a cause, disclosure is required. State v. Cherry, 55 N.C. App. 603, 286 S.E.2d 368, cert. denied, 305 N.C. 589, 292 S.E.2d 572 (1982).

Reliability of Informant Not Relevant to Disclosure of Identity. — The reliability of the informant is not relevant on the question of whether subdivision (b)(2) of this section requires that his identity be disclosed. The statute only requires corroboration of the informant's existence at the time he is supposed to have given the confidential information. State v. Bunn, 36 N.C. App. 114, 243 S.E.2d 189, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 261, 245 S.E.2d 778 (1978).

Corroboration Held Sufficient. — Corroboration of the existence of an informant was sufficient under subdivision (b)(2) of this section where a second officer testified that he knew of the informant's existence on the day of the arrest and was well acquainted with the informant, and that the first officer correctly predicted the defendant's future behavior based upon information he said came from the informant. State v. Bunn, 36 N.C. App. 114, 243 S.E.2d 189, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 261, 245 S.E.2d 778 (1978).

The trial court did not err in refusing to allow defendant, who was charged with possession of marijuana and methaqualane, to ask questions concerning the identity of a confidential informant whose tip led to defendant's arrest where an officer's testimony that he listened to telephone conversations between the informant and another officer provided sufficient corroboration of the informant's existence independent of the testimony in question. State v. Ellis, 50 N.C. App. 181, 272 S.E.2d 774 (1980).

Where there was independent corroboration of the testimony of the chief witness, defendant was not entitled to know the identity of the informant. State v. Willis, 67 N.C. App. 320, 313 S.E.2d 173, cert. denied, 311 N.C. 407, 319 S.E.2d 280 (1984).

Defendant's mere denial of the existence of the State's confidential informant failed to rebut the presumed validity of the search warrant. Therefore, the trial judge was correct in summarily denying defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized pursuant to the warrant and in denying defendant's request for an evidentiary hearing as to the good faith of the officer's affidavit in support of the warrant. State v. Locklear, 84 N.C. App. 637, 353 S.E.2d 666 (1987).

Hearing with Informant Not Required. — Motion that court adopt a rule requiring a trial judge, upon a defendant's motion, to conduct an in-camera hearing with the informant when a defendant challenges the good faith of an affiant to a search warrant denied. State v. Locklear, 84 N.C. App. 637, 353 S.E.2d 666 (1987).

Disclosure of Identity Not Required. — Where there was no indication that informant participated in any way in stealing of car or robbery-murder, defendant's motion to compel disclosure of informant's identity was properly denied. State v. Williams, 319 N.C. 73, 352 S.E.2d 428 (1987).

§ 15A-979. Motion to suppress evidence in superior and district court; orders of suppression; effects of orders and of failure to make motion.

(a) Upon granting a motion to suppress evidence the judge must order that the evidence in question be excluded in the criminal action pending against the defendant. When the order is based upon the ground of an unlawful search and seizure and excludes tangible property unlawfully taken from the defendant's possession, and when the property is not contraband or otherwise subject to lawful retention by the State or another, the judge must order that the property be restored to the defendant at the conclusion of the trial including all appeals.

(b) An order finally denying a motion to suppress evidence may be reviewed upon an appeal from a judgment of conviction, including a judgment entered upon a plea of guilty.

(c) An order by the superior court granting a motion to suppress prior to trial is appealable to the appellate division of the General Court of Justice prior to trial upon certificate by the prosecutor to the judge who granted the motion that the appeal is not taken for the purpose of delay and that the evidence is essential to the case. The appeal is to the appellate court that would have jurisdiction if the defendant were found guilty of the charge and received the maximum punishment. If there are multiple charges affected by a motion to suppress, the ruling is appealable to the court with jurisdiction over the offense carrying the highest punishment.

(d) A motion to suppress evidence made pursuant to this Article is the exclusive method of challenging the admissibility of evidence upon the grounds specified in G.S. 15A-974. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 27; 1979, c. 723.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section contains two important new sections.

The first, in subsection (b), permits a defendant whose motion to suppress was denied to plead guilty and then appeal the ruling of the judge on the motion. If the appellate court sustains the ruling on the motion, the conviction stands; if the ruling on the motion is overturned, then the defendant is entitled to a new trial at which the evidence would be suppressed. This provision is intended to prevent a defendant whose only real defense is the motion to suppress from going through a trial simply to preserve his right of appeal. This section on its face would apply whether the appeal is from district court or superior court, though the right of trial de novo already guarantees the defendant the right to renew motions in superior court — even after a plea of guilty. If the superior court judge reaffirms the ruling denying the motion to suppress, however, the Constitution of North Carolina may force the defendant either to plead guilty in superior court or go to trial; the judge apparently would not be empowered to "affirm" the district court judgment.

The second important provision in the section is subsection (c). It allows the State to take an interlocutory appeal from superior court to the appellate division of the General Court of Justice if the judge grants a motion to suppress prior to trial. The phrase "prior to trial" unquestionably will be interpreted to mean prior to the attachment of jeopardy. The only requirement for staying the proceedings so the State may appeal is for the solicitor to make an appeal motion before the superior court judge accompanied by a certificate that the appeal is not taken for the purpose of delay and that the evidence is essential to the case.

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Appeal From Denial of Motion.
III. Appeal From Grant of Motion.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

General Objection Insufficient to Challenge Evidence. — This Article not only requires the defendant to raise his motion to suppress the evidence according to its mandate, but also places the burden on the defendant to demonstrate that he has done so. Thus, where the record reflects only general objections to the admission of the evidence obtained in a search, the defendants have waived any right to challenge the evidence on constitutional grounds. State v. Drakeford, 37 N.C. App. 340, 246 S.E.2d 55 (1978).

The clear implication of subsection (d) of this section is that motions to suppress evidence which are not based on the two grounds specified in § 15A-974 may or may not be made in limine. State v. Tate, 300 N.C. 180, 265 S.E.2d 223 (1980).

Review of Judgment on Motion Made In Limine. — When the motion to suppress must be and is made in limine or can be and is made in limine, then the defendant can appeal if the motion is denied and he enters a plea guilty; and the State can appeal if the motion is granted. State v. Tate, 300 N.C. 180, 265 S.E.2d 223 (1980).

Appeal from Imposition of Death Penalty or Life Imprisonment. — When this section and § 7A-27(a) are considered together, it is proper to appeal directly to the Supreme Court if the punishment for the charge(s) is either death or life imprisonment. State v. Silhan, 295 N.C. 636, 247 S.E.2d 902 (1978).

Defendant who entered a plea of guilty to 10 misdemeanors was not entitled to appeal as a matter of right, since none of the exceptions in § 15A-979 or § 15A-1444 applied. State v. Noll, 88 N.C. App. 753, 364 S.E.2d 726 (1988).

Certification Lacking. — The Court of Appeals was without jurisdiction where the state did not follow the mandate of subsection (c) as there was no indication in the record that the prosecutor certified to the trial court (which granted the motion to suppress) that the appeal was not taken to cause delay and the suppressed evidence was essential to the State's case. State v. Judd, 128 N.C. App. 328, 494 S.E.2d 605 (1998).

II. APPEAL FROM DENIAL OF MOTION.

Review of Granted Motion Compared. — Unlike an order granting a motion to suppress evidence in a criminal case, which is appealable prior to trial, an order denying a defendant's motion to suppress may be reviewed only after a judgment of conviction. State v. Grogan, 40 N.C. App. 371, 253 S.E.2d 20 (1979).

Implied Prohibition Against Appeal from Other Orders. — When the General Assembly granted the right to appeal orders finally denying motions to suppress upon an appeal from a judgment of conviction, it impliedly prohibited appeals from such orders at any other time. State v. Grogan, 40 N.C. App. 371, 253 S.E.2d 20 (1979).

Notice of Intention to Appeal Required. — When a defendant intends to appeal from a suppression motion denial pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, he must give notice of his intention to the prosecutor and the court before plea negotiations are finalized or he will waive the appeal of right provisions of the statute. State v. Reynolds, 298 N.C. 380, 259 S.E.2d 843 (1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 941, 100 S. Ct. 2164, 64 L. Ed. 2d 795 (1980); State v. Afflerback, 46 N.C. App. 344, 264 S.E.2d 784 (1980); State v. Peck, 54 N.C. App. 302, 283 S.E.2d 383 (1981), aff'd, State v. Peck, 305 N.C. 734, 291 S.E.2d 637 (1982); State v. Atwell, 62 N.C. App. 643, 303 S.E.2d 402 (1983).

The defendant must notify the district attorney and the trial court of his intention to appeal the denial of the suppression motion at the sentencing hearing. State v. Walden, 52 N.C. App. 125, 278 S.E.2d 265 (1981).

Failure to Comply Results in Dismissal of Appeal. — The defendant's failure to present on appeal that he had notified the court and the prosecution of his intent to appeal, in compliance with this section, resulted in the dismissal of his appeal, even though the State acknowledged having notice. State v. Brown, 142 N.C. App. 491, 543 S.E.2d 192 (2001).

Time for Appealing Denial of Motion Made for First Time at Trial. — When the motion to suppress can be and is made for the first time at trial, then, if the motion is denied, an order finally denying a motion to suppress evidence may be reviewed upon an appeal from a judgment of conviction. State v. Tate, 300 N.C. 180, 265 S.E.2d 223 (1980).

Denial of Motion Prior to Trial Ending in Mistrial. — An order denying a defendant's motion to suppress prior to the first trial which ended in a mistrial was an order finally denying a motion to suppress evidence which could be brought forward as a part of an appeal from the later judgment of conviction in the second trial. State v. Grogan, 40 N.C. App. 371, 253 S.E.2d 20 (1979).

Right to Appeal Conditional. — Subsection (b) allows review of an order finally denying a motion to suppress evidence on appeal from a judgment of conviction, including a judgment entered on a guilty plea; however, this right to appeal is conditional, not absolute. State v. McBride, 120 N.C. App. 623, 463 S.E.2d 403 (1995).

Burden on Defendant. — Pursuant to the statute, a defendant bears the burden of notifying the state and the trial court during plea negotiations of the intention to appeal the denial of a motion to suppress, or the right to do so is waived after a plea of guilty. State v. McBride, 120 N.C. App. 623, 463 S.E.2d 403 (1995).

Even though defendant entered a plea of guilty to the charges against him, he preserved his right of appeal pursuant to this section from the denial of his motion to suppress the evidence seized in the search. State v. Rhyne, 124 N.C. App. 84, 478 S.E.2d 789 (1996).

III. APPEAL FROM GRANT OF MOTION.

Scope of Appellate Review. — On appeal by the State of an order against the State suppressing evidence seized from defendant's suitcase, the scope of appellate review is strictly limited to determining whether the trial judge's underlying findings of fact are supported by competent evidence, in which event they are conclusively binding on appeal, and whether those factual findings in turn support the judge's ultimate conclusions of law. State v. Cooke, 306 N.C. 132, 291 S.E.2d 618 (1982).

Subsection (c) Procedure Prerequisite to Appeal. — The language of subsection (c) of this section making orders of the superior court granting motions to suppress evidence appealable to the appellate division prior to trial upon certificate by the prosecutor to the judge who granted the motion that the appeal is not taken for the purpose of delay and that the evidence is essential to the case, constitutes a statutory prerequisite which must be met in order for the State to have the right to appeal, prior to trial, an order granting a motion to suppress. State v. Dobson, 51 N.C. App. 445, 276 S.E.2d 480 (1981).

To give the State the right to file the certificate required by subsection (c) of this section, after the case has already been docketed in the appellate court would be to reduce the requirement of the certificate to a nullity. State v. Blandin, 60 N.C. App. 271, 298 S.E.2d 759 (1983).

The State has no right to appeal an order granting defendant's motion to suppress evidence where the record fails to show that the prosecutor certified to the judge who granted the motion that the appeal was not being taken for the purpose of delay and that the suppressed evidence was essential to the case as required by subsection (c) of this section. State v. Blandin, 60 N.C. App. 271, 298 S.E.2d 759 (1983).

When Subsection (c) Certificate Must Be Filed. — The certificate envisioned by subsection (c) of this section is timely filed if it is filed prior to the certification of the record on appeal to the appellate division. The State is not required to pursue its right of appeal by submitting to the trial judge the certificate required by subsection (c) within the 10-day time period the case remains viable for appeal under § 15A-1448(a)(1). State v. Turner, 305 N.C. 356, 289 S.E.2d 368 (1982).

Section 15A-1448(a)(1) and subsection (c) of this section need not be construed together to require that the prosecutor's certificate also be filed within 10 days of judgment. State v. Lay, 56 N.C. App. 796, 290 S.E.2d 405, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 306 N.C. 390, 294 S.E.2d 216 (1982).

The certificate envisioned by subsection (c) of this section is timely filed if it is filed prior to the certification of the record on appeal to the appellate division. State v. Blandin, 60 N.C. App. 271, 298 S.E.2d 759 (1983).

Burden of Showing Compliance Is on State. — Subsection (c) of this section not only requires the State to raise its right to appeal according to the statutory mandate, but also places the burden on the State to demonstrate that it had done so. State v. Dobson, 51 N.C. App. 445, 276 S.E.2d 480 (1981).

§ 15A-980. Right to suppress use of certain prior convictions obtained in violation of right to counsel.

(a) A defendant has the right to suppress the use of a prior conviction that was obtained in violation of his right to counsel if its use by the State is to impeach the defendant or if its use will:

(1) Increase the degree of crime of which the defendant would be guilty; or

(2) Result in a sentence of imprisonment that otherwise would not be imposed; or

(3) Result in a lengthened sentence of imprisonment.

(b) A defendant who has grounds to suppress the use of a conviction in evidence at a trial or other proceeding as set forth in (a) must do so by motion made in accordance with the procedure in this Article. A defendant waives his right to suppress use of a prior conviction if he does not move to suppress it.

(c) When a defendant has moved to suppress use of a prior conviction under the terms of subsection (a), he has the burden of proving by the preponderance of the evidence that the conviction was obtained in violation of his right to counsel. To prevail, he must prove that at the time of the conviction he was indigent, had no counsel, and had not waived his right to counsel. If the defendant proves that a prior conviction was obtained in violation of his right to counsel, the judge must suppress use of the conviction at trial or in any other proceeding if its use will contravene the provisions of subsection (a). (1983, c. 513, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

Under subsection (c), defendant has the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, that at the time of his conviction he was indigent, had no counsel, and had not waived his right to counsel. Defendant must meet his burden on all three facts. State v. Brown, 87 N.C. App. 13, 359 S.E.2d 265 (1987).

Where court ruled that defendant's waiver of counsel was knowing and voluntary, but its findings of fact ignored defendant's youth, low educational attainments, and the time defendant spent in jail before signing the waiver, defendant successfully carried the burden of showing by a preponderance of the evidence, as required by § 15A-980(c), that there had not been a knowing waiver by defendant to the right of counsel; thus, the habitual felon conviction, which was predicated on the challenged conviction, had to be vacated. State v. Fulp, 144 N.C. App. 428, 548 S.E.2d 785 (2001), cert. granted, 354 N.C. 71, — S.E.2d — (2001).

Prior Convictions Obtained in Violation of Right to Counsel. — Admission of prior convictions obtained in violation of the right to counsel for purposes of impeachment or to affect the length of sentence violates this section. State v. Porter, 326 N.C. 489, 391 S.E.2d 144 (1990).

Silence at Trial Precludes Raising Issue on Appeal. — Where a defendant stands silent and, without objection or motion, allows the introduction of evidence of a prior conviction, he deprives the trial division of the opportunity to pass on the constitutional question and is properly precluded from raising the issue on appeal. State v. Thompson, 309 N.C. 421, 307 S.E.2d 156 (1983).

Where defendant neither objected nor moved to suppress evidence of prior conviction, he was precluded from raising the issue of his indigency and lack of counsel on appeal. State v. Turner, 103 N.C. App. 331, 406 S.E.2d 147 (1991).

Denial of Motion Upheld. — The trial court did not err in denying second-degree murder defendant's motion to suppress evidence of three prior convictions, later relied upon by the court as aggravating factors to support sentencing defendant to a term greater than the presumptive. State v. Hester, 111 N.C. App. 110, 432 S.E.2d 171 (1993).

Applied in State v. Hargrove, 104 N.C. App. 194, 408 S.E.2d 757 (1991).

SUBCHAPTER X. GENERAL TRIAL PROCEDURE.

ARTICLE 56.

Incapacity to Proceed.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This Article has two major objectives. The first is to codify the rule of law which provides that a defendant may not be tried (or punished) when he lacks mental capacity to proceed, and to provide adequate procedures for determining when that situation exists. See State v. Propst, 274 N.C. 62, 161 S.E.2d 560 (1968). The second is to provide appropriate procedures for the commitment and care of a defendant who is not capable of being tried, and to provide for his return for trial in the event that he does gain capacity. A number of sources were consulted for ideas for this draft, including North Carolina case and statutory law, the New York Criminal Procedure Law, the Model Penal Code, and proposed rules for the State of Arizona, but the result is not a wholesale copy of any of these.

The definition of incapacity is intended to be inclusive, and would appear to be both self-explanatory and flexible enough to cover appropriate situations. The proceeding prior to trial required by the Propst case is provided. In addition to existing provisions for temporary commitment to a State hospital, the court is given additional sources of information by the provisions permitting the appointment of medical experts.

A provision not found in the former law is that in § 15A-1501(b) which permits the court to go forward in matters which may be handled by counsel without the assistance of the defendant. If, for example, the pleadings charge facts which do not amount to a crime, there is no reason to delay that determination.

The second major objective requires consideration of the case of Jackson v. Indiana, 406 U.S. 715, 92 S. Ct. 1845, 32 L. Ed. 2d 435 (1972). In that case the Supreme Court of the United States said,

"We hold, consequently, that a person charged by a State with a criminal offense who is committed solely on account of his incapacity to proceed to trial cannot be held more than the reasonable period of time necessary to determine whether there is a substantial probability that he will attain that capacity in the foreseeable future. If it is determined that this is not the case, then the State must either institute the customary civil commitment proceeding that would be required to commit indefinitely any other citizen or release the defendant. Furthermore, even if it is determined that the defendant probably soon will be able to stand trial, his continued commitment must be justified by progress toward that goal."

In order to accomplish these requirements, this Article provides that when the trial court determines that the defendant does not have capacity to proceed, it will direct the initiation of civil commitment proceedings. This will eliminate the possibility that a defendant suffers extended commitment simply because he has been accused of a crime. Thus the defendant who is not dangerous, but who lacks capacity for trial, can be released. That result is required by the Jackson case. What the criminal court can do is to enter appropriate orders to provide for the return of the defendant for trial, as it can do for any other defendant. Ample authority for such orders is provided here.

In recent years there have been reported some rather striking instances when defendants were committed to a State institution and apparently forgotten. After many years they were "discovered" and a question arose as to how to dispose of the pending case. The Commission has devised a requirement for periodic reporting to the clerk (§ 15A-1004(d)) to prevent this from happening. In addition, authority for dismissal of the pending case is provided in three appropriate instances, as set out in § 15A-1008.

The question of the determination of mental capacity is a much broader question than the provisions proposed here. Revision of the civil commitment provisions is beyond the assignment of the Criminal Code Commission, and there are problems that must be faced. The case of In re Tew, 280 N.C. 612, 187 S.E.2d 13 (1972), held unconstitutional certain portions of § 122-86, dealing with the disposition of persons acquitted by reason of insanity. If the Commission is to work with that section, it necessarily must be done in connection with drafting for the trial stages of criminal procedure, a task remaining to be done when these sections were drafted. Codification or modification of the rules with regard to the capacity to commit crime is another area which is outside the scope of the present procedural codification.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article appears as originally drafted by the Criminal Code Commission and does not reflect amendments or changes in the law since the enactment of Session Laws 1973, c. 1286.

§ 15A-1001. No proceedings when defendant mentally incapacitated; exception.

(a) No person may be tried, convicted, sentenced, or punished for a crime when by reason of mental illness or defect he is unable to understand the nature and object of the proceedings against him, to comprehend his own situation in reference to the proceedings, or to assist in his defense in a rational or reasonable manner. This condition is hereinafter referred to as "incapacity to proceed."

(b) This section does not prevent the court from going forward with any motions which can be handled by counsel without the assistance of the defendant. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

Competency Evaluation Does Not Implicate Confrontation Rights. — The competency determination does not implicate defendant's state constitutional confrontation rights and does not have a substantial relation to his opportunity to defend; in fact, the competency evaluation is to ensure that a defendant is able to understand the nature and object of the proceedings against him before he is tried, convicted, sentenced, or punished for a crime. State v. Davis, 349 N.C. 1, 506 S.E.2d 455 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1161, 119 S. Ct. 2053, 144 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1999).

Purpose of Subsection (a). — Subsection (a) of this section expresses a legislative intent to alter the existing case law governing the determination of whether a defendant is mentally incapable of proceeding to trial. State v. Jenkins, 300 N.C. 578, 268 S.E.2d 458 (1980).

This section is only concerned with defendant's mental capacity to proceed, rather than physical illness. State v. Bacon, 326 N.C. 404, 390 S.E.2d 327 (1990).

The objective of this section and § 15A-1002 is to ensure that a defendant will not be tried or punished while mentally incapacitated. State v. Aytche, 98 N.C. App. 358, 391 S.E.2d 43 (1990).

Test for capacity to stand trial is whether a defendant has capacity to comprehend his position, to understand the nature of the proceedings against him, to conduct his defense in a rational manner and to cooperate with his counsel so that any available defense may be interposed. State v. Jackson, 302 N.C. 101, 273 S.E.2d 666 (1981).

As set out in this section, the test of a defendant's mental capacity to stand trial is whether by reason of mental illness or defect the defendant is unable to understand the nature and object of the proceedings against him, to comprehend his own situation in reference to the proceedings, or to assist in his defense in a rational or reasonable manner. State v. McCoy, 303 N.C. 1, 277 S.E.2d 515 (1981).

State v. Avery, 315 N.C. 1, 337 S.E.2d 786 (1985) and State v. Cooper, 286 N.C. 549, 213 S.E.2d 305 (1975), establish the proposition that a defendant does not have to be at the highest stage of mental alertness to be competent to be tried; so long as a defendant can confer with his or her attorney so that the attorney may interpose any available defenses for him or her, the defendant is able to assist his or her defense in a rational manner. State v. Shytle, 323 N.C. 684, 374 S.E.2d 573 (1989).

No Constitutional Right to Have Counsel Present. — A capital murder defendant had no constitutional right to have counsel present during his competency evaluation. State v. Davis, 349 N.C. 1, 506 S.E.2d 455 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1161, 119 S. Ct. 2053, 144 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1999).

Specific Finding of Ability to Cooperate with Counsel Not Required. — Subsection (a) of this section clearly sets forth in the disjunctive three tests of mental incapacity to proceed, and the failure to meet any one would suffice to bar criminal proceedings against a defendant. The statute does not, however, require the trial judge to make a specific finding that defendant is able to cooperate with his counsel to the end that any available defense may be interposed. State v. Jenkins, 300 N.C. 578, 268 S.E.2d 458 (1980).

Lay Witness May Testify on Capacity to Proceed. — Where, in support of her motion before arraignment to determine her capacity to proceed to trial, defendant called two witnesses who had opportunity to observe defendant during her incarceration, one witness would have testified that after close and repeated observations of defendant she held opinion that defendant was unable to comprehend what was "going on" and could not assist in her own defense, and another witness testified for record that after observing defendant "most every day" after her incarceration his opinion was that defendant was "not capable" of assisting in her defense, testimony should have been admitted and considered by trial judge on the issue of defendant's capacity to proceed to trial and his failure to consider it constituted error. State v. Silvers, 323 N.C. 646, 374 S.E.2d 858 (1989).

Incapacity to Enter Guilty Plea. — If a defendant is incompetent to stand trial, he is also incompetent to enter a voluntary, knowledgeable guilty plea. Meeks v. Smith, 512 F. Supp. 335 (W.D.N.C. 1981).

Burden of Persuasion. — Defendant had the burden of persuasion on his motion under this section. State v. Jacobs, 51 N.C. App. 324, 276 S.E.2d 482 (1981); State v. Baker, 312 N.C. 34, 320 S.E.2d 670 (1984).

Question of defendant's capacity is within the trial judge's discretion and his determination thereof, if supported by the evidence, is conclusive on appeal. State v. Reid, 38 N.C. App. 547, 248 S.E.2d 390 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 588, 254 S.E.2d 31 (1979).

As Is Necessity for Formal Inquiry. — Ordinarily, it is within the trial court's discretion to determine whether circumstances brought to its attention require a formal inquiry as to whether a defendant has sufficient mental capacity to plead to the indictment and to conduct a rational defense. State v. McGee, 56 N.C. App. 614, 289 S.E.2d 616 (1982).

Conclusiveness of Findings on Appeal. — When the trial judge determines the question of a defendant's capacity without a jury, the court's findings of fact, if supported by the evidence, are conclusive on appeal. State v. McCoy, 303 N.C. 1, 277 S.E.2d 515 (1981).

The court's findings of fact as to defendant's mental capacity are conclusive on appeal if supported by the evidence. State v. Baker, 312 N.C. 34, 320 S.E.2d 670 (1984).

Where there was nothing in the record to suggest that defendant suffered from any "mental illness or defect" as specified in subsection (a) of this section, the trial court had no obligation, ex mero motu, to conduct any inquiry on the subject. State v. Carroll, 317 N.C. 136, 343 S.E.2d 869 (1986).

Defendant, who had undergone brain surgery to remove a self-inflicted bullet, which surgery necessitated the removal of the entire left frontal lobe of his brain and a small portion of the right frontal lobe, was competent to stand trial and to assist in his defense, notwithstanding a memory impairment resulting from organic brain damage or repression. State v. Avery, 315 N.C. 1, 337 S.E.2d 786 (1985).

Defendant, who as a result of a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the head and resulting surgery, had suffered damage to her brain which impaired her emotional response to situations in which she found herself, was competent to make a valid confession and stand trial where there was evidence that defendant had an I.Q. within the normal range and that she knew what the charges were and what could happen to her if she was convicted; if this did not worry or upset her because of her altered mental condition, it did not mean she did not understand these facts, and the court could find from this and other evidence that the defendant understood the nature and object of the proceedings against her and could comprehend her own situation in reference to the proceedings. State v. Shytle, 323 N.C. 684, 374 S.E.2d 573 (1989).

Defendant on Medication Held Competent. — A capital murder defendant held competent to proceed to trial, where the court-appointed forensic psychologist testified that, although the defendant initially was not competent to proceed, he appeared to be doing well on his medications about one month later, that he understood the difference between competency and insanity, he understood the nature and extent of the charges against him, and he could assist his attorneys in his defense. State v. Davis, 349 N.C. 1, 506 S.E.2d 455 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1161, 119 S. Ct. 2053, 144 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1999).

Defendant's voluntary use of drugs during her trial did not warrant the order of a new trial where the record otherwise showed her to have been competent. State v. Harding, 110 N.C. App. 155, 429 S.E.2d 416 (1993).

Defendant's Attitude. — The trial court could properly find that defendant did not suffer from a mental incapacity where his attitude, rather than a mental illness or defect, prevented him from assisting in his own defense. State v. Brown, 339 N.C. 426, 451 S.E.2d 181 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 825, 116 S. Ct. 90, 133 L. Ed. 2d 46 (1995).

Applied in State v. Taylor, 290 N.C. 220, 226 S.E.2d 23 (1976); State v. Grainger, 29 N.C. App. 694, 225 S.E.2d 595 (1976); State v. McRae, 32 N.C. App. 243, 231 S.E.2d 915 (1977); State v. Heptinstall, 309 N.C. 231, 306 S.E.2d 109 (1983); State v. Smith, 310 N.C. 108, 310 S.E.2d 320 (1984).

§ 15A-1002. Determination of incapacity to proceed; evidence; temporary commitment; temporary orders.

(a) The question of the capacity of the defendant to proceed may be raised at any time on motion by the prosecutor, the defendant, the defense counsel, or the court. The motion shall detail the specific conduct that leads the moving party to question the defendant's capacity to proceed.

(b) When the capacity of the defendant to proceed is questioned, the court shall hold a hearing to determine the defendant's capacity to proceed. If an examination is ordered pursuant to subdivision (1) or (2) of this subsection, the hearing shall be held after the examination. Reasonable notice shall be given to the defendant and prosecutor, and the State and the defendant may introduce evidence. The court:

(1) May appoint one or more impartial medical experts, including forensic evaluators approved under rules of the Commission for Mental Health, Developmental Disabilities, and Substance Abuse Services, to examine the defendant and return a written report describing the present state of the defendant's mental health; reports so prepared are admissible at the hearing and the court may call any expert so appointed to testify at the hearing; any expert so appointed may be called to testify at the hearing by the court at the request of either party; or

(2) In the case of a defendant charged with a misdemeanor only after the examination pursuant to subsection (b)(1) of this section or at any time in the case of a defendant charged with a felony, may order the defendant to a State facility for the mentally ill for observation and treatment for the period, not to exceed 60 days, necessary to determine the defendant's capacity to proceed; in the case of a defendant charged with a felony, if a defendant is ordered to a State facility without first having an examination pursuant to subsection (b)(1) of this section, the judge shall make a finding that an examination pursuant to this subsection would be more appropriate to determine the defendant's capacity; the sheriff shall return the defendant to the county when notified that the evaluation has been completed; the director of the facility shall direct his report on defendant's condition to the defense attorney and to the clerk of superior court, who shall bring it to the attention of the court; the report is admissible at the hearing.

(3) Repealed by Session Laws 1989, c. 486, s. 1.

(b1) If the report pursuant to subdivision (1) or (2) of subsection (b) of this section indicates that the defendant lacks capacity to proceed, proceedings for involuntary civil commitment under Chapter 122C of the General Statutes may be instituted on the basis of the report in either the county where the criminal proceedings are pending or, if the defendant is hospitalized, in the county in which the defendant is hospitalized.

(c) The court may make appropriate temporary orders for the confinement or security of the defendant pending the hearing or ruling of the court on the question of the capacity of the defendant to proceed.

(d) Any report made to the court pursuant to this section shall be forwarded to the clerk of superior court in a sealed envelope addressed to the attention of a presiding judge, with a covering statement to the clerk of the fact of the examination of the defendant and any conclusion as to whether the defendant has or lacks capacity to proceed. A copy of the full report shall be forwarded to defense counsel, or to the defendant if he is not represented by counsel provided, if the question of the defendant's capacity to proceed is raised at any time, a copy of the full report must be forwarded to the district attorney. Until such report becomes a public record, the full report to the court shall be kept under such conditions as are directed by the court, and its contents shall not be revealed except as directed by the court. Any report made to the court pursuant to this section shall not be a public record unless introduced into evidence. CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Hearing.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under former law.

Constitutionality. — This State's statutory scheme for determining a defendant's capacity to proceed is, on its face, constitutionally adequate to protect a defendant's right not to be tried while legally incompetent. State v. Taylor, 298 N.C. 405, 259 S.E.2d 502 (1979).

This section is not an absolute confidentiality rule, so trial counsel was not ineffective by failing to use it to exclude competency examination reports from the record on the grounds that the reports had been sent to the district attorney unlawfully or that they remained confidential where the prosecution lawfully possessed the reports. McCarver v. Lee, 221 F.3d 583 (4th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1089, 121 S. Ct. 809, 148 L. Ed. 2d 694 (2001).

The trial court has the power on its own motion to make inquiry at any time during trial regarding defendant's capacity to proceed. Indeed, circumstances could exist where the trial court has a constitutional duty to make such an inquiry. State v. Heptinstall, 309 N.C. 231, 306 S.E.2d 109 (1983).

Purpose. — The objective of § 15A-1001 and this section is to ensure that a defendant will not be tried or punished while mentally incapacitated. State v. Aytche, 98 N.C. App. 358, 391 S.E.2d 43 (1990).

Decision to Have Capacity Evaluated in Court's Discretion. — Although this section now requires a hearing, the decision to grant a motion for an evaluation of a defendant's capacity to stand trial remains within the trial judge's discretion. State v. Gates, 65 N.C. App. 277, 309 S.E.2d 498 (1983).

The trial court did not err in failing to order an independent psychiatric evaluation pursuant to this section where the defendant was adamant and unequivocal about not wanting a mental-health examination; he fully understood the proceedings and his rights; he assisted in his own defense throughout trial by directing the filing of motions, the questioning of witnesses, and the presentation of evidence; he fully understood the ramifications of his decision not to present mitigating evidence during the sentencing proceeding; and his outbursts during trial, occurring during the voir dire of the five witnesses, suggested his deliberate intent to intimidate them. State v. Grooms, 353 N.C. 50, 540 S.E.2d 713 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Duty of Trial Court. — Under some circumstances a trial court may have a constitutional duty to make an inquiry into a defendant's capacity to proceed. State v. Rich, 346 N.C. 50, 484 S.E.2d 394 (1997).

It was not error for the judge to deny a motion asking that the defendant be examined to determine whether he was competent to stand trial when nothing was shown to the court as to why the motion should have been granted. State v. Bowie, 340 N.C. 199, 456 S.E.2d 771 (1995).

Notice to Defendant. — While this section expressly permits the prosecutor to question a defendant's capacity to proceed and contains no express provision for notice of the motion, the requirement that the question of capacity to proceed may only be raised by a motion, setting forth the reasons for questioning capacity, implies that some notice must be given. State v. Jackson, 77 N.C. App. 491, 335 S.E.2d 903 (1985).

Test of Capacity to Stand Trial. — In determining a defendant's capacity to stand trial, the test is whether he has the capacity to comprehend this position, to understand the nature and object of the proceedings against him, to conduct his defense in a rational manner, and to cooperate with his counsel to the end that any available defense may be interposed. State v. Bundridge, 294 N.C. 45, 239 S.E.2d 811 (1978).

Competency to Stand Trial and Mental Responsibility in Commission of a Crime Compared. — See State v. Propst, 274 N.C. 62, 161 S.E.2d 560 (1968); State v. Lewis, 11 N.C. App. 226, 181 S.E.2d 163, appeal dismissed, 279 N.C. 350, 182 S.E.2d 583 (1971).

Ability to Plead and Conduct Defense Should Be Determined Prior to Trial. — Whether defendant is able to plead to the indictment and conduct a rational defense should be determined prior to the trial of defendant for the crime charged in the indictment. Rutledge v. Rutledge, 10 N.C. App. 427, 179 S.E.2d 163 (1971); State v. Thompson, 285 N.C. 181, 203 S.E.2d 781, cert. denied, 419 U.S. 867, 95 S. Ct. 123, 42 L. Ed. 2d 104 (1974).

Capacity Determined by Trial Judge. — The preliminary question of a defendant's mental capacity to plead to a bill of indictment and to aid in the preparation and conduct of his defense is properly a question to be decided by the trial judge. State v. Thompson, 285 N.C. 181, 203 S.E.2d 781, cert. denied, 419 U.S. 867, 95 S. Ct. 123, 42 L. Ed. 2d 104 (1974).

Capacity May Be Determined with or Without Jury. — In an inquiry into a defendant's capacity to proceed, the issue may be resolved by the trial court with or without the aid of a jury. State v. Jackson, 302 N.C. 101, 273 S.E.2d 666 (1981).

Where the evidence raises a "bona fide doubt" as to a defendant's competence to stand trial, the court must conduct a thorough inquiry before it allows a defendant to be tried or to plead guilty. Meeks v. Smith, 512 F. Supp. 335 (W.D.N.C. 1981).

It is proper for defendant's counsel to request the court to conduct an inquiry to determine whether the defendant has sufficient mental capacity to plead to the indictment and conduct a rational defense. State v. Lewis, 11 N.C. App. 226, 181 S.E.2d 163, appeal dismissed, 279 N.C. 350, 182 S.E.2d 583 (1971).

Prosecution May Be Permitted to Obtain Examination of Defendant. — Where a defendant gives notice of his intent to pursue a defense of insanity, it is not only reasonable, but necessary, that the prosecution be permitted to obtain an expert examination of him. Otherwise there would be no means by which the State could confirm a well-founded claim of insanity, discover fraudulent mental defenses, or offer expert psychiatric testimony to rebut the defendant's evidence where insanity is genuinely at issue. Thus, the trial court has the authority to order such an examination as a part of its inherent power to oversee the proper administration of justice. State v. Jackson, 77 N.C. App. 491, 335 S.E.2d 903 (1985).

In cases where a criminal defendant gives notice that he will raise insanity as a defense to the charges against him, the trial court has the inherent power to require the defendant to submit to a mental examination by a state or court-appointed psychiatrist for the purpose of inquiring into his mental status at the time of the alleged offense. State v. Jackson, 77 N.C. App. 491, 335 S.E.2d 903 (1985).

Order of Commitment Is Discretionary. — A defendant is not entitled to an order of commitment to a State hospital for a period of not exceeding 60 days for observation and treatment as a matter of right; he must show that the failure to grant his belated motion is an abuse of discretion. State v. Washington, 283 N.C. 175, 195 S.E.2d 534 (1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1132, 94 S. Ct. 873, 38 L. Ed. 2d 757 (1974).

Section Does Not Authorize Physical Exam. — Subdivision (b)(1) authorizes a court to appoint medical experts to examine the state of defendant's mental health; however, it does not authorize the court to appoint a medical examiner for a general physical exam or to see if certain physical problems exist. State v. Aytche, 98 N.C. App. 358, 391 S.E.2d 43 (1990).

Psychiatric Examination Is in Court's Discretion. — This section contains no provision making the granting of a motion mandatory for commitment for psychiatric examination to determine competency, and the decision remains within the sound judicial discretion of the trial court. State v. Woods, 293 N.C. 58, 235 S.E.2d 47 (1977).

A defendant does not have an automatic right to a pretrial psychiatric examination and the resolution of this matter is within the trial court's discretion. State v. Crews, 296 N.C. 607, 252 S.E.2d 745 (1979); State v. See, 301 N.C. 388, 271 S.E.2d 282 (1980).

The established rule in North Carolina, unchanged by statutory enactments, is that the decision whether to grant a motion for commitment for psychiatric examination to determine competency to stand trial lies within the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Williams, 38 N.C. App. 183, 247 S.E.2d 620 (1978).

Although a defendant has the right to a hearing on his capacity to proceed when that question is properly raised, whether to have a defendant examined by a medical expert is within the trial court's discretion. State v. McGuire, 297 N.C. 69, 254 S.E.2d 165, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 943, 100 S. Ct. 300, 62 L. Ed. 2d 310 (1979).

The question of whether the defendant is to be examined by a psychiatric expert is within the sole discretion of the trial court. State v. O'Neal, 116 N.C. App. 390, 448 S.E.2d 306, cert.

State may not consume an unreasonable amount of time in conducting mental and physical examinations and filing reports thereon. State v. McCoy, 303 N.C. 1, 277 S.E.2d 515 (1981).

And the legislature intended to declare that 60 days or less is a reasonable time to conduct this kind of mental examination. It has said that "in no event" may more time be consumed. State v. McCoy, 303 N.C. 1, 277 S.E.2d 515 (1981).

Court Not Required to Adopt Either Party's Report on Capacity. — There was no merit to defendant's argument that because the court did not adopt the report by the State on defendant's capacity to stand trial, any finding that defendant suffered some sort of mental disease was unsupported by the evidence, nor was there merit to his argument that the trial court was required to adopt the psychiatric report of either the State or the defense but could not arrive at an independent conclusion. State v. Jackson, 302 N.C. 101, 273 S.E.2d 666 (1981).

Failure to Determine Competency. — In a criminal prosecution where there was a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's sanity, and where neither the court nor counsel sought to utilize the procedures provided by the State for determining competency, the defendant was not afforded full protection of the law. Meeks v. Smith, 512 F. Supp. 335 (W.D.N.C. 1981).

Better practice requires the trial court to make findings of fact in its order on a motion suggesting incapacity to proceed under this section. State v. Jacobs, 51 N.C. App. 324, 276 S.E.2d 482 (1981).

Lack of Findings and Conclusions Not Error Where Evidence Compels Ruling. — Although the better practice is for the trial court to make findings and conclusions when ruling on a motion under subsection (b) of this section, it is not error for the trial court to fail to do so where the evidence would have compelled the ruling made. State v. Gates, 65 N.C. App. 277, 309 S.E.2d 498 (1983).

Judge's Findings of Fact Conclusive on Appeal. — When the trial judge conducts the inquiry under this section without a jury, the court's findings of fact, if supported by competent evidence, are conclusive on appeal. State v. Clark, 300 N.C. 116, 265 S.E.2d 204 (1980); State v. Jackson, 302 N.C. 101, 273 S.E.2d 666 (1981).

When the trial court, without a jury, determines a defendant's capacity to proceed to trial, it is the court's duty to resolve conflicts in the evidence; the court's findings of fact are conclusive on appeal if there is competent evidence to support them, even if there is also evidence to the contrary. State v. Heptinstall, 309 N.C. 231, 306 S.E.2d 109 (1983).

Abuse of Discretion Must Be Shown for Reversal of Motion's Denial. — Where the procedural requirement of a hearing has been met, defendant must show that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion before reversal is required. State v. Gates, 65 N.C. App. 277, 309 S.E.2d 498 (1983).

Competence Only as Result of Medication. — Where there was competent, uncontradicted expert opinion that the defendant was capable of standing trial based on personal observation of defendant and sufficient to support the trial court's conclusion that defendant was capable of proceeding, the additional fact that defendant was competent only as a result of receiving medication did not require a different result. State v. Buie, 297 N.C. 159, 254 S.E.2d 26, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 971, 100 S. Ct. 464, 62 L. Ed. 2d 386 (1979).

No Equal Protection Issue Presented by Denial of Indigent's Request for Commitment. — Since the fact that the defendant was indigent was irrelevant to the applicability of this section, there was no equal protection issue presented where the trial court denied the defendant's request for a commitment and psychiatric examination to determine his capacity to stand trial. State v. Woods, 293 N.C. 58, 235 S.E.2d 47 (1977).

Order Declaring Defendant Incapacitated as Evidence at Subsequent Trial. — An order entered by a trial judge declaring defendant mentally incapacitated and unable to proceed to trial was some evidence of defendant's mental condition and was admissible at trial on the question of his insanity. When such evidence is admitted, the trial judge should clearly instruct the jury that this evidence is not conclusive but is merely another circumstance to be considered by the jury in reaching its decision. State v. Bundridge, 294 N.C. 45, 239 S.E.2d 811 (1978).

Applicability of Physician-Patient Privilege. — Where the mental capacity of the accused to proceed to trial is questioned on motion of defense counsel and the trial court commits the defendant to a State mental health facility for examination to determine the defendant's capacity to proceed, the physician-patient privilege does not preclude the examining psychiatrist from testifying at trial on the insanity issue. State v. Hodgen, 47 N.C. App. 329, 267 S.E.2d 32, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 100, 273 S.E.2d 305 (1980), 305 N.C. 397, 289 S.E.2d 839 (1982).

A psychiatrist appointed by the court for a sanity examination of the defendant is a witness for the court, not the prosecution, and the statements made by the defendant to the psychiatrist are not privileged under the doctor-patient relationship. State v. Taylor, 304 N.C. 249, 283 S.E.2d 761 (1981), rehearing denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3552, 77 L. Ed. 2d

No psychologist-client privilege is created when a defendant is examined by a psychologist appointed by the trial court, at the request of defendant, for purposes of evaluating defendant's mental status. State v. Williams, 350 N.C. 1, 510 S.E.2d 626 (1999), cert. denied 528 U.S. 880, 120 S. Ct. 193, 145 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1999).

Findings Sufficient to Show Defendant Mentally Ill at Time of Arraignment. — The findings by the judge that the defendant was unable to plead to the bill "for . . . he does not have the capacity at this time to stand trial or to comprehend his position, to understand the nature and object of the proceedings against him, to conduct his defense in a rational manner, or to cooperate understandingly with his counsel with respect to his defense" in the context of the order were sufficient findings that the defendant was mentally ill at the time of arraignment and for that reason could not plead. State v. Lewis, 11 N.C. App. 226, 181 S.E.2d 163, appeal dismissed, 279 N.C. 350, 182 S.E.2d 583 (1971).

Suicide Attempt by Defendant. — Where defendant's own expert witness had previously testified that he was competent to stand trial and the only additional evidence before the court at the time it denied the request for a psychological examination was a suicide attempt, or suicide gesture, that one incident did not require as a matter of law that the trial court appoint an expert to evaluate defendant's mental health. State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Rebuttal by Prosecution's Psychiatrist. — Where a defendant presents expert testimony in support of his claim of insanity, the prosecution's psychiatrist may testify in rebuttal as to statements made by, or information obtained from, the defendant in the course of the examination without violating defendant's rights under U.S. Const., Amend. V. The trial court must, however, limit the jury's consideration of such statements made during the examination to the issue of insanity and not to the issue of guilt. State v. Jackson, 77 N.C. App. 491, 335 S.E.2d 903 (1985).

Effect of Hospital Stay on Speedy Trial Right. — Where a defendant was held in a hospital for examination a mere seven days longer than this section permits, the practice did not result in a violation of the former Speedy Trial Act. State v. McCoy, 303 N.C. 1, 277 S.E.2d 515 (1981).

Where defendant has negotiated a plea, his fair trial rights are no longer involved. State v. Hunt, 64 N.C. App. 81, 306 S.E.2d 846, cert. denied, 309 N.C. 824, 310 S.E.2d 354 (1983).

Claim for Damages Denied. — Doctor at Dorothea Dix Hospital completely fulfilled his duty under the law to evaluate defendant and submit an evaluation to the district court, and did not violate any legal duty of care by thereafter releasing her, and the Industrial Commission correctly denied plaintiff's claim for damages due to an attack subsequently committed against him. Paschall v. North Carolina Dep't of Correction, 88 N.C. App. 520, 364 S.E.2d 144, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 326, 368 S.E.2d 868 (1988).

Applied in State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979); State v. Mayhand, 298 N.C. 418, 259 S.E.2d 231 (1979); State v. Potts, 42 N.C. App. 357, 256 S.E.2d 497 (1979); State v. Easterling, 300 N.C. 594, 268 S.E.2d 800 (1980); State v. Womble, 44 N.C. App. 503, 261 S.E.2d 263 (1980); State v. Hoyle, 49 N.C. App. 98, 270 S.E.2d 582 (1980); Chavis v. North Carolina, 637 F.2d 213 (4th Cir. 1980); State v. Monk, 63 N.C. App. 512, 305 S.E.2d 755 (1983); State v. Nobles, 99 N.C. App. 473, 393 S.E.2d 328 (1990).

Hope, 96 N.C. App. 498, 386 S.E.2d 224 (1989); State v. Gravette, 327 N.C. 114, 393 S.E.2d 856 (1990); State v. Harding, 110 N.C. App. 155, 429 S.E.2d 416 (1993); State v. Rich, 346 N.C. 50, 484 S.E.2d 394 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1002, 118 S. Ct. 573, 139 L. Ed. 2d 412 (1997).

II. HEARING.

Finding that the court's failure to conduct a competency hearing violated the defendant's federal due process rights, the court decided to forego an analysis under this statutory provision and, instead, remanded so that the trial court might determine the defendant's competency at the time of his murder trial. State v. McRae, 139 N.C. App. 387, 533 S.E.2d 557 (2000).

Hearing Requirement Satisfied by Opportunity to Present Evidence. — The hearing requirement of former subdivision (b)(3) of this section appears to be satisfied along as it appears from the record that the defendant, upon making the motion, is provided an opportunity to present any and all evidence he or she is prepared to present. State v. Gates, 65 N.C. App. 277, 309 S.E.2d 498 (1983).

No Particular Hearing Procedure Mandated. — Although this section requires the court to conduct a hearing when a question is raised as to a defendant's capacity to stand trial, no particular procedure is mandated. The method of inquiry is still largely within the discretion of the trial judge. State v. Gates, 65 N.C. App. 277, 309 S.E.2d 498 (1983).

While the better practice is for the trial court to make specific findings and conclusions when ruling on a motion under subsection (b), failure to do so is not error where the evidence compels the ruling made. State v. Aytche, 98 N.C. App. 358, 391 S.E.2d 43 (1990).

Rules as to Competency of Evidence Relaxed in Hearing. — In a hearing before the judge on a motion under this section, the ordinary rules as to the competency of evidence applied in a trial before a jury are to some extent relaxed, for the reason that the judge with knowledge of the law is able to eliminate from the testimony he hears that which is immaterial and incompetent, and consider only that which tends properly to prove the facts to be found. State v. Willard, 292 N.C. 567, 234 S.E.2d 587 (1977).

Defendant has the burden of persuasion with respect to establishing his incapacity. State v. Gates, 65 N.C. App. 277, 309 S.E.2d 498 (1983).

Waiver of Hearing Right. — While this section requires the court to hold a hearing to determine defendant's capacity to proceed if the question is raised, a defendant may waive the benefit of this section's provisions by express consent, failure to assert it in apt time or by conduct inconsistent with a purpose to insist upon it. State v. Young, 291 N.C. 562, 231 S.E.2d 577 (1977).

Where neither defendant nor defense counsel questioned the correctness of the diagnostic finding that defendant was competent to stand trial, understood the charges and was able to cooperate with his attorney, neither objected to the failure to hold the hearing, and when arraigned, defendant entered a plea of not guilty and did not raise the defense of insanity, defendant's statutory right, under former subdivision (b)(3) of this section, to a hearing subsequent to his commitment, was waived by his failure to assert that right. State v. Young, 291 N.C. 562, 231 S.E.2d 577 (1977).

Where the record showed that the report of the examining psychiatrist was to the effect that the defendant did have the requisite mental capacity to plead to the indictment and to stand trial and nothing in the record indicated that before going to trial the defendant requested a hearing or otherwise indicated any adherence to his initial contention of lack of mental capacity, defendant waived his right to a hearing under former subdivision (b)(3) of this section. State v. Dollar, 292 N.C. 344, 233 S.E.2d 521 (1977).

The defendant waived his statutory right to a competency hearing where (1) prior to trial, the trial court directly asked defense counsel whether there had been a competency screening and informed defense counsel that if there was a question about the defendant's competency, then he wanted to hear whatever evidence was to be presented and make that determination before going forward, and (2) defense counsel responded that the defendant had received treatment for depression in connection with a suicide attempt but did not thereafter request a competency hearing. State v. King, 353 N.C. 457, 546 S.E.2d 570 (2001).

Collateral Relief Where Hearing Waived. — Where a defendant fails to assert his alleged incompetence at a hearing, he is not barred from seeking collateral relief, for an incompetent cannot waive the right to be exempt from trial, nor can his attorney's failure to raise the issue be construed as waiver. Meeks v. Smith, 512 F. Supp. 335 (W.D.N.C. 1981).

§ 15A-1003. Referral of incapable defendant for civil commitment proceedings.

(a) When a defendant is found to be incapable of proceeding, the presiding judge, upon such additional hearing, if any, as he determines to be necessary, shall determine whether there are reasonable grounds to believe the defendant meets the criteria for involuntary commitment under Part 7 of Article 5 of Chapter 122C of the General Statutes. If the presiding judge finds reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant meets the criteria, he shall make findings of fact and issue a custody order in the same manner, upon the same grounds and with the same effect as an order issued by a clerk or magistrate pursuant to G.S. 122C-261. Proceedings thereafter are in accordance with Part 7 of Article 5 of Chapter 122C of the General Statutes. If the defendant was charged with a violent crime, including a crime involving assault with a deadly weapon, the judge's custody order shall require a law-enforcement officer to take the defendant directly to a 24-hour facility as described in G.S. 122C-252; and the order must indicate that the defendant was charged with a violent crime and that he was found incapable of proceeding.

(b) The court may make appropriate orders for the temporary detention of the defendant pending that proceeding.

(c) Evidence used at the hearing with regard to capacity to proceed is admissible in the involuntary civil commitment proceedings. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 20; 1983, c. 380, s. 1; 1985, c. 589, s. 10; 1987, c. 596, s. 5.)

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Examination by Physician Is Required. — When a defendant is found incapable of proceeding with a criminal trial and the trial court takes the action directed by subsection (a) of this section, the examination by a qualified physician as described in § 122-58.4 (see now § 122C-263) is required. See opinion of Attorney General to Dr. William Thomas, Chief of Adult Services, Division of Mental Health and Mental Retardation Services, 48 N.C.A.G. 53 (1978).

§ 15A-1004. Orders for safeguarding of defendant and return for trial.

(a) When a defendant is found to be incapable of proceeding, the trial court must make appropriate orders to safeguard the defendant and to ensure his return for trial in the event that he subsequently becomes capable of proceeding.

(b) If the defendant is not placed in the custody of a hospital or other institution in a proceeding for involuntary civil commitment, appropriate orders may include any of the procedures, orders, and conditions provided in Article 26 of this Chapter, Bail, specifically including the power to place the defendant in the custody of a designated person or organization agreeing to supervise him.

(c) If the defendant is placed in the custody of a hospital or other institution in a proceeding for involuntary civil commitment, the orders must provide for reporting to the clerk if the defendant is to be released from the custody of the hospital or institution. The original or supplemental orders may make provisions as in subsection (b) in the event that the defendant is released. If the defendant was charged with a violent crime, including a crime involving assault with a deadly weapon, and that charge has not been dismissed, the order must require that if the defendant is to be released from the custody of the hospital or other institution, he is to be released only to the custody of a specified law enforcement agency. If the original or supplemental orders do not specify to whom the respondent shall be released, the hospital or other institution may release the defendant to whomever it thinks appropriate.

(d) If the defendant is placed in the custody of a hospital or institution pursuant to proceedings for involuntary civil commitment, or if the defendant is placed in the custody of another person pursuant to subsection (b), the orders of the trial court must require that the hospital, institution, or individual report the condition of the defendant to the clerk at the same times that reports on the condition of the defendant-respondent are required under Part 7 of Article 5 of Chapter 122C of the General Statutes, or more frequently if the court requires, and immediately if the defendant gains capacity to proceed. The order must also require the report to state the likelihood of the defendant's gaining capacity to proceed, to the extent that the hospital, institution, or individual is capable of making such a judgment.

(e) The orders must require and provide for the return of the defendant to stand trial in the event that he gains capacity to proceed, unless the charges have been dismissed pursuant to G.S. 15A-1008, and may also provide for the confinement or pretrial release of the defendant in that event.

(f) The orders of the court may be amended or supplemented from time to time as changed conditions require. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 20; 1983, c. 380, s. 2; c. 460, s. 2; 1985, c. 589, s. 11.)

CASE NOTES

Court Had No Authority to Order Supervision of Defendant. — Superior court had no authority to enter order requiring Division of Adult Probation and Parole, without its consent, to provide supervision of defendant, who had been determined incompetent to stand trial but not subject to involuntary commitment, while in custody of his former wife. State v. Gravette, 327 N.C. 114, 393 S.E.2d 856 (1990).

§ 15A-1005. Reporting to court with regard to defendants incapable of proceeding.

The clerk of the court in which the criminal proceeding is pending must keep a docket of defendants who have been determined to be incapable of proceeding. The clerk must submit the docket to the senior resident superior court judge in his district at least semiannually. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1.)

§ 15A-1006. Return of defendant for trial upon gaining capacity.

If a defendant who has been determined to be incapable of proceeding, and who is in the custody of an institution or an individual, gains capacity to proceed, the individual or institution must notify the clerk in the county in which the criminal proceeding is pending. The clerk must notify the sheriff to return the defendant to the county for trial, and to hold him for trial, subject to the orders of the court entered pursuant to G.S. 15A-1004. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1.)

§ 15A-1007. Supplemental hearings.

(a) When it has been reported to the court that a defendant has gained capacity to proceed, or when the defendant has been determined by the individual or institution having custody of him to have gained capacity and has been returned for trial, the court may hold a supplemental hearing to determine whether the defendant has capacity to proceed. The court may take any action at the supplemental hearing that it could have taken at an original hearing to determine the capacity of the defendant to proceed.

(b) The court may hold a supplemental hearing any time upon its own determination that a hearing is appropriate or necessary to inquire into the condition of the defendant.

(c) The court must hold a supplemental hearing if it appears that any of the conditions for dismissal of the charges have been met. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1.)

§ 15A-1008. Dismissal of charges.

When a defendant lacks capacity to proceed, the court may dismiss the charges:

(1) When it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the defendant will not gain capacity to proceed; or

(2) When the defendant has been substantially deprived of his liberty for a period of time equal to or in excess of the maximum permissible period of confinement for the crime or crimes charged; or
(3) Upon the expiration of a period of five years from the date of determination of incapacity to proceed in the case of misdemeanor charges and a period of 10 years in the case of felony charges. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1.)

§ 15A-1009. Dismissal with leave when defendant is found incapable of proceeding.

(a) If a defendant is found by the court to be incapable of proceeding and the charges have not been dismissed pursuant to G.S. 15A-1008, a prosecutor may enter a dismissal with leave under this section.
(b) Dismissal with leave results in removal of the case from the docket of the court, but all process outstanding, with the exception of any appearance bond, retains its validity, and all necessary actions in the case may be taken.
(c) The prosecutor may enter the dismissal with leave orally in open court or by filing the dismissal in writing with the clerk. If the dismissal is entered orally, the clerk must note the nature of the dismissal in the case records.
(d) Upon the defendant becoming capable of proceeding, or in the discretion of the prosecutor when he believes the defendant may soon become capable of proceeding, the prosecutor may reinstitute the proceedings by filing written notice with the clerk, with the defendant and with the defendant's attorney of record.
(e) A dismissal with leave entered under this section is no longer in effect if the court later dismisses the charges pursuant to G.S. 15A-1008.
(f) Nothing in this section shall limit or prohibit the court from dismissing criminal charges pursuant to G.S. 15A-1008 upon motion by the defendant or upon the court's own motion. (1983, c. 460, s. 1.)

Article 57.

Pleas.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This Article states rules concerning pleas in both district and superior court. A primary model utilized in drafting was American Law Institute, A Model Code of Pre-Arraignment Procedure — Tentative Draft No. 5, Article 350 (1972). This Article, in turn, was based substantially upon A.B.A. Project on Standards for Criminal Justice, Standards Relating to Pleas of Guilty (1968).

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article appears as originally drafted by the Criminal Code Commission and does not reflect amendments or changes in the law since the enactment of Session Laws 1973, c. 1286.

§ 15A-1011. Pleas in district and superior courts; waiver of appearance.

(a) A defendant may plead not guilty, guilty, or no contest "(nolo contendere)." A plea may be received only from the defendant himself in open court except when:

(1) The defendant is a corporation, in which case the plea may be entered by counsel or a corporate officer; or

(2) There is a waiver of arraignment and a filing of a written plea of not guilty under G.S. 15A-945; or

(3) In misdemeanor cases there is a written waiver of appearance submitted with the approval of the presiding judge; or

(4) Written pleas in traffic cases, hunting and fishing offenses under Chapter 113, and boating offenses under Chapter 75A are authorized under G.S. 7A-146(8); or

(5) The defendant executes a waiver and plea of not guilty as provided in G.S. 15A-1011(d).

(6) The defendant, before a magistrate or clerk of court, enters a written appearance, waiver of trial and plea of guilty and at the same time makes restitution in a case wherein the sole allegation is a violation of G.S. 14-107, the check is in an amount provided in G.S. 7A-273(8), and the warrant does not charge a fourth or subsequent violation of this statute.

(b) A defendant may plead no contest only with the consent of the prosecutor and the presiding judge.

(c) Upon entry of a plea of guilty or no contest or after conviction on a plea of not guilty, the defendant may request permission to enter a plea of guilty or no contest as to other crimes with which he is charged in the same or another prosecutorial district as defined in G.S. 7A-60. A defendant may not enter any plea to crimes charged in another prosecutorial district as defined in G.S. 7A-60 unless the district attorney of that district consents in writing to the entry of such plea. The prosecutor or his representative may appear in person or by filing an affidavit as to the nature of the evidence gathered as to these other crimes. Entry of a plea under this subsection constitutes a waiver of venue. A superior court is granted jurisdiction to accept the plea, upon an appropriate indictment or information, even though the case may otherwise be within the exclusive original jurisdiction of the district court. A district court may accept pleas under this section only in cases within the original jurisdiction of the district court and in cases within the concurrent jurisdiction of the district and superior courts pursuant to G.S. 7A-272(c).

(d) A defendant may execute a written waiver of appearance and plead not guilty and designate legal counsel to appear in his behalf in the following circumstances:

(1) The defendant agrees in writing to waive the right to testify in person and waives the right to face his accusers in person and agrees to be bound by the decision of the court as in any other case of adjudication of guilty and entry of judgment, subject to the right of appeal as in any other case; and

(2) The defendant submits in writing circumstances to justify the request and submits in writing a request to proceed under this section; and

(3) The judge allows the absence of the defendant because of distance, infirmity or other good cause.

(e) In the event the judge shall permit the procedure set forth in the foregoing subsection (d), the State may offer evidence and the defendant may offer evidence, with right of cross-examination of witnesses, and the other procedures, including the right of the prosecutor to dismiss the charges, shall be the same as in any other criminal case, except for the absence of defendant. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 27; c. 626, s. 1; 1983, c. 586, s. 3; 1987, c. 355, s. 4; 1987 (Reg. Sess., 1988), c. 1037, s. 64; 1995 (Reg. Sess., 1996), c. 725, s. 5.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Although a number of commentators have recommended that the plea of nolo contendere should be abolished, the Commission decided to follow the draft of the American Law Institute and retain this plea. The A.B.A. standards merely made retention optional. In line with its policy of eliminating Latin and Law French phraseology from the code, the Commission renamed the plea of nolo contendere as a plea of no contest. The Commission did not intend to change the legal effect of the plea as developed by North Carolina's common law. See Lane-Reticker, Nolo Contendere in North Carolina, 34 N.C.L. Rev. 280 (1956).

Although cases have suggested that only the approval of the presiding judge is necessary to the acceptance of the plea of nolo contendere, and this is the approach adopted by the A.B.A. and A.L.I. proposals, the Commission determined that the customary practice in North Carolina is to require the solicitor's approval also. It therefore added this to subsection (b). With this change, it became unnecessary for the Commission to retain the A.B.A.-A.L.I. admonition that the nolo plea should "be accepted by the court only after due consideration of the views of the parties and the interest of the public in the effective administration of justice." If the solicitor's consent is required, it becomes superfluous for the judge to take his views into account; the Commission thought the precatory language concerning the interest of the public was well understood to be a governing legal principle, and that it was futile to restate the matter in the text of a procedural statute.

Subsection (a) sets out the general requirement that the defendant be present in person before the judge at the time he pleads. The exception in subdivision (1) is suggested in the A.B.A.-A.L.I. provisions. The others were added by the Commission. Subdivision (2) creates an exception to harmonize with the new provisions on arraignment, and specifically authorizes waiver of arraignment and the submission of a written plea of not guilty signed by defendant and his counsel. Subdivision (4) acknowledges the written appearance, waiver of trial, and plea of guilty in traffic cases authorized in § 7A-146(8).

Subdivision (3) caused the Commission more of a problem. It understood that under common law a defendant represented by counsel at trial may waive his appearance in certain misdemeanors. There was some dispute within the Commission as to what the best policy on this matter should be, but it found the general question beyond the scope of its 1973 proposal. It left the matter open, however, so far as trial is concerned, and limited subdivision (3) to the plea stage. It allows a written waiver of appearance upon entering pleas in misdemeanor cases — with the approval of the presiding judge. The subdivision is silent as to waiver of appearance at trial. The Commission believed the question at both stages could well be handled by court rule or guidelines adopted by conferences of judges in the absence of authoritative case law.

Subdivision (5) and its companion provision, subsection (d), were added in committee while the code was being considered by the General Assembly. These provisions go far beyond what the Commission was willing to recommend at the pretrial stage, and indeed provides clearly for trials in both felony and misdemeanor cases in which the defendant may waive his appearance. As the procedure requires consent of the presiding judge, it can be presumed that the judge will allow this procedure in few felony cases — though it might be possible to imagine tax evasion cases in which defendants are hospitalized in which it might be feasible to allow waiver.

Subsection (c) is a new provision based on A.B.A. and A.L.I. proposals. The economy to the State in wrapping up all charges against a defendant at once is obvious. To cut down on factors of judge- or solicitor-shopping, the consent of the solicitor in any other district in which other charges are pending is necessary before the procedure of subsection (c) may be utilized.

Editor's Note. — Subdivision (8) of § 7A-146, referred to in the text of this section and in the Official Commentary, has been repealed.

CASE NOTES

Changing Plea. — Whether a prisoner may retract a plea of guilty and enter a plea of not guilty, or vice versa, is a matter for the sound legal discretion of the trial court. State v. Branner, 149 N.C. 559, 63 S.E. 169 (1908), decided under former law.

Plea by Deaf Mute. — Where the court, upon finding that defendant was a deaf mute, subpoenaed an interpreter, who, after being duly sworn and after the reading of the indictment, interpreted and explained the indictment to defendant, and after defendant had indicated to the interpreter that he understood the indictment, the interpreter translated the solicitor's (now prosecutor's) question of whether defendant was guilty or not guilty, and upon a negative reply given through the interpleader, a plea of not guilty was entered, it was held that there was no error on the arraignment of defendant or in the acceptance of his negative answer as a plea of not guilty. State v. Early, 211 N.C. 189, 189 S.E. 668 (1937), decided under former law.

Plea of Not Guilty By Reason of Insanity. — Where the prosecuting attorney by his argument implied that the defendant could have pled not guilty by reason of insanity and the State would not have had to prove all the elements of the crime, this was an incorrect statement of the law. A criminal defendant may only plead not guilty, guilty or no contest; if a defendant pleads not guilty he may raise the defense of insanity by filing a pretrial motion that he intends to rely on that defense. State v. Beach, 333 N.C. 733, 430 S.E.2d 248 (1993).

§ 15A-1012. Aid of counsel; time for deliberation.

(a) A defendant may not be called upon to plead until he has had an opportunity to retain counsel or, if he is eligible for assignment of counsel, until counsel has been assigned or waived in accordance with Article 36 of Chapter 7A of the General Statutes.

(b) In cases in the original jurisdiction of the superior court a defendant who has waived counsel may not plead within less than seven days following the date he was arrested or was otherwise informed of the charge. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1.)

Subsection (a) states the salutary rule that a defendant may not be arraigned, or otherwise called upon to plead, whether in district or superior court, without first being afforded his right to counsel. The wording is taken from the A.L.I. draft.

Subsection (b) is also based in part upon the A.L.I. draft, but has been limited to cases first tried in superior court. The Commission felt the procedure in district court misdemeanors could not accommodate the mandated seven-day delay in cases, even as to defendants without counsel. The purpose of the delay period is to give a "cooling-off" time to the defendant who may during a period of emotional stress decide both to waive counsel and plead guilty. The original draft of subsection (b) within the Commission followed the language of the A.B.A.-A.L.I. proposal and stated that the defendant may not be "called upon" to plead within the seven-day period. After one member raised a question as to language, subsection (b) was changed to say that a defendant may not be "required" to plead sooner than in seven days; a parallel change was not suggested for subsection (a). This change was for the apparent purpose of allowing an uncounseled defendant who affirmatively wanted to plead to do so immediately. For example, the mandated seven-day delay for a defendant without counsel might in a rural county mean waiting several months in county jail (if conditions of pretrial release could not be met or unless there was a waiver of venue) until the next session of court. The General Assembly, however, amended to the present language stating a one-week flat ban on pleas. The answer apparently is that if the defendant wants to enter an earlier plea, he must retain or accept appointment of counsel.

CASE NOTES

Defendant Not Prejudiced Where Right to Counsel Not Asserted. — Defendant was not prejudiced by the fact that he may not have been informed of his right to be represented by counsel before he entered a guilty plea where defendant has not argued that he was indigent and therefore entitled to appointed counsel at the time he entered his guilty plea or that he lacked the opportunity to retain counsel between the time of his arrest and trial. Article 58.

Procedures Relating to Guilty Pleas in Superior Court.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Since the mid-1960's a number of commentators have urged that the criminal justice system be examined realistically. They indicate that the rules postulate an adversary "due-process" mode of proceeding but in fact about 90 percent of the criminal convictions obtained come through the entry or negotiation of a guilty plea. They have called this the "administrative" mode of proceeding within the criminal justice system. Most of the recent proposals have been to legitimate the administrative handling of cases — to bring plea negotiations out of the back room and put them on the record. It is thought that making the procedure public should have a number of benefits.

These benefits include:

(1) Making the basis for negotiations more rational. If the process is legitimate but carries its approved guidelines, it becomes more difficult to make plea bargains on factors such as the particular mood of the prosecutor when approached, the political power exercised by the defendant or his lawyer, peculiar conditions of the local docket, etc.

(2) Allowing defendants to tell the truth in plea proceedings. They should not be expected to go before judges after plea negotiations and lie by saying no promises or agreements were made.

(3) The possibility of clear rules setting out exactly to what extent the judge should or should not get involved at various stages of the plea negotiations.

(4) The likelihood of fewer successful attacks on guilty pleas in post-conviction hearings. If the procedures of plea negotiation are on the record and accurately reflect the things (legitimately) done, the basis for later challenge is effectively minimized.

One of the first major proposals on plea negotiation was in the Report of the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice, The Challenge of Crime in a Free Society, pp. 134-137 (1967). This was soon followed by A.B.A. Project on Standards for Criminal Justice, Standards Relating to Guilty Pleas (1968). The model utilized in drafting this article is American Law Institute, A Model Code of Pre-Arraignment Procedure — Tentative Draft No. 5, Article 350 (1972).

Although the Commission proposed no statute as to plea negotiations in district court, it assumes that these negotiations will be utilized in that court. The provisions of a normative nature in this Article should apply in district court also, though it is clearly expected the process should be less formal and not subject to the procedural restrictions placed upon pleas of guilty or no contest in superior court.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article appears as originally drafted by the Criminal Code Commission and does not reflect amendments or changes in the law since the enactment of Session Laws 1973, c. 1286.

§ 15A-1021. Plea conference; improper pressure prohibited; submission of arrangement to judge; restitution and reparation as part of plea arrangement agreement, etc.

(a) In superior court, the prosecution and the defense may discuss the possibility that, upon the defendant's entry of a plea of guilty or no contest to one or more offenses, the prosecutor will not charge, will dismiss, or will move for the dismissal of other charges, or will recommend or not oppose a particular sentence. If the defendant is represented by counsel in the discussions the defendant need not be present. The trial judge may participate in the discussions.

(b) No person representing the State or any of its political subdivisions may bring improper pressure upon a defendant to induce a plea of guilty or no contest.

(c) If the parties have reached a proposed plea arrangement in which the prosecutor has agreed to recommend a particular sentence, they may, with the permission of the trial judge, advise the judge of the terms of the arrangement and the reasons therefor in advance of the time for tender of the plea. The proposed plea arrangement may include a provision for the defendant to make restitution or reparation to an aggrieved party or parties for the damage or loss caused by the offense or offenses committed by the defendant. The judge may indicate to the parties whether he will concur in the proposed disposition. The judge may withdraw his concurrence if he learns of information not consistent with the representations made to him.

(d) When restitution or reparation by the defendant is a part of the plea arrangement agreement, if the judge concurs in the proposed disposition he may order that restitution or reparation be made as a condition of special probation pursuant to the provisions of G.S. 15A-1351, or probation pursuant to the provisions of G.S. 15A-1343(d). If an active sentence is imposed the court may recommend that the defendant make restitution or reparation out of any earnings gained by the defendant if he is granted work release privileges under the provisions of G.S. 148-33.1, or that restitution or reparation be imposed as a condition of parole in accordance with the provisions of G.S. 148-57.1. The order or recommendation providing for restitution or reparation shall be in accordance with the applicable provisions of G.S. 15A-1343(d) and Article 81C of this Chapter.

If the offense is one in which there is evidence of physical, mental or sexual abuse of a minor, the court should encourage the minor and the minor's parents or custodians to participate in rehabilitative treatment and the plea agreement may include a provision that the defendant will be ordered to pay for such treatment.

When restitution or reparation is recommended as part of a plea arrangement that results in an active sentence, the sentencing court shall enter as a part of the commitment that restitution or reparation is recommended as part of the plea arrangement. The Administrative Office of the Courts shall prepare and distribute forms which provide for ample space to make restitution or reparation recommendations incident to commitments. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 117; c. 166, s. 27; 1977, c. 614, ss. 3, 4; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, s. 1; 1979, c. 760, s. 3; 1985, c. 474, s. 2; 1987, c. 598, s. 3; 1997-80, s. 2; 1998-212, s. 19.4(e).)

Subsection (a) is basic. It legitimates plea negotiations, prohibits the judge from taking an active role in the actual striking of any bargain, and indicates that counsel may represent a defendant's interests and that the defendant need not be present. The Commission's proposal went one important step farther and only authorized plea negotiations in superior court with defendants represented by counsel. This provision was deleted in the General Assembly.

Subsection (b) prohibits use of "improper pressure" to induce the defendant to enter a plea of guilty or no contest. The original draft followed an adaptation of the wording of A.L.I. Code of Pre-Arraignment Procedure § 350.3(3), but the Commission decided the concept was sufficiently well understood that it need not be spelled out in detail. Indeed, some thought that a specific definition of "improper pressure" might restrict the meaning of the phrase, though the primary impetus for deleting the definition came from those who felt that inserting such a detailed prohibition on use of improper pressure might by implication indicate a Commission belief that the prohibited acts have been widely practiced in the past. The Commission specifically directed, however, that the A.L.I. language be quoted in the commentary. It is:

"(3) Improper Pressure. The prosecutor shall not seek to induce a plea of guilty or nolo contendere by "(a) charging or threatening to charge the defendant with a crime not supported by the facts believed by the prosecutor to be provable;

"(b) charging or threatening to charge the defendant with a crime not ordinarily charged in the jurisdiction for the conduct allegedly engaged in by him; or

"(c) threatening the defendant that if he pleads not guilty, his sentence may be more severe than that which is ordinarily imposed in the jurisdiction in similar cases on defendants who plead not guilty."

The basis for subsection (c) is in the A.L.I. proposal, but the Commission has made two changes. First, upon objection to the term "plea agreement" used in the A.L.I. proposal, the Commission adopted the term "plea arrangement." The objection to "agreement" was that it may imply a binding contract on the parties.

Second, the Commission decided to handle plea arrangements differently depending on whether it involved a sentence recommendation or a decision relating to the charge. The final word on sentencing must come from the judge; the Commission (unlike the A.L.I. proposal) gave the final decision as to charge reduction or dismissal to the prosecutor. The judge cannot veto that. Therefore, it is significant that subsection (c) refers to "a proposed plea arrangement in which the solicitor has agreed to recommend a particular sentence. . . ."

One other point needs to be made concerning subsection (c). No one may discuss a plea arrangement with a judge except with his permission. Some judges do not wish to commit themselves even tentatively as to sentence. The purpose of the subsection, of course, is to find out the judge's reaction to a proposed sentence; if the judge reacts negatively, the parties may resume negotiations and try again. One important aspect of this section is that it requires negotiation with full knowledge of the facts of the case and the defendant's prior criminal history, as the judge's tentative approval may be withdrawn "if he learns of information not consistent with the representations made to him."

The Fair Sentencing Act, as codified in Article 81A of this Chapter, § 15A-1340.1 et seq., resulted in revisions to other portions of the general statutes. See, e.g., Chapter 14, Articles 1, 2, 2A, 33; Chapter 15A, Articles 58, 81A, 82, 83, 85, 85A, 89, 91; Chapter 148, Article 2, and Chapter 162, Article 4. State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

For case discussing the historical background, policies, purposes, and implementation of the "Fair Sentencing Act," § 15A-1340.1 et seq., see State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

There is no absolute right to have a guilty plea accepted. State v. Collins, 300 N.C. 142, 265 S.E.2d 172 (1980); State v. Wallace, 345 N.C. 462, 480 S.E.2d 673 (1997).

Prosecution is bound by the terms and conditions utilized to obtain the guilty plea. State v. Slade, 291 N.C. 275, 229 S.E.2d 921 (1976).

State may withdraw from a plea bargain arrangement at any time prior to, but not after, the actual entry of the guilty plea by defendant or any other change of position by him constituting detrimental reliance upon the arrangement. State v. Collins, 300 N.C. 142, 265 S.E.2d 172 (1980).

Judicial Approval for Agreement Required. — A plea agreement involving a sentence recommendation by the State must first have judicial approval before it can be effective; it is merely an executory agreement until approved by the court. State v. Wallace, 345 N.C. 462, 480 S.E.2d 673 (1997).

Where a defendant elects not to stand by his portion of a plea agreement, the State is not bound by its agreement to forego the greater charge. State v. Fox, 34 N.C. App. 576, 239 S.E.2d 471 (1977).

Appeal to Superior Court for Trial de Novo. — Where a defendant originally charged with felonies entered guilty pleas to misdemeanors in the district court pursuant to a plea bargain with the State, but then appealed to the superior court for a trial de novo, the State was not bound by the agreement and could try the defendant upon the felony charges or any lesser included offenses. State v. Fox, 34 N.C. App. 576, 239 S.E.2d 471 (1977).

Plea Invalid Where Defendant Not Informed of Parole Conditions Attached to It. — Where, following guilty pleas to drug offenses pursuant to a plea bargain, the trial court ordered as a condition of parole that defendants reimburse the Bureau of Investigation Drug Division for the expenses it had incurred in investigating the charges and obtaining the proof, imposition of the condition without having advised defendants of it before acceptance of their pleas made their pleas both involuntary and unintelligent, since the condition was probably illegal under § 15A-1343(d) and quite unanticipated in connection with the plea bargains, and since it clearly was a special limitation on parole eligibility. Evans v. Garrison, 657 F.2d 64 (4th Cir. 1981).

Failure to inform a client of a plea bargain offer constitutes ineffective assistance of counsel absent extenuating circumstances. State v. Simmons, 65 N.C. App. 294, 309 S.E.2d 493 (1983).

Attorney's Misunderstanding of Terms of Plea Bargain Held Prejudicial. — Defendant was prejudiced by the failure of his attorney to inform him of a plea bargain offer, where the attorney had mistakenly interpreted the offer as being conditional upon acceptance of it by his codefendant and therefore did not communicate the offer to defendant when the codefendant did not accept. State v. Simmons, 65 N.C. App. 294, 309 S.E.2d 493 (1983).

Guilty Pleas Held Involuntary. — Guilty pleas made by defendant when, upon his counsel undertaking to plead not guilty for him, the judge became visibly agitated, said in what appeared to be an angry voice that he was tired of "frivolous pleas," and directed counsel to confer with defendant and return with an "honest plea," were involuntary and coerced by the trial judge in violation of defendant's constitutional rights. State v. Pait, 81 N.C. App. 286, 343 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

§ 15A-1022. Advising defendant of consequences of guilty plea; informed choice; factual basis for plea; admission of guilt not required.

(a) Except in the case of corporations or in misdemeanor cases in which there is a waiver of appearance under G.S. 15A-1011(a)(3), a superior court judge may not accept a plea of guilty or no contest from the defendant without first addressing him personally and:

(1) Informing him that he has a right to remain silent and that any statement he makes may be used against him;

(2) Determining that he understands the nature of the charge;
(3) Informing him that he has a right to plead not guilty;
(4) Informing him that by his plea he waives his right to trial by jury and his right to be confronted by the witnesses against him;
(5) Determining that the defendant, if represented by counsel, is satisfied with his representation;
(6) Informing him of the maximum possible sentence on the charge for the class of offense for which the defendant is being sentenced, including that possible from consecutive sentences, and of the mandatory minimum sentence, if any, on the charge; and
(7) Informing him that if he is not a citizen of the United States of America, a plea of guilty or no contest may result in deportation, the exclusion from admission to this country, or the denial of naturalization under federal law.

(b) By inquiring of the prosecutor and defense counsel and the defendant personally, the judge must determine whether there were any prior plea discussions, whether the parties have entered into any arrangement with respect to the plea and the terms thereof, and whether any improper pressure was exerted in violation of G.S. 15A-1021(b). The judge may not accept a plea of guilty or no contest from a defendant without first determining that the plea is a product of informed choice.

(c) The judge may not accept a plea of guilty or no contest without first determining that there is a factual basis for the plea. This determination may be based upon information including but not limited to:
(1) A statement of the facts by the prosecutor.
(2) A written statement of the defendant.
(3) An examination of the presentence report.
(4) Sworn testimony, which may include reliable hearsay.
(5) A statement of facts by the defense counsel.

(d) The judge may accept the defendant's plea of no contest even though the defendant does not admit that he is in fact guilty if the judge is nevertheless satisfied that there is a factual basis for the plea. The judge must advise the defendant that if he pleads no contest he will be treated as guilty whether or not he admits guilt. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 27; 1989, c. 280; 1993, c. 538, s. 10; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b).)

Subsection (a) is based upon the requirements imposed by Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238, 89 S. Ct. 1709, 23 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1969). The "catechism" here required of the judge is similar to, though varying in particulars from, those in the A.B.A. and A.L.I. proposals. (A.L.I. Code § 350.4(1); A.B.A. Standards § 1.4.)

The terminology "informed choice" in subsection (1) comes from the A.L.I. proposal. The A.B.A. standards used the word "voluntary."

In subsection (c), on the other hand, the Commission adopted the wording of the A.B.A. standards: "factual basis for the plea." The A.L.I. draft would go slightly farther and require the judge to make sure that reasonable cause for the charge made exists.

The Commission thought it would help clarify matters to insert in subsection (c) a description of the type of evidence that the judge may entertain in ruling on a plea. The Commission avoided, however, the thorny problem of the extent to which the defendant must be apprised of adverse information in the presentence report. This issue is subject to consideration when the Commission tackles the entire question of sentencing procedure.

Subsection (d) departs somewhat from the wording of the A.L.I. proposal, but like it, is based upon the decision in North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25, 91 S. Ct. 160, 27 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1970).

CASE NOTES

Court Must Find Factual Basis for Plea. — When plea of no contest is now entered there must be a finding by the court that there is a factual basis for the plea. This finding and entry of judgment thereon constitute an adjudication of guilt. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

A judge may not accept a defendant's guilty plea without first determining that there is a factual basis for the plea; thus, where there was no factual basis for defendant's guilty plea to the charge of failure to appear for trial it was error for the trial court to accept defendant's plea. State v. Weathers, 339 N.C. 441, 451 S.E.2d 266 (1994).

Subsection (c) of this section provides that before the court may accept a no contest plea it must determine that there is a factual basis for the plea. This changes the rule that the court must impose a sentence based on the no contest plea and may not adjudicate the guilt of defendant upon such a plea. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

Defendant Must Be Aware of Direct Consequences. — A guilty plea is not considered voluntary and intelligent unless it is entered by one fully aware of the direct consequences, including the actual value of any commitments made to him by the court, prosecutor, or his own counsel. Bryant v. Cherry, 687 F.2d 48 (4th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1073, 103 S. Ct. 497, 74 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1982).

Even though it is error under this statute and constitution for the court to fail to personally inquire of the defendant about his plea and to determine that the plea was voluntary and the informed choice of the defendant, under the total facts and circumstances of a case the error may be harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. Such as where the defendant fails to allege any facts to show that the pleas of guilty were involuntary, only that the judge did not ask him personally if they were voluntary. State v. Williams, 65 N.C. App. 472, 310 S.E.2d 83 (1983).

"Direct consequences" are broadly defined as those having a definite, immediate and largely automatic effect on the range of the defendant's punishment. This definition is not to be applied in a technical, ritualistic manner. Bryant v. Cherry, 687 F.2d 48 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1073, 103 S. Ct. 497, 74 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1982).

A mandatory minimum sentence constitutes a "direct consequence" of a guilty plea, therefore, a court must apply the review required by § 15A-1443(b). State v. Bozeman, 115 N.C. App. 658, 446 S.E.2d 140 (1994).

This section does not require trial judge to elicit evidence from each, any or all of the enumerated sources. The trial judge may consider any information properly brought to his attention, but that which he considers must appear in the record. State v. Barts, 321 N.C. 170, 362 S.E.2d 235 (1987).

Nor Is the Court Required to Warn That the Guilty Plea Establishes Aggravating Circumstances or Forecloses Certain Arguments on Appeal. — The court was not required to tell the defendant that, as he was pleading guilty to murder in the first degree based on theories of premeditation and deliberation and of felony murder, his pleas to the felonies other than the murder would establish four aggravating circumstances and foreclose the argument of certain issues on appeal. Where the court otherwise examined defendant strictly in accordance with the statutory requirements of this section, it had no duty to expound further on direct consequences, absent an indication by the defendant that he required such instruction. State v. Smith, 352 N.C. 531, 532 S.E.2d 773 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1419, 149 L. Ed. 2d 360 (2001).

This statute does not contain a requirement that the trial court attempt to discuss or explain to defendant any aspect of law pertaining to parole; thus, the court was under no duty to do so. State v. Daniels, 114 N.C. App. 501, 442 S.E.2d 161 (1994).

Court Not Required to Ask If Defendant Is Guilty. — The court's acceptance of defendant's plea was not in error, despite the court's failure to inquire whether defendant was in fact guilty. Nothing in this section requires the court to make such an inquiry. State v. Bolinger, 320 N.C. 596, 359 S.E.2d 459 (1987).

In practice it is generally counsel for the state and the defendant who furnish the court sentencing information on transcript of plea forms. As officers of the court, these individuals also have a responsibility to ensure the forms are complete and accurate when submitted to the trial judge. State v. Bozeman, 115 N.C. App. 658, 446 S.E.2d 140 (1994).

Potential Fines. — Subsection (a) contains no provision requiring a defendant to be informed of any potential fines prior to acceptance of a guilty plea. State v. Bozeman, 115 N.C. App. 658, 446 S.E.2d 140 (1994).

A violation of subsection (b) of this section is error. State v. Williams, 65 N.C. App. 472, 310 S.E.2d 83 (1983).

When Lack of Strict Compliance Not Prejudicial. — Where the defendants' attorney had obtained information from the trial judge that the likely sentence imposed upon their pleas of no contest would be 30 to 40 years, the attorney had told the defendants of that probability, trial judge questioned each defendant regarding the voluntariness of their pleas, and each understood that he could be imprisoned for life, the trial judge's failure to comply strictly to subdivision (a)(6) of this section was not prejudicial error. State v. Richardson, 61 N.C. App. 284, 300 S.E.2d 826 (1983).

Failure of the trial judge to comply with this section did not require reversal where the defendant failed to demonstrate prejudice by the court's lapse. The transcript of plea entered into between defendant and the prosecutor covered all the areas omitted by the trial judge. State v. Hendricks, 138 N.C. App. 668, 531 S.E.2d 896 (2000).

No Technical, Ritualistic Application of Rule. — The trial court's failure to inform the defendant of the maximum or minimum sentence for a Class C offense did not invalidate her guilty plea to an habitual felon charge, where the trial court questioned her as to whether she understood the sentencing consequences, and the defendant responded that she did understand, that she had no questions, and she admitted committing each of the applicable felonies. State v. Williams, 133 N.C. App. 326, 515 S.E.2d 80 (1999).

Record Must Tend to Show Guilt. — This section, if it is to be given any meaning at all, must contemplate that some substantive material independent of the plea itself appear of record which tends to show that defendant is, in fact, guilty. State v. Sinclair, 301 N.C. 193, 270 S.E.2d 418 (1980).

Although the trial court had to determine that there was a "factual basis" that the killing was committed without malice in order to accept the defendant's guilty plea to voluntary manslaughter, there was other evidence before the court, including the fact that the defendant used a deadly weapon to accomplish the killing, to support the finding of the aggravating factor that the killing was committed with malice. State v. Heidmous, 75 N.C. App. 488, 331 S.E.2d 200 (1985).

Sources of Information in Subsection (c) Not Exclusive. — Subsection (c) of this section does not require the trial judge to elicit evidence from each, any or all of the enumerated sources. Those sources are not exclusive because the statute specifically so provides. The trial judge may consider any information properly brought to his attention in determining whether there is a factual basis for a plea of guilty or no contest. State v. Dickens, 299 N.C. 76, 261 S.E.2d 183 (1980).

This section does not require the trial judge to elicit evidence from each, any or all of the enumerated sources. The trial judge may consider any information properly brought to his attention in determining whether there is a factual basis for a plea of guilty or no contest. State v. Sinclair, 301 N.C. 193, 270 S.E.2d 418 (1980).

Information in Plea Transcript. — Defendant knew or should have known that she did not have a plea agreement with the State where the defendant signed a plea transcript which detailed the charge to which she was pleading guilty but contained no plea agreement. State v. Wilkins, 131 N.C. App. 220, 506 S.E.2d 274 (1998).

Written statement of the defendant as a source of information under subsection (c) of this section ordinarily consists of defendant's written answers to the questions contained in a document entitled "Transcript of Plea." State v. Dickens, 299 N.C. 76, 261 S.E.2d 183 (1980).

A presentence motion to withdraw a plea of guilty should be allowed for any fair and just reason. State v. Handy, 326 N.C. 532, 391 S.E.2d 159 (1990).

A motion to withdraw a guilty plea made before sentencing is significantly different from a post-judgment or collateral attack on such a plea, which would be by a motion for appropriate relief. State v. Handy, 326 N.C. 532, 391 S.E.2d 159 (1990).

Basis for Presentence Motion Held Sufficient. — For case holding defendant proffered a fair and just reason for his presentence motion to withdraw his plea of guilty. State v. Handy, 326 N.C. 532, 391 S.E.2d 159 (1990).

A no contest plea may be used to aggravate a crime so as to sustain a death sentence under § 15A-2000(e). State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

No Contest Plea as Conviction for Evidentiary Purposes in Other Proceedings. — Under subsection (c) of this section, when a plea of no contest is now entered there must be a finding by the court that there is a factual basis for the plea. This finding and the entry of a judgment thereon constitute an adjudication of guilt. This adjudication would be a conviction within the meaning of § 8C-1, Rule 609(a), and as a conviction it may then be used in another case to attack the credibility of a witness. State v. Outlaw, 326 N.C. 647, 390 S.E.2d 336 (1990).

Subsection (c) of this section has changed the rule that a court may not adjudicate the defendant's guilt on a plea of no contest. Before a court may now accept a plea of no contest it must make a finding that there is a factual basis for the plea. This amounts to an adjudication of guilt, and the rationale of former cases that there is no adjudication on a no contest plea so that it may not be used in another case no longer applies. Davis v. Hiatt, 326 N.C. 462, 390 S.E.2d 338 (1990).

admitted under § 8C-1, Rule 609(a) for purposes of impeachment. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

Use of No Contest Plea Entered Prior to July 1, 1975 to Support Habitual Felon Charge Not Proper. — Where defendant was convicted on a plea of no contest to a charge of felony escape, and judgment was entered on April 2, 1973, before the effective date of Chapter 15A (July 1, 1975), and where the rule at that time was that a conviction resulting from a nolo contendere plea could not be used against defendant in any case other than the one in which it was entered because it was neither an admission nor an adjudication of guilt, use of this conviction as one of three prior felony convictions required by § 14-7.1 to support a charge of being a habitual felon was improper. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

Modification of Involuntary Plea Would Not Make It Acceptable. — Where the trial judge rejected the plea because it was not free and voluntary, an opportunity to modify the agreement would not have resolved the problem and made the plea acceptable. State v. Martin, 77 N.C. App. 61, 334 S.E.2d 459 (1985), cert. denied, 317 N.C. 711, 347 S.E.2d 47 (1986).

Factual Basis Shown by Prosecutor's Statement. — Statement of facts given by prosecutor at sentencing hearing held sufficient to support the determination of the sentencing judge that there was a factual basis for the guilty plea. State v. Shea, 80 N.C. App. 705, 343 S.E.2d 437, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 713, 347 S.E.2d 452 (1986).

Guilty Plea Upheld. — Where the trial judge relied on the prosecution's summary of the evidence, to which defendant stipulated, and this summary provided a sufficient factual showing to support defendant's plea of guilty to premeditated murder, the trial judge was not in error in accepting defendant's guilty plea to murder in the first degree. State v. Barts, 321 N.C. 170, 362 S.E.2d 235 (1987).

Where the trial judge adequately explained the two theories of murder in the first degree and defendant's responses indicate that he understood the nature of the plea and the possible consequences, the record did not support defendant's claim that his plea was not an informed choice as to both theories. State v. Barts, 321 N.C. 170, 362 S.E.2d 235 (1987).

The evidence provided a sufficient factual basis to support the defendant's plea of guilty to the premeditated murder of his infant son. State v. Atkins, 349 N.C. 62, 505 S.E.2d 97 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1147, 119 S. Ct. 2025, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1999).

Guilty Pleas Held Involuntary. — Guilty pleas made by defendant when, upon his counsel undertaking to plead not guilty for him, the judge became visibly agitated, said in what appeared to be an angry voice that he was tired of "frivolous pleas," and directed counsel to confer with defendant and return with an "honest plea," were involuntary and coerced by the trial judge in violation of defendant's constitutional rights. State v. Pait, 81 N.C. App. 286, 343 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

Concession of Guilt Upheld. — An acceptable consent as to a concession of guilt does not require the same formalities as mandated by the provisions concerning guilty pleas, and the evidence supported a proper consent where the defendant testified under oath that he understood the consequences of the concession, had discussed it with his attorney, and believed that the strategy was in his best interest. State v. Perez, 135 N.C. App. 543, 522 S.E.2d 102 (1999).

Factual basis for nolo contendere pleas to charges of sexual activity by a substitute parent and crime against nature held adequate. State v. Hoover, 89 N.C. App. 199, 365 S.E.2d 920, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 177, 373 S.E.2d 118 (1988).

Applied in State v. Puckett, 43 N.C. App. 153, 258 S.E.2d 393 (1979); State v. Dickens, 299 N.C. 76, 261 S.E.2d 183 (1980); State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983); State v. Blandford, 66 N.C. App. 348, 311 S.E.2d 338 (1984); State v. Deal, 99 N.C. App. 456, 393 S.E.2d 317 (1990); State v. Moore, 102 N.C. App. 434, 402 S.E.2d 435 (1991); State v. Barnett, 113 N.C. App. 69, 437 S.E.2d 711 (1993); State v. Gilmore, 142 N.C. App. 465, 542 S.E.2d 694 (2001).

§ 15A-1023. Action by judge in plea arrangements relating to sentence; no approval required when arrangement does not relate to sentence.

(a) If the parties have agreed upon a plea arrangement pursuant to G.S. 15A-1021 in which the prosecutor has agreed to recommend a particular sentence, they must disclose the substance of their agreement to the judge at the time the defendant is called upon to plead.

(b) Before accepting a plea pursuant to a plea arrangement in which the prosecutor has agreed to recommend a particular sentence, the judge must advise the parties whether he approves the arrangement and will dispose of the case accordingly. If the judge rejects the arrangement, he must so inform the parties, refuse to accept the defendant's plea of guilty or no contest, and advise the defendant personally that neither the State nor the defendant is bound by the rejected arrangement. The judge must advise the parties of the reasons he rejected the arrangement and afford them an opportunity to modify the arrangement accordingly. Upon rejection of the plea arrangement by the judge the defendant is entitled to a continuance until the next session of court. A decision by the judge disapproving a plea arrangement is not subject to appeal.

(c) If the parties have entered a plea arrangement relating to the disposition of charges in which the prosecutor has not agreed to make any recommendations concerning sentence, the substance of the arrangement must be disclosed to the judge at the time the defendant is called upon to plead. The judge must accept the plea if he determines that the plea is the product of the informed choice of the defendant and that there is a factual basis for the plea. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 27; 1977, c. 186.)

This section merely spells out procedures that follow through on policies discussed in the commentary to prior sections.

Subsection (1) requires the judge in open court, presumably after going through the "catechism" required by § 15A-1022, to tell the defendant whether he will abide by the recommendation as to sentence. If the judge refuses to go along, the parties can either renegotiate or the defendant may withdraw his plea and secure a continuance as a matter of right. See § 15A-1024.

CASE NOTES

There is no absolute right to have a guilty plea accepted. The State may withdraw from a plea bargain arrangement at any time prior to, but not after, the actual entry of the guilty plea by defendant or any other change of position by him constituting detrimental reliance upon the arrangement. State v. Collins, 300 N.C. 142, 265 S.E.2d 172 (1980).

Plea Bargain Agreement Must Have Judicial Approval. — A plea bargain agreement involving a sentence recommendation by the State must first have judicial approval pursuant to subsection (b) of this section before it is enforceable; it is merely an executory agreement until approved by the court. State v. Hudson, 331 N.C. 122, 415 S.E.2d 732 (1992), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1055, 113 S. Ct. 983, 122 L. Ed. 2d 136, rehearing denied, 507 U.S. 967, 113 S. Ct. 1404, 122 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1993).

It is of No Effect if it Does Not. — Alleged plea agreement involved a sentence recommendation that defendant enter pleas of guilty to the felonies of second-degree murder, first-degree burglary, robbery with a dangerous weapon, and conspiracy to commit second-degree burglary and that defendant receive two concurrent life sentences. However, the proposed agreement between the defendant and the State had no effect as a matter of law because it had not been approved by the trial judge. State v. Marlow, 334 N.C. 273, 432 S.E.2d 275 (1993).

A lack of judicial approval renders a proposed plea agreement null and void. State v. Johnson, 126 N.C. App. 271, 485 S.E.2d 315 (1997).

Court's Refusal to Consider Held Prejudicial. — The trial court's refusal to consider plea bargain arrangement was prejudicial error entitling defendant to a new trial. State v. Lineberger, 342 N.C. 599, 467 S.E.2d 24 (1996).

Modification of Involuntary Plea Would Not Make It Acceptable. — Where the trial judge rejected the plea because it was not free and voluntary, an opportunity to modify the agreement would not have resolved the problem and made the plea acceptable. State v. Martin, 77 N.C. App. 61, 334 S.E.2d 459 (1985), cert. denied, 317 N.C. 711, 347 S.E.2d 47 (1986).

Judge required to consider aggravating, etc., factors during sentencing. — Unless a sentence has been agreed to during plea bargaining, a sentencing judge is required to consider the statutory list of aggravating and mitigating factors during sentencing, of which many items concern circumstances that may surround the offense. Such circumstances might include facts concerning both a dismissed charge as well as the admitted offense. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

The mere fact that a guilty plea has been accepted pursuant to a plea bargain does not preclude the sentencing court from reviewing all of the circumstances surrounding the admitted offense in determining the presence of aggravating or mitigating factors. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

Applicability of Subsection (b). — The unambiguous language of subsection (b) of this section makes it clear that its provisions are activated when the trial judge rejects a negotiated plea arrangement before actual arraignment of defendant and before the introduction of evidence. State v. Williams, 291 N.C. 442, 230 S.E.2d 515 (1976).

Withdrawal of Plea Offer. — No enforceable plea agreement existed between defendant and the State nor were defendant's constitutional rights violated where the State withdrew plea offer before defendant entered a guilty plea or in any other way detrimentally relied upon it, and the plea agreement was never presented to the trial court for approval as required by subsection (b). State v. Johnson, 126 N.C. App. 271, 485 S.E.2d 315 (1997).

Right to Continuance Absolute. — By adding the fourth sentence of subsection (b) of this section, the legislature has clearly granted to the defendant an absolute right to a continuance upon rejection of a proposed plea agreement at arraignment. State v. Tyndall, 55 N.C. App. 57, 284 S.E.2d 575 (1981).

Trial court is not required under this section to order continuance on its own motion. State v. Martin, 77 N.C. App. 61, 334 S.E.2d 459 (1985), cert. denied, 317 N.C. 711, 347 S.E.2d 47 (1986).

A jury has no role in a plea agreement; thus, defendant's argument to the jury asking why he should not be allowed to plead guilty to second-degree murder was improper. State v. Roseborough, 344 N.C. 121, 472 S.E.2d 763 (1996).

Statements by Prosecutor Excluded. — Trial court did not err in excluding statements made by the prosecutor at the plea and sentencing of codefendant as statements were not admissible as admissions of a party opponent and relevant to his defense in the guilt-innocence phase of the trial. State v. Collins, 345 N.C. 170, 478 S.E.2d 191 (1996).

Modification Not Mandatory. — Section 15A-1023(b) merely requires the trial court to afford the parties an opportunity to modify the terms of a rejected plea if both parties so desire; the State is not mandated to do so on pain of not being able to proceed against the defendant on the original indictment. State v. Bailey, 145 N.C. App. 13, 548 S.E.2d 814 (2001).

Applied in State v. Collins, 44 N.C. App. 141, 260 S.E.2d 650 (1979); State v. Deal, 99 N.C. App. 456, 393 S.E.2d 317 (1990).

Stated in Blackledge v. Allison, 431 U.S. 63, 97 S. Ct. 1621, 52 L. Ed. 2d 136 (1977).

§ 15A-1024. Withdrawal of guilty plea when sentence not in accord with plea arrangement.

If at the time of sentencing, the judge for any reason determines to impose a sentence other than provided for in a plea arrangement between the parties, the judge must inform the defendant of that fact and inform the defendant that he may withdraw his plea. Upon withdrawal, the defendant is entitled to a continuance until the next session of court. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is based in part on A.L.I. Code § 350.6, except the Commission did not adopt the part that would tie down for the record defendant's acquiescence as to the sentence pronounced. The right to automatic continuance was added by the Commission.

The Commission's proposal allowed withdrawal of the plea if the sentence was "more severe" than specified in the arrangement. After some discussion in a legislative committee as to whether a short sentence of imprisonment was more severe than a substantially longer probationary period, the section was amended to apply if there is any change at all concerning the sentence.

CASE NOTES

Applicability of Section. — The unambiguous language of this section discloses that it applies in cases in which the trial judge does not reject a plea arrangement when it is presented to him but hears the evidence and at the time for sentencing determines that a sentence different from that provided for in the plea arrangement must be imposed. State v. Williams, 291 N.C. 442, 230 S.E.2d 515 (1976).

There is no conflict in the language of this section and § 15A-1023 requiring that they be harmonized or construed. Rather, it clearly appears that the legislature intended that these separate statutes be independent and apply to entirely different, carefully delineated factual situations. State v. Williams, 291 N.C. 442, 230 S.E.2d 515 (1976).

Refusal of Witness to Testify on Grounds That Agreement Might Be Revoked. — A witness who had entered a guilty plea pursuant to a plea bargain to the same crimes for which defendant was being tried but who had not been sentenced had a right to refuse to answer questions in defendant's trial on the ground that his answers might tend to incriminate him since there was a possibility that the witness would be tried on the charges if the trial judge decided to impose a different sentence than that agreed upon in the plea bargain. State v. Corbin, 48 N.C. App. 194, 268 S.E.2d 260, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 97, 273 S.E.2d 301 (1980).

Reinstatement of a guilty plea following the correction of an error of law does not violate the principles of double jeopardy, and on remand, the trial court can impose a sentence other than the original plea arrangement, if it follows this section by giving the defendant an opportunity to withdraw his plea and have the matter continued to the next session of court. State v. Oakley, 84 N.C. App. 273, 352 S.E.2d 447 (1987).

Applied in State v. Puckett, 299 N.C. 727, 264 S.E.2d 96 (1980).

§ 15A-1025. Plea discussion and arrangement inadmissible.

The fact that the defendant or his counsel and the prosecutor engaged in plea discussions or made a plea arrangement may not be received in evidence against or in favor of the defendant in any criminal or civil action or administrative proceedings. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 27.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The parallel provision in A.L.I. Code § 350.7 has an initial qualifying clause: "Unless the defendant subsequently enters a plea of guilty or nolo contendere which is not withdrawn. . . ." The Commission thought this clause unnecessary as § 15A-1022(b) requires the judge to examine the defendant as to plea arrangements, and § 15A-1026 requires that a verbatim record be kept.

The Commission rejected a proposal to add a proviso to this section allowing evidence of plea discussions and arrangements to come in when essential to perjury prosecutions or contempt proceedings. It is not clear whether this was a deliberate policy decision or was based upon the assumption that the courts of necessity would engraft those exceptions upon the literal words of the section.

CASE NOTES

Purpose of Section. — This section was designed to facilitate plea discussions and agreements by protecting both defendants and prosecuting officials from being penalized for engaging in practices which are consistent with the objectives of the criminal justice system. State v. Wooten, 86 N.C. App. 481, 358 S.E.2d 78 (1987).

Discussion Between Defendant and Arresting Officer. — This section is not applicable where the only evidence of plea negotiation concerns a discussion between defendant and an arresting officer. State v. Lewis, 32 N.C. App. 298, 231 S.E.2d 693 (1977).

New Trial Required. — Admission of investigating police officer's testimony that defendant said that "his lawyer wanted to plead him to six years to the offense and he wanted to know what he should do" was highly prejudicial to defendant's case and potentially influenced the jury verdict, warranting a new trial. State v. Wooten, 86 N.C. App. 481, 358 S.E.2d 78 (1987).

Statement Not Made During Actual Negotiations. — Trial court erred by not allowing witness to testify regarding statement allegedly made by defendant: "Yeah, I killed the bitch. I've done my time. I'll take a plea bargain and walk," as this section did not cover this statement because it was not made during actual plea bargain negotiations. State v. Bostic, 121 N.C. App. 90, 465 S.E.2d 20 (1995).

The defendant waived his right to appellate review of a possible violation of this section by introducing evidence during his own direct examination of plea discussions and subsequently failing to object to the State's eliciting of further evidence during cross-examination. State v. Thompson, 141 N.C. App. 698, 543 S.E.2d 160 (2001), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 396, 548 S.E.2d 157 (2001).

Applied in State v. Slade, 291 N.C. 275, 229 S.E.2d 921 (1976); State v. Flowers, 347 N.C. 1, 489 S.E.2d 391 (1997).

§ 15A-1026. Record of proceedings.

A verbatim record of the proceedings at which the defendant enters a plea of guilty or no contest and of any preliminary consideration of a plea arrangement by the judge pursuant to G.S. 15A-1021(c) must be made and preserved. This record must include the judge's advice to the defendant, and his inquiries of the defendant, defense counsel, and the prosecutor, and any responses. If the plea arrangement has been reduced to writing, it must be made a part of the record; otherwise the judge must require that the terms of the arrangement be stated for the record and that the assent of the defendant, his counsel, and the prosecutor be recorded. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 27; 1975, 2nd Sess., c. 983, s. 144.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is similar to A.L.I. Code § 350.8.

CASE NOTES

Failure to Strictly Comply with Section. — Where although the trial court did not strictly comply with this section in making and preserving a verbatim record of the proceedings at which defendant plead guilty, but in addition to witnesses being able to recall the events in question, and the availability of the written transcripts of plea, the judgment made and preserved copious notes which aided him in refreshing his recollection, defendant was not entitled to relief on account of this omission. State v. Stevens, 305 N.C. 712, 291 S.E.2d 585 (1982).

Applied in State v. Dickens, 299 N.C. 76, 261 S.E.2d 183 (1980); State v. Williams, 65 N.C. App. 472, 310 S.E.2d 83 (1983).

§ 15A-1027. Limitation on collateral attack on conviction.

Noncompliance with the procedures of this Article may not be a basis for review of a conviction after the appeal period for the conviction has expired. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 21; 1989, c. 290, s. 4.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section was originally similar to A.L.I. Code § 350.9 in banning collateral attack except when review is required by constitutional provisions "or by other law of this State." The section was amended during the course of passage to delete the reference to constitutional provisions (as they apply in any event) and to specify the North Carolina statute presently governing the question.

Procedures Relating to Felony Guilty Pleas in District Court.

§ 15A-1029.1. Transfer of case from superior court to district court to accept guilty and no contest pleas for certain felony offenses.

(a) With the consent of both the prosecutor and the defendant, the presiding superior court judge may order a transfer of the defendant's case to the district court for the purpose of allowing the defendant to enter a plea of guilty or no contest to a Class H or I felony.

(b) The provisions of Article 58 of this Chapter apply to a case transferred under this section from superior court to district court in the same manner as if the plea were entered in superior court. Appeals that are authorized in these matters are to the appellate division. (1995 (Reg. Sess., 1996), c. 725, s. 6.)

Maintenance of Order in the Courtroom.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The fountainhead case dealing with maintenance of order in the courtroom is Illinois v. Allen, 397 U.S. 337, 90 S. Ct. 1057, 25 L. Ed. 2d 353 (1970). In addition to this case, the Commission in its drafting also consulted applicable standards of the American Bar Association cited below.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Comments" under this Article are reprinted from the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly.

§ 15A-1031. Custody and restraint of defendant and witnesses.

A trial judge may order a defendant or witness subjected to physical restraint in the courtroom when the judge finds the restraint to be reasonably necessary to maintain order, prevent the defendant's escape, or provide for the safety of persons. If the judge orders a defendant or witness restrained, he must:

(1) Enter in the record out of the presence of the jury and in the presence of the person to be restrained and his counsel, if any, the reasons for his action; and
(2) Give the restrained person an opportunity to object; and
(3) Unless the defendant or his attorney objects, instruct the jurors that the restraint is not to be considered in weighing evidence or determining the issue of guilt.

If the restrained person controverts the stated reasons for restraint, the judge must conduct a hearing and make findings of fact. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is based on A.B.A. Project on Standards for Criminal Justice, Standards Relating to Trial by Jury § 4.1(c) (1968) (hereinafter cited as A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury), and the North Carolina case. State v. Tolley, 290 N.C. 349, 226 S.E.2d 353 (1976).

For article, "Contempt, Order in the Courtroom, Mistrials," see 14 Wake Forest L. Rev. 909 (1978).

CASE NOTES

There is no ban, constitutional or otherwise, against physical restraint in the courtroom per se. What is forbidden by the due process and fair trial guarantees of U.S. Const., Amend. XIV and N.C. Const., Art. I, § 19 is physical restraint that improperly deprives a defendant of a fair trial. State v. Wright, 82 N.C. App. 450, 346 S.E.2d 510 (1986).

When Defendant May Be Restrained During Trial. — A defendant may be physically restrained during his trial when restraint is necessary to maintain order, prevent the defendant's escape, or protect the public. State v. Wright, 82 N.C. App. 450, 346 S.E.2d 510 (1986).

The circumstances appropriate for the trial court's consideration of whether to physically restrain a defendant in the courtroom include, inter alia, the defendant's temperament and character, his age and physical attributes, his past record, his past escapes or attempted escapes, evidence of a present plan to escape, and threats to harm others or to cause a disturbance. State v. Atkins, 349 N.C. 62, 505 S.E.2d 97 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1147, 119 S. Ct. 2025, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1999).

A judge may base his findings supporting the use of restraints upon reliable information which would not be admissible as evidence at a trial. State v. Paige, 316 N.C. 630, 343 S.E.2d 848 (1986).

Judge Did Not Err in Decision to Restrain or Remove Defendant. — Where the trial judge warned defendant out of the presence of the jury that he would be removed from the courtroom if his disruptive behavior continued and entered into the record his reasons for the removal, and where the court informed defendant that he could return to the courtroom upon his assurance of good behavior and that if he chose not to return he would be given an opportunity to confer with his attorney, there was no error in the trial court's decision to restrain defendant or to remove him from the courtroom. State v. Callahan, 93 N.C. App. 579,

There was no error where the defense witnesses were shackled while in the courtroom, because they were placed in, and removed from, the witness chair outside the presence of the jury. State v. Abraham, 338 N.C. 315, 451 S.E.2d 131 (1994).

Defendant was not deprived of a fair trial by being forced to wear shackles when he took the witness stand to testify, where he was in the courtroom when his case was tried, the shackles were concealed from the jury, and photographs about which defendant testified were passed to the jury for their viewing. State v. Thomas, 350 N.C. 315, 514 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 503, 145 L. Ed. 2d 388 (1999).

Restraint During Sentencing Phase. — The trial court did not err by permitting leg irons to be placed on the defendant during his sentencing proceeding for capital murder, where the court conducted a hearing pursuant to this section following a report of the defendant's possible escape attempt from jail, and the court noted the defendant's history of violence. State v. Atkins, 349 N.C. 62, 505 S.E.2d 97 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1147, 119 S. Ct. 2025, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1999).

Capital murder defendant properly shackled during the sentencing phase of his trial, where the court was concerned for defense counsel's safety after the defendant's outburst at the end of the guilt phase. State v. White, 349 N.C. 535, 508 S.E.2d 253 (1998), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1026, 119 S. Ct. 2376, 144 L. Ed. 2d 779 (1999).

Defendant waived error as to having his legs shackled when, instead of objecting to being shackled, he objected to a conference regarding the shackles being held in his absence. State v. Thomas, 134 N.C. App. 560, 518 S.E.2d 222 (1999), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 351 N.C. 119, 541 S.E.2d 468 (1999).

§ 15A-1032. Removal of disruptive defendant.

(a) A trial judge, after warning a defendant whose conduct is disrupting his trial, may order the defendant removed from the trial if he continues conduct which is so disruptive that the trial cannot proceed in an orderly manner. When practicable, the judge's warning and order for removal must be issued out of the presence of the jury.

(b) If the judge orders a defendant removed from the courtroom, he must:

(1) Enter in the record the reasons for his action; and

(2) Instruct the jurors that the removal is not to be considered in weighing evidence or determining the issue of guilt.

A defendant removed from the courtroom must be given the opportunity of learning of the trial proceedings through his counsel at reasonable intervals as directed by the court and must be given opportunity to return to the courtroom during the trial upon assurance of his good behavior. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The primary basis for this section comes from A.B.A. Project on Standards for Criminal Justice, Standards Relating to the Function of the Trial Judge § 6.8 (1972) (provisions on courtroom disruption approved in 1971) (hereinafter cited as A.B.A. Standards, Function of the Trial Judge). The warning requirement in subsection (a) is suggested in the commentary to the A.B.A. Standards, and the Commission originated the provision that the warning and order for removal occur out of the jury's presence if practicable.

The provisions of subsection (b) as to recordation and jury instruction were added by the Commission to parallel those in G.S. 15A-1031. The remainder of subsection (b) is based on A.B.A. Standards, Function of the Trial Judge § 6.8, though the Commission has omitted the explicit statement that "removal is preferable to gagging or shackling the disruptive defendant." The Commission agreed in general with this policy, but was reluctant to put merely precatory instructions into statutory text. The Commission was of the opinion that judges would consider the applicable A.B.A. Standard in exercising their discretion.

A more substantive change has been made by the Commission as to the defendant's opportunity to return to the courtroom following his removal. The Commission deleted the specification that the opportunity should be "continuing" and further omitted this sentence found in the A.B.A. Standards: "The removed defendant should be summoned to the courtroom at appropriate intervals, with the offer to permit him to remain repeated in open court each time."

CASE NOTES

Judge Did Not Need to Use Word "Absence" in Place of "Removal". — Trial judge's instruction to jury on defendant's removal from the courtroom was proper and he need not use the word "absence" in place of "removal" to meet the requirements of subdivision (b)(2). State v. Callahan, 93 N.C. App. 579, 378 S.E.2d 812, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 274, 384 S.E.2d 521 (1989).

The court's failure to comply with the requirements of this section was not reversible error where, given the clear and undisputed nature of the evidence before the jury, it was difficult to imagine that defendant's outburst and subsequent removal had any effect on the determination of his guilt or innocence of being an habitual felon. State v. Smith, 139 N.C. App. 209, 533 S.E.2d 518 (2000).

Trial court's failure to give the instruction required under § 15A-1032(b)(2) after ordering defendant removed from the courtroom during jury selection was not reversible error, as defendant did not show that a different result would have been reached had the instruction been given; in any event, error was waived because defendant did not object to the omission of the instruction. State v. Miller, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 410, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 975 (2001).

Disruptive Pro Se Defendant's Removal Upheld. — Where record indicated that defendant continued disruptive behavior while court attempted to enter findings into the record, in spite of the trial court's warnings that persistence would warrant his removal, and defendant was present when the proceedings resumed and was given opportunity to make his objections, the court's decision to remove defendant was without error. State v. Thomas, 134 N.C. App. 560, 518 S.E.2d 222 (1999), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 351 N.C. 119, 541 S.E.2d 468 (1999).

§ 15A-1033. Removal of disruptive witnesses and spectators.

The judge in his discretion may order any person other than a defendant removed from a courtroom when his conduct disrupts the conduct of the trial. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The genesis of this section is A.B.A. Standards, Function of the Trial Judge § 6.10, although the judge's discretion to exclude is somewhat broader than that recommended by the American Bar Association.

CASE NOTES

Badges Did Not Necessitate Mistrial. — Trial court did not err by denying motion for a mistrial on the grounds that members of the audience were wearing badges that appeared to be photographs of one of the murder victims. State v. Braxton, 344 N.C. 702, 477 S.E.2d 172 (1996).

§ 15A-1034. Controlling access to the courtroom.

(a) The presiding judge may impose reasonable limitations on access to the courtroom when necessary to ensure the orderliness of courtroom proceedings or the safety of persons present.

(b) The judge may order that all persons entering or any person present and choosing to remain in the courtroom be searched for weapons or devices that could be used to disrupt or impede the proceedings and may require that belongings carried by persons entering the courtroom be inspected. An order under this subsection must be entered on the record. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

In addition to the use of the powers provided in this Article, a presiding judge may maintain courtroom order through the use of his contempt powers as provided in Chapter 5A, Contempt, and through the use of other inherent powers of the court. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

Granting of Immunity to Witnesses.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

In its second interim report to the President and the Congress dated March 17, 1969, the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws recommended a legislative enactment to be considered separately from its later comprehensive recommendations for revision of the federal substantive criminal law. The separate proposal dealt with immunity to witnesses, and out of the proposal grew the Federal Immunity of Witnesses Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 6001 to 6005. This act replaced over 50 scattered federal immunity provisions with one general law.

The Commission in drafting relied upon the wording of the National Commission's proposal rather than the slightly different act that passed. See 2 National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws, Working Papers 1405-48 (1970). The federal model contained provisions concerning the granting of immunity before:

(1) Courts;

(2) Grand juries;

(3) Administrative agencies conducting hearings; and

(4) Legislative bodies conducting hearings.

The Commission's proposal only extends to grants of immunity before courts and grand juries.

Another major departure from the federal model was the retention of "transactional" immunity rather than using the narrower "use" immunity approved by the Supreme Court of the United States. This will be discussed in more detail below.

In utilizing the immunity provisions of this Article, it is instructive to note the concurrent amendments to § 5-1, § 5-4, and § 5-8 to strengthen the contempt laws in the event a person granted immunity then refuses to testify.

§ 15A-1051. Immunity; general provisions.

(a) A witness who asserts his privilege against self-incrimination in a hearing or proceeding in court or before a grand jury of North Carolina may be ordered to testify or produce other information as provided in this Article. He may not thereafter be excused from testifying or producing other information on the ground that his testimony or other information required of him may tend to incriminate him. Except as provided in G.S. 15A-623(h), no testimony or other information so compelled, or any information directly or indirectly derived from the testimony or other information, may be used against the witness in a criminal case, except a prosecution for perjury or contempt arising from a failure to comply with an order of the court. In the event of a prosecution of the witness he shall be entitled to a record of his testimony.

(b) An order to testify or produce other information authorized by this Article may be issued prior to the witness's assertion of his privilege against self-incrimination, but the order is not effective until the witness asserts his privilege against self-incrimination and the person presiding over the inquiry communicates the order to him.

(c) As used in this Article, "other information" includes any book, paper, document, record, recordation, tangible object, or other material. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1985 (Reg. Sess., 1986), c. 843, ss. 4, 6; 1987 (Reg. Sess., 1988), c. 1040, s. 1; 1989 (Reg. Sess., 1990), c. 1039, s. 4; 1991, c. 636, s. 3.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

A formal grant of immunity is not conferred under this Article unless the witness is first asked the incriminating question, claims his privilege against self-incrimination, and is then ordered by judge to answer the question notwithstanding his privilege. If he does answer the question, then immunity from prosecution is conferred.

When it is anticipated that a witness in a trial in the district or superior court will claim the privilege against self-incrimination, the solicitor may request the superior court judge in advance for an order directing the witness to testify (after notifying the Attorney General in advance also, in accordance with § 15A-1052(b)), but subsection (b) makes it clear that the order of the judge is not effective until the witness formally claims the privilege. In the original draft subsection (b) applied to the various types of immunity grants in the federal statute, but the Commission reduced the coverage to court and grand jury proceedings. Later by a change of wording in the grand jury immunity provision, the Commission effectively allowed for advance order of immunity only in court proceedings.

Until recently it was believed that a witness had to be given a complete grant of immunity with respect to any matter on which he testified to protect fully a witness's privilege against self-incrimination. This conferring of full immunity is known as "transactional" immunity. The National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws, however, proposed granting a somewhat narrower immunity. The argument ran that a person in being forced to testify should only be protected against having his disclosures, and the evidentiary leads flowing from his disclosures, used against him. If, for example, a totally independent investigation had been in progress for some time in Agency A, conferring of immunity in connection with another overlapping matter should not fortuitously frustrate the efforts of Agency A to prosecute — using only its independently gathered evidence. This narrower form of immunity for use of evidence and its leads is known as "use" immunity.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held that "use" immunity is all that is constitutionally required by the Fifth Amendment, but indicated that the prosecutor in a prosecution covering the same ground as that on which the defendant was formally compelled to testify as a witness would bear an extremely heavy burden of proving that the evidence being used was in fact totally independent. Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441, 92 S. Ct. 1653, 32 L. Ed. 2d 212 (1972); Zicarelli v. New Jersey State Comm'n of Investigation, 406 U.S 472, 92 S. Ct. 1670, 32 L. Ed. 2d 234 (1972).

Despite the ruling upholding "use" immunity as constitutional, the Commission decided to retain within North Carolina a full transactional immunity for anyone compelled under this Article to testify to incriminating information. The model used for conferring transactional immunity was former 18 U.S.C § 3486, which is now repealed by the Federal Immunity of Witnesses Act.

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1991, c. 686, s. 3 amended Session Laws 1985, c. 843, s. 6, as amended by Session Laws 1987, c. 1040, so as to delete an October 1, 1991 expiration provision. The 1991 act, which is in the coded bill drafting format set out in § 120-20.1, did not mention Session Laws 1989 (Reg. Sess., 1990), c. 1039, s. 4, which amended the 1985 act, as amended, to change the expiration date to October 1, 1993.

This Article formalizes and gives statutory sanction to the granting of immunity from prosecution. It also provides a series of safeguards to protect against the reputed unreliability of witnesses who are receiving quid pro quo for their testimony. State v. Morgan, 60 N.C. App. 614, 299 S.E.2d 823 (1983).

The separate provisions of this Article establish a pretrial and trial procedure designed to provide full and adequate prior disclosure of the prosecution's arrangement with its witness to the Attorney General and trial court, to defense counsel or to the unrepresented defendant and to the jury. These safeguards are aimed at ensuring that the jury be made aware that the witness is testifying under a grant of immunity or some other arrangement. State v. Morgan, 60 N.C. App. 614, 299 S.E.2d 823 (1983).

Standing to Challenge Grant of Immunity to Witness. — Defendants had no standing to challenge either the propriety or the effectiveness of a grant of immunity to a witness testifying against them since the privilege against self-incrimination is a personal one. State v. Phillips, 297 N.C. 600, 256 S.E.2d 212 (1979).

§ 15A-1052. Grant of immunity in court proceedings.

(a) When the testimony or other information is to be presented to a court of the trial division of the General Court of Justice, the order to the witness to testify or produce other information must be issued by a superior court judge, upon application of the district attorney:

(1) Be in writing and filed with the permanent records of the case; or

(2) If orally made in open court, recorded and transcribed and made a part of the permanent records of the case.

(b) The application may be made whenever, in the judgment of the district attorney, the witness has asserted or is likely to assert his privilege against self-incrimination and his testimony or other information is or will be necessary to the public interest. Before making application to the judge, the district attorney must inform the Attorney General, or a deputy or assistant attorney general designated by him, of the circumstances and his intent to make an application.

(c) In a jury trial the judge must inform the jury of the grant of immunity and the order to testify prior to the testimony of the witness under the grant of immunity. During the charge to the jury, the judge must instruct the jury as in the case of interested witnesses. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 27.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Under the federal model, applications for immunity orders in court or grand jury proceedings may be done only with the approval of the Attorney General of the United States, the Deputy Attorney General, or a specifically designated Assistant Attorney General. The reason for centralized clearance is that under the Constitution of the United States the privilege against self-incrimination applies nationwide; to be effective, then, a grant of immunity must be nationwide. The Supreme Court has suggested that a grant of valid immunity conferred by one jurisdiction under our federal system will automatically be extended to apply in all jurisdictions under our federal system. Malloy v. Hogan, 378 U.S. 1, 84 S. Ct. 1489, 12 L. Ed. 2d 653 (1964); Murphy v. Waterfront Comm'n, 378 U.S. 52, 84 S. Ct. 1594, 12 L. Ed. 2d 678 (1964).

The Commission determined that there was also a need for central clearance in North Carolina to guard against the solicitor's unwittingly granting immunity to a key figure under investigation elsewhere in the State or in the United States. The Commission decided, though, that it would be sufficient for the district solicitor to inform the Attorney General of North Carolina, or a deputy or assistant attorney general designated by him, of the proposed application for an immunity order. The person in the Department of Justice receiving the information should then be able to tell the district solicitor whether our Department of Justice knows of any reason why the particular individual should not be given immunity. A telephone call should be sufficient to satisfy the terms of the statute. Only the elected district solicitor may apply for the immunity order from the judge.

One interesting point might be noted. Even though the North Carolina statute grants full transactional immunity, this grant would be effective only with respect to prosecutions under the laws of North Carolina. In other jurisdictions the immunity would be the automatic one conferred by the holding in Malloy v. Hogan, but under Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441, 92 S. Ct. 1653, 32 L. Ed. 2d 212 (1972) and Zicarelli v. New Jersey State Comm'n of Investigation, 406 U.S. 472, 92 S. Ct. 1670, 32 L. Ed. 2d 234 (1972) this immunity would be "use" immunity only.

A question was raised in the Commission as to whether the judge has any option to refuse to issue the order to the witness to testify if he determines that:

(1) The applicant is a district solicitor;

(2) The district solicitor notified the proper person in the North Carolina Department of Justice before making application; and

(3) A witness has refused, or apparently will refuse, to testify on Fifth Amendment grounds in a proceeding covered by the statute.

The answer seems to be that the judge, except in the most extraordinary situations, must issue the order. He is the one to issue it so that the contempt powers of the court may attach upon any refusal to testify notwithstanding the grant of immunity. Also, the judge in his order would spell out the exact questions or subject-matter area as to which the witness is compelled to testify. Having this carefully delineated in the record may be of importance later. Compare the comment in the National Commission's Working Papers at 1435-36:

"The President's Commission mentioned only two grounds for a court order requirement. It spoke of avoiding abuse of authority by prosecutors, and it spoke of the danger of hidden immunization for corrupt purposes. However, with the approval power centralized in the Attorney General, these two points really are a single point: is the Attorney General to be trusted, or is a court somehow to review his good faith? Professor Blakey, in his supporting memorandum for the President's Commission, speaks of making 'visible' the Attorney General's decision in order to minimize the 'danger of hidden immunization of friends.' If such were attempted, he suggested, the Federal district court would 'have inherent power to refuse to be a party to it.'

"A court order requirement will be harmless, however, if the Federal district courts continue to view their role here as being solely ministerial — i.e, service as a recording agency. This approach was outlined in the leading case of Ullmann v. United States, 350 U.S. 422, 76 S. Ct. 497, 100 L. Ed. 511 (1956), sustaining the constitutionality of the initial court order requirement statute, 18 U.S.C. § 3486(c), concerning grand jury investigation and national security. At the same time the proposed language, while clearly negating a full policy review, would not prevent a Federal district court from finding sufficient reserve authority to deny a request for an immunity order in the context of cronyism."

Many of the practicing lawyers in the General Assembly expressed fears that prosecutors might abuse the power of granting immunity. One of several added provisions was subsection (c). It not only requires the judge during his charge to instruct the jury to scrutinize the immunized testimony with care but goes the further step of requiring that the judge inform the jury of the grant of immunity prior to the witness's testimony. See also the commentary under § 15A-1055.

CASE NOTES

This Article established a pretrial and trial procedure designed to provide full and adequate prior disclosure of the prosecution's arrangement with its witness to the Attorney General and trial court, to defense counsel or to the unrepresented defendant and to the jury. These safeguards are aimed at ensuring that the jury be made aware that the witness is testifying under a grant of immunity or some other arrangement. State v. Morgan, 60 N.C. App. 614, 299 S.E.2d 823 (1983).

Legislature intended for the jury to know the witness was receiving something of value in exchange for his testimony which might bear on his credibility. State v. Hardy, 293 N.C. 105, 235 S.E.2d 828 (1977); State v. Miller, 61 N.C. App. 1, 300 S.E.2d 431 (1983).

Section requires the trial judge to inform the jury "of the grant of immunity" and not the details of the grant. State v. Hardy, 293 N.C. 105, 235 S.E.2d 828 (1977).

Ordinarily it is in the defendant's interest to show that a witness against him is testifying pursuant to an agreement with the state and to disclose the terms of the bargain because such evidence tends to impeach the witness. In some cases the state may wish to make the jury aware of the specific terms of the plea bargain. However, the court is not required to disclose the special terms of a plea bargain to the jury; that decision is left to the parties. When the court, acting on its own motion, removes that decision from the parties, there is the potential for prejudicial reversible error to occur. State v. Castleberry, 73 N.C. App. 420, 326 S.E.2d 312, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 670, 335 S.E.2d 497 (1985).

Jury Should Be Instructed in Final Charge. — Subsection (c) of this section clearly requires the court to instruct the jury as to the interest of the witness under the grant of immunity but "during the charge of the jury." This language means during the judge's final charge, and not in advance of the witness's testimony. State v. Hardy, 293 N.C. 105, 235 S.E.2d 828 (1977).

Subsection (c) of this section requires that the trial court inform the jury of the grant of immunity and the order to testify prior to the testimony of the witness under the grant of immunity. State v. Rutherford, 70 N.C. App. 674, 320 S.E.2d 916 (1984), cert. denied, 313 N.C. 335, 327 S.E.2d 897 (1985).

When "Scrutiny" Instruction Required. — The statutory "scrutiny" instruction is required, absent a special request by the defendant, only when a witness testifies under immunity. Thus, where defendant makes no special request for a "scrutiny" instruction, and his witness receives no grant of immunity but merely has some of the charges against him dismissed, subsection (c) of this section does not apply. State v. Pollock, 56 N.C. App. 692, 289 S.E.2d 588, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 305 N.C. 590, 292 S.E.2d 573 (1982).

Unless a witness has been formerly granted immunity, there is no statutory requirement for any cautionary instruction that the witness is testifying under a grant of immunity prior to the testimony. State v. McLaughlin, 321 N.C. 267, 362 S.E.2d 280 (1987).

"Scrutiny" Instruction Not Mandated Under Arrangement Short of Immunity. — Subsection (c) of this section contains a mandatory "scrutiny" instruction when a witness testifies under immunity, but such an instruction is not mandated under an arrangement short of "immunity," such as charge reduction or sentence concession, as provided for in § 15A-1054. State v. Bagby, 48 N.C. App. 222, 268 S.E.2d 233 (1980), cert. denied, 301 N.C. 723, 276 S.E.2d 284 (1981); State v. Pollock, 56 N.C. App. 692, 289 S.E.2d 588, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 305 N.C. 590, 292 S.E.2d 573 (1982).

Instruction Need Not Be Given Immediately Before Witness's Testimony. — Nothing in this section requires the instruction in subsection (c) of this section to be given immediately before the witness's testimony. The statute only specifies that the instruction be given "prior" to the testimony. State v. Hardy, 293 N.C. 105, 235 S.E.2d 828 (1977).

While this section specifies "prior" to the testimony, there was no requirement that the instructions be given "immediately" preceding the witnesses' testimony, and that the instruction about scrutinizing the testimony is properly given during the "final" charge to the jury. State v. Miller, 61 N.C. App. 1, 300 S.E.2d 431 (1983).

Instruction Given Before Any Witness Called. — The trial judge's instruction as to the grant of immunity compiled with the spirit as well as the letter of the law where it was given before any witnesses were called in the case, but not immediately before the witness testified. State v. Hardy, 293 N.C. 105, 235 S.E.2d 828 (1977).

Interest of Witness Held Jury Question. — Where there is no evidence to show that the witnesses were accomplices, testifying under a grant of immunity from the State, or otherwise clearly interested witnesses, whether the witnesses should be considered interested parties is a question for the jury. State v. Moore, 301 N.C. 262, 271 S.E.2d 242 (1980), overruled on

In a prosecution for murder, the trial court did not err in failing to instruct the jury that two witnesses who testified pursuant to an agreement that they would not be prosecuted for certain charges against them were interested in the verdict, the instruction on the credibility of the witnesses being sufficient where the court instructed that if either or both of the witnesses testified in whole or in part because of such concessions, the jury should examine the testimony of that witness with great care and caution, and that if the jurors should believe the testimony in whole or in part, they should treat what they believed the same as any other reliable evidence. State v. Keller, 50 N.C. App. 364, 273 S.E.2d 741, appeal dismissed, 302 N.C. 400, 279 S.E.2d 354 (1981).

Substantial Compliance. — Where the material terms of the grant of immunity are explained to the jury, there is substantial compliance with this section and no prejudicial error. State v. Hardy, 293 N.C. 105, 235 S.E.2d 828 (1977).

Noncompliance Prejudicial. — The failure of the prosecution to provide advance notice of the grant of immunity pursuant to § 15A-1054(c), its allowance of the witness' denials that such immunity existed to stand uncorrected and the trial court's failure to instruct the jury to consider the testimony of the immunized witness as it would consider the testimony of any other interested witness, pursuant to subsection (c) of this section resulted in manifest prejudice to the defendant requiring a new trial. State v. Morgan, 60 N.C. App. 614, 299 S.E.2d 823 (1983).

Applied in State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243 (1982); State v. Bare, 309 N.C. 122, 305 S.E.2d 513 (1983); State v. Maynard, 65 N.C. App. 81, 308 S.E.2d 665 (1983).

(a) When the testimony or other information is to be presented to a grand jury, the order to the witness to testify or produce other information must be issued by the presiding or convening superior court judge, upon application of the district attorney. The order of a superior court judge under this section must be in writing and filed as a part of the permanent records of the court.

(b) The application may be made when the district attorney has been informed by the foreman of the grand jury that the witness has asserted his privilege against self-incrimination and the district attorney determines that the testimony or other information is necessary to the public interest. Before making application to the judge, the district attorney must inform the Attorney General, or a deputy or assistant attorney general designated by him, of the circumstances and his intent to make an application. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 27.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section was originally to be construed in conjunction with § 15A-625. That section provided that the foreman of the grand jury must report to the district solicitor if a witness before the grand jury refuses to answer on the ground of self-incrimination, and indicated that the district solicitor had the discretion to seek the order of immunity or to refuse to do so. In committee, § 15A-625 was deleted from the Article on the grand jury, but this section — considered at a different time — was left intact. It is apparently sufficiently complete within itself to be given effect notwithstanding the omission of § 15A-625.

The language of subsection (b) states that the application to the judge "may be made when the solicitor has been informed by the foreman of the grand jury that the witness has asserted his privilege against self-incrimination. . . ." (Emphasis added.) Contrasting this language with that in § 15A-1052(b) makes plain that the statute authorizes the order of immunity in grand jury proceedings only after the witness's refusal to testify. The delay in grand jury proceedings to obtain the judge's order, however, may not be so disruptive as it would be in a trial situation.

§ 15A-1054. Charge reductions or sentence concessions in consideration of truthful testimony.

(a) Whether or not a grant of immunity is conferred under this Article, a prosecutor, when the interest of justice requires, may exercise his discretion not to try any suspect for offenses believed to have been committed within the prosecutorial district as defined in G.S. 7A-60, to agree to charge reductions, or to agree to recommend sentence concessions, upon the understanding or agreement that the suspect will provide truthful testimony in one or more criminal proceedings.

(b) Recommendations as to sentence concessions must be made to the trial judge by the prosecutor in accordance with the provisions of Article 58 of this Chapter, Procedure[s] Relating to Guilty Pleas in Superior Court.

(c) When a prosecutor enters into any arrangement authorized by this section, written notice fully disclosing the terms of the arrangement must be provided to defense counsel, or to the defendant if not represented by counsel, against whom such testimony is to be offered, a reasonable time prior to any proceeding in which the person with whom the arrangement is made is expected to testify. Upon motion of the defendant or his counsel on grounds of surprise or for other good cause or when the interests of justice require, the court must grant a recess. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1; 1975, c. 166, s. 27; 1987 (Reg. Sess., 1988), c. 1037, s. 65.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

After studying the federal models, the Commission thought that formal grants of immunity in North Carolina would probably be few and far between. Several persons described a more informal assurance of lenience or nonprosecution often offered by solicitors as being more effective and much more prevalent in the run of cases coming before the courts of North Carolina. The Commission, therefore, described this quasi-immunity practice which merges into plea negotiation, and added a notice requirement as a safeguard. The result is this section.

Because sentence concessions may only come from the judge, subsection (b) is a "piggyback" provision which stipulates that the working out of agreements concerning sentence must be in accordance with the provisions of Article 58, Procedures Relating to Guilty Pleas in Superior Court.

CASE NOTES

Constitutional Right to Disclosure. — Subdivision (c) and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States require that any plea bargain with a person who is to testify against a defendant be disclosed to the defendant. State v. Willis, 332 N.C. 151, 420 S.E.2d 158 (1992).

This Article formalizes and gives statutory sanction to the granting of immunity from prosecution. It also provides a series of safeguards to protect against the reputed unreliability of witnesses who are receiving quid pro quo for their testimony. State v. Morgan, 60 N.C. App. 614, 299 S.E.2d 823 (1983).

The separate provisions of this Article establish a pretrial and trial procedure designed to provide full and adequate prior disclosure of the prosecution's arrangement with its witness to the Attorney General and trial court, to defense counsel or to the unrepresented defendant and to the jury. These safeguards are aimed at ensuring that the jury be made aware that the witness is testifying under a grant of immunity or some other arrangement. State v. Morgan, 60 N.C. App. 614, 299 S.E.2d 823 (1983).

Law Enforcement Agencies Not Covered. — Defendant's contentions that he was prejudiced by the trial court's failure to compel the State to disclose any agreements between the prosecutor or any law enforcement agency and any potential witness, was without merit since within subsection (c) there is no mention of law enforcement agencies. State v. Crandell, 322 N.C. 487, 369 S.E.2d 579 (1988).

Disclosure Required Only When Arrangement Reached. — Subsection (c) of this section requires disclosure of a prosecutor's arrangement with a witness only when an arrangement has been reached. State v. Howell, 59 N.C. App. 184, 296 S.E.2d 321, cert. denied, 307 N.C. 271, 299 S.E.2d 218 (1982).

Prosecutor's Obligation Not Dependent on Request. — The obligation on the prosecutor to divulge the information required by subsection (c) of this section does not depend upon a request by the defendant. State v. Lowery, 318 N.C. 54, 347 S.E.2d 729 (1986).

Failure to Give Notice of Prosecution's Offer. — In a prosecution for murder, the district attorney violated subsection (c) of this section by failing to give defendants written notice prior to trial of an offer to permit a State's witness to plead guilty to misdemeanors in 11 felony cases pending against him in return for his truthful testimony against defendants where the witness testified that, although no deal had been made, he nevertheless expected the district attorney to reduce the felony charges to misdemeanors, and it appeared that the plea bargain offer may have induced the witness's testimony; however, the district attorney's noncompliance with the statute did not require suppression of the witness's testimony since the remedy for failure to comply with the statute was to move for a recess. State v. Spicer, 50 N.C. App. 214, 273 S.E.2d 521, appeal dismissed, 302 N.C. 401, 279 S.E.2d 356 (1981).

Testimony Need Not Be Suppressed for Noncompliance Where Defense Knew of Agreement. — The district attorney's failure to disclose to defense counsel an agreement with a State witness under this section did not warrant suppression of the witness's testimony where the trial judge granted a recess as required by this section, and the record showed that defense counsel had known of the agreement of over three weeks. State v. Cousins, 289 N.C. 540, 223 S.E.2d 338 (1976).

The defendant's rights under subsection (c) of this section were not violated by failure of the State to disclose an anticipated plea bargain between the State and a witness, where not only was there no formal agreement between the State and the witness, but the defendant's counsel was aware sufficiently in advance of trial that the witness was going to testify for the State under a hope of leniency to have brought out in cross-examination the circumstances under which the testimony was being offered. State v. Lowery, 318 N.C. 54, 347 S.E.2d 729 (1986).

Agreement as to Witness Whose Credibility Is Important. — Where the prosecutor remained silent while his witness testified that no plea arrangement had been made with the State, though he well knew that such an agreement did exist, and not only did the prosecutor allow the jury to be misled as to the witness's reasons for testifying, but by keeping the witness ignorant of the terms of the plea bargain, he contrived a means of ensuring that this evidence would not come before the jury, and the witness's credibility as a witness was an important issue in the case, evidence of any understanding or agreement for leniency was relevant to his credibility, and the jury was entitled to know of it. Campbell v. Reed, 594 F.2d 4 (4th Cir. 1979).

Jury Need Not Be Informed. — This section, unlike § 15A-1052, contains no requirement that the judge inform the jury of any agreement concerning charge reduction or sentence consideration. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

Section 15A-1052(c) contains a mandatory "scrutiny" instruction when a witness testifies under immunity, but such an instruction is not mandated under an arrangement short of "immunity," such as charge reduction or sentence concession, as provided for in this section. State v. Bagby, 48 N.C. App. 222, 268 S.E.2d 233 (1980), cert. denied, 301 N.C. 723, 276 S.E.2d 284 (1981).

When a witness enters into an arrangement with the prosecutor under this section, absent a request from defendant, the trial court need not charge the jury that the witness testified as an accomplice or that the jury closely scrutinize the testimony because the witness testified under an agreement with the district attorney. Thus, absent request, the trial judge need not give an interested witness instruction to the jury. State v. Hicks, 60 N.C. App. 718, 300 S.E.2d 33 (1983).

Remedy for failure to comply with subsection (c) of this section is the granting of a recess upon motion by the defendant, rather than suppression of the testimony. State v. Lester, 294 N.C. 220, 240 S.E.2d 391 (1978).

Noncompliance Held Prejudicial. — The failure of the prosecution to provide advance notice of the grant of immunity pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, its allowance of the witness' denials that such immunity existed to stand uncorrected and the trial court's failure to instruct the jury to consider the testimony of the immunized witness as it would consider the testimony of any other interested witness, pursuant to § 15A-1052(c) resulted in manifest prejudice to the defendant requiring a new trial. State v. Morgan, 60 N.C. App. 614, 299 S.E.2d 823 (1983).

Noncompliance Held Not Prejudicial. — The State failed to comply with subsection (c) of this section by not disclosing the information that a law enforcement official had promised to speak to the district attorney on witness' behalf and see what he could do regarding a reduction in her sentence in exchange for her "truthful" testimony against defendant, but as defendant ultimately was able to attack the witness' credibility through testimony elicited from the agent on cross-examination, and provided counsel for defendant with an extended lunch recess to enable him to prepare his cross-examination of the witness, the court's failure to grant a recess in this instance did not constitute prejudicial error. State v. Brooks, 83 N.C. App. 179, 349 S.E.2d 630 (1986).

§ 15A-1055. Evidence of grant of immunity or testimonial arrangement may be fully developed; impact may be argued to the jury.

(a) Notwithstanding any other rule of evidence to the contrary, any party may examine a witness testifying under a grant of immunity or pursuant to an arrangement under G.S. 15A-1054 with respect to that grant of immunity or arrangement. A party may also introduce evidence or examine other witnesses in corroboration or contradiction of testimony or evidence previously elicited by himself or another party concerning the grant of immunity or arrangement.

(b) A party may argue to the jury with respect to the impact of a grant of immunity or an arrangement under G.S. 15A-1054 upon the credibility of a witness. (1973, c. 1286, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section was added in the General Assembly and is another manifestation of fears by some attorneys of prosecutorial misuse of this new, for North Carolina, set of provisions. It is important to note that the section applies both to grants of immunity and to arrangements for truthful testimony under § 15A-1054. It seems probable that the law of evidence would allow defense attorneys to attack testimony given under immunity or under an arrangement pursuant to § 15A-1054 in the ways contemplated by this section, but the proponents wanted to nail the matter down. The same goes for the right of argument in subsection (b).

CASE NOTES

Purpose. — This section is aimed at ensuring that the jury be made aware that the witness is testifying under a grant of immunity or some other arrangement. State v. Colvin, 90 N.C. App. 50, 367 S.E.2d 340, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 608, 370 S.E.2d 249 (1988).

This Article formalizes and gives statutory sanction to the granting of immunity from prosecution. It also provides a series of safeguards to protect against the reputed unreliability of witnesses who are receiving quid pro quo for their testimony. State v. Morgan, 60 N.C. App. 614, 299 S.E.2d 823 (1983).

The separate provisions of this Article establish a pretrial and trial procedure designed to provide full and adequate prior disclosure of the prosecution's arrangement with its witness to the Attorney General and trial court, to defense counsel or to the unrepresented defendant and to the jury. These safeguards are aimed at ensuring that the jury be made aware that the witness is testifying under a grant of immunity or some other arrangement. State v. Morgan, 60 N.C. App. 614, 299 S.E.2d 823 (1983).

Trial judge's refusal to inform the jury of an agreement between the district attorney and a State witness under § 15A-1054 was not prejudicial error where the jury was fully informed of the agreement prior to the time it began deliberations by trial judge's instructions following the testimony, and by defense counsel's cross-examination of the witness concerning promises made to him. State v. Cousins, 289 N.C. 540, 223 S.E.2d 338 (1976).

Where defense counsel initially introduced evidence of co-conspirator's plea arrangement with the State, and the contents of a letter concerning that agreement were relevant to defendant's case and in no way prejudiced him, merely informing the jury of the plea arrangement and his interest in testifying against defendant, there was no error in the admission of this letter. Article 62.

Mistrial.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The Commission's original impulse was to draft a comprehensive article detailing all of the various situations in which a mistrial may be granted or must be granted. After struggling unsuccessfully with several drafts utilizing this approach, the Commission abandoned the attempt. The major problem was that there are stringent constitutional limitations on when a mistrial may be granted without the consent, or on motion, of the defendant. See, e.g., Illinois v. Sommerville, 410 U.S. 458, 93 S. Ct. 1066, 35 L. Ed. 2d 425 (1973).

In seeking a more general codification of the rules that must govern the granting of mistrials, the Commission used as a model an earlier draft of the material now published in National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, Uniform Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 541 (1974) (hereinafter cited as Uniform Rules). This Article does not purport to be exclusive in its coverage, and there are other sections in this chapter which specifically deal with the granting of mistrials in particular circumstances. See, e.g., G.S. 15A-1224 (death or disability of trial judge) and G.S. 15A-1235(d) (deadlocked jury).

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article derives from those appearing in the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly, as revised by the Commission.

§ 15A-1061. Mistrial for prejudice to defendant.

Upon motion of a defendant or with his concurrence the judge may declare a mistrial at any time during the trial. The judge must declare a mistrial upon the defendant's motion if there occurs during the trial an error or legal defect in the proceedings, or conduct inside or outside the courtroom, resulting in substantial and irreparable prejudice to the defendant's case. If there are two or more defendants, the mistrial may not be declared as to a defendant who does not make or join in the motion. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

With only minor changes of wording this section reflects the substance of Uniform Rules, Rule 541(a).

CASE NOTES

The purposes of mistrial are to prevent prejudice arising from conduct before the jury and to provide a remedy where the jury is unable to perform its function. Once the court has discharged the jury, there is no purpose in ordering a mistrial: the proceedings may be determined by rulings of the court on matters of law, including new trial motions. State v. O'Neal, 67 N.C. App. 65, 312 S.E.2d 493, modified, 311 N.C. 747, 321 S.E.2d 154 (1984).

When Motion Granted. — A motion for mistrial must be granted if there occurs an incident of such a nature that it would render a fair and impartial trial impossible under the law. State v. McCraw, 300 N.C. 610, 268 S.E.2d 173 (1980).

Whether a motion for mistrial should be granted is a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the trial judge, and a mistrial is appropriate only when there are such serious improprieties as would make it impossible to attain a fair and impartial verdict under the law. State v. Calloway, 305 N.C. 747, 291 S.E.2d 622 (1982); State v. Leonard, 74 N.C. App. 443, 328 S.E.2d 593, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 120, 332 S.E.2d 487 (1985); State v. Stroud, 78 N.C. App. 599, 337 S.E.2d 873 (1985).

A defendant's motion for mistrial must be granted, pursuant to this section if there occurs during the trial an error or legal defect in the proceedings, or conduct inside or outside the courtroom, resulting in substantial and irreparable prejudice to the defendant's case. The decision as to whether such prejudice has occurred is addressed to the discretion of the trial judge. His decision is not reviewable absent a showing of gross abuse of discretion. State v. Monk, 63 N.C. App. 512, 305 S.E.2d 755 (1983).

A mistrial must be declared upon a defendant's motion if there occurs during the trial an error or legal defect in the proceedings, or conduct inside or outside the courtroom, resulting in substantial and irreparable prejudice to the defendant's case. State v. Leonard, 74 N.C. App. 443, 328 S.E.2d 593, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 120, 332 S.E.2d 487 (1985).

A mistrial is to be declared when conduct takes place inside or outside the courtroom which results in substantial and irreparable prejudice to the defendant. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

A mistrial should be granted only when there are improprieties in the trial so serious that they substantially and irreparably prejudice defendant's case and make it impossible for defendant to receive a fair and impartial verdict. State v. Bonney, 329 N.C. 61, 405 S.E.2d 145 (1991).

Not every disruptive event occurring during trial automatically requires the court to declare a mistrial. State v. Newton, 82 N.C. App. 555, 347 S.E.2d 81 (1986), cert. denied, 318 N.C. 699, 351 S.E.2d 756 (1987).

Mistrial Is Matter of Court's Discretion. — The decision as to whether substantial and irreparable prejudice has occurred lies within the court's discretion and, absent a showing of abuse of that discretion, the decision of the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal. State v. Mills, 39 N.C. App. 47, 249 S.E.2d 446 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 588, 254 S.E.2d 33 (1979); State v. Allen, 50 N.C. App. 173, 272 S.E.2d 785 (1980), appeal dismissed, 302 N.C. 399, 279 S.E.2d 353 (1981); State v. Thomas, 52 N.C. App. 186, 278 S.E.2d 535, cert. denied, 304 N.C. 198, 287 S.E.2d 127 (1981), cert. denied, 305 N.C. 591, 292 S.E.2d 16 (1982); State v. Rutherford, 70 N.C. App. 674, 320 S.E.2d 916 (1984); State v. Blackstock, 314 N.C. 232, 333 S.E.2d 245 (1985).

Ruling on a motion for mistrial in a criminal case rests largely in the trial judge's discretion. State v. Perkins, 57 N.C. App. 516, 291 S.E.2d 865 (1982).

Ruling on a motion for mistrial in a criminal case less than capital rests largely in the discretion of the trial court. State v. McCraw, 300 N.C. 610, 268 S.E.2d 173 (1980); State v. Daniels, 59 N.C. App. 442, 297 S.E.2d 150 (1982); State v. Watts, 77 N.C. App. 124, 334 S.E.2d 400 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 396, 338 S.E.2d 886 (1986).

It is within the court's discretion to decide whether substantial and irreparable prejudice to the defendant's case has occurred, and the court's decision will not be disturbed on appeal absent a showing of gross abuse of that discretion. State v. Rogers, 52 N.C. App. 676, 279 S.E.2d 881 (1981); State v. Glover, 77 N.C. App. 418, 335 S.E.2d 86 (1985).

A motion for mistrial is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge and those rulings will not be reversed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion. State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983); State v. King, 311 N.C. 603, 320 S.E.2d 1 (1984), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 887, 108 S. Ct. 42, 98 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1987); State v. Boyd, 321 N.C. 574, 364 S.E.2d 118 (1988); State v. Hogan, 321 N.C. 719, 365 S.E.2d 289 (1988).

The decision of whether to grant a mistrial rests in the sound discretion of the trial judge, and it will not be disturbed absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

On appeal, the decision of the trial judge is entitled to the greatest respect. He is present while the events unfold and is in a position to know just how far the jury may have been influenced by the events occurring during the trial and whether it has been possible to erase the prejudicial effect of emotional outburst. Therefore, unless his ruling is so clearly erroneous so as to amount to a manifest abuse of discretion, it will not be disturbed on appeal. State v. Newton, 82 N.C. App. 555, 347 S.E.2d 81 (1986), cert. denied, 318 N.C. 699, 351 S.E.2d 756 (1987).

A trial court's ruling on a motion for mistrial is not reviewable on appeal absent the appearance of a manifest abuse of discretion. State v. Bailey, 97 N.C. App. 472, 389 S.E.2d 131 (1990).

Whether a mistrial should be granted pursuant to this section is a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the trial judge. Because such a ruling is within the trial judge's discretion, a mistrial is only appropriate where such serious procedural or other improprieties would make it impossible for a fair and impartial verdict to be rendered under the law. State v. Joyce, 104 N.C. App. 558, 410 S.E.2d 516 (1991), cert. denied, 331 N.C. 120, 414 S.E.2d 764 (1992).

It is within the trial court's discretion to determine whether to grant a mistrial, and the trial court's decision is to be given great deference because the trial court is in the best position to determine whether the degree of influence on the jury was irreparable. State v. Hill, 347 N.C. App. 275, 493 S.E.2d 264 (1997).

A motion for mistrial and the determination of whether defendant's case had been irreparably prejudiced is within the trial court's sound discretion. State v. McNeill, 349 N.C. 634, 509 S.E.2d 415 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 102, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

Failure to Rule Promptly. — The trial court abused its discretion in denying defendant's motion to set aside the jury verdict after waiting a year to rule on the motion. State v. Smith, 138 N.C. App. 605, 532 S.E.2d 235 (2000).

Mistrial in Capital Cases. — Under the common law of this State, a trial court in a capital case has no authority to discharge the jury without the defendant's consent and hold the defendant for a second trial, absent a showing of "manifest necessity" for a mistrial. State v. Lachat, 317 N.C. 73, 343 S.E.2d 872 (1986).

The retroactive declaration of a mistrial upon reconsideration has no valid basis in policy or law. This practice, if allowed, would impermissibly place a defendant who made any mistrial motion at any time in peril, subject to the unlimited discretion of the trial court, of losing his constitutional right to not be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. State v. O'Neal, 67 N.C. App. 65, 312 S.E.2d 493, modified, 311 N.C. 747, 321 S.E.2d 154 (1984).

Effect of Denial of Motion. — The denial of a motion for a mistrial based on alleged misconduct affecting the jury is equivalent to a finding by the trial judge that prejudicial misconduct has not been shown. State v. Jones, 50 N.C. App. 263, 273 S.E.2d 327, cert. denied, 302 N.C. 400, 279 S.E.2d 354 (1981).

Remedy Less Drastic Than Mistrial Held Sufficient. — The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendants' motions for severance or for a mistrial on the ground that they did not receive a fair and impartial trial due to the in-court outbursts of a codefendant, where, when possible, the trial judge immediately removed the members of the jury from the courtroom when an outburst occurred, and he admonished them not to deliberate on it, when it became apparent that the codefendant would continue to disrupt the proceedings despite the court's warnings, he was removed from the courtroom and at this time the court told the jury to totally disregard the whole matter, and they unanimously indicated that they could do so, and where in his final charge to the jury, the judge again instructed the jury not to allow the codefendant's behavior to influence its decision. State v. McGuire, 297 N.C. 69, 254 S.E.2d 165, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 943, 100 S. Ct. 300, 62 L. Ed. 2d 310 (1979).

Where one juror heard a statement made by a rejected juror during the jury selection process, the trial court did not err in not declaring a mistrial since only one juror heard the statement; defendant and his counsel stated that they did not want the juror removed; the court carefully examined the juror who heard the statement as to whether it would in any way influence his verdict in the case, and the court offered defendant's counsel an opportunity to examine the jury further with respect to the statement, but counsel stated they were content with the original 12 jurors. State v. Pollock, 50 N.C. App. 169, 273 S.E.2d 501 (1980).

The trial court did not err in permitting the State to question a witness with respect to another offense unrelated to the case being tried and in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial because of the admission of the evidence and comments of the district attorney which followed, where the court instructed the jury that the objectionable evidence had nothing to do with the case, that the jury should strike the evidence from their minds, and that any juror who could not do so should raise his hand, which no juror did. State v. Pruitt, 301 N.C. 683, 273 S.E.2d 264 (1981).

In a prosecution of defendant for armed robbery and murder, trial court did not commit prejudicial error in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial after striking the testimony of several witnesses concerning the absence of fingerprints of defendant at the murder scene and the absence of gunpowder on the hands of bystanders after the robbery-murder where the trial court, after the motions to strike were allowed, instructed the jury not to consider the stricken evidence and specifically referred to the evidence and the witness who provided it, and since there was no way in which defendant would have been prejudiced by the evidence had it not been withdrawn from the jury's consideration; defendant's motion for mistrial was a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge, and no abuse of that discretion appeared. State v. Smith, 301 N.C. 695, 272 S.E.2d 852 (1981).

Any prejudice to defendant caused by the prosecutor's closing remark that "in [the] sympathy game, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, it's a hands-down victory [for the prosecution]" was remedied by the actions of the trial court in sustaining defendant's objection to the statement and instructing the jury not to consider it. State v. Wallace, 351 N.C. 481, 528 S.E.2d 326 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1018, 121 S. Ct. 581, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in refusing to grant a mistrial pursuant to this section after the victim's sister, following defendant's testimony on direct examination, began to cry loudly and shouted, "You liar! You lied!" After the outburst, the judge demonstrated its inappropriateness by his direction to the prosecutor that persons unable to control their emotions will not be allowed in the courtroom. State v. Allen, 141 N.C. App. 610, 541 S.E.2d 490 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 382, 547 S.E.2d 816 (2001).

Due process requires that a defendant have a panel of impartial, indifferent jurors. State v. Rutherford, 70 N.C. App. 674, 320 S.E.2d 916 (1984), cert. denied, 313 N.C. 335, 327 S.E.2d 897 (1985).

The trial judge must insure that jurors remain impartial and uninfluenced by outside forces. State v. Rutherford, 70 N.C. App. 674, 320 S.E.2d 916 (1984), cert. denied, 313 N.C. 335, 327 S.E.2d 897 (1985).

Remarks of Prosecutor. — Refusal of court to grant a mistrial based on prosecutor's remarks directed solely toward defendant's failure to offer evidence to rebut the State's case, made in response to defendant's jury argument, and based on comments in the State's closing argument, in which the prosecutor argued that certain evidence was uncontradicted, did not constitute error. State v. Taylor, 340 N.C. 52, 455 S.E.2d 859 (1995).

The court's denial of the defendant's motion for mistrial was not improper where the trial judge, who heard the argument and knew the atmosphere of the trial, carefully considered the circumstances before determining that the prosecutor's rhetorical questions although improper were not prejudicial to the defendant. The prosecutor had asked, "Wouldn't you have wanted to smoke a cigarette, too?" and "How would you like to have to perform oral sex?" while he was facing in the direction of defense counsel and brandishing a pistol in a state of apparent agitation. State v. Hill, 139 N.C. App. 471, 534 S.E.2d 606 (2000).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial after the prosecutor recited a poem called "Dance, Death," and remarked that the jurors had better hope they were never victims of crime, that the police do "the best they can," and that defendant's version of the shooting was the biggest, most preposterous accident that had ever happened in the county. State v. Lloyd, 354 N.C. 76, 552 S.E.2d 596 (2001).

Prosecutor's Outburst. — Where prosecutor interjected that he did not want to make an objection but that another judge he named would have had the defense counsel "locked up," the prosecutor's outburst, while inappropriate, did not make it impossible for defendant to receive a fair and impartial trial and defendant failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion by denying a mistrial. State v. Laws, 325 N.C. 81, 381 S.E.2d 609 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence aff'd, State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 127, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174, rehearing denied, 502 U.S. 1001, 112 S. Ct. 627, 116 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1991).

A mistrial was not warranted on the basis of the cumulative effect of prosecutor's allegedly improper arguments in defendant's capital case. The prosecutor used biblical references to encourage the jury to follow the civil law, mentioned the defendant's previous life sentence and parole related thereto, urged the jury to consider his future dangerousness, and denigrated the proffered mitigating circumstances. State v. Cummings, 352 N.C. 600, 536 S.E.2d 36 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1660, 149 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2001).

Mistrial Required After Race-Based Remark. — The trial court abused its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial after the prosecutor gratuitously referred to the jury as "twelve people good and true, twelve white jurors" although the judge, prosecutor and defendant were all white; furthermore, the comment by the trial court that "We're not going to have that thing going on" failed to cure the prosecutor's opprobrious appeal for a "race-based decision." State v. Diehl, 137 N.C. App. 541, 528 S.E.2d 613 (2000).

Mistrial Not Required After Race-Based Remark. — Reversal was not warranted based on prosecutor's fragmented closing remark appearing to comment on the race of the jurors where, although the challenged portion of the prosecutor's closing argument was unsettling, the comment was made to pursue the prosecutorial theory that one of the defendant's motives for stabbing the victim was racial. State v. Diehl, 353 N.C. 433, 545 S.E.2d 185 (2001).

Where attorney became emotional and could not continue to question defendant the brief emotional display was not prejudicial to defendant as the attorney removed herself from the courtroom quickly and quietly and the jury was immediately removed from the courtroom. State v. Moore, 335 N.C. 567, 440 S.E.2d 797, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 898, 115 S. Ct. 253, 130 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1994).

Motion Based upon Defendant's Own Misconduct. — Judge properly denied defendant's motion for a mistrial based upon defendant's own misconduct; if defendant was prejudiced in the eyes of the jury due to his own actions in the courtroom, he could not be heard to complain. In addition, evidence of defendant's guilt was overwhelming and it was unlikely that the outburst prevented him from receiving a fair verdict. State v. Marino, 96 N.C. App. 506, 386 S.E.2d 72 (1989).

Defendant's absence during the final two hours of jury deliberations did not result in substantial and irreparable prejudice to her case and was harmless error with regard to denying her the constitutional right to be present at every stage of her trial. State v. Webster, 111 N.C. App. 72, 431 S.E.2d 808 (1993), aff'd, 337 N.C. 674, 447 S.E.2d 349 (1994), cert. denied, 335 N.C. 180, 438 S.E.2d 206 (1993).

Exposure of Jurors to News Reports. — The problem of exposure of jurors to news media reports during trial is primarily one for the trial judge, who must weigh all the circumstances in determining in his sound judicial discretion whether the defendant's right to a fair trial has been violated so as to require a mistrial when information or evidence reaches the jury which would not be admissible at trial. State v. Jones, 50 N.C. App. 263, 273 S.E.2d 327, cert. denied, 302 N.C. 400, 279 S.E.2d 354 (1981).

Same — Mistrial Not Required. — In a prosecution for possession and sale of heroin, where three jurors read a newspaper article which included information of defendant's prior conviction on a charge of selling heroin which was not admissible at trial, defendant was not entitled to a mistrial, since evidence of another prior transaction in which an officer paid defendant $350.00 for a white powder was properly admitted; the trial judge examined the jurors who had read the newspaper article and justifiably concluded that they had not formed an opinion as a result of reading the article and that they could make a decision based solely on the evidence presented at trial; and defendant did not request the right to examine the jurors. State v. Jones, 50 N.C. App. 263, 273 S.E.2d 327, cert. denied, 302 N.C. 400, 279 S.E.2d 354 (1981).

Trial court did not err by denying the defense's motion for a mistrial where two jurors saw, but did not read, a newspaper article discussing the case before them. State v. Keyes, 56 N.C. App. 75, 286 S.E.2d 861 (1982).

Where a juror inadvertently read a portion of a newspaper article which reported that the defendant had Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), it was reasonable to conclude that the juror did not read the entire article and had formed no opinion that would jeopardize the defendant's right to a fair trial; there was no abuse of discretion in the decision of the trial judge to deny the defendant's motion for a mistrial. State v. Degree, 114 N.C. App. 385, 442 S.E.2d 323 (1994).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion for mistrial, where seven jurors were exposed to newspaper article revealing that the defendant fled during jury selection and was a fugitive, as the court conducted an inquiry as to which of the jurors could remain fair and impartial, and continued to admonish the jury as to the State's burden of proof, which insured that no prejudice resulted to defendant. State v. Jordan, 131 N.C. App. 678, 508 S.E.2d 819 (1998).

Mistrial Properly Denied. — The trial court acted properly when, after the prosecutor and defense counsel completed their initial arguments but prior to final closing arguments, it reversed its earlier ruling, informed the parties that it would instruct the jury as requested by defendant on the lesser-included offenses of second-degree murder and voluntary manslaughter, then permitted both parties to reopen their initial arguments after strongly cautioning that neither party would be allowed to mention the ruling, and denied the defendant's motion for a mistrial. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

The trial court's denial of defendant's motion for a mistrial based upon the prosecution's comments during trial as to disturbances by noise from the audience and upon its objection to the drug informant being asked where he lived—which objection the defendant took to convey that he was a dangerous and violent man who might seek out the witness—was upheld where the defendant was not mentioned in these comments. State v. Manning, 139 N.C. App. 454, 534 S.E.2d 219 (2000), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 353 N.C. 273, 546 S.E.2d 385 (2000), aff'd, 353 N.C. 449, 545 S.E.2d 211 (2001).

The State's failure to inform the defendant of the existence of, and its failure to provide him with, copies of the currency obtained from the defendant or the serial number list and photocopy used to identify the currency and to charge the defendant with the drug offenses was not condoned, where the State had destroyed the photocopies and serial number list and recirculated the money for other drug buys. However, the defendant did not show substantial and irreparable prejudice to his case due to the overwhelming evidence on the charges stemming from one of the drug buys, including a recording of the drug buy obtained from the wire-tapped informant, testimony of the informant, surveillance of the area by officers, and seizure of defendant just after the transaction, when a substantial amount of cocaine was found on his person. State v. Manning, 139 N.C. App. 454, 534 S.E.2d 219 (2000), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 353 N.C. 273, 546 S.E.2d 385 (2000), aff'd, 353 N.C. 449, 545 S.E.2d 211 (2001).

Violation of Sequestration Order. — There was no abuse of discretion where inadvertent violation of the order for the sequestration of a witness did not prejudice defendant. State v. Howell, 343 N.C. 229, 470 S.E.2d 38 (1996).

Withdrawal of Incompetent Evidence by Court Cured Prejudice. — The trial court did not err in failing to declare a mistrial when a detective read from a recorded statement of co-conspirator, part of which indicated that the defendant had been involved with drugs in the past. The trial court had granted the defendant's motion in limine and forbidden any evidence concerning the defendant's prior drug dealings. Even so, the co-conspirator's statement as read by the detective included the remark that, "I knew that he (the defendant) had, you know, drug involvement in the past." The trial court then instructed the jury to disregard the statement. When the trial court withdraws incompetent evidence and instructs the jury not to consider it, any prejudice is ordinarily cured. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

Prejudice From Court's Question Cured by Instructions — Any possible prejudice to defendant from the trial court's question to expert witness, which might have invaded the province of the jury to determine the credibility of the witness, was cured by the court's later jury instructions, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion for a mistrial on this basis. State v. Gregory, 340 N.C. 365, 459 S.E.2d 638 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1108, 116 S. Ct. 1327, 134 L. Ed. 2d 478 (1996).

Late Discovery of Undisclosed Exculpatory Evidence. — In a first-degree rape case the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for mistrial based on the discovery by defendant, on the fourth day of trial, of a previously undisclosed laboratory report which revealed that an expert had found insufficient characteristics present in the photographs of shoeprints at the crime scene to enable the examiner to render an opinion as to whether defendant's shoes could have made the heel impressions shown in the photographs where the existence of that report in no way affected the competency of the investigating officer's testimony concerning his personal observation of the shoeprints and where defendant did not take advantage of the trial court's offer to assist in locating the expert if defendant thought his testimony would be helpful and although defendant obtained possession of the report before the State rested its case, he made no effort to introduce the report into evidence; inasmuch as the report was prepared in connection with the investigation of the case, the report was not statutorily discoverable except by voluntary disclosure. State v. Jackson, 302 N.C. 101, 273 S.E.2d 666 (1981).

Use of Firearm in Argument to Jury. — In a prosecution for first-degree murder and armed robbery, it was not improper for the prosecutor to use in his jury argument a revolver which had been offered in evidence in the trial so long as he did not attempt to draw any inferences from the weapon which were not supported by the evidence or to frighten or intimidate the jury with it; thus, the trial court properly did not grant a mistrial. State v. Oliver, 302 N.C. 28, 274 S.E.2d 183 (1981).

Remark by Witness. — Remark made by witness concerning seeing defendant on death row did not result in substantial and irreparable prejudice to defendant's case. State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1096, 118 S. Ct. 892, 139 L. Ed. 2d 878 (1998).

Witness' challenge to defendant to take the stand and testify did not require a mistrial for infringement of the defendant's Fifth Amendment rights, where the prosecutor did not solicit the witness' response, but tried to avoid further comments, and the trial court instructed the jury to disregard the statement. State v. McNeill, 349 N.C. 634, 509 S.E.2d 415 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 102, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

Emotional Outburst by Prosecuting Witness. — In light of a trial court's prompt actions in directing the removal of the prosecuting witness after her emotional outburst and in resuming his instructions to the jury and the otherwise compelling case against the defendant, the witness's emotional outburst was not so prejudicial to the defendant as to result in reversible error where the trial judge refused to grant a mistrial. State v. Blackstock, 314 N.C. 232, 333 S.E.2d 245 (1985).

Trial court did not err by failing to instruct the jury to disregard an emotional display by a murder victim's widow, when the defendant did not request a curative instruction or move for a mistrial. State v. Locklear, 322 N.C. 349, 368 S.E.2d 377 (1988).

Victim's husband's emotional outburst was not so prejudicial to defendant as to render the denial of the motion for mistrial a manifest abuse of discretion reversible on appeal where the incident was apparently over quickly and caused minimal interruption. State v. Ward, 338 N.C. 64, 449 S.E.2d 709 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1134, 115 S. Ct. 2014, 131 L. Ed. 2d 1012 (1995), cert. denied, 343 N.C. 757, 473 S.E.2d 626 (1996), cert. denied, 354 N.C. 74, — S.E.2d — (2001).

Bailiff Intrusion into Jury Room. — No mistrial was warranted under this section where the evidence showed that when the intrusion by the bailiff became known to the court, the trial judge put the bailiff under oath, determined that the bailiff had, without authorization of the court, knocked on the door of the jury room, that he did so because another bailiff had asked him to retrieve some magazines for defendant, that the bailiff said nothing to the jurors and the jurors said nothing to him, and that he heard no deliberations and had no other contact with the jurors. State v. Washington, 141 N.C. App. 354, 540 S.E.2d 388 (2000), cert denied, 353 N.C. 396, 547 S.E.2d 427 (2001).

Entry of Prosecution Witness into Jury Room. — The trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial made on the ground that one of the prosecuting witnesses entered the jury room during a recess at the conclusion of the trial but prior to the charge of the court, since the trial judge determined that the prosecuting witness knocked at the door of the jury room, came through the room and used the restroom, but did not communicate with any of the jurors. State v. Billups, 301 N.C. 607, 272 S.E.2d 842 (1981).

Comment of victim's father during trial in response to defendant's contention that he was being railroaded did not result in such prejudice to defendant, who failed to request curative instructions, as to render the denial of his motion for mistrial a manifest abuse of discretion reversible on appeal. State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

Coercion Not Shown. — Trial judge's remarks to the jury concerning the time available for deliberations were made in open court and in the presence of defendant and his counsel, and the substance of those remarks appeared of record. Trial judge's unrecorded remarks did not amount to coercion of the jury. State v. Coats, 100 N.C. App. 455, 397 S.E.2d 512 (1990), cert. denied, 328 N.C. 573, 403 S.E.2d 515 (1991).

Defendant in Handcuffs Not Prejudice. — The defendant suffered no prejudice by being seen by jurors in handcuffs and in the custody of the sheriff, where defendant alleged that this occurred while he was being transported from the jail to the courtroom on one morning of trial, but he was not handcuffed during trial, and no juror responded positively to the trial court's inquiry of whether jurors had seen anything since the trial began that would cause them to be prejudiced against the defendant. State v. Dennis, 129 N.C. App. 686, 500 S.E.2d 765 (1998).

Conduct of sheriff, as jury custodian, on the first day of jury selection, in initially taking a seat adjacent to the prosecutor, did not constitute substantial and irreparable prejudice to defendant where, following objection, the trial judge took immediate steps to correct the situation, and where the sheriff engaged in no communications with the jury during the short interval between the time he sat down and the lodging of the objection, and there was no allegation that the sheriff made improper extrajudicial comments to any of the jurors. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Where trial judge cautioned both parties before trial to avoid references to polygraph tests, but State's witness testified that he had asked defendant to take a polygraph test, there was no abuse of discretion by judge in denying defendant's motion for mistrial after defendant had been allowed to cross-examine the witness on that point and trial judge gave a cautionary instruction to the jury. State v. Harris, 323 N.C. 112, 371 S.E.2d 689 (1988).

Reference to Polygraph. — The defendant was not entitled to a mistrial where the investigator's mention of the word "polygraph" was not such a "serious impropriety" as to render it impossible for defendant to receive a fair and impartial verdict, and any possible prejudice was removed by the trial court's prompt and timely instruction. State v. Hutchings, 139 N.C. App. 184, 533 S.E.2d 258 (2000).

Doctor's Testimony on Defendant's Mental State. — Despite doctor's testimony in response to the court's inquiry regarding defendant's agitated state on the morning of his trial that defendant would "probably not, in his state" be able to effectively testify, defendant failed to show that the court's refusal to grant a mistrial was error; defendant did testify at trial and nothing in his testimony supported the argument that his alleged impaired condition prevented him from effectively testifying in his

Scope of Review. — Basically, the determination whether the evidence causes substantial or irreparable prejudice to the defendant's case is within the discretion of the trial judge. The scope of review therefore is limited to whether in denying the motion for a mistrial there has been an abuse of judicial discretion. State v. Brown, 64 N.C. App. 637, 308 S.E.2d 346 (1983), aff'd, 310 N.C. 563, 313 S.E.2d 585 (1985).

A ruling on a motion for a mistrial is not reviewable absent a showing of gross abuse of discretion. State v. Seagroves, 78 N.C. App. 49, 336 S.E.2d 684 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 384, 342 S.E.2d 905 (1986).

The ruling on a motion for mistrial will be disturbed on appeal only if so clearly erroneous as to amount to a manifest abuse of discretion. State v. Stroud, 78 N.C. App. 599, 337 S.E.2d 873 (1985).

The scope of appellate review is limited to whether in denying motion for a mistrial, there has been an abuse of judicial discretion. State v. Boyd, 321 N.C. 574, 364 S.E.2d 118 (1988).

§ 15A-1062. Mistrial for prejudice to the State.

Upon motion of the State, the judge may declare a mistrial if there occurs during the trial, either inside or outside the courtroom, misconduct resulting in substantial and irreparable prejudice to the State's case and the misconduct was by a juror or the defendant, his lawyer, or someone acting at the behest of the defendant or his lawyer. If there are two or more defendants, the mistrial may not be declared as to a defendant who does not join in the motion of the State if:

(1) Neither he, his lawyer, nor a person acting at his or his lawyer's behest participated in the misconduct; or

(2) The State's case is not substantially and irreparably prejudiced as to him. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is based upon Uniform Rules, Rule 541(b). The major substantive change is to add the misconduct of a juror to the grounds for which the State may secure a mistrial on its own motion — provided the prejudice was substantial and irreparable.

CASE NOTES

Legislative Intent. — By the enactment of this section and § 15A-1063 the General Assembly did not intend to limit the authority of trial judges to order a mistrial where events not instigated by the defendant or his lawyer have nevertheless colored the proceedings in such a way as to suggest that an impartial trial in accordance with law cannot be had. State v. Cooley, 47 N.C. App. 376, 268 S.E.2d 87, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 96, 273 S.E.2d 442 (1980).

Jury Tampering. — An order of mistrial based upon the provisions of this section was not proper even though there was some evidence of jury tampering, where there was no evidence of any connection between defendant or his attorney and the alleged jury tampering, and the possibility or risk that defendant might be the beneficiary of such activity was not sufficient to allow a conclusion that the acts were done at the behest of the defendant or his lawyer. State v. Cooley, 47 N.C. App. 376, 268 S.E.2d 87, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 96, 273 S.E.2d 442 (1980).

Necessity of Mistrial. — The North Carolina Supreme Court has recognized two kinds of necessity that justify a mistrial without defendant's consent — physical necessity and the necessity of doing justice. State v. Sanders, 347 N.C. 587, 496 S.E.2d 568 (1998).

§ 15A-1063. Mistrial for impossibility of proceeding.

Upon motion of a party or upon his own motion, a judge may declare a mistrial if:

(1) It is impossible for the trial to proceed in conformity with law; or

(2) It appears there is no reasonable probability of the jury's agreement upon a verdict. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is based upon Uniform Rules, Rule 541(c). The Commission deleted, upon a divided vote, a discretionary ground for mistrial if the poll of the jury indicated there was not unanimous concurrence with the verdict returned. G.S. 15A-1238 states that the judge should direct the jury to retire for further deliberations in this instance, and the Commission saw no necessity to write in a special discretionary right to a mistrial. The defendant would always have the privilege under G.S. 15A-1061 to move for a discretionary mistrial if he thought the circumstances revealed by the poll of the jury were substantially prejudicial to him. The State would have a right to request a mistrial if the prejudice to it were tied to misconduct of a juror — under the Commission's version of G.S. 15A-1062. If the prejudice were so total as to make it "impossible" for the trial to proceed "in conformity with law," then either party or the judge on his own motion could trigger the mistrial under subdivision (1) of this section — provided this would be constitutional.

In its deliberations the Commission was furnished the following draftsman's comment with this section: "The language in subparagraph (1) is intended to cover the limited number of situations in which a judge may grant a mistrial without consent of the defendant because of the impossibility of proceeding with the trial. It covers the case in which a juror dies or becomes disabled to continue, and there is no alternate or else deliberations have already begun. It also covers the situation in which it becomes physically impossible for the trial to proceed — such as may be caused by fire, flood, or other catastrophe. . . . (This subparagraph gives) the judge as broad and flexible a power as possible in impossibility cases consistent with the constitutional rulings concerning former jeopardy."

CASE NOTES

Legislative Intent. — By the enactment of § 15A-1062 and this section the General Assembly did not intend to limit the authority of trial judges to order a mistrial where events not instigated by the defendant or his lawyer have nevertheless colored the proceedings in such a way as to suggest that an impartial trial in accordance with law cannot be had. State v. Cooley, 47 N.C. App. 376, 268 S.E.2d 87, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 96, 273 S.E.2d 442 (1980).

Section 15A-1235(d) allows declaration of a mistrial on the same grounds as this section. State v. O'Neal, 67 N.C. App. 65, 312 S.E.2d 493, modified, 311 N.C. 747, 321 S.E.2d 154 (1984).

Mistrial in Capital Cases. — Under the common law of this State, a trial court in a capital case has no authority to discharge the jury without the defendant's consent and hold the defendant for a second trial, absent a showing of "manifest necessity" for a mistrial. State v. Lachat, 317 N.C. 73, 343 S.E.2d 872 (1986).

Mistrial Where Trial Not Fair and Impartial. — Subdivision (1) of this section allows a judge, over the defendant's objection, to grant a mistrial where he could reasonably conclude that the trial will not be fair and impartial. State v. Lyons, 77 N.C. App. 565, 335 S.E.2d 532 (1985).

Discretion of Trial Judge. — The granting or denial of a motion for a mistrial is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Wall, 304 N.C. 609, 286 S.E.2d 68 (1982).

An order of a mistrial on a motion of the court is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge, and his ruling on the motion will not be disturbed on appeal absent a gross abuse of that discretion. State v. Lyons, 77 N.C. App. 565, 335 S.E.2d 532 (1985).

The trial judge did not violate this section by refusing to declare a mistrial where the court never expressed irritation at the jury for failing to reach a unanimous verdict, or intimated that the jury would be held for an unreasonable period of time to reach such a verdict although the jury was required to deliberate late on a Friday night and although it took the jury approximately eight hours to reach a verdict. State v. Baldwin, 141 N.C. App. 596, 540 S.E.2d 815 (2000).

Jury Tampering. — Where the trial court has reasonable grounds to believe that one or more jurors have been tampered with, it has the constitutional authority, if not the duty, to stop the trial, dismiss the jury, and direct a retrial. State v. Cooley, 47 N.C. App. 376, 268 S.E.2d 87, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 96, 273 S.E.2d 442 (1980).

The court may declare a mistrial when one of defendant's attorneys testifies for the State. State v. Malone, 65 N.C. App. 782, 310 S.E.2d 385, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 311 N.C. 405, 319 S.E.2d 277 (1984).

Where the prosecutor's key witness suddenly refused to cooperate in a second degree sexual offense case, but the record was devoid of any evidence of misconduct, the trial court abused its discretion by granting a mistrial. State v. Chriscoe, 87 N.C. App. 404, 360 S.E.2d 812 (1987).

Jury's failure to reach a verdict due to deadlock is "manifest necessity" justifying declaration of a mistrial. State v. Pakulski, 319 N.C. 562, 356 S.E.2d 319 (1987).

Plea of former jeopardy will not preclude subsequent trial of a defendant, where the mistrial was ordered, over defendant's objections, due to physical necessity or the necessity of doing justice. State v. Lyons, 77 N.C. App. 565, 335 S.E.2d 532 (1985).

Defendant's failure to object to termination of her first trial for first degree murder by court's declaration of a mistrial would not prevent her from receiving the relief to which she was otherwise entitled on grounds of former jeopardy, on appeal of her conviction at a second trial. State v. Lachat, 317 N.C. 73, 343 S.E.2d 872 (1986).

Dismissal of Murder Conviction. — Where the initial declaration of a mistrial during defendant's first trial on the capital charge against her was not the result of manifest necessity, and therefore was error, and it could not be determined from the record whether the error in initially declaring a mistrial caused the jury to fail to reach agreement after the court had reinstated the jury, and thus deprived defendant of a verdict, the trial court erred when it later denied defendant's motion to dismiss the charge of first degree murder against her for the reason that she had formerly been placed in jeopardy for the same offense. State v. Lachat, 317 N.C. 73, 343 S.E.2d 872 (1986).

Plea of former jeopardy will not preclude subsequent trial of a defendant, where the mistrial was ordered, over defendant's objections, due to physical necessity or the necessity of doing justice. State v. Lyons, 77 N.C. App. 565, 335 S.E.2d 532 (1985).

Applied in State v. Bidgood, 144 N.C. App. 267, 550 S.E.2d 198 (2001).

§ 15A-1064. Mistrial; finding of facts required.

Before granting a mistrial, the judge must make finding of facts with respect to the grounds for the mistrial and insert the findings in the record of the case. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This provision will be important when the rule against prior jeopardy prohibits retrial unless the mistrial is upon certain recognized grounds or unless the defendant requests or acquiesces in the mistrial. If the defendant requests or acquiesces in the mistrial, that finding alone should suffice.

CASE NOTES

The provisions of this section are simple and clear; their uniform application will protect valued rights of defendants and greatly facilitate the process of appellate review. State v. Jones, 67 N.C. App. 377, 313 S.E.2d 808, cert. denied, 67 N.C. 377, 315 S.E.2d 699 (1984).

The purpose of this section is to ensure that mistrial is declared only where there exists real necessity for such an order. The right of the accused to completion of the proceedings before the same tribunal is thereby protected from sudden and arbitrary judicial action. State v. Jones, 67 N.C. App. 377, 313 S.E.2d 808, cert. denied, 67 N.C. 377, 315 S.E.2d 699 (1984).

This section clearly requires findings of fact. Had the General Assembly wished to allow the matter to remain entirely in the discretion of the trial courts, it would have done so. Instead, in a departure from earlier law, the Legislature made such findings mandatory for all orders of mistrial. State v. Jones, 67 N.C. App. 377, 313 S.E.2d 808, cert. denied, 67 N.C. 377, 315 S.E.2d 699 (1984).

The purpose of this section is to protect the constitutional rights of defendants and to facilitate the process of appellate review. State v. Lyons, 77 N.C. App. 565, 335 S.E.2d 532 (1985).

The making of findings sufficient to support the judge's decision to grant a mistrial is mandatory, and the failure to make such findings is error. State v. Odom, 316 N.C. 306, 341 S.E.2d 332 (1986); State v. Lachat, 317 N.C. 73, 343 S.E.2d 872 (1986).

Even the most exigent of circumstances do not justify circumvention of this rule. State v. Johnson, 60 N.C. App. 369, 299 S.E.2d 237, cert. denied, 308 N.C. 679, 304 S.E.2d 759 (1983).

But Defendant Must Object to Failure to Make Findings. — Where defendant failed to make any objection at trial to the judge's failure to make findings as required by this section, he failed to preserve any error for appellate review under the requirements of N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(2), as the mandatory nature of this section does not relieve defendant of his responsibility to prevent avoidable errors and the resulting unnecessary appellate review by lodging an appropriate objection. State v. Odom, 316 N.C. 306, 341 S.E.2d 332 (1986).

Defendant's failure to object to termination of her first trial for first degree murder by court's declaration of a mistrial would not prevent her from receiving the relief to which she was otherwise entitled on grounds of former jeopardy, on appeal of her conviction at a second trial. State v. Lachat, 317 N.C. 73, 343 S.E.2d 872 (1986).

Unless timely objected to by defense counsel, a trial court's failure to make findings in support of a mistrial is not subject to appellate review. However, in a capital case, the failure to object to a mistrial declaration will not prevent a defendant from assigning the declaration of mistrial as error on appeal. State v. Pakulski, 319 N.C. 562, 356 S.E.2d 319 (1987).

Failure to Make Findings. — Where the mistrial has been granted at defendant's request, there can be no prejudice to defendant in the failure to make findings as required by this section. State v. Moses, 52 N.C. App. 412, 279 S.E.2d 59, cert. denied, 303 N.C. 318, 281 S.E.2d 390 (1981).

Ordinarily, where a mistrial has been granted at defendant's request, there can be no prejudice to defendant in the failure to make such findings. However, when a defendant contends that serious prosecutorial misconduct precipitated his motion for mistrial, findings of fact may be as essential to adequate review of his double jeopardy claim as in a case in which mistrial is ordered over the defendant's objection. State v. White, 85 N.C. App. 81, 354 S.E.2d 324, aff'd, 322 N.C. 506, 369 S.E.2d 813 (1989).

Where, from the record the grounds for mistrial were clear, and were obviously clear to the trial court at the hearing on defendant's motion to dismiss, defendant was not prejudiced by the judge's failure to make the required findings before ordering mistrial and the omission thus constituted harmless error. State v. White, 85 N.C. App. 81, 354 S.E.2d 324, aff'd, 322 N.C. 506, 369 S.E.2d 813 (1988).

Where jury deadlock was apparent in record of trial, fact that court initially failed to make findings in support of mistrial declaration did not violate double jeopardy provisions. State v. Pakulski, 319 N.C. 562, 356 S.E.2d 319 (1987).

It is only a secondary purpose of this section to ensure that a full record is made. Its primary purpose is to protect the valued constitutional rights of criminal defendants. It would seriously weaken this protection if trial judges could ex post facto develop explanations for mistrial rulings. Findings must be made before the declaration to ensure full deliberation; the creation of a record subsequently is no substitute, except perhaps in a few isolated cases. State v. Jones, 67 N.C. App. 377, 313 S.E.2d 808, cert. denied, 67 N.C. 377, 315 S.E.2d 699 (1984).

Dismissal of Murder Conviction. — Where the initial declaration of a mistrial during defendant's first trial on the capital charge against her was not the result of manifest necessity, and therefore was error, and it could not be determined from the record whether the error in initially declaring a mistrial caused the jury to fail to reach agreement after the court had reinstated the jury, and thus deprived defendant of a verdict, the trial court erred when it later denied defendant's motion to dismiss the charge of first degree murder against her for the reason that she had formerly been placed in jeopardy for the same offense. State v. Lachat, 317 N.C. 73, 343 S.E.2d 872 (1986).

Where the prosecutor's key witness suddenly refused to cooperate in a second degree sexual offense case, but the record was devoid of any evidence of misconduct, the trial court abused its discretion by granting a mistrial. State v. Chriscoe, 87 N.C. App. 404, 360 S.E.2d 812 (1987).

Where defendant failed to object to trial court's termination of first trial by a declaration of mistrial, defendant was not entitled, by reason of former jeopardy, to dismissal of charge against him; defendant was given notice and opportunity to object before mistrial was declared. State v. Sanders, 122 N.C. App. 691, 471 S.E.2d 641 (1996).

Facts Supporting Mistrial Shown. — Where there were three to six inches of snow in the county, several jurors were unable to get to the courthouse and defendant's attorney informed the court it would be difficult to get in to court, the trial court's decision to declare a mistrial was not an abuse of discretionary power. State v. Shoff, 128 N.C. App. 432, 496 S.E.2d 590 (1998), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 348 N.C. 289, 501 S.E.2d 923 (1998).

§ 15A-1065. Procedure following mistrial.

When a mistrial is ordered, the judge must direct that the case be retained for trial or such other proceedings as may be proper. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The statute on which this section is based, Kan. Stat. Ann. § 22-3423, added a provision requiring "that the defendant be held in custody pending such further proceedings, unless he is released pursuant to the terms of an appearance bond." The Commission thought the matter was already covered by Article 26, Bail, and deleted this portion.

SUBCHAPTER XI. TRIAL PROCEDURE IN DISTRICT COURT.

ARTICLE 65.

In General.

§ 15A-1101. Applicability of superior court procedure.

Trial procedure in the district court is in accordance with the provisions of Subchapter XII, Trial in Superior Court, except for provisions:

(1) Relating to jury trial.

(2) Requiring recordation of proceedings unless they specify their applicability to the district court.

(3) That specify their applicability to superior court. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

ARTICLE 66.

Procedure for Hearing and Disposition of Infractions.

§ 15A-1111. General procedure for disposition of infractions.

The procedure for the disposition of an infraction, as defined in G.S. 14-3.1, is as provided in this Article. If a question of procedure is not governed by this Article, the procedures applicable to the conduct of pretrial and trial proceedings for misdemeanors in district court are applicable unless the procedure is clearly inapplicable to the hearing of an infraction. (1985, c. 764, s. 3.)

Venue for the conduct of infraction hearings lies in any county where any act or omission constituting part of the alleged infraction occurred. (1985, c. 764, s. 3.)

§ 15A-1113. Prehearing procedure.

(a) Process. — A law enforcement officer may issue a citation for an infraction in accordance with the provisions of G.S. 15A-302. A judicial official may issue a summons for an infraction in accordance with the provisions of G.S. 15A-303.

(b) Detention of Person Charged. — A law enforcement officer who has probable cause to believe a person has committed an infraction may detain the person for a reasonable period in order to issue and serve him a citation.

(c) Appearance Bond May Be Required. — A person charged with an infraction may not be required to post an appearance bond if:

(1) He is licensed to drive by a state that subscribes to the nonresident violator compact as defined in Article 1B of Chapter 20 of the General Statutes, the infraction charged is subject to the provisions of that compact, and he executes a personal recognizance as defined by that compact.

(2) He is a resident of North Carolina.

Any other person charged with an infraction may be required to post a bond to secure his appearance and a charging officer may require such a person charged to accompany him to a judicial official's office to allow the official to determine if a bond is necessary to secure the person's court appearance, and if so, what kind of bond is to be used. If the judicial official finds that the person is unable to post a secured bond, he must allow the person to be released on execution of an unsecured bond. The provisions of Article 26 of this Chapter relating to issuance and forfeiture of bail bonds are applicable to bonds required pursuant to this subsection.

(d) Territorial Jurisdiction. — A law enforcement officer's territorial jurisdiction to charge a person with an infraction is the same as his jurisdiction to arrest specified in G.S. 15A-402.

(e) Use of Same Process for Two Offenses. — A person may be charged with a criminal offense and an infraction in the same pleading. (1985, c. 764, s. 3; 1985 (Reg. Sess., 1986), c. 852, s. 12.)

CASE NOTES

Power to arrest not necessarily include the authority to search motor vehicle in the absence of probable cause. State v. Braxton, 90 N.C. App. 204, 368 S.E.2d 56 (1988).

Motorist's rights were not violated by officer's performance of registration check or by use of handcuffs. Burton v. City of Durham, 118 N.C. App. 676, 457 S.E.2d 329 (1995).

§ 15A-1114. Hearing procedure for infractions.

(a) Jurisdiction. — Jurisdiction for the adjudication and disposition of infractions is as specified in G.S. 7A-253 and G.S. 7A-271(d).

(b) No Trial by Jury. — In adjudicatory hearings for infractions, no party has a right to a trial by jury in district court.

(c) Infractions Heard in Civil or Criminal Session. — A district court judge may conduct proceedings relating to traffic infractions in a civil or criminal session of court, unless the infraction is joined with a criminal offense arising out of the same transaction or occurrence. In such a case, the criminal offense and the infraction must be heard at a session in which criminal matters may be heard.

(d) Pleas. — A person charged with an infraction may admit or deny responsibility for the infraction. The plea must be made by the person charged in open court, unless he submits a written waiver of appearance which is approved by the presiding judge, or, if authorized by G.S. 7A-146, he waives his right to a hearing and admits responsibility for the infraction in writing and pays the specified penalty and costs.

(e) Duty of District Attorney. — The district attorney is responsible for ensuring that infractions are calendared and prosecuted efficiently.

(f) Burden of Proof. — The State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the person charged is responsible for the infraction unless the person admits responsibility.

(g) Recording Not Necessary. — The State does not have to record the proceedings at infraction hearings. With the approval of the court, a party may, at his expense, record any proceeding. (1985, c. 764, s. 3.)

§ 15A-1115. Review of disposition by superior court.

(a) Appeal of District Court Decision. — A person who denies responsibility and is found responsible for an infraction in the district court, within 10 days of the hearing, may appeal the decision to the criminal division of the superior court for a hearing de novo. Upon appeal, the defendant is entitled to a jury trial unless he consents to have the hearing conducted by the judge. The State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the person charged is responsible for the infraction unless the person admits responsibility. Unless otherwise provided by law, the procedures applicable to misdemeanors disposed of in the superior court apply to those infraction hearings. In the superior court, a prosecutor must represent the State. Appeal from the judgment in the superior court is as provided for other criminal actions in superior court, and the Attorney General must represent the State in an appeal of such actions.

(b) Review of Infractions Originally Disposed of in Superior Court. — If the superior court disposes of an infraction pursuant to its jurisdiction in G.S. 7A-271(d), appeal from that judgment is as provided for criminal actions in the superior court. (1985, c. 764, s. 3; 1985 (Reg. Sess., 1986), c. 852, s. 10.)

CASE NOTES

No Right to Appeal from Admission of Responsibility. — Defendant who is charged with an infraction and admits responsibility in the district court has no right to appeal for a trial de novo in superior court. State v. Richardson, 96 N.C. App. 508, 386 S.E.2d 98 (1989).

§ 15A-1116. Enforcement of sanctions.

(a) Use of Contempt or Fine Collection Procedures: Notification of DMV. — If the person does not comply with a sanction ordered by the court, the court may proceed in accordance with Chapter 5A of the General Statutes. If the person fails to pay a penalty or costs, the court may proceed in accordance with Article 84 of this Chapter. If the infraction is a motor vehicle infraction, the court must report a failure to pay the applicable penalty and costs to the Division of Motor Vehicles as specified in G.S. 20-24.2.

(b) No Order for Arrest. — If a person served with a citation for an infraction fails to appear to answer the charge, the court may issue a criminal summons to secure the person's appearance, but an order for arrest may not be used in such cases. (1985, c. 764, s. 3; 1985 (Reg. Sess., 1986), c. 852, ss. 1, 2, 15.)

Costs assessed for an infraction are as specified in G.S. 7A-304. (1985, c. 764, s. 3.)

SUBCHAPTER XII. TRIAL PROCEDURE IN SUPERIOR COURT.

ARTICLE 71.

Right to Trial by Jury.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article derives from those appearing in the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly, as revised by the Commission.

§ 15A-1201. Right to trial by jury.

In all criminal cases the defendant has the right to be tried by a jury of 12 whose verdict must be unanimous. In the district court the judge is the finder of fact in criminal cases, but the defendant has the right to appeal for trial de novo in superior court as provided in G.S. 15A-1431. In superior court all criminal trials in which the defendant enters a plea of not guilty must be tried before a jury. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section preserves the existing law. The Commission briefly considered possible changes that would apparently require amendment of the Constitution of North Carolina, such as providing for trial to the court upon waiver of jury trial, less than unanimous verdicts, and fewer than 12 jurors in certain classes of cases, but decided against recommending such changes.

CASE NOTES

When Double Jeopardy Attaches in Bench Trial. — In a bench trial, double jeopardy does not attach until the introduction of evidence. State v. Brunson, 96 N.C. App. 347, 385 S.E.2d 542 (1989), aff'd, 327 N.C. 244, 393 S.E.2d 860 (1990).

Exchange of Witness List. — Subchapter XII of Chapter 15A covers the subject of criminal "Trial Procedure in Superior Court." This Article encompasses statutes on "Right to Trial by Jury." Nowhere is there any mention of a requirement for a witness list. While custom has been to exchange witness lists between counsel for use in the jury voir dire in criminal cases prior to questioning, there is no requirement for the State to furnish a list of the prospective witnesses to defense counsel at any stage. As observed by the North Carolina Supreme Court, the legislature rejected a proposal that would have allowed defendants to discover the names of witnesses the State intended to call. State v. Miller, 61 N.C. App. 1, 300 S.E.2d 431 (1983).

Selecting and Impaneling the Jury.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

One of the models used in the initial drafts of this Article was American Law Institute, Code of Criminal Procedure, Chapter 13 (Proposed Final Draft 1930), but the material went through so many revisions that it can be said essentially to originate with the Commission.

Unless the context otherwise requires, the word "juror" in this Article refers to members of the jury panel generally, and not merely those selected as trial jurors or alternates.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article derives from those appearing in the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly, as revised by the Commission.

§ 15A-1211. Selection procedure generally; role of judge; challenge to the panel; authority of judge to excuse jurors.

(a) The provisions of Chapter 9 of the General Statutes, Jurors, pertinent to criminal cases apply except when this Chapter specifically provides a different procedure.

(b) The trial judge must decide all challenges to the panel and all questions concerning the competency of jurors.

(c) The State or the defendant may challenge the jury panel. A challenge to the panel:

(1) May be made only on the ground that the jurors were not selected or drawn according to law.

(2) Must be in writing.

(3) Must specify the facts constituting the ground of challenge.

(4) Must be made and decided before any juror is examined.

If a challenge to the panel is sustained, the judge must discharge the panel.

(d) The judge may excuse a juror without challenge by any party if he determines that grounds for challenge for cause are present. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The challenge procedure set out in this section also applies when the challenge is to the panel from which grand jurors were drawn. See the 1977 amendment to G.S. 15A-622(a), effective July 1, 1978.

CASE NOTES

Subsection (b) requires trial judge to decide all challenges concerning the competency of jurors. Section 15A-1212 merely lists the various grounds for making challenges to jurors. State v. Corbett, 309 N.C. 382, 307 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

The extent of the inquiry of a prospective juror rests within the trial court's discretion and will not be found to be reversible error unless an abuse of discretion is shown. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

Showing Required for Dismissal of Indictment. — In order to justify a dismissal of an indictment on grounds that statutory procedures were violated in the compilation of the jury list, a party must show either corrupt intent, discrimination, or irregularities which affect the actions of the jurors actually drawn and summoned. State v. Vaughn, 296 N.C. 167, 250 S.E.2d 210 (1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 935, 99 S. Ct. 2060, 60 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1979).

Jurors Conceptions of Parole Eligibility. — A court does not err by refusing to allow voir dire concerning prospective jurors' conceptions of the parole eligibility of a defendant serving a life sentence. State v. Smith, 347 N.C. App. 453, 496 S.E.2d 357 (1998).

Motion made pursuant to subdivision (c)(1) must be made and decided before any juror is examined. State v. Lynch, 300 N.C. 534, 268 S.E.2d 161 (1980).

When Findings Not Required. — In the absence of evidence that any qualified person was excluded from jury service, and in the absence of contradictory and conflicting evidence as to the material facts, the judge is not required to make findings. State v. Vaughn, 296 N.C. 167, 250 S.E.2d 210 (1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 935, 99 S. Ct. 2060, 60 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1979).

Mere Violation of Statutory Procedures Will Not Merit Quashal. — In the absence of statutory language indicating that preparation of jury lists shall be void if the directions of the act be not strictly observed, a mere showing of a violation of the statutory procedures will not merit the quashing of an indictment. State v. Vaughn, 296 N.C. 167, 250 S.E.2d 210 (1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 935, 99 S. Ct. 2060, 60 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1979).

Mere Showing of Improper Disqualification Is Insufficient. — Even a showing that certain qualified persons were improperly disqualified, would not require a dismissal of an indictment absent a showing of corrupt intent or systematic discrimination in the compilation of the list, or a showing of the presence upon the grand jury itself of a member not qualified to serve. State v. Vaughn, 296 N.C. 167, 250 S.E.2d 210 (1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 935, 99 S. Ct. 2060, 60 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1979).

Reliance on Word of Sheriff as to Lack of Qualifications. — Where the testimony by the chairman of a jury commission indicated that, in certain instances, the commission did not make proper inquiry before disqualifying certain individuals, but instead simply took the sheriff on his word that such persons were disqualified, but there was no evidence indicating that persons qualified to serve were disqualified from the list, and there was no evidence that the sheriff was unlawfully delegated the responsibility, given the final say, of determining the jury list, the trial court properly denied a motion to quash the indictment. State v. Vaughn, 296 N.C. 167, 250 S.E.2d 210 (1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 935, 99 S. Ct. 2060, 60 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1979).

Prosecutor's Question as to Whether Jurors Had Opinion as to Guilt. — The trial court did not err in failing to strike the entire jury panel even though the prosecutor's question, in inquiring into the fitness of jurors to serve, as to whether the jurors had formed an opinion that the defendant was guilty was clearly improper, where the court sustained the defendant's objection to the question, and none of the jurors were permitted to respond to it. State v. Zigler, 42 N.C. App. 148, 256 S.E.2d 479 (1979).

If prospective juror has stated that he has an opinion as to how the case should come out, he may serve if it is established that he can lay aside his impression or opinion and render a verdict based on the evidence presented in court. State v. Corbett, 309 N.C. 382, 307 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

Jurors Opposed to Death Penalty. — Prospective jurors in a capital case may be excluded if they are unable or unwilling to accept state law which provides that in certain circumstances death is an authorized penalty and to address the issue of penalty in such a case without conscious distortion or bias. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

Juror Must Be Unequivocally Opposed to Death Penalty to Be Excluded. — The exclusion of even one prospective juror in violation of the Witherspoon standard (Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 88 S. Ct. 1770, 20 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1968)) invalidates a subsequent sentence of death, regardless of whether the State went to trial with peremptory challenges unexercised. The statement of the juror that he could not vote for the death penalty must be unequivocal. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

Reopening Examination of Juror. — The decision of whether to reopen examination of a juror previously accepted by both parties is a matter within the discretion of the trial court. Once the trial court has exercised its discretion to reopen the examination of any juror, the trial court may excuse the juror for cause, and either party may exercise any remaining peremptory challenges to remove the juror. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

There was no error where defendant never challenged the jury panel selection process, failed to follow the procedures clearly set out for jury panel challenges, and further failed, in any manner, to alert the trial court to alleged improprieties. State v. Workman, 344 N.C. 482, 476 S.E.2d 301 (1996).

The defendant who failed to comply with this section could not successfully appeal the court's possible violation of § 15A-1214. State v. Meyer, 353 N.C. 92, 540 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Challenge to the random selection of the jurors based on an alleged violation of § 15A-1214 was not preserved where defendant failed to comply with this section. State v. Cummings, 353 N.C. 281, 543 S.E.2d 844 (2001).

§ 15A-1212. Grounds for challenge for cause.

A challenge for cause to an individual juror may be made by any party on the ground that the juror:

(1) Does not have the qualifications required by G.S. 9-3.
(2) Is incapable by reason of mental or physical infirmity of rendering jury service.
(3) Has been or is a party, a witness, a grand juror, a trial juror, or otherwise has participated in civil or criminal proceedings involving a transaction which relates to the charge against the defendant.
(4) Has been or is a party adverse to the defendant in a civil action, or has complained against or been accused by him in a criminal prosecution.
(5) Is related by blood or marriage within the sixth degree to the defendant or the victim of the crime.
(6) Has formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant. It is improper for a party to elicit whether the opinion formed is favorable or adverse to the defendant.
(7) Is presently charged with a felony.
(8) As a matter of conscience, regardless of the facts and circumstances, would be unable to render a verdict with respect to the charge in accordance with the law of North Carolina.
(9) For any other cause is unable to render a fair and impartial verdict. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

To the extent possible the Commission has attempted to restate in this Article the rules governing selecting and impaneling the jury in a criminal case. This section incorporates the disqualifications set out in G.S. 9-3 and adds a number of additional grounds for challenge for cause. A companion provision recommended by the Commission was the amendment of G.S. 9-3 to add as a qualification for jury service that the person be able to hear and understand the English language.

Subdivisions (3) and (4) supersede G.S. 9-15(c), which is concurrently amended to apply to civil cases only.

Subdivision (5) modifies North Carolina case law, which makes kinship within the ninth degree — by blood — a basis for challenge. The addition of kinship to the victim of the crime as a ground for challenge is new.

Subdivision (8) is primarily intended to codify the rule of Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 88 S. Ct. 1770, 20 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1968), but the Commission broadened the provision to apply generally rather than only to capital cases. It determined that in other situations certain jurors might, regardless of the circumstances, refuse to vote for conviction.

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Mental or Physical Infirmity.
III. Opinion as to Guilt or Innocence.
IV. Inability to Render Verdict in Accordance with Law.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Discretion of Court. — Challenges for cause in jury selection are matters in the discretion of the court and are not reviewable on appeal except for abuse of discretion. State v. Kennedy, 320 N.C. 20, 357 S.E.2d 359 (1987); State v. Mebane, 106 N.C. App. 516, 418 S.E.2d 245, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 670, 424 S.E.2d 414 (1992).

Decisions concerning the excusal of prospective jurors are matters of discretion left to the trial court. State v. Neal, 346 N.C. 608, 487 S.E.2d 734 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1125, 118 S. Ct. 1072, 140 L. Ed. 2d 131 (1998).

When Juror's Answers Conflict. — The trial court did not abuse its discretion in violation of Article I, Sections 19, 23, and 27 of the North Carolina Constitution and this section by excusing for cause a juror who told the prosecutor that he had reasonably strong religious beliefs about the death penalty which he had held for a long period of time; that, because of those beliefs, it would be hard for him to find the death penalty warranted under any circumstances; that his religious beliefs would substantially impair his duty as a juror to recommend to the trial court a punishment of death if the evidence warranted it; even though he also claimed he could follow the law and "go by which one I thought was right, whoever proved the most." State v. Greene, 351 N.C. 562, 528 S.E.2d 575 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1041, 121 S. Ct. 635, 148 L. Ed. 2d 543 (2000).

Relation to Defense Counsel. — It was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion to excuse juror for cause where he was defense counsel's brother-in-law. State v. Exum, 128 N.C. App. 647, 497 S.E.2d 98 (1998).

Standard of Review. — Unless the trial court's ruling on a challenge for cause is required by law, the ruling is reviewable on an abuse of discretion standard, and this section permits a challenge for cause against any prospective juror who "is unable to render a fair and impartial verdict." State v. Carter, 338 N.C. 569, 451 S.E.2d 157 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1107, 115 S. Ct. 2256, 132 L. Ed. 2d 263 (1995).

The holding in Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 106 S.Ct. 1712, 90 L.Ed.2d 69, applies only to peremptory challenges, not challenges for cause. State v. Norwood, 344 N.C. 511, 476 S.E.2d 349 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1158, 117 S. Ct. 1341, 137 L. Ed. 2d 500 (1997).

Section Lists Grounds for Challenges. — Section 15A-1211(b) requires the trial judge to decide all challenges concerning the competency of jurors. This section merely lists the various grounds for making challenges to jurors. State v. Corbett, 309 N.C. 382, 307 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

Defendant's Right Is to Reject Jurors. — A defendant is not entitled to any particular juror; his right to challenge is not a right to select but to reject a juror. State v. Abraham, 338 N.C. 315, 451 S.E.2d 131 (1994).

The function of a challenge for cause is not only to eliminate extremes of partiality on both sides but to assure the parties that the jury before whom they try the case will decide on the basis of the evidence placed before them and not otherwise. The purpose of challenge should be to guarantee not only freedom from any bias against the accused, but also from any prejudice against his prosecution. State v. Wright, 52 N.C. App. 166, 278 S.E.2d 579, cert. denied, 303 N.C. 319 (1981).

Challenges for cause are granted to ensure that defendants are tried by fair, impartial, and unbiased juries. State v. Leonard, 296 N.C. 58, 248 S.E.2d 853 (1978).

Who May Challenge for Cause. — This section expressly overrules older case law that allowed challenge for cause only by the party against whom the opinion was formed or expressed. State v. Wright, 52 N.C. App. 166, 278 S.E.2d 579, cert. denied, 303 N.C. 319 (1981).

Defendant's Use of Peremptory Challenge When Court Refuses to Remove for Cause. — When a defendant has failed to exhaust all his peremptory challenges, he has suffered no prejudice in having to use a peremptory challenge to excuse a juror whom the trial court has refused to excuse for cause. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

Nature of Employment Alone Not Grounds. — An individual should not be excused for cause solely by virtue of the nature of his employment. Such holding might well require exclusion of numerous classes of individuals solely by virtue of employment or membership in voluntary associations which were perceived as indicating some type of predisposition on the part of a prospective juror. State v. Hunt, 37 N.C. App. 315, 246 S.E.2d 159, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 736, 248 S.E.2d 865 (1978).

Employment as Police Officer. — A prospective juror could not be excluded for cause solely by virtue of his employment as a police officer and his exposure to some unspecified information about the case to be tried. State v. Hunt, 37 N.C. App. 315, 246 S.E.2d 159, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 736, 248 S.E.2d 865 (1978).

Exclusion of Panelists from Jury Upheld. — Defendant's contention that the State's exclusion of six black panelists from the jury that tried his case was racially motivated and a violation of various constitutional provisions had no support in the record, where two of the panelists had had brothers who had been charged with cocaine offenses, one knew two of defendant's witnesses, two others knew defendant's parents and one of his attorneys, and the last one knew defendant's family and both of his attorneys. To prevail on such a contention it must be shown, among other things, that the circumstances of the exclusions raise an "inference of racist motivation". State v. Burge, 100 N.C. App. 671, 397 S.E.2d 760 (1990).

Applied in State v. Elkerson, 304 N.C. 658, 285 S.E.2d 784 (1982); State v. McNeil, 99 N.C. App. 235, 393 S.E.2d 123 (1990); State v. Locklear, 331 N.C. 239, 415 S.E.2d 726 (1992); State v. Crummy, 107 N.C. App. 305, 420 S.E.2d 448 (1992); State v. Jennings, 333 N.C. 579, 430 S.E.2d 188 (1993); State v. Green, 336 N.C. 142, 443 S.E.2d 14, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1046, 115 S. Ct. 642, 130 L. Ed. 2d 547 (1994); State v. Williams, 339 N.C. 1, 452 S.E.2d 245 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 833, 116 S. Ct. 109, 133 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1995), overruled in part, State v. Warren, 347 N.C. 309, 492 S.E.2d 609 (1997); State v. Wilkinson, 344 N.C. 198, 474 S.E.2d 375 (1996).

Quoted in State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 125, 362 S.E.2d 513 (1987); State v. Daniels, 337 N.C. 243, 446 S.E.2d 298 (1994); State v. Jaynes, 353 N.C. 534, 549 S.E.2d 179 (2001).

Stated in Keeten v. Garrison, 742 F.2d 129 (4th Cir. 1984); State v. Cunningham, 333 N.C. 744, 429 S.E.2d 718 (1993); State v. Warren, 348 N.C. 80, 499 S.E.2d 431 (1998); State v. Trull, 349 N.C. 428, 509 S.E.2d 178 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 835, 120 S. Ct. 95, 145 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1999).

Williams, 343 N.C. 345, 471 S.E.2d 379 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1061, 117 S. Ct. 695, 136 L. Ed. 2d 618 (1997); State v. Burrus, 344 N.C. 79, 472 S.E.2d 867 (1996).

II. MENTAL OR PHYSICAL INFIRMITY.

Heart Condition. — In a prosecution for first-degree murder and armed robbery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in the denial of defendant's challenge for cause of a 65-year-old juror who stated that she had a history of heart trouble, took medication daily for high blood pressure, utilized nitroglycerin if she experienced pain or became upset, was not sure her health would allow her to sit for more than one day and felt that a trial lasting more than a week would be too strenuous where the trial court fully questioned the juror about her health and observed that the work of a juror was not strenuous, that often veniremen with heart conditions serve on a jury, and that counsel on both sides had agreed that the trial would not last more than a week. State v. Oliver, 302 N.C. 28, 274 S.E.2d 183 (1981).

Where prospective juror had a medical history including coronary bypass surgery and an addiction to Valium and stated that thinking about the case was "bringing the problem back" and stated that the stress of being a prospective juror awakened him in the middle of the night, the trial court properly exercised its discretion in excusing a prospective juror whose health was possibly in jeopardy. State v. Neal, 346 N.C. 608, 487 S.E.2d 734 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1125, 118 S. Ct. 1072, 140 L. Ed. 2d 131 (1998).

Hearing Impairment. — Although it is the better practice for trial judges freely to excuse any juror who has a genuine hearing impairment which in the juror's opinion would hamper his or her ability to perform a juror's duties, the trial judge's failure to do so did not amount to an abuse of his discretion where the juror stated he had understood what the lawyers had said during the voir dire; he had not understood the trial judge at first; he did understand the questions presently being put to him by the judge; and he could raise his hand during the proceeding if anything was said which he did not understand. State v. King, 311 N.C. 603, 320 S.E.2d 1 (1984).

Inability to Follow Instructions. — The granting of a challenge for cause of a juror is within the discretion of the judge; nevertheless where a juror's answers show that he could not follow the law as given to him by the judge in his instructions to the jury, it was error not to excuse the juror. State v. Scales, 114 N.C. App. 735, 443 S.E.2d 124, cert. denied, 337 N.C. 805, 449 S.E.2d 755 (1994).

Brain Tumor and Loss of Memory. — Denial of defendant's challenge for cause to juror whose brain tumor and consequent loss of memory had not interfered with his full-time job as a loan officer and office supervisor and who stated that note-taking would likely compensate for any memory impairment did not constitute an abuse of discretion. State v. Hedgepeth, 350 N.C. 776, 517 S.E.2d 605 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 1274, 146 L. Ed. 2d 223 (2000).

III. OPINION AS TO GUILT OR INNOCENCE.

Subdivision (6) is a codification of the case law which requires that a juror be excused when he is, in the trial judge's opinion, unable to render a fair and impartial verdict because of preconceived opinions as to defendant's guilt or innocence. State v. Wright, 52 N.C. App. 166, 278 S.E.2d 579 (1981); State v. Corbett, 309 N.C. 382, 307 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

Which interpretation is consistent with subdivision (9), which permits a challenge to be made on the grounds that a juror for any other cause is unable to render a fair and impartial verdict. State v. Wright, 52 N.C. App. 166, 278 S.E.2d 579 (1981); State v. Corbett, 309 N.C. 382, 307 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

Jurors who are predisposed with regard to the law or evidence in a case are properly dismissed for cause. State v. Leonard, 296 N.C. 58, 248 S.E.2d 853 (1978).

Juror's Reaction to Nontestifying Defendant. — Where the questioned juror said that he could follow the law as given to him by the court but he repeatedly said the defendant's failure to testify would "stick in the back of [his] mind" while he was deliberating, the court should have allowed defendant's challenge for cause. State v. Hightower, 331 N.C. 636, 417 S.E.2d 237 (1992).

Jurors need not be totally ignorant of the facts and issues involved. State v. Corbett, 309 N.C. 382, 307 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

Notwithstanding a juror's opinion as to how the case should be decided, the juror may still serve if the court determines that the juror could "lay aside his impression or opinion and render a verdict based on the evidence presented in court." State v. Mebane, 106 N.C. App. 516, 418 S.E.2d 245, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 670, 424 S.E.2d 414 (1992).

Ability to Set Aside Opinion. — Even assuming arguendo that prospective juror had formed an opinion as to defendant's culpability, because he stated clearly and unequivocally that he could set aside that opinion and reach a decision based solely on the evidence presented at trial the trial court did not err by denying the challenge for cause. State v. Jaynes, 342 N.C. 249, 464 S.E.2d 448 (1995).

The trial court properly denied the defendant's challenge for cause of a prospective juror where the juror indicated his ability to set aside his opinion and render a verdict based on the law and evidence as presented in court. State v. Wallace, 351 N.C. 481, 528 S.E.2d 326 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1018, 121 S. Ct. 581, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

Ability to Be a Fair and Impartial Juror. — Trial court did not err by denying challenge for cause to a juror who stated, during voir dire for murder case, that he had known a young girl who was murdered and had strong feelings about it which he would take into the jury room because he also said he could be a fair and impartial juror. State v. Perkins, 345 N.C. 254, 481 S.E.2d 25 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 837, 118 S. Ct. 111, 139 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1997).

The court's excusal of a prospective juror for cause was within its discretion and not a violation of defendants' constitutional rights where the juror initially indicated that she could be fair and impartial but then later expressed some doubt as to that. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Prior Knowledge of Case. — To demand dismissal of every prospective juror who had prior knowledge of a case because he kept himself informed of current affairs arguably would require our courts to exclude from service those best qualified to hear and deal with evidence and to understand instructions upon the law. State v. Wright, 52 N.C. App. 166, 278 S.E.2d 579 (1981).

Avidly Following News of Case. — The trial court properly exercised its discretion in denying defendant's challenge for cause, where although the juror testified to having avidly followed the case in the media, she also said she would decide the case without bias, based on the evidence presented at trial and the law as explained by the court. State v. Richardson, 59 N.C. App. 558, 297 S.E.2d 921 (1982), rev'd in part and aff'd in part, 308 N.C. 470, 302 S.E.2d 799 (1983).

Merely Having Heard Case Discussed Not Ground for Challenge for Cause. — The fact that a prospective juror had heard the case to be tried discussed previously was not determinative of his competence to serve as a member of the jury. To exclude all individuals who had prior information concerning a given case from jury duty would, in cases involving extensive publicity, often tend to require the exclusion of most individuals who regularly read newspapers or otherwise kept themselves informed as to current affairs of public note. State v. Hunt, 37 N.C. App. 315, 246 S.E.2d 159, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 295 N.C. 736, 248 S.E.2d 865 (1978).

Jurors' Prior Knowledge of Related Conviction. — Where five jurors challenged for cause said they could set aside their knowledge, based on news media accounts, of defendant's prior first-degree murder conviction and could decide guilt or innocence based solely on evidence presented at trial, the trial court did not err in refusing to excuse them even though the State offered evidence during the trial that the two murders were connected. State v. Sokolowski, 351 N.C. 137, 522 S.E.2d 65 (1999).

Juror's answers need not be completely unequivocal or unambiguous for the judge to make his determination that a juror will base his findings solely upon evidence presented at trial. State v. Wright, 52 N.C. App. 166, 278 S.E.2d 579 (1981).

Generally, a juror who has formed an opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence is not impartial and ought not serve. State v. Corbett, 309 N.C. 382, 307 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

Defendant must prove existence of an opinion in the juror's mind that will raise a presumption of partiality. State v. Corbett, 309 N.C. 382, 307 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

Juror May Serve If He Can Lay Aside Opinion. — If a prospective juror has stated that he has an opinion as to how the case should come out, he may serve if it is established that he can lay aside his impression or opinion and render a verdict based on the evidence presented in court. State v. Corbett, 309 N.C. 382, 307 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

To hold that the mere existence of any preconceived notion as to the guilt or innocence of an accused, without more, is sufficient to rebut the presumption of a prospective juror's impartiality would be to establish an impossible standard. It is sufficient if the juror can lay aside his impression or opinion and render a verdict based on the evidence presented in court. State v. Corbett, 309 N.C. 382, 307 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

The trial court is not required to remove from the panel every potential juror who has any preconceived opinions as to the potential guilt or innocence of a defendant. If the prospective juror, in the trial court's opinion, credibly maintains that he will be able to lay aside his impression or opinion and render a verdict based on the evidence presented in court, then it is not error for the court to deny defendant's motion to remove said juror for cause. State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Where each juror stated without equivocation that she could set aside her prior opinion and try the cases solely on the evidence presented in court, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's challenges for cause of these jurors. State v. Corbett, 309 N.C. 382, 307 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

Thorough Questioning of Jury. — Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to excuse jurors for cause where the record revealed that two potential jurors were thoroughly questioned with regard to whether their familiarity with the case might taint their ability to be fair and impartial in rendering a verdict; their testimony demonstrated a conscientious and deliberate resolve to put familiarity and possible prejudice aside and to abide by the law and the trial court's instructions. State v. Yelverton, 334 N.C. 532, 434 S.E.2d 183 (1993).

Juror with "Sort of" an Opinion Not Automatically Disqualified. — This section does not mandate automatic disqualification of a juror who states he has "sort of" an opinion regarding defendant's guilt or innocence. It provides the basis for making a challenge for cause, and the voir dire examination serves to ascertain whether that cause in fact exists. State v. Wright, 52 N.C. App. 166, 278 S.E.2d 579 (1981).

Trial court erred in denying defendant's challenge for cause where juror clearly stated that she believed defendant was guilty, and that he would have to be proven innocent, and this error was prejudicial where it stripped defendant of a peremptory challenge and prevented him from excusing another unacceptable juror who worked with the victim's brother and whom defendant believed would be sympathetic to the prosecution. State v. Shope, 118 N.C. App. 270, 454 S.E.2d 716 (1995).

IV. INABILITY TO RENDER VERDICT IN ACCORDANCE WITH LAW.

Length of Trial and Financial Concerns Affecting Verdict. — The defendant's challenge for cause should have been allowed pursuant to subdivision (9) of this section where the juror stated that his financial concerns and desire to return to work as soon as possible would weigh on his mind during the trial, would interfere with his ability to pay attention during the trial, and would interfere with his ability to listen to and act on the evidence fairly. State v. Reed, 143 N.C. App. 155, 545 S.E.2d 249 (2001).

Applicability of Subdivision (8). — Subdivision (8) of this section, a codification of the rule in Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 88 S. Ct. 1770, 20 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1968), was intended to apply not only to the death qualification of prospective jurors in capital cases, but also generally to qualifying jurors in all cases. State v. Kennedy, 320 N.C. 20, 357 S.E.2d 359 (1987).

Juror who reveals that he is unable to accept a particular defense or penalty recognized by law is prejudiced to such an extent that he can no longer be considered competent. State v. Leonard, 296 N.C. 58, 248 S.E.2d 853 (1978).

One who is unwilling to accept as a defense, if proved, that which the law recognizes as such should be removed from the jury when challenged for cause. State v. Leonard, 296 N.C. 58, 248 S.E.2d 853 (1978).

New Trial Required Where Jurors Stated They Could Not Acquit for Insanity. — Where jurors in a prosecution for murder stated that they could not acquit the defendant even though her insanity was proven to them, they were committed to disregarding the evidence presented to them as well as the court's instructions on the law arising from that evidence. The failure of the court to dismiss them for cause, coupled with the subsequent exhaustion of the defendant's peremptory challenges, forced her to accept a jury which cannot be considered impartial. For this reason a new trial was required. State v. Leonard, 296 N.C. 58, 248 S.E.2d 853 (1978).

Mandatory Life Term. — In case in which defendant faced mandatory life imprisonment on each of five charges, it was not improper for the trial court to permit the prosecutor to ask prospective jurors whether, if they were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, the mandatory life sentences which would be imposed would prevent them from returning a verdict of guilty. State v. Kennedy, 320 N.C. 20, 357 S.E.2d 359 (1987).

Inability to Impose Death Penalty. — The trial court in a first-degree murder prosecution properly excused for cause prospective jurors who admitted a specific inability to impose the death penalty under any circumstances. State v. Oliver, 302 N.C. 28, 274 S.E.2d 183 (1981).

In a prosecution for first-degree murder and armed robbery where prospective jurors who admitted a specific inability to impose the death penalty under any circumstances were excused for cause, there was no merit in defendants' contention that this "death qualification" jury selection process deprived them of a jury selected from a representative, fair cross-section of the community on the guilt phase of the case. State v. Oliver, 302 N.C. 28, 274 S.E.2d 183 (1981).

Excuse for cause of jurors due to their stated opposition to the death penalty did not deprive defendant of his constitutional rights to trial by a jury representing a cross-section of the community or due process of law. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

It is not unconstitutional to be tried by a "death qualified" juror. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982). See also, Brown v. Dixon, 891 F.2d 490 (4th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1025, 119 S. Ct. 559, 142 L. Ed. 2d 465 (1998), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 953, 110 S. Ct. 2220, 109 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1990).

Where the transcript of the jury voir dire revealed that each juror excused for cause as a result of his or her views on capital punishment clearly indicated that he or she would automatically vote against the imposition of capital punishment without regard to any evidence that might be developed in the present case, the trial court properly excused such jurors for cause. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

In Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 88 S. Ct. 1770, 20 L. Ed. 2d 776, rehearing denied, 393 U.S. 898, 89 S. Ct. 67, 21 L. Ed. 2d 186 (1986), the United States Supreme Court authorized exclusion for cause of a juror if it is established that the juror would automatically vote against the imposition of capital punishment without regard to any evidence that might be developed at the trial of the case. The North Carolina statute which sets forth the grounds for challenging a juror for cause, adopts the Witherspoon test as the basis for excluding jurors who as a matter of conscience, regardless of the facts and circumstances, would be unable to return a verdict imposing the death penalty. State v. Gardner, 311 N.C. 489, 319 S.E.2d 591 (1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1230, 105 S. Ct. 1232, 84 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1985).

Jurors who indicated that they could not vote for the death penalty under any circumstances were properly excused for cause under the requirements of Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 88 S. Ct. 1770, 20 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1968) and this section. State v. Avery, 315 N.C. 1, 337 S.E.2d 786 (1985).

The practice of "death qualifying" juries in capital cases violates neither the United States Constitution nor N.C. Const., Art. I, § 19. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986);

State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Where a contextual reading of a prospective juror's responses on voir dire showed that she could not, under any circumstances, vote to impose the death sentence against anyone, the trial court did not err in excusing this prospective juror for cause. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

The proper standard for determining whether a prospective juror may be excused for cause due to views concerning the death penalty is whether the juror's views would prevent or substantially impair the performance of his duties as a juror in accordance with his instructions and his oath. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

In defendant's trial for murder and robbery, trial court did not err in excusing two jurors for cause where neither could affirmatively agree to follow the law in carrying out his duties as a juror with respect to imposing the death penalty. State v. Davis, 325 N.C. 607, 386 S.E.2d 418 (1989), cert. denied, 496 U.S. 905, 110 S. Ct. 2587, 110 L. Ed. 2d 268 (1990).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing district attorney to ask potential jurors whether they were "strong enough to recommend the death penalty," because this question was intended to elicit information that would indicate whether a challenge for cause was warranted. State v. Smith, 328 N.C. 99, 400 S.E.2d 712 (1991).

It was not error to deny rehabilitation where a prospective juror said she was unable to impose the death penalty whatever the evidence showed. State v. Norwood, 344 N.C. 511, 476 S.E.2d 349 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1158, 117 S. Ct. 1341, 137 L. Ed. 2d 500 (1997).

Based on juror's responses that he could not impose the death penalty on a defendant who did not pull the trigger and given that the venire had been informed by the State that defendant was not present when the murder was committed, the excusal for cause of juror should have been allowed under both subsections (8) and (9) of this section. State v. Bond, 345 N.C. 1, 478 S.E.2d 163 (1996), reh'g denied, 345 N.C. 355, 479 S.E.2d 210, cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1124, 117 S. Ct. 2521, 138 L. Ed. 2d 1022 (1997).

Inability to Impose Death Penalty. — Where four prospective jurors clearly demonstrated their inability to render a verdict in accordance with the laws of the State because of their feelings or opinions about capital punishment, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by granting the State's for-cause challenges. State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in excusing juror because of his perceived inability to follow the law with regard to the possible imposition of capital punishment. State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct. 951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

Juror with Preference for Death Penalty. — The trial court did not err by denying defendant's challenge for cause of juror who according to the defendant had an admitted tendency to "lean more strongly towards the death penalty." State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct. 951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

The trial court acted within its discretion in refusing to remove a juror for cause although the juror knew who the victim was but was not friends with her, although the juror's father knew the victim and the victim's family and although the juror attended a pretrial protest of the delay in bringing the case to trial with his dad. State v. Grooms, 353 N.C. 50, 540 S.E.2d 713 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Prior to selection of jurors, the judge must identify the parties and their counsel and briefly inform the prospective jurors, as to each defendant, of the charge, the date of the alleged offense, the name of any victim alleged in the pleading, the defendant's plea to the charge, and any affirmative defense of which the defendant has given pretrial notice as required by Article 52, Motions Practice. The judge may not read the pleadings to the jury. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This procedure is designed to orient the prospective jurors as to the case, and is discussed in the commentary to G.S. 15A-1221.

To facilitate enforcement of the prohibition against reading the pleadings to jurors, chosen or prospective, and minimize difficulties where courtroom facilities are limited, the Commission contemplates that in most instances arraignment will occur on a different day than the day jurors are called, or else arraignment will be waived pursuant to G.S. 15A-945.

CASE NOTES

Purpose. — The purpose of this section, when read as a whole and considered together with the Official Commentary, is to avoid giving jurors a distorted view of the case through the stilted language of indictments. State v. Laughinghouse, 39 N.C. App. 655, 251 S.E.2d 667, appeal dismissed, 297 N.C. 615, 257 S.E.2d 438 (1979); State v. Hill, 45 N.C. App. 136, 263 S.E.2d 14, cert. denied, 300 N.C. 377, 267 S.E.2d 680 (1980); State v. Shelton, 53 N.C. App. 632, 281 S.E.2d 684 (1981), appeal dismissed, 305 N.C. 306, 290 S.E.2d 707 (1982); State v. Elkerson, 304 N.C. 658, 285 S.E.2d 784 (1982); State v. Leggett, 305 N.C. 213, 287 S.E.2d 832 (1982); State v. Hall, 59 N.C. App. 567, 297 S.E.2d 614 (1982).

The purpose of this section is to orient the prospective jurors as to the case in such a way as to avoid giving jurors a distorted view of the case through use of the stilted language of indictments and other pleadings. State v. Long, 58 N.C. App. 467, 294 S.E.2d 4 (1982).

Nothing in this section requires the court to instruct prospective jurors concerning the presumption of innocence. State v. Cummings, 346 N.C. 291, 488 S.E.2d 550 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1092, 118 S. Ct. 886, 139 L. Ed. 2d 873 (1998).

This section does not require the judge to inform the jury of the elements of each crime, but only requires the jury to be informed of the charges pending against defendant. State v. Styles, 93 N.C. App. 596, 379 S.E.2d 255 (1989).

Nor does this section require a trial court to divulge a defendant's theory of the case to the venire. State v. Miller, 339 N.C. 663, 455 S.E.2d 137, rehearing denied, 340 N.C. 118, 458 S.E.2d 183 (1995).

Nothing in this section requires the court to instruct prospective jurors about sentences a defendant may have received for other offenses, either related or unrelated to the crime for which the jurors ultimately selected will recommend sentencing. State v. Payne, 337 N.C. 505, 448 S.E.2d 93 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1038, 115 S. Ct. 1405, 131 L. Ed. 2d 292 (1995).

Summary of Indictment Does Not Violate Section. — The trial judge did not improperly refer to the bills of indictment returned against defendant while informing prospective jurors about the case where the judge summarized the indictments and explained to the jury the circumstances under which defendant was being tried. State v. McNeil, 47 N.C. App. 30, 266 S.E.2d 824, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 102, 273 S.E.2d 306 (1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 915, 101 S. Ct. 1356, 67 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1981).

Trial court, as directed by this section, may refer to and summarize an indictment when explaining to the jury the circumstances under which defendant is being tried. State v. Shelton, 53 N.C. App. 632, 281 S.E.2d 684 (1981), appeal dismissed, 305 N.C. 306, 290 S.E.2d 707 (1982).

Where the trial court merely drew information from the bills of indictment to the extent necessary to identify the defendant and explain the charges against him and the circumstances under which he was being tried, the trial court did not commit error. State v. Leggett, 305 N.C. 213, 287 S.E.2d 832 (1982).

The trial judge did not violate this section or § 15A-1221(a)(2) by advising the prospective jurors that defendant had been accused in a bill of indictment returned by a grand jury alleging that he broke and entered a certain building and that when he did so he had the intent to commit larceny. State v. Chambers, 52 N.C. App. 713, 280 S.E.2d 175 (1981).

Trial judge did not read from the indictments, but instead summarized the indictments in order to explain the charges to the jury. Such summarization is permissible and is in fact necessary to inform the jurors of the circumstances surrounding case against defendant, as required by this section. State v. Tilley, 100 N.C. App. 588, 397 S.E.2d 368 (1990).

Reading Indictment to Prospective Jurors. — Defendant was not entitled to a new trial because the trial court read the bill of indictment to all the prospective and eventual jurors during jury selection, where the trial court drew from the indictment the name of the defendant, the name of the victim, the date of the crime, and the elements of the charge for which defendant was being tried. State v. Knight, 340 N.C. 531, 459 S.E.2d 481 (1995).

Reading of Indictment as Part of Jury

Charge. — The prohibition against reading the pleadings to the jury is inapplicable to the judge's jury charge. State v. McNeil, 47 N.C. App. 30, 266 S.E.2d 824, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 102, 273 S.E.2d 306 (1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 915, 101 S. Ct. 1356, 67 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1981); State v. Whitley, 58 N.C. App. 539, 293 S.E.2d 838, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 306 N.C. 750, 295 S.E.2d 763 (1982).

The reading to the jury by the trial judge of a portion of the indictment as part of the charge after the close of the evidence was not a violation of this section where it would in no way serve the purpose of this section to avoid giving the jurors a distorted view of the case. State v. Laughinghouse, 39 N.C. App. 655, 251 S.E.2d 667, appeal dismissed, 297 N.C. 615, 257 S.E.2d 438 (1979); State v. Allen, 50 N.C. App. 173, 272 S.E.2d 785 (1980), appeal dismissed, 302 N.C. 399, 279 S.E.2d 353 (1981).

The trial judge does not violate this section by reading a portion of the indictment to the jury as a part of his charge after the close of the evidence. However, reading the indictments at the very beginning of the trial is the very evil sought to be prevented, giving the jury a distorted view of the case through the stilted language of indictments, and constitutes prejudicial error. State v. Hall, 59 N.C. App. 567, 297 S.E.2d 614 (1982).

Inaccurate Paraphrasing of Charge. — In a prosecution under § 14-32, where the court made the statement that defendant was charged with the "North Carolina equivalent of attempted murder" at the very beginning of defendant's trial, which was not repeated in the court's charge to the jury, and the statement was an apparent attempt to paraphrase a portion of the indictment, while it cannot be said that the trial court gave the jury a distorted view of the case through the use of the "stilted" language of the indictment, a distorted view was given through the use of an inaccurate and misleading paraphrase. "Intent to kill" and "attempted murder" do not mean the same thing. State v. Hall, 59 N.C. App. 567, 297 S.E.2d 614 (1982).

Defining Legal Terms Not Required. — There is no requirement that the trial court, during the brief introduction of the case to prospective jurors, define any of the legal terms used or to be used in the case. State v. Ball, 344 N.C. 290, 474 S.E.2d 345 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1180, 117 S. Ct. 1457, 137 L. Ed. 2d 561 (1997).

Asking Defense Counsel About Affirmative Defenses. — In a criminal prosecution, there was no merit to the defendant's contention that the trial judge erred by asking defense counsel in the presence of the jury whether there were any affirmative defenses of which counsel wished the judge to inform the jury, since the trial judge merely insured that defendant exercised his opportunity to bring forward any affirmative defense he might have. State v. Berry, 51 N.C. App. 97, 275 S.E.2d 269, cert. denied, 303 N.C. 182, 280 S.E.2d 454 (1981).

Evidence regarding defendant's mental state at the time of the crime is not an affirmative defense for which defendant bears the burden of proof; thus under this section the trial court has no statutory duty to inform the jury about such anticipated expert testimony. State v. Miller, 339 N.C. 663, 455 S.E.2d 137, rehearing denied, 340 N.C. 118, 458 S.E.2d 183 (1995).

Failure to Instruct on Affirmative Defense. — Trial court committed error in declining, in violation of this section, to inform prospective jurors of the presumption of spousal coercion as an affirmative defense, but its many curative steps ameliorated any prejudice the defendant may have suffered. State v. Owen, 133 N.C. App. 543, 516 S.E.2d 159 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 117, 540 S.E.2d 743 (1999).

Instruction That Insanity Defense Not in Fact Presented. — Where defendant filed notice of intent to raise the defense of insanity, as required by § 15A-959, and, pursuant to this section, the judge informed prospective jurors of the possibility that defendant might rely on the affirmative defense of insanity, it was proper at the close of all the evidence for the trial judge to inform the jurors that the insanity defense indeed had not been presented in order to eliminate any idea the jury might have had that they were still to consider the defense. State v. Hart, 44 N.C. App. 479, 261 S.E.2d 250 (1980).

§ 15A-1214. Selection of jurors; procedure.

(a) The clerk, under the supervision of the presiding judge, must call jurors from the panel by a system of random selection which precludes advance knowledge of the identity of the next juror to be called. When a juror is called and he is assigned to the jury box, he retains the seat assigned until excused.

(b) The judge must inform the prospective jurors of the case in accordance with G.S. 15A-1213. He may briefly question prospective jurors individually or as a group concerning general fitness and competency to determine whether there is cause why they should not serve as jurors in the case.

(c) The prosecutor and the defense counsel, or the defendant if not represented by counsel, may personally question prospective jurors individually concerning their fitness and competency to serve as jurors in the case to determine whether there is a basis for a challenge for cause or whether to exercise a peremptory challenge. The prosecution or defense is not foreclosed from asking a question merely because the court has previously asked the same or similar question.

(d) The prosecutor must conduct his examination of the first 12 jurors seated and make his challenges for cause and exercise his peremptory challenges. If the judge allows a challenge for cause, or if a peremptory challenge is exercised, the clerk must immediately call a replacement into the box. When the prosecutor is satisfied with the 12 in the box, they must then be tendered to the defendant. Until the prosecutor indicates his satisfaction, he may make a challenge for cause or exercise a peremptory challenge to strike any juror, whether an original or replacement juror.

(e) Each defendant must then conduct his examination of the jurors tendered him, making his challenges for cause and his peremptory challenges. If a juror is excused, no replacement may be called until all defendants have indicated satisfaction with those remaining, at which time the clerk must call replacements for the jurors excused. The judge in his discretion must determine order of examination among multiple defendants.

(f) Upon the calling of replacement jurors, the prosecutor must examine the replacement jurors and indicate satisfaction with a completed panel of 12 before the replacement jurors are tendered to a defendant. Only replacement jurors may be examined and challenged. This procedure is repeated until all parties have accepted 12 jurors.

(g) If at any time after a juror has been accepted by a party, and before the jury is impaneled, it is discovered that the juror has made an incorrect statement during voir dire or that some other good reason exists:

(1) The judge may examine, or permit counsel to examine, the juror to determine whether there is a basis for challenge for cause.

(2) If the judge determines there is a basis for challenge for cause, he must excuse the juror or sustain any challenge for cause that has been made.

(3) If the judge determines there is no basis for challenge for cause, any party who has not exhausted his peremptory challenges may challenge the juror.

Any replacement juror called is subject to examination, challenge for cause, and peremptory challenge as any other unaccepted juror.

(h) In order for a defendant to seek reversal of the case on appeal on the ground that the judge refused to allow a challenge made for cause, he must have:

(1) Exhausted the peremptory challenges available to him;

(2) Renewed his challenge as provided in subsection (i) of this section; and

(3) Had his renewal motion denied as to the juror in question.

(i) A party who has exhausted his peremptory challenges may move orally or in writing to renew a challenge for cause previously denied if the party either:

(1) Had peremptorily challenged the juror; or

(2) States in the motion that he would have challenged that juror peremptorily had his challenges not been exhausted.

The judge may reconsider his denial of the challenge for cause, reconsidering facts and arguments previously adduced or taking cognizance of additional facts and arguments presented. If upon reconsideration the judge determines that the juror should have been excused for cause, he must allow the party an additional peremptory challenge.

(j) In capital cases the trial judge for good cause shown may direct that jurors be selected one at a time, in which case each juror must first be passed by the State. These jurors may be sequestered before and after selection. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

In comparing notes, members of the Commission discovered that procedures for selecting jurors varied from district to district, and decided there would be a virtue in spelling out a uniform system. The Commission recognized that absolute uniformity would not be possible because of differences in size of caseloads, physical facilities, and the like. Some counties use a jury pool; others do not. For this reason the Commission deliberately refrained from attempting to draft any definition of the jury "panel."

The Commission considered an alternative draft to subsections (e) and (f) in which the defense would be required to examine replacement jurors and tender a full panel of 12 back to the State, but chose the procedure in this section by a divided vote. Experienced defense attorneys on the Commission differed as to which of the two procedures they preferred.

Prior case law required that a party must not only exhaust his peremptory challenges but must also attempt to challenge one more juror in order to preserve his right to appeal. The Commission thought this to be an extremely undesirable requirement since, in most cases, the juror attempted to be challenged would remain on the jury. Therefore, the Commission devised the new procedure set out in subsection (i) to allow renewal of a challenge in writing so the juror would not be aware of it, and further provided for restoration of a previously used challenge if there are grounds for reconsideration. In this latter event the challenge would be to some other juror — an attempt to exercise the peremptory challenge which the party asserts should be restored to him. In most cases it is assumed the judge will deny restoration of the challenge, and the party will then be able to appeal the judge's action in refusing to allow the prior challenge for cause. If, of course, the judge does grant the additional challenge, then the party will have no basis for appeal as to that particular challenge. See subsection (h).

The Commission visualized that the written renewal of challenge may be made by a simple form showing the name of the juror as to whom the challenge for cause was denied, and containing space for the party to set out briefly the basis for the challenge.

Subsection (g) only speaks to the procedure applicable before the jury is empanelled. There is a problem as to the procedure to be followed if a question as to a juror's fitness arises during trial while there is an alternate juror available to replace him. See State v. Kirkman, 293 N.C. 447, 238 S.E.2d 456 (1977) which was decided after the Commission's draft was submitted. Cf. G.S. 15A-1215.

While the Commission did not intend in subsection (j) to authorize individual selection of jurors in every capital case, an obvious illustration of "good cause" for such selection would exist when pretrial publicity required individual examination of jurors in order not to expose the remainder of the panel to the prior knowledge of the juror being questioned. The reference to sequestration was included to make sure that the judge's powers are spelled out for highly sensitive cases, but it should be noted that G.S. 15A-1236(b) gives the judge plenary authority as to sequestration.

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Authority of Trial Judge.
III. Questioning of Prospective Jurors.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under § 9-21, which formerly governed jury selection.

Right to Impartial Jury. — The basic concept in jury selection is that each party to a trial has the right to present his cause to an unbiased and impartial jury. State v. Carey, 285 N.C. 497, 206 S.E.2d 213 (1974).

The State, like the defendant in a criminal case, is entitled to a jury all members of which are free from a preconceived determination to vote contrary to its contention concerning the defendant's guilt of the offense for which he is being tried. State v. Williams, 286 N.C. 422, 212 S.E.2d 113 (1975).

Compliance with the Random Selection Requirement. — The failure of a new, computer-generated system of summoning prospective jurors did not taint the selection of jurors or require that the selection be suspended until the system was examined for compliance with the law where the court, because of concerns with the system, ordered the clerk to call jurors by the old system which satisfied the random-selection requirement of this section. State v. Smith, 352 N.C. 531, 532 S.E.2d 773 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1419, 149 L. Ed. 2d 360 (2001).

Right to Challenge. — Every criminal, charged with a crime affecting his life, has a right to challenge a certain number of jurors, without assigning any cause, and as many more as he can assign a good cause for. State v. Patrick, 48 N.C. 443 (1856).

The jury selection system permits parties to protect themselves against prejudice by allowing them to exclude unacceptable jurors. State v. Hedgepeth, 66 N.C. App. 390, 310 S.E.2d 920 (1984).

Each defendant is entitled to full opportunity to face the prospective jurors, make diligent inquiry into their fitness to serve, and to exercise his right to challenge those who are objectionable to him. State v. Hedgepeth, 66 N.C. App. 390, 310 S.E.2d 920 (1984).

Where defendant did not renew his challenge for cause of any of the prospective jurors whose previous challenge for cause had been denied, defendant failed to comply with subsection (h) and failed to preserve the issue for appellate review. State v. Ball, 344 N.C. 290, 474 S.E.2d 345 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1180, 117 S. Ct. 1457, 137 L. Ed. 2d 561 (1997).

Defendant cannot demonstrate prejudice in the jury selection process if he does not exhaust his peremptory challenges. State v. Hyde, 352 N.C. 37, 530 S.E.2d 281 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1114, 121 S. Ct. 862, 148 L. Ed. 2d 775 (2001).

Additional Challenges. — This section allows the trial court, for good cause, to examine and excuse a juror already accepted by a party; however, this statute does not afford additional peremptory challenges after a previously accepted juror is removed for cause. State v. Dickens, 346 N.C. 26, 484 S.E.2d 553 (1997).

Purpose of the voir dire examination and the exercise of challenges, either peremptory or for cause, is to eliminate extremes of partiality and to assure both the defendant and the State that the persons chosen to decide the guilt or innocence of the accused will reach that decision solely upon the evidence produced at trial. State v. Honeycutt, 285 N.C. 174, 203 S.E.2d 844 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3205, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1207 (1976).

Whether to grant individual voir dire is within the sound discretion of the trial court and its ruling will not be disturbed absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Ward, 338 N.C. 64, 449 S.E.2d 709 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1134, 115 S. Ct. 2014, 131 L. Ed. 2d 1012 (1995), cert. denied, 343 N.C. 757, 473 S.E.2d 626 (1996), cert. denied, 354 N.C. 74, — S.E.2d — (2001).

A trial court is not required to permit individual voir dire of jurors in a capital case. State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

Challenge May Be Peremptory or for Cause. — A person charged with crime may, when called upon to plead to the bill of indictment, challenge the array; or he may, after his plea, challenge individual jurors for cause or peremptorily. State v. Rorie, 258 N.C. 162, 128 S.E.2d 229 (1962).

A challenge to the poll (to each prospective juror) may be peremptory within the limits allowed by law, or for cause without limit if cause is shown. State v. Allred, 275 N.C. 554, 169 S.E.2d 833 (1969).

A defendant on trial has the right to reject any juror for cause or within the limits of his peremptory challenges before the panel is completed. State v. Carey, 285 N.C. 497, 206 S.E.2d 213 (1974).

Reasonable limitations on per emptory challenge procedure may be fixed, so long as the right itself is not taken away. Indeed, although the matter is one of discretion, the general rule is that after a jury is impaneled, the parties have waived their rights to challenge peremptorily a juror. State v. McLamb, 313 N.C. 572, 330 S.E.2d 476 (1985).

But Party Has No Right to Select Jurors. — It is well established that the system by which juries are selected does not include the right of any party to select certain jurors but to permit parties to protect themselves against prejudice by allowing them to exclude unacceptable jurors. State v. Woods, 286 N.C. 612, 213 S.E.2d 214 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3207, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1208

An accused is not entitled to a jury of his choice. State v. McKenna, 289 N.C. 668, 224 S.E.2d 537, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 912, 97 S. Ct. 301, 50 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1976).

And defendant has no vested right to a particular juror. State v. Woods, 286 N.C. 612, 213 S.E.2d 214 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3207, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1208 (1976), overruled on other grounds, State v. Worsley, 336 N.C. 268, 443 S.E.2d 68 (1994); State v. McKenna, 289 N.C. 668, 224 S.E.2d 537, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 912, 97 S. Ct. 301, 50 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1976).

Person has no right to be indicted or tried by a jury of his own race or even to have a representative of his own race on the jury; he does have the constitutional right to be tried by a jury from which members of his own race have not been systematically and arbitrarily excluded. State v. Shelton, 53 N.C. App. 632, 281 S.E.2d 684 (1981), appeal dismissed, 305 N.C. 306, 290 S.E.2d 707 (1982).

When Challenge Should Be Made. — The time for a prisoner to make his challenge, is when the juror is tendered, and before the juror is sworn, or the oath is commenced. State v. Patrick, 48 N.C. 443 (1856).

Defendant Has Last Opportunity to Challenge. — The defendant has the last opportunity to exercise his right of challenge when the State had all pertinent information concerning the fitness and competency of the juror before he was tendered to the defendant. State v. Harris, 283 N.C. 46, 194 S.E.2d 796, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 850, 94 S. Ct. 143, 38 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1973); State v. Bock, 288 N.C. 145, 217 S.E.2d 513 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3208, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1209 (1976).

Obvious purpose is to protect defendants by giving them the last opportunity to challenge a venireman. State v. Bock, 288 N.C. 145, 217 S.E.2d 513 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3208, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1209 (1976).

Compliance with provisions for renewal of challenges for cause is a mandatory predicate to defendant's right to assert this argument on appeal. State v. Quick, 329 N.C. 1, 405 S.E.2d 179 (1991).

Defendant cannot wait until the jury has returned a verdict of guilty to challenge the competency of the jury to determine the question. State v. Rorie, 258 N.C. 162, 128 S.E.2d 229 (1962).

Challenge of Juror Previously Accepted by State. — Nothing prohibited the trial court, in the exercise of its discretion, before the jury was impaneled, from allowing the State to challenge peremptorily or for cause a prospective juror previously accepted by the State and tendered to the defendant. State v. McKenna, 289 N.C. 668, 224 S.E.2d 537, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 912, 97 S. Ct. 301, 50 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1976).

Right to Challenge Juror When Examination Is Reopened. — The decision to reopen the examination of a juror previously accepted by the parties is within the sound discretion of the trial court, and once the examination of a juror has been reopened, the parties have an absolute right to exercise any remaining peremptory challenges to exercise such juror. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

Preserving Exception to Acceptance of Juror Challenged for Cause. — Where the court has refused to stand aside a juror challenged for cause, and the party has then peremptorily challenged him, in order to get the benefit of his exception he must exhaust his remaining peremptory challenges, and then challenge another juror peremptorily to show his dissatisfaction with the jury, and except to the refusal of the court to allow it. State v. Allred, 275 N.C. 554, 169 S.E.2d 833 (1969).

In order to preserve an exception to the court's rulings on challenges to the polls, the appellant must exhaust his peremptory challenges and thereafter undertake to challenge an additional juror. State v. Young, 287 N.C. 377, 214 S.E.2d 763 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 903, 96 S. Ct. 3207, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1208 (1976).

In a prosecution for murder the defendant properly preserved her exception to the court's denial of her challenge for cause by (1) exhausting her peremptory challenges and (2) thereafter asserting her right to challenge peremptorily an additional juror. State v. Leonard, 296 N.C. 58, 248 S.E.2d 853 (1978).

When the trial court denied defendant's challenge of a juror for cause, defendant having failed to exercise his remaining peremptory challenge and having accepted the juror instead, defendant therefore failed to preserve his exception to the denial of his challenge for cause. State v. Richardson, 59 N.C. App. 558, 297 S.E.2d 921 (1982), rev'd in part and aff'd in part, 308 N.C. 470, 302 S.E.2d 799 (1983).

A defendant has not been prejudiced by the acceptance of a juror who is challenged for cause and the cause is disallowed unless he exhausts his peremptory challenges before the panel is completed. State v. Allred, 275 N.C. 554, 169 S.E.2d 833 (1969).

Where defendant had a peremptory challenge available to him at the time he challenged a juror for cause but did not use it, he did not preserve the ruling on the challenge for cause for appellate review. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 417, 347 S.E.2d 7 (1986).

The statutory method for preserving a defendant's right to seek appellate relief when a trial court refuses to allow a challenge for cause is mandatory and is the only method by which such rulings may be preserved for appellate review. State v. Goode, 350 N.C. 247, 512 S.E.2d 414 (1999).

Defendant did not preserve his exception to the ruling on his challenge for cause for appellate review where he—after using a peremptory challenge to remove a juror whom he believed the court should have excused for cause, being denied his request for additional peremptory challenges, and announcing that he was satisfied with the last seated juror—failed to renew his earlier challenge for cause to said juror. State v. Roseboro, 351 N.C. 536, 528 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1019, 121 S. Ct. 582, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

Preserving Exception to Excusing of Prospective Juror. — If defense counsel desires to take exception to the act of the court in excusing a prospective juror, he should either enter into a stipulation with the State setting out in detail the reason for excusing the juror, or he should include a transcript of the voir dire examination as to that juror in the case on appeal. State v. Fowler, 285 N.C. 90, 203 S.E.2d 803 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3212, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1212 (1976).

If a juror is rejected upon an improper ground of challenge, made by the State, the prisoner cannot assign it for error, if a jury is obtained before he has exhausted his peremptory challenges. State v. Potts, 100 N.C. 457, 6 S.E. 657 (1888); State v. Sultan, 142 N.C. 569, 54 S.E. 841 (1906).

By failing to comply with the procedure made mandatory by the statute, defendant in a prosecution for murder failed to preserve any purported error by the trial court in refusing to allow his challenge of prospective jurors for cause for appellate review. State v. Moseley, 338 N.C. 1, 449 S.E.2d 412 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1091, 115 S. Ct. 1815, 131 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1995).

Acquaintance with Prospective Witnesses Insufficient to Require Challenge for Cause. — Defendant's contention that the trial judge erred in denying his challenge for cause to a juror was without merit where this juror knew four of the police officers who were prospective witnesses for the state, and although the defendant searched diligently during voir dire to discover some indication that the juror would be partial to these witnesses, the juror unequivocally stated repeatedly that his acquaintance with them would not affect his verdict in any way and there was no evidence to the contrary; there being no showing of prejudice on the part of the juror, his mere acquaintance with the officers was insufficient to find the trial judge's ruling erroneous. State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988).

Where the record was clear that potential juror ultimately felt she could put her feelings about her friend's murder aside and give the defendant a fair trial based solely on the evidence presented at trial, the trial court's denial of defendant's challenge for cause was not error. State v. House, 340 N.C. 187, 456 S.E.2d 292 (1995).

Necessity of Exhausting Peremptory Challenges Under Subsection (h). — Where defendant exercised only six of the fourteen peremptory challenges permitted him under § 15A-1217(a)(1), because he did not exhaust his peremptory challenges as provided by subsection (h) of this section, no prejudice had been shown as to the juror who remained on the panel. State v. Quesinberry, 319 N.C. 228, 354 S.E.2d 446 (1987) vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, 328 N.C. 288, 401 S.E.2d 632 (1991).

Where defendant only used 13 of his 14 peremptory challenges during jury voir dire, leaving one remaining peremptory challenge which he could have used to strike juror defendant did not comply with statute; therefore, he did not preserve his right to appeal on that issue. State v. McNeil, 324 N.C. 33, 375 S.E.2d 909 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1050, 110 S. Ct. 1516, 108 L. Ed. 2d 756 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Where defendant did not exhaust his peremptory challenges as provided by subsection (h) of this section, no prejudice was shown in court's refusing to allow him to elicit from a certain juror the opinion expressed to the juror by friends about defendant's guilt or innocence. State v. Avery, 315 N.C. 1, 337 S.E.2d 786 (1985).

Defendant satisfied the mandates of subsection (h) of this section by (1) exhausting his peremptory challenges, (2) renewing his challenge for cause as to a juror who stated that she believed defendant would need to prove his innocence to avoid conviction on the charge of first-degree murder, and (3) having that renewed challenge denied by the trial court. State v. Cunningham, 333 N.C. 744, 429 S.E.2d 718 (1993).

Defendant satisfied the mandates of subsection (h) by (1) challenging the prospective juror for cause, which the trial court denied; (2) exhausting his peremptory challenges; and (3) renewing his challenge for cause as to juror above, which the trial court also denied. State v. Hartman, 344 N.C. 445, 476 S.E.2d 328 (1996),

The verb tense in subdivision (i)(2) of this section refers to a time before the renewal motion is made; it does not refer to the time at which the renewal is being made. Had the legislature intended to refer to the time at which the motion is being made, subdivision (i)(2) would read: "States in the motion that he would challenge the juror peremptorily were his challenges not then exhausted." Subdivision (i)(2) refers back to the time at which the unsuccessful challenge for cause was made. It contemplates a situation where there were no peremptories available at that time. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 417, 347 S.E.2d 7 (1986).

Subdivisions (i)(1) and (i)(2) Require Exercise of Available Peremptory Challenges. — Subdivisions (i)(1) and (i)(2), read together, require a party who has peremptory challenges available when a challenge for cause is denied to exercise a peremptory challenge to remove the unwanted juror. A party who fails to do so cannot thereafter bring himself within either subdivision (i)(1) or (i)(2). State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 417, 347 S.E.2d 7 (1986).

Failure to Pass Full Panel Not Prejudicial. — Although the jury selection procedure violated the express requirement of this section that the state pass a full panel of twelve jurors, the defendant failed to show prejudice where he was not forced to accept an undesirable juror—he did not exhaust his peremptory challenges nor request removal of the juror for cause—and, thus, could not establish any prejudice as a result of the jury selection procedure under § 15A-1443(c). State v. Lawrence, 352 N.C. 1, 530 S.E.2d 807 (2000).

Defendant's statutory rights were not infringed merely because State and codefendant had removed jurors before she began her voir dire examination. She still had the right to exercise her 14 peremptory challenges and to exert her right to challenge for cause. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

Selection of jury where voir dire began with only 11 members of the jury venire held harmless error where defendant exercised only two of the peremptory challenges available to him. State v. Campbell, 51 N.C. App. 418, 276 S.E.2d 726 (1981).

Oral Arguments Not Required Before Final Ruling by Court. — Although fundamental fairness would seem to require it, at least when a proper and timely request therefor is made, this section does not specifically mandate the receipt and consideration of oral arguments prior to the entry of final rulings by the trial court. State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

Mandatory Method for Preserving Rulings for Review. — The statutory method for preserving a defendant's right to seek appellate relief when a trial court refuses to allow a challenge for cause is mandatory and is the only method by which such rulings may be preserved for appellate review. State v. Sanders, 317 N.C. 602, 346 S.E.2d 451 (1986).

Where defendants at no time sought to renew any of their previously denied challenges for cause, they failed to comply with subsections (h) and (i) of this section and were not entitled to any relief on appeal as a result of alleged errors by the trial court in denying their challenges for cause. State v. Sanders, 317 N.C. 602, 346 S.E.2d 451 (1986).

Defendant exhausted his peremptories but did not renew his challenge for cause. State v. Carter, 335 N.C. 422, 440 S.E.2d 268 (1994).

The standard for determining whether a potential juror may be excluded for cause because of his views on capital punishment is whether the juror's views would "prevent or substantially impair the performance of his duties as a juror in accordance with his instructions and his oath." State v. Brown, 327 N.C. 1, 394 S.E.2d 434 (1990).

Failure to Show Discrimination. — Where the record indicated that defendant failed to make a prima facie showing of discrimination and there were no suggestions of racial animus within the prosecutor's articulated motives for challenging the two veniremen, the assignment of error relating to selection of the petit jury was overruled on appeal. State v. Attmore, 92 N.C. App. 385, 374 S.E.2d 649 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 248, 377 S.E.2d 757 (1989).

Failure to Show Prejudice. — When a defendant has expressed satisfaction at trial with the jurors who actually considered his case and fails to show on appeal that any such juror was unable to be fair and impartial, the defendant has failed entirely to show possible prejudice from the denial of his challenges for cause and is entitled to no relief. State v. Sanders, 317 N.C. 602, 346 S.E.2d 451 (1986).

Exclusion of Panelists from Jury Upheld. — Defendant's contention that the State's exclusion of six black panelists from the jury that tried the case was racially motivated and a violation of various constitutional provisions had no support in the record, where two had had brothers who had been charged with cocaine offenses, one knew two of defendant's witnesses, two others knew defendant's parents and one of his attorneys, and the last one knew defendant's family and both of his attorneys. To prevail on such a contention it must be shown, among other things, that the circumstances of the exclusions raise an "inference of racist motivation." State v. Burge, 100 N.C. App. 671, 397 S.E.2d 760 (1990).

Defendants were neither prejudiced by the use of panels in the jury selection process nor by the trial court's placement of three specific jurors into specific panels, where neither defendant objected to the placement and neither exhausted all of his peremptory challenges, and where one of the jurors was subsequently excused for cause on a challenge by defendants while the other two were never called for questioning. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Restriction in Error. — Restriction prohibiting defendant from asking questions previously asked by the court violated subsection (c) and was error. State v. Conner, 335 N.C. 618, 440 S.E.2d 826 (1994), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 876, 118 S. Ct. 196, 139 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1997).

Refusal to Excuse Juror Not Error. — Where prospective juror, after initially indicating he felt first-degree murderers should receive the death penalty, stated he could consider both possible sentences and would follow the law, trial court's refusal to excuse him for cause was not error. State v. Walls, 342 N.C. 1, 463 S.E.2d 738 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1197, 116 S. Ct. 1694, 134 L. Ed. 2d 794 (1996).

Defendant must first establish that the trial judge abused his discretion in denying defendant's challenge for cause under subsections (h) and (i), and defendant then also must establish that he was prejudiced by such error. State v. Hartman, 344 N.C. 445, 476 S.E.2d 328 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1201, 117 S. Ct. 1562, 137 L. Ed. 2d 708 (1997).

Failure to comply with § 15A-1211 prevented appeal of the court's possible violation of this section. State v. Meyer, 353 N.C. 92, 540 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Challenge to the random selection of the jurors based on an alleged violation of this section was not preserved where defendant failed to comply with § 15A-1211. State v. Cummings, 353 N.C. 281, 543 S.E.2d 844 (2001).

II. AUTHORITY OF TRIAL JUDGE.

Power of Trial Judge. — The trial judge has the power to closely regulate and supervise the selection of a jury to the end that the defendant and the State be given the benefit of a trial by a fair and impartial jury. State v. Harris, 283 N.C. 46, 194 S.E.2d 796, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 850, 94 S. Ct. 143, 38 L. Ed. 99 (1973).

The trial judge has the power to closely regulate and supervise the selection of the jury to the end that both the defendant and the State might receive a fair trial before an impartial jury. This discretion in the trial judge does not terminate at the impanelment of the jury. State v. Brady, 299 N.C. 547, 264 S.E.2d 66 (1980).

Presiding judge has the duty to supervise the examination of prospective jurors and to decide all questions relating to their competency. State v. Phillips, 300 N.C. 678, 268 S.E.2d 452 (1980).

Supervisory Duties. — The trial court has the duty to supervise the examination of prospective jurors and to decide all questions relating to their competency. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

Discretion of Trial Court. — Decision as to a juror's competency at the time of selection and his continued competency to serve are matters resting in the trial judge's sound discretion and are not subject to review unless accompanied by some imputed error of law. State v. McKenna, 289 N.C. 668, 224 S.E.2d 537, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 912, 97 S. Ct. 301, 50 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1976).

Regulation of the manner and extent of the inquiry of a prospective juror concerning his fitness rests largely in the trial court's discretion and will not be found to constitute reversible error unless harmful prejudice and clear abuse of discretion are shown. State v. Hunt, 37 N.C. App. 315, 246 S.E.2d 159, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 295 N.C. 736, 248 S.E.2d 865 (1978).

The right of the defendant to inquire into the fitness of jurors is subject to the close supervision of the trial court, and the extent of the inquiry lies within the court's discretion. State v. McDougald, 38 N.C. App. 244, 248 S.E.2d 72 (1978), appeal dismissed, 296 N.C. 413, 251 S.E.2d 472 (1979).

The trial judge has broad discretion to see that a competent, fair and impartial jury is impaneled and rulings of the trial judge in this regard will not be reversed absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Phillips, 300 N.C. 678, 268 S.E.2d 452 (1980).

Although it is the better practice for trial judges freely to excuse any juror who has a genuine hearing impairment which in the juror's opinion would hamper his or her ability to perform a juror's duties, the trial judge's failure to do so did not amount to an abuse of his discretion where the juror stated he had understood what the lawyers had said during the voir dire; he had not understood the trial judge at first; he did understand the questions presently being put to him by the judge; and he could raise his hand during the proceeding if anything was said which he did not understand. State v. King, 311 N.C. 603, 320 S.E.2d 1 (1984).

The trial judge, who questioned a juror about her relationship with the state's witness, and received assurances that the juror would have no difficulty in rendering a fair and impartial verdict despite that relationship, was acting well within his discretionary powers when he denied the defendant the opportunity to exercise his remaining peremptory challenge after the jury was impaneled. State v. McLamb, 313 N.C. 572, 330 S.E.2d 476 (1985).

After a jury has been impaneled, further challenge of a juror is a matter within the trial judge's discretion. A ruling committed to a trial court's discretion is to be upset only upon a showing that it was so arbitrary that it could not have been the result of a reasoned decision. State v. McLamb, 313 N.C. 572, 330 S.E.2d 476 (1985).

Whether to grant sequestration and individual voir dire of prospective jurors rests in the sound discretion of the trial court and its ruling will not be disturbed absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

The trial court has broad discretion to see that a competent, fair and impartial jury is impaneled and rulings in this regard will not be reversed absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

The decision whether to reopen the examination of a passed juror is within the sound discretion of the trial court. State v. Womble, 343 N.C. 667, 473 S.E.2d 291 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1095, 117 S. Ct. 775, 136 L. Ed. 2d 719 (1997).

The decision to reopen voir dire rests in the trial court's discretion. State v. Bond, 345 N.C. 1, 478 S.E.2d 163 (1996), reh'g denied, 345 N.C. 355, 479 S.E.2d 210, cert. denied, 521 U.S. 1124, 117 S. Ct. 2521, 138 L. Ed. 2d 1022 (1997).

A trial court's ruling on the issue of individual voir dire will not be disturbed absent an abuse of discretion. State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 876, 118 S. Ct. 196, 139 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1024, 118 S. Ct. 1309, 140 L. Ed. 2d 473 (1998).

Discretion of Trial Court in Capital Case. — In a capital case, both the State and the defendant are entitled to inquire into a prospective juror's beliefs and attitudes regarding capital punishment, so that both sides may be assured a fair trial before an impartial jury. The trial court, however, is vested with broad discretion in controlling the extent and manner of such inquiry, and its decision will not be disturbed absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 109 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Discretion Under Subsection (j). — The provision of subsection (j) of this section vests in the trial judge discretion to allow individual voir dire and sequestration of jurors during voir dire. It is well settled in North Carolina that the trial judge has broad discretion to see that a competent, fair and impartial jury is impaneled and rulings of the trial judge in this regard will not be reversed absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 355, 259 S.E.2d 752 (1979).

Subsection (j) does not grant either party any absolute right. The decision whether to grant sequestration and individual voir dire of prospective jurors rests in the sound discretion of the trial court and its ruling will not be disturbed absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Wilson, 313 N.C. 516, 330 S.E.2d 450 (1985); State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 109 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Motions for individual voir dire and jury sequestration are directed to the discretion of the trial judge. The exercise of this discretion will not be reversed on appeal absent a showing of abuse. State v. Reese, 319 N.C. 110, 353 S.E.2d 352 (1987), overruled on other grounds, State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997).

Denial of a capital murder defendant's motion for individual voir dire of prospective jurors was not an abuse of discretion, even though defendant argued that the pretrial publicity was so great that it was reasonably likely that prospective jurors would make a decision based on pretrial information instead of evidence presented at trial. State v. Bonnett, 348 N.C. 417, 502 S.E.2d 563 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1124, 119 S. Ct. 909, 142 L. Ed. 2d 907 (1999).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying individual voir dire during selection of a sentencing jury in a capital murder case, even though many prospective jurors admittedly had read or heard about the case prior to trial, where the record did not reveal selection of any juror who indicated that he or she would have difficulty setting aside any pretrial impressions, and challenges for cause were appropriately granted whenever any prospective juror stated that he or she could not set aside preconceived notions. State v. Atkins, 349 N.C. 62, 505 S.E.2d 97 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1147, 119 S. Ct. 2025, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1999).

Subsection (c) does not preempt the exercise of the court's discretion during jury selection; it remains the court's prerogative to expedite jury selection by requiring general questions to be posed to the whole panel. State v. Campbell, 340 N.C. 612, 460 S.E.2d 144 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1128, 116 S. Ct. 946, 133 L. Ed. 2d 871 (1996).

Excuse of Juror Without Challenge by Party. — It is the duty of the trial judge to see that a competent, fair and impartial jury is impaneled, and to that end the judge may, in his discretion, excuse a prospective juror even without challenge from either party. State v. McKenna, 289 N.C. 668, 224 S.E.2d 537, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 912, 97 S. Ct. 301, 50 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1976).

There was no error in the trial court's removal of juror for cause where she was visibly upset about her child's sickness, was in tears while explaining her situation to the trial judge and stated that she was distracted by her child's sickness and that she was sitting there thinking about it. State v. Fisher, 336 N.C. 684, 445 S.E.2d 866 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1098, 115 S. Ct. 768, 130 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1995).

Duty of Judge When Jury Aware of Improper and Prejudicial Matters. — When there is substantial reason to fear that the jury has become aware of improper and prejudicial matters, the trial court must question the jury as to whether such exposure has occurred and, if so, whether the exposure was prejudicial. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

The trial judge did not err in refusing to allow defendant to rehabilitate certain jurors before ruling on the prosecutor's challenge for cause on Witherspoon grounds, where although defendant claimed that these jurors had apparently changed their minds, rendering their positions on the death penalty "ambiguous," and that examination by defendant could have clarified these "ambiguities," defendant made no showing that additional questioning might have produced different answers, and his only attempt at rehabilitation was unsuccessful. State v. Reese, 319 N.C. 110, 353 S.E.2d 352 (1987), overruled on other grounds, State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997).

Reopening Examination After Acceptance by Both Parties. — Prior to the impaneling of the jury, it is within the discretion of the trial judge to reopen the examination of a juror, previously passed by both the State and the defendant, and to excuse such juror upon challenge, either peremptory or for cause, and there is no reason for the termination of this discretion in the trial judge at the impanelment of the jury. State v. Kirkman, 293 N.C. 447, 238 S.E.2d 456 (1977); State v. Parton, 303 N.C. 55, 277 S.E.2d 410 (1981), overruled by State v. Freeman, 314 N.C. 432, 333 S.E.2d 743 (1985), to the extent that it gives the trial court discretion to allow or refuse permission to defendant to use one of his peremptory challenges once the trial court has decided to reopen the examination.

The decision whether to reopen examination of a juror previously accepted by both the State and defendant and to excuse such juror either peremptorily or for cause is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Parton, 303 N.C. 55, 277 S.E.2d 410 (1981), overruled by State v. Freeman, 314 N.C. 432, 333 S.E.2d 743 (1985), to the extent that it gives the trial court discretion to allow or refuse permission to defendant to use one of his peremptory challenges once the trial court has decided to reopen the examination.

This section gives the trial judge the discretion to reopen the voir dire examination of a juror even if he has previously been accepted by both the State and the defendant. The judge is also given statutory discretion to allow a party to exercise an unused peremptory challenge. State v. Miller, 61 N.C. App. 1, 300 S.E.2d 431 (1983).

The intent of the Legislature in adopting subsection (g) was that the trial court have discretion as to whether to reopen examination of a juror under certain specific conditions, but that the parties have an absolute right to exercise any remaining peremptory challenges to excuse such a juror once the trial court in its discretion reopened the examination. State v. Freeman, 314 N.C. 432, 333 S.E.2d 743 (1985).

Deviations Not a Violation of This Section. — No violation of this section occurred where the record disclosed that no confusion or error resulted from any deviation from the prescribed statutory procedure, the defendant specifically requested or consented to such deviation, and the trial court's jury selection method did not disadvantage or prejudice him. State v. Hyde, 352 N.C. 37, 530 S.E.2d 281 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1114, 121 S. Ct. 862, 148 L. Ed. 2d 775 (2001).

III. QUESTIONING OF PROSPECTIVE JURORS.

A party moving for a new trial grounded upon misrepresentation by a juror during voir dire must show: (1) the juror concealed material information during voir dire; (2) the moving party exercised due diligence during voir dire to uncover the information; (3) and the juror demonstrated actual bias or bias implied as a matter of law that prejudiced the moving party. State v. Buckom, 126 N.C. App. 368, 485 S.E.2d 319 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 973, 118 S. Ct. 425, 139 L. Ed. 2d 326 (1998).

Whether to allow sequestration and individual voir dire is a matter for the trial court's discretion, and its ruling will not be reversed absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983); State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986); State v. Soyars, 332 N.C. 47, 418 S.E.2d 480 (1992); State v. Fleming, 350 N.C. 109, 512 S.E.2d 720 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 941, 120 S. Ct. 351, 145 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1999).

Subsection (j) of this section gives neither party an absolute right to sequestration and individual voir dire of prospective jurors. Such decision rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and the court's ruling will not be disturbed absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. State v. Murphy, 321 N.C. 738, 365 S.E.2d 615 (1988).

A trial court's ruling on whether to grant sequestration and individual voir dire of prospective jurors will not be disturbed on appeal absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. State v. Lyons, 340 N.C. 646, 459 S.E.2d 770 (1995).

Whether to grant individual voir dire is within the sound discretion of the trial court, whose ruling will not be disturbed on appeal absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Sexton, 336 N.C. 321, 444 S.E.2d 879, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1006, 115 S. Ct. 525, 130 L. Ed. 2d 429 (1994), 343 N.C. 516, 472 S.E.2d 23 (1996); State v. Trull, 349 N.C. 428, 509 S.E.2d 178 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 835, 120 S. Ct. 95, 145 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1999).

Collective Voir Dire. — The defendant's arguments that collective voir dire made the prospective jurors aware of prejudicial matters, inhibited the candor of the jurors, and permitted the prospective jurors to become "educated" as to responses which enabled them to be excused from the panel were properly rejected as mere speculation. State v. Wilson, 313 N.C. 516, 330 S.E.2d 450 (1985).

Harm of Collective Voir Dire. — The burden is on defendant to show harm to him that resulted from his being required to question jurors collectively. State v. Trull, 349 N.C. 428, 509 S.E.2d 178 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 835, 120 S. Ct. 95, 145 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1999).

General Questions to Panel as a Whole. — It remains the prerogative of the court to expedite jury selection by requiring certain general questions to be submitted to the panel as a whole. State v. Phillips, 300 N.C. 678, 268 S.E.2d 452 (1980); State v. Gray, 322 N.C. 457, 368 S.E.2d 627 (1988).

Questions About Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — The prosecutor's questions to prospective jurors during voir dire did not stake the jurors to the proposition that they would weigh aggravating circumstances more heavily than mitigating circumstances, where the prosecutor asked if jurors could weigh the significance to be given to aggravating and mitigating circumstances rather than the relative number of aggravators and mitigators. State v. Fletcher, 348 N.C. 292, 500 S.E.2d 668 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1180, 119 S. Ct. 1118, 143 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1999).

Prosecutor could ask jurors whether, if aggravating factors outweighed mitigating factors and were sufficiently substantial, the jurors could impose the death penalty, because the question did not presume evidentiary facts nor require that jurors pledge themselves to a position under any given set of evidentiary facts. State v. Fletcher, 348 N.C. 292, 500 S.E.2d 668 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1180, 119 S. Ct. 1118, 143 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1999).

Question as to Verdict Juror Would Render. — The trial court should not permit counsel to question prospective jurors as to the kind of verdict they would render or how they would be inclined to vote, under a given state of facts. State v. Hunt, 37 N.C. App. 315, 246 S.E.2d 159, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 295 N.C. 736, 248 S.E.2d 865 (1978); State v. Parks, 324 N.C. 420, 378 S.E.2d 785 (1989).

Although the prosecutor could seek to determine if the juror would automatically vote for the death penalty, it was improper to attempt to learn what verdict the juror would render if a particular aggravating factor was found. State v. Fletcher, 348 N.C. 292, 500 S.E.2d 668 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1180, 119 S. Ct. 1118, 143 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1999).

Question as to Whether Jurors Would Be Sympathetic to Defendant Who Was Intoxicated at Time of Offense. — Where the prosecutor in a murder case asked several prospective jurors whether they would be sympathetic toward a defendant who was intoxicated at the time of the offense, the questions were properly allowed as an inquiry into the jurors' sympathies toward an intoxicated person. The questions did not contain incorrect or inadequate statements of law, nor were they ambiguous or confusing; they did not tend to "stake out" the jurors as to their potential verdict or to ask how they would vote under a given state of facts, and the questions did not fish for answers to legal questions before the judge had instructed the jury. State v. McKoy, 323 N.C. 1, 372 S.E.2d 12 (1988), death sentence vacated and case remanded, McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Question as to Whether Victim's HIV-positive Status Would Prejudice Defendant. — Where the evidence of defendant's guilt was overwhelming, and his attorney conceded his guilt during closing arguments, the possibility of juror prejudice against defendant from the victim's HIV-positive status did not rise to the level of fundamental unfairness; the trial court's ruling that defendant could not directly pursue this line of questioning unless the victim's HIV-positive status was revealed in the answer of a prospective juror did not violate defendant's rights. State v. Knight, 340 N.C. 531, 459 S.E.2d 481 (1995).

Question of whether any of the jurors felt defendant had to be guilty of some offense simply because he fired a gun which resulted in the death of another person was indistinguishable from questions generally allowed on voir dire, e.g., "Do you think the defendant must be guilty simply because he is charged with a crime?", and should have been allowed. State v. Parks, 92 N.C. App. 181, 374 S.E.2d 138 (1988).

Courts must review entire record of jury voir dire when determining propriety of jury voir dire questions, rather than just isolated questions. State v. Davy, 100 N.C. App. 551, 397 S.E.2d 634 (1990).

Racial Statement During Voir Dire. — Where a prospective juror, on voir dire, made racially biased statement in presence of other prospective jurors, defendant's motion to dismiss all prospective jurors who had heard the racial comment was properly denied where the statement did not give rise to a substantial fear that the jury had been prejudiced. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

Statement By Prospective Juror Held Not To Prejudice Other Prospective Jurors. — The mere fact that the prospective juror referred to an assault committed by a black male, combined with the fact that the defendant was a black male, did not present the trial court with any substantial reason to fear that other prospective jurors who heard the statement would be prejudiced against the defendant. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

Question of whether a juror's attitude about conviction or acquittal would adversely affect her in the deliberation process was proper under the circumstances and should have been allowed. State v. Parks, 92 N.C. App. 181, 374 S.E.2d 138 (1988).

View on Death Penalty as Basis for Excusal for Cause. — Where one juror expressed his belief that every murderer should receive the death sentence; but upon assuring the trial court that he could and would follow the court's instructions and remain open-minded regarding the appropriate sentence, he was seated as a juror, and the other potential juror expressed his uncertainty about whether he could impose the death penalty, even if he were instructed to do so by the court, under the standard in Wainwright v. Witt, 469 U.S. 412, 105 S. Ct. 844, 83 L. Ed. 2d 841 (1985) and Adams v. Texas, 448 U.S. 38, 100 S. Ct. 2521, 65 L. Ed. 2d 581 (1980), the first was properly not excused for cause; the second was properly so excused. State v. Quesinberry, 319 N.C. 228, 354 S.E.2d 446 (1987) vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, 328 N.C. 288, 401 S.E.2d 632 (1991).

Voir Dire Properly Reopened. — Where statements attributed to juror raised the possibility that juror had not been candid when she told the court on voir dire that she could consider the death penalty, the information established good reason to reopen voir dire to inquire into whether juror made the statements and, if so, whether these beliefs would prevent or substantially impair her performance as a juror. State v. Holden, 346 N.C. 404, 488 S.E.2d 514 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1126, 118 S. Ct. 1074, 140 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1998).

Likelihood That State Would Carry Out Execution. — Trial court did not err in sustaining the State's objection to defendant's question as to whether a juror did or did not feel that the State would carry out an execution, as defendant failed to show that the inclusion of such a juror would deprive him of a fair and unbiased jury. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 109 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Statement by a prospective juror that she could never vote to impose the death penalty regardless of the evidence is, in effect, a refusal to perform one's duties as a juror in accordance with the capital sentencing statute, and is therefore sufficient to support excusal for cause. State v. Brown, 327 N.C. 1, 394 S.E.2d 434 (1990).

Hypothetical Question Tending to Commit Juror to Decision. — The trial court properly sustained an objection to a hypothetical question which could not reasonably be expected to result in an answer bearing upon a juror's qualifications, but rather would tend to commit the juror to a decision on the performance of his duties prior to an instruction by the court with regard to their proper performance pursuant to law. State v. Hunt, 37 N.C. App. 315, 246 S.E.2d 159, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 295 N.C. 736, 248 S.E.2d 865 (1978).

Juror's Training Affecting his Judgment as to Credibility. — The trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to excuse potential juror for cause where the juror's responses during voir dire indicated that he would not automatically give enhanced credence to testimony by any particular class of witness, but rather, certain factors in the witness's background, such as training or experience, would affect the credibility of that witness. State v. McKinnon, 328 N.C. 668, 403 S.E.2d 474 (1991).

Fact that defense counsel was forced to ask certain questions relating to the insanity of the jury panel as a whole did not negate the opportunity to adequately base use of peremptory challenges upon identification of prejudiced or biased jurors, where the questions were answered individually by the jurors where necessary. State v. Allen, 322 N.C. 176, 367 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Expression of Wish to Continue Questioning. — When a defendant peremptorily challenges some prospective jurors but wishes to continue asking questions of those remaining in the panel before passing them back to the prosecution, he must inform the trial court that he wishes to continue questioning the remaining prospective jurors. Hence, where defendant failed to object to trial court's statement that he must pass on remaining prospective jurors or to clarify that he was asking to continue questioning them rather than expressing uncertainty about the jury selection procedure, the court reasonably interpreted defendant's comment to be an expression of confusion about the jury selection procedure and the court's statement that defendant had to pass on the remaining jurors was not error. State v. Conaway, 339 N.C. 487, 453 S.E.2d 824, cert. denied, 516 U.S. 884, 116 S. Ct. 223, 133 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1995).

Where the trial court ruled from the outset that no questions would be allowed if they had been previously asked of and answered by the juror in question, court erred since its ruling had the effect of preventing the defendant from asking questions solely because jurors had previously been asked the same questions. State v. Jones, 336 N.C. 490, 445 S.E.2d 23 (1994).

Trial court erred in preventing defendant's counsel from asking jurors questions, solely because the trial court had previously asked the same or similar questions; however, the defendant did not suffer any resulting prejudice. State v. Jones, 336 N.C. 490, 445 S.E.2d 23 (1994).

Refusal to Allow Questioning. — When challenges for cause are supported by prospective jurors' answers to questions propounded by the prosecutor and by the court, the court does not abuse its discretion, at least in the absence of a showing that further questioning by defendant would likely have produced different answers, by refusing to allow defendant to question the juror challenged. State v. Oliver, 302 N.C. 28, 274 S.E.2d 183 (1981).

Where, after the jury was impanelled, defense counsel asked that a question he had asked a prospective juror during voir dire and the court's ruling sustaining the state's objection to the question be noted on the record, but the entire jury voir dire was not transcribed or made a part of the record, it was impossible for the court to tell on appeal whether the trial court erred in sustaining this objection. State v. Davy, 100 N.C. App. 551, 397 S.E.2d 634 (1990), finding neither abuse nor prejudice in the courts' ruling.

Questions posed did not amount to a proper inquiry as to whether the jurors could base their decision solely on the evidence presented at trial, but were an attempt by the defense counsel to "stake out" the prospective jurors on how they would react to potential publicity during the trial and the possibility of facing critical public opinion if the verdict, either guilty or not guilty, was not popular, the questions were not likely to result in answers relevant to a juror's qualification to serve; the trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the prosecutor's objections to defendant's questions. State v. White, 340 N.C. 264, 457 S.E.2d 841 (1995).

Jurors Conceptions of Parole Eligibility. — A court does not err by refusing to allow voir dire concerning prospective jurors' conceptions of the parole eligibility of a defendant serving a life sentence. State v. Smith, 347 N.C. App. 453, 496 S.E.2d 357 (1998).

Decision whether to grant sequestration and individual voir dire of prospective jurors rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and its ruling will not be disturbed absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. State v. Short, 322 N.C. 783, 370 S.E.2d 351 (1988).

Jury Voir Dire Need Not Be Conducted Individually in All Capital Cases. — Where, in a prosecution for conspiracy to commit burglary, second-degree burglary, robbery with a dangerous weapon, and first-degree murder, the defendant failed to identify any reasonable grounds upon which the trial court could have determined that there was good cause for granting his motion for sequestration and individual voir dire of prospective jurors and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the defendant's motion since there was no precedent for the defendant's suggestion that the jury voir dire must be conducted individually in all capital cases. State v. Short, 322 N.C. 783, 370 S.E.2d 351 (1988).

Prejudice Not Shown. — The defendant failed to demonstrate how he was prejudiced by a procedure used by the trial court to subdivide the jury venire into panels from which prospective jurors were called for individual voir dire. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Abuse of Discretion Not Shown. — Where the trial judge clearly intimated that district court facilities and trial schedule would not permit the sequestration and individual voir dire of prospective jurors, and defendant failed to establish that the jury selection process resulted in the "contamination" of other jurors by information from jurors previously exposed to pretrial publicity, defendant failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion by denying the motion for sequestration and individual voir dire of the prospective jurors. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

Defendant failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion in denying a request for individual voir dire and sequestration of prospective jurors where 146 potential jurors had to be examined, the trial judge allowed selective individual voir dire whenever defendant requested it, and each juror who decided the case stated they had no preconceived opinions and could give the defendant a fair trial based on the evidence. State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), overruled in part State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 900, 118 S. Ct. 248, 139 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1997).

Where both the court and the defense attorney questioned juror about his relationship with the State's witness, and juror stated unequivocally that the acquaintance would not affect his ability to remain fair and impartial, there was no abuse of discretion in the trial judge's denial of defendant's motion to withdraw juror. State v. Harris, 323 N.C. 112, 371 S.E.2d 689 (1988).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in restricting individual voir dire of jurors, allowing defense counsel to question in detail only those individual jurors who responded to questions of the whole panel and seemed to favor the death penalty. State v. Payne, 328 N.C. 377, 402 S.E.2d 582 (1991).

In capital murder case that received substantial publicity, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's request for individual voir dire of potential jurors. State v. Davis, 340 N.C. 1, 455 S.E.2d 627, cert. denied, 516 U.S. 846, 116 S. Ct. 136, 133 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1995).

There was no abuse of discretion in denying individual jury voir dire where defendant's motion did not set forth any grounds upon which the trial court could have found that there was "good cause" to grant individual jury voir dire. State v. Ball, 344 N.C. 290, 474 S.E.2d 345 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1180, 117 S. Ct. 1457, 137 L. Ed. 2d 561 (1997).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing only one of defendant's two attorneys to question prospective jurors. State v. Fullwood, 343 N.C. 725, 472 S.E.2d 883 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1122, 117 S. Ct. 1260, 137 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1997).

Where defendant failed to identify any particular harm resulting from his having to question each of the prospective jurors in the presence of the others, he failed to demonstrate that the trial court abused its discretion by denying his motion for individual jury selection. State v. Gregory, 348 N.C. 203, 499 S.E.2d 753 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 952, 119 S. Ct. 382, 142 L. Ed. 2d 315 (1998).

Defendant was not entitled to sequestration and individual voir dire because prospective jurors did not truthfully answer questions during voir dire, where one juror was excused because he knew the victim's family and two others stated that they could not impose the death penalty. State v. Fleming, 350 N.C. 109, 512 S.E.2d 720 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 941, 120 S. Ct. 351, 145 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1999).

Individual Voir Dire Not Required. — Court did not err in allowing the State to present evidence that the victim was a police officer; therefore, there was no need for individual voir dire to prevent prospective jurors from learning that information. State v. Larry, 345 N.C. 497, 481 S.E.2d 907 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 917, 118 S. Ct. 304, 139 L. Ed. 2d 234 (1997).

(a) The judge may permit the seating of one or more alternate jurors. Alternate jurors must be sworn and seated near the jury with equal opportunity to see and hear the proceedings. They must attend the trial at all times with the jury, and obey all orders and admonitions of the judge. When the jurors are ordered kept together, the alternate jurors must be kept with them. If before final submission of the case to the jury, any juror dies, becomes incapacitated or disqualified, or is discharged for any other reason, an alternate juror becomes a juror, in the order in which selected, and serves in all respects as those selected on the regular trial panel. Alternate jurors receive the same compensation as other jurors and, unless they become jurors, must be discharged upon the final submission of the case to the jury.

(b) In all criminal actions in which one or more defendants is to be tried for a capital offense, or enter a plea of guilty to a capital offense, the presiding judge shall provide for the selection of at least two alternate jurors, or more as he deems appropriate. The alternate jurors shall be retained during the deliberations of the jury on the issue of guilt or innocence under such restrictions, regulations and instructions as the presiding judge shall direct. In case of sequestration of a jury during deliberations in a capital case, alternates shall be sequestered in the same manner as is the trial jury, but such alternates shall also be sequestered from the trial jury. In no event shall more than 12 jurors participate in the jury's deliberations. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1979, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The Commission determined that it would be preferable to restate the procedure concerning alternate jurors in this Article rather than to continue allowing G.S. 9-18 to apply to all cases. As has been noted previously, an amendment restricts G.S. 9-18 to civil cases. The only changes of importance are those effected in other sections: limiting peremptory challenges to one per alternate juror (G.S. 15A-1217(c)) and selection of alternate jurors before the act of impaneling the jury (G.S. 15A-1216).

CASE NOTES

Legislative Intent. — The General Assembly did not intend that an alternate can be substituted for a juror after the jury has begun its deliberations. State v. Bunning, 346 N.C. 253, 485 S.E.2d 290 (1997).

Capital Cases. — Subsection (a) of this section does apply to capital cases; thus, an alternate juror may not be substituted for an incapacitated juror after the case has been submitted to the jury. State v. Bunning, 346 N.C. 253, 485 S.E.2d 290 (1997).

New Sentencing Hearing Required. — A trial by a jury which is improperly constituted is so fundamentally flawed that the verdict cannot stand; thus, defendant was entitled to a new sentencing hearing where an alternate juror was substituted for a juror who was dismissed after participating in half a day of deliberations. State v. Bunning, 346 N.C. 253, 485 S.E.2d 290 (1997).

Replacing Juror for Explained Absence. — There is no abuse of discretion in replacing a juror with an alternate juror upon an explained absence of the original juror. State v. Carr, 54 N.C. App. 309, 283 S.E.2d 175 (1981).

Disqualification and Replacement of Juror for Lack of Attention. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion in disqualifying a juror on grounds of "lack of attention" and substituting an alternate juror at the conclusion of the final arguments of counsel and court was not required to explain what was meant by "lack of attention." State v. Barbour, 43 N.C. App. 38, 258 S.E.2d 72 (1979), cert. denied, 299 N.C. 122, 261 S.E.2d 924 (1980).

Replacing Juror Who Contacted Defense Counsel at Home. — The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in removing a juror and substituting the alternate juror where the original juror contacted defense counsel at his home during the week-end recess and persisted in discussing matters of a personal nature, including counsel's marital status, and though there was no evidence that any matter which related to the trial of defendant was discussed during the conversation, the exercise of discretion by the trial judge served to safeguard the trial of defendant from even the appearance of impropriety. State v. Price, 301 N.C. 437, 272 S.E.2d 103 (1980).

Replacing Juror After Excluding Defendant from In Camera Hearing. — While it is clearly error for the trial court to communicate with a juror in chambers and in the absence of defendant, counsel, or a court reporter, not every violation of a constitutional right is prejudicial. Where the record of an in camera hearing attended only by a juror, the trial judge, counsel, and a court reporter reflected the benign substance of the conversation — the juror's growing unease with her ability to impose the death penalty — and where after the hearing the juror was promptly and properly removed for cause, obviating the possibility that anything said to her privately by the trial court might infect the jury as a whole, the court's action was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Replacing Juror Who Overheard Something About Case. — Conversation between a juror and the court which related to the juror's having "overheard something about the case," could not have influenced the verdict, because this juror was removed from the case prior to deliberations, and no remaining juror indicated that he or she had overheard anything about the case. State v. Harrington, 335 N.C. 105, 436 S.E.2d 235 (1993).

Replacing Juror Who Had Child Care Problems. — Where judge contacted juror by phone, in the presence of counsel but outside the presence of defendant, to inquire about juror's inability to attend court, any error was harmless, and there was no abuse of discretion in the judge's decision to replace that juror, who had child care problems. State v. Davis, 325 N.C. 607, 386 S.E.2d 418 (1989), cert. denied, 496 U.S. 905, 110 S. Ct. 2587, 110 L. Ed. 2d 268 (1990).

Challenging a Juror After Impanelment. — While there is no statutory provision covering the situation when a party seeks to challenge a juror after impanelment, subsection (a) allows the trial court to replace a juror with an alternate juror should the original one become disqualified or be discharged for some reason. State v. Richardson, 341 N.C. 658, 462 S.E.2d 492 (1995).

Replacing Juror for Medical Reasons. — Trial judge exercised his discretion when he excused pregnant juror for medical reasons, in spite of his noting, "Well, I don't see that I have much choice." State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

Trial judge has broad discretion in supervising the selection of the jury, to the end that both the State and the defendant may receive a fair trial. This discretionary power to regulate the composition of the jury continues beyond empanelment. It is within the trial court's discretion to excuse a juror and substitute an alternate at any time before final submission of the case to the jury panel. These kinds of decisions relating to the competency and service of jurors are not reviewable on appeal absent a showing of abuse of discretion, or some imputed legal error. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Premature Selection of Foreperson. — Court found no violation of subsection (a) of this section or of the defendant's constitutional rights under N.C. Const., Article I, Section 24, when twelve jurors prematurely selected a foreperson while alternates were still present in the jury room, because they made no deliberations nor had any other conversation regarding the facts of the case. State v. Parker, 350 N.C. 411, 516 S.E.2d 106 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084, 120 S. Ct. 808, 145 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2000).

Presence of Alternate Held Not Prejudicial. — Although the presence of an alternate juror in the jury room during deliberations constitutes reversible error per se, presence of alternate when jury was sent out so that counsel could argue for corrections to the charge and when jurors selected a foreman was not prejudicial error. State v. Jernigan, 118 N.C. App. 240, 455 S.E.2d 163 (1995).

§ 15A-1216. Impaneling jury.

After all jurors, including alternate jurors, have been selected, the clerk impanels the jury by instructing them as follows: "Members of the jury, you have been sworn and are now impaneled to try the issue in the case of State of North Carolina versus _____. You will sit together, hear the evidence, and render your verdict accordingly." (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Impaneling the jury is an especially critical stage in criminal cases as jeopardy attaches at this point. The Commission believed that there should be no doubt concerning the procedure, and therefore drafted this section.

Given variance of customs in different districts, members of the Commission were not certain of all points of the customary procedure to mark the impaneling of the jury — for example, whether accomplished by the judge or the clerk — but Commission members did seem positive that the panel as such takes no additional oath.

The Commission believes it would be desirable for a parallel statute to be enacted applying to the process of impaneling the jury in civil cases, perhaps to be codified in Chapter 9 of the General Statutes, but the Commission did not submit such a draft as this exceeds the scope of its mandate.

§ 15A-1217. Number of peremptory challenges.

(a) Capital cases.
  (1) Each defendant is allowed 14 challenges.
  (2) The State is allowed 14 challenges for each defendant.
(b) Noncapital cases.
  (1) Each defendant is allowed six challenges.
  (2) The State is allowed six challenges for each defendant.
(c) Each party is entitled to one peremptory challenge for each alternate juror in addition to any unused challenges. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Upon the recommendation of the Commission, G.S. 9-21 is repealed and the substance of that section is treated here. A companion amendment to G.S. 9-18 on alternate jurors makes that section apply only to civil cases.

In equalizing the number of peremptory challenges granted each side, the Commission followed the lead of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. Uniform Rules, Rule 512(d). Accord, National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals, Report on the Courts, Standard 4.13 (1973). Giving an equal number of challenges to each side is the practice in most states. A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury, Commentary to § 2.6, at 75. See also Fed. Rules Crim. Proc. 24(b) (as amended effective August 1, 1976).

Subsection (c) makes a substantive change in that it provides for one peremptory challenge for each alternate juror rather than the two challenges allowed by G.S. 9-18 in civil cases.

II. Number of Challenges.
III. Capital Cases.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under § 9-21, which formerly governed jury selection.

"Peremptory Challenge" Defined. — Peremptory challenges are challenges which may be made or omitted according to the judgment, will, or caprice of the party entitled thereto, without assigning any reason therefor, or without being required to assign a reason therefor. State v. Allred, 275 N.C. 554, 169 S.E.2d 833 (1969); State v. Noell, 284 N.C. 670, 202 S.E.2d 750 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 902, 96 S. Ct. 3203, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1205 (1976); State v. Carey, 285 N.C. 497, 206 S.E.2d 213 (1974); State v. Smith, 291 N.C. 505, 231 S.E.2d 663 (1977).

Peremptory challenges are challenges that may be made according to the judgment of the party entitled thereto. State v. Fowler, 285 N.C. 90, 203 S.E.2d 803 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3212, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1212 (1976).

The right to challenge veniremen peremptorily is equally bestowed on the State and the defendant by this section. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

A party's reason for challenging a juror peremptorily cannot be inquired into. The law gives the litigant the right to object to a number of jurors without assigning cause. State v. Allred, 275 N.C. 554, 169 S.E.2d 833 (1969).

The reason for challenging a juror peremptorily cannot be inquired into. State v. Fowler, 285 N.C. 90, 203 S.E.2d 803 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3212, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1212 (1976).

The essential nature of the peremptory challenge denotes that it is a challenge exercised without a reason stated, without inquiry and without being subject to the court's control. In other words, the peremptory challenge permits rejection for a real or imagined partiality, and an examination of the prosecutor's reasons for the exercise of his challenges in any given case is not permitted. State v. Smith, 291 N.C. 505, 231 S.E.2d 663 (1977).

A peremptory challenge may be exercised without a stated reason and without being subject to the control of the court. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

Examination of Reason for Challenge Not Constitutionally Required. — In the light of the purpose of the peremptory system and the function it serves in a pluralistic society in connection with the institution of jury trial, the Constitution does not require an examination of the prosecutor's reasons for the exercise of his challenges in any given case, even where defendant alleged that the peremptory challenges were used to exclude blacks from the jury. State v. Lynch, 300 N.C. 534, 268 S.E.2d 161 (1980).

The use of a peremptory challenge by one party does not unfairly prejudice the opposing party's position in the jury selection process. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

Right of peremptory challenge is not a right to select but to exclude. State v. Smith, 24 N.C. 402 (1842); State v. Banner, 149 N.C. 519, 63 S.E. 84 (1908).

Right to Challenge Juror When Examination Is Reopened. — The decision to reopen the examination of a juror previously accepted by the parties is within the sound discretion of the trial court, and once the examination of a juror has been reopened, the parties have an absolute right to exercise any remaining peremptory challenges to excuse such a juror. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

Wide Latitude Allowed in Interrogation of Jurors. — In order to permit intelligent exercise of peremptory challenges wide latitude must be allowed counsel in the interrogation of prospective jurors. State v. Williams, 286 N.C. 422, 212 S.E.2d 113 (1975).

Use of Peremptory Challenge Where Challenge for Cause Erroneously Denied. — Where the trial court in a capital case erroneously disallowed defendant's challenge for cause of a prospective juror, and defendant exercised all of his peremptory challenges, including one for the juror for whom the challenge for cause was erroneously disallowed, the trial court's refusal to allow defendant to challenge peremptorily an additional juror on the ground that defendant had exhausted his peremptory challenges is a denial of defendant's right to challenge fourteen jurors peremptorily without cause. State v. Allred, 275 N.C. 554, 169 S.E.2d 833 (1969).

Waiver of Objection to Number Allowed. — Assuming arguendo that defendant was entitled to 14 peremptory challenges, he waived his right to complain when he used only five peremptory challenges. State v. Clark, 18 N.C. App. 621, 197 S.E.2d 605 (1973).

Selection of jury where voir dire began with only 11 members of the jury venire held harmless error where defendant exercised only two of the peremptory challenges available to him. State v. Campbell, 51 N.C. App. 418, 276 S.E.2d 726 (1981).

Where defendant did not exhaust his peremptory challenges, as provided by § 15A-1214(h), no prejudice was shown in court's refusing to allow defendant to elicit from a certain juror the opinion expressed to the juror by friends about defendant's guilt or innocence. State v. Avery, 315 N.C. 1, 337 S.E.2d 786 (1985).

Failure to Show Prejudice. — When defendant has expressed satisfaction at trial with the jurors who actually considered his case and fails to show on appeal that any such juror was unable to be fair and impartial, defendant has failed entirely to show possible prejudice from the denial of his challenges for cause and is entitled to no relief. State v. Sanders, 317 N.C. 602, 346 S.E.2d 451 (1986), cert. denied, 325 N.C. 712, 388 S.E.2d 470 (1989).

Defendant's Rights Held Violated. — Where the district attorney violated a prior agreement, and when defendant arrived, the jury had been selected, his peremptory challenges had been expended and he had been deprived of the right to question the jurors and where he was only given the opportunity to challenge for cause those jurors he knew, defendant faced a jury that he had no part in selecting. Under the circumstances of the case, defendant did not waive his right to be present at the jury selection and was denied a substantial right. State v. Hayes, 291 N.C. 293, 230 S.E.2d 146 (1976).

Applied in State v. Jenkins, 311 N.C. 194, 317 S.E.2d 345 (1984); State v. Freeman, 314 N.C. 432, 333 S.E.2d 743 (1985); State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 876, 118 S. Ct. 196, 139 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1024, 118 S. Ct. 1309, 140 L. Ed. 2d 473 (1998).

II. NUMBER OF CHALLENGES.

No Authority to Allow More Than Statutory Number of Challenges. — This section does not authorize trial judges to permit either the State or a defendant to exercise more peremptory challenges than specified by statute. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 355, 259 S.E.2d 752 (1979).

Trial court has no authority to increase the number of peremptory challenges provided by this section. State v. Hunt, 325 N.C. 187, 381 S.E.2d 453 (1989).

Challenges Allotted on Basis of Number of Defendants. — Peremptory challenges are allotted to both the State and the defendant on the basis of the number of defendants and not the number of charges against any one defendant. State v. Boyd, 287 N.C. 131, 214 S.E.2d 14 (1975).

Number Not Changed by Joint Defense. — Where several defendants are tried together for a crime other than a capital felony each is entitled to four (now six) peremptory challenges to the jury, and where the court has ruled that the defense was a joint defense and has allowed but four (now six) peremptory challenges for all the defendants, a new trial will be granted upon appeal. State v. Burleson, 203 N.C. 779, 166 S.E. 905 (1932).

Consolidated Bills of Indictment. — Where several bills of indictment against a defendant are consolidated for trial, the defendant is entitled to but four (now six) peremptory challenges to the jury and not to four (now six) peremptory challenges for each bill, the consolidated bills being treated as separate counts of the same bill. State v. Alridge, 206 N.C. 850, 175 S.E. 191 (1934).

Not Affected by Decision Only to Seek Verdict for Lesser Offense. — Where, upon the trial of an indictment for murder, the solicitor (now prosecutor) states that he will ask only for a verdict of manslaughter, no special venire was necessary, and the defendant is not entitled to more than four (now six) peremptory challenges. State v. Hunt, 128 N.C. 584, 38 S.E. 473 (1901), overruled on other grounds, 317 N.C. 457, 346 S.E.2d 646 (1987); State v. Caldwell, 129 N.C. 682, 40 S.E. 85 (1901).

Failure to Exhaust Peremptory Challenges. — Where defendant exercised only six of the fourteen peremptory challenges permitted him under subdivision (a)(1), because he did not exhaust his peremptory challenges as provided by § 15A-1214(h), no prejudice was shown as to the juror who remained on the panel. State v. Quesinberry, 319 N.C. 228, 354 S.E.2d 446 (1987) vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, 328 N.C. 288, 401 S.E.2d 632 (1991).

Exercise of Peremptory Challenges Held Not Prejudicial. — The State's exercise of peremptory challenges to exclude three potential black jurors did not violate defendant's constitutional rights, where the first was excused because that venire member had held three jobs in the preceding ten months, the next was peremptorily challenged because she claimed to have never participated in court proceedings while in fact she had an extensive criminal record, and where the State deemed the last member undesirable as a juror because of her headstrong and overbearing personality; these reasons rebutted the prima facie case of discrimination. State v. Sanders, 95 N.C. App. 494, 383 S.E.2d 409 (1989).

III. CAPITAL CASES.

"Capital Case" Defined. — A capital case has been defined as one in which the death penalty may, but need not necessarily, be imposed. State v. Clark, 18 N.C. App. 621, 197 S.E.2d 605 (1973).

If it is determined during jury selection in a prosecution for a crime which formerly had been punishable by death that the death penalty may not be imposed upon conviction, the case loses its capital nature, thereby rendering statutes providing for an increased number of peremptory challenges in capital cases inapplicable. State v. Barbour, 295 N.C. 66, 243 S.E.2d 380 (1978).

Where the district attorney announced at the beginning of a prosecution for first-degree murder that the State would not ask for the death penalty, the case lost its "capital nature," and the court committed no error in not allowing the defendant 14 peremptory challenges. State v. Leonard, 296 N.C. 58, 248 S.E.2d 853 (1978).

A state may use its peremptory challenges to purge a jury of veniremen not excludable for cause under Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 88 S. Ct. 1770, 20 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1967), for scruples about the death penalty. Brown v. Dixon, 891 F.2d 490 (4th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1025, 119 S. Ct. 559, 142 L. Ed. 2d 465 (1998), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 953, 110 S. Ct. 2220, 109 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1990).

Peremptory Challenges to Exclude Jurors Based on Voir Dire Testimony. — Both the prosecutor and defense counsel may exercise peremptory challenges to exclude jurors based upon their voir dire testimony regarding their attitude toward capital punishment. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

One charged with two capital offenses has no right to additional peremptory challenges. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

Exhaustation of Peremptory Challenges. — A defendant is not required to exhaust peremptory challenges left over from regular jury selection under § 15A-1217(a)(1) until the defendant uses the allotted challenges for alternate jurors in § 15A-1217(c). Thus, a defendant charged with first-degree murder who was denied a peremptory challenge allotted to him by statute was deprived of a fundamental right and was entitled to a new trial. State v. Locklear, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 196, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 640 (2001).

Article 73.

Criminal Jury Trial in Superior Court.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The Commission decided to codify to a fairly large extent the procedures applicable to criminal jury trial, though it is obvious that many matters not specifically covered will continue to be governed by common law or tradition. In searching for drafting models, the Commission did not find any single satisfactory source, and has employed a wide variety of sources — and, additionally, has drafted several sections from scratch. In all events, this Article went through a large number of drafts, and all sections were changed in the course of successive meetings. Because of the numerous changes and many drafts it may not always be possible to pinpoint the source of a particular provision in the ensuing commentary. Citation of source, however, will be made when available and still pertinent to the statute in its final form.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article derives from those appearing in the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly, as revised by the Commission.

§ 15A-1221. Order of proceedings in jury trial; reading of indictment prohibited.

(a) The order of a jury trial, in general, is as follows:

(1) Repealed by Session Laws 1995 (Regular Session 1996), c. 725, s. 10.

(1a) Unless the defendant has filed a written request for an arraignment, the court must enter a not guilty plea on behalf of the defendant in accordance with G.S. 15A-941. If a defendant does file a written request for an arraignment, then the defendant must be arraigned and must have his or her plea recorded out of the presence of the prospective jurors in accordance with G.S. 15A-941.

(2) The judge must inform the prospective jurors of the case in accordance with G.S. 15A-1213.

(3) The jury must be sworn, selected and impaneled in accordance with Article 72, Selecting and Impaneling the Jury.

(4) Each party must be given the opportunity to make a brief opening statement, but the defendant may reserve his opening statement.

(5) The State must offer evidence.

(6) The defendant may offer evidence and, if he has reserved his opening statement, may precede his evidence with that statement.

(7) The State and the defendant may then offer successive rebuttals as provided in G.S. 15A-1226.

(8) At the conclusion of the evidence, the parties may make arguments to the jury in accordance with the provisions of G.S. 15A-1230.

(9) The judge must deliver a charge to the jury in accordance with the provisions of G.S. 15A-1231 and 15A-1232.

(10) The jury must retire to deliberate, and alternate jurors who have not been seated must be excused as provided in G.S. 15A-1215.

(b) At no time during the selection of the jury or during trial may any person read the indictment to the prospective jurors or to the jury. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, s. 2; 1995 (Reg. Sess., 1996), c. 725, s. 10.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is primarily based upon N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 260.30. See also Uniform Rules, Rule 521.

New features in this section include the requirement that the arraignment be out of the presence of prospective jurors and the authorization of opening statements by the parties — as the pleadings will not be read to the jury. See G.S. 15A-1213.

The Commission was aware that requiring arraignments to be held out of the presence of the prospective jurors may cause difficulties in some courthouses, but determined that the objective was desirable enough to be worth the trouble. The Commission thought that jurors hearing the stilted language of indictments and other pleadings and witnessing various motions upon arraignment are likely to get a distorted view of the case. It determined that the initial speech by the judge telling the jurors about the case, under G.S. 15A-1213, plus opening statements of the parties would be a far superior method of telling the jurors about the case and what to look and listen for.

The wording of subdivision (6) is designed to insure that a defendant is allowed to use a reserved opening statement only if he presents evidence. Otherwise, he would in effect be given an additional closing argument.

It should be noted that the order of trial set out in this section is that generally to be followed. It does not preclude a differing order if authorized by the common law or other applicable statutes or rules of court. An example is the defense of confession and avoidance entered by a defendant, which alters the order of proof in the case.

II. INFORMING JURORS OF CASE.

The purpose of subsection (b) is to insure that the jurors do not receive a distorted view of the case before them by an initial exposure to the case through the stilted language of indictments and other pleadings. State v. Flowers, 347 N.C. 1, 489 S.E.2d 391 (1997).

Subsection (b) does not prohibit publication during the sentencing proceeding of indictments from cases not currently before the jury. State v. Flowers, 347 N.C. 1, 489 S.E.2d 391 (1997).

References to Indictment Short of Reading It Are Permitted. — This section does not prevent the judge from making references to the bill of indictment during remarks or the charge to the jurors; the section proscribes the reading of the indictment to the prospective jurors or the jury. State v. Carr, 54 N.C. App. 309, 283 S.E.2d 175 (1981).

Summarizing Indictments for Jury. — The trial judge did not improperly refer to the bills of indictment returned against defendant while informing prospective jurors about the case where the judge summarized the indictments and explained to the jury the circumstances under which defendant was being tried. State v. McNeil, 47 N.C. App. 30, 266 S.E.2d 824, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 102, 273 S.E.2d 306 (1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 915, 101 S. Ct. 1356, 67 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1981).

Drawing of Selected Information from Indictment. — Where the trial court merely drew information from the bills of indictment to the extent necessary to identify the defendant and explain the charges against him and the circumstances under which he was being tried, the trial court did not commit error. State v. Leggett, 305 N.C. 213, 287 S.E.2d 832 (1982).

Defendant was not entitled to a new trial because the trial court read the bill of indictment to all the prospective and eventual jurors during jury selection, where the trial court drew from the indictment the name of the defendant, the name of the victim, the date of the crime, and the elements of the charge for which defendant was being tried. State v. Knight, 340 N.C. 531, 459 S.E.2d 481 (1995).

Admonishing Jurors to Maintain Open Mind. — Where the court was simply admonishing the jurors, pursuant to § 15A-1236(a)(3), to maintain an open mind until they conducted their deliberations, the court was instructed them to resist their natural impulses to reach preliminary conclusions based on the quantity of evidence presented by the opening side. The court further informed the jurors that it was their duty to hear evidence from both sides and to discuss the case among themselves before reaching a conclusion. The instruction, in context, contained no expression of opinion about any question to be decided by the jury or about the weight of the evidence. State v. Harrington, 335 N.C. 105, 436 S.E.2d 235 (1993).

III. JURY SELECTION.

Deviation from Prescribed Method of Jury Selection. — Though the trial court deviated from the statutorily prescribed method of jury selection under Article 72 of this Chapter, defendant failed to show that he was prejudiced because he had full opportunity to examine and challenge prospective jurors and because, when the jury was finally constituted, defendant has one peremptory challenge remaining and had exercised no challenges for cause so that the jurors selected obviously met with his approval. State v. Harper, 50 N.C. App. 198, 272 S.E.2d 600 (1980).

IV. OPENING STATEMENT.

Purpose of Opening Statement. — An opening statement is for the purpose of making a general forecast of the evidence, not for arguing the case, instructing on the law, or contradicting the other party's witnesses. State v. Mash, 328 N.C. 61, 399 S.E.2d 307 (1991).

Determination of whether opening statement is proper must be made in light of the purpose thereof. State v. Summerlin, 98 N.C. App. 167, 390 S.E.2d 358, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 143, 394 S.E.2d 183 (1990).

Scope of Opening Statement. — Subdivision (a)(4) permits each party in a criminal jury trial to make an opening statement but does not define the scope of that statement; however, wide latitude is generally allowed with respect to its scope. State v. Holmes, 120 N.C. App. 54, 460 S.E.2d 915 (1995).

Strict Supervision of Defendant's Opening Statement. — While the trial judge might have more strictly supervised defendant's opening statement than is done in most trials, the limitations he imposed did not sufficiently prejudice defendant's case to require reversal of his conviction. State v. Paige, 316 N.C. 630, 343 S.E.2d 848 (1986).

Waiver of Right to Make Opening Statement. — By failure to request the opportunity to make an opening statement, defendant engaged in conduct inconsistent with a purpose to insist upon the exercise of a statutory right, therefore, his conduct at trial amounted to a waiver of this procedural right. State v. McDowell, 301 N.C. 279, 271 S.E.2d 286 (1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 1025, 101 S. Ct. 1731, 68 L. Ed. 2d 220, rehearing denied, 451 U.S. 1012, 101 S. Ct. 2350, 68 L. Ed. 2d 865 (1981).

Mention of Victim's School Honors. — In trial for robbery with a dangerous weapon, trial court did not commit reversible error in allowing assistant district attorney to mention in his opening statement that the victim had graduated second in his high school class and obtained a college scholarship. State v. Summerlin, 98 N.C. App. 167, 390 S.E.2d 358, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 143, 394 S.E.2d 183 (1990).

Trial judge's error in preventing defense counsel from telling the jury to give attention to all of the witnesses was harmless, where defendant failed to demonstrate prejudice requiring a reversal of his conviction. State v. Mash, 328 N.C. 61, 399 S.E.2d 307 (1991).

§ 15A-1222. Expression of opinion prohibited.

The judge may not express during any stage of the trial, any opinion in the presence of the jury on any question of fact to be decided by the jury. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section codifies the traditional North Carolina position requiring strict neutrality on the part of the trial judge. Compare A.B.A. Standards, Function of the Trial Judge § 5.6. A related section dealing with judicial comment on the verdict is G.S. 15A-1239.

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Questions by Trial Judge.
III. Statement of Parties' Contentions.
IV. Summary of Evidence.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Former Law Essentially Unchanged. — This section and § 15A-1232 repealed and replaced former § 1-180 effective July 1, 1978. The new provisions restate the substance of § 1-180 and the law remains essentially unchanged. State v. Herbin, 298 N.C. 441, 259 S.E.2d 263 (1979).

Section Not Applicable in Absence of Jury. — This section, which forbids the expression of an opinion by the trial court, is inapplicable when the jury is not present during the questioning. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

This section is not applicable to statements made out of the jury's presence. State v. Joyce, 97 N.C. App. 464, 389 S.E.2d 136, cert. denied, 326 N.C. 803, 393 S.E.2d 902 (1990).

Prohibitions Against Expressions of Opinion Mandatory. — The statutory prohibitions against expressions of opinion by the trial court contained in this section and § 15A-1232 are mandatory. State v. Young, 324 N.C. 489, 380 S.E.2d 94 (1989).

The law imposes on the trial judge the duty of absolute impartiality. State v. Fleming, 350 N.C. 109, 512 S.E.2d 720 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 941, 120 S. Ct. 351, 145 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1999).

Trial judges must be careful in what they say and do because a jury looks to the court for guidance, etc. — and picks up the slightest intimation of an opinion. It does not matter whether the opinion of the trial judge is conveyed to the jury directly or indirectly as every defendant in a criminal case is entitled to a trial before an impartial judge and an unbiased jury. State v. Sidbury, 64 N.C. App. 177, 306 S.E.2d 844 (1983).

As the standard-bearer of impartiality, the trial judge must not express any opinion, etc. as to the weight to be given to or credibility of any competent evidence presented before the jury. State v. Harris, 308 N.C. 159, 301 S.E.2d 91 (1983).

It is fundamental to the system of justice that each and every person charged with a crime be afforded the opportunity to be tried before an impartial judge and an unprejudiced jury in an atmosphere of judicial calm. State v. Harris, 308 N.C. 159, 301 S.E.2d 91 (1983).

The judge may not express, during any stage of the trial, any opinion in the presence of the jury on any question of fact to be decided by the jury. State v. Bearthes, 329 N.C. 149, 405 S.E.2d 170 (1991).

Judge Creates Prejudice by Expressing Opinion. — The judge prejudices a party or his cause in the minds of the trial jurors whenever he violates the statute by expressing an opinion. State v. Guffey, 39 N.C. App. 359, 250 S.E.2d 96 (1979).

Comment Not Expression of Opinion. — The court's comment "you have now convicted this defendant on these three cases," did not amount to an expression of opinion as the jury had in fact just convicted the defendant of three offenses. State v. Brunson, 120 N.C. App. 571, 463 S.E.2d 417 (1995).

No Justification for Expression of Opinion. — The fact that an accused may be charged with a despicable crime, and the evidence of guilt may appear to be overwhelming, does not justify the expression of an opinion. State v. Guffey, 39 N.C. App. 359, 250 S.E.2d 96 (1979).

And it is immaterial how an opinion is expressed or implied, whether in the charge of the court, in the examination of a witness, in the rulings upon objections to evidence, or in any other manner. State v. Alston, 38 N.C. App. 219, 247 S.E.2d 726 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 586, 254 S.E.2d 30 (1979); State v. Wilhelm, 59 N.C. App. 298, 296 S.E.2d 664 (1982); 307 N.C. 702, 301 S.E.2d 395 (1983).

It is impermissible for a judge to express an opinion, either explicitly or implicitly, at any time during the course of the trial. State v. Crummy, 107 N.C. App. 305, 420 S.E.2d 448, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 669, 424 S.E.2d 411 (1992).

But not every improper remark by a trial judge requires a new trial. State v. Guffey, 39 N.C. App. 359, 250 S.E.2d 96 (1979).

While not every improper remark will require a new trial, a new trial may be awarded if the remarks by the trial judge go to the heart of the case. State v. Sidbury, 64 N.C. App. 177, 306 S.E.2d 844 (1983).

A remark by the court is not grounds for a new trial if, when considered in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, it could not have prejudiced defendant's case. State v. King, 311 N.C. 603, 320 S.E.2d 1 (1984).

Not every improper remark made by the trial judge requires a new trial. When considering an improper remark in light of the circumstances under which it was made, the underlying result may manifest mere harmless error. State v. Summerlin, 98 N.C. App. 167, 390 S.E.2d 358, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 143, 394 S.E.2d 183 (1990).

Totality of the Circumstances Test. — In evaluating whether a judge's comments cross into the realm of impermissible opinion, a totality of the circumstances test is used. State v. Fleming, 350 N.C. 109, 512 S.E.2d 720 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 941, 120 S. Ct. 351, 145 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1999).

Ordinary rulings by the court in the course of the trial do not amount to an impermissible expression of opinion. State v. Welch, 65 N.C. App. 390, 308 S.E.2d 910 (1983).

Trial court generally not impermissibly expressing opinion when it makes ordinary rulings during the course of the trial. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

Opinion on Question of Fact. — The trial court committed prejudicial error when it declared in the presence of the jury that the defendant was found by the court to be an expert in the field of general psychiatry and would be allowed to testify, where the defendant testified as his own expert and the question of his expertise was not simply a question of fact but one of the most critical questions to be decided by the jury. Sherrod v. Nash Gen. Hosp., 348 N.C. 526, 500 S.E.2d 708 (1998).

Defendant must show that he was prejudiced by judge's remark allegedly violating this section. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

Determination of Prejudice Resulting from Remarks. — Whether an accused was deprived of a fair trial by remarks by the judge during any stage of the trial must be determined by what was said and its probable effect upon the jury in light of all attendant circumstances. State v. Faircloth, 297 N.C. 388, 255 S.E.2d 366 (1979).

The judge's comments should be considered in light of all the facts and circumstances. State v. Wilhelm, 59 N.C. App. 298, 296 S.E.2d 664 (1982), cert. denied, 307 N.C. 702, 301 S.E.2d 395 (1983).

It does not necessarily follow that every ill-advised comment by the trial judge which may tend to impeach the witness is so harmful as to constitute reversible error. The comment should be considered in light of all the facts and attendant circumstances disclosed by the record. State v. Brady, 299 N.C. 547, 264 S.E.2d 66 (1980).

Expressions which may be erroneous when isolated are not grounds for reversal if, when considered contextually, the charge presents the law fairly and clearly. State v. Lofton, 66 N.C. App. 79, 310 S.E.2d 633 (1984).

A defendant has a right to trial before an impartial judge, and any expression or intimation of an opinion by the judge which prejudices the jury against defendant is grounds for a new trial. The expression, however, must be viewed contextually, and whether a defendant was unduly prejudiced by the trial judge's remarks is determined by the probable effect on the jury in light of all the attendant circumstances, the burden being on defendant to show prejudice. State v. Lofton, 66 N.C. App. 79, 310 S.E.2d 633 (1984).

Burden of showing prejudice is on the appellant. State v. Faircloth, 297 N.C. 388, 255 S.E.2d 366 (1979).

The burden rests upon the defendant to show that the remarks of the trial judge deprived him of a fair trial. State v. Waters, 87 N.C. App. 502, 361 S.E.2d 416 (1987).

Defendant bears the burden of establishing that the trial judge's remarks were prejudicial. State v. Summerlin, 98 N.C. App. 167, 390 S.E.2d 358, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 143, 394 S.E.2d 183 (1990).

Rulings on Repetitive Questions. — Absent a showing of manifest abuse, a trial judge's allowance or disallowance of alleged repetitive questions is within his discretion, and his duty to control the conduct and course of a trial. State v. Lednum, 51 N.C. App. 387, 276 S.E.2d 920, cert. denied, 303 N.C. 317, 281 S.E.2d 656 (1981).

The trial court did not express its opinion on questions of fact in the jury's presence and did not abuse its discretion in limiting repetitive questioning. State v. Hester, 343 N.C. 266, 470 S.E.2d 25 (1996).

Remarks in Admitting or Excluding Evidence. — A remark by the court in admitting or excluding evidence is not prejudicial when it amounts to no more than a ruling on the question or where it is made to expedite the trial. State v. Lednum, 51 N.C. App. 387, 276 S.E.2d 920, cert. denied, 303 N.C. 317, 281 S.E.2d 656 (1981).

Judge may always properly exclude inadmissible evidence; he is prohibited, however, by this section from doing so in a manner which intimates any judicial favoritism. State v. Hughes, 54 N.C. App. 117, 282 S.E.2d 504 (1981).

Words whereby the trial court sustained objections by the defendant to questions asked by the prosecutor in the presence of the jury, namely, "[w]ell, as phrased, sustained," and "[w]ell, sustained for the moment," did not constitute an improper expression of opinion. State v. Shaw, 322 N.C. 797, 370 S.E.2d 546 (1988).

Inquiry to the jury concerning whether it would prefer to reconvene on Saturday or Monday, which became necessary when the trial judge realized the case could not be completed on Friday, could not be construed as expressing an opinion on any fact involved in the case. State v. King, 311 N.C. 603, 320 S.E.2d 1 (1984).

Supervision of Defendants' Opening Statement. — While the trial judge might have more strictly supervised defendant's opening statement than is done in most trials, the limitations he imposed did not sufficiently prejudice defendant's case to require reversal of his conviction. State v. Paige, 316 N.C. 630, 343 S.E.2d 848 (1986).

Restriction of Improper Questioning by Counsel. — Scope and manner of examination of witnesses are matters which are ordinarily governed by the trial judge, who may take appropriate measures to restrict improper questioning by counsel. State v. Searles, 304 N.C. 149, 282 S.E.2d 430 (1981).

Trial judge's comments, admonishing defense counsel for leading witnesses on direct examination and arguing and badgering witness on cross-examination, did not express an opinion as to defendant's guilt, since all of the comments were routinely made in the course of the right and duty the trial judge had to control examination and cross-examination of witnesses, and the questions asked were for clarification purposes. State v. Alverson, 91 N.C. App. 577, 372 S.E.2d 729 (1988).

Referring to Accused as "Defendant". — The trial court does not impermissibly express its opinion by refusing to grant the defendant's request that he be referred to by his name and not as "the defendant." State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

The trial court's reference to the prosecutor as "our" and/or "your" district attorney did not violate its duty of impartiality nor did it constitute an improper expression of opinion under this section. State v. Davis, 353 N.C. 1, 539 S.E.2d 243 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 95, 151 L. Ed. 2d 55 (2001).

Characterization of Case as One of "Hurry-and-Wait". — Characterization of the case by the trial judge, in explaining to the jury why they were being sent out of the courtroom after a defense objection, as one of "hurry-and-wait," standing alone, was not a sufficient statement of an "opinion" by the trial judge for the Appellate court to conclude that defendants were prejudiced. State v. Edwards, 85 N.C. App. 145, 354 S.E.2d 344, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 172, 358 S.E.2d 58 (1987).

Distribution of Copies of Accomplice's Statements to Individual Jurors. — Fact that the trial judge had copies of accomplice's handwritten statements made for distribution to individual jurors, instead of providing one copy to the 12 jurors and waiting for each one to read the statements and pass them along, was well within his discretion, and the record did not support a finding that defendant was prejudiced by the manner in which the judge chose to publish these exhibits to the jury. State v. Harris, 315 N.C. 556, 340 S.E.2d 383 (1986).

Statement That Defendant Had "Confessed". — Trial court's statement that the evidence tended to show that defendant had "confessed" that he "committed the crime charged" did not amount to an expression of opinion by the trial court, where evidence had been introduced which in fact tended to show that defendant had confessed to the crime charged, namely, first degree murder, and where the trial court's statement was followed immediately by the instruction: "Now, if you find that the defendant made that confession, then you should consider all the circumstances under which it was made in determining whether it was a truthful confession and the weight which you will give to it." State v. Young, 324 N.C. 489, 380 S.E.2d 94 (1989).

Allegedly improper statement will not be reviewed in isolation, but will be considered in light of the circumstances in which it was made. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

Instructions must be construed contextually. State v. Butcher, 57 N.C. App. 698, 292 S.E.2d 149 (1982).

Instructions Held Proper When Viewed Contextually. — The trial court's charge did not constitute an impermissible expression of opinion on the evidence where the court referred to the circumstance as "alleged." State v. Meyer, 353 N.C. 92, 540 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Omission of Word "Alleged" in Instruction. — Trial court's instruction to the jury that "if you are satisfied that the defendant was insane at the time of the robbery with a firearm he would be not guilty by reason of insanity and that would end the case" did not constitute an expression of opinion on a question of fact because of the one omission of the word "alleged" before "robbery with a firearm." State v. Linville, 43 N.C. App. 204, 258 S.E.2d 397 (1979), aff'd, 300 N.C. 135, 265 S.E.2d 150 (1980).

Instruction that the jury is to carefully consider and scrutinize testimony of the defendant, and of those who are closely related to him, taking into consideration the interests that they have in the outcome of this trial, where the court made no similar charge concerning the witnesses for the State and where the court had earlier charged that it was for the members of the jury to consider any interest, bias, or prejudice that any of the witnesses might have, was not an expression of opinion by the court. State v. Powell, 306 N.C. 718, 295 S.E.2d 413 (1982).

Comparative Amount of Time Devoted to Instructions. — Just as the mere fact that the judge may spend more time summarizing the evidence for the State does not amount to an expression of opinion, no expression of opinion arises merely from the comparative amount of time devoted to giving an instruction. State v. Porter, 326 N.C. 489, 391 S.E.2d 144 (1990).

Instruction Calling for Judge to Express an Opinion Properly Refused. — In a trial in which the defendant claimed to have multiple personalities, the trial court could not, as the defense requested, instruct the jury that the person sitting at the defense table was not "James Woodard," but instead was "Johnny Gustud" (the defendant's "alternate personality"). If the judge had done so, he would have impermissibly expressed his opinion as to whether the defendant in fact had multiple personalities. State v. Woodard, 102 N.C. App. 687, 404 S.E.2d 6 (1990), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 329 N.C. 504, 407 S.E.2d 550 (1991).

A colloquy between the trial judge and the district attorney did not constitute an expression of opinion on any fact to be proved in the case and therefore did not constitute a violation of this section. State v. Alston, 111 N.C. App. 416, 432 S.E.2d 385 (1993).

Instructions by Trial Court Not Improper. — It was not error for trial court to instruct the jury that assault on a female with intent to commit rape was by definition a felony involving the use or threat of violence to the person. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Remark About Sentencing Prior to Jury Verdict. — Since it is obvious that a defendant will not be sentenced unless he is first found guilty, a judge's premature remarks about sentencing, in response to an inquiry prior to the time the jury reached a verdict by the foreman to the court as to whether the jury could make an "explanation" of its verdict, assumes that the jury has already reached a guilty verdict, and leaves little doubt that the judge expects the jury to find the defendant guilty. Such an assumption amounts to an unwarranted expression of opinion on defendant's guilt and thereby encourages the rendering of a guilty verdict. State v. Griffin, 44 N.C. App. 601, 261 S.E.2d 292 (1980).

Remark on Role of Attorneys. — Where the court's comments indicate the roles attorneys play in a criminal prosecution, such comments are not improper expressions of opinion as to the merits of either party's case. State v. Hudson, 54 N.C. App. 437, 283 S.E.2d 561 (1981).

Seating of Attorney. — Where the record reflected that the jury was not present when the decision was made to seat a witness' attorney next to the witness stand, and defendant conceded it was proper and necessary for an attorney to be appointed to advise the witness of his constitutional rights, and defendant suggested no alternative to placing the attorney next to the witness stand and, indeed, did not object to this procedure at trial, the jury could not have interpreted the judge's actions as reflecting on the credibility of this witness and error, if any, was clearly harmless. State v. Sanderson, 62 N.C. App. 520, 302 S.E.2d 899 (1983).

Personal Opinion Not Conveyed. — Where the trial judge alluded only to appropriate sources of evidence, and in no way suggested how such evidence should be considered by the jurors, the judge's statements did not convey any personal opinion. State v. Hartman, 344 N.C. 445, 476 S.E.2d 328 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1201, 117 S. Ct. 1562, 137 L. Ed. 2d 708 (1997).

Prejudicial Error Not Shown. — The trial judge in a rape case did not commit prejudicial error under this section when he remarked to the jury that he did not want each individual juror to take the time to read exhibits admitted as evidence for the defense, where he did permit defense counsel to read the reports in their entirety to the jury. State v. Howard, 320 N.C. 718, 360 S.E.2d 790 (1987).

The trial court's refusal to allow defendant to use a weapon to demonstrate his testimony was not error where the court could reasonably have concluded that such action might jeopardize the safety of those in the courtroom and the continued presence of the defendant. State v. Ford, 323 N.C. 466, 373 S.E.2d 420 (1988).

Although comments made by the trial court in the presence of the jury in reaction to a delay caused by the temporary absence of a defense witness who left to go to the bathroom were less than exemplary, the comments did not rise to the level of error. State v. Larrimore, 340 N.C. 119, 456 S.E.2d 789 (1995).

Trial court's comments did not intimate to the jurors that the trial court believed the evidence to justify verdicts of guilty of first-degree murder, which might necessitate the alternate juror's presence at a capital sentencing proceeding. State v. Porter, 340 N.C. 320, 457 S.E.2d 716 (1995).

Comments made by the trial court held not to express impermissible opinions about the value of defendant's evidence or the ability of defendant's counsel. State v. Jones, 347 N.C. 193, 491 S.E.2d 641 (1997).

Comments of trial court in sustaining an objection to defendant's insinuation, during closing argument, that there had been fabrications of evidence did not effectively instruct the jury to accept the testimony of a key state witness at face value. State v. Green, 129 N.C. App. 539, 500 S.E.2d 452 (1998), aff'd, 350 N.C. 59, 510 S.E.2d 375 (1999).

Judge did not violate this section when he (1) made comments to show a judicial leaning that a detective acted properly in selecting pictures for a photo lineup; (2) belittled the defendant's line of questioning regarding the victim's statements of her assailant's skin color; (3) referred to the victim as "the victim"; and (4) admonished the jury not to visit the "scene of the crime"; the comments and questions by the trial judge were to clarify testimony or to explain proper procedures to the jury, and, even though the trial court had a propensity to scatter leading questions among its inquiries, such was of minimal effect and did not even rise to the level of non-prejudicial or harmless error. State v. Pickard, 143 N.C. App. 485, 547 S.E.2d 102 (2001), cert. denied, 354 N.C. 73, — S.E.2d — (2001).

Actions of Judge Not Impermissible. — The trial judge did not violate this section by instructing the bailiff to sit between the jury and the witness stand to his right after the defendant took the witness stand. State v. Baldwin, 141 N.C. App. 596, 540 S.E.2d 815 (2000).

When New Trial Required. — Where the trial judge's statement prior to trial went to the heart of the trial, assuming the defendant's guilt, a new trial was required. State v. Guffey, 39 N.C. App. 359, 250 S.E.2d 96 (1979).

Where the trial judge told the jury that he could not allow them to take certain photographs which had not been received in evidence into the jury room because the defendant did not consent, his statement was an incorrect statement of the law under § 15A-1233, which was nevertheless harmless in itself since it led to a correct ruling that the jury could not take photographs not admitted in evidence into the jury room. However, the attempt by the trial judge to explain the reason for his failure to comply with the jury's request constituted an impermissible expression of opinion in violation of this section and § 15A-1232 which required a new trial. State v. Grogan, 40 N.C. App. 371, 253 S.E.2d 20 (1979).

II. QUESTIONS BY TRIAL JUDGE.

Questioning by the trial judge must be conducted with care and in a manner which avoids prejudice to either party. State v. Alston, 38 N.C. App. 219, 247 S.E.2d 726 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 586, 254 S.E.2d 30 (1979); State v. Whittington, 318 N.C. 114, 347 S.E.2d 403 (1986).

A judge may not by his questions to a witness intimate an opinion as to whether any fact essential to the State's case has been proved. A judge may ask questions, however, that elicit testimony which proves an element of the State's case so long as he does not comment on the strength of the evidence or the credibility of the witness. State v. Lowe, 60 N.C. App. 549, 299 S.E.2d 466 (1983).

Clarification of Testimony. — The trial judge may direct questions to a witness for the purpose of clarifying his testimony and promoting a better understanding of it. State v. Alston, 38 N.C. App. 219, 247 S.E.2d 726 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 586, 254 S.E.2d 30 (1979); State v. Fuller, 48 N.C. App. 418, 268 S.E.2d 879, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 403, 273 S.E.2d 448 (1980); State v. Whittington, 318 N.C. 114, 347 S.E.2d 403 (1986).

Trial judge may properly question witnesses in order to clarify and promote a proper understanding of the testimony; however, such questions constitute prejudicial error if by their tenor, frequency, or persistence the trial judge expresses an opinion. State v. Rinck, 303 N.C. 551, 280 S.E.2d 912 (1981).

The trial court may direct questions to a witness for the purpose of clarifying his testimony. State v. Jackson, 306 N.C. 642, 295 S.E.2d 383 (1982).

The trial judge did not express an opinion in violation of this section in asking a witness to "describe what this defendant did," since the purpose of the question was to clarify testimony by the witness in which he used the word "they." State v. Fuller, 48 N.C. App. 418, 268 S.E.2d 879, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 403, 273 S.E.2d 448 (1980).

A trial judge's questions, propounded to a witness to clarify his confusing or contradictory testimony, do not constitute an expression of opinion unless a jury could reasonably infer that the questions intimated the court's opinion as to the witness's credibility, the defendants' guilt, or as to a factual controversy to be resolved by the jury. State v. Yellorday, 297 N.C. 574, 256 S.E.2d 205 (1979); State v. Ramey, 318 N.C. 457, 349 S.E.2d 566 (1986).

In a prosecution for rape and kidnapping, the trial court did not err in asking leading questions of the seven-year-old victim during the voir dire hearing on defendant's motion to suppress identification testimony since this section does not apply when the jury is not present during questioning, since a child may be asked leading questions concerning delicate matters of a sexual nature, and since the trial court may question a witness to clarify his testimony. State v. Bright, 301 N.C. 243, 271 S.E.2d 368 (1980).

Where the record clearly revealed that victim was confused by questions of both the district attorney and defendant's attorney, and in each instance the judge questioned the victim in an attempt to clear up her confusing testimony, and the questions propounded by the judge in no way expressed any opinion as to the witness' credibility, the defendant's guilt, or as to a factual controversy that was to be resolved by the jury, there was no error. State v. Allen, 92 N.C. App. 168, 374 S.E.2d 119 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 544, 380 S.E.2d 772 (1989).

The trial judge is permitted to interrogate witnesses, whether called by itself or by a party, under § 8C-1, Rule 614(b), but may not express during any stage of the trial any opinion in the presence of the jury on any question of fact to be decided by the jury. However, in fulfilling the duties of a trial judge to supervise and control the course of a trial so as to insure justice to all parties, the judge may question a witness in order to clarify confusing or contradictory testimony. State v. Quick, 329 N.C. 1, 405 S.E.2d 179 (1991).

Questions by judge to expert witness did not denigrate either defendant's witness or her evidence, but instead helped to develop testimony favorable to the defense and assist the trial court in its task of deciding whether mitigating circumstances which might later be requested by the defense were in fact supported by the evidence. State v. Spruill, 338 N.C. 612, 452 S.E.2d 279 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 834, 116 S. Ct. 111, 133 L. Ed. 2d 63 (1995).

Trial judge did not err in questioning witnesses where the questions were designed to clarify the sequence of events and the trial court did not state an opinion as to the facts or the witnesses' credibility. State v. Smarr, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 881, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 789 (2001).

Trial judge's exchanges with defendant and defendant's witnesses did not constitute improperly expressed opinion; judge acted similarly with plaintiff's witnesses. Shore v. Farmer, 133 N.C. App. 350, 515 S.E.2d 495 (1999), rev'd on other grounds, 351 N.C. 166, 522 S.E.2d 73 (1999).

Prejudicial Actions by Judge. — The jury could reasonably infer from the trial court's action in turning his back to defendant and the jury during defendant's testimony that the trial judge did not believe defendant's testimony to be credible and this action was sufficiently prejudicial to require a new pretrial. State v. Jenkins, 115 N.C. App. 520, 445 S.E.2d 622, stay granted pending appeal, 336 N.C. 784, 447 S.E.2d 435, cert. denied, temporary stay dissolved, 337 N.C. 804, 449 S.E.2d 752 (1994).

Defendant's 16 assignments of error regarding alleged denigration of defense counsel, improper expressions of opinion and improper comments by the trial judge were without merit; the judge merely made appropriate inquiries, supervised and controlled the course of the trial and the scope and manner of witness examination with care and prudence. State v. Gell, 351 N.C. 192, 524 S.E.2d 332 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 878, 121 S. Ct. 163, 148 L. Ed. 2d 110 (2000).

Questioning Held Not Improper. — Questioning by the trial judge was not improper where the judge's inquiry constituted neither an expression of opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant nor a suggestion of alliance with the prosecution. State v. Bearthes, 329 N.C. 149, 405 S.E.2d 170 (1991).

No reasonable juror would have interpreted the question "If chosen to sit as a juror will you require the state to satisfy you of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt before you find him guilty?" as indicating an opinion of the court. State v. Frye, 341 N.C. 470, 461 S.E.2d 664 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1123, 116 S. Ct. 1359, 134 L. Ed. 2d 526 (1996).

The trial judge's question of a witness regarding his opinion as to the validity of a report on the results of DNA tests performed by another individual did not violate this section. State v. McCord, 140 N.C. App. 634, 538 S.E.2d 633 (2000), review denied, 353 N.C. 392 (2001).

Remark Held Not Improper. — There was no error where a remark by the court was a mere lapsus linguae that did not prejudice the defendant. State v. Rose, 339 N.C. 172, 451 S.E.2d 211 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 2565, 132 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1995).

Question Which Does Not Supply Essential Elements of State's Case. — In an armed robbery case, the court does not impermissibly express its opinion by questioning a State witness as to ownership of the store that had been robbed. Such question does not supply elements essential to the State's case, since ownership is irrelevant as long as the evidence shows that the defendant was not taking his own property. State v. Jackson, 306 N.C. 642, 295 S.E.2d 383 (1982).

Where judge's questioning related to witness' expertise and comprised a part of the trial court's ascertainment of his qualifications as an expert witness, since witness' testimony generated some confusion regarding the various locations of his training, the trial court's questions were fairly designed to clarify this testimony and not expression of judge's opinions. State v. Clark, 90 N.C. App. 489, 369 S.E.2d 607 (1988).

Court Erred by Asking Question Conveying to Jury It Did Not Believe Witness. — The trial court erred in asking expert witness "Are you telling the truth now or were you telling the truth then?" which clearly conveyed to the jury that the trial court did not believe this witness was being truthful; the trial court had invaded the province of the jury to determine the credibility of the witness. State v. Gregory, 340 N.C. 365, 459 S.E.2d 638 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1108, 116 S. Ct. 1327, 134 L. Ed. 2d 478 (1996).

III. STATEMENT OF PARTIES' CONTENTIONS.

Must Be Stated Without Undue Stress to Those of Either Side. — When a court undertakes to restate the contentions of the parties, it must fairly present the contentions of both parties without giving undue stress to those of either side. It is sufficient if the contentions are restated with reasonable accuracy. Any minor discrepancies or misstatements in the charge must be brought to the attention of the judge at trial. State v. White, 298 N.C. 430, 259 S.E.2d 281 (1979).

IV. SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.

Trial judge is not bound to recapitulate all the evidence in his charge to the jury; it is sufficient for him to direct the attention of the jury to the principal questions they have to try, and explain the law applicable thereto. State v. Oxendine, 300 N.C. 720, 268 S.E.2d 212 (1980).

Mere fact that judge spends more time summarizing evidence for the State does not amount to an expression of opinion. State v. Rinck, 303 N.C. 551, 280 S.E.2d 912 (1981).

It is a common practice in the courts of this State for a trial judge to read exhibits to the jury. The court's position as neutral governor of trial proceedings prevents this from being anything other than an impartial exposition of evidence, by itself not favorable to any party involved in the proceedings. State v. Harris, 308 N.C. 159, 301 S.E.2d 91 (1983).

Failure to Summarize Nonexculpatory Evidence. — It is not error for court to fail to summarize evidence brought out on cross-examination for defendant where it is not of an exculpatory nature which goes to the establishment of a defense. State v. Rinck, 303 N.C. 551, 280 S.E.2d 912 (1981).

Slight inaccuracies in the statement of the evidence in the instructions of the court to the jury will not be held reversible error when not called to the attention of the judge at the time and where the charge substantially complies with the requirements of this section. State v. Cheek, 307 N.C. 552, 299 S.E.2d 633 (1983).

Informing Jury That No Evidence of Justification or Mitigation Has Been Introduced. — It is not error for the trial court simply to inform the jury as to whether or not specific evidence relevant to justification or mitigation has been introduced in a homicide prosecution. This is determined as a matter of law, not of fact, and such an instruction does not therefore invade or interfere with the exclusive province of the jury to decide and weigh the facts presented. State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

§ 15A-1223. Disqualification of judge.

(a) A judge on his own motion may disqualify himself from presiding over a criminal trial or other criminal proceeding.

(b) A judge, on motion of the State or the defendant, must disqualify himself from presiding over a criminal trial or other criminal proceeding if he is:

(1) Prejudiced against the moving party or in favor of the adverse party; or

(2) Repealed by Session Laws 1983 (Regular Session, 1984), c. 1037, s. 6.

(3) Closely related to the defendant by blood or marriage; or

(4) For any other reason unable to perform the duties required of him in an impartial manner.

(c) A motion to disqualify must be in writing and must be accompanied by one or more affidavits setting forth facts relied upon to show the grounds for disqualification.

(d) A motion to disqualify a judge must be filed no less than five days before the time the case is called for trial unless good cause is shown for failure to file within that time. Good cause includes the discovery of facts constituting grounds for disqualification less than five days before the case is called for trial.

(e) A judge must disqualify himself from presiding over a criminal trial or proceeding if he is a witness for or against one of the parties in the case. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1983 (Reg. Sess., 1984), c. 1037, s. 6.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The source of this section is Special Advisory Committee of the Florida Supreme Court, Proposed Revision of Florida Criminal Procedure Rules, Rule 3.230 (1972). Compare Uniform Rules, Rule 741.

The Commission directed that the commentary indicate that the rules of evidence applicable to jury trials should not apply in the hearing on disqualification of a judge, so that affidavits otherwise reliable should not be excluded from consideration by virtue of the hearsay rule.

As to the judge's duty to excuse himself when he has any doubt as to his ability to preside impartially or whenever his impartiality can be reasonably questioned, see A.B.A. Standards, Function of the Trial Judge § 1.7.

CASE NOTES

A judge may be disqualified for reasons other than those stated in the statute. State v. Fie, 320 N.C. 626, 359 S.E.2d 774 (1987).

Disposition by Trial Judge of Recusal Motion. — A trial judge should either recuse himself or refer a recusal motion to another judge, if there is sufficient force in the allegations contained in defendant's motion to proceed to find facts, or if a reasonable man knowing all the circumstances would have doubts about the judge's ability to rule on the motion to recuse in an impartial manner. State v. Poole, 305 N.C. 308, 289 S.E.2d 335 (1982).

Failure of Judge to Disqualify Himself Not Error Absent Proof of Bias. — Where the trial judge at the first trial of the defendant, when declaring a mistrial, ruled that the emotional outburst heard by the jury could either consciously or subconsciously prevent them from rendering a verdict solely on the evidence, but there was no evidence in the record elicited by defense counsel or any other party of any prejudice or bias displayed by the presiding judge, and no showing that in the previous trial the judge reacted strongly to the outburst, nor any showing that the judge displayed marked personal feeling toward the defendant, the failure of the trial judge to disqualify himself was not error. State v. Vega, 40 N.C. App. 326, 253 S.E.2d 94, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 297 N.C. 457, 256 S.E.2d 809, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 968, 100 S. Ct. 459, 62 L. Ed. 382 (1979).

Where there are no facts to cause a reasonable man knowing all the circumstances to doubt the judge's ability to rule on the motion to recuse in an impartial manner, there can be no error in such judge's failure to schedule a hearing on defendant's motion to recuse. State v. Crabtree, 66 N.C. App. 662, 312 S.E.2d 219 (1984).

Trial judge's alleged opinions regarding the crime of driving while impaired did not constitute proper grounds to require the judge to recuse himself. State v. Kennedy, 110 N.C. App. 302, 429 S.E.2d 449 (1993).

Insufficient Evidence to Question Judge's Objectivity. — Where at the hearing on the motion to recuse, defendant produced no evidence of any bias other than her attorney's recollection that the judge had made the statement that "that car is gone" during a forfeiture proceeding, there was not substantial evidence that might reasonably call the judge's objectivity into question. State v. Honaker, 111 N.C. App. 216, 431 S.E.2d 869 (1993).

When County Wherein Judge Sits Has an Interest in the Proceedings. — Motion for the presiding judge's recusal was properly denied where city presented no affidavits supporting its motion, the record revealed no evidence of personal bias, prejudice or interest on the part of the judge, and the court refused to set a standard that resident superior court judges could not participate in proceedings in which the county where the judge resides, and not the judge himself, has a potential interest in the proceedings. County of Johnston v. City of Wilson, 136 N.C. App. 775, 525 S.E.2d 826 (2000).

§ 15A-1224. Death or disability of trial judge.

(a) If by reason of sickness or other disability a judge before whom the defendant is being tried is unable to continue presiding over the trial without the necessity of a continuance, he may in his discretion order a mistrial.

(b) If by reason of absence, death, sickness, or other disability, the judge before whom the defendant is being or has been tried is unable to perform the duties required of him before entry of judgment, and has not ordered a mistrial, any other judge assigned to the court may perform those duties, but if the other judge is satisfied that he cannot perform those duties because he did not preside at an earlier stage of the proceedings or for any other reason, he must order a mistrial. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is a fairly elaborate expansion of A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury § 4.3. Compare Uniform Rules, Rule 741(e) and (f).

CASE NOTES

Stated in State v. O'Neal, 67 N.C. App. 65, 312 S.E.2d 493 (1984).

§ 15A-1225. Exclusion of witnesses.

Upon motion of a party the judge may order all or some of the witnesses other than the defendant to remain outside of the courtroom until called to testify, except when a minor child is called as a witness the parent or guardian may be present while the child is testifying even though his parent or guardian is to be called subsequently. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The Commission considered several different approaches to this section. One draft simply made the matter of exclusion discretionary with the trial judge. There was a great deal of sentiment within the Commission, however, for specifically allowing the key investigating officer in a complex case to remain beside the prosecutor to aid in the handling of the State's case. Some thought that such an officer should be required to testify first, and not be exempt from exclusion, but more Commission members believed this might distort the orderly presentation of the facts of the case. The Commission considered, and finally rejected as too complex, a draft that defined the "key investigating officer" who could not be excluded. (This draft attempted to distinguish the complex case with a key investigator from a simple "two-officer" case which many members of the Commission thought particularly called for exclusion.)

The Commission's final proposal was flatly to allow the prosecutor to select one witness to remain and assist in the courtroom — in addition to providing that the parent or guardian of a child may remain in the courtroom even though later to be called as a witness.

The General Assembly modified this section, though, to delete the clause relating to a witness to assist the prosecutor. The apparent basis lay in the belief that exclusion should not be prevented in the "two-officer" case, and in addition it was thought inappropriate for the statute to single out the State for a special privilege. It is assumed the judge would exercise his discretion to allow a key investigator, for the State or the defense, to remain in the courtroom to assist in the case — even though later to be called to the stand.

CASE NOTES

A trial judge may order the separation before trial of witnesses who are in the custody of the State. State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

The aim of sequestration is two-fold: First, it acts as a restraint on witnesses tailoring their testimony to that of earlier witnesses, and second, it aids in detecting testimony that is less than candid. State v. Harrell, 67 N.C. App. 57, 312 S.E.2d 230 (1984).

First, it acts as a restraint on witnesses tailoring their testimony to that of earlier witnesses, and second, it aids in detecting testimony that is less than candid. State v. Johnson, 128 N.C. App. 361, 496 S.E.2d 805 (1998).

While it is true that one of the purposes for requiring sequestration is to prevent witnesses from tailoring their testimony from that of earlier witnesses, in order to show error a defendant must show that the trial court abused its discretion. State v. Pittman, 332 N.C. 244, 420 S.E.2d 437 (1992).

The separation of witnesses is not founded on the idea of keeping the witnesses from intercourse with each other. That would be a vain attempt. The expectation is not to prevent the fabrication of false stories, but by separate cross-examination to detect them. State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

Due process does not automatically require separation of witnesses who are to testify to the same set of facts. State v. Harrell, 67 N.C. App. 57, 312 S.E.2d 230 (1984).

Presence of Social Worker and Therapist During Rape Victim's Testimony. — The trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing a social worker and a therapist to remain in the courtroom during the victims' testimony in rape trial. State v. Weaver, 117 N.C. App. 434, 451 S.E.2d 15 (1994).

Discretion of Court. — A motion to sequester witnesses is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge and will not be reviewed on appeal absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. State v. Royal, 300 N.C. 515, 268 S.E.2d 517 (1980); State v. Woods, 307 N.C. 213, 297 S.E.2d 574 (1982); State v. Harrell, 67 N.C. App. 57, 312 S.E.2d 230 (1984); State v. Davis, 68 N.C. App. 238, 314 S.E.2d 828 (1984); State v. Young, 312 N.C. 669, 325 S.E.2d 181 (1985).

Failure to Make Motion Not Necessarily Ineffective Assistance of Counsel. — Trial counsel's failure to move pursuant to this section for the exclusion of three State's witnesses from the courtroom until each one was called to testify is not evidence of ineffective assistance of counsel. State v. Roberts, 49 N.C. App. 52, 270 S.E.2d 559 (1980), appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 726, 276 S.E.2d 286 (1981).

Oral Argument Not Required Before Final Ruling. — Although fundamental fairness would seem to require it, at least when a proper and timely request therefor is made, this section does not specifically mandate the receipt and consideration of oral arguments prior to the entry of final rulings by the trial court. State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

§ 15A-1226. Rebuttal evidence; additional evidence.

(a) Each party has the right to introduce rebuttal evidence concerning matters elicited in the evidence in chief of another party. The judge may permit a party to offer new evidence during rebuttal which could have been offered in the party's case in chief or during a previous rebuttal, but if new evidence is allowed, the other party must be permitted further rebuttal.

(b) The judge in his discretion may permit any party to introduce additional evidence at any time prior to verdict. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The source of this section is N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 260.30, paragraph 7.

CASE NOTES

There is no constitutional right to have a case reopened. State v. Perkins, 57 N.C. App. 516, 291 S.E.2d 865 (1982).

There is no constitutional right to have one's case reopened; the decision to reopen a case and hear further evidence is within the trial court's discretion. State v. Shelton, 53 N.C. App. 632, 281 S.E.2d 684 (1981), appeal dismissed, 305 N.C. 306, 290 S.E.2d 707 (1982).

This section is clear authorization for a trial judge, within his discretion, to permit a party to introduce additional evidence at any time prior to the verdict; the judge may also permit a party to offer new evidence which could have been offered in the party's case in chief or during a previous rebuttal as long as the opposing party is permitted further rebuttal. State v. Quick, 323 N.C. 675, 375 S.E.2d 156 (1989).

Court has discretionary power to permit introduction of additional evidence after a party has rested. State v. Jackson, 306 N.C. 642, 295 S.E.2d 383 (1982).

Discretion to Allow Additional Evidence Any Time Prior to Verdict. — Pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, the trial judge is authorized in his discretion to permit any party to introduce additional evidence at any time prior to verdict. State v. Riggins, 321 N.C. 107, 361 S.E.2d 558 (1987).

The trial court has the discretion to allow either party to recall witnesses to offer additional evidence even after jury arguments. State v. Goldman, 311 N.C. 338, 317 S.E.2d 361 (1984).

Reopening of Voir Dire Examination. — Where, after presentation of evidence and arguments of counsel on voir dire on defendant's motion to suppress any statements she made to any investigating officer, but before the court ruled on the motion, the State moved to reopen the evidence for the limited purpose of offering testimony with respect to the nature of the rights furnished by the investigating officer to the defendant under Miranda, the court did not abuse its discretion in reopening the voir dire examination. State v. Stroud, 78 N.C. App. 599, 337 S.E.2d 873 (1985).

Reopening Case to Allow Stipulated Evidence. — The trial court did not err in granting the State's motion to reopen its case in order to enter stipulated evidence concerning the results of a medical examination of the rape victim, since defendant could not have been surprised by the admission of the evidence, and there was therefore no prejudice to him. State v. Revelle, 301 N.C. 153, 270 S.E.2d 476 (1980).

Double jeopardy principles are not applicable to evidence introduced at the rebuttal phase of trial. State v. Lowery, 318 N.C. 54, 347 S.E.2d 729 (1986).

The judge may permit a party to offer new evidence during rebuttal which could have been offered in the party's case in chief or during a previous rebuttal, but if new evidence is allowed, the other party must be permitted further rebuttal. State v. Lowery, 318 N.C. 54, 347 S.E.2d 729 (1986).

In the absence of a procedure which prevents the defendant from having an opportunity to challenge or rebut new evidence offered by the State, allowing the State to present new evidence on rebuttal does not violate defendant's right to due process. State v. Lowery, 318 N.C. 54, 347 S.E.2d 729 (1986).

Rebuttal of Testimony as to Defendant's Character. — Where defendant put his character in issue by having witnesses testify concerning his reputation for peacefulness, and only then did the prosecutor, in accordance with § 8C-1, Rules 404(a)(1) and 405(a), cross-examine witnesses about specific instances of conduct by defendant, in an effort to rebut their prior testimony as to defendant's character for peacefulness, the answers to the prosecutor's questions were properly admitted. State v. Gappins, 320 N.C. 64, 357 S.E.2d 654 (1987).

Trial judge did not err in allowing the State to recall victim after the close of defendant's evidence, where the State requested a bench conference less than 15 minutes after learning that the victim wished to testify after having heard defendant's voice as he testified on the stand, and the trial judge allowed defendant's request for a recess, tendered the victim for voir dire examination, and entered into the record extensive findings of fact. State v. Torian, 316 N.C. 111, 340 S.E.2d 465, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 836, 107 S. Ct. 133, 93 L. Ed. 2d 76 (1986).

Refusal to Reopen Case Held Not Error. — Where defendant was given an opportunity to present evidence, was available, and could have been called to testify on his own behalf, but defendant did not move to reopen his case, but only moved for a mistrial, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion by refusing to allow defendant to reopen his case and testify and by denying defendant's motion for a mistrial. State v. Perkins, 57 N.C. App. 516, 291 S.E.2d 865 (1982).

Reversible Error Not Shown. — The trial court did not commit reversible error when, at the request of the jury, it allowed a State witness to retake the stand and testify as to the date of a photographic lineup without the court acknowledging to the jury that the witness' earlier testimony as to the date thereof had been different. State v. Riggins, 321 N.C. 107, 361 S.E.2d 558 (1987).

Scope of Testimony. — Where witnesses' testimony on redirect examination went beyond the scope of her testimony during direct and cross-examination but the testimony was relevant and otherwise admissible and after its admission, the trial court provided the defendant an opportunity to recross-examine the witness, the trial court did not abuse its discretion. State v. Barton, 335 N.C. 696, 441 S.E.2d 295 (1994).

§ 15A-1227. Motion for dismissal.

(a) A motion for dismissal for insufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction may be made at the following times:

(1) Upon close of the State's evidence.

(2) Upon close of all the evidence.

(3) After return of a verdict of guilty and before entry of judgment.

(4) After discharge of the jury without a verdict and before the end of the session.

(b) Failure to make the motion at the close of the State's evidence or after all the evidence is not a bar to making the motion at a later time as provided in subsection (a).

(c) The judge must rule on a motion to dismiss for insufficiency of the evidence before the trial may proceed.

(d) The sufficiency of all evidence introduced in a criminal case is reviewable on appeal without regard to whether a motion has been made during trial, as provided in G.S. 15A-1446(d)(5). (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsection (b) is new and changes a rule which the Commission believed had little utility.

The Commission believed the practice of reserving decision on a motion is little followed at present in North Carolina — and ought not to be encouraged. It therefore amended a draft provision based on the procedure of another jurisdiction, authorizing reservation of decision on the motion to dismiss, to bar such a procedure. This decision is reflected in subsection (c). Compare A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury, § 4.5.

Subsection (d) will allow appeal whether or not a motion has been made or renewed, and thus constitutes a change in the law. The phrase "all evidence" in that subsection, however, indicates that the reviewing court must consider the evidence of the defendant as well as that of the State in determining the question of sufficiency. In this respect the subsection represents a continuation of the rule presently followed by the Supreme Court of North Carolina.

CASE NOTES

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Section 15-173 Compared. — Both § 15-173 and this section allow motions to dismiss to be made at the close of the State's evidence. However, they are not identical. Section 15-173 provides that "If the defendant introduces evidence, he thereby waives any motion for dismissal or judgment as in case of nonsuit which he may have made prior to the introduction of his evidence and cannot urge such prior motion as ground for appeal." Although no such provision is contained in this section, its enactment did not create a new type of motion to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence. State v. Mendez, 42 N.C. App. 141, 256 S.E.2d 405 (1979); State v. Lowery, 309 N.C. 763, 309 S.E.2d 232 (1983).

A defendant's motion to dismiss under subdivision (a)(1) of this section for insufficiency of the evidence to go to the jury is tantamount to a motion for nonsuit under § 15-173. State v. Bruce, 315 N.C. 273, 337 S.E.2d 510 (1985).

Motion for Dismissal Similar to Motion for Nonsuit. — A motion for dismissal pursuant to this section tests the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction. In that respect it is identical to a motion for judgment as in the case of nonsuit under § 15-173. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979); State v. Jenkins, 300 N.C. 578, 268 S.E.2d 458 (1980); State v. Dunbar, 47 N.C. App. 623, 267 S.E.2d 577 (1980).

A challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction is still properly made by either a motion for dismissal or a motion for judgment as in the case of nonsuit. Both motions were known to the law for many years prior to the enactment of this section. The motion for dismissal referred to in this section is the same motion for dismissal referred to in § 15-173. Therefore, there is but one motion for dismissal for insufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction, and that motion is governed by the provisions of both § 15-173 and this section. State v. Mendez, 42 N.C. App. 141, 256 S.E.2d 405 (1979).

The defendant's motion to dismiss for insufficiency of the evidence is tantamount to a motion for nonsuit. State v. Greer, 308 N.C. 515, 302 S.E.2d 774 (1983).

A motion to dismiss under this section is substantively identical to a motion for nonsuit under § 15-173. State v. Cameron, 83 N.C. App. 69, 349 S.E.2d 327 (1986).

Applicability of Cases Dealing with Motion for Nonsuit. — Controlling cases dealing with the sufficiency of evidence to withstand a motion for judgment as in the case of nonsuit are equally applicable to the sufficiency of the evidence to withstand a motion for dismissal pursuant to this section. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979).

A motion for dismissal under this section is identical to a motion to dismiss the action, or for judgment as in the case of nonsuit, under § 15-173 in this respect: both statutes allow counsel to make a motion challenging the sufficiency of the evidence at the close of the State's evidence or at the close of all the evidence. Hence, cases dealing with the sufficiency of the evidence to withstand the latter motion made under the older statute, § 15-173, are applicable when ruling on motions made under this section, the more recent statute. State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982).

Cases pertaining to the sufficiency of the evidence under § 15-173 are also applicable to motions made pursuant to this section. State v. Lowery, 309 N.C. 763, 309 S.E.2d 232 (1983).

Duty of Trial Court and Jury. — It is for the trial court to determine whether substantial evidence which will support a reasonable inference of the defendant's guilt has been introduced. The trial court having found that such evidence has been introduced, it is solely for the jury to determine whether the facts taken singly or in combination satisfy them beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is in fact guilty. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979).

The trial court must decide whether there is substantial evidence of each element of the offense charged. State v. Jackson, 74 N.C. App. 92, 327 S.E.2d 270 (1985).

Court Need Not Exclude Every Reasonable Hypothesis of Innocence. — The trial court is not required to determine that the evidence excludes every reasonable hypothesis of innocence prior to denying a defendant's motion to dismiss. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979); State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982); State v. Bruce, 315 N.C. 273, 337 S.E.2d 510 (1985); State v. Hope, 317 N.C. 302, 345 S.E.2d 361 (1986); State v. Beaver, 317 N.C. 643, 346 S.E.2d 476 (1986).

When the motion calls into question the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence, the question for the Court is whether a reasonable inference of defendant's guilt may be drawn from the circumstances. If so, it is for the jury to decide whether the facts, taken singly or in combination, satisfy them beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is actually guilty. However, inference may not be based on inference. Every inference must stand upon some clear and direct evidence, and not upon some other inference. State v. Davis, 74 N.C. App. 208, 328 S.E.2d 11, writ denied, 313 N.C. 510, 329 S.E.2d 406 (1985).

Preference for Submission to Jury in Borderline Cases. — In borderline or close cases, courts have consistently expressed a preference for submitting issues to the jury, both in reliance on the common sense and fairness of the 12 and to avoid unnecessary appeals. State v. Hamilton, 77 N.C. App. 506, 335 S.E.2d 506 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 593, 341 S.E.2d 33 (1986).

Defendants' motion must be denied if the State has offered substantial evidence against defendant of every essential element of the crime charged. State v. Porter, 303 N.C. 680, 281 S.E.2d 377 (1980).

If there is substantial evidence to support a finding that the offense has been committed and that defendant committed it, a case for the jury is made and nonsuit should be denied. State v. Cunnings, 46 N.C. App. 680, 265 S.E.2d 923, aff'd, 301 N.C. 374, 271 S.E.2d 277 (1980); State v. Bondurant, 309 N.C. 674, 309 S.E.2d 170 (1983).

If there is substantial evidence that the offense charged in the bill of indictment, or a lesser offense included therein has been committed, and that the defendant committed it, the case is properly for the jury. State v. Dunbar, 47 N.C. App. 623, 267 S.E.2d 577 (1980).

If there is substantial evidence-whether direct, circumstantial, or both-to support a finding that the offense charged has been committed and that the defendant committed it, the case is for the jury and the motion to dismiss should be denied. State v. Locklear, 322 N.C. 349, 368 S.E.2d 377 (1988).

Ruling on Motion Which Is Based on All Counts. — The State's argument that where a motion to nonsuit is not limited to a particular count but is addressed to all counts, the motion cannot be allowed where there is sufficient evidence to support any count was without merit. State v. Taylor, 37 N.C. App. 709, 246 S.E.2d 834, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 737, 248 S.E.2d 866 (1978).

Timing of Request for Relief. — Trial court did not have authority to grant criminal defendant's motion to dismiss felony child abuse charges pursuant to § 15A-1227, which was contained in defendant's motion for appropriate relief, as that statute requires that the motion be made before the end of the session and the session had been adjourned by the time defendant filed her motion for appropriate relief. State v. Allen, 144 N.C. App. 386, 548 S.E.2d 554 (2001).

Failure to Move for Dismissal Does Not Constitute Ineffective Representation. — Defense counsel's failure to move for dismissal on the grounds of insufficient evidence at the close of all the evidence did not prejudice the defendant and did not constitute ineffective representation because the sufficiency of the evidence is reviewable on appeal without regard to whether a motion was made at trial. State v. Roberts, 49 N.C. App. 52, 270 S.E.2d 559 (1980), appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 726, 276 S.E.2d 286 (1981).

Effect of Dismissal. — A motion to dismiss pursuant to this section tests the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction and, in that respect, is identical to a motion for judgment as in the case of nonsuit under § 15-173. Therefore, following such dismissal defendant cannot again be placed in jeopardy upon these same charges, and the State has no right of appeal from the judgment entered. State v. Ausley, 78 N.C. App. 791, 338 S.E.2d 547 (1986).

Evidence sufficient to overrule motion to dismiss is also sufficient to overrule motion for directed verdict, since both motions have the same legal effect. State v. Stinson, 65 N.C. App. 570, 309 S.E.2d 528 (1983), rev'd in part, 310 N.C. 737, 314 S.E.2d 546 (1984).

II. QUESTION PRESENTED.

Test of Sufficiency of Evidence. — Upon defendant's motion for dismissal, the question for the court is whether there is substantial evidence (1) of each essential element of the offense charged, or of a lesser offense included therein, and (2) of defendant's being the perpetrator of such offense. If so, the motion is properly denied. State v. Powell, 299 N.C. 95, 261 S.E.2d 114 (1980); State v. Davis, 48 N.C. App. 526, 269 S.E.2d 291, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 237, 283 S.E.2d 134 (1980); State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982); State v. Lowery, 309 N.C. 763, 309 S.E.2d 232 (1983); State v. Stinson, 65 N.C. App. 570, 309 S.E.2d 528 (1983), rev'd in part, 310 N.C. 737, 314 S.E.2d 546 (1984); State v. Greene, 74 N.C. App. 21, 328 S.E.2d 1 (1985); State v. Davis, 74 N.C. App. 208, 328 S.E.2d 11 (1985); State v. Riddick, 315 N.C. 749, 340 S.E.2d 55 (1986).

In considering a motion to dismiss, it is the duty of the court to ascertain if there is substantial evidence of each essential element of the offense charged. State v. Hutchins, 303 N.C. 321, 279 S.E.2d 788 (1981).

The trial court must determine as a question of law whether the State has offered substantial evidence of defendant's guilt on every essential element of the crime charged. State v. Corbett, 307 N.C. 169, 297 S.E.2d 553 (1982).

The test of the sufficiency of the evidence in a criminal case is whether there is substantial evidence of all elements of the offense charged so any rational trier of fact could find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the offense. State v. Thompson, 306 N.C. 526, 294 S.E.2d 314 (1982); State v. Hope, 317 N.C. 302, 345 S.E.2d 361 (1986).

In ruling upon the defendant's motion to dismiss, the trial court is limited solely to the function of determining whether a reasonable inference of the defendant's guilt of the crime charged may be drawn from the evidence. State v. Tate, 58 N.C. App. 494, 294 S.E.2d 16, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 306 N.C. 750, 295 S.E.2d 763 (1982), aff'd, 307 N.C. 464, 298 S.E.2d 386 (1983).

In ruling upon the defendant's motion to dismiss or for judgment as in the case of nonsuit, the trial court is limited solely to the function of determining whether a reasonable inference of the defendant's guilt of the crime charged may be drawn from the evidence. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979); State v. Callihan, 47 N.C. App. 360, 267 S.E.2d 28 (1980); State v. Thobourne, 59 N.C. App. 584, 297 S.E.2d 774 (1982).

In a motion to dismiss, the question presented is whether the evidence is legally sufficient to support a verdict of guilty on the offense charged, thereby warranting submission of the charge to the jury. State v. Thomas, 65 N.C. App. 539, 309 S.E.2d 564 (1983); State v. Hope, 317 N.C. 302, 345 S.E.2d 361 (1986); State v. Beaver, 317 N.C. 643, 346 S.E.2d 476 (1986).

Upon defendant's motion for dismissal, the question for the trial court is whether there is substantial evidence (1) of each essential element of the offense charged, or of a lesser offense included therein, and (2) that defendant was the perpetrator of the offense. If there is such substantial evidence, the motion must be denied. However, if the evidence is sufficient only to raise a suspicion or conjecture as to either the commission of the offense or the identity of the perpetrator, the motion should be allowed. In considering a motion to dismiss, the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to the State, and the State is entitled to every reasonable inference to be drawn therefrom. State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983); State v. Malloy, 309 N.C. 176, 305 S.E.2d 718 (1983).

When a defendant moves under subdivision (a)(2) of this section or under § 15-173 for dismissal at the close of all of the evidence, the trial court is to determine whether there is substantial evidence (a) of each essential element of the offense charged, or of a lesser offense included therein, and (b) of the defendant's being the perpetrator of the offense. State v. Bruce, 315 N.C. 273, 337 S.E.2d 510 (1985).

The question presented on defendant's motion to dismiss is whether, upon consideration of all the evidence, whether competent or incompetent, in the light most favorable to the State, there is substantial evidence that the crime charged in the bill of indictment was committed and that defendant was a perpetrator of that crime. State v. Perry, 316 N.C. 87, 340 S.E.2d 450 (1986).

When a defendant moves for dismissal based on insufficiency of the evidence, the trial court must determine whether there is substantial evidence of each essential element of the offense charged, and evidence of defendant being the one who committed the crime. State v. Moore, 87 N.C. App. 156, 360 S.E.2d 293 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 477, 364 S.E.2d 664 (1988).

Sufficiency, Not Weight, of Evidence Is Test. — The trial court in considering motions for nonsuit or for dismissal pursuant to this section is concerned only with the sufficiency of the evidence to carry the case to the jury and not with its weight. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979); State v. Sheetz, 46 N.C. App. 641, 265 S.E.2d 914 (1980); State v. Lowery, 309 N.C. 763, 309 S.E.2d 232 (1983).

The trial court's function is to determine whether the evidence allows a reasonable inference to be drawn as to the defendant's guilt of the crimes charged. In so doing the trial court should only be concerned that the evidence is sufficient to get the case to the jury; it should not be concerned with the weight of the evidence. State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982).

Test Same Whether Evidence Is Circumstantial or Direct. — The test of whether the evidence is sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss is whether a reasonable inference of defendant's guilt may be drawn from the evidence and the test is the same whether the evidence is circumstantial or direct. State v. Bright, 301 N.C. 243, 271 S.E.2d 368 (1980); State v. Lowery, 309 N.C. 763, 309 S.E.2d 232 (1983).

The test of the sufficiency of evidence to withstand dismissal is the same whether the State's evidence is direct, circumstantial, or a combination of the two. State v. Porter, 303 N.C. 680, 281 S.E.2d 377 (1980); State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982); State v. Davis, 74 N.C. App. 208, 328 S.E.2d 11, writ denied, 313 N.C. 510, 329 S.E.2d 406 (1985).

The test of the sufficiency of the evidence to withstand the motion to dismiss is the same whether the evidence is direct, circumstantial or both. That test is whether a reasonable inference of the defendant's guilt may be drawn from the evidence. If so the evidence is substantial and the defendant's motion to dismiss must be denied. State v. Malloy, 309 N.C. 176, 305 S.E.2d 718 (1983).

Test of sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction is the same whether the evidence is direct, circumstantial or both: Whether the jury may infer defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt from the circumstances. State v. Mack, 87 N.C. App. 24, 359 S.E.2d 485 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 477, 364 S.E.2d 663 (1988).

III. EVIDENCE ON MOTION.

A. In General.

What Evidence Must Show to Survive Motion. — The evidence, considered in the light most favorable to the State and indulging every inference in favor of the State, must be such that a jury could reasonably find the essential elements of the crime charged beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Thomas, 65 N.C. App. 539, 309 S.E.2d 564 (1983).

Substantial Evidence Must Be Shown. — The amount of evidence required as to each essential element in order to withstand motions for judgment as in the case of nonsuit or for dismissal is controlled by the "substantial evidence" or "more than a scintilla of evidence" test. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979).

To withstand a motion to dismiss, there must be substantial evidence of all material elements of the offense. State v. Keeter, 42 N.C. App. 642, 257 S.E.2d 480 (1979); State v. Murphy, 49 N.C. App. 443, 271 S.E.2d 573 (1980); State v. Seufert, 49 N.C. App. 524, 271 S.E.2d 756

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the State, the trial court must determine whether there is "substantial evidence" to support each element of the offense. State v. Greer, 308 N.C. 515, 302 S.E.2d 774 (1983); State v. Capps, 77 N.C. App. 400, 335 S.E.2d 189 (1985); State v. Dillard, 90 N.C. App. 318, 368 S.E.2d 442 (1988).

In order to withstand a motion to dismiss, the State's evidence as to each element of the offense charged must be substantial. Substantial evidence in this context means more than a scintilla. State v. Thomas, 65 N.C. App. 539, 309 S.E.2d 564 (1983).

The test of the sufficiency of the evidence in a criminal case is whether there is substantial evidence of each essential element of the offense charged, or of a lesser included offense of that charged. State v. Workman, 309 N.C. 594, 308 S.E.2d 264 (1983); State v. Robbins, 309 N.C. 771, 309 S.E.2d 188 (1983).

To withstand defendant's motion to dismiss, the State is required to show substantial evidence of each of the essential elements of the crime. State v. Bates, 309 N.C. 528, 308 S.E.2d 258 (1983); State v. James, 77 N.C. App. 219, 334 S.E.2d 452 (1985).

In order to overcome a motion to dismiss, the State must introduce more than a scintilla of evidence of each essential element of the offense and that the defendant was the perpetrator of the offense. State v. Davy, 100 N.C. App. 551, 397 S.E.2d 634 (1990).

Reasonable Inference Warrants Sending Case to Jury. — If the trial court determines that a reasonable inference of the defendant's guilt may be drawn from the evidence, it must deny the defendant's motion and send the case to the jury even though the evidence may also support reasonable inferences of the defendant's innocence. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979); State v. Tate, 58 N.C. App. 494, 294 S.E.2d 16, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 306 N.C. 750, 295 S.E.2d 763 (1982), aff'd, 307 N.C. 464, 298 S.E.2d 386 (1983).

If there be any evidence tending to prove the fact in issue or which reasonably conduces to its conclusion as a fairly logical and legitimate deduction, and not merely such as raises a suspicion or conjecture, the case should be submitted to the jury. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979); State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982).

If the trial court determines that a reasonable inference of defendant's guilt can be drawn from the evidence, then the defendant's motion to dismiss should be denied and the case should be submitted to the jury. State v. Lowery, 309 N.C. 763, 309 S.E.2d 232 (1983).

Evidence Must Be More Than Seeming or Imaginary. — The requirement that the State's evidence of each element be "substantial" is simply a requirement that it be existing and real, not just seeming or imaginary. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979); State v. Leonard, 74 N.C. App. 443, 328 S.E.2d 593, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 120, 332 S.E.2d 487 (1985).

The terms "more than a scintilla of evidence" and "substantial evidence" are in reality the same and simply mean that the evidence must be existing and real, not just seeming or imaginary. State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982); State v. Greene, 74 N.C. App. 21, 328 S.E.2d 1, modified and aff'd, 314 N.C. 649, 336 S.E.2d 87 (1985); State v. Davis, 74 N.C. App. 208, 328 S.E.2d 11 (1985); State v. Spangler, 314 N.C. 374, 333 S.E.2d 722 (1985).

Suspicion Insufficient to Withstand Motion. — Upon defendant's motion for dismissal, if the evidence is sufficient only to raise a suspicion or conjecture as to either the commission of the offense or the identity of the defendant as the perpetrator of it, the motion should be allowed. This is true even though the suspicion so aroused by the evidence is strong. State v. Powell, 299 N.C. 95, 261 S.E.2d 114 (1980); State v. Bright, 301 N.C. 243, 271 S.E.2d 368 (1980); State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982).

If the evidence is sufficient only to raise a suspicion or conjecture as to either the commission of the offense or the identity of the defendant as the perpetrator, the motion to dismiss should be allowed. State v. Bates, 309 N.C. 528, 308 S.E.2d 258 (1983).

It is immaterial whether the evidence is direct, circumstantial, or both. State v. Bradley, 65 N.C. App. 359, 309 S.E.2d 510 (1983); State v. James, 77 N.C. App. 219, 334 S.E.2d 452 (1985).

Record Devoid of Evidence Even to Raise Suspicion. — Where the record was devoid of any evidence which even raised a suspicion or conjecture as to defendant's guilt, it certainly did not contain the substantial evidence of all material elements of the offense necessary to withstand a motion to dismiss. State v. Lanier, 50 N.C. App. 383, 273 S.E.2d 746, cert. denied, 302 N.C. 632, 280 S.E.2d 445 (1981).

Incompetent Evidence May Be Considered. — For purposes of a motion to dismiss, incompetent evidence may be considered. Thus, assuming arguendo that a witness was improperly qualified as an expert, his testimony would still support denial of the motion to dismiss. State v. Sheetz, 46 N.C. App. 641, 265 S.E.2d 914 (1980).

Evidence Must Be Considered in Light Most Favorable to State. — In considering a motion for judgment as in the case of nonsuit or a motion for dismissal pursuant to this section, the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to the State, and the State is entitled to every reasonable intendment and every reasonable inference to be drawn therefrom. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979); State v. Easterling, 300 N.C. 594, 268 S.E.2d 800 (1980); State v. Bright, 301 N.C. 243, 271 S.E.2d 368 (1980); State v. Sheetz, 46 N.C. App. 641, 265 S.E.2d 914 (1980); State v. Cummings, 46 N.C. App. 680, 265 S.E.2d 923, aff'd, 301 N.C. 374, 271 S.E.2d 277 (1980); State v. Martin, 47 N.C. App. 223, 267 S.E.2d 35, appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 238, 283 S.E.2d 134 (1980); State v. McGee, 47 N.C. App. 280, 267 S.E.2d 67, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 101, 273 S.E.2d 306 (1980); State v. McCaskill, 47 N.C. App. 289, 267 S.E.2d 331, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 101, 273 S.E.2d 306 (1980); State v. Jones, 47 N.C. App. 554, 268 S.E.2d 6 (1980); State v. Dunbar, 47 N.C. Murphy, 49 N.C. App. 443, 271 S.E.2d 573 (1980); State v. Clements, 51 N.C. App. 113, 275 S.E.2d 222 (1981); State v. Gray, 56 N.C. App. 400, 335 S.E.2d 189 (1985); State v. Hamilton, 77 N.C. App. 506, 335 S.E.2d 506 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 593, 341 S.E.2d 33 (1986).

In ruling on a motion to dismiss, the trial court is to consider the evidence in the light most favorable to the State. In so doing, the State is entitled to every reasonable intendment and every reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence; contradictions and discrepancies do not warrant dismissal of the case — they are for the jury to resolve. State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982); State v. Workman, 309 N.C. 594, 308 S.E.2d 264 (1983); State v. Mack, 87 N.C. App. 24, 359 S.E.2d 485 (1987); State v. Hartman, 90 N.C. App. 379, 368 S.E.2d 396 (1988).

In passing upon a motion to dismiss pursuant to this section, all of the evidence admitted, whether competent or incompetent, is viewed in the light most favorable to the State, and the State is entitled to every reasonable inference therefrom. State v. Hutchins, 303 N.C. 321, 279 S.E.2d 788 (1981); State v. Bates, 309 N.C. 528, 308 S.E.2d 258 (1983); State v. Jackson, 74 N.C. App. 92, 327 S.E.2d 270 (1985).

In ruling upon defendants' motion to dismiss, trial court is required to interpret the evidence in the light most favorable to the State, drawing all reasonable inferences in the State's favor. State v. Porter, 303 N.C. 680, 281 S.E.2d 377 (1980); State v. White, 307 N.C. 42, 296 S.E.2d 267 (1982); State v. Corbett, 307 N.C. 169, 297 S.E.2d 553 (1982); State v. Parrish, 73 N.C. App. 662, 327 S.E.2d 613 (1985); State v. Leonard, 74 N.C. App. 443, 328 S.E.2d 593, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 120, 332 S.E.2d 487 (1985); State v. Locklear, 322 N.C. 349, 368 S.E.2d 377 (1988).

When a defendant moves for dismissal in a criminal action, the trial judge must consider the evidence in the light most favorable to the State, take it as true, and give to the State the benefit of every reasonable inference to be drawn therefrom. If there is evidence, direct or circumstantial or both, from which a jury could find that the offense charged had been committed and that defendant committed it, the motion to dismiss should be denied. State v. Simmons, 57 N.C. App. 548, 291 S.E.2d 815 (1982).

Upon a motion to dismiss made pursuant to this section, the trial court must consider evidence in the light most favorable to the State, giving the State the benefit of every reasonable intendment and every reasonable inference which may be drawn therefrom. Even so, the State is required to produce substantial evidence to prove the allegations in the bill of indictment. In other words, the evidence must be existing and real, not just seeming or imaginary. State v. Overton, 60 N.C. App. 1, 298 S.E.2d 695 (1982), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 307 N.C. 580, 299 S.E.2d 652 (1983).

In making its determination on the sufficiency of the evidence pursuant to a motion to dismiss under this section, the trial court must consider the evidence in the light most favorable to the State. The State is entitled to every reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence, and any contradictions and discrepancies are to be resolved in favor of the State. All of the evidence actually admitted, whether competent or incompetent, which is favorable to the State must be considered by the trial court in ruling on the motion. State v. Malloy, 309 N.C. 176, 305 S.E.2d 718 (1983).

When defendant moves under subdivision (a)(2) of this section or under § 15-173 for dismissal at the close of all the evidence, the trial court is to view all of the evidence in the light most favorable to the state and give the state all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from the evidence supporting the charges against the defendant. The trial court must determine as a matter of law whether the state has offered substantial evidence of all elements of the offense charged so any rational trier of fact could find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the offense. State v. Bruce, 315 N.C. 273, 337 S.E.2d 510 (1985).

When a defendant moves for dismissal at the close of all the evidence, the trial court is to view all of the evidence in the light most favorable to the state and give it all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from the evidence supporting the charges against the defendant. State v. Beaver, 317 N.C. 643, 346 S.E.2d 476 (1986).

Evidence Favorable to State Considered as Whole. — In passing on a motion to dismiss or for judgment as in the case of nonsuit, evidence favorable to the State is to be considered as a whole in order to determine its sufficiency. This is especially necessary in a case when the proof offered is circumstantial, for rarely will one bit of such evidence be sufficient, in itself, to point to a defendant's guilt. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979).

In ruling on the motion, evidence favorable to the State is to be considered as a whole in determining its sufficiency. State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982).

Court is to consider all evidence actually admitted, which is favorable to the State, whether competent or incompetent. State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982); State v. Spangler, 314 N.C. 374, 333 S.E.2d 722 (1985).

All Evidence Favorable to State Must Be Accepted as True. — All evidence admitted during the trial, whether competent or incompetent, which is favorable to the State must be taken as true, and contradictions or discrepancies therein must be resolved in the State's favor. State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979); State v. Sheetz, 46 N.C. App. 641, 265 S.E.2d 914 (1980); State v. Capps, 77 N.C. App. 400, 335 S.E.2d 189 (1985).

Only evidence favorable to the State is considered in a motion to dismiss, and contradictions and discrepancies in the evidence are for the jury. State v. Gray, 56 N.C. App. 667, 289 S.E.2d 894, cert. denied, 306 N.C. 388, 294 S.E.2d 214 (1982).

All Evidence Introduced Must Be Considered. — Defendant's motion to dismiss must be considered in light of all the evidence introduced by the State, as well as that introduced by defendant. State v. Perry, 316 N.C. 87, 340 S.E.2d 450 (1986).

Contradictions and discrepancies do not warrant dismissal of case. They are for the jury to resolve. State v. Spangler, 314 N.C. 374, 333 S.E.2d 722 (1985); State v. Hamilton, 77 N.C. App. 506, 335 S.E.2d 506 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 593, 341 S.E.2d 33 (1986); State v. Bruce, 315 N.C. 273, 337 S.E.2d 510 (1985).

Inconsistencies in the state's evidence were for the jury to weigh and consider. State v. Davy, 100 N.C. App. 551, 397 S.E.2d 634 (1990).

Evidence of Motive and Opportunity. — When the question is whether evidence of both motive and opportunity will be sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss, the answer appears to rest more upon the strength of the evidence of motive and opportunity, as well as other available evidence, rather than an easily quantifiable "bright line" test. State v. Bell, 65 N.C. App. 234, 309 S.E.2d 464 (1983), aff'd, 311 N.C. 299, 316 S.E.2d 72 (1984).

Evidence of either motive or opportunity alone is insufficient to carry a case to the jury. State v. Bell, 65 N.C. App. 234, 309 S.E.2d 464 (1983), aff'd, 311 N.C. 299, 316 S.E.2d 72 (1984).

Sufficiency of Fingerprint Evidence. — When the State relies on a fingerprint found at the scene of the crime, in order to withstand a motion to dismiss, there must be substantial evidence of circumstances from which the jury can find that the fingerprint could have been impressed only at the time the crime was committed. State v. Berry, 58 N.C. App. 355, 293 S.E.2d 650 (1982), aff'd, 307 N.C. 467, 298 S.E.2d 386 (1983).

The rule in a case involving fingerprint evidence is that a motion for dismissal or nonsuit is properly denied if, in addition to testimony by a qualified expert that the fingerprints at the scene of the crime match those of the accused, there is substantial evidence of circumstances from which a jury could find that the fingerprints were impressed at the time the crime was committed. State v. Bradley, 65 N.C. App. 359, 309 S.E.2d 510 (1983).

Defendant's motion to dismiss is properly denied if there is substantial evidence of each essential element of the offense charged and that defendant committed the offense. State v. Leonard, 74 N.C. App. 443, 328 S.E.2d 593, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 120, 332 S.E.2d 487 (1985).

B. Substantial Evidence.

"Substantial Evidence" Defined. — Substantial evidence is such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. State v. Cummings, 46 N.C. App. 680, 265 S.E.2d 923, aff'd, 301 N.C. 374, 271 S.E.2d 277 (1980); State v. Porter, 303 N.C. 680, 281 S.E.2d 377 (1980); State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982);

State v. Corbett, 307 N.C. 169, 297 S.E.2d 553 (1982); State v. Pryor, 59 N.C. App. 1, 295 S.E.2d 610 (1982); State v. Greer, 308 N.C. 515, 302 S.E.2d 774 (1983); State v. Jackson, 74 N.C. App. 92, 327 S.E.2d 270 (1985); State v. Leonard, 74 N.C. App. 443, 328 S.E.2d 593, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 120, 332 S.E.2d 487 (1985).

"More than a scintilla of evidence" test and "substantial evidence" test are in reality only one test which is most frequently designated the "substantial evidence test." State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979).

Anything more than a scintilla of evidence is "substantial evidence." State v. Smith, 40 N.C. App. 72, 252 S.E.2d 535 (1979).

Existence of Substantial Evidence Is a Question of Law. — Whether the State offered substantial evidence to withstand a motion to dismiss for insufficiency of the evidence is a question of law for the trial court. State v. Seufert, 49 N.C. App. 524, 271 S.E.2d 756 (1980), cert. denied, 301 N.C. 726, 276 S.E.2d 289 (1981); State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982).

What is substantial evidence is a question of law for the court; what the evidence proves or not is a question for the jury. State v. Bradley, 65 N.C. App. 359, 309 S.E.2d 510 (1983).

C. Defendant's Evidence.

Defendant's evidence, unless favorable to the State, is not to be taken into consideration. However, when not in conflict with the State's evidence, it may be used to explain or clarify the evidence offered by the State. State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982).

If defendant does present evidence, it is disregarded on his motion to dismiss except to the extent that it is favorable to the State. State v. Hamilton, 77 N.C. App. 506, 335 S.E.2d 506 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 593, 341 S.E.2d 33 (1986).

Court must consider defendant's evidence which explains or clarifies that offered by the State. State v. Bates, 309 N.C. 528, 308 S.E.2d 258 (1983).

Court must consider defendant's evidence which rebuts the inference of guilt when it is not inconsistent with the State's evidence. State v. Bates, 309 N.C. 528, 308 S.E.2d 258 (1983).

IV. APPEAL FROM RULING ON MOTION.

A. In General.

Necessity of Objecting, etc., at Trial. — Although § 15A-1446(d)(5) allows a defendant to appeal on insufficiency of evidence grounds, notwithstanding the fact that no objection, exception or motion was made at trial, this statute is negated by N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(3), which states that a defendant may not assign as error the insufficiency of the evidence to prove the crime charged unless he moves to dismiss the action, or for judgment as in case of nonsuit at trial. State v. Jordan, 321 N.C. 714, 365 S.E.2d 617 (1988).

Question on Review of Denial of Motion. — In reviewing the denial of a motion to dismiss, the evidence adduced at trial must be examined in the light most favorable to the State to determine if there is substantial evidence of every essential element of the crime. Evidence is "substantial" if a reasonable person would consider it sufficient to support the conclusion that the essential element exists. State v. McKinnon, 306 N.C. 288, 293 S.E.2d 118 (1982).

The reviewing court must examine the evidence to determine whether any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. McKinnon, 306 N.C. 288, 293 S.E.2d 118 (1982).

Motion to dismiss which is improperly phrased will not destroy reviewability on appeal. State v. Taylor, 37 N.C. App. 709, 246 S.E.2d 834, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 737, 248 S.E.2d 866 (1978).

State's Right to Appeal. — The State of North Carolina had the right to appeal the trial court's order grant of a defense motion dismissing an impaired driving charge after the jury had found the defendant guilty, because a reversal would only result in reinstatement of the jury's verdict, and not a new trial. State v. Scott, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 916, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 859 (2001).

B. Introduction of Evidence at Trial by Defendant.

Waiver of Motion at Close of State's Evidence. — Having elected to offer evidence defendant waived her motion to dismiss at the close of the State's evidence, and proper consideration is thereafter upon her motion to dismiss made at the close of all the evidence. State v. Leonard, 300 N.C. 223, 266 S.E.2d 631, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 960, 101 S. Ct. 372, 66 L. Ed. 2d 227 (1980).

By preventing evidence at trial, defendant held to have waived his right to assert the denial of his motion for dismissal made at the close of the State's evidence as error on appeal. State v. Powell, 74 N.C. App. 584, 328 S.E.2d 613 (1985).

Under this section, if defendant introduces evidence following the denial of his motion for nonsuit, he thereby waives any motion for dismissal or judgment as in case of nonsuit which he may have made prior to the introduction of his evidence and cannot urge such prior motion as ground for appeal. State v. Bruce, 315 N.C. 273, 337 S.E.2d 510 (1985).

Effect of Subsection (d) on Waiver of Appeal Under § 15-173. — Under § 15-173, a defendant, by presenting evidence, has waived his right to assert the denial of his motion to dismiss at the close of the State's evidence as a ground for appeal. The provisions of subsection (d) of this section and § 15A-1446(d)(5), allowing review on appeal of the sufficiency of the State's evidence in a criminal case without regard to whether the appropriate motion has been made, do not change this rule. State v. Mendez, 42 N.C. App. 141, 256 S.E.2d 405 (1979).

Although defendant, under § 15-173, waived his motion for nonsuit made at the close of the State's evidence by presenting evidence and failing to renew his motion, pursuant to subsection (d) of this section and § 15A-1446(d)(5), defendant could have requested review of the sufficiency of all of the evidence without regard to whether the proper motion or exception had been made during trial. State v. Alston, 44 N.C. App. 72, 259 S.E.2d 767 (1979), cert. denied, 304 N.C. 589, 290 S.E.2d 709 (1981).

§ 15A-1228. Notes by the jury.

Except where the judge, on the judge's own motion or the motion of any party, directs otherwise, jurors may make notes and take them into the jury room during their deliberations. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1993, c. 498, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section was hotly debated. Some trial attorneys believed that jurors who carefully watched the demeanor of witnesses, not taking notes, are often better judges of the truth of testimony than their fellow jurors assiduously taking notes — who would only have a record of what the witness said. Others in the Commission championed the "modern" position that everyone in our society takes notes, and that it would be foolish to prohibit jurors from doing so. In favor of the taking of notes, see A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury § 4.2. See also State v. Ward, 286 N.C. 304, 210 S.E.2d 407 (1974).

The Commission finally offered a compromise draft which allowed notes to be taken unless a party objected. To keep one side from objecting in the middle of a trial as a stratagem to alter the courtroom dynamics, the Commission's draft required the objection to taking notes to be made before any evidence was offered. The General Assembly, however, removed the restriction on the right to object.

CASE NOTES

Judge May Act in Absence of Objection by Counsel. — This statute does not limit the authority of the trial judge to control the taking of notes by the jury during the course of the trial in the absence of objection by counsel. State v. McNeil, 46 N.C. App. 533, 265 S.E.2d 416, cert. denied, 300 N.C. 560, 270 S.E.2d 114 (1980).

The failure to instruct under this section does not entitle a defendant to a new trial unless he can show some effect thereof on the jury's deliberations. State v. Durham, 74 N.C. App. 121, 327 S.E.2d 312 (1985).

§ 15A-1229. View by jury.

(a) The trial judge in his discretion may permit a jury view. If a view is ordered, the judge must order the jury to be conducted to the place in question in the custody of an officer. The officer must be instructed to permit no person to communicate with the jury on any subject connected with the trial, except as provided in subsection (b), nor to do so himself, and to return the jurors to the courtroom without unnecessary delay or at a specified time. The judge, prosecutor, and counsel for the defendant must be present at the view by the jury. The defendant is entitled to be present at the view by the jury.

(b) A judge in his discretion may permit a witness under oath to testify at the site of the jury view and point out objects and physical characteristics material to his testimony. The testimony must be recorded. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The provision authorizing the taking of testimony at the scene of the view by the jury is an innovation. Although the defendant has a constitutional right to be present, it is believed that he can waive this right even if testimony is taken at the place of the view — so long as the defendant's counsel is there to cross-examine as appropriate and otherwise represent the defendant's interests.

CASE NOTES

Jury Assembled as a Single Body Not Required. — There is no requirement, constitutional or otherwise, that the defendant in a capital case be in the presence of all members of the jury, assembled as a single body, throughout a jury view of the scene of the crime. State v. Harris, 333 N.C. 544, 428 S.E.2d 823 (1993).

Where members of the jury were permitted to roam freely about the home where a murder was committed and were not held together as a body to inspect the premises, defendant's state constitutional rights to be present at all stages of his capital trial were not violated. State v. Harris, 333 N.C. 544, 428 S.E.2d 823 (1993).

Discretion of Trial Court. — The decision to permit a jury view is vested in the discretion of the trial judge. His decision will not be disturbed absent an abuse of discretion. State v. Davis, 86 N.C. App. 25, 356 S.E.2d 607 (1987).

The trial court's decision of whether to permit the jury to view a crime scene will not be disturbed absent an abuse of discretion. State v. Fleming, 350 N.C. 109, 512 S.E.2d 720 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 941, 120 S. Ct. 351, 145 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1999).

Order for Jury View Upheld. — Order drafted jointly by district attorney and defense counsel and entered with only a general objection to the jury view itself, which, while not reciting the language of the statute verbatim, contained sufficient precautionary language to insure that defendant's right to an impartial jury was not impaired, including orders that the jury be accompanied by two deputies, that the jurors not be allowed to talk among themselves, and that no one be allowed to speak with the jury, was sufficient to comply with the requirements of subsection (a) of this section. State v. Davis, 86 N.C. App. 25, 356 S.E.2d 607 (1987).

Judge's reason for allowing the jury view of a restaurant where murders occurred was valid where judge wanted to allow jurors an improved understanding of the size, dimensions, and configuration of the restaurant. State v. French, 342 N.C. 863, 467 S.E.2d 412 (1996).

Jury View Appropriate. — A jury view of the police vehicle that defendant shot during incident was well within the court's discretion and the evidence was relevant as defendant's intent when he fired shots into the vehicle was at issue. State v. Tucker, 347 N.C. 235, 490 S.E.2d 559 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1061, 118 S. Ct. 1389, 140 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1998).

Crime Scene Tampering. — Trial court had no duty to question witnesses about tampering with a crime scene prior to a jury view, where the court was fully informed of all relevant facts and considered the defendant's arguments when making its decision to permit a jury view. State v. Fleming, 350 N.C. 109, 512 S.E.2d 720 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 941, 120 S. Ct. 351, 145 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1999).

§ 15A-1230. Limitations on argument to the jury.

(a) During a closing argument to the jury an attorney may not become abusive, inject his personal experiences, express his personal belief as to the truth or falsity of the evidence or as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, or make arguments on the basis of matters outside the record except for matters concerning which the court may take judicial notice. An attorney may, however, on the basis of his analysis of the evidence, argue any position or conclusion with respect to a matter in issue.

(b) Length, number, and order of arguments allotted to the parties are governed by G.S. 84-14. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Although this section does no more than codify provisions that have long been in the case law and codes of ethics, it nevertheless engendered lengthy debate within the Commission. An original draft more closely modeled on A.B.A. Standards, Function of the Trial Judge § 5.10, was modified to reflect certain language in North Carolina State Bar, Code of Professional Responsibility, DR7-106(C).

As for subsection (b), it should be noted that in another action for 1977 General Assembly created a specific rule on order of argument in the sentencing phase of a capital case. In this separate penalty proceeding, the defendant is always given the right to the last argument. G.S. 15A-2000(a)(4).

Editor's Note. — Section 84-14, referred to in this section, was recodified as § 7A-97.

CASE NOTES

The right to closing argument is substantial legal right of which a defendant may not be deprived by the exercise of a judge's discretion. State v. Eury, 317 N.C. 511, 346 S.E.2d 447 (1986).

The permissible scope of counsel's closing argument to the jury is not unlimited and the trial judge may limit the argument of counsel within his discretion. State v. Whiteside, 325 N.C. 389, 383 S.E.2d 911 (1989).

When, in a capital case, a defendant does not offer evidence and is entitled to both open and close the argument to the jury, his attorneys may each address the jury as many times as they desire during the closing phase of the argument. The only limit to this right is the provision of § 84-14 (see now 7A-97(a)) allowing the trial judge to limit to three the number of counsel on each side who may address the jury. State v. Eury, 317 N.C. 511, 346 S.E.2d 447 (1986).

In a capital case as many as three counsel on each side may argue for as long as they wish and each may address the jury as many times as he desires. State v. Eury, 317 N.C. 511, 346 S.E.2d 447 (1986).

If in a non-capital case defendant elects to present evidence, he is entitled to open the argument to the jury before the prosecution argues, and two of his counsel may address the jury within the time limits prescribed by § 84-14 (see now 7A-97). State v. Eury, 317 N.C. 511, 346 S.E.2d 447 (1986).

If defendant in a non-capital case does not present evidence, he is entitled to both open and close the argument to the jury. In such case he may have one lawyer make the opening argument and one the closing, or he may waive one argument and have both lawyers address the jury during the remaining argument. State v. Eury, 317 N.C. 511, 346 S.E.2d 447 (1986).

Where defendant by stipulation waived her opening argument, the failure of the trial judge to allow both of the defendant's counsel to make the closing argument was prejudicial error in the non-capital as well as the capital charges against her. State v. Eury, 317 N.C. 511, 346 S.E.2d 447 (1986).

Discretion of Trial Judge. — The control of the argument of the district attorney and counsel must be left largely to the discretion of the trial judge, and his rulings thereon will not be disturbed in the absence of gross abuse of discretion. State v. Woods, 56 N.C. App. 193, 287 S.E.2d 431, cert. denied, 305 N.C. 592, 292 S.E.2d 13 (1982).

Control of the arguments of counsel is within the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Paul, 58 N.C. App. 723, 294 S.E.2d 762, cert. denied, 307 N.C. 128, 297 S.E.2d 402 (1982).

Control of the arguments of counsel rests primarily in the discretion of the presiding judge. State v. White, 307 N.C. 42, 296 S.E.2d 267 (1982).

Argument of counsel must be left largely to the control and discretion of the trial judge, and counsel must be allowed wide latitude in their arguments which are warranted by the evidence and are not calculated to mislead or prejudice the jury. State v. Riddle, 311 N.C. 734, 319 S.E.2d 250 (1984).

Generally, counsel is allowed wide latitude in the scope of jury arguments. State v. Hill, 347 N.C. App. 275, 493 S.E.2d 264 (1997).

The prosecutor's assertion that defendant's self-defense claim was "vomit on the law of North Carolina" constituted a permissible expression of the state's position that, in light of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, the jury's determination that defendant acted in self-defense would be an injustice. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

The prosecutor's characterizations of defendant as "this thing" and as "cowardly" did not constitute abusive and impermissible references to defendant where the victim was physically smaller and weaker than defendant and naked and defenseless at the time of the killing and where the prosecutor only referred to him once as "this thing." State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Trial counsel is allowed wide latitude in his argument to the jury and may argue the law and the facts in evidence and all reasonable inference drawn from them. State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 887, 108 S. Ct. 42, 98 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1987).

Counsel is permitted to argue the facts which have been presented, as well as reasonable inferences which can be drawn therefrom. State v. Hill, 347 N.C. App. 275, 493 S.E.2d 264 (1997).

Prosecutors are granted wide latitude in the scope of their argument. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

The State is allowed to draw the jury's attention to the fact that the defendant failed to produce evidence which contradicts the State's case and it is permissible for the prosecutor to draw the jury's attention to the failure of the defendant to produce exculpatory testimony from witnesses available to defendant. State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 887, 108 S. Ct. 42, 98 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1987).

When Impropriety Should Be Brought to Court's Attention. — Ordinarily, an impropriety in counsel's jury argument should be brought to the attention of the trial court before the case is submitted to the jury, in order that the impropriety might be corrected; this rule does not apply, however, when the impropriety is so gross that it cannot be corrected. State v. Woods, 56 N.C. App. 193, 287 S.E.2d 431, cert. denied, 305 N.C. 592, 292 S.E.2d 13 (1982); State v. Sanderson, 62 N.C. App. 520, 302 S.E.2d 899 (1983).

Remarks Held Not To Necessitate Ex Mero Motu Correction. — Remarks by prosecutor during summation were improper in that they equated an adverse ruling regarding the admission of certain evidence with an effort on defendant's part to obscure the truth; however, they were not of the magnitude or character to require that the verdict be set aside, as improprieties during closing arguments, left unchallenged by defendant, must be gross indeed for it to be held that the trial court abused its discretion in not recognizing and correcting ex mero motu the comments regarded by defendant as offensive only on appeal. State v. Brown, 327 N.C. 1, 394 S.E.2d 434 (1990).

The prosecutor's argument that if defendant was found not guilty, "justice in Halifax County will be dead[,]" was not an improper argument. This argument was a hyperbolic expression of the State's position that a not guilty verdict, in light of the evidence of guilt, would be an injustice. State v. Pittman, 332 N.C. 244, 420 S.E.2d 437 (1992).

The prosecutor's uncivil and at times testy remarks, which abused the rules set out in this section and to which the defendant failed to object, while unnecessary personal invective, were not so egregious as to compel the court to intervene and did not jeopardize the fairness of defendant's sentencing hearing. State v. Smith, 352 N.C. 531, 532 S.E.2d 773 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1419, 149 L. Ed. 2d 360 (2001).

Unless the defendant objects, the trial court is not required to interfere ex mero motu unless the arguments stray so far from the bounds of propriety as to impede the defendant's right to a fair trial. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

Argument as Reasonable Inference from the Record. — Where a prosecutor referred to the fact that, when arrested, defendant was found in the woods fifty yards from the place at which he and two witnesses were standing when the police arrested the witness about ninety minutes earlier, the prosecutor's argument that this action demonstrated a consciousness of guilt was a reasonable inference from the record. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

Immediate Instruction Cures Impropriety. — Where, immediately upon a defendant's objection to an improper remark made by the prosecutor in his closing argument, the trial court instructs the jury to disregard the offending statement, the impropriety is cured. State v. Woods, 307 N.C. 213, 297 S.E.2d 574 (1982).

Defendant Must Show Prejudice for New Trial. — As a general rule, improper argument of counsel is cured by the court's action in cautioning counsel to confine argument to matters in evidence and cautioning the jury not to consider it. Defendant is entitled to a new trial only if the impropriety is shown to be prejudicial. State v. Paul, 58 N.C. App. 723, 294 S.E.2d 762, cert. denied, 307 N.C. 128, 297 S.E.2d 402 (1982).

Appellate Review. — When a party fails to object to a closing argument the appellate court must decide whether the argument was so improper as to warrant the trial judge's intervention ex mero motu. State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 887, 108 S. Ct. 42, 98 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1987).

In a case where the defendant fails to object to the State's closing argument the standard of review is one of gross impropriety. State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983),

When a prosecutor becomes abusive and injects his personal views and opinions into the argument before the jury, he violates the rules of fair debate, and it becomes the duty of the trial judge to intervene to stop improper argument. State v. Riddle, 311 N.C. 734, 319 S.E.2d 250 (1984).

Argument of Prior Misconduct as Substantive Evidence of Guilt Held Cured by Instruction. — While it is proper to refer to evidence of prior acts of misconduct in the arguments on the issue of credibility, it is improper for the prosecutor to argue defendant's prior misdeeds for purposes other than mere impeachment, that is, attempting to use these prior acts as substantive evidence of defendant's guilt. But, where each time defendant objected to the challenged remarks, the objections were sustained and the trial judge carefully instructed the jury that they were to consider the evidence of defendant's past behavior only as he would explain in his charge, and the judge then later gave a complete and accurate instruction relating to the jury's consideration of defendant's prior acts of misconduct, the remarks did not constitute prejudice to defendant such that the trial judge was required to declare a mistrial on his own motion. State v. Bondurant, 309 N.C. 674, 309 S.E.2d 170 (1983).

The prosecutor's remarks were not abusive and were not an attempt to place before the jury his personal beliefs or opinions where the prosecutor's references to defendants as wolves and a wolfpack were made to illustrate by way of analogy how concert of action led to each of the defendants' responsibility for the victim's murder. State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 887, 108 S. Ct. 42, 98 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1987).

Prosecutor's Remarks Justified by Brutality of Crime. — Considering the brutality of the crime and that the state was seeking a recommendation of death, prosecutor's statements such as "Sitting over there is probably one of the most brutal, vicious murderers in the history of (this) County" and "Is there ever a murder enough to call for the death penalty if this isn't one?" were not grossly improper; the jury would have understood the prosecutor's remarks to address the severity of the crime before them. State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Reconstruction of Trial Record. — Because the defendant failed to cooperate with the trial court to provide the appellate court with a reconstructed record of the state's closing argument, which the trial court failed to record, the appellate court was precluded from reviewing the defendant's argument that the state made improper remarks and referred to matters outside the trial record. State v. Moore, 75 N.C. App. 543, 331 S.E.2d 251, cert. denied, 315 N.C. 188, 337 S.E.2d 862 (1985).

Argument as to Obscenity of Pictures. — It was not reversible error for one of the prosecutors to argue to the jury as to obscenity of pictures showing anal intercourse. This argument was within the latitude allowed counsel in stating contentions and arguing reasonable inferences to be drawn from the evidence. The trial court did not err in overruling the defendant's objection to this portion of the argument. State v. Anderson, 322 N.C. 22, 366 S.E.2d 459, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 975, 109 S. Ct. 513, 102 L. Ed. 2d 548 (1988).

Where prosecutor's argument was not an expression of an opinion but, instead, a statement that the prosecutor would be unable to form an opinion as to what was obscene if the material before the jury was not, at most it amounted to a rhetorical statement implying that the state's evidence was overwhelming and contending that the jury should find the magazines in question obscene. State v. Anderson, 322 N.C. 22, 366 S.E.2d 459, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 975, 109 S. Ct. 513, 102 L. Ed. 2d 548 (1988).

It was not prejudicial error for the prosecuting attorney to argue that medical expert was paid for testifying when there was no evidence that the medical expert had been paid anything because it is well known that physicians are paid for their work, and the fact that the medical expert might have been paid need not imply that he would not testify truthfully; therefore, the defendant did not show there was a reasonable possibility there would have been a different result if the argument had not been made. State v. Rosier, 322 N.C. 826, 370 S.E.2d 359 (1988).

Reference to Witnesses' Show of Emotion. — Viewed in context, a reference to a witness' show of emotion on the stand was not a bid for sympathy but instead a small portion of counsel's lengthy discussion of credibility issues; this discussion encouraged an assessment of the relative credibility of each and every witness based on many factors, including demeanor on the witness stand. The demeanor of witnesses was a matter before the jury and may have legitimately been argued to them, and in the absence of a contemporaneous objection by defendant, the court did not find that the prosecutor's remarks warranted intervention by the trial judge. State v. Cummings, 323 N.C. 181, 372 S.E.2d 541 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Improper Argument of Facts Outside Record. — Defense counsel acted improperly where he urged the jurors to base their decision on reasons not based on the mitigating and aggravating evidence presented at the sentencing proceeding. State v. Robinson, 339 N.C. 263, 451 S.E.2d 196 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 2565, 132 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1995).

The prosecutor violated this section where he stated to the jury that the court had found the witness' statements to be trustworthy and reliable; this portion of the prosecutor's argument was not part of the evidence presented to the jurors, but was a second-hand statement or revelation of the trial judge's legal determination or opinion on the evidence made during a hearing properly held outside the jury's presence. State v. Allen, 353 N.C. 511, 546 S.E.2d 372 (2001).

Arguments Outside Record Were Not Improper. — District attorney's statement that ninety-five percent (95%) of murderers would be free if intoxication was defense was obvious hyperbole related to the fact that voluntary intoxication is generally no defense to crime and his statement that politicians have talked about building new stretch of road was related to well-known fact it is difficult to travel on mountain roads that are covered with snow. State v. Rogers, 323 N.C. 658, 374 S.E.2d 852 (1989).

Use of Widely Held Opinions Was Proper. — Although prosecutor did express his opinions that county should be decent, safe and law-abiding, that drug abuse is bad, that young people should be warned about drug abuse, and that a person's home is his castle, the opinions were ones which are widely held, and it was not error to allow prosecuting attorney to use them as premises for his argument. State v. Rogers, 323 N.C. 658, 374 S.E.2d 852 (1989).

Replay of Videotaped Statements. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion by disallowing replay of excerpts from videotaped statements during defendant's closing argument, as the two-hour videotape containing these statements was shown to the jury during the trial in its entirety. State v. Whiteside, 325 N.C. 389, 383 S.E.2d 911 (1989).

Argument Held Not Improper. — A prosecutor's argument is not improper when it is consistent with the record and does not travel into the fields of conjecture or personal opinion. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

Where a prosecutor stated that a murder was "a first degree murder of one of the most heinous kind I have ever come into contact with" and that defendant frightened him, these infusions of the prosecutor's personal opinion were improper, but they were not so grossly improper as to require a new trial. The evidence supported the characterization of the murder as heinous. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

A statement that defendant frightened the prosecutor was not, standing alone, so prejudicial as to make a fair trial impossible. The trial court remedied any possible prejudice from these statements by admonishing the jurors to disregard any personal opinions any attorney may have expressed during closing argument. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

Permissible Inferences. — Where there was sufficient evidence adduced to support an inference that the victim was either standing with his back turned to defendant or was attempting to flee when he was shot and the medical examiner testified that the victim was shot three times, once in the abdomen and twice in the back, the State acted properly in arguing permissible inferences from this evidence. State v. Terry, 337 N.C. 615, 447 S.E.2d 720 (1994).

Impropriety Cured. — Where, immediately upon a defendant's objection to an improper remark made by the prosecutor in his closing argument, the trial court instructs the jury to disregard the offending statement, the impropriety is cured. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

Where defendant objected to the prosecutor's statement that "because of his age, no matter what you do, Johnny Small won't stay in prison forever," because the trial court immediately instructed the jury to disregard that portion of the prosecutor's argument, the impropriety was cured. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

(a) At the close of the evidence or at an earlier time directed by the judge, any party may tender written instructions. A party tendering instructions must furnish copies to the other parties at the time he tenders them to the judge.

(b) Before the arguments to the jury, the judge must hold a recorded conference on instructions out of the presence of the jury. At the conference the judge must inform the parties of the offenses, lesser included offenses, and affirmative defenses on which he will charge the jury and must inform them of what, if any, parts of tendered instructions will be given. A party is also entitled to be informed, upon request, whether the judge intends to include other particular instructions in his charge to the jury. The failure of the judge to comply fully with the provisions of this subsection does not constitute grounds for appeal unless his failure, not corrected prior to the end of the trial, materially prejudiced the case of the defendant.

(c) After the arguments are completed, the judge must instruct the jury in accordance with G.S. 15A-1232.

(d) All instructions given and tendered instructions which have been refused become a part of the record. Failure to object to an erroneous instruction or to the erroneous failure to give an instruction does not constitute a waiver of the right to appeal on that error in accordance with G.S. 15A-1446(d)(13). (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1983, c. 635.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is believed by the Commission essentially to codify present practice, but the provision for a recorded conference under subsection (b) is new. Compare A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury § 4.6(c). It is noteworthy, however, that the Commission deleted that subsection's bar of right of appeal on failure to give an instruction unless one is tendered and a bar of right of appeal as to erroneous instructions unless objection is entered.

CASE NOTES

Subsection (d) Unconstitutional. — N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(2) and this section are in conflict. N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(2), however, is a rule of appellate practice and procedure, promulgated by the Supreme Court pursuant to its exclusive authority under N.C. Const., Art. IV, § 13(2). Therefore to the extent that this section is inconsistent with N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(2), the statute must fail. State v. Bennett, 308 N.C. 530, 302 S.E.2d 786 (1983).

Unrecorded Conference Required Absent Request. — If either party to the trial desires a recorded instruction conference, subsection (b) of this section requires that party to make such a request to the trial judge. Absent such a request, subsection (b) is silent and Gen. Rules Prac., Rule 21 supplements the statute by requiring the trial court to hold an unrecorded conference. State v. Nealy, 64 N.C. App. 663, 308 S.E.2d 343 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 155, 311 S.E.2d 295 (1984).

Unrecorded Conference Without Defendant. — Where the trial court held an informal charge conference in the absence of the jury and off the record, but defendant could not show how he was materially prejudiced by the failure to record testimony there was no error. State v. Brunson, 120 N.C. App. 571, 463 S.E.2d 417 (1995).

Purpose of an instruction is to clarify the issues for the jury and to apply the law to the facts of the case. State v. Harris, 47 N.C. App. 121, 266 S.E.2d 735 (1980), cert. denied, 305 N.C. 762, 292 S.E.2d 577 (1982).

Trial judge has wide discretion in presenting the issues to the jury. This responsibility cannot be delegated to or usurped by counsel. State v. Harris, 306 N.C. 724, 295 S.E.2d 391 (1982).

Defendant cannot prohibit giving an instruction to the jury by failing to request it. Regardless of requests by the parties, a judge has an obligation to fully instruct the jury on all substantial and essential features of the case embraced within the issue and arising on the evidence. State v. Harris, 306 N.C. 724, 295 S.E.2d 391 (1982).

Subordinate and Nonessential Features of Case. — The trial judge may in his discretion instruct on the subordinate and nonessential features of a case without requests by counsel. The purpose of a charge is to give a clear instruction which applies the law to the evidence in such a manner as to assist the jury in understanding the case and in reaching a correct verdict. State v. Harris, 306 N.C. 724, 295 S.E.2d 391 (1982).

Requests for special instructions must be in writing and must be submitted before the beginning of the charge by the court. State v. Harris, 47 N.C. App. 121, 266 S.E.2d 735 (1980), cert. denied, 305 N.C. 762, 292 S.E.2d 577 (1982).

The judge is not required to compose the words of a request for a special instruction. State v. Webster, 71 N.C. App. 321, 322 S.E.2d 421 (1984).

Requested Instruction Must at Least Be Given in Substance. — Although a trial judge is not required to give requested instructions verbatim, he is required to give the requested instruction at least in substance if it is a correct statement of the law and supported by the evidence. State v. Corn, 307 N.C. 79, 296 S.E.2d 261 (1982).

When defendant testifies and also offers evidence of his good character, he is entitled to have the jury consider his character evidence both as bearing upon credibility as a witness and as substantive evidence bearing directly upon the issue of his guilt or innocence. A court is not required to charge on this feature of the case, however, unless the defendant requests it. State v. Martin, 322 N.C. 229, 367 S.E.2d 618 (1988).

Correction of Instruction. — Although the trial judge did not instruct the jury in his original instruction that they could consider the purpose of facilitating flight, that omission was error favorable to the defendant where the indictment and the evidence both supported the instruction, and it was therefore not error for the trial judge to correct his instruction before the jury rendered its verdict on the kidnapping charge, as the State was entitled to the instruction and the instruction did not in any way change any instructions discussed at the charge conference. State v. Mason, 317 N.C. 283, 345 S.E.2d 195 (1986).

Test of Sufficiency. — Where the judge's charge fully instructs the jury on all the substantive areas of the case, and defines and applies the law thereto, it is sufficient. State v. McNeil, 47 N.C. App. 30, 266 S.E.2d 824, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 102, 273 S.E.2d 306 (1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 915, 101 S. Ct. 1356, 67 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1981).

Failure to Record Bench Conferences and In-Chamber Proceedings. — Although trial court's partial denial of defendant's motion for complete recordation, insofar as it precluded recordation of bench conferences and in-chamber proceedings relating to jury instructions, may have constituted error under the applicable statutes, defendant was not prejudiced as a result thereof. State v. Bacon, 326 N.C. 404, 390 S.E.2d 327 (1990).

The trial court invited defense counsel to state its objections to the court's proposed instructions and defense counsel took full advantage of its opportunity to do so. Thus, defendant failed to demonstrate how he was materially prejudiced by two earlier unrecorded charge conferences. State v. Pittman, 332 N.C. 244, 420 S.E.2d 437 (1992).

Where defendant makes a timely written request for a listing in writing on the form of possible nonstatutory mitigating circumstances that are supported by the evidence and which the jury could reasonably deem to have mitigating value, the trial court must put such circumstances in writing on the form. Absent such a request, the failure of the trial court to list in writing such mitigating circumstances on the form is not error. State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990), holding that this rule shall only be applied prospectively to all capital cases tried after the certification date of the court's opinion.

Failure to Submit Nonstatutory Mitigating Factor in Writing. — Because failure to submit a nonstatutory mitigating circumstance is subject to a harmless error analysis, a fortiori, failure to include such circumstances in writing on the form is also subject to the harmless error rationale. State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Where only two mitigating circumstances were put in writing on the issues and recommendation form, and the nonstatutory mitigating circumstances which defendant requested to be put in writing on the form were only named orally by the trial court to the jury, the mitigating circumstances were not susceptible of equal consideration by the jury, and the jury could easily have believed that the unwritten circumstances were not as worthy as those in writing. Thus, as there was a reasonable possibility that had the error not occurred, a different result would have been reached at the sentencing hearing, the case would be remanded for a new sentencing hearing. State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Where defendant did not submit in writing either of his proposed modifications to the pattern jury instructions for premeditation and deliberation, it was not error for the trial court to fail to charge as requested. State v. McNeill, 346 N.C. 233, 485 S.E.2d 284 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1053, 118 S. Ct. 704, 139 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1998).

§ 15A-1232. Jury instructions; explanation of law; opinion prohibited.

In instructing the jury, the judge shall not express an opinion as to whether or not a fact has been proved and shall not be required to state, summarize or recapitulate the evidence, or to explain the application of the law to the evidence. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1985, c. 537, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section restates the substance of G.S. 1-180, which is repealed concurrently with the amendment of this section. The Commission found to be unnecessary the proviso in G.S. 1-180 requiring the judge to "give equal stress to the State and defendant in a criminal action" because this is a duty imposed on the judge by general requirements of fairness to the parties; it is not necessary that it be explicitly stated.

II. EXPRESSION OF OPINION.

A. In General.

Section Applies Throughout Trial. — This section applies to any expression of opinion by the judge in the hearing of the jury at any time during the trial. State v. Cook, 162 N.C. 586, 77 S.E. 759 (1913); State v. Williamson, 250 N.C. 204, 108 S.E.2d 443 (1959); State v. Walker, 266 N.C. 269, 145 S.E.2d 833 (1966); State v. McEachern, 283 N.C. 57, 194 S.E.2d 787 (1973).

It was considered so essential to protect the right of trial by jury that this section was broadly worded and was among the earliest of our remedial enactments, and, while it refers in terms to the charge, it has always been construed as including the expression of any opinion, or even an intimation of the judge, at any time during the trial, calculated to prejudice either of the parties. State v. Smith, 240 N.C. 99, 81 S.E.2d 263 (1954); State v. Lewis, 32 N.C. App. 471, 232 S.E.2d 472, cert. denied, 292 N.C. 643, 235 S.E.2d 64 (1977).

This section proscribes the court from expressing an opinion upon the weight or credibility of the evidence in any manner either in the course and conduct of the trial or in its instructions to the jury. Bailey v. Hayman, 220 N.C. 402, 17 S.E.2d 520 (1941); Hyder v. Asheville Storage Battery Co., 242 N.C. 553, 89 S.E.2d 124 (1955).

This section forbids the judge's expression of an opinion before the jury at every stage of the trial process. State v. Teasley, 31 N.C. App. 729, 230 S.E.2d 692 (1976).

This section prohibits any opinion or intimation of the judge at any time during the trial which is calculated to prejudice the parties in the eyes of the jury. State v. Holden, 280 N.C. 426, 185 S.E.2d 889 (1972); State v. Allen, 283 N.C. 354, 196 S.E.2d 256 (1973).

The provisions of this section may be violated at any stage of the trial by comments on the testimony of a witness, by remarks which tend to discredit a witness, by imbalancing the evidence in the charge to the jury or by any other means which intimates an opinion of the trial judge in a manner which would deprive an accused of a fair and impartial trial before the jury. State v. Greene, 285 N.C. 482, 206 S.E.2d 229 (1974).

But this section relates only to expressions of opinion during trial of case. State v. Dark, 22 N.C. App. 566, 207 S.E.2d 290, cert. denied, 285 N.C. 760, 209 S.E.2d 284 (1974).

Statement of the court, made prior to the time the case was called for trial, indicating that judge would not try the case until defendants were apprehended, did not violate this section, since this section relates only to the expression of opinion during the trial of the case. State v. Lippard, 223 N.C. 167, 25 S.E.2d 594, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 749, 64 S. Ct. 52, 88 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1943).

Trial begins within the purview of this section when prospective jurors are called to be examined touching their fitness to serve on the trial jury. This being so, it is a violation of the section for the judge to communicate his opinion on the facts in the case to the trial jury by his remarks or questions to prospective jurors during the selection of the trial jury. State v. Canipe, 240 N.C. 60, 81 S.E.2d 173 (1954); State v. Dark, 22 N.C. App. 566, 207

Section Not Confined to Charge. — In terms, this statute refers to the charge, but it has always been construed as including the expression of any opinion, or even an intimation by the judge, at any time during the trial which is calculated to prejudice either of the parties. State v. Bryant, 189 N.C. 112, 126 S.E. 107 (1925); State v. Oakley, 210 N.C. 206, 186 S.E. 244 (1936); State v. Staley, 292 N.C. 160, 232 S.E.2d 680 (1977); State v. Alston, 38 N.C. App. 219, 247 S.E.2d 726 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 586, 254 S.E.2d 30 (1979).

Although this section refers in terms to the charge, it has always been construed to forbid the judge to convey to the trial jury in any way at any stage of the trial his opinion on the facts involved in the case. State v. Canipe, 240 N.C. 60, 81 S.E.2d 173 (1954).

This section does not apply to the charge alone, but prohibits a trial judge from asking questions or making comments at any time during the trial which amount to an expression of opinion as to what has or has not been shown by the testimony of a witness. State v. Patton, 2 N.C. App. 605, 163 S.E.2d 542 (1968); State v. Cox, 6 N.C. App. 18, 169 S.E.2d 134 (1969); State v. Lemmond, 12 N.C. App. 128, 182 S.E.2d 636 (1971).

This section applies not only to the charge of the court, but also prohibits the court at a jury trial from expressing an opinion on the evidence or the veracity of the witnesses at any time during the trial in any manner, or in any form, by word of mouth or by action, and prohibits the trial judge from asking questions or making comments at any time during the trial which amount to an expression of opinion as to what has or has not been shown by the testimony of a witness. State v. Byrd, 10 N.C. App. 56, 177 S.E.2d 738 (1970).

Section Not Applicable to Hearing Where No Jury Present. — The provisions of this section prohibiting a court from giving an opinion on the evidence in the presence of the jury are obviously not applicable in a hearing where no jury is present. State v. Butcher, 10 N.C. App. 93, 177 S.E.2d 924 (1970).

The provisions of this section prohibiting a court from giving an opinion on the evidence do not apply in a juvenile delinquency proceeding where no jury is present. State v. Rush, 13 N.C. App. 539, 186 S.E.2d 595 (1972).

Section Cannot Be Extended Beyond Its Terms. — This section, being a restriction upon the almost universal rule, cannot be extended beyond its terms. State v. Baldwin, 178 N.C. 687, 100 S.E. 348 (1919); State v. Pugh, 183 N.C. 800, 111 S.E. 849 (1922).

Section Applies to Opinion as to Issues. — The facts on which this section restrains the judge from expressing an opinion to the jury are those respecting which the parties take issue or dispute and on which, as having occurred or not occurred, the imputed liability of the defendant depends. Long v. Byrd, 169 N.C. 658, 86 S.E. 574 (1915).

Right to Impartial Judge and Properly Instructed Jury. — Every suitor is entitled by the law to have his cause considered with the cold neutrality of the impartial judge and the equally unbiased mind of a properly instructed jury. This right can neither be denied nor abridged. State v. Douglas, 268 N.C. 267, 150 S.E.2d 412 (1966).

Every person charged with crime has an absolute right to a fair trial. By this it is meant that he is entitled to a trial before an impartial judge and an unprejudiced jury in an atmosphere of judicial calm. State v. Belk, 268 N.C. 320, 150 S.E.2d 481 (1966); State v. Hoskins, 36 N.C. App. 92, 242 S.E.2d 900, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 469, 246 S.E.2d 11 (1978).

Section imposes a duty of absolute impartiality on the trial judge. State v. Frazier, 278 N.C. 458, 180 S.E.2d 128 (1971); State v. Best, 280 N.C. 413, 186 S.E.2d 1 (1972); State v. Holden, 280 N.C. 426, 185 S.E.2d 889 (1972); State v. Allen, 283 N.C. 354, 196 S.E.2d 256 (1973).

It is the duty of the trial judge at all times to be absolutely impartial. State v. Atkinson, 278 N.C. 168, 179 S.E.2d 410, death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2292, 29 L. Ed. 2d 861 (1971).

This section requires that the judge maintain absolute impartiality until the verdict has been rendered because the jury, out of great respect for him, is easily influenced by his slightest suggestion. State v. Griffin, 44 N.C. App. 601, 261 S.E.2d 292 (1980).

Judge to Abstain from Prejudicial Conduct or Language. — The judge must abstain from conduct or language which tends to prejudice the accused or his cause with the jury. State v. Atkinson, 278 N.C. 168, 179 S.E.2d 410, death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2292, 29 L. Ed. 2d 861 (1971).

The trial judge occupies an exalted station. Jurors entertain great respect for his opinion, and are easily influenced by any suggestion coming from him. As a consequence, he must abstain from conduct or language which tends to discredit or prejudice the accused or his cause with the jury. State v. Belk, 268 N.C. 320, 150 S.E.2d 481 (1966); State v. Frazier, 278 N.C. 458, 180 S.E.2d 128 (1971); State v. Lowery, 12 N.C. App. 538, 183 S.E.2d 797 (1971); State v. Allen, 283 N.C. 354, 196 S.E.2d 256 (1973).

Every person charged with a crime has a right to trial before an impartial judge and an unprejudiced jury, and any intimation or expressed opinion by the judge at any time during the trial which prejudices the jury against the accused is ground for a new trial. State v. Arnold, 284 N.C. 41, 199 S.E.2d 423 (1973).

Every person charged with crime has an absolute right to a fair trial before an impartial judge and an unprejudiced jury in an atmosphere of judicial calm. To accord this right the trial judge must abstain from conduct or language which tends to discredit or prejudice the accused or his cause with the jury. State v. Cox, 6 N.C. App. 18, 169 S.E.2d 134 (1969); State v. Lemmond, 12 N.C. App. 128, 182 S.E.2d 636 (1971).

The judge occupies an exalted station, and jurors entertain a profound respect for his opinion. As a consequence, the judge prejudices a party or his cause in the minds of the trial jurors whenever he violates this section by expressing an adverse opinion on the facts. When this occurs, it is virtually impossible for the judge to remove the prejudicial impression from the minds of the trial jurors by anything which he may afterwards say to them by way of atonement or explanation. State v. Carter, 268 N.C. 648, 151 S.E.2d 602 (1966).

As a result of his exalted station and the respect for his opinion which jurors are presumed to hold, the trial judge must abstain from conduct or language which tends to discredit or prejudice the accused or his cause. State v. Whitted, 38 N.C. App. 603, 248 S.E.2d 442 (1978).

Judge Not to Invade Province of Jury. — The respective functions of the judge and jury in criminal trials are clearly demarcated by this section; by that demarcation the trial judge is denied the right, in any manner or in any form, to invade the province of the jury. State v. Holden, 280 N.C. 426, 185 S.E.2d 889 (1972).

Motive of Judge Immaterial. — The probable effect or influence upon the jury, and not the motive of the judge, determines whether the party whose right to a fair trial has been impaired is entitled to a new trial. State v. Bryant, 189 N.C. 112, 126 S.E. 107 (1925); State v. Oakley, 210 N.C. 206, 186 S.E. 244 (1936); State v. Shinn, 234 N.C. 397, 67 S.E.2d 270 (1951), aff'd, 238 N.C. 535, 78 S.E.2d 388 (1953); State v. Smith, 240 N.C. 99, 81 S.E.2d 263 (1954); State v. McEachern, 283 N.C. 57, 194 S.E.2d 787 (1973).

Whether the conduct or the language of the judge amounts to an expression of his opinion on the facts is to be determined by its probable meaning to the jury, and not by the motive of the judge. State v. Canipe, 240 N.C. 60, 81 S.E.2d 173 (1954); State v. Byrd, 10 N.C. App. 56, 177 S.E.2d 738 (1970); State v. May, 292 N.C. 644, 235 S.E.2d 178, reconsideration denied, 293 N.C. 261, 247 S.E.2d 234, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 928, 98 S. Ct. 414, 54 L. Ed. 2d 288 (1977).

The effect on the jury of the remark and not the judge's motive in making it is determinative. State v. Staley, 292 N.C. 160, 232 S.E.2d 680 (1977).

Trial judge's questions about the numerical division of the jury do not constitute a per se violation of N.C. Const., Art. I, § 24. Rather, the proper analysis is whether, in considering the totality of the circumstances, the inquiry was coercive. State v. Bussey, 321 N.C. 92, 361 S.E.2d 564 (1987).

In the totality of the circumstances, judge's inquiry as to the numerical division of the jury was not coercive of the jury's verdict. State v. Bussey, 321 N.C. 92, 361 S.E.2d 564 (1987).

Prejudice to Litigant Is Reversible Error. — Any opinion or intimation of the judge at any time during the trial which prejudices a litigant in the eyes of the jury is reversible error. State v. Atkinson, 278 N.C. 168, 179 S.E.2d 410, death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2292, 29 L. Ed. 2d 861 (1971).

Expression of Opinion Is Ground for New Trial. — Any intimation or expression of opinion by the trial court which prejudices the jury against the accused is ground for a new trial. State v. Hoskins, 36 N.C. App. 92, 242 S.E.2d 900, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 469, 246 S.E.2d 11 (1978).

Section Forbids Intimation of Opinion. — This section forbids the judge to intimate his opinion in any form whatever, it being the intent of the law to insure to each and every litigant a fair and impartial trial before the jury. State v. Owenby, 226 N.C. 521, 39 S.E.2d 378 (1946); State v. Wallace, 251 N.C. 378, 111 S.E.2d 714 (1959); State v. Frazier, 278 N.C. 458, 180 S.E.2d 128 (1971); State v. Atkinson, 278 N.C. 168, 179 S.E.2d 410, death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2292, 29 L. Ed. 2d 861 (1971); State v. Allen, 283 N.C. 354, 196 S.E.2d 256 (1973); State v. Hewitt, 19 N.C. App. 663, 199 S.E.2d 729 (1973); State v. Covington, 290 N.C. 313, 226 S.E.2d 629 (1976); State v. Whitted, 38 N.C. App. 603, 248 S.E.2d 442 (1978).

The trial judge is forbidden by this section to express an opinion upon the evidence in any manner during the course of the trial or in his instructions to the jury. State v. Belk, 268 N.C. 320, 150 S.E.2d 481 (1966).

This section forbids a judge to express to the jury his opinion on the facts of the case he is trying. State v. Douglas, 268 N.C. 267, 150 S.E.2d 412 (1966).

The expression by the court in the presence of the jury of an opinion concerning a fact to be found by the jury is forbidden by this section. State v. Carter, 268 N.C. 648, 151 S.E.2d 602 (1966).

This section forbids any intimation of the trial judge's opinion in any form whatsoever. State v. Cousin, 292 N.C. 461, 233 S.E.2d 554 (1977).

Prohibitions Against Expression of Opinion Mandatory. — The statutory prohibitions against expressions of opinion by the trial court contained in § 15A-1222 and this section are mandatory. State v. Young, 324 N.C. 489, 380 S.E.2d 94 (1989).

An expression of judicial leaning is absolutely prohibited regardless of the manner in which it is expressed. State v. Morrison, 63 N.C. App. 125, 303 S.E.2d 849 (1983).

Whether Directly or Indirectly Conveyed. — It is of no consequence whether the opinion of the trial judge is conveyed to the jury directly or indirectly as every defendant in a criminal case is entitled to the trial of his case before a neutral judge and an unbiased jury. State v. Whitted, 38 N.C. App. 603, 248 S.E.2d 442 (1978).

It can make no difference in what way or manner or when the opinion of the judge is conveyed to the jury, whether directly or indirectly, by comment on the testimony of a witness, by arraying the evidence unequally in the charge, by imbalancing the contentions of the parties, by the choice of language in stating the contentions, or by the general tone and tenor of the trial. This section forbids any intimation of his opinion in any form whatever, it being the intent of the law to insure to each and every litigant a fair and impartial trial before the jury. State v. Simpson, 233 N.C. 438, 64 S.E.2d 568 (1951); State v. Belk, 268 N.C. 320, 150 S.E.2d 481 (1966).

It can make no difference in what way or when the opinion of the judge is conveyed to the jury, whether directly or indirectly, or by the general tone and tenor of the trial, this section forbids an intimation of his opinion in any form whatever, it being the intent of the law to insure to each and every litigant a fair and impartial trial before the jury. State v. McBryde, 270 N.C. 776, 155 S.E.2d 266 (1967); State v. Davis, 272 N.C. 102, 157 S.E.2d 671 (1967); State v. Staley, 292 N.C. 160, 232 S.E.2d 680 (1977).

Because of his exalted station and the respect for his opinion which jurors are presumed to hold, the trial judge must abstain from conduct or language which tends to discredit or prejudice the accused or his cause. It is of no consequence whether the opinion of the trial judge is conveyed to the jury directly or indirectly. State v. Morrison, 63 N.C. App. 125, 303 S.E.2d 849 (1983).

Opinion May Be Expressed by Manner, Emphasis, or Tone. — The judge may indicate to the jury what impression the evidence has made on his mind, or what deductions he thinks should be drawn therefrom, without expressly stating his opinion in so many words. This may be done by his manner or peculiar emphasis or by his so arraying and presenting the evidence as to give one of the parties an undue advantage over the other; or, again the same result may follow the use of language or from an expression calculated to impair the credit which might not otherwise and under normal conditions be given by the jury to the testimony of one of the parties. State v. Woolard, 227 N.C. 645, 44 S.E.2d 29 (1947), citing State v. Benton, 226 N.C. 745, 40 S.E.2d 617 (1946); State v. Simpson, 233 N.C. 438, 64 S.E.2d 568 (1951); State v. Shinn, 234 N.C. 397, 67 S.E.2d 270 (1951), aff'd, 238 N.C. 535, 78 S.E.2d 388 (1953); State v. Staley, 292 N.C. 160, 232 S.E.2d 680 (1977).

Where an intimation as to whether any fact is sufficiently proved is reasonably inferred from the manner of the judge or his peculiar emphasis of the evidence, or in his presentation thereof or his form of expression, or by the tone or general tenor of the trial, giving advantage to the appellee thereby, such as to impair the credit which might otherwise, under normal conditions be given by the jury to the testimony, it comes within the prohibition of this section. State v. Hart, 186 N.C. 582, 120 S.E. 345 (1923); State v. Rhinehart, 209 N.C. 150, 183 S.E. 388 (1936).

If the judge intimates an opinion by his manner of stating the evidence, by imbalancing the contentions of the parties, by the choice of language in stating the contentions, or by the general tone and tenor of the trial, he violates this section. State v. Douglas, 268 N.C. 267, 150 S.E.2d 412 (1966).

Even if it cannot be said that a remark or comment is prejudicial in itself, an examination of the record may indicate a general tone or trend of hostility or ridicule which has a cumulative effect of prejudice. If so, a new trial must be allowed. State v. Staley, 292 N.C. 160, 232 S.E.2d 680 (1977).

Section Covers Any Opinion Calculated to Prejudice Jury. — This section has been construed to include any opinion or even a intimation of the judge, at any time during the trial, calculated to prejudice either of the parties with the jury. State v. Frazier, 278 N.C. 458, 180 S.E.2d 128 (1971).

Section Prohibits Remarks Which Deny Accused a Fair Trial. — An expression of opinion prohibited by this section occurs when the judge's remarks imbalance the evidence in a manner which deprives the accused of a fair and impartial trial. State v. Buff, 32 N.C. App. 395, 232 S.E.2d 303, cert. denied, 292 N.C. 468, 233 S.E.2d 397 (1977).

A person charged with a crime is entitled to a trial by an impartial judge, and any expression or intimation of an opinion by the judge during the course of the trial which prejudices the jury against a defendant warrants a new trial. State v. Boone, 307 N.C. 198, 297 S.E.2d 585 (1982).

Judge Must Not Discredit or Prejudice Accused. — The judge must abstain from conduct or language which tends to discredit or prejudice the accused or his cause with the jury. State v. Holden, 280 N.C. 426, 185 S.E.2d 889 (1972); State v. Blue, 17 N.C. App. 526, 195 S.E.2d 104 (1973).

Slightest Intimation Carries Great Weight with Jury. — The slightest intimation from a judge as to the strength of the evidence, or as to credibility of the witness, will always have great weight with the jury, and, therefore, we must be careful to see that neither party is unduly prejudiced by any expression from the bench which is likely to prevent a fair and impartial trial. State v. Woolard, 227 N.C. 645, 44 S.E.2d 29 (1947), citing State v. Ownby, 146 N.C. 677, 61 S.E. 630 (1908); State v. Shinn, 234 N.C. 397, 67 S.E.2d 270 (1951), aff'd, 238 N.C. 535, 78 S.E.2d 388 (1953); State v. McLean, 17 N.C. App. 629, 195 S.E.2d 336 (1973); State v. Head, 24 N.C. App. 564, 211 S.E.2d 534 (1975).

The slightest intimation from the judge as to the weight, importance, or effect of the evidence has great weight with the jury, and, therefore, the Supreme Court must be careful to see that neither party is unduly prejudiced by any expression from the bench which is likely to prevent a fair and impartial trial. State v. Patton, 2 N.C. App. 605, 163 S.E.2d 542 (1968).

Cumulative Effect of Errors. — It is possible that several errors, harmless in and of themselves, may combine to form an expression of opinion. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Opinion on One Count Applies to Others. — Where the verdict of the jury has acquitted the defendant under a count charging an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, but has convicted him of having the unlawful possession of the liquor for the purpose of sale, an expression of his opinion by the trial judge upon the evidence that the defendant had made the unlawful sale, applies also to the count charging that he had the unlawful possession for the purposes of sale, and constitutes error. State v. Sparks, 184 N.C. 745, 114 S.E. 755 (1922).

Unsupported Assumptions of Evidence. — A court's expressions of opinion are particularly harmful if they include assumptions of evidence entirely unsupported by the record. State v. Stroud, 10 N.C. App. 30, 177 S.E.2d 912 (1970).

Assumption of Fact Controverted by Plea of Not Guilty. — The assumption by the court that any fact controverted by a plea of not guilty has been established is prejudicial error. State v. Mitchell, 260 N.C. 235, 132 S.E.2d 481 (1963); State v. Patton, 2 N.C. App. 605, 163 S.E.2d 542 (1968); State v. Brinkley, 10 N.C. App. 160, 177 S.E.2d 727 (1970); State v. Hall, 11 N.C. App. 410, 181 S.E.2d 240 (1971); State v. Cates, 24 N.C. App. 65, 210 S.E.2d 100 (1974).

An expression of opinion or assumption by the trial court that all the essential elements of the offenses charged, which were controverted and put in issue by defendant's plea of not guilty, were not challenged and not denied by the defendant was prejudicial error. State v. Mitchell, 260 N.C. 235, 132 S.E.2d 481 (1963).

Declaration That Evidence Tends to Show Fact Beyond Reasonable Doubt. — The credibility of the evidence is always for the jury and the judge may never declare that all the evidence tends to show any fact beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Kimball, 261 N.C. 582, 135 S.E.2d 568 (1964).

Court May Not Intimate Whether Fact Has Been Proven or Not. — Proof must be made without intimation or suggestion from the court that the controverted facts have or have not been established. State v. Mitchell, 260 N.C. 235, 132 S.E.2d 481 (1963); State v. Patton, 2 N.C. App. 605, 163 S.E.2d 542 (1968); State v. Brinkley, 10 N.C. App. 160, 177 S.E.2d 727 (1970); State v. Hall, 11 N.C. App. 410, 181 S.E.2d 240 (1971); State v. Whitted, 14 N.C. App. 62, 187 S.E.2d 391 (1972).

The judge may not make a statement or ask a defendant or a witness questions tending to impeach him or to cast doubt on his credibility or which intimate that a fact has or has not been established. State v. Byrd, 10 N.C. App. 56, 177 S.E.2d 738 (1970).

No judge, in giving a charge to the jury or at any time during the trial, shall intimate whether a fact is fully or sufficiently proved. Speed v. Perry, 167 N.C. 122, 83 S.E. 176 (1914); State v. Kline, 190 N.C. 177, 129 S.E. 417 (1925); State v. Mitchell, 193 N.C. 796, 138 S.E. 166 (1927), citing State v. Hart, 186 N.C. 582, 120 S.E. 345 (1923); State v. Cox, 6 N.C. App. 18, 169 S.E.2d 134 (1969); State v. Lemmond, 12 N.C. App. 128, 182 S.E.2d 636 (1971).

It is error for the trial judge to intimate that controverted facts have or have not been established, or to place before the jury in a statement of contentions matter which they should not take into consideration in arriving at a verdict. State v. McLean, 17 N.C. App. 629, 195 S.E.2d 336 (1973).

Expression of Legal Theory in Relation to Verdict Form. — Where verdict form submitted to jury proposed two possible verdicts, "Guilty of Murder in the First Degree by Aiding and Abetting," or "Not Guilty," expression of legal theory upon which first degree murder conviction would rest did not place undue emphasis on that choice amounting to expression of opinion of trial judge since § 15A-1237 requires that jury will be given verdict form setting out permissible verdicts recited by judge in his instructions. State v. Clark, 324 N.C. 146, 377 S.E.2d 54 (1989).

Opinion as to Guilt Is Error. — It is error

for the trial judge to express or imply, in the presence of the jury, any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, or as to any other fact to be determined by the jury, or as to the credibility of any witness. It is immaterial how such opinion is expressed or implied, whether in the charge of the court, in the examination of a witness, in the rulings upon objections to evidence or in any other manner. State v. Freeman, 280 N.C. 622, 187 S.E.2d 59 (1972); State v. Alston, 38 N.C. App. 219, 247 S.E.2d 726 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 586, 254 S.E.2d 30 (1979); State v. Evans, 298 N.C. 263, 258 S.E.2d 354 (1979), overruled on other grounds, State v. Barnes, 324 N.C. 539, 380 S.E.2d 118 (1989).

Exceptions After Verdict. — Where a remark or question by the court amounts to an expression of opinion, an exception thereto need not be taken at the time but may be taken after verdict. State v. Bryant, 189 N.C. 112, 126 S.E. 107 (1925); State v. Perry, 231 N.C. 467, 57 S.E.2d 774 (1950). But see State v. Brown, 100 N.C. 519, 6 S.E. 568 (1888).

Inadvertent Expression of Opinion. — The fact that the expression of opinion was unintentional or inadvertent does not make it less prejudicial. State v. Hall, 11 N.C. App. 410, 181 S.E.2d 240 (1971).

An expression of judicial leaning is absolutely prohibited regardless of the manner in which it is expressed, and this is so even when such expression of opinion is inadvertent. State v. Hudson, 295 N.C. 427, 245 S.E.2d 686 (1978).

Where the trial court merely advised the jurors that the recollection of others differed from his own recollection of the evidence and that, in any event, the jurors should rely entirely on their own recollections of the evidence, the trial court did not impermissibly express an opinion as to the evidence. State v. Sowell, 80 N.C. App. 465, 342 S.E.2d 541, rev'd on other grounds, 318 N.C. 640, 350 S.E.2d 363 (1986).

General Comment on Cases Such as Defendant's. — Comments made by a trial judge concerning cases involving marijuana, coming shortly before the defendant's marijuana case was called, entitled defendant to a continuance, and it was error for the trial judge to overrule defendant's motion. State v. Carriker, 287 N.C. 530, 215 S.E.2d 134 (1975).

Interrogating Prospective Jurors as to Scruples Against Capital Punishment. — Where the court, in interrogating prospective jurors in regard to their scruples against capital punishment, refers to several celebrated cases and asks them, in the presence of those immediately thereafter impaneled to try the case, whether they would not render a verdict calling for the death sentence in such cases, defendant must be awarded a new trial notwithstanding that the court thereafter cautions the jurors that he did not mean to compare the case at issue with the other cases. State v. Canipe, 240 N.C. 60, 81 S.E.2d 173 (1954).

Where the judge, in questioning several prospective jurors who had been challenged by the state for cause when they had stated that they had conscientious scruples against capital punishment, inadvertently over-stepped his self-appointed bounds and unintentionally expressed an opinion on the facts adverse to the defendant, the defendant was granted a new trial. State v. McSwain, 15 N.C. App. 675, 190 S.E.2d 682 (1972).

Language Subject to Misapprehension. — When there is a conflict of testimony which leaves a case in doubt before the jury, and the judge uses language which may be subject to misapprehension and is calculated to mislead, the Supreme Court will order a venire de novo. State v. Rogers, 93 N.C. 523 (1885).

Setting Out the Parties Contentions. — This statute does not prohibit the judge from setting out the parties' contentions; however, when the judge does so, he must give equal stress to the contentions of the State and the defendant. State v. Figured, 116 N.C. App. 1, 446 S.E.2d 838 (1994), cert. denied, 339 N.C. 617, 454 S.E.2d 261 (1995).

Remarks Made in Mere Pleasantry. — Remarks made in mere pleasantry by the trial judge in the presence of the jury, in relation to irrelevant testimony of a witness he had theretofore been patiently endeavoring to properly confine, will not be held for reversible error as an expression of his opinion forbidden by statute, when it could not reasonably have had any appreciable effect upon the jury, and could only have been regarded by them in the manner in which it was uttered. State v. Jones, 181 N.C. 546, 106 S.E. 817 (1921).

There was no error where a remark by the court was a mere lapsus linguae that did not prejudice the defendant. State v. Rose, 339 N.C. 172, 451 S.E.2d 211 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 2565, 132 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1995).

Reprimand of Spectators. — A reprimand of spectators is not a violation of this section. State v. Robertson, 121 N.C. 551, 28 S.E. 59 (1897).

Control of Examination and Cross-Examination. — It is both the right and the duty of the presiding judge to control the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, both for the purpose of conserving the time of the court, and for the purpose of protecting the witness from prolonged and needless examination, but in doing so the court must not intimate any opinion either of the witness or his credibility. State v. Frazier, 278 N.C. 458, 180 S.E.2d 128 (1971).

Assuming Role of Prosecutor. — Where on several occasions while defendant's counsel was cross-examining the State's witnesses, the trial judge either sustained objections by the solicitor (now prosecutor) or interposed his own objections to block legitimate lines of cross-examination, and where, after the State's witness had completed his testimony as to results of the breathalyzer test, the trial judge asked questions of the witness to bring out the fact that the breathalyzer test had been approved for use in this State since 1965 and to bring before the jury that the witness had given the test to persons suspected of driving under the influence of intoxicants many times, the trial judge, temporarily at least, abandoned his role as an impartial jurist and assumed the role of the prosecutor, and in so doing he violated the provisions of this section. State v. Medlin, 15 N.C. App. 434, 190 S.E.2d 425 (1972).

Judge Sustaining His Own Objections. — The trial judge expressed an opinion in violation of this section when he sustained his own objections to seven questions propounded by defense counsel to one State's witness and to nine questions propounded by defense counsel to another State's witness, and told defense counsel on two occasions after sustaining his own objections, "You know better than that." State v. Lemmond, 12 N.C. App. 128, 182 S.E.2d 636 (1971).

Sustaining Numerous Objections of State. — A trial court did not express an opinion on the credibility or guilt of defendant in sustaining the prosecutor's objections on 10 occasions to questions propounded to the defendant on direct examination, the ruling in each instance being the customary ruling, "Objection sustained," and the rulings being interspersed with six others overruling objections by the prosecutor. State v. Freeman, 280 N.C. 622, 187 S.E.2d 59 (1972).

Sustained and systematic failure to rule upon objections may indicate an opinion by the trial judge in violation of this section. State v. Smith, 291 N.C. 505, 231 S.E.2d 663 (1977).

Remark That Witness Has Fully Answered Question. — Where the same witness has several times fully answered a question it is within the discretion of the trial judge to relieve the witness from answering substantially the same question; and his statement before the jury that the witness had already fully answered, is not an expression of his opinion upon the credibility of the witness. State v. Mansell, 192 N.C. 20, 133 S.E. 190 (1926).

Where court was of the opinion that State's witness on cross-examination by defendant's counsel had answered interrogations sufficiently, and that witness said she had tried to tell the truth and did not recall all the particulars of the evidence given by her in the former trial, the remark was not an expression of opinion by the court as to the truthfulness of the witness, but was solely to suggest to counsel that her answers to his questions were complete, in the discharge of the court's right and duty to control the cross-examination. State v. Stone, 226 N.C. 97, 36 S.E.2d 704 (1946).

Trial judge's statement that a question put to the witness had been previously answered did not amount to an expression of opinion on the evidence. State v. Hollingsworth, 11 N.C. App. 674, 182 S.E.2d 26 (1971).

The trial judge did not express an opinion in favor of the State by sustaining objections to defendants' questions and saying to defense counsel, "He has answered your question." This was not in any way a disparaging or critical remark but merely a statement of fact. State v. Grant, 19 N.C. App. 401, 199 S.E.2d 14, appeal dismissed, 284 N.C. 256, 200 S.E.2d 656 (1973).

Statement That Testimony Is Corroborative. — A recitation that the testimony of a witness corroborated the testimony of another witness is not an expression of opinion. State v. Mitchell, 193 N.C. 796, 138 S.E. 166 (1927).

Statement that court would strike evidence unless it corroborated witness, and failure to strike it out, was not expression of opinion on weight of evidence. State v. Starnes, 218 N.C. 539, 11 S.E.2d 553 (1940).

Trial judge's remark, "Who cares?", after a question asked by defendant's counsel was harmless error and not a prejudicial expression of opinion. State v. Tew, 38 N.C. App. 33, 247 S.E.2d 40 (1978).

Taking Witness into Custody in Presence of Jury. — Where the court audibly told the defendant's chief witness in the presence of the jury not to leave the courtroom, and shortly thereafter the witness was placed in custody in the prisoner's box in plain view of the jury, the incident must have resulted in weakening the testimony of the witness in the eyes of the jury and constituted a violation of this section. State v. McBryde, 270 N.C. 776, 155 S.E.2d 266 (1967).

If a witness is taken into custody during the course of the trial under such circumstances as to lead the jury to the conclusion that the judge was of the opinion that the witness was guilty of perjury, such action constitutes prejudicial error as being an expression of opinion by the court as to the credibility of the witness. State v. Garrett, 5 N.C. App. 367, 168 S.E.2d 479 (1969).

In the prosecution of defendant for willful failure to support his illegitimate child, the action of the court, in the presence of the jury, in ordering the sheriff to take defendant's witness into custody immediately after the witness had testified for defendant that he had had intercourse with prosecutrix, was held to be prejudicial error as disparaging or impeaching the credibility of the witness in the eyes of the jury. State v. McNeill, 231 N.C. 666, 58 S.E.2d 366 (1950).

Taking Witness into Custody Out of Presence of Jury. — The fact that the trial court ordered a State's witness to be taken into custody and charged with perjury does not constitute an expression of opinion to the prejudice of defendants in violation of this section when the trial court's action took place out of the presence of the jury. State v. Garrett, 5 N.C. App. 367, 168 S.E.2d 479 (1969).

Taking Defendant into Custody During Course of Trial. — There is no prejudicial error so long as the discretion of the trial judge to insure the presence of a defendant by ordering him into custody during the course of trial is not exercised in a manner which would convey to the jury, either expressly or implicitly, the slightest intimation that the court had any opinion regarding defendant's credibility as a witness or the strength of his case. State v. Collins, 19 N.C. App. 553, 199 S.E.2d 491 (1973), rehearing denied, 285 N.C. 664, 207 S.E.2d 758 (1974).

Characterizing Permissible Inference as "Deep Presumption". — In characterizing the permissible inference raised by former § 18-11 as "a deep presumption," the trial judge expressed an opinion as to the strength of the evidence. Such an expression is prohibited by this section. State v. Tessnear, 265 N.C. 319, 144 S.E.2d 43 (1965).

Where Court Is Merely Identifying Exhibits. — A remark of the court that it would allow the introduction of fingerprints as found at the scene of the alleged offense and the fingerprints of defendant for the purpose of identification will not be held for error as an expression of opinion that the fingerprints were actually taken from the scene, it being obvious that the court was merely identifying the exhibits offered by the State. State v. Hooks, 228 N.C. 689, 47 S.E.2d 234 (1948).

Remarks Made in Directing Nonsuit of One of Several Defendants. — It is error for the judge in the presence of the jury, to nonsuit one of several defendants upon the evidence he did not participate in the offense charged against them all in the indictment, when the judge's remarks intimated that the appealing defendants had committed the offense. State v. Sullivan, 193 N.C. 754, 138 S.E. 136 (1927).

Remarks During Former Trial of Codefendant. — The remarks of the judge in sentencing a prisoner during the previous week cannot be held as improper for the trial of another defendant for participating in the same offense tried during the next week. State v. Baldwin, 178 N.C. 687, 100 S.E. 348 (1919).

Question as to Verdict. — The question of the court as to whether the verdict of guilty referred to first degree burglary held to be an inquiry and not an expression of opinion. State v. Walls, 211 N.C. 487, 191 S.E. 232, cert. denied, 302 U.S. 635, 58 S. Ct. 18, 82 L. Ed. 494 (1937).

Comments Held Harmless. — Trial court's comments did not intimate to the jurors that the trial court believed the evidence to justify verdicts of guilty of first-degree murder, which might necessitate the alternate juror's presence at a capital sentencing proceeding. State v. Porter, 340 N.C. 320, 457 S.E.2d 716 (1995).

Statement After Verdict Excusing Jurors for Term. — When the trial judge has stated to a jury after rendering a verdict in a criminal action, that from their verdict their attention was evidently attracted by important business matters at home, and therefore he would excuse them for the term, it cannot be construed as an expression of opinion forbidden by this section though one of the same jurors sat upon this case. State v. Pugh, 183 N.C. 800, 111 S.E. 849 (1922).

Apology for Excusing Jury to Conduct Voir Dire Hearing. — Where the jury was excused so that the court could conduct a voir dire hearing, and, shortly after the jury returned, it became necessary to excuse the jury again for the same reason, the trial court's statement, "Ladies and gentlemen, step into your room. I hate to bother you," was simply an apology for having to excuse the jury so soon after their return to the courtroom and did not tend to reflect an opinion that defendant's position was unsound and not worthy of the inconvenience being imposed upon the jury. State v. Best, 280 N.C. 413, 186 S.E.2d 1 (1972).

B. Remarks Concerning Parties.

Strength or Weakness of Party's Case. — It is error to intimate an opinion as to the relative strength or weakness of a party's case, or the credibility of his witnesses, or to make any statement such as to invoke sympathy for the prosecuting witness, thereby bolstering that testimony. State v. McLean, 17 N.C. App. 629, 195 S.E.2d 336 (1973).

Character of Accused. — It was held to be error for a judge to tell the jury that, "in a plain case, a good character would not help the prisoner; but in a doubtful case, he had a right to have it cast into the scales and weighed in his behalf"; the true rule being that in all cases a good character is to be considered. State v. Henry, 50 N.C. 65 (1857).

Judge's Statement That Defendant Had "Confessed". — Trial court's statement that the evidence tended to show that defendant had "confessed" that he "committed the crime charged" did not amount to an expression of opinion by the trial court, where evidence had been introduced which in fact tended to show that defendant had confessed to the crime charged, namely, first degree murder, and where, additionally, the trial court's statement was followed immediately by the instruction: "Now, if you find that the defendant made that confession, then you should consider all the circumstances under which it was made in determining whether it was a truthful confession and the weight which you will give to it." State v. Young, 324 N.C. 489, 380 S.E.2d 94 (1989).

Comment on Failure to Produce Witnesses. — A judge expressed an opinion as to the credibility and probative value of the defendant's testimony when he said to the defendant, in the presence of the jury, that if he (the judge) "had some witnesses who saw what you say they saw, I would have them here." State v. Byrd, 10 N.C. App. 56, 177 S.E.2d 738 (1970).

Remark That Prisoner Would Escape. — A remark of the judge before trial began, that the jailer had informed him the prisoner "would escape if he had the opportunity" is not an expression of opinion upon the facts. State v. Jacobs, 106 N.C. 695, 10 S.E. 1031, rehearing denied, 107 N.C. 772, 11 S.E. 962 (1890).

Remark That Defendant Had Reason to Escape. — Colloquy between the trial court and the defense counsel in which the court stated, as the jury was leaving the courtroom, that the defendant ought to be kept in jail overnight, and in which the court also stated, in the absence of the jury, that the defendant "has got more reason to run now than he ever had," was not prejudicial. State v. Wood, 9 N.C. App. 706, 177 S.E.2d 449 (1970), cert. denied, 277 N.C. 459, 178 S.E.2d 226 (1971).

Reference by court to defendants as "three black cats in a white Buick" was prejudicial error affecting the credibility of the defendants as witnesses and injecting a prejudicial opinion of the court into the court's instructions. State v. Belk, 268 N.C. 320, 150 S.E.2d 481 (1966).

Instruction Properly Refused. — In a trial in which the defendant claimed to have multiple personalities, the trial court could not, as the defense requested, instruct the jury that the person sitting at the defense table was not "James Woodard," but instead was "Johnny Gustud" (the defendant's "alternate personality"). If the judge had done so, he would have impermissibly expressed his opinion as to whether the defendant in fact had multiple personalities. State v. Woodard, 102 N.C. App. 687, 404 S.E.2d 6 (1990), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 329 N.C. 504, 407 S.E.2d 550 (1991).

C. Remarks Concerning Witnesses.

Remark Which Impeaches Witness. — Where questions propounded by the court have the effect of impeaching witnesses they are in violation of this section and defendants' exceptive assignments of error thereto must be sustained. State v. Winckler, 210 N.C. 556, 187 S.E. 792 (1936).

The trial judge expressed an opinion in violation of this section when he interrogated defendant's witness and tended to impeach defendant's witness or cast doubt on his credibility by his line of questioning. State v. Pinkham, 18 N.C. App. 130, 196 S.E.2d 290 (1973).

This section prohibits any ridicule that casts aspersions on the testimony of a witness and thus damages his credibility. State v. Frazier, 278 N.C. 458, 180 S.E.2d 128 (1971).

Remark Complimentary to Witness. — A remark of the trial judge complimentary to the character of one who was a witness in the cause, made before the jury is impaneled, is not forbidden by this section. State v. Howard, 129 N.C. 584, 40 S.E. 71 (1901), appeal dismissed, 191 U.S. 126, 24 S. Ct. 49, 48 L. Ed. 121 (1903).

Remark That Witness Was "Admirably Lucid". — The expression of the opinion of the court as to the "admirably lucid" testimony of a medical expert witness constituted reversible error. State v. Horne, 171 N.C. 787, 88 S.E. 433 (1916).

Remark Tending to Invoke Sympathy for Witness. — In a prosecution for carnal knowledge of a female child, the repeated remark of the court in directing the sheriff to quiet the spectators, made immediately after cross-examination of prosecutrix to impeach her testimony, that "you people cannot laugh at the predicament of this poor little girl; the only difference between you and she is that you have not been caught," was held to violate this section, as tending to invoke sympathy for prosecutrix and thereby bolster her testimony and as tending to impair the effect of defendant's plea of not guilty. State v. Woolard, 227 N.C. 645, 44 S.E.2d 29 (1947).

Intimation Judge Believed Witness to Have Been a Victim of Abuse. — Where the inescapable implication of the court's reply to the jury's request to rehear testimony of child was that the trial judge believed the minor child to have been a victim of sexual assault, as the court suggested that recounting his testimony would be "very traumatic" and "injurious" to victim, the court violated this section. State v. Hensley, 120 N.C. App. 313, 462 S.E.2d 550 (1995).

Remarks as to Character of Witness. — In prosecution for having carnal knowledge of female child, the disparagement of the defendant's witness and the expression of opinion that prosecutrix was not a delinquent, though inadvertently made in the presence of the jury, entitles defendant to another hearing. State v. Owenby, 226 N.C. 521, 39 S.E.2d 378 (1946).

Comments on Witness' Voice or Memory. — The expression, "This witness has the weakest voice or the shortest memory of any witness I ever saw," is clearly susceptible of the construction that the testimony of the witness was at least questioned by the court, if not unworthy of credit. State v. Bryant, 189 N.C. 112, 126 S.E. 107 (1925).

Remark Concerning Emotion of Witness. — On a trial for rape a remark by the judge concerning the mother of the prosecutrix, that "some allowance must be made for the woman, as she is overcome with emotion," was held not to be error. State v. Laxton, 78 N.C. 564 (1878).

Clarification of Witness' Statement. — The trial judge did not make statements in the presence of the jury tending to add to the probative force of a witness' testimony thereby expressing an opinion as to the credibility of the witness, where the trial judge merely clarified what a witness had already stated, that he did not recognize either defendant, but knew one defendant by name. State v. Aleem, 49 N.C. App. 359, 271 S.E.2d 575 (1980).

Intimation That Witness Committed Perjury. — Any intimation by the judge in the presence of the jury that a witness had committed perjury is a violation of this section and constitutes reversible error. State v. Rhodes, 290 N.C. 16, 224 S.E.2d 631 (1976).

When Perjury References Prejudicial. — The principal determinative questions are whether acts or reference regarding perjury, by whomsoever made, have the effect either of stifling the free presentation of all the legitimate testimony available, or of prevailing the unprejudiced consideration of all the testimony given, either of which may be sufficient to constitute reversible error. State v. Rhodes, 290 N.C. 16, 224 S.E.2d 631 (1976).

Inadvertent comment that defendant's testimony was incredible and therefore defendant should not be considered a credible witness was a violation of this section. State v. Hopson, 265 N.C. 341, 144 S.E.2d 32 (1965).

Remark That Some Witnesses Were Eyewitnesses. — Upon the trial under an indictment for assault and larceny, where some of the State's witnesses were eyewitnesses and some were not, and the defendant had admitted he was present at the time, an instruction as to the first class "now that is the testimony of eyewitnesses," followed by correct instructions as to the second class, is not objectionable as an expression of opinion by the trial judge forbidden by this section. State v. Boswell, 195 N.C. 496, 142 S.E. 583 (1928).

Judge's cautionary remark to a witness to prevent his implicating defendant in other crimes was appropriate and in no way amounted to an expression of opinion on the evidence. State v. Roberts, 28 N.C. App. 194, 220 S.E.2d 627 (1975).

Defendant Not Prejudiced by Remarks During Cross-Examination of State's Witness. — Remarks of the court in the presence of the jury which tend to discredit a witness will be held for reversible error upon appeal of the injured party, but when such remarks are made during defendant's cross-examination of a State's witness, defendant cannot be prejudiced thereby and his exception thereto cannot be sustained. State v. Puett, 210 N.C. 633, 188 S.E. 75 (1936).

Remark on Grant of Witness' Motion for Directed Verdict of Not Guilty. — A trial court's statement to the jury that motions for directed verdicts of not guilty had been entered by all four defendants and had been granted only as to two defendants, one of whom was about to testify for the other defendants, was not an expression of opinion. State v. Fry, 13 N.C. App. 39, 185 S.E.2d 256 (1971), appeal dismissed, 280 N.C. 495, 186 S.E.2d 514 (1972).

D. Remarks Concerning Counsel.

Remarks to Both Counsel to Ensure Orderly Trial. — Remarks of the trial court clearly addressed to both the district attorney and defendant's counsel for purposes of ensuring an orderly trial could not prejudice the jury against the accused and did not, therefore, constitute error. State v. Hoskins, 36 N.C. App. 92, 242 S.E.2d 900, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 469, 246 S.E.2d 11 (1978).

Remarks Belittling Counsel. — Remarks from the bench which tend to belittle and humiliate counsel, or which suggest that counsel is not acting in good faith, reflect not only on counsel but on the defendant as well and may cause the jury to disbelieve all evidence adduced in defendant's behalf. State v. Holden, 280 N.C. 426, 185 S.E.2d 889 (1972).

When remarks from the bench tend to belittle and humiliate counsel, defendant's case can be seriously prejudiced in the eyes of the jury. State v. Frazier, 278 N.C. 458, 180 S.E.2d 128 (1971).

It is error for the judge to make any remarks which tend to belittle or humiliate defendant's cause or his counsel before the jury. State v. Hewitt, 19 N.C. App. 666, 199 S.E.2d 695 (1973).

While the trial judge should be permitted considerable latitude in dealing with counsel, ruling on objections and keeping the trial moving, he must not forget that the jury hangs on his every word and is most attentive to any indication of his view of the proceedings. Thus repeated indications of impatience and displeasure of such nature to indicate that the judge thinks little of counsel's intelligence and what he is doing are most damaging to a fair presentation of the defense. State v. Staley, 292 N.C. 160, 232 S.E.2d 680 (1977).

Defendant's 16 assignments of error regarding alleged denigration of defense counsel, improper expressions of opinion and improper comments by the trial judge were without merit; the judge merely made appropriate inquiries, supervised and controlled the course of the trial and the scope and manner of witness examination with care and prudence. State v. Gell, 351 N.C. 192, 524 S.E.2d 332 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 878, 121 S. Ct. 163, 148 L. Ed. 2d 110 (2000).

Chastisement of Counsel. — Where there is no reason to believe that jurors were informed of the fact that counsel had been chastised or rebuked by the trial court, no error is committed. State v. Hoskins, 36 N.C. App. 92, 242 S.E.2d 900, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 469, 246 S.E.2d 11 (1978).

Admonitions by court to counsel upon improper questioning of witnesses have repeatedly been held not prejudicial. State v. Cox, 6 N.C. App. 18, 169 S.E.2d 134 (1969).

Admonition to defense counsel to refer to his client as defendant, or by his full name rather than by his first name, was made in order to preserve the trial judge's conception of dignity and decorum in the courtroom, and did not constitute an opinion or partiality toward either defendant or the State. State v. Cousins, 289 N.C. 540, 223 S.E.2d 338 (1976), aff'd, 292 N.C. 461, 233 S.E.2d 554 (1977).

Question as to Fairness of Objection. — Where the judge asked defendant's counsel in the hearing of the jury, if he thought that an objection to certain proof in the case "would be fair," it was held that the remark of the judge was no violation of this section. State v. Brown, 100 N.C. 519, 6 S.E. 568 (1888).

E. Questioning of Witnesses.

Court can ask questions of the witness for the purpose of clarifying his testimony. State v. McLamb, 13 N.C. App. 705, 187 S.E.2d 458, cert. denied, 281 N.C. 316, 188 S.E.2d 899 (1972); State v. Laws, 16 N.C. App. 129, 191 S.E.2d 416 (1972); State v. Spinks, 24 N.C. App. 548, 211 S.E.2d 476 (1975); State v. White, 37 N.C. App. 394, 246 S.E.2d 71 (1978).

A trial judge may ask questions of a witness in order to obtain a proper understanding and clarification of the witness' testimony. State v. Blalock, 9 N.C. App. 94, 175 S.E.2d 716 (1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 912, 91 S. Ct. 881, 27 L. Ed. 2d 812 (1971); State v. Lowery, 12 N.C. App. 538, 183 S.E.2d 797 (1971); State v. Hood, 13 N.C. App. 170, 184 S.E.2d 916 (1971), cert. denied, 280 N.C. 723, 186 S.E.2d 926 (1972); State v. Best, 13 N.C. App. 204, 184 S.E.2d 905 (1971), cert. denied, 280 N.C. 495, 186 S.E.2d 514 (1972); State v. Wooten, 15 N.C. App. 193, 189 S.E.2d 579, appeal dismissed, 281 N.C. 763, 191 S.E.2d 360 (1972); State v. Wright, 16 N.C. App. 562, 192 S.E.2d 655 (1972), cert. denied, 282 N.C. 584, 193 S.E.2d 746 (1973); State v. Williams, 17 N.C. App. 31, 193 S.E.2d 478 (1972); State v. McMillan, 19 N.C. App. 721, 200 S.E.2d 339 (1973); State v. Lewis, 27 N.C. App. 426, 219 S.E.2d 554 (1975), cert. denied, 289 N.C. 141, 220 S.E.2d 799 (1976); State v. Riddick, 291 N.C. 399, 230 S.E.2d 506 (1976), reconsideration denied, 293 N.C. 261, 247 S.E.2d 234 (1977); State v. Alston, 38 N.C. App. 219, 247 S.E.2d 726 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 586, 254 S.E.2d 30 (1979); State v. Evans, 298 N.C. 263, 258 S.E.2d 354 (1979), overruled on other grounds, State v. Barnes, 324 N.C. 539, 380 S.E.2d 118 (1989).

Questions which serve only to clarify and promote a proper understanding of the testimony of the witnesses do not amount to an expression of opinion by the judge. State v. Colson, 274 N.C. 295, 163 S.E.2d 376 (1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1087, 89 S. Ct. 876, 21 L. Ed. 2d 780 (1969).

The trial court did not express an opinion in asking questions of State's witnesses, where each question was designed to clarify the testimony of each witness as to location of the defendant and the deceased at the time the homicide occurred. State v. Freeman, 280 N.C. 622, 187 S.E.2d 59 (1972).

It is proper, and often necessary, that judges ask questions of witnesses which are designed to obtain a proper understanding and clarification of the witnesses' testimony. State v. Rennick, 8 N.C. App. 270, 174 S.E.2d 122 (1970).

A trial judge is justified in propounding competent questions in order to develop some relevant fact. State v. Huffman, 7 N.C. App. 92, 171 S.E.2d 339 (1969).

In the exercise of his duty to supervise and control the course of a trial so as to insure justice for all parties, the court may interrogate a witness for the purpose of clarifying his testimony. State v. Greene, 285 N.C. 482, 206 S.E.2d 229 (1974).

While this section prohibits the judge from expressing an opinion as to what has or has not been proven by the testimony of a witness, it is not improper, and is sometimes necessary, for the judge to ask questions of a witness in order to get the truth before the jury. State v. Coble, 20 N.C. App. 575, 202 S.E.2d 303, appeal dismissed, 285 N.C. 236, 204 S.E.2d 21 (1974).

But Examination Must Be Conducted with Care. — While it is proper and may on occasion become necessary for the trial judge to interrogate a witness for the purpose of clarifying and promoting a better understanding of the witness' testimony, such examinations should be conducted with care and in a manner which avoids prejudice to either party. If by their tenor, their frequency, or by the persistence of the trial judge, they tend to convey the jury in any manner at any stage of the trial the "impression of judicial leaning," they violate the purpose and intent of this section and constitute prejudicial error. State v. Bridges, 19 N.C. App. 567, 199 S.E.2d 477 (1973).

It is sometimes necessary for the purpose of clarification for a trial judge to question a witness, and such questions are proper so long as they are asked with care and in a manner which avoids prejudice to either party. State v. Allen, 14 N.C. App. 485, 188 S.E.2d 568 (1972).

It is proper for the court to ask a witness questions for the purpose of clarifying the witness' testimony, but in so doing the court should be careful not to express an opinion on the facts or impeach or discredit the witness. State v. Byrd, 10 N.C. App. 56, 177 S.E.2d 738 (1970).

It has been the immemorial custom for the trial judge to examine witnesses who are tendered by either side whenever he sees fit to do so, but the law requires such examinations to be conducted with care and in a manner which avoids prejudice to either party. State v. Frazier, 278 N.C. 458, 180 S.E.2d 128 (1971).

The presiding judge, in order to make for better understanding or clarification of what a witness has said or intended to say, or to develop some relevant fact overlooked, is entirely justified in propounding competent questions to a witness, but in doing so care should be exercised to prevent by manner or word what may be understood by the jury as the indirect expression of an opinion on the facts. State v. Kimbrey, 236 N.C. 313, 72 S.E.2d 677 (1952).

Questioning by the trial judge must be conducted with care and in a manner which avoids prejudice to either party. State v. Alston, 38 N.C. App. 219, 247 S.E.2d 726 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 586, 254 S.E.2d 30 (1979).

Questions Expressing Opinion Are Prohibited. — The statutory proscription against the trial judge expressing an opinion prohibits the court from asking questions at any time during the trial which amount to an expression of opinion as to what has or has not been shown by the testimony of a witness. State v. Huffman, 7 N.C. App. 92, 171 S.E.2d 339 (1969).

There are times in the course of a trial, when it becomes the duty of the judge to propound competent questions in order to obtain a proper understanding and clarification of the testimony of the witness or to bring out some fact that has been overlooked. But the trial judge should not by word or mannerism convey the impression to the jury that he is giving it the benefit of his opinion on the facts. State v. Hoyle, 3 N.C. App. 109, 164 S.E.2d 83 (1968).

It has been the immemorial custom for the trial judge to examine witnesses who are tendered by either side whenever he sees fit to do so. Such examinations should be conducted with care and in a manner which avoids prejudice to either party. If by their tenor, their frequency, or by the persistence of the trial judge they tend to convey to the jury in any manner at any stage of the trial the "impression of judicial leaning," they violate the purpose and intent of this section and constitute prejudicial error. State v. Colson, 274 N.C. 295, 163 S.E.2d 376 (1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1087, 89 S. Ct. 876, 21 L. Ed. 2d 780 (1969); State v. Freeman, 280 N.C. 622, 187 S.E.2d 59 (1972); State v. Staley, 292 N.C. 160, 232 S.E.2d 680 (1977).

Such Questions Constitute Error. — If by their tenor, their frequency, or by the persistence of the trial judge they tend convey to the jury in any manner at any stage of the trial the impression of judicial leaning, examinations of witnesses by the judge violate the purpose and intent of this section and constitute prejudicial error. State v. Frazier, 278 N.C. 458, 180 S.E.2d 128 (1971); State v. Lowery, 12 N.C. App. 538, 183 S.E.2d 797 (1971); State v. Wright, 16 N.C. App. 562, 192 S.E.2d 655 (1972), cert. denied, 282 N.C. 584, 193 S.E.2d 746 (1973).

Questioning of witness by judge, going beyond an effort to obtain a proper understanding and clarification of the witness' testimony, held to have conveyed to the jury an impression that he had an opinion on the facts in evidence adverse to the defendant. State v. McRae, 240 N.C. 334, 82 S.E.2d 67 (1954).

Where questions appeared to be beneficial rather than prejudicial to defendant's case, since they tended to exculpate rather than inculpate her, and where the questions were restricted to statements previously testified to by defendant, there was no error by trial judge in such questions. State v. Griffin, 18 N.C. App. 14, 195 S.E.2d 569 (1973).

Frequent Interruptions and Prolonged Questioning Prohibited. — It is not improper for the court to ask questions for the purpose of obtaining a proper understanding and clarification of a witness' testimony as long as the trial judge does not engage in frequent interruptions and prolonged questioning. State v. Huffman, 7 N.C. App. 92, 171 S.E.2d 339 (1969).

The trial judge may not express an opinion to the jury in violation of this section by extensively questioning defendant and his witnesses. State v. Bond, 20 N.C. App. 128, 201 S.E.2d 71 (1973).

Question Which Assumes Fact. — Where the State relied upon testimony that tracks had been followed from the scene of the crime to the defendant's room, but did not prove them to be the defendant's, the expression of the court, "You tracked the defendant to whose house?" was held prejudicial, and especially so as the evidence of the State was circumstantial. State v. Oakley, 210 N.C. 206, 186 S.E. 244 (1936).

In rape prosecution, the trial judge's asking the prosecuting witness "... you were in the car when you were raped?" was held to be a prejudicial opinion of the court on the facts. State v. McEachern, 283 N.C. 57, 194 S.E.2d 787 (1973).

Questioning by Judge for Impeachment Purposes Are Prohibited. — It is improper for a trial judge to ask questions for the purpose of impeaching a witness. State v. Hoyle, 3 N.C. App. 109, 164 S.E.2d 83 (1968); State v. Blalock, 9 N.C. App. 94, 175 S.E.2d 716 (1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 912, 91 S. Ct. 881, 27 L. Ed. 2d 812 (1971); State v. Lowery, 12 N.C. App. 538, 183 S.E.2d 797 (1971).

It is improper for a trial judge to ask questions which are reasonably calculated to impeach or discredit a witness. Cross-examination for the purpose of impeachment is the prerogative of counsel including the district solicitor (now district attorney), but it is never the privilege of the trial judge. State v. Kimbrey, 236 N.C. 313, 72 S.E.2d 677 (1952).

As Are Questions Tending to Impeach. — In the trial of criminal actions the court may ask a witness questions designed to obtain a proper understanding and clarification of the witness' testimony or to bring out some fact overlooked, but the court may not ask a defendant or a witness questions tending to impeach him or to cast doubt upon his credibility. State v. Pinkham, 18 N.C. App. 130, 196 S.E.2d 290 (1973); State v. Bond, 20 N.C. App. 128, 201 S.E.2d 71 (1973).

Judge's Questioning of Defendant Held to Be Cross-Examination. — In a prosecution of two defendants for discharging firearms into an occupied building, the trial judge's questioning of the defendants amounted to cross-examination and constituted an expression of opinion on the credibility of defendants' testimony, where the questions included the following: (1) "At the time you fired your shotgun you knew there was someone in the club, didn't you?"; (2) "If you thought there was trouble brewing outside, why didn't you stay in your house rather than get your gun and go out and get in it?"; and (3) "What have you been tried and convicted for?". State v. Lowery, 12 N.C. App. 538, 183 S.E.2d 797 (1971).

F. Rulings on Witnesses and Evidence.

Remark by the court in admitting or excluding evidence is not prejudicial when it amounts to no more than a ruling on the question or where it is made to expedite the trial. State v. Cox, 6 N.C. App. 18, 169 S.E.2d 134 (1969).

Ruling a Witness Expert. — The ruling finding a witness to be an expert in his field could not have been understood by the jury as anything other than a ruling upon the qualification of the witness to testify as to his opinions. The general practice in the courts of this State has never been for the trial judge to excuse the jury from the courtroom when ruling upon the qualification of a witness to testify as an expert, and therefore the judge did not express an opinion as to the credibility of this witness contrary to this section. State v. Irick, 291 N.C. 480, 231 S.E.2d 833 (1977).

The trial court did not express an opinion as to the credibility of witnesses for the State by ruling, in the presence of the jury, that each was an expert in the field of his testimony. State v. Frazier, 280 N.C. 181, 185 S.E.2d 652, vacated on other grounds, 409 U.S. 1004, 93 S. Ct. 453, 34 L. Ed. 2d 295 (1972), modified, 283 N.C. 99, 195 S.E.2d 33 (1973).

The trial court committed prejudicial error when it declared in the presence of the jury that the defendant was found by the court to be an expert in the field of general psychiatry and would be allowed to testify, where the defendant testified as his own expert, and the question of his expertise was not simply a question of fact but one of the most critical questions to be decided by the jury. Sherrod v. Nash Gen. Hosp., 348 N.C. 526, 500 S.E.2d 708 (1998).

Jury Need Not Be Excused for Ruling on Expert. — Where the court's ruling could not be interpreted by the jury as anything other than a holding that the witness was qualified to testify concerning his expert opinion in his field, it was not necessary for the trial judge to excuse the jury from the courtroom when ruling upon the qualification of a witness to testify as an expert. State v. Frazier, 280 N.C. 181, 185 S.E.2d 652, vacated on other grounds, 409 U.S. 1004, 93 S. Ct. 453, 34 L. Ed. 2d 295 (1972), modified, 283 N.C. 99, 195 S.E.2d 33 (1973).

Exclusion of Evidence so as to Intimate Favoritism Prohibited. — Judge may always properly exclude inadmissible evidence; he is prohibited, however, by this section from doing so in a manner which intimates any judicial favoritism. State v. Hughes, 54 N.C. App. 117, 282 S.E.2d 504 (1981).

Denying Jury Request to See Photographs During Deliberations. — Where the trial judge told the jury that he could not allow them to take certain photographs which had not been received in evidence into the jury room because the defendant did not consent, his statement was an incorrect statement of the law under § 15A-1233 which was nevertheless harmless in itself since it led to a correct ruling that the jury could not take photographs not admitted in evidence into the jury room. However, the attempt by the trial judge to explain the reason for his failure to comply with the jury's request constituted an impermissible expression of opinion in violation of § 15A-1222 and this section which required a new trial. State v. Grogan, 40 N.C. App. 371, 253 S.E.2d 20 (1979).

Comment Before Jury on Objection to

State's Request for Instructions. — It was not prejudicial error for the trial judge to comment before the jury that the defendants' lawyers had objected to the State's request to give additional instructions on intent, where, while it may have been better practice to have simply noted the objections in the record, the defendants have failed to establish how they might have been prejudiced by the court's remarks, the judge's comments did not convey to the jury the "impression of judicial leaning." State v. Nealy, 64 N.C. App. 663, 308 S.E.2d 343 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 155, 311 S.E.2d 295 (1984).

Opinion as to the Existence of a Material Fact. — Challenged instruction of the trial court which constituted an indirect statement that the apartment and the common areas of sorority house constituted a single "dwelling house" for purposes of application of the burglary statute violated this section by expressing an opinion as to the existence of a material fact. State v. Merritt, 120 N.C. App. 732, 463 S.E.2d 590 (1995).

G. Weight and Credibility of Testimony, etc.

Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence Are Questions for Jury. — Whether there be any evidence is a question for the judge. Whether it is sufficient evidence is a question for the jury. State v. Moses, 13 N.C. 452 (1830); State v. Hardee, 83 N.C. 619 (1880).

It is the province of the jury to ascertain the facts from the evidence, the weight and credibility thereof being exclusively for its determination. In re Will of Bergeron, 196 N.C. 649, 146 S.E. 571 (1929).

The question of the admissibility of evidence is for the judge; whether there is evidence and its weight and credibility are for the jury. State v. Perry, 3 N.C. App. 356, 164 S.E.2d 629 (1968), overruled on other grounds, State v. Barnes, 324 N.C. 539, 380 S.E.2d 118 (1989).

The weight and credibility of the evidence must be left strictly to the jury. State v. Staley, 292 N.C. 160, 232 S.E.2d 680 (1977).

Whether the defendant's evidence is less credible than the State's evidence is an issue for the jury, not the trial judge. State v. Blackmon, 38 N.C. App. 620, 248 S.E.2d 456 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 412, 251 S.E.2d 471 (1979).

As Are Discrepancies and Contradictions. — Discrepancies and contradictions in the evidence are for the jury and not for the court. Jones v. Johnson, 267 N.C. 656, 148 S.E.2d 583 (1966).

And Credibility of Witnesses. — No judge at any time during the trial of a cause is permitted to cast doubt upon the testimony of a witness or to impeach his credibility. The cold neutrality of an impartial judge should constantly be observed, as the slightest intimation from the bench will always have great weight with the jury. State v. Auston, 223 N.C. 203, 25 S.E.2d 613 (1843). See State v. Owenby, 226 N.C. 521, 39 S.E.2d 378 (1946); State v. McNeill, 231 N.C. 666, 58 S.E.2d 366 (1950).

The trial court may not by remarks or questions impeach the credibility of a witness or in any manner convey to the jury the impression that the testimony of a witness, in the opinion of the court, is probably unworthy of belief. State v. Perry, 231 N.C. 467, 57 S.E.2d 774 (1950).

No judge at any time during the trial of a cause is permitted to cast doubt upon the testimony of a witness or to impeach his credibility. State v. Simpson, 233 N.C. 438, 64 S.E.2d 568 (1951); State v. Kimbrey, 236 N.C. 313, 72 S.E.2d 677 (1952); State v. Hopson, 265 N.C. 341, 144 S.E.2d 32 (1965). See State v. Smith, 240 N.C. 99, 81 S.E.2d 263 (1954).

The credibility of the witnesses and conflicts in the evidence are for the jury, not the court. Atkins v. Moye, 277 N.C. 179, 176 S.E.2d 789 (1970).

The credibility of witnesses, the weight and sufficiency of testimony, are matters peculiarly within the province of the jury to consider and pass upon. Williford v. Jackson, 29 N.C. App. 128, 223 S.E.2d 528 (1976).

It is for the jury and not for the judge to say how the testimony of a witness is affected by other testimony. Williford v. Jackson, 29 N.C. App. 128, 223 S.E.2d 528 (1976).

The sound rule that no judge at any time is permitted to cast doubt upon the testimony of a witness is firmly fixed in this jurisdiction. The judge must exercise great care to see that nothing he does or says during the trial can be understood by the jury as an expression of an opinion on the facts or conveys an impression of judicial meaning. State v. Battle, 18 N.C. App. 256, 196 S.E.2d 536 (1973).

A trial judge has the right and duty to control the examination of witnesses and to ask questions tending to clarify the witness' testimony for the jury, but in doing so, the judge must refrain from impeaching or discrediting a witness or demonstrating any hostility toward the witness. State v. Evans, 36 N.C. App. 166, 243 S.E.2d 812, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 469, 246 S.E.2d 217 (1978).

And Diverse Inferences. — If diverse inferences may be drawn from the evidence, some favorable to the plaintiff and others to the defendant, the case should be submitted to the jury for final determination. Jones v. Johnson, 267 N.C. 656, 148 S.E.2d 583 (1966).

And Final Decision of Facts Rests with Jury. — The jury must not only unanimously concur in the verdict, but must be left free to act according to the dictates of their own judgment. The final decision upon the facts rests with them, and any inference by the court tending to influence them into a verdict against their convictions is irregular and without the warrant of law. The judge is not justified in expressing to the jury his opinion that the defendant is guilty upon the evidence adduced. State v. Maxwell, 215 N.C. 32, 1 S.E.2d 125 (1939).

When evidence is competent for one purpose, but not for another, the party against whom it is offered is entitled, upon request, to have the jury instructed to consider it only for the purposes for which it is competent. State v. Foster, 63 N.C. App. 531, 306 S.E.2d 126 (1983).

Opinion as to Weight of Evidence Prohibited. — A judge is prohibited by this section from expressing an opinion upon the weight of the evidence, and could not instruct the jury that this was or was not clear, strong, and convincing. Earnhardt v. Clement, 137 N.C. 91, 49 S.E. 49 (1904).

It is a violation of this section for a judge at any time in the progress of a trial (as well as during his charge to the jury) to express an opinion as to the weight of evidence or to use language which, fairly interpreted, would make it reasonably certain that it would influence the minds of the jury in determining a fact. State v. Browning, 78 N.C. 555 (1878).

A trial court is prohibited from expressing an opinion upon the weight and credibility of the evidence during trial or during the course of instructions to the jury. Moreover, a trial court should state the facts to the jury and avoid drawing conclusions for members of the jury. State v. Hosey, 79 N.C. App. 196, 339 S.E.2d 414, modified and aff'd, 318 N.C. 330, 348 S.E.2d 805 (1986).

Expression of Opinion by Judge Is Error. — It is error for the trial judge to indicate to the jury in any manner his opinion as to the credibility of a witness, or as to the weight to be given his testimony. State v. Frazier, 280 N.C. 181, 185 S.E.2d 652, vacated on other grounds, 409 U.S. 1004, 93 S. Ct. 453, 34 L. Ed. 2d 295 (1972), modified, 283 N.C. 99, 195 S.E.2d 33 (1973).

H. Determination of Prejudice.

Remarks Must Be Prejudicial. — Unless it appears with ordinary certainty that the rights of either party have been in some way prejudiced by the remark or conduct of the court, it cannot be treated as error. State v. Browning, 78 N.C. 555 (1878).

A remark or question by the court during the progress of the trial, even though it amounts to a prohibited expression of opinion by the court, will not entitle defendant to a new trial when the matter, considered in the light of all the facts and attendant circumstances, is not of such prejudicial nature as could reasonably have had an appreciable effect on the result of the trial. State v. Perry, 231 N.C. 467, 57 S.E.2d 774 (1950).

To constitute reversible error, an expression of opinion on the part of the court must be prejudicial to the interest of the appellant. State v. Puett, 210 N.C. 633, 188 S.E. 75 (1936); State v. Hoover, 252 N.C. 133, 113 S.E.2d 281 (1960).

Remarks of the court during a trial will not entitle a defendant to a new trial unless they tend to prejudice the defendant. State v. Byrd, 10 N.C. App. 56, 177 S.E.2d 738 (1970); State v. Raynor, 17 N.C. App. 707, 195 S.E.2d 309 (1973).

An accused is not entitled to a new trial because of remarks of the trial judge unless they tend to prejudice defendant in light of the circumstances in which they were made, and the burden of showing that he has been deprived of a fair trial by such remarks is upon the defendant. State v. Greene, 285 N.C. 482, 206 S.E.2d 229 (1974).

All expressions of opinion do not warrant a new trial. A remark made by the judge in the presence of the jury does not entitle defendant to a new trial if the statement, considered in the light of all the facts and attendant circumstances, is not of such prejudicial nature as could reasonably have had an appreciable effect on the result of the trial. State v. Teasley, 31 N.C. App. 729, 230 S.E.2d 692 (1976).

Test for Determining Prejudice. — The trial judge must abstain from conduct or language which tends to discredit or prejudice the accused or his cause with the jury. The bare possibility, however, that an accused may have suffered prejudice from the conduct or language of the judge is not sufficient to overthrow an adverse verdict. The criterion for determining whether or not the trial judge deprived an accused of his right to a fair trial by improper comments or remarks in the hearing of the jury is the probable effect of the language upon the jury. In applying this test, the utterance of the judge is to be considered in the light of the circumstances under which it was made. State v. Carter, 233 N.C. 581, 65 S.E.2d 9 (1951); Davis v. North Carolina, 196 F. Supp. 488 (E.D.N.C. 1961), rev'd on other grounds, 310 F.2d 904 (4th Cir. 1962).

Harmless Error. — The comment made or the question propounded should be considered in the light of all the facts and attendant circumstances disclosed by the record, and unless it is apparent that such infraction of the rules might reasonably have had a prejudicial effect on the result of the trial, the error will be considered harmless. State v. Hoyle, 3 N.C. App. 109, 164 S.E.2d 83 (1968); State v. Huffman, 7 N.C. App. 92, 171 S.E.2d 339 (1970); State v. Gibson, 14 N.C. App. 409, 188 S.E.2d 683 (1972); State v. Wooten, 15 N.C. App. 193, 189 S.E.2d 579, appeal dismissed,

Not every ill-advised expression by the trial judge is of such harmful effect as to require a reversal. The objectionable language must be viewed in light of all the facts and circumstances, and unless it is apparent that such infraction of the rules might reasonably have had a prejudicial effect on the result of the trial, the error will be considered harmless. State v. Holden, 280 N.C. 426, 185 S.E.2d 889 (1972); State v. Blue, 17 N.C. App. 526, 195 S.E.2d 104 (1973).

Not every indiscreet and improper remark by a trial judge is of such harmful effect as to require a new trial. State v. Whitted, 38 N.C. App. 603, 248 S.E.2d 442 (1978).

Burden of Proving Remark Harmful. — A defendant who contends that the trial court's remarks amount to an expression of opinion in the presence of the jury must show more than the possibility of unfair influence; it must appear with ordinary certainty that the court's language, when fairly interpreted, was likely to convey an opinion to the jury and could reasonably have had an appreciable effect on the result of the trial. State v. Hollingsworth, 11 N.C. App. 674, 182 S.E.2d 26 (1971); State v. Wallace, 21 N.C. App. 523, 204 S.E.2d 855 (1974).

Whether an accused was deprived of a fair trial by remarks by the judge during any stage of the trial must be determined by what was said and its probable effect upon the jury in light of all attendant circumstances, the burden of showing prejudice being upon the appellant. State v. Faircloth, 297 N.C. 388, 255 S.E.2d 366 (1979).

Petitioner has the burden of showing that the judge's remarks constituted prejudicial error. Davis v. North Carolina, 196 F. Supp. 488 (E.D.N.C. 1961), rev'd on other grounds, 310 F.2d 904 (4th Cir. 1962).

Possibility of Unfair Influence Insufficient. — It is not sufficient to show, that what the judge did or said might have had an unfair influence, or that his words, critically examined and detached from the context and the incidents of the trial, were capable of a construction from which his opinion on the weight of testimony might be inferred; but it must appear, with ordinary certainty, that his manner of arraying and presenting the evidence was unfair, and likely to be prejudicial, or that his language, when fairly interpreted, was likely to convey to the jury his opinion on the weight of the testimony. State v. Jones, 67 N.C. 285 (1872).

It is not sufficient to show by a critical examination that the judge's words, detached from the context and the incidents of the trial, are capable of an interpretation from which an expression of opinion may be inferred. State v. Allen, 283 N.C. 354, 196 S.E.2d 256 (1973); State v. Slade, 291 N.C. 275, 229 S.E.2d 921 (1976).

The bare possibility that an accused may have suffered prejudice from the conduct or language of the judge is not sufficient to overthrow an adverse verdict. State v. Cousin, 292 N.C. 461, 233 S.E.2d 554 (1977).

Showing That Opinion May Be Inferred Is Insufficient. — Showing that a critical examination of the judge's words, detached from the context and the incidents of the trial, are capable of an interpretation from which an expression of opinion may be inferred is insufficient to show prejudicial error. State v. Poole, 289 N.C. 47, 220 S.E.2d 320 (1975).

What Remarks to Jurors Presumed Correct on Appeal. — The remarks of the trial judge in discharging a jury after verdict, or in impressing upon jurors and the public the duty of jurors in their conduct, are prima facie presumed on appeal to be correct. State v. Pugh, 183 N.C. 800, 111 S.E. 849 (1922).

Record on Appeal Must Show How Opinion Intimated. — If an appeal is taken on the ground that the judge, by his manner or emphasis intimated an opinion upon the facts, the record must allege the tone, emphasis or manner. State v. Wilson, 76 N.C. 120 (1877).

Remark Considered in Light of Circumstances. — The criterion for determining whether the trial judge deprived an accused of his right to a fair trial by improper comments or remarks in the hearing of the jury is the probable effect upon the jury. In applying this test, the utterance of the judge is to be considered in the light of the circumstances under which it was made. State v. Cox, 6 N.C. App. 18, 169 S.E.2d 134 (1969); State v. Lemmond, 12 N.C. App. 128, 182 S.E.2d 636 (1971); State v. Spinks, 24 N.C. App. 548, 211 S.E.2d 476 (1975); State v. Cousin, 292 N.C. 461, 233 S.E.2d 554 (1977).

The question of whether prejudice resulted is to be considered in the light of the circumstances under which the remarks were made. State v. Byrd, 10 N.C. App. 56, 177 S.E.2d 738 (1970); State v. Raynor, 17 N.C. App. 707, 195 S.E.2d 309 (1973).

When an objectionable opinion statement purportedly has been made and possibly violates this section, that remark, standing by itself, may not necessarily constitute reversible error. To establish reversible error, courts must consider the remark in the light of the circumstances under which it was made. State v. Rhodes, 28 N.C. App. 432, 221 S.E.2d 730, rev'd on other grounds, 290 N.C. 16, 224 S.E.2d 631 (1976).

Statements of the judge must be considered in the context of the entire record, since the test of prejudice resulting from a judge's remarks is whether a juror might reasonably infer that the judge expressed partiality or intimated an opinion as to a witness' credibility or as to any fact to be determined by the jury. State v. Staley, 292 N.C. 160, 232 S.E.2d 680 (1977).

Removal of Prejudicial Impression by Subsequent Explanation. — The judge prejudices a party or his cause in the minds of the trial jurors whenever he violates this section by expressing an adverse opinion on the facts. When this occurs, it is virtually impossible for the judge to remove the prejudicial impression from the minds of the trial jurors by anything which he may afterward say to them by way of atonement or explanation. State v. Canipe, 240 N.C. 60, 81 S.E.2d 173 (1954).

Once the trial judge has given, in the presence of the jury, the slightest intimation, directly or indirectly, or his opinion concerning a fact to be found by the jury or concerning the credibility of testimony given by a witness, such error cannot be corrected by instructing the jury not to consider the expression by the court. State v. Carter, 268 N.C. 648, 151 S.E.2d 602 (1966).

Once the trial judge expresses an opinion as to the facts before the jury, the resulting prejudice to the defendant is virtually impossible to cure. The prejudice is not removed by the judge's instructing the jury not to consider the remarks. State v. Teasley, 31 N.C. App. 729, 230 S.E.2d 692 (1976).

Error committed by the court in expressing an opinion on the facts is virtually impossible to cure. State v. Clanton, 20 N.C. App. 275, 201 S.E.2d 365 (1973).

Ordinarily, an expression of opinion cannot be cured by instructing the jury to disregard it. State v. McEachern, 283 N.C. 57, 194 S.E.2d 787 (1973).

When Equal Protection Clause Violated. — The equal protection clause of U.S. Const., Amend. XIV is not violated by prejudicial remarks of the judge unless there is shown to be an element of intentional or purposeful discrimination and the burden of showing this is on the accused. Davis v. North Carolina, 196 F. Supp. 488 (E.D.N.C. 1961), rev'd on other grounds, 310 F.2d 904 (4th Cir. 1962).

III. JURY INSTRUCTIONS.

A. In General.

Section Essentially Same as Former § 1-180. — While this section restates the substance of former § 1-180, the language requiring the judge to "give equal stress to the State and defendant in a criminal action" has been omitted. Even so, as indicated by the official commentary, what was heretofore explicit is now implicit and the law remains essentially unchanged. State v. Hewett, 295 N.C. 640, 247 S.E.2d 886 (1978).

Section 15A-1222 and this section repealed and replaced former § 1-180 effective July 1, 1978. The new provisions restate the substance of former § 1-180 and the law remains essentially unchanged. State v. Herbin, 298 N.C. 441, 259 S.E.2d 263 (1979).

Purpose. — This section requires the judge to explain the law but give no opinion on the facts. The purpose of the section is to secure the right of every litigant to have his cause considered by an impartial judge and an unbiased jury. State v. Lee, 277 N.C. 205, 176 S.E.2d 765 (1970).

The trial court must declare and explain the law arising on the evidence, state the evidence to the extent necessary to explain the application of the law thereto, and refrain from expression of an opinion whether a fact has been proved. State v. McLean, 74 N.C. App. 224, 328 S.E.2d 451 (1985), appeal dismissed, 316 N.C. 199, 341 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

Section Mandatory. — The provisions of this section are mandatory, and a failure to comply is prejudicial error. State v. Bryant, 189 N.C. 112, 126 S.E. 107 (1925); State v. Evans, 211 N.C. 458, 190 S.E. 724 (1937); State v. Lee, 277 N.C. 205, 176 S.E.2d 765 (1970); State v. Wingo, 30 N.C. App. 123, 226 S.E.2d 221 (1976); State v. Hewett, 295 N.C. 640, 247 S.E.2d 886 (1978).

And Failure to Observe Requires New Trial. — This section requires that the judge shall declare and explain the law arising on the evidence given in the case. This is a substantial right of litigants. Failure to observe it is error for which the injured party is entitled to a new trial. State v. Jones, 254 N.C. 450, 119 S.E.2d 213 (1961); State v. Hewett, 295 N.C. 640, 247 S.E.2d 886 (1978).

The statute creates a substantial legal right; its provisions are mandatory and failure to comply with them is prejudicial error for which a new trial must be ordered. State v. Pryor, 59 N.C. App. 1, 295 S.E.2d 610 (1982).

Strict Observance of Section Required. — The Supreme Court of North Carolina has consistently endeavored to maintain the integrity of this section by requiring strict observance of its provisions. State v. Lee, 277 N.C. 205, 176 S.E.2d 765 (1970).

Section establishes these fundamental propositions: (1) That it is the duty of the judge alone to decide legal questions presented at the trial, and to instruct the jury as to the law arising on the evidence given in the case; (2) that it is the task of the jury alone to determine the facts of the case from the evidence adduced; and (3) that no judge, in giving a charge to the petit jury, shall give an opinion whether a fact is fully or sufficiently proven, that being the true office and province of the jury. State v. Canipe, 240 N.C. 60, 81 S.E.2d 173 (1954); State v. McEachern, 283 N.C. 57, 194 S.E.2d 787 (1973).

Object of Instructions. — The chief object contemplated in the charge of the judge is to explain the law of the case, to point out the essentials to be proved on the one side and the other, and to bring into view the relations of the particular evidence adduced to the particular issues involved. State v. Friddle, 223 N.C. 258, 25 S.E.2d 751 (1943).

The chief purposes of the charge are clarification of the issues, elimination of extraneous matters, and declaration and application of the law arising upon the evidence. State v. Jackson, 228 N.C. 656, 46 S.E.2d 858 (1948); State v. Cameron, 284 N.C. 165, 200 S.E.2d 186 (1973), cert. denied, 418 U.S. 905, 94 S. Ct. 3195, 41 L. Ed. 2d 1153 (1974).

The purposes of the trial judge's charge to the jury are to clarify the issues, eliminate extraneous matters and declare and explain the law arising on the evidence. State v. Cousin, 292 N.C. 461, 233 S.E.2d 554 (1977).

The chief purpose of a charge is to give a clear instruction which applies the law to the evidence in such manner as to assist the jury in understanding the case and in reaching a correct verdict. State v. Williams, 280 N.C. 132, 184 S.E.2d 875 (1971).

The purpose of an instruction is to clarify the issues for the jury and to apply the law to the facts of the case. State v. Britt, 285 N.C. 256, 204 S.E.2d 817 (1974).

Regardless of the particular words employed by the trial judge, an instruction is adequate if it accurately presents the applicable principles of law. State v. Bogle, 90 N.C. App. 277, 368 S.E.2d 424, rev'd on other grounds, 324 N.C. 190, 376 S.E.2d 745 (1988).

Court, Not Counsel, to Instruct Jury. — It is the function of the court, not of the counsel for either party, to instruct the jury as to the law arising on the evidence. State v. Jackson, 284 N.C. 321, 200 S.E.2d 626 (1973).

Required Explanation. — All that is required of a charge by this section is that the essential evidence offered at the trial be stated in a plain and correct manner, together with an explanation of the law arising thereon. State v. Fleming, 202 N.C. 512, 163 S.E. 453 (1932); In re Beale, 202 N.C. 618, 163 S.E. 684 (1932).

This section requires, on the part of the judge, a statement of the evidence to which he is attempting to apply the law. State v. Best, 265 N.C. 477, 144 S.E.2d 416 (1965).

This section requires a statement of the evidence to the extent necessary to explain the application of the law thereto. State v. Hardee, 3 N.C. App. 426, 165 S.E.2d 43 (1969); State v. Vickers, 22 N.C. App. 282, 206 S.E.2d 399, further review denied, 285 N.C. 668, 207 S.E.2d 760 (1974); State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978); State v. Mitchell, 48 N.C. App. 680, 270 S.E.2d 117 (1980); State v. Edwards, 49 N.C. App. 547, 272 S.E.2d 384 (1980); State v. Tripp, 52 N.C. App. 244, 278 S.E.2d 592 (1981).

An instruction meets the requirements of this section when it clearly applies the law to the evidence introduced upon the trial and gives the position taken by the respective parties as to the prominent and controlling features which make for the ascertainment of the facts. State v. Graham, 194 N.C. 459, 140 S.E. 26 (1927). See State v. Biggs, 224 N.C. 722, 32 S.E.2d 352 (1944).

Nothing more is required than a clear instruction that applies the law to the evidence and gives the position taken by the parties as to the essential features of the case. State v. Noell, 284 N.C. 670, 202 S.E.2d 750 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 902, 96 S. Ct. 3203, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1205 (1976).

Where the court recounted the evidence of the State and defendant, and the jury was then instructed what they would have to find from the evidence in order to find the defendant guilty or not guilty of the various charges, this satisfies the requirements of this section. State v. Benton, 42 N.C. App. 228, 256 S.E.2d 279 (1979), aff'd, 299 N.C. 16, 260 S.E.2d 917 (1980).

This section is complied with where the court fully instructs the jury as to the evidence and the contentions of the parties and defines the law applicable thereto. State v. McLean, 234 N.C. 283, 67 S.E.2d 75 (1951).

The requirement of this section is met by presentation of the principal features of the evidence relied on, respectively, by the prosecution and defense. State v. Craig, 11 N.C. App. 196, 180 S.E.2d 376 (1971); State v. McLean, 74 N.C. App. 224, 328 S.E.2d 451 (1985), appeal dismissed, 316 N.C. 199, 341 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

Although the judge's charge need not, and indeed should not, encompass every fragment of evidence offered by the State and defendant, it is required to segregate the material facts of the case, array the facts on both sides, and apply the pertinent principles of law to each, so that the jury may decide the case according to the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence. State v. Ward, 300 N.C. 150, 266 S.E.2d 581 (1980).

Concerning the necessity of declaring and explaining the law it has been held in quite a number of cases that nothing more is required than a clear instruction which applies the law to the evidence and gives the position taken by the respective parties as to the prominent and controlling features which make for the ascertainment of the facts. State v. Overton, 60 N.C. App. 1, 298 S.E.2d 695 (1982), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 307 N.C. 580, 299 S.E.2d 652 (1983).

The court is required to explain the law of the case, to point out the essentials to be proved on the one side or the other, and to bring into view the relations of the particular evidence adduced to the particular issues involved. State v. Overton, 60 N.C. App. 1, 298 S.E.2d 695 (1982), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 307 N.C. 580, 299 S.E.2d 652 (1983).

In instructing the jury, the trial court must declare and explain the law arising on the evidence, state the evidence to the extent necessary to explain the application of the law and refrain from expressing an opinion as to whether or not a fact has been proved. State v. Greenidge, 102 N.C. App. 447, 402 S.E.2d 639 (1991).

Duty of Judge. — It is the duty of the judge, in charging the jury, to segregate the material facts of the case, array the facts on both sides, and apply the principles of law to each, so that the jury may decide the case according to the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence. State v. Jones, 87 N.C. 547 (1882); State v. Rogers, 93 N.C. 523 (1885); State v. Friddle, 223 N.C. 258, 25 S.E.2d 751 (1943); State v. Bryant, 282 N.C. 92, 191 S.E.2d 745 (1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 958, 93 S. Ct. 1432, 35 L. Ed. 2d 691; 410 U.S. 987, 93 S. Ct. 1516, 36 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1973); State v. Benton, 299 N.C. 16, 260 S.E.2d 917 (1980).

The trial judge is required to state clearly and distinctly the particular issues arising on the evidence, and on which the jury are to pass, and to instruct them as to the law applicable to every state of the facts which, upon the evidence, they may reasonably find to be true. State v. Matthews, 78 N.C. 523 (1878).

This section requires the court to give to the jury such instructions as will enable them to understand the nature of the crime and properly determine each material fact upon which may depend the guilt or innocence of the accused. State v. Fulford, 124 N.C. 798, 32 S.E. 377 (1899).

Discretion of Court. — In giving instructions the court is not required to follow any particular form and has wide discretion as to the manner in which the case is presented to the jury, but it has the duty to explain, without special request therefor, each essential element of the offense and to apply the law with respect to each element to the evidence bearing thereon. State v. Mundy, 265 N.C. 528, 144 S.E.2d 572 (1965).

The trial judge has wide discretion in presenting the issues to the jury. This responsibility cannot be delegated to or usurped by counsel. State v. Harris, 306 N.C. 724, 295 S.E.2d 391 (1982).

Charge to the jury should present every substantial and essential feature of the case embraced within the issue and arising on the evidence, and this without any special prayer for instructions to that effect. State v. Ardrey, 232 N.C. 721, 62 S.E.2d 53 (1950); State v. Mercer, 275 N.C. 108, 165 S.E.2d 328 (1969); State v. Fearing, 48 N.C. App. 329, 269 S.E.2d 245, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 99, 273 S.E.2d 303; 301 N.C. 403, 273 S.E.2d 448 (1980), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 304 N.C. 471, 284 S.E.2d 487 (1981).

This section confers upon litigants a substantial legal right and calls for instructions as to the law upon all substantial features of the case. State v. O'Neal, 187 N.C. 22, 120 S.E. 817 (1924); State v. Ardrey, 232 N.C. 721, 62 S.E.2d 53 (1950); State v. Floyd, 241 N.C. 298, 84 S.E.2d 915 (1954).

Every substantial feature of the case arising on the evidence must be presented to the jury even without a special request for instructions on the issue. State v. Best, 31 N.C. App. 389, 229 S.E.2d 202 (1976); State v. Mitchell, 48 N.C. App. 680, 270 S.E.2d 117 (1980).

Where the charge fully instructs the jury on all substantive features of the case, defines and applies the law thereto and states the contentions of the parties, it complies with this section. State v. Middleton, 25 N.C. App. 632, 214 S.E.2d 248 (1975); State v. Walton, 41 N.C. App. 281, 254 S.E.2d 661 (1979).

The presiding judge in his charge to the jury must declare and explain the law arising on the evidence relating to each substantial feature of the case. State v. Everette, 284 N.C. 81, 199 S.E.2d 462 (1973); State v. Jones, 300 N.C. 363, 266 S.E.2d 586 (1980); State v. Hockett, 309 N.C. 794, 309 S.E.2d 249 (1983).

Ordinarily, a statement of the applicable law and the contentions of the parties, without applying the law to the substantive features of the case arising on the evidence, is insufficient under this section. State v. Williams, 290 N.C. 770, 228 S.E.2d 241 (1976).

And Failure to Do So Is Prejudicial. — The failure of the court to instruct the jury on substantive features of the case arising on the evidence is prejudicial, even in the absence of a request for special instructions. State v. Ardrey, 232 N.C. 721, 62 S.E.2d 53 (1950); State v. Hornbuckle, 265 N.C. 312, 144 S.E.2d 12 (1965); State v. Neagle, 29 N.C. App. 308, 224 S.E.2d 274, cert. denied, 290 N.C. 665, 228 S.E.2d 456 (1976).

It is prejudicial error when the court fails to instruct the jury on a substantial feature of the case arising on the evidence. State v. Graves, 18 N.C. App. 177, 196 S.E.2d 582 (1973); State v. Wingo, 30 N.C. App. 123, 226 S.E.2d 221 (1976).

Even Absent Request. — Under this section it is obligatory for the trial judge to charge the jury as to the law upon every substantial feature of the case embraced within the issue and arising on the evidence without any special prayer for instruction to that effect. State v. Brady, 236 N.C. 295, 72 S.E.2d 675 (1952).

The trial court is required to charge the law upon all substantial features of the case arising on the evidence, even though there is no request for special instructions. State v. Deck, 285 N.C. 209, 203 S.E.2d 830 (1974); State v. Atkinson, 39 N.C. App. 575, 251 S.E.2d 677 (1979).

Judge is required to declare and explain the law arising on the evidence. State v. Duboise, 279 N.C. 73, 181 S.E.2d 393 (1971); State v. Pittman, 12 N.C. App. 401, 183 S.E.2d 307 (1971); State v. Harrill, 289 N.C. 186, 221 S.E.2d 325, death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3212, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1211 (1976); State v. Harris, 47 N.C. App. 121, 266 S.E.2d 735 (1980), cert. denied, 305 N.C. 762, 292 S.E.2d 577 (1982); State v. Jones, 52 N.C. App. 606, 279 S.E.2d 9 (1981); State v. Locklear, 60 N.C. App. 428, 298 S.E.2d 766 (1983).

It is the duty of the judge, under the provisions of this section, to state in a plain and correct manner the evidence given in the case and to declare and explain the law arising thereon, without expressing any opinion upon the facts. State v. Owenby, 226 N.C. 521, 39 S.E.2d 378 (1946).

This section requires the presiding judge to declare and explain the law as it relates to the different aspects of the evidence on each side of the case, so as to bring into focus the relations between the different phases of the evidence and the applicable principles of law. State v. Washington, 234 N.C. 531, 67 S.E.2d 498 (1951).

Not upon Hypothetical Facts. — This section requires the court, in both criminal and civil actions, to declare and explain the law arising on the evidence in the particular case and not upon a set of hypothetical facts. State v. Street, 241 N.C. 689, 86 S.E.2d 277 (1955); State v. Campbell, 251 N.C. 317, 111 S.E.2d 198 (1959).

Merely hypothetical instructions are erroneous, and should not be indulged in, as they proceed on an assumption of facts. State v. Benton, 19 N.C. 196 (1836); State v. Collins, 30 N.C. 407 (1848); State v. Murph, 60 N.C. 129 (1863); Johnson v. Bell, 74 N.C. 355 (1876).

The law should be applied to the particular facts in evidence and not to a set of hypothetical facts. State v. Williams, 299 N.C. 652, 263 S.E.2d 774 (1980).

Nor upon Subject Not Supported by Evidence. — This section requires the trial judge to clarify and explain the law arising on the evidence, and a trial judge should not give instructions to the jury which are not supported by the evidence produced at the trial. State v. Cameron, 284 N.C. 165, 200 S.E.2d 186 (1973), cert. denied, 418 U.S. 905, 94 S. Ct. 3195, 41 L. Ed. 2d 1153 (1974); State v. Rose, 323 N.C. 455, 373 S.E.2d 426 (1988).

To determine whether an instruction should be given, the court must consider whether there is any evidence in the record which would convince a rational trier of fact to convict the defendant of the offense. State v. Moore, 75 N.C. App. 543, 331 S.E.2d 251, cert. denied, 315 N.C. 188, 337 S.E.2d 862 (1985).

In determining whether an instruction requested by defendant is supported by evidence, and therefore should be given, at least in substance, the evidence must be interpreted in the light most favorable to him. In making this determination the trial judge is concerned only with the sufficiency of the evidence; its credibility is for the jury to determine, not the court. State v. Ataei-Kachuei, 68 N.C. App. 209, 314 S.E.2d 751, cert. denied, 311 N.C. 763, 321 S.E.2d 146 (1984).

Instruction on Law Not Presented by Evidence. — It is prejudicial error to instruct in regard to law not presented by the evidence. State v. Henderson, 285 N.C. 1, 203 S.E.2d 10 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 902, 96 S. Ct. 3202, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1205 (1976).

Circumstantial Evidence. — A jury instruction as to the effect of circumstantial evidence should be given only when there is no direct evidence. If either the State or the defendant elicits direct evidence bearing on any issue for the jury's determination, then such an instruction is not appropriate. State v. Bates, 309 N.C. 528, 308 S.E.2d 258 (1983).

Unnecessary Averment Need Not Be Charged. — If an averment in an indictment is not necessary in charging the offense to the jury, it may be disregarded. State v. Lewis, 58 N.C. App. 348, 293 S.E.2d 638 (1982), cert. denied, 311 N.C. 766, 321 S.E.2d 152 (1984).

Requirement Arises Absent Request. — The judge is required to declare and explain the law arising on the evidence without being requested to do so. State v. Jeffries, 3 N.C. App. 218, 164 S.E.2d 398 (1968).

When Defendant Entitled to Instruction. — Where evidence is in the record defendant is entitled to have the law arising thereon explained and applied by the judge. State v. Anderson, 222 N.C. 148, 22 S.E.2d 271 (1942).

This section requires the trial judge to apply the law to the various factual situations presented by the conflicting evidence, thus where defendant's testimony, if the jury found it to be true, would entitle him to a verdict of not guilty, he was entitled to have the legal effect of his evidence explained to them. State v. Keziah, 269 N.C. 681, 153 S.E.2d 365 (1967).

Since expert testimony regarding defendant's ability to form the specific intent to kill was before the jury, defendant was entitled to a jury instruction on this element of the crimes in question. State v. Rose, 323 N.C. 455, 373 S.E.2d 426 (1988).

Failure to Explain Law Regarding Defendant's Evidence Is Error. — Where the court failed to explain and declare the law arising on the evidence presented by the defendant, this constituted prejudicial error. State v.

Hornbuckle, 265 N.C. 312, 144 S.E.2d 12 (1965).

Not Duty of Witness to Explain Law and Legal Terms. — It is the duty of the trial judge, not defendant's expert medical witness, to explain the law and define legal terms such as "intent." State v. Griffin, 288 N.C. 437, 219 S.E.2d 48 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3210, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1210 (1976).

General Statement of Legal Principles Not Sufficient. — The requirements of this section are not met by a general statement of legal principles which bear more or less directly, but not with absolute directness upon the issues made by the evidence. State v. Ardrey, 232 N.C. 721, 62 S.E.2d 53 (1950); State v. Floyd, 241 N.C. 298, 84 S.E.2d 915 (1954).

The mandate of this section is not met by a statement of the general principles of law, without application to the specific facts involved in the issue. State v. Ardrey, 232 N.C. 721, 62 S.E.2d 53 (1950).

In charging the jury, the stating of abstract principles of law is not sufficient. State v. Hardee, 3 N.C. App. 426, 165 S.E.2d 43 (1969).

It has been held to be error to charge on an abstract principle of law not supported by the evidence. Kuyrkendall v. Clarke's Disct. Dep't Store, 5 N.C. App. 200, 167 S.E.2d 833 (1969).

Where the instruction that the trial court gave was a general statement to the jury on intent and the method of proving that defendant had formed the specific intent to kill, and where defendant's requested instruction would have allowed the jury to focus on defendant's mental condition as it pertained to his ability to premeditate and deliberate, in light of the centrality of the issue of defendant's state of mind, it was error not to give defendant's instruction, and defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Rose, 323 N.C. 455, 373 S.E.2d 426 (1988).

Merely Stating Party's Contentions Insufficient. — It is insufficient for the court to merely state the contentions of a party without declaring and explaining the law applicable to his version of the occurrence as supported by his evidence. State v. Herbin, 232 N.C. 318, 59 S.E.2d 635 (1950).

Essential Elements of Offense Must Be Charged. — The trial judge has great discretion in the manner in which he charges the jury, but he must explain every essential element of the offense charged. State v. Young, 16 N.C. App. 101, 191 S.E.2d 369 (1972).

Instructions Must Be Based on Reasonable View of Evidence. — A trial judge should never give instructions to a jury which are not based upon a state of facts presented by some reasonable view of the evidence. State v. Harrill, 289 N.C. 186, 221 S.E.2d 325, death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3212, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1211 (1976).

When instructions which are not based upon a state of facts presented by some reasonable view of the evidence are prejudicial to the accused, he is entitled to a new trial. State v. Harrill, 289 N.C. 186, 221 S.E.2d 325, death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3212, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1211 (1976).

The court should never give the jury instructions based upon a state of facts not presented by some reasonable view of the evidence produced on the trial, nor upon a supposed state of facts. State v. McClain, 282 N.C. 396, 193 S.E.2d 113 (1972).

Test of Sufficiency. — Where the judge's charge fully instructs the jury on all the substantive areas of the case, and defines and applies the law thereto, it is sufficient. State v. McNeil, 47 N.C. App. 30, 266 S.E.2d 824, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 102, 273 S.E.2d 306 (1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 915, 101 S. Ct. 1356, 67 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1981).

Trial court need not instruct the jury with any greater particularity than is necessary to enable the jury to apply the law to the substantive features of the case arising on the evidence when the defendant makes no request for additional instructions. State v. Atkinson, 39 N.C. App. 575, 251 S.E.2d 677 (1979).

Equal Stress Must Be Given. — Implicit in the duty imposed by general requirements of fairness to the parties is the requirement that the judge give equal stress to the State and the defendant in a criminal action. State v. Pryor, 59 N.C. App. 1, 295 S.E.2d 610 (1982).

Failure by the trial judge to give equal stress to opposing parties in charging the jury is a violation of this section. Such a violation is prejudicial error necessitating a new trial. State v. Tate, 58 N.C. App. 494, 294 S.E.2d 16, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 306 N.C. 750, 295 S.E.2d 763 (1982), aff'd, 307 N.C. 464, 298 S.E.2d 386 (1983).

Instruction on Obligations of Counsel, Court and Jury. — An instruction that "it is the business of counsel to make their side appear the best side, their reasons the best of reasons; but you and I are under different obligations" is erroneous. State v. Hardy, 189 N.C. 799, 128 S.E. 152 (1925).

Duty to Consider Evidence. — The trial judge correctly instructed the jury; "It is your duty to remember and consider all of the evidence whether called to your attention by counsel or the court or not, for all of the evidence is important." State v. McClain, 282 N.C. 396, 193 S.E.2d 113 (1972).

In resolving whether an instruction should be given, the facts are to be interpreted in the light most favorable to the defendant. State v. Blackmon, 38 N.C. App. 620, 248 S.E.2d 456 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 412, 251 S.E.2d 471 (1979).

Charge of the court must be read as a whole, in the same connected way that the judge is supposed to have intended it and the jury to have considered it. State v. Lee, 277 N.C. 205, 176 S.E.2d 765 (1970); State v. McCall, 31 N.C. App. 543, 230 S.E.2d 195 (1976).

A charge must be construed contextually, and isolated portions of it will not be held prejudicial when the charge as a whole is correct. State v. Lee, 277 N.C. 205, 176 S.E.2d 765 (1970); State v. McWilliams, 277 N.C. 680, 178 S.E.2d 476 (1971); State v. Respass, 27 N.C. App. 137, 218 S.E.2d 227, appeal dismissed, 288 N.C. 733, 220 S.E.2d 352 (1975); State v. Branch, 288 N.C. 514, 220 S.E.2d 495 (1975), cert. denied, 433 U.S. 907, 97 S. Ct. 2971, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1091 (1977); State v. Williams, 288 N.C. 680, 220 S.E.2d 558 (1975); State v. Slade, 291 N.C. 275, 229 S.E.2d 921 (1976); State v. McCall, 31 N.C. App. 543, 230 S.E.2d 195 (1976); State v. Tilley, 292 N.C. 132, 232 S.E.2d 433 (1977); State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 887, 108 S. Ct. 42, 98 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1987).

In determining the propriety of the trial judge's charge to the jury, the reviewing court must consider the instructions in their entirety, and not in detached fragments. State v. Wright, 302 N.C. 122, 273 S.E.2d 699 (1981).

One of the cardinal rules governing appellate review of trial court instructions is that the charge will be read contextually and an excerpt will not be held prejudicial if a reading of the whole charge leaves no reasonable grounds to believe that the jury was misled. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

A charge to the jury must be read and considered in its entirety and not in detached fragments. State v. Lankford, 31 N.C. App. 13, 228 S.E.2d 641 (1976).

A charge must be read contextually, and when this is done, if it is manifest that the jury understood that each element had to be proved by evidence establishing the same beyond a reasonable doubt, then there is no error. State v. Hunter, 290 N.C. 556, 227 S.E.2d 535 (1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1093, 97 S. Ct. 1106, 51 L. Ed. 2d 539 (1977).

It is well-settled that the charge of the court to the jury will be construed contextually, and segregated portions will not be held prejudicial error where the charge as a whole is free from objection. State v. Reese, 31 N.C. App. 575, 230 S.E.2d 213 (1976).

A charge must be construed as a whole, and isolated portions of a charge will not be held to be prejudicial where the charge as a whole is correct and free from objection. State v. Slade, 291 N.C. 275, 229 S.E.2d 921 (1976); State v. Poole, 305 N.C. 308, 289 S.E.2d 335 (1982).

On appeal, a charge to a jury must be read and considered in its entirety. State v. Dietz, 289 N.C. 488, 223 S.E.2d 357 (1976).

Isolated portions of a charge will not be held prejudicial when the charge as a whole is correct. State v. Poole, 289 N.C. 47, 220 S.E.2d 320 (1975).

Defendant cannot be permitted to select portions of the charge — even though objectionable when standing alone — and assign errors to them if those portions can be readily explained by reference to the charge in its entirety, and the charge in its entirety appears to be without prejudicial error. State v. Hubbard, 19 N.C. App. 431, 199 S.E.2d 146 (1973).

The charge of the court will be construed contextually, and segregated portions will not be held prejudicial error when the charge as a whole is free from any prejudice to defendant. State v. Eisen, 16 N.C. App. 532, 192 S.E.2d 613 (1972).

The jury charge must be read as a whole and construed contextually, and isolated portions will not be held prejudicial when the charge as a whole is correct. State v. Laws, 16 N.C. App. 129, 191 S.E.2d 416 (1972).

A charge must be considered contextually as a whole. State v. Lee, 282 N.C. 566, 193 S.E.2d 705 (1973).

And in Context of Trial. — The judge's words in a charge may not be detached from the context and the incidents of the trial and then critically examined for an interpretation from which erroneous expressions may be inferred. State v. McWilliams, 277 N.C. 680, 178 S.E.2d 476 (1971); State v. Tilley, 292 N.C. 132, 232 S.E.2d 433 (1977); State v. Gadsden, 300 N.C. 345, 266 S.E.2d 665 (1980).

It is not sufficient to show that a critical examination of the judge's words, detached from the context and the incidents of the trial, are capable of an interpretation from which an expression of opinion may be inferred. State v. Lee, 277 N.C. 205, 176 S.E.2d 765 (1970); State v. Respass, 27 N.C. App. 137, 218 S.E.2d 227, appeal dismissed, 288 N.C. 733, 220 S.E.2d 352 (1975).

Instructions must be construed contextually. State v. Butcher, 57 N.C. App. 698, 292 S.E.2d 149 (1982).

Instructions must be construed contextually and isolated portions will not be held prejudicial when the charge as a whole is correct. State v. Lilley, 78 N.C. App. 100, 337 S.E.2d 89 (1985), discretionary review denied as to additional issues, 316 N.C. 199, 341 S.E.2d 582, aff'd, State v. Puckett, 46 N.C. App. 719, 266 S.E.2d 48 (1980).

Expression Which, Standing Alone, Is Erroneous. — The fact that some expressions in the charge, standing alone, might be considered erroneous will afford no ground for reversal. State v. McCall, 31 N.C. App. 543, 230 S.E.2d 195 (1976).

If the charge as a whole presents the law fairly and clearly to the jury, the fact that isolated expressions, standing alone, might be considered erroneous will afford no ground for a reversal. State v. Lee, 277 N.C. 205, 176 S.E.2d 765 (1970); State v. McWilliams, 277 N.C. 680, 178 S.E.2d 476 (1971).

Particularity of Explanation. — The trial judge is not required to instruct the jury with any greater particularity upon any element of the offense than is necessary to enable the jury to apply the law with respect to such element to the evidence bearing thereon. State v. Spratt, 265 N.C. 524, 144 S.E.2d 569 (1965); State v. Thacker, 5 N.C. App. 197, 167 S.E.2d 879 (1969); State v. Patton, 18 N.C. App. 266, 196 S.E.2d 560 (1973).

Ambiguous Charge. — New trial must result when ambiguity in the charge affords an opportunity for the jury to act upon a permissible but incorrect interpretation. State v. Harris, 289 N.C. 275, 221 S.E.2d 343 (1976).

Conflicting instructions upon a material aspect of the case must be held for prejudicial error, since the jury may have acted upon the incorrect part of the charge, or to phrase it differently, since it cannot be known which instruction was followed by the jury. State v. Parks, 290 N.C. 748, 228 S.E.2d 248 (1976).

Conflicting instructions on the applicable law or on a substantive feature of the case, particularly on the burden of proof, entitled defendant to a new trial, since it must be assumed on appeal that the jury was influenced in coming to a verdict by that portion of the charge which was erroneous. State v. Jones, 20 N.C. App. 454, 201 S.E.2d 552 (1974).

When there are conflicting instructions upon a material point, there must be a new trial since the jury is not supposed to be able to distinguish between a correct and an incorrect charge. State v. Carver, 286 N.C. 179, 209 S.E.2d 785 (1974).

It must be assumed on appeal of two conflicting instructions to the jury that the jury was influenced by that portion of the charge which is incorrect. State v. Harris, 289 N.C. 275, 221 S.E.2d 343 (1976).

Specific Prayers for Instructions. — If defendant desires fuller instructions as to the evidence or contentions, he should so request. His failure to do so precludes him from assigning this as error on appeal. State v. Sanders, 276 N.C. 598, 174 S.E.2d 487 (1970), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2290, 29 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1971); State v. McClain, 282 N.C. 396, 193 S.E.2d 113 (1972).

Instruction Need Not Be Given Exactly as Requested. — The court is not required to give a requested instruction in the exact language of the request, and when the request is correct in itself and supported by the evidence in the case, it suffices if the requested instruction is given in substance. State v. Monk, 291 N.C. 37, 229 S.E.2d 163 (1976); State v. Bradsher, 49 N.C. App. 507, 271 S.E.2d 915 (1980).

The trial court is not required to give instructions in the language of the prayers, provided the instructions given are correct and cover the various phases of the testimony. State v. Wilcox, 132 N.C. 1120, 44 S.E. 625 (1903).

If a request is made for a specific instruction which is correct in itself and supported by evidence, the trial judge, while not required to parrot the instructions or to become a mere judicial phonograph for recording the exact and identical words of counsel, must charge the jury in substantial conformity to the prayer. State v. Davis, 291 N.C. 1, 229 S.E.2d 285 (1976).

The trial court did not err by failing to give requested instructions where defendant submitted an exhaustive list of definitions which was repetitious at best, but rather, it was sufficient that the court gave the requested instructions in substance. State v. Travatello, 24 N.C. App. 511, 211 S.E.2d 467 (1975).

It is sufficient if a trial judge gives a requested instruction in substance, and not the exact words requested by the defendant, when the instruction is proper based on the evidence. State v. Locklear, 60 N.C. App. 428, 298 S.E.2d 766 (1983).

Where defendant's requested instruction stressed that the intent to kill must be formed in a "cold state of blood," and the instructions given emphasized this by stating that the intent to kill must have been formed "in a cool state of mind" and not "during some suddenly aroused passion," they were, in substance, the same; therefore, the court did not err in refusing to give defendant's instruction verbatim. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Trial court is not required to adopt the very words used by an appellate opinion in setting forth the law on a particular subject. State v. Vaughan, 59 N.C. App. 318, 296 S.E.2d 516 (1982), cert. denied, 307 N.C. 582, 299 S.E.2d 650, cert. denied, 461 U.S. 943, 103 S. Ct. 2120, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1301 (1983).

Substantial Compliance with Request Sufficient. — The trial judge is not required to give special instructions in the precise words asked, even when unobjectionable. A substantial compliance is sufficient. State v. Booker, 123 N.C. 713, 31 S.E. 376 (1898).

Request for Further Elaboration on Particular Point. — Where the trial court instructs the jury on a particular point, a party desiring further elaboration on that point must make a timely request for special instructions. State v. Mitchell, 48 N.C. App. 680, 270 S.E.2d 117 (1980).

When the trial judge has instructed the jury correctly and adequately on the essential features of the case but defendant desires more elaboration on any point or a more detailed explanation of the law, then he should request further instructions. Otherwise, he cannot complain. State v. Everette, 284 N.C. 81, 199 S.E.2d 462 (1973).

This section only requires that the trial court state the evidence to the extent necessary to explain the application of the law to the evidence. It is incumbent upon defense counsel who desires more extensive instructions on the evidence to request them at trial. State v. Robinson, 40 N.C. App. 514, 253 S.E.2d 311 (1979).

Defendant desiring more full or detailed instructions as to any particular phase of evidence or law should request special instructions. State v. Hendricks, 207 N.C. 873, 178 S.E. 557 (1935).

Where the court in its charge substantially complies with this section, if defendant desires further elaboration and explanation, he should tender prayers for instructions; otherwise, he cannot complain. State v. Gordon, 224 N.C. 304, 30 S.E.2d 43 (1944); Barnes v. Caulbourne, 240 N.C. 721, 83 S.E.2d 898 (1954).

When a judge has charged generally on the essential features of the case, if a litigant desires that some subordinate feature of the cause or some particular phase of the testimony shall be more fully explained, he should call the attention of the court to it. State v. Johnson, 193 N.C. 701, 138 S.E. 19 (1927); State v. Jordan, 216 N.C. 356, 5 S.E.2d 156 (1939).

Where the charge of the court is sufficiently full to meet the requirements of this section, it will not be held for reversible error on defendant's exceptions, it being incumbent on defendant, if he desires more specific instructions on any point, or a more detailed and complete statement of his contentions to aptly make request therefor. State v. Caudle, 208 N.C. 249, 180 S.E. 91 (1935).

The failure of the court to charge the jury as to the credibility to be given the testimony of an accomplice, corroborated in every respect by other evidence, will not be held for error in the absence of a special request, whether such charge should be given being in the sound discretion of the trial court. State v. Kelly, 216 N.C. 627, 6 S.E.2d 533 (1940).

Where the trial court determined that the instruction as given adequately explained the law defining felony murder, twice offered to charge them again on this subject and the foreman refused both offers, the error was harmless. State v. Moore, 339 N.C. 456, 451 S.E.2d 232 (1994).

Court May Summarize Evidence in Its Discretion. — Although a trial court is not required to state, recapitulate, or summarize the evidence or to explain the application of law to the evidence, the court is free to do so in its discretion; however, in so doing, the trial court must be vigilant not to express an opinion as to the quality of the evidence or as to the credibility of a witness. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

When the evidence is susceptible of several interpretations a failure to give instructions which declare and explain the law in its application to the several phases of the evidence is held for reversible error. State v. Ardrey, 232 N.C. 721, 62 S.E.2d 53 (1950).

When a person is on trial for a statutory crime, it is not sufficient for the court merely to read the statute under which he stands indicted. The statute should be explained, the essential elements of the crime thereby created outlined and the law as thus defined should be applied to the evidence in the case. This calls for instructions as to the law upon all substantial features of the case. State v. Fain, 229 N.C. 644, 50 S.E.2d 904 (1948); State v. Sutton, 230 N.C. 244, 52 S.E.2d 921 (1949).

It is not sufficient merely for the court to read a statute bearing on the issue in controversy and leave the jury unaided to apply the law to the facts. State v. Coggin, 263 N.C. 457, 139 S.E.2d 701 (1965).

Ordinarily, the reading of the pertinent statute, without further explanation, is not sufficient. State v. Mundy, 265 N.C. 528, 144 S.E.2d 572 (1965).

It is not sufficient for the court merely to read the statute under which the accused stands indicted. The statute should be explained, the essential elements of the crime thereby created outlined and the law as thus defined should be applied to the evidence in the case. State v. Pittman, 12 N.C. App. 401, 183 S.E.2d 307 (1971).

But Reading Statute and Pointing Out Material Parts Is Proper. — The act of the court in reading the statute upon which the indictment was based and pointing out the material parts which applied to the charge against the defendants did not amount to a peremptory instruction of guilt, and the instruction was in keeping with the court's duty to declare and explain the law of the case. State v. Butler, 269 N.C. 733, 153 S.E.2d 477 (1967).

Where the court, in charging the jury, read the statute upon which the indictment was based and pointed out the material part of the statute which applied to the charge against the defendant, this instruction was in keeping with the requirements of this section which makes it the duty of the judge to declare and explain the law of the case. State v. Rennick, 8 N.C. App.

Judge Not Relieved of Duty by Remarks of Prosecutor as to Verdict State Seeks. — The solicitor's (now prosecutor's) statement at the beginning of the trial that he would ask for a verdict of guilty of rape with a recommendation of life imprisonment, or guilty of an attempt to commit rape, did not relieve the court of its mandatory duty under this section to declare and explain to the jury the law arising on the evidence given in the case. State v. Green, 246 N.C. 717, 100 S.E.2d 52 (1957).

Reading Indictment to Jury Complies with Section. — If the indictment fully describes the offense, and this was read to the jury by the court, then the charge is in compliance with this section, it being the duty of the defendant, if he desires more elaborate instruction, to aptly tender a request therefor. State v. Gore, 207 N.C. 618, 178 S.E. 209 (1935).

Explanation Must Cover Any Authorized Finding. — It is the duty of the judge to explain and adapt the law to any authorized findings which the jury may make upon the evidence. State v. Jones, 87 N.C. 547 (1882).

Matters No Longer an Issue Before Jury. — It is not incumbent upon the trial judge to charge with regard to the law on something that is no longer an issue before the jury. The statute only requires the court to state only such evidence as is necessary to explain and apply the law to the facts in the case. State v. Phillips, 5 N.C. App. 353, 168 S.E.2d 704 (1969).

Court has no duty to tell the jury that it has no opinion in the case. State v. Burbank, 59 N.C. App. 543, 297 S.E.2d 602 (1982).

Where the evidence is simple, direct and without equivocation and complication, an explanation of the law and a statement of the evidence in the form of contentions is a sufficient compliance with this section. State v. Williams, 290 N.C. 770, 228 S.E.2d 241 (1976); State v. Benton, 299 N.C. 16, 260 S.E.2d 917 (1980).

Section Must Be Followed Where Issues Are Complex. — The section does not require the judge to charge the jury where the facts at issue are few and simple, and no principle of law is involved, unless he is requested to do so; but in cases where the witnesses are numerous, or the testimony conflicting or complicated, and different principles of law are applicable to different aspects of the case, it is his duty to conform to the requirement of the statute. State v. Reynolds, 87 N.C. 544 (1882).

Defendant cannot prohibit the giving of an instruction by failing to request it. Regardless of requests by the parties, a judge has an obligation to fully instruct the jury on all substantial and essential features of the case embraced within the issue and arising on the evidence. State v. Harris, 306 N.C. 724, 295 S.E.2d 391 (1982).

Instruction That Offense Is Felony Involving Violence. — It was not error for trial court to instruct the jury that assault on a female with intent to commit rape is by definition a felony involving the use or threat of violence to the person. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Instruction That Guilt Is Established. — This section prohibits the court in its charge to the jury from expressing any opinion as to the weight and credibility of the evidence, and, defendant having pleaded not guilty, it is error for the court to charge the jury in effect that the fact of guilt is established by the evidence, even though the evidence be uncontradicted and even though the fact of guilt may be inferred from defendant's own testimony, since the credibility of the evidence is in the exclusive province of the jury. State v. Blue, 219 N.C. 612, 14 S.E.2d 635 (1941).

Opinion as to Guilt of Defendant. — In prosecution for rape and crime against nature, the trial judge committed prejudicial error by expressing his opinion on the evidence when he instructed the jury that there was "considerable evidence" that defendant had committed the crime charged, and when he further went on to say "not satisfied with that, the evidence tends to show that he, the defendant, again had intercourse with her," intimating to the jury that it was his opinion that the defendant was guilty. State v. Head, 24 N.C. App. 564, 211 S.E.2d 534 (1975).

Statement That Jury Would Have to Find Defendant Guilty. — The trial judge's comment that the jury would have to find the defendant guilty of one of the three offenses which he had previously discussed was prejudicial error and was not cured by construing the charge contextually as a whole. State v. Whitley, 22 N.C. App. 666, 207 S.E.2d 328 (1974).

The instruction "If you find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree, you need not consider whether he is guilty of manslaughter. But if you find him not guilty of murder in the second degree, then it would be your duty to find him guilty of manslaughter, as charged in the bill of indictment," constitutes an expression of opinion by the judge which is prohibited by this section. State v. Hardee, 3 N.C. App. 426, 165 S.E.2d 43 (1969).

B. Contentions of Parties.

Contentions Not a Necessary Part of Instructions. — The contentions of the parties to an action are not a necessary part of the instruction of the trial judge to the jury upon the law of the case. State v. Whaley, 191 N.C. 387, 132 S.E. 6 (1926).

A statement of contentions by the judge is not required. State v. Watson, 1 N.C. App. 250, 161 S.E.2d 159 (1968); State v. Dietz, 289 N.C. 488, 223 S.E.2d 357 (1976); State v. Hewett, 295 N.C. 640, 247 S.E.2d 886 (1978).

But Judge Is Permitted to State Contentions. — Although the judge is not required to state or recapitulate the contentions of the parties, it is permissible for him to do so. State v. Holway, 8 N.C. App. 340, 174 S.E.2d 54 (1970).

Manner of stating the contentions of the parties, if indicative of the court's opinion, is within the prohibition of this section. State v. Benton, 226 N.C. 745, 40 S.E.2d 617 (1946).

Duty Where Contentions Are Stated. — A trial judge is not required by law to state the contentions of litigants to the jury. When, however, a judge undertakes to state the contentions of one party, he must also give the equally pertinent contentions of the opposing party. State v. King, 256 N.C. 236, 123 S.E.2d 486 (1962).

While the trial court is not required to state the contentions of the litigants at all, when the court does undertake to state the contentions of one party it must also give equal pertinent contentions of the opposing party. State v. Billinger, 9 N.C. App. 573, 176 S.E.2d 901 (1970).

Though this section does not require the trial judge to state the contentions of either party, the statute does require that the trial judge give equal stress to the State and defendant in a criminal action; therefore, where the court gives the State's contentions but gives no contentions of the defendant, the mandate of this section is not satisfied. State v. Lane, 18 N.C. App. 316, 196 S.E.2d 597 (1973).

A judge is not required by law to state the contentions of the parties, but when he does give the contention of the State on a particular phase of the case, it is error to fail to give defendant's opposing contention arising out of the evidence on the same aspect of the case. State v. Thomas, 284 N.C. 212, 200 S.E.2d 3 (1973).

The trial judge is not required by this section or other law to give the contention of the parties; but when he does state the contentions of the State on a particular aspect of the case, it is error to fail to state defendant's opposing contentions arising out of the evidence, or lack of the evidence, on the same aspect of the case. State v. Vail, 26 N.C. App. 73, 214 S.E.2d 796, cert. denied, 288 N.C. 251, 217 S.E.2d 676 (1975).

Failure to state the contentions of the parties is not error, but failure to give equal stress to the State and defendant in a criminal action is error. So, when the judge states the contentions of one party he must also give the pertinent contentions of the opposing party. State v. Hewett, 295 N.C. 640, 247 S.E.2d 886 (1978).

This section does not require the trial court to state the contentions of the litigants; but if the court does so, it must give equal stress to the State and the defendant, and must state the pertinent contentions of both parties. State v. Thompson, 50 N.C. App. 484, 274 S.E.2d 381, cert. denied, 302 N.C. 633, 280 S.E.2d 448 (1981).

It is not error for the trial judge to state the contentions of the parties provided that the contentions of each litigant are stated fairly and accurately. State v. Silhan, 302 N.C. 223, 275 S.E.2d 450 (1981), overruled in part by State v. Sanderson, 346 N.C. 669, 488 S.E.2d 133, State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997).

Although a statement of contentions is permissible, the trial judge must exercise extreme care to retain, and convey the appearance of retaining, a cold neutrality. State v. Watson, 1 N.C. App. 250, 161 S.E.2d 159 (1968).

The prohibition against the court expressing an opinion on the evidence applies to the manner of stating the contentions of the parties as well as in any other portion of the charge. State v. Watson, 1 N.C. App. 250, 161 S.E.2d 159 (1968).

Statement of a valid contention based on competent evidence is not error as being an expression of opinion. State v. Buff, 32 N.C. App. 395, 232 S.E.2d 303, cert. denied, 292 N.C. 468, 233 S.E.2d 397 (1977).

Inferences in Contentions Fairly Drawn from Evidence. — It is not error for the trial judge to instruct the jury in terms of the State's contentions where the record discloses evidence from which inferences drawn by the court could legitimately, fairly and logically be drawn by the jury. State v. Lyles, 19 N.C. App. 632, 199 S.E.2d 699, appeal dismissed, 284 N.C. 426, 200 S.E.2d 662 (1973).

Expressions Used in Stating Contentions May Violate Section. — Where expressions by the trial judge, in their warmth and vigor, though stated in the form of contentions, are capable of impressing the jury with the strength of the State's case and the weakness of the alibi of the defendant, such expressions, though unintended by the trial judge to prejudice anyone, are in violation of this section and constitute prejudicial error. State v. Stroud, 10 N.C. App. 30, 177 S.E.2d 912 (1970).

Argument Repeated by Court as Contention. — An argument that would be permissible when made by the solicitor (now prosecutor) may, when repeated by the court as a contention, give emphasis that would weigh too heavily upon defendant, and would constitute a prejudicial charge under this section. State v. Stroud, 10 N.C. App. 30, 177 S.E.2d 912 (1970).

Contentions which may be argued properly by counsel may be highly improper when stated by the judge. State v. Moore, 31 N.C. App. 536, 230 S.E.2d 184 (1976).

What State Contended Happened. — It was not error for the court to charge the jury as to what the State contended happened the night deceased was shot in the back while he was alone with defendant. State v. Childress, 321 N.C. 226, 362 S.E.2d 263 (1987).

Defendant who desires a more detailed statement of his contentions must request it from the court. State v. Murray, 21 N.C. App. 573, 205 S.E.2d 587 (1974).

Taking More Time in Stating State's Contentions. — That the court necessarily takes more time in stating the State's contentions than in stating the defendant's contentions is not ground for objection. State v. Sparrow, 244 N.C. 81, 92 S.E.2d 448 (1956).

Defendant may not object if the court takes more time in stating the State's contentions than in stating the defendant's, and the equal stress required does not mean that the statement of contentions of the State and of the defendant must be equal in length. State v. Thompson, 50 N.C. App. 484, 274 S.E.2d 381, cert. denied, 302 N.C. 633, 280 S.E.2d 448 (1981).

The equal stress which this section requires to be given to contentions of the State and the defendant in a criminal action does not mean that the statement of the contentions of the State and of the defendant must be equal in length. In a trial where the evidence for the defendant is short, or where he may have chosen not to offer any evidence at all, his contentions will naturally be very few in contrast with those of the State where it may have introduced a great volume of testimony. State v. King, 256 N.C. 236, 123 S.E.2d 486 (1962).

The trial court did not improperly fail to give equal stress to the contentions of the State and of the defendant by taking more time in stating the State's contentions than in stating those of defendant where the sole evidence offered by defendant was character evidence, the State introduced a considerably greater volume of testimony than did the defendant, and the contentions of the defendant were therefore very few in contrast with those of the State. State v. Thompson, 50 N.C. App. 484, 274 S.E.2d 381, cert. denied, 302 N.C. 633, 280 S.E.2d 448 (1981).

Prejudicial error is committed when a trial judge gives an exhaustive and detailed array of the State's contentions and evidence but deals with the contentions and evidence of the defendant in only a brief and summary fashion; but a trial judge is not required to consume an equal amount of time in stating the contentions and evidence of each party to a case. State v. Silhan, 302 N.C. 223, 275 S.E.2d 450 (1981), overruled in part by State v. Sanderson, 346 N.C. 669, 488 S.E.2d 133, State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997).

Equal Stress Does Not Require Equal Time. — The requirement that equal stress must be given to the contentions of both sides does not mean that the respective statements thereof must also be of corresponding lengths, consuming similar amounts of time. State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982).

Statements Need Not Be of Equal Length Where Amounts of Evidence Offered Differ. — When a trial judge elects to state the contention of one party, he must equally stress the contention of the opposing party. This does not mean that the statement of contentions of the respective parties must be of equal length for where one party's evidence is meager, his contentions must be few in contrast with those of an opposing party who offers a great volume of testimony which raises many pertinent contentions. State v. Banks, 295 N.C. 399, 245 S.E.2d 743 (1978); State v. Mitchell, 48 N.C. App. 680, 270 S.E.2d 117 (1980).

Failure to State Defendant's Contentions. — Where the court stated fully the contentions of the State but stated no contentions of defendant, the charge does not meet the requirement of this section. State v. Crawford, 261 N.C. 658, 135 S.E.2d 652 (1964).

Prejudicial error requiring a new trial is committed when the trial judge in his charge to the jury in a criminal case gives the contentions of the State but fails to give any contentions of defendant. State v. Hewett, 295 N.C. 640, 247 S.E.2d 886 (1978).

Where the trial judge in his charge states fully the contentions of the State but fails to give any contentions of the defendant, the party whose contentions have been omitted is not required to object or otherwise bring the omission to the attention of the trial court. State v. Hewett, 295 N.C. 640, 247 S.E.2d 886 (1978); State v. Wade, 49 N.C. App. 257, 271 S.E.2d 77 (1980), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 596, 341 S.E.2d 37 (1986).

Failure to Give Equal Stress to Defendant's Contentions. — The trial judge failed to comply with the provisions of this section in that, after stating fully the contentions of the State, he failed to give equal stress to the contentions of defendant. State v. Crawford, 261 N.C. 658, 135 S.E.2d 652 (1964).

Statement of Defendant's Contentions in Brief, General Terms. — Where court gave the State's contentions on every phase of the testimony at great length and in detail, but gave the defendant's contentions in very brief, general terms, as though he had offered no evidence at all, the pertinent contentions arising from the defendant's evidence were not given as required by the provisions of this section. State v. Kluckhohn, 243 N.C. 306, 90 S.E.2d 768 (1956).

Failure to Give Contention That Felonious Intent Not Shown. — Failure of the court to state the contention of defendant that the State's evidence completely failed to show that he had a felonious intent to commit larceny was highly prejudicial to defendant. State v. Crawford, 261 N.C. 658, 135 S.E.2d 652 (1964).

Contentions of Defendant Who Offers No Evidence. — While the trial judge is not required to state the contentions of the parties, when he undertakes to do so he must give equal stress to the contentions of both parties. This is true even when the defendant does not testify. He still has contentions regarding the case that arise from his plea of not guilty, from the State's evidence and from his cross-examination of the State's witnesses. State v. Spicer, 299 N.C. 309, 261 S.E.2d 893 (1980).

Objection by Defendant Who Offers No Evidence. — An exception by the defendant charging that the judge gave unequal stress to the contentions of the State and the defendant, where the defendant offered no evidence, was held to be unfounded. State v. Smith, 238 N.C. 82, 76 S.E.2d 363 (1953).

Remark That Court Does Not Know What Defendant Contends. — Where the court gives the contentions of the State and then states that it does not know what defendant contends, the instructions must be held prejudicial as contravening this section. State v. Robbins, 243 N.C. 161, 90 S.E.2d 322 (1955).

Charge Construed as a Whole in Determining Whether Undue Stress Given. — Objection to the charge on the ground that the court unduly emphasized the contentions of the State, amounting to an expression of opinion on the facts, held untenable, since the charge construed as a whole stated only contentions legitimately arising on the evidence and inferences properly deducible therefrom. State v. Wilcox, 213 N.C. 665, 197 S.E. 156 (1938).

Misstatement of Contention. — Where the misstatement of a contention upon a material point includes an assumption of evidence entirely unsupported by the record, the misstatement must be held prejudicial, notwithstanding the absence of timely objection. State v. Moore, 31 N.C. App. 536, 230 S.E.2d 184 (1976).

Statement by Judge That He Is Only Giving Contentions. — Where the trial judge gives the contentions of the State and of the defendant, clearly stating that they are but contentions, and correctly charges the law arising upon the evidence, objection that he has therein impinged upon the provisions of this section, in expressing his opinion upon the weight and credibility of the evidence, is untenable. State v. Durham, 201 N.C. 724, 161 S.E. 398 (1931).

Where the court expresses an opinion upon the weight of the evidence while stating contentions, it is not required that it must be brought to the trial judge's attention before verdict; this question can be considered for the first time on appeal upon exceptions duly noted. State v. Watson, 1 N.C. App. 250, 161 S.E.2d 159 (1968).

Opinion in Summarizing Defendant's Contentions. — Where in prosecution under former § 14-26, the court, in summarizing the contentions of defendant, charged that defendant insisted that the jury should not find beyond a reasonable doubt that the prosecutrix was under 16 years of age, "whereas the Biblical records and the testimony of her father and mother should satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that she is under 16 years of age," the instruction constitutes an expression of opinion on an essential element of the crime charged, prohibited by the section, and the error is not mitigated by construing the charge as a whole, nor may it be upheld as charging that the jury should find that the prosecutrix was under 16 years of age, if they believed the uncontradicted testimony. State v. Wyont, 218 N.C. 505, 11 S.E.2d 473 (1940).

C. Explanation of Law.

1. Defining Terms Used in Instructions.

Words of Common Usage and Meaning Need Not Be Defined. — It is not error for the court to fail to define and explain words of common usage and meaning to the general public, in the absence of a request for special instructions, and this applies equally to essential elements of the crime charged as well as to other legal terms contained in a charge. State v. Patton, 18 N.C. App. 266, 196 S.E.2d 560 (1973).

Explanation of Technical Words Used in Instructions. — The duty of the court to explain technical words used in instructions cannot be omitted because some of the jury may be able to explain them. State v. Clark, 134 N.C. 698, 47 S.E. 36 (1904).

Failure to Define "Reasonable" and "Doubt". — Where no request was made to define the term "reasonable doubt," the failure to define the words "reasonable" and "doubt" does no violence to this section. State v. Lee, 248 N.C. 327, 103 S.E.2d 295 (1958); State v. Broome, 268 N.C. 298, 150 S.E.2d 416 (1966).

The failure to define the words "reasonable" and "doubt" does no violence to this section. State v. Bailiff, 2 N.C. App. 608, 163 S.E.2d 398 (1968).

Explanation of "Felonious Intent". — The comprehensiveness and specificity of the definition and explanation of "felonious intent" required in a charge depends on the facts in the particular case. State v. Brown, 300 N.C. 41, 265 S.E.2d 191 (1980).

"Felonious Intent" Must Be Defined Where Taking Admitted But Intent Denied. — Where the evidence relied on by defendant tends to admit the taking but to deny that it was with felonious intent, it is essential that the court fully define the "felonious intent" contended for by the State and also explain defendant's theory as to the intent and purpose of the taking, in order that the jury may understandingly decide between the contentions of the State and defendant on that point. State v. Spratt, 265 N.C. 524, 144 S.E.2d 569 (1965).

2. Failure of Defendant to Testify.

Failure to Instruct Not Error Absent Request. — The failure of the court to instruct the jury that the fact that a defendant did not testify in his own behalf raises no presumption against him, will not be held for error in the absence of a request for instructions, the matter being in the sound discretion of the trial court. State v. Kelly, 216 N.C. 627, 6 S.E.2d 533 (1940).

Absent a special request, the judge is not required to instruct the jury that a defendant's failure to testify does not create any presumption against him. State v. Butcher, 13 N.C. App. 97, 185 S.E.2d 11 (1971); State v. Rankin, 282 N.C. 572, 193 S.E.2d 740 (1973).

3. Lesser and Included Offenses.

When Instruction on Included Offense Required. — The necessity for instructing the jury as to an included crime of lesser degree than that charged arises when and only when there is evidence from which the jury could find that such included crime of lesser degree was committed. State v. Mull, 24 N.C. App. 502, 211 S.E.2d 515 (1975).

The necessity for instructing the jury as to an included crime of lesser degree than that charged arises when and only when there is evidence from which the jury could find that such included crime of lesser degree was committed. The presence of such evidence is the determinative factor. State v. Foster, 284 N.C. 259, 200 S.E.2d 782 (1973).

Where a person indicted for a crime may be convicted of a lesser degree of the same crime and there is evidence tending to support the milder verdict, he is entitled to have the law with respect to the lesser offense submitted to the jury under a correct charge. A statement of the contentions or of certain phases of the evidence accompanied with a mere enunciation of a legal principle is not a compliance with this section. Wilson v. Wilson, 190 N.C. 819, 130 S.E. 834 (1925); Watson v. Sylva Tanning Co., 190 N.C. 840, 130 S.E. 833 (1925); State v. Lee, 192 N.C. 225, 134 S.E. 458 (1926); State v. Hardee, 192 N.C. 533, 135 S.E. 345 (1926).

The trial court judge must submit and instruct the jury on a lesser included offense when, and only when there is evidence from which the jury can find that a defendant committed the lesser included offense; conversely, when all the evidence tends to show that defendant committed the crime charged in the bill of indictment and there is no evidence of the lesser included offense, the court should refuse to charge on the lesser included offense. State v. Summitt, 301 N.C. 561, 273 S.E.2d 247 (1981).

If there is evidence from which the jury could find that the defendant committed a lesser included offense, the judge must charge on that lesser offense. State v. Ferrell, 300 N.C. 157, 265 S.E.2d 210 (1980).

The judge has a duty to declare and explain the law arising on all of the evidence, and this duty necessarily requires the judge to charge upon a lesser included offense, even absent a special request, when there is some evidence to support it. State v. Little, 51 N.C. App. 64, 275 S.E.2d 249 (1981), aff'd, 56 N.C. App. 765, 290 S.E.2d 393 (1982); State v. Peacock, 313 N.C. 554, 330 S.E.2d 190 (1985); State v. Williams, 314 N.C. 337, 333 S.E.2d 708 (1985).

Instruction Not Proper Absent Supporting Evidence. — It is not proper for the trial judge to charge the jury on a lesser included offense unless there is some evidence from which a commission of such lesser included offense can be found. State v. Scales, 18 N.C. App. 562, 197 S.E.2d 278 (1973).

Instruction Not Required Absent Evidence. — Where there was no evidence to support a conviction of assault, the trial court did not err in refusing to give instructions on the lesser included offense of assault in a prosecution for aiding and abetting in an attempted robbery with the use of firearms. State v. Parker, 16 N.C. App. 165, 191 S.E.2d 244, cert. denied, 282 N.C. 307, 192 S.E.2d 196 (1972).

Failure to Submit Lesser Degrees. — Where in a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury not resulting in death, verdicts of guilt of less degrees of the crime are permissible under the evidence dependent upon the variant facts as the jury may find them to be, the failure of the court to submit the question of defendant's guilt of such less degrees is erroneous and constitutes a failure to explain the law arising upon the facts in evidence as required by this section. State v. Ardrey, 232 N.C. 721, 62 S.E.2d 53 (1950).

Instructions on the lesser included offenses of first-degree rape are warranted only when there is some doubt or conflict concerning the crucial element of penetration. State v. Williams, 314 N.C. 337, 333 S.E.2d 708 (1985).

When there is conflicting evidence of the essential elements of the greater crime and evidence of a lesser included offense, the trial judge must instruct on the lesser included offense even where there is no specific request for such instruction. An error in this respect will not be cured by a verdict finding a defendant guilty of the greater crime. State v. Brown, 300 N.C. 41, 265 S.E.2d 191 (1980).

Duty of Judge to Determine If Evidence Proves Lesser Offense. — It is the duty of the judge to determine, in the first instance, if there is any evidence or any inference fairly deducible therefrom tending to prove one of the lower grades of murder. Having done so, and having concluded that there is no basis for submission of manslaughter to the jury, it is the duty of the judge to instruct it accordingly. State v. Duboise, 279 N.C. 73, 181 S.E.2d 393 (1971).

Instruction on Included Offense Held Not Required. — In a prosecution for driving under the influence of intoxicating liquor, where the record was devoid of any evidence tending to show that defendant's consumption of intoxicating liquor directly and visibly affected his operation of his motor vehicle immediately prior to his arrest for driving under the influence, the trial judge was not required to charge the jury on the lesser included offense of reckless driving. State v. Pate, 29 N.C. App. 35, 222 S.E.2d 741 (1976).

Where all of the evidence indicated that the value of the stolen property exceeded $200.00, the trial court did not err by failing to instruct the jury to consider in addition an issue as to defendant's possible guilt or innocence of the lesser included offense of misdemeanor larceny. State v. Dickerson, 20 N.C. App. 169, 201 S.E.2d 69 (1973).

Where the State's evidence is clear and positive as to each element of the offense charged and there is no evidence showing the commission of a lesser included offense, it is not error for the judge to refuse to instruct on the lesser offense. State v. Peacock, 313 N.C. 554, 330 S.E.2d 190 (1985).

When the State's evidence is clear and positive with respect to each element of the offense charged and there is no evidence showing the commission of a lesser included offense, it is not error for the trial judge to refuse to instruct on the lesser offense. State v. Williams, 314 N.C. 337, 333 S.E.2d 708 (1985).

Instruction on Included Offense Held Required. — Since a rational trier of fact could have found that the drugged and intoxicated defendant did not form an intent to commit larceny before breaking and entering, the trial court prejudicially erred in failing to instruct on misdemeanor breaking and entering. State v. Peacock, 313 N.C. 554, 330 S.E.2d 190 (1985).

Erroneous Instruction on Lesser Included Offense Not Prejudicial to Defendant. — Although it was error for court to instruct on unsupported lesser degrees of an offense, such error could not have been prejudicial to defendant. State v. Hamad, 92 N.C. App. 282, 374 S.E.2d 410 (1988), aff'd, 325 N.C. 544, 385 S.E.2d 144 (1991).

Where the defendant admits his guilt of murder in the second degree, it is not error for the trial court to act upon the admission, and after fully charging the elements of murder in the first degree, and defining murder in the second degree, to instruct the jury to return a verdict of murder in the second degree if they should fail to find any one of the elements of first degree murder, as defined, beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Grier, 209 N.C. 298, 183 S.E. 272 (1936).

4. Defenses.

Defenses. — Where defendant's evidence, if accepted, discloses facts sufficient in law to constitute a defense to the crime for which he is indicted, the court is required to instruct the jury as to the legal principles applicable thereto. What weight, if any, is to be given such evidence, is for determination by the jury. State v. Mercer, 275 N.C. 108, 165 S.E.2d 328 (1969), overruled on other grounds, State v. Caddell, 287 N.C. 266, 215 S.E.2d 348 (1975).

Defenses raised by the evidence constitute substantial features requiring an instruction. State v. Jones, 300 N.C. 363, 266 S.E.2d 586 (1980).

Defenses raised by the evidence are substantial features requiring an instruction. Failure to instruct on a substantial feature of a case, such as evidence of a complete defense, is error for which the defendant is entitled to a new trial. State v. Smith, 59 N.C. App. 227, 296 S.E.2d 315 (1982).

Alibi. — Evidence of an alibi is substantive, and defendant is entitled to an instruction as to the legal effect of his evidence of alibi if believed by the jury. State v. Sutton, 230 N.C. 244, 52 S.E.2d 921 (1949).

Alibi Instruction Not Required Absent Request. — The trial judge is not required to instruct on legal effect of an alibi unless defendant specifically requests such instruction. State v. Waddell, 289 N.C. 19, 220 S.E.2d 293 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3211, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1210 (1976).

Requested Alibi Instruction Must Be Given. — Notwithstanding the court's instruction that the burden of proof is on the State to satisfy the jury from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was present and that he committed the crime, if a particular defendant is apprehensive that the jury will be misled unless the court gives an instruction substantially like that approved in prior alibi cases, he will be entitled to such instruction upon special request therefor. State v. Hunt, 283 N.C. 617, 197 S.E.2d 513 (1973).

In the absence of a requested instruction, there is no duty upon the trial court to instruct specifically upon the subject of alibi. Conversely, when there has been sufficient evidence in the case to raise an issue as to alibi and the defendant has specifically requested the trial court to charge the jury in accordance with proper instructions submitted by him on this subject, it is the duty of the court so to instruct, and the failure, or refusal, to instruct as to alibi under such circumstances constitutes prejudicial and reversible error. State v. Hunt, 283 N.C. 617, 197 S.E.2d 513 (1973).

Mere denial that defendant was at the scene of the crime does not require a charge on the legal effect of an alibi, but rather, the general charge that the jury should acquit the defendant unless it is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime is sufficient. State v. Waddell, 289 N.C. 19, 220 S.E.2d 293 (1975), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3211, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1210 (1976).

Failure to Use Pattern Form of Alibi Instruction. — Although the desired form of pattern instruction on the defense of alibi was not offered, in substance, where defendant twice received the benefit of the instruction that witnesses testified that he was not at the scene of the robbery on the date and time in question but was elsewhere, and could not, therefore, have committed the act, alone or in concert, no error in instructions was committed. State v. Shore, 20 N.C. App. 510, 201 S.E.2d 701, aff'd, 285 N.C. 328, 204 S.E.2d 682 (1974).

Not Entitled to Alibi Instruction Absent Any Evidence. — A defendant who merely denies that he was at the scene of the crime, without producing any evidence to show that he was at any other place, is not entitled to an alibi instruction. State v. Grant, 19 N.C. App. 401, 199 S.E.2d 14, appeal dismissed, 284 N.C. 256, 200 S.E.2d 656 (1973).

Failure to Instruct on Burden of Proving Alibi. — Where in the charge, the court failed to instruct the jury that the defendant, who relied on an alibi, did not have the burden of proving it, defendant suffered prejudicial error. State v. Moore, 19 N.C. App. 368, 198 S.E.2d 760 (1973).

Instruction Held to Be as Effective as Formal Alibi Instruction. — Where the trial judge made it quite clear that the burden was on the State to prove all essential elements of the crime charged and that defendant did not have to prove anything in order to be found not guilty, although the word "alibi" was not mentioned in the charge or in the recapitulation of the evidence, the charge given afforded defendant the same benefits a formal charge on alibi would have afforded. State v. Shore, 285 N.C. 328, 204 S.E.2d 682 (1974).

Entrapment. — In order for the defense of entrapment to be available to defendant, there must be an intent to commit a crime and such intent must originate from the inducements of a law officer or his agent and not in the mind of the defendant. Where police action did not involve persuasion, fraud, or trickery but rather merely provided defendant with an exposure to temptation, there was no prejudicial error in the failure of the trial judge to instruct on the defense of entrapment. State v. Stanback, 19 N.C. App. 375, 198 S.E.2d 759, cert. denied, 284 N.C. 258, 200 S.E.2d 658 (1973); 415 U.S. 990, 94 S. Ct. 1589, 39 L. Ed. 2d 887 (1974).

Defendant's Burden in Proving Insanity Defense. — The trial court's instruction that defendant had the burden of proving his defense of insanity to the "reasonable satisfaction" rather than to the "satisfaction" of the jury was favorable to defendant, since "reasonable satisfaction" imposes a lesser burden than "satisfaction." State v. Ward, 301 N.C. 469, 272 S.E.2d 84 (1980).

Failure to Reinstruct on Insanity Defense Not Error. — The trial court did not err in failing to instruct that the jury could find defendant not guilty by reason of insanity, when the court instructed that if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to one of the elements of the offense charged it should return a verdict of not guilty, or when the court instructed that all 12 minds must agree on a verdict of guilty or not guilty where the court included the possible verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity at the beginning of the instructions, after the instructions on the elements of the offense charged, and in the final mandate. State v. Ward, 301 N.C. 469, 272 S.E.2d 84 (1980).

Where there is evidence that defendant acted in self-defense, the court must charge on this aspect even though there is contradictory evidence by the State or discrepancies in defendant's evidence. State v. Dooley, 285 N.C. 158, 203 S.E.2d 815 (1974).

Where defendant's evidence, even though contradicted by the State, raised an issue of self-defense, whether the defendant's evidence is less credible than the State's evidence is an issue for the jury, not the trial judge, and the failure of the trial court to charge on self-defense was error. State v. Hickman, 21 N.C. App. 421, 204 S.E.2d 718 (1974).

When the State or defendant produces evidence that defendant acted in self-defense in a prosecution for first-degree murder, the question of self-defense becomes a substantial feature of the case requiring the trial judge to state and apply the law of self-defense to the facts of the case. State v. Davis, 289 N.C. 500, 223 S.E.2d 296, death sentence vacated, 429

U.S. 809, 97 S. Ct. 47, 50 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1976).

Self-Defense as Substantial and Essential Feature. — When supported by competent evidence self-defense unquestionably becomes a substantial and essential feature of a criminal case. State v. Deck, 285 N.C. 209, 203 S.E.2d 830 (1974).

Failure to Include Self-Defense as Possible Verdict Merits New Trial. — In cases where the defendant has met his burden of production for self-defense, the failure of the trial judge to include not guilty by reason of self-defense as a possible verdict in his final mandate to the jury is prejudicial error and entitles the defendant to a new trial. State v. Dooley, 285 N.C. 158, 203 S.E.2d 815 (1974).

And Is Not Cured by Discussion of Self-Defense. — Failure to include not guilty by reason of self-defense in the court's final mandate to the jury, where required, is not cured by the discussion of the law of self-defense in the body of the charge to the jury. State v. Dooley, 285 N.C. 158, 203 S.E.2d 815 (1974).

Duty to Instruct on Self-Defense Absent Request. — If defendant's evidence raises the issue of self-defense, the court has a duty to instruct the jury on this issue even though defendant neglects to request the instructions. State v. Taylor, 33 N.C. App. 70, 234 S.E.2d 202 (1977).

Failure to Instruct on Self-Defense Not Error Absent Any Evidence. — Where State's evidence tended to show a deliberate, premeditated killing with a deadly weapon, and there was no evidence that the killing was in self-defense, and defendant offered no evidence, the failure of court to instruct the jury upon the right of self-defense was not error. State v. Deaton, 226 N.C. 348, 38 S.E.2d 81 (1946).

If the evidence is insufficient to evoke the doctrine of self-defense in a prosecution for first-degree murder, the trial judge is not required to give instructions on that defense even when specifically requested. State v. Davis, 289 N.C. 500, 223 S.E.2d 296, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 809, 97 S. Ct. 47, 50 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1976).

As to proper charge on verdict of not guilty by reason of self-defense, see State v. Dooley, 285 N.C. 158, 203 S.E.2d 815 (1974).

Instruction on self-defense that defendant could use no more force than was reasonably necessary is erroneous, the correct rule being that defendant could use such force as was reasonably or apparently necessary. State v. Hardee, 3 N.C. App. 426, 165 S.E.2d 43 (1969).

Mere Instruction That Evidence Competent on Plea of Self-Defense. — Where defendant introduced evidence that deceased was a man of violent character, an instruction during the trial to the effect that such evidence was competent upon the plea of self-defense, without any instruction in the charge or elsewhere applying the evidence to the question of defendants' reasonable apprehension of death or great bodily harm from the attack which their evidence tended to show that deceased had made on them, is insufficient to meet the requirements of this section, notwithstanding the absence of a request for special instructions. State v. Riddle, 228 N.C. 251, 45 S.E.2d 366 (1947).

Right of Defendant to Defend Himself in His Home. — In a prosecution for murder it was held that it was incumbent upon the trial court, even in the absence of prayer for special instructions, to define a home within the meaning of the law of self-defense and to charge upon defendant's legal right to defend himself in his home, to defend his home from attack and to eject trespassers therefrom, as substantive features of the case arising upon the evidence. State v. Poplin, 238 N.C. 728, 78 S.E.2d 777 (1953).

Force Used in Defense of Home or Eviction of Trespassers. — When, in the trial of a criminal action charging an assault or kindred crime, there is evidence from which it may be inferred that the force used by defendant was in defense of his home, he is entitled to have the evidence considered in the light of applicable principles of law. In such event, it becomes the duty of the court to declare and explain the law arising thereon, and failure to so instruct the jury on such substantive feature is prejudicial error. The same rule applies to the right to evict trespassers from one's home. State v. Spruill, 225 N.C. 356, 34 S.E.2d 142 (1945); State v. Goodson, 235 N.C. 177, 69 S.E.2d 242 (1952).

Failure to Instruct on Self-Defense in Murder Prosecution. — In a murder prosecution, where self-defense is relied upon, the failure of the trial court to instruct the jury in accordance with a settled principle of law, under which are fixed the rights of a person upon whom a murderous assault is made, undoubtedly weighed heavily against the defendant and constituted error. State v. Washington, 234 N.C. 531, 67 S.E.2d 498 (1951).

Evidence Sufficient to Require Self-Defense Instruction. — Where State's evidence presents testimony which would permit, but not require, the jury to find that: (1) Defendant was without fault in bringing on the difficulty, (2) deceased was armed with and first assaulted defendant with a deadly weapon, (3) the fatal blow was struck during a struggle for the weapon first used by deceased and (4) the defendant used such force as was necessary or as appeared to him to be necessary to save himself from death or great bodily harm, the evidence was sufficient to require the trial judge to state and apply the law of self-defense to the facts of the case and the court's failure to so do constituted prejudicial error. State v. Deck, 285 N.C. 209, 203 S.E.2d 830 (1974).

Self-Defense Instruction Held Not Required. — In a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, inflicting serious injury, an instruction on self-defense was not warranted where defendant never abandoned the fight and never withdrew, but simply drove off a short distance out of sight of the victim and then stepped from his car and shot the victim. State v. Plemmons, 29 N.C. App. 159, 223 S.E.2d 549 (1976).

In a prosecution for first-degree murder, evidence of powder burns on defendant's hands, which at most permitted an inference that defendant struggled for possession of the murder weapon before the fatal shots were fired, was insufficient to require an instruction to the jury on self-defense. State v. Davis, 289 N.C. 500, 223 S.E.2d 296, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 809, 97 S. Ct. 47, 50 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1976).

Failure to Instruct as to Self-Defense. — See State v. Thornton, 211 N.C. 413, 190 S.E. 758 (1937); State v. Godwin, 211 N.C. 419, 190 S.E. 761 (1937); State v. Greer, 218 N.C. 660, 12 S.E.2d 238 (1940).

Failure to Instruct on Right of Defendant to Go to Defense of Third Person. — It is prejudicial error to fail to instruct upon the right of defendant to go to the defense of a third person to prevent a felonious assault, since the court must instruct the jury on all substantial features of the case that arise from the evidence. State v. Graves, 18 N.C. App. 177, 196 S.E.2d 582 (1973).

Failure to Instruct Defendant Had No Duty to Retreat. — Because the evidence showed that the victim of a fatal shooting was using deadly force, defendant was permitted to stand his ground and kill the victim if defendant believed it necessary and had a reasonable ground for such belief; thus the trial court erred in failing to instruct that defendant had no duty to retreat and defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Nixon, 117 N.C. App. 141, 450 S.E.2d 562 (1994).

Instruction that "the defense of drunkenness is one which is dangerous in its application" is clearly an expression of opinion by a judge in giving a charge to a petit jury, which is prohibited by this section. State v. Oakes, 249 N.C. 282, 106 S.E.2d 206 (1958).

5. Duty to Reach Verdict.

Instruction on Duty to Reach Verdict. — Generally, where the jury has retired but is unable to reach a verdict, the court may call the jury back and instruct it as to its duty to make a diligent effort to arrive at a verdict, so long as the court's language in no way tends to coerce or in any way intimate any opinion of the court as to what the verdict should be. State v. Brown, 280 N.C. 588, 187 S.E.2d 85, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 870, 93 S. Ct. 198, 34 L. Ed. 2d 121 (1972).

Where the jury has failed up to that time to agree upon a verdict in a criminal action, an instruction by the judge that in effect it was a matter of indifference to him, but that it was their duty to agree if they could do so without violence to their consciences, and that they must find for conviction beyond a reasonable doubt, uninfluenced by prejudices, etc., was held not to be an expression of opinion by the judge upon the evidence. State v. Pugh, 183 N.C. 800, 111 S.E. 849 (1922).

An instruction to the effect that the jury had a duty to reach a verdict "if you can do so without violence to your conscience" contains nothing that tends to coerce, nor any expression of opinion as to what the verdict should be. State v. Bailey, 280 N.C. 264, 185 S.E.2d 683, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 948, 93 S. Ct. 293, 34 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1972).

The court may properly instruct the jury that the trial of the cause involves heavy expense to the county and that it is the duty of the jury to continue its deliberations and attempt to reach an agreement, but that the court is not attempting to force an agreement. State v. Brown, 280 N.C. 588, 187 S.E.2d 85, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 870, 93 S. Ct. 198, 34 L. Ed. 2d 121 (1972).

A statement made by the trial court that insofar as he knew all available evidence had been introduced was simply a statement that the court knew of no other evidence which would come up in a new trial, and that based upon the evidence it was the duty of the jury, if possible, to reach a verdict. State v. Brown, 280 N.C. 588, 187 S.E.2d 85, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 870, 93 S. Ct. 198, 34 L. Ed. 2d 121 (1972).

Where the jury, after some deliberation, returned to the courtroom without reaching a verdict and the trial judge at that time, inter alia, stated to the jury that the case was one of importance to the State and to the defendant, and some jury must pass upon it and that it was their duty to consider the evidence and not to decline to agree on account of stubbornness, such statements were allowed. State v. Bryant, 282 N.C. 92, 191 S.E.2d 745 (1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 958, 93 S. Ct. 1432, 35 L. Ed. 2d 691; 410 U.S. 987, 93 S. Ct. 1516, 36 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1973).

When jurors, after deliberating only a short time, reported to the court that they were unable to agree, and the court twice simply asked them to continue their deliberations, the court being careful to point out that it did not want any juror to do anything against his conscience, the instruction that the jury try to reach a unanimous verdict neither intimated an opinion in violation of this section nor tended to coerce the jury to reach a verdict notwithstanding the conscientious convictions of any member. State v. Strickland, 21 N.C. App. 545, 204 S.E.2d 888 (1974).

It is the duty of the judge to counsel a perplexed jury towards an agreement, keeping always within the statutory restriction that he shall give no intimation on the merits or whether any fact has been fully and sufficiently proved. State v. Bailey, 280 N.C. 264, 185 S.E.2d 683, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 948, 93 S. Ct. 293, 34 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1972).

Urging Jury to Reach Verdict. — Absent other factors, giving an instruction urging a jury to reach a verdict before the jury commences its deliberations is not reversible error. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Instruction That Juror Should Not Surrender Beliefs to Reach Verdict. — A strong admonition, in readily understandable language, that, if after due deliberation, any juror sincerely believed that his decision was correct he should "stick to it though (he) stand(s) alone" was amply sufficient to convey to each member of the jury that he should not surrender any conscientious conviction in order to reach a unanimous verdict. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

If the trial judge urges a jury to agree upon a verdict, he should emphasize in language readily understood by a lay juror that he is not injecting his views into the minds of the jurors and that he does not intend that any juror should surrender his own free will and judgment. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Requiring Juror to Surrender Convictions. — A trial judge has no right to coerce a verdict, and a charge which might reasonably be construed by a juror as requiring him to surrender his well-founded convictions or judgment to the views of the majority is erroneous. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Failure to Instruct Jurors Not to Surrender Convictions. — Where the trial court's instruction on unanimity of the verdict complied with § 15A-1235, the court's failure to instruct that the individual jurors were not to surrender their own convictions solely in order to reach a verdict was not error since the defendant requested no instructions to that effect. State v. Ward, 301 N.C. 469, 272 S.E.2d 84 (1980).

Comment on Expense of Retrying Case. — The isolated mention in an instruction to the jury of the expense and inconvenience of retrying a case does not warrant a new trial unless the charge as a whole coerces a verdict. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

The trial judge may state to the jury the ills attendant upon disagreement including the resulting expense, the length of time the case has been tried, the number of times the case has been tried and that the case will in all probability have to be tried by another jury in the event that the jury fails to agree. However, when such matters are mentioned in the court's instructions, the trial judge must make it clear to the jury that by such instruction the court does not intend that any juror should surrender his conscientious convictions or judgment. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Instruction on Possibility of Mistrial If Verdict Not Reached. — In charging the jury upon the law and evidence pursuant to this section, and in instructing that a verdict must be unanimous, § 15A-1237(b), the trial judge is not required to anticipate that the jury may be unable to reach a verdict, much less to express such anticipated result by instructing that a mistrial would result if the jury could not reach a verdict. Such an instruction, if given before the jury began its deliberations, would, in itself, tend to coerce a verdict, increasing the risk of error. State v. McBryde, 55 N.C. App. 473, 285 S.E.2d 866 (1982).

6. Punishment.

Punishment Irrelevant. — The amount of punishment which a verdict of guilty will empower the judge to impose is totally irrelevant to the issue of a defendant's guilt, and is therefore no concern of the jurors. State v. Hedrick, 289 N.C. 232, 221 S.E.2d 350 (1976).

And Judge Should So Inform Jury If Instruction Is Requested. — In noncapital cases where the jury requests information as to punishment, the trial judge should refuse it and explain to them that punishment is totally irrelevant to the issue of guilt or innocence. State v. Hedrick, 289 N.C. 232, 221 S.E.2d 350 (1976).

Jurors Not to Be Informed Absent Compelling Reason. — In the absence of some compelling reason which makes disclosure as to punishment necessary in order "to keep the trial on an even keel" and to insure complete fairness to all parties, the trial judge should not inform the jurors as to punishment in noncapital cases. State v. Hedrick, 289 N.C. 232, 221 S.E.2d 350 (1976).

Absent compelling reasons for disclosure, the trial judge should not inform a jury as to punishment. State v. Britt, 285 N.C. 256, 204 S.E.2d 817 (1974).

Punishment in Capital Cases. — In a capital case, there may be a compelling reason which makes disclosure as to punishment necessary in order "to keep the trial on an even keel" and to insure complete fairness to all parties. State v. Britt, 285 N.C. 256, 204 S.E.2d 817 (1974).

If the trial judge observes that the jury is confused or uncertain as to whether one of its permissive verdicts would result in a mandatory death sentence, sufficient compelling reason exists to justify his informing the jury of the consequence of their possible verdicts. State v. Britt, 285 N.C. 256, 204 S.E.2d 817 (1974).

Comment as to Recommendation of Mercy in Capital Case. — Any expression of opinion by the judge on the issue of the defendant's guilt or innocence results in prejudice to his case which is virtually impossible to cure. Thus, for example, the judge may not, in a capital case, apprise the jury as to whether it can make a recommendation of mercy since such a recommendation assumes a guilty verdict. State v. Griffin, 44 N.C. App. 601, 261 S.E.2d 292 (1980).

Recommendation of Life Imprisonment. — In a prosecution for burglary in the first degree it is error for the court to fail to charge the jury that it may return a verdict of guilty of burglary in the first degree with recommendation of imprisonment for life. State v. Mathis, 230 N.C. 508, 53 S.E.2d 666 (1949).

D. Summary of Evidence.

Effect of 1985 Amendment. — This section was amended in 1985 so as to no longer require trial judges to state, summarize, or recapitulate the evidence or to explain the application of the law to the evidence. This amendment left undisturbed the prohibition contained in this section against a trial judge expressing an opinion as to whether a fact has been proved. Under the old law, the trial court was required to summarize the evidence in the jury charge to the extent necessary to apply the law applicable to the evidence. The court, however, was not required to give a verbatim recital of the evidence. A recapitulation sufficiently comprehensive to present every substantial and essential feature of the case was sufficient. Minor discrepancies between the evidence and the court's summation were required to be called to the attention of the court in time to afford an adequate opportunity for correction. Otherwise, they were to be considered waived and would not be considered on appeal. State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 165 (1986).

Recapitulation of Evidence Within Judge's Discretion. — Trial judges are not required to state, summarize or recapitulate the evidence, although they may elect in their discretion to do so, and the exercise of such discretion will not be reviewed except upon a showing of abuse, and upon a showing that the ruling was so arbitrary that it could not have been the result of a reasoned decision. State v. Carter, 326 N.C. 243, 388 S.E.2d 111 (1990).

Taking More Time to Summarize State's Evidence. — No error was found in the trial court's narration of the evidence where the transcript revealed that although the court's summary of defendant's evidence was shorter than that of the state, it nevertheless clarified the issues and eliminated extraneous matters. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Evidence Must Be Stated Impartially. — It has been accepted as the proper construction and meaning of the act of this section, though it goes beyond the words: that a judge in charging a jury shall state the evidence fairly and impartially, and that he shall express no opinion on the weight of evidence. State v. Jones, 67 N.C. 280 (1872).

Due process requires that the evidence be reviewed in a fair and impartial manner. State v. Mills, 39 N.C. App. 47, 249 S.E.2d 446 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 588, 254 S.E.2d 33 (1979).

Trial judge must confine his summary of the evidence to the facts and avoid drawing conclusions based thereon. State v. Washington, 57 N.C. App. 309, 291 S.E.2d 270, aff'd, 59 N.C. App. 490, 297 S.E.2d 170, cert. denied, 306 N.C. 563, 294 S.E.2d 228 (1982).

Judge Not to Rely on Contentions of Parties. — The judge, in his instructions to the jury, must recite the evidence and may not rely solely on the contentions of the parties. State v. Lankford, 31 N.C. App. 13, 228 S.E.2d 641 (1976).

Where the court made no reference in the charge to the evidence except in a short statement as to the contentions of the parties, that was held insufficient to satisfy the requirements of this section. State v. Pittman, 12 N.C. App. 401, 183 S.E.2d 307 (1971).

Where the court referred to the evidence by its substance in the form of contentions rather than by recital of the words of the witnesses, there was a lack of indication that the jurors were in anywise misled or confused. State v. Jennings, 279 N.C. 604, 184 S.E.2d 254 (1971).

Recapitulation Must Be Reasonably Accurate. — The evidence offered by defendant as well as by the State, together with the contentions, is to be recapitulated with reasonable accuracy. The law requires no more. State v. Gaines, 283 N.C. 33, 194 S.E.2d 839 (1973).

Judge is not bound to recapitulate all the evidence in his charge to the jury; it is sufficient for him to direct the attention of the jury to the principal questions they have to try, and explain the law applicable thereto. State v. Gould, 90 N.C. 658 (1884); State v. Thompson, 226 N.C. 651, 39 S.E.2d 823 (1946); State v.

In the instructions to the jury, recapitulation of all the evidence is not required, but the trial judge is required to state the evidence to the extent necessary to explain the application of the law thereto. State v. Hardee, 3 N.C. App. 426, 165 S.E.2d 43 (1969); State v. Harrelson, 54 N.C. App. 349, 283 S.E.2d 168 (1981), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 305 N.C. 154, 289 S.E.2d 381 (1982).

Recapitulation of all the evidence is not required, and the statute is complied with in this respect by presentation of the principal features of the evidence relied on respectively by the prosecution and defense. State v. Hardee, 3 N.C. App. 426, 165 S.E.2d 43 (1969); State v. Garrett, 5 N.C. App. 367, 168 S.E.2d 479 (1969); State v. McClain, 282 N.C. 396, 193 S.E.2d 113 (1972); State v. Noell, 284 N.C. 670, 202 S.E.2d 750 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 902, 96 S. Ct. 3203, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1205 (1976); State v. McLean, 74 N.C. App. 224, 328 S.E.2d 451 (1985), appeal dismissed, 316 N.C. 199, 341 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

The trial judge is not required to recapitulate the testimony. He is only required to summarize the evidence sufficiently to permit him to explain and apply the appropriate principles of law. State v. West, 21 N.C. App. 58, 203 S.E.2d 86, cert. denied, 285 N.C. 376, 205 S.E.2d 101 (1974); State v. Adcox, 303 N.C. 133, 277 S.E.2d 398 (1981).

The recapitulation of all the evidence is not required under this section, and nothing more is required than a clear instruction which applies the law to the evidence and gives the position taken by the parties as to the essential features of the case. State v. Thompson, 257 N.C. 452, 126 S.E.2d 58, cert. denied, 371 U.S. 921, 83 S. Ct. 288, 9 L. Ed. 2d 230 (1962); State v. Sanders, 276 N.C. 598, 174 S.E.2d 487 (1970), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2290, 29 L. Ed. 2d 860 (1971); State v. Greene, 278 N.C. 649, 180 S.E.2d 789 (1971); State v. Branch, 288 N.C. 514, 220 S.E.2d 495 (1975), cert. denied, 433 U.S. 907, 97 S. Ct. 2971, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1091 (1977); State v. Sanders, 298 N.C. 512, 259 S.E.2d 258 (1979), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 973, 102 S. Ct. 523, 70 L. Ed. 2d 392 (1981).

In instructing the jury, the court is not required to recapitulate all of the evidence. State v. Craig, 11 N.C. App. 196, 180 S.E.2d 376 (1971); State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Where defense counsel responded negatively to a request for further instructions, and the evidence was simple and direct and without equivocation and complication, a charge which briefly applied the law to the evidence but failed to state the evidence sufficed to comply with the requirements of this section. State v. Owens, 61 N.C. App. 342, 300 S.E.2d 581 (1983).

This section requires the trial court to summarize the evidence of both parties only to the extent necessary to explain the application of the law to the evidence. State v. Carter, 74 N.C. App. 437, 328 S.E.2d 607, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 333, 333 S.E.2d 491 (1985).

Verbatim Recital Not Required. — In reviewing the evidence, the court is not required to give a verbatim recital of the evidence but only a summation sufficiently comprehensive to present every substantial and essential feature of the case. State v. Dietz, 289 N.C. 488, 223 S.E.2d 357 (1976); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 165 (1986).

Judge is not required to recite the testimony of each witness in the order in which he was examined, but need only give a clear and intelligent statement of the evidence, with its legal bearing upon the issue. State v. Jones, 97 N.C. 469, 1 S.E. 680 (1887).

The court is not required to recapitulate the evidence, witness by witness. State v. Guffey, 265 N.C. 331, 144 S.E.2d 14 (1965); State v. Oxendine, 300 N.C. 720, 268 S.E.2d 212 (1980).

The trial judge is not required to recapitulate the testimony of a witness in the exact words used by the witness. State v. Bobbitt, 29 N.C. App. 155, 223 S.E.2d 398 (1976).

The law does not require the judge to review the facts and take up each witness that has testified one by one and repeat the testimony of the witness. State v. Vickers, 22 N.C. App. 282, 206 S.E.2d 399, further review denied, 285 N.C. 668, 207 S.E.2d 760 (1974).

The law does not require the trial judge to review all of the evidence nor to recapitulate the testimony of the witnesses one by one. The duty imposed upon the trial judge is to summarize only so much of the evidence as is necessary for him to apply the law. State v. Moore, 31 N.C. App. 536, 230 S.E.2d 184 (1976).

This section does not require the trial judge in his charge to recite verbatim, repeat, recount, or recapitulate the testimony of each witness. Such repetition would be redundant to a juror's ears and lengthen jury instructions unnecessarily. The judge's duty is performed when he summarizes only so much of the evidence as is necessary for him to apply the law. State v. Webster, 71 N.C. App. 321, 322 S.E.2d 421 (1984).

It is sufficient for the trial judge to fairly summarize the evidence for the purpose of explaining the law applicable thereto. State v. Bobbitt, 29 N.C. App. 155, 223 S.E.2d 398 (1976).

A trial judge need only summarize the evidence to the extent necessary to apply the law relevant to the case. State v. Owens, 65 N.C. App. 107, 308 S.E.2d 494 (1983).

Recapitulation of the principal features of the evidence relied on satisfies this section. State v. Hatch, 21 N.C. App. 148, 203 S.E.2d 334, cert. denied, 285 N.C. 375, 205 S.E.2d 100 (1974).

The requirement of this section that the judge state the evidence is met by presentation of the principal features of the evidence relied on by the prosecution and the defense. A verbatim recital of the evidence is not required. State v. Sanders, 288 N.C. 285, 218 S.E.2d 352 (1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1091, 96 S. Ct. 886, 47 L. Ed. 2d 102 (1976).

Under this section it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury on all substantial features of a case, but this duty extends only to those features which are raised by the evidence. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Simple Repetition of Testimony Insufficient. — This duty is not performed by simply repeating the testimony in the order in which it was delivered, or in a general statement of the principles of law applicable to the case; but it requires the judge to state clearly and distinctly the particular issues arising in the controversy; to eliminate the controverted facts; to arrange the testimony in its bearing on their different aspects, and to instruct the jury as to the law applicable thereto in such manner as will enable them to see and comprehend the matters which are essential to an intelligent and impartial verdict. State v. Boyle, 104 N.C. 800, 10 S.E. 696 (1889).

This section is not complied with where the court reads to the jury full notes of all the testimony in the cause, and tells them that he does this to refresh, and not to control, their recollection of the testimony, that it is their duty to remember the testimony, and that they ought to rely in the last resort on their own recollection. State v. Boyle, 104 N.C. 800, 10 S.E. 696 (1889).

Discretion as to Jury's Request for Restatement of Evidence. — It is discretionary with the court to grant or refuse the jury's request for restatement of the evidence. State v. Crane, 11 N.C. App. 721, 182 S.E.2d 225 (1971).

Exclusion of Objectionable Evidence. — The trial judge has the right to exclude objectionable evidence without an objection by the opposing party. However, he is prohibited from doing so in such a manner as to exhibit any hostility toward the party offering the evidence thereby expressing an opinion. State v. Evans, 36 N.C. App. 166, 243 S.E.2d 812, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 469, 246 S.E.2d 217 (1978).

Inclusion of Matters Not in Evidence. — The trial court's instructions to the jury were prejudicial where the trial court did not summarize the evidence as required by this section, but instead consistently and without exception stated the contentions of the parties, and in stating the State's contentions, included matters that were not in evidence. State v. Wagner, 50 N.C. App. 286, 273 S.E.2d 33 (1981).

Although the court ordinarily should be informed of an inaccuracy in the summary of the evidence in the charge during or at the conclusion of the instructions so that any error may be corrected, a statement of a material fact not in evidence will constitute reversible error whether or not it is called to the court's attention. State v. Barbour, 295 N.C. 66, 243 S.E.2d 380 (1978).

Possibilities of Fact. — Where there are several possibilities of fact, different from the inference tended to be drawn from the evidence offered, a judge is not required to note one such possibility, and specifically bring it to the attention of the jury. State v. Clara, 53 N.C. 25 (1860).

Restricting Evidence to Purpose for Which Admissible. — It is error to admit evidence, competent for one purpose only, to be considered and acted on generally by the jury, without instructions restricting it to the special purpose for which it is admissible. State v. Ballard, 79 N.C. 627 (1878).

Evidence Reflecting upon Witness' Credibility. — Absent a special request, the court is not required to summarize that evidence which merely reflects upon the credibility of a given witness. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978); State v. Miller, 302 N.C. 572, 276 S.E.2d 417 (1981).

Evidence Tending to Impeach. — While a trial judge must summarize evidence favorable to defendant which is brought out on cross-examination, there is no requirement that this be done when the evidence goes not to the establishment of a substantive defense but rather is of an impeaching quality and effect. State v. McDowell, 301 N.C. 279, 271 S.E.2d 286 (1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 1025, 101 S. Ct. 1731, 68 L. Ed. 2d 220, rehearing denied, 451 U.S. 1012, 101 S. Ct. 2350, 68 L. Ed. 2d 865 (1981).

Testimony which merely tends to impeach or show bias is not substantive in nature and need not be summarized. State v. Abdullah, 309 N.C. 63, 306 S.E.2d 100 (1983); State v. Carter, 74 N.C. App. 437, 328 S.E.2d 607, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 333, 333 S.E.2d 491 (1985).

Reviewing State's Evidence Not Error Where Jury Aware of Court's Evidence. — The portion of the charge devoted to reviewing the evidence for the State cannot be held for error as an expression of opinion that certain facts were fully proven when it appears that the court categorically indicated to the jury that it was then engaged in reviewing the State's evidence. State v. Jessup, 219 N.C. 620, 14 S.E.2d 668 (1941). See State v. Johnson, 219 N.C. 757, 14 S.E.2d 792 (1941).

A charge which reviews the State's evidence cannot be held erroneous as an expression of opinion that certain facts were fully proven when it appears that the court categorically indicated to the jury it was reviewing the State's evidence. State v. Rennick, 8 N.C. App. 270, 174 S.E.2d 122 (1970).

Response to Request of Counsel That Certain Testimony Be Summarized. — Where the prisoner's counsel called attention to the judge's failure to state in his summary certain testimony of the prosecutrix, to which the judge said, "Yes, I believe that she did say that," it was held, that such remarks were a sufficient response to the request of the prisoner's counsel, and did not convey an opinion of the judge in violation of this section. State v. Freeman, 100 N.C. 429, 5 S.E. 921 (1888).

Statement of judge that he had only stated that part of the evidence as seemed to be necessary to enable him to explain and apply the law did not constitute an expression of opinion but was in strict compliance with this section. State v. Tyson, 242 N.C. 574, 89 S.E.2d 138 (1955).

Suggestion as to What Evidence Indicates. — On a trial of an indictment for an assault with intent to commit rape under former § 14-22, where there was evidence that the defendant had been found on the six-year-old child, while on her back with her clothes up, it was held to be error for the court in its charge to the jury to remark with emphasis, "Why was she on her back, and why was he on her?" State v. Dancy, 78 N.C. 437 (1876).

Recapitulation of Testimony Given in Jury's Absence. — Where, in his charge to the jury the trial judge undertook an unnecessary and laborious recapitulation of the testimony of each witness and recapitulated testimony of the officer which was given only on voir dire in the absence of the jury, inadvertently reviewing for the jury testimony which was material to the charge against defendant, this constituted a misstatement of a material fact not shown in evidence. State v. Logan, 18 N.C. App. 557, 197 S.E.2d 238 (1973), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 285 N.C. 666, 207 S.E.2d 752 (1974), overruled on another point, State v. Harris, 25 N.C. App. 404, 213 S.E.2d 414 (1975).

Taking More Time to Summarize One Party's Evidence. — It is not error for the court merely to consume more time in summarizing the State's evidence than it does in restating the evidence for defendant. State v. Sanders, 298 N.C. 512, 259 S.E.2d 258 (1979), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 973, 102 S. Ct. 523, 70 L. Ed. 2d 392 (1981); State v. Smith, 50 N.C. App. 188, 272 S.E.2d 621 (1980).

A mere disparity in the length of time devoted by a judge in stating contentions of parties does not constitute prejudicial error. State v. Brandon, 24 N.C. App. 558, 211 S.E.2d 496 (1975).

The rule that a mere disparity in the length of time devoted by a judge in stating the contentions of the parties does not constitute prejudicial error particularly applies in cases where the number of witnesses presented by one side greatly exceeds the number presented by the other side. State v. Brandon, 24 N.C. App. 558, 211 S.E.2d 496 (1975).

Where the State has a number of witnesses and only defendant testifies for the defense, the fact that the court necessarily consumes more time in outlining the evidence for the State than that of defendant does not support defendant's contention that the court expressed an opinion upon the facts by laying undue emphasis on the contentions of the State. State v. Cureton, 218 N.C. 491, 11 S.E.2d 469 (1940); Bryant v. Watford, 240 N.C. 333, 81 S.E.2d 926 (1954).

The fact that the court necessarily consumes more time in stating the evidence for the State than in stating that of the defendant does not constitute an expression of opinion on the evidence. State v. Norman, 29 N.C. App. 606, 225 S.E.2d 141, cert. denied, 290 N.C. 665, 228 S.E.2d 456 (1976).

The fact that the trial court necessarily consumed more time in outlining the evidence for the State than that of the defendant did not support defendant's contention that the court expressed an opinion upon the facts by laying undue emphasis on the contentions of the State. State v. Crutchfield, 5 N.C. App. 586, 169 S.E.2d 43 (1969).

The court summarized the evidence fairly and accurately showing no bias in favor of either the State or the defendants; the fact that more time was devoted to the State's evidence than to that of the defendants was to be expected where the State presented far more evidence. State v. Grant, 19 N.C. App. 401, 199 S.E.2d 14, appeal dismissed, 284 N.C. 256, 200 S.E.2d 656 (1973).

The charge of the court in summarizing the evidence for the jury was not weighed in favor of the State to such a degree that it constituted an expression of opinion. The State presented a great deal more evidence than the defendant and it is to be expected that more time would be required for summary. State v. Hamilton, 19 N.C. App. 436, 199 S.E.2d 159, cert. denied, 284 N.C. 256, 200 S.E.2d 656 (1973).

The fact that the court spent more time in summarizing the State's evidence than that of the defendant is attributable to the fact that the witnesses for the State testified more extensively than those of the defendant. State v. Payne, 19 N.C. App. 511, 199 S.E.2d 132 (1973).

The trial court may have emphasized discrepancies in defendant's evidence more than those in State's evidence, but the court is not required to give equal time to each side; nothing more is required than a clear instruction applying the law to the evidence and giving the positions taken by the parties as to the essential features of the case. State v. Reisch, 20 N.C. App. 481, 201 S.E.2d 577, cert. denied, 285 N.C. 88, 203 S.E.2d 61 (1974).

When a defendant offers no evidence or very little evidence at trial, recapitulation of the evidence for the State must necessarily take longer than recapitulation of the evidence for the defendant, and such difference does not alone violate the trial judge's obligation under this section to not express an opinion whether a fact has been proved. State v. Paige, 316 N.C. 630, 343 S.E.2d 848 (1986).

Instructing Jury to Ignore Longer Time Taken to Give State's Evidence. — Where the judge in his charge stated that it had taken longer to give a summary of the State's evidence than the defendants' but the jury were to attach no significance to that, and he gave equal stress to the contentions of the State and of the defendants, this was held not error. State v. Smith, 237 N.C. 1, 74 S.E.2d 291 (1953).

Failure to Summarize Evidence of Defendant. — When the court recapitulates fully the evidence of the State but fails to summarize, at all, evidence favorable to the defendant, he violates the clear mandate of the statute which requires the trial judge to state the evidence to the extent necessary to explain the application of the law thereto. In addition, he violates the requirement that equal stress be given to the State and to the defendant. State v. Sanders, 298 N.C. 512, 259 S.E.2d 258 (1979), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 973, 102 S. Ct. 523, 70 L. Ed. 2d 392 (1981); State v. Moore, 301 N.C. 262, 271 S.E.2d 242 (1980), overruled on other grounds, 318 N.C. 457, 349 S.E.2d 566 (1986).

Where the trial judge failed to summarize evidence which raised inferences favorable to defendant including evidence of defendant's prior statement to police officers and evidence elicited on cross-examination, this omission constituted error prejudicial to defendant. State v. Sanders, 298 N.C. 512, 259 S.E.2d 258 (1979), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 973, 102 S. Ct. 523, 70 L. Ed. 2d 392 (1981).

This section does not require the trial judge to summarize evidence favorable to defendant where the evidence is not necessary to an explanation of the applicable law. State v. Tripp, 52 N.C. App. 244, 278 S.E.2d 592 (1981).

Summary of Evidence Favorable to Defendant Who Offers None. — The trial judge is not required to fully recapitulate all the evidence, but when he does so he must summarize the evidence in the case that is favorable to the defendant even though defendant presented no evidence. State v. Spicer, 299 N.C. 309, 261 S.E.2d 893 (1980); State v. Carter, 74 N.C. App. 437, 328 S.E.2d 607, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 333, 333 S.E.2d 491 (1985).

Evidence favorable to defendant elicited on cross-examination that tends to exculpate defendant is substantive evidence. A trial court cannot adequately explain the application of the law to the evidence in such a case without mentioning the exculpatory evidence elicited by defendant on cross-examination. State v. Carter, 74 N.C. App. 437, 328 S.E.2d 607, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 333, 333 S.E.2d 491 (1985).

Failure to Summarize Such Evidence. — The trial court did not err in its summary of the evidence to the jury by failing to relate any of the evidence favorable to defendant, since defendant presented no evidence in her behalf, and none of the State's evidence favorable to defendant or evidence elicited by defendant on cross-examination was necessary to an explanation of the applicable law. State v. Moore, 301 N.C. 262, 271 S.E.2d 242 (1980), overruled on other grounds, 318 N.C. 457, 349 S.E.2d 566 (1986).

Objection to Slight Inaccuracies in Statement of Evidence. — Slight inaccuracies in the statement of the evidence in the instructions of the court to the jury will not be held for reversible error when not called to the attention of the judge at the time and the charge substantially complies with this section. State v. Sterling, 200 N.C. 18, 156 S.E. 96 (1930).

Slight inaccuracy in stating evidence will not be held reversible error when the matter is not called to the court's attention in apt time to afford opportunity for correction. State v. McAllister, 287 N.C. 178, 214 S.E.2d 75 (1975).

A slight inaccuracy in the statement of the evidence must be called to the court's attention in time to afford opportunity for correction, else an exception thereto will not be considered on appeal. State v. Sanders, 29 N.C. App. 662, 225 S.E.2d 620 (1976).

Objections to minor discrepancies in the trial judge's statement of the evidence to the jury are deemed to be waived and will not be considered on appeal unless called to the attention of the court in time to afford opportunity for correction. State v. Dietz, 289 N.C. 488, 223 S.E.2d 357 (1976); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 165 (1986).

Any minor misstatement in the trial judge's statement of facts or contentions must be brought to his attention at trial. State v. Monk, 291 N.C. 37, 229 S.E.2d 163 (1976).

An inadvertence in recapitulating the evidence must be called to the attention of the court in time for correction and an objection after verdict comes too late. State v. Davis, 291 N.C. 1, 229 S.E.2d 285 (1976).

As a general rule, a misstatement of the evidence or contentions by the trial judge will not entitle a defendant to a new trial unless the defendant makes a timely objection and calls it to the attention of the judge to permit him to correct it. State v. Evans, 36 N.C. App. 166, 243 S.E.2d 812, cert. denied, 295 N.C. 469, 246 S.E.2d 217 (1978).

A defendant may not avoid the operation of this rule by contending that the trial judge's misstatements were impermissible expressions of opinion. State v. Monk, 291 N.C. 37, 229 S.E.2d 163 (1976).

No Error Where Jury Could Infer What Judge Said Evidence Tended to Show. — The trial court stated in the jury instructions that there was evidence which tended to show that defendant cut victim with a knife over some beer. This did not amount to an improper expression of opinion by the court that a fact had been proved or states facts not in evidence. Besides, there was clearly ample evidence introduced at trial from which the jury could reasonably infer that defendant cut the victim's throat with a knife over some beer. State v. Brewer, 89 N.C. App. 431, 366 S.E.2d 580, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 482, 370 S.E.2d 229 (1988).

Recital of What Evidence Tended to Show Without Instruction on Applicable Law. — Where the trial court gives a recital of what some of the evidence tended to show, but no instruction is given as to how the law applies to it, the jury is left unaided to apply the abstract principles of law to the facts, and this constitutes error requiring a new trial. State v. McKinnon, 9 N.C. App. 724, 177 S.E.2d 299 (1970).

Where Parties Waive Recapitulation of Evidence. — Even when the parties waive a recapitulation of the evidence, it is necessary that the court state the evidence to the extent necessary to explain the application of the law thereto. State v. Floyd, 241 N.C. 298, 84 S.E.2d 915 (1954).

All Jurors to Be in Courtroom for Request to Review Testimony. — Both N.C. Const., Art. I, § 24 and § 15A-1233(a) require the trial court to summon all jurors into the courtroom before hearing and addressing a jury request to review testimony and to exercise its discretion in denying or granting the request. Failure of the trial court to comply with these statutory mandates entitles defendant to press these points on appeal, notwithstanding a failure to object at trial. State v. Ashe, 314 N.C. 28, 331 S.E.2d 652 (1985).

E. Subordinate Features of Case.

What Constitutes Subordinate Feature. — Instructions to scrutinize the testimony of an alleged accomplice, or that the jury should not consider evidence withdrawn by the court, or explaining the difference between corroborative and substantive evidence, or charging how evidence relating to the credibility of a witness should be considered, or that certain evidence had been admitted solely for the purpose of corroboration, or that the jury should take its own recollection of the evidence, or instructions on defendant's evidence of good character, relate to subordinate features upon which the court is not required to charge in the absence of request for special instruction aptly made. State v. Witherspoon, 5 N.C. App. 268, 168 S.E.2d 243 (1969).

Instructions as to the significance of evidence which do not relate to the elements of the crime itself or defendant's criminal responsibility therefor are subordinate features of the case. State v. Hunt, 283 N.C. 617, 197 S.E.2d 513 (1973); State v. Williams, 289 N.C. 439, 222 S.E.2d 242, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 809, 97 S. Ct. 45, 50 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1976); State v. Lester, 289 N.C. 239, 221 S.E.2d 268 (1976).

Instruction to scrutinize the testimony of a witness on the ground of interest or bias is a subordinate and not a substantive feature of the trial, and the judge's failure to caution the jury with respect to the prejudice, partiality or inclination of a witness will not generally be held for reversible error unless there be a request for such instruction. State v. Eakins, 292 N.C. 445, 233 S.E.2d 387 (1977).

An instruction as to the credibility of an interested witness relates to a subordinate feature of the case and the court is not required to charge thereon absent a request. State v. Eakins, 292 N.C. 445, 233 S.E.2d 387 (1977).

A substantive feature of a case is any component thereof which is essential to the resolution of the facts in issue. Evidence which does not relate to the elements of the crime itself or the defendant's criminal responsibility therefore are subordinate features of the case. State v. Atkinson, 39 N.C. App. 575, 251 S.E.2d 677 (1979).

The weight to be accorded the defendant's confessions concerns a subordinate feature of the case and is not a substantive feature thereof which requires a specific instruction in the absence of a special request. State v. Atkinson, 39 N.C. App. 575, 251 S.E.2d 677 (1979).

Trial judge may in his discretion instruct on the subordinate and nonessential features of a case without requests by counsel. The purpose of a charge is to give a clear instruction which applies the law to the evidence in such a manner as to assist the jury in understanding the case and in reaching a correct verdict. State v. Harris, 306 N.C. 724, 295 S.E.2d 391 (1982).

When the trial judge instructs on a subordinate feature he must do so accurately and completely. State v. Eakins, 292 N.C. 445, 233 S.E.2d 387 (1977).

Instruction on Subordinate Feature Must Be Requested. — A party desiring further elaboration on a subordinate feature of the case must aptly tender request for further instructions. State v. Guffey, 265 N.C. 331, 144 S.E.2d 14 (1965); State v. Craig, 11 N.C. App. 196, 180 S.E.2d 376 (1971); State v. Noell, 284 N.C. 670, 202 S.E.2d 750 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 902, 96 S. Ct. 3203, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1205 (1976); State v. Sanders, 288 N.C. 285, 218 S.E.2d 352 (1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1091, 96 S. Ct. 886, 47 L. Ed. 2d 102 (1976).

A party desiring further elaboration on a particular point, or of his contention, or a charge on a subordinate feature of the case must aptly tender his request for special instructions. Instructions to scrutinize the testimony of an alleged accomplice are not required when, as here, no request therefor has been made. State v. Dunbar, 8 N.C. App. 17, 173 S.E.2d 543 (1970).

The charge of the court did not fail to comply with the provisions of this section if it sufficiently pointed out and explained the substantive features of the case, and as to subordinate features the prisoner should have aptly tendered prayers for special instructions. State v. Ellis, 203 N.C. 836, 167 S.E. 67 (1933).

Where the charge fully instructs the jury on all substantive features of the case, defines and applies the law thereto, and states the contention of the parties, it complies with this section and a party desiring further elaboration on a particular point, or of his contentions, or a charge on a subordinate feature of the case, must aptly tender request for special instructions. State v. Garrett, 5 N.C. App. 367, 168 S.E.2d 479 (1969); State v. Floyd, 15 N.C. App. 438, 190 S.E.2d 353, cert. denied, 281 N.C. 760, 191 S.E.2d 363 (1972); State v. Nettles, 20 N.C. App. 74, 200 S.E.2d 664 (1973), appeal dismissed, 284 N.C. 621, 202 S.E.2d 277 (1974); State v. Murray, 21 N.C. App. 573, 205 S.E.2d 587 (1974); State v. Walker, 31 N.C. App. 199, 228 S.E.2d 772 (1976).

When a judge has charged generally on the essential features of the case, if a litigant desires that some subordinate feature of the cause or some particular phase of the testimony shall be more fully explained, he should call the attention of the court to it by prayers for instructions or other proper procedure. And where this is not done, objection may not be raised for the first time after trial. State v. Davis, 246 N.C. 73, 97 S.E.2d 444 (1957).

Since It Is Not Required. — The judge is not required to instruct the jury as to evidentiary matters essentially "subordinate," i.e., those which do not relate to the elements of the crime charged or to defendant's criminal responsibility. State v. Ward, 300 N.C. 150, 266 S.E.2d 581 (1980).

In the absence of a special request the trial judge is not required to instruct the jury on subordinate features of a case. State v. Lester, 289 N.C. 239, 221 S.E.2d 268 (1976); State v. Saunders, 64 N.C. App. 350, 307 S.E.2d 197 (1983).

Failure to Give Such Instruction Absent Request. — In the absence of a special request for instructions, the failure of the charge to define certain terms constituting a subordinate feature of the charge will not be held for error. State v. Puckett, 211 N.C. 66, 189 S.E. 183 (1937).

Failure to Instruct on Character Evidence Held Not Error. — In a prosecution for embezzlement where character evidence was a subordinate feature of the case, failure of the court to give an instruction as to how the jury should view character evidence was not error absent a request for such an instruction. State v. Thompson, 50 N.C. App. 484, 274 S.E.2d 381, cert. denied, 302 N.C. 633, 280 S.E.2d 448 (1981).

F. Instructions as to Particular Offenses.

First-Degree Murder. — Although the defendant in a trial for murder introduced no evidence, and all the evidence for the State tended to show only murder in the first degree, it was error to instruct the jury that if they believed the evidence they should find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree. State v. Gadberry, 117 N.C. 811, 23 S.E. 477 (1895).

Difference Between First- and Second-Degree Murder. — Trial judge did not err in instructing the jury that second-degree murder differs from first-degree murder in that a specific intent to kill is not an element of second-degree murder. State v. Lester, 289 N.C. 239, 221 S.E.2d 268 (1976).

The use of the word "killing" in referring to the degrees of homicide cognizable under the bill of indictment in a prosecution for manslaughter is not harmful error where its use could not be interpreted as an expression of opinion by the court, considering the charge as a whole and the connection in which the word was used. State v. Scoggins, 225 N.C. 71, 33 S.E.2d 473 (1945).

Failure to State That Intentional Killing Must Be Shown to Raise Implication of Malice. — See State v. Bright, 237 N.C. 475, 75 S.E.2d 407 (1953).

Use of "Intentional Killing" in Manslaughter Instruction. — The frequent and interchangeable use of the terms "intentional killing" and "intentional shooting" constituted error in a manslaughter instruction inasmuch as it pointed to a finding of malice, but the same charge in an instruction on second-degree murder would in no manner be deemed prejudicial. State v. Briggs, 20 N.C. App. 368, 201 S.E.2d 580 (1974).

Presumptions of Malice and Unlawfulness of Killing. — In a prosecution for first-degree murder, trial judge did not err in charging the jury that if the State proved beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant killed deceased with a deadly weapon, the law raised presumptions that the killing was unlawful and that it was done with malice. State v. Taylor, 289 N.C. 223, 221 S.E.2d 359 (1976).

Instruction on "heat of passion" in a murder case is inappropriate when not supported by the evidence. State v. Briggs, 20 N.C. App. 368, 201 S.E.2d 580 (1974).

Instruction That Jury May Consider "Absence of Provocation" for Murder. — Judge's instruction to the jury in a first-degree murder case that the jury, in determining premeditation and deliberation, may consider the "absence of provocation" did not express a court opinion that there was no evidence of provocation in the case. State v. Fowler, 285 N.C. 90, 203 S.E.2d 803 (1974), death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3212, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1212 (1976).

Incorrect Definition of Voluntary Manslaughter in Murder Case. — In a prosecution for first-degree murder, a new trial was required where the trial judge twice and at crucial times in the charge to the jury gave an incorrect instruction as to the definition of voluntary manslaughter and related it to the evidence in a manner which would not disclose patent error to the average juror, despite the fact that the trial judge properly defined voluntary manslaughter in another portion of the charge. State v. Cousins, 289 N.C. 540, 223 S.E.2d 338 (1976), aff'd, 292 N.C. 461, 233 S.E.2d 554 (1977).

Charge on Involuntary Manslaughter. — Where the record in a first-degree murder prosecution contained no evidence which tended to show that the victim died as the result of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony or as the result of an unlawful act that was not naturally dangerous to human life, it was error to permit the jury to consider an involuntary manslaughter charge, and since it appeared that there was a reasonable possibility that the defendant would have been acquitted if the involuntary manslaughter issue had not been submitted, the error had to be held prejudicial. State v. Ataei-Kachuei, 68 N.C. App. 209, 314 S.E.2d 751, cert. denied, 311 N.C. 763, 321 S.E.2d 146 (1984).

Summary of Evidence in Involuntary Manslaughter Case. — Where, when explaining the law of involuntary manslaughter and applying the evidence to that law the judge stated, "that it was dark . . . ; and that the defendant fired a .22 rifle into the darkness . . . ," this was a fair summary of the evidence, since defendant himself contended it was too dark for him to see when he fired his gun. State v. Parks, 92 N.C. App. 181, 374 S.E.2d 138 (1988), rev'd on other grounds, 324 N.C. 420, 378 S.E.2d 785 (1989).

Reference to Deceased as Common-Law Husband. — In a prosecution for first-degree murder, the trial judge's characterization of deceased as the common-law husband of the defendant in his charge to the jury was harmless error. State v. Hunt, 289 N.C. 403, 222 S.E.2d 234, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 809, 97 S. Ct. 46, 50 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1976).

In a prosecution for assault, where defendant's evidence tends to show that the shooting was accidental or by misadventure caused by a tussle over the pistol which the prosecuting witness had pointed at him, defendant has a substantial legal right to have the judge declare and explain the law arising on this evidence, and failure of the court to do so is prejudicial error. State v. Floyd, 241 N.C. 298, 84 S.E.2d 915 (1954).

Instruction That Injury Was Serious. — In a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury, an instruction that the victim's skull fracture was a serious injury did not violate this section. State v. Davis, 33 N.C. App. 262, 234 S.E.2d 762 (1977).

Charge on "Serious Injury". — In a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury, the trial judge's instruction to the jury that a serious injury is any physical injury that causes great pain and suffering was not error since it imposed a greater degree of injury than necessary. State v. Williams, 29 N.C. App. 24, 222 S.E.2d 720, cert. denied, 289 N.C. 728, 224 S.E.2d 676 (1976).

Unqualified Use of "Assault" and "Rape". — The charge, when read as a whole, did not show that the judge in any manner expressed any opinion in violation of this section by the unqualified use of the words "assault" and "rape" or "raping" in referring to the charges against the defendants and the use of these words, did not lead the jury to assume that the facts in controversy had been established. State v. Blalock, 9 N.C. App. 94, 175 S.E.2d 716 (1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 912, 91 S. Ct. 881, 27 L. Ed. 2d 812 (1971).

In a prosecution for kidnapping, use of the word "rape" by the judge in a charge to the jury did not indicate an expression on the judge's part that such fact had been established where, in addition to the full and adequate curative instruction regarding the use of the word "rape," the jury was instructed elsewhere in the charge that "what the evidence does actually show is a question of fact for the jury's determination." Therefore, the charge when considered as a whole is free from prejudicial error. State v. Poole, 289 N.C. 47, 220 S.E.2d 320 (1975).

Specific Intent in Robbery. — In a prosecution for robbery the court should charge that the taking of the property must be with a specific intent on the part of the taker to deprive the owner of his property permanently and to convert it to his own use, and an instruction merely that the taking must be with felonious intent is insufficient. State v. Lunsford, 229 N.C. 229, 49 S.E.2d 410 (1948).

In prosecution for homicide committed in the attempted perpetration of a robbery, the charge of the court to the effect that if the jury were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants conspired and agreed to rob deceased, that one defendant committed acts in furtherance of the common design and agreed to share in the proceeds of the robbery and that in furtherance of such plan and agreement, and while attempting to rob deceased, another defendant shot and killed deceased, the jury should return a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, was without error and did not contain an expression of opinion on the evidence in violation of this section. State v. Maynard, 247 N.C. 462, 101 S.E.2d 340 (1958).

Charge of Murder in Perpetration of Robbery, Where Robbery Merged into Murder Charge. — Court erred in charging that a verdict of murder in the first degree could be rendered upon a finding beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing was done in the perpetration or in the attempt to perpetrate a robbery, where the robbery was merged in and became a part of the first-degree murder charge. State v. Moore, 284 N.C. 485, 202 S.E.2d 169 (1974).

With respect to stolen property charges, the legal principle of possession of recently stolen property constituted a substantive feature which the court had a duty to discuss in its jury instructions. State v. Quick, 106 N.C. App. 548, 418 S.E.2d 291 (1992), cert. denied, 332 N.C. 670, 424 S.E.2d 415 (1992).

Reckless Driving. — An instruction that if the jury is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant is guilty of reckless driving to convict him, otherwise to acquit him, is insufficient to meet the requirements of this section, since it fails to explain the law or apply the law to the facts as the jury should find them to be. State v. Flinchem, 228 N.C. 149, 44 S.E.2d 724 (1947).

If a party has properly pleaded reckless driving and the judge undertakes to charge upon it, this section requires him to tell the jury what facts they might find from the evidence would constitute reckless driving. It is not sufficient for the judge to read the statute and then leave it to the jury to apply the law to the facts and to decide for themselves what defendant's driver did, if anything, which constituted reckless driving. Ford v. Jones, 6 N.C. App. 722, 171 S.E.2d 103 (1969).

Instructions in Prosecutions for Driving under Influence of Intoxicating Liquors Held Prejudicial Where Defendant Stated to Be Driver. — See State v. Swaringen, 249 N.C. 38, 105 S.E.2d 99 (1958).

Failure to Define "Conspiracy". — Where the court charged the jury that defendant would be guilty of first-degree murder even if one of the others fired the fatal shot, if it was fired in the execution of their unlawful conspiracy and agreement and the defendant excepted on the ground that the court did not define "conspiracy," it was held that the exception could not be sustained, in the absence of a special request for instructions, the term "conspiracy" being used synonymously with "agreement," and the charge being clear and easily understood, and defendant being guilty of murder in the first degree under the evidence regardless of the existence of a technical conspiracy. State v. Puckett, 211 N.C. 66, 189 S.E. 183 (1937).

Forcible Trespass. — In a prosecution for forcible trespass, a charge to the jury that the defendant's guilt depended on the fact of his presence, without further instructions, is not a compliance with this section. State v. Lawson, 98 N.C. 759, 4 S.E. 134 (1887).

Instruction as to Uncorroborated Testimony in Perjury Trial. — While the uncorroborated testimony of one witness might convince the jury, beyond a reasonable doubt, of the guilt of accused in a criminal trial for perjury, it is not sufficient in law; and instructions, therefore, that if the jury is so satisfied from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, they should return a verdict of guilty, is erroneous as failing to comply with this section. State v. Hill, 223 N.C. 711, 28 S.E.2d 100 (1943).

"Delivery" Under § 90-87. — In a prosecution for felonious sale and delivery of marijuana, and felonious possession of marijuana with intent to sell, trial judge's charge to the jury placing the burden on the State to prove that defendant "transferred" the marijuana was not prejudicial error, since "delivery" means "transfer" under § 90-87. State v. Dietz, 289 N.C. 488, 223 S.E.2d 357 (1976).

Instruction as to Former Marriage. — In an indictment for bigamy an instruction that the weight of the evidence was that there had been no first marriage, is a violation of this section. State v. Parker, 106 N.C. 711, 11 S.E. 517 (1890).

Instruction as to Lottery Held Sufficient. — In a prosecution for possession of certificates, tickets and orders used in the operation of a numbers lottery, where the court instructed the jury that before it could find defendant guilty of violating the statute it must find from the evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt that (1) the defendant possessed the tickets and orders and (2) that such tickets, orders and paraphernalia were used in a numbers lottery, the charge, when considered contextually as a whole, complies with the requirements of this section. State v. Roberson, 29 N.C. App. 152, 223 S.E.2d 551 (1976).

In a dissemination of obscenity case, the properly denied request for an instruction to the jury that if the jury found the defendant provided notice to the public of the nature of the magazines involved in the case, and if they found the defendant provided reasonable protection against the exposure of the magazines to juveniles, then the jury would have to find that the defendant's conduct was protected under U.S. Const., Amends. I and XIV, and that it would be the duty of the jury to return a verdict of not guilty. State v. Horn, 18 N.C. App. 377, 197 S.E.2d 274 (1973), aff'd, 285 N.C. 82, 203 S.E.2d 36, cert. denied, 419 U.S. 974, 95 S. Ct. 238, 42 L. Ed. 2d 188 (1974).

Instruction on Illegality of Collecting a Debt by Force. — The trial judge in a common-law robbery case did not express an opinion as to the validity of defendant's defense when he charged on the illegality of collecting a debt by the use of force, since defendant's own testimony tended to show that he was attempting to collect a debt owed to him by the victim's brother at the time of the incident in question, and the legal issue thus arose on the evidence. State v. Thompson, 49 N.C. App. 690, 272 S.E.2d 160 (1980).

G. Miscellaneous Instructions.

Use of the convenient formula "the evidence tends to show" is not considered expression of an opinion upon the evidence in violation of the prohibition of this section. State v. Jackson, 228 N.C. 656, 46 S.E.2d 858 (1948); State v. Allen, 301 N.C. 489, 272 S.E.2d 116 (1980).

It is not error, as commenting on the weight of evidence, to use in instructions the phrases "the evidence tends to show" and "evidence tending to show." State v. Jackson, 199 N.C. 321, 154 S.E. 402 (1930); State v. Harris, 213 N.C. 648, 197 S.E. 142 (1938).

The use of the phrase "the State has presented evidence in this case which tends to show" in arraying the State's evidence, the same phrase being used when arraying defendant's evidence, did not constitute error as an expression of opinion by the court on the evidence. State v. Huggins, 269 N.C. 752, 153 S.E.2d 475 (1967); State v. Allen, 301 N.C. 489, 272 S.E.2d 116 (1980).

Use of the words "the State has offered evidence which tends to show" in a charge to the jury does not constitute an expression of opinion in violation of this section. State v. Howard, 222 N.C. 291, 22 S.E.2d 917 (1942).

Statement of Judge's Recollection as to What Evidence Tended to Show. — The phrase, "I believe the evidence tends to show ...," does not constitute an expression of opinion that any particular facts had been fully proven but rather is a statement of the trial judge's recollection as to what the evidence tended to show. State v. Alston, 38 N.C. App. 219, 247 S.E.2d 726 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 586, 254 S.E.2d 30 (1979).

Judge should instruct "that if the jury find from the evidence" and not "if they believe the evidence." State v. Green, 134 N.C. 658, 46 S.E. 761 (1904); State v. Seaboard A.L.R.R., 145 N.C. 570, 59 S.E. 1048 (1907).

Use of the words "you want to find" in charging the jury as to the elements of the offense charged, construing the charge as a whole, merely placed the burden on the State to prove the crime charged and not to constitute an expression of opinion or a direction or intimation that the jury should so find. State v. Smith, 221 N.C. 400, 20 S.E.2d 360 (1942).

Use of Phrase "We Are Trying the Defendant". — In a prosecution for armed robbery, where the judge's instruction to the jury included "Now, members of the jury, in the case in which we are trying the defendant ...," the use of the word "we" was proper and did not convey to the jury that the trial judge was part of the solicitor's (now prosecutor's) machinery for prosecution. State v. Wallace, 21 N.C. App. 523, 204 S.E.2d 855 (1974).

Instruction That There Is No Evidence. — If any testimony, however slight or insufficient, is given, which tends to establish the issue, it is error to instruct the jury that there is none. State v. Allen, 48 N.C. 257 (1855).

Failure to Repeat Limiting Instruction in Charge. — The fact that a limiting instruction was not repeated in the charge is not error in the absence of a request for a special instruction. State v. Spinks, 24 N.C. App. 548, 211 S.E.2d 476 (1975).

Matters Subject to Mathematical Calculation. — Where the answers to the issues as to the amounts recoverable, in case the defendants were found liable to the plaintiffs, is merely a matter of mathematical calculation, peremptory instructions in regard thereto do not constitute prejudicial or reversible error under this section. State v. Gant, 201 N.C. 211, 159 S.E. 427 (1931).

Motive. — A charge, "While it is permissible to show a motive as a circumstance to be considered by the jury, it is not necessary. All the state has to do is to satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants did the acts charged in the indictment," was held to be error under this section. State v. Morgan, 136 N.C. 628, 48 S.E. 670 (1904).

Instruction which mistakenly asserted that defendant took the stand and testified as to material matters of the case was reversible error, even though the defendant did not call this misstatement of the evidence to the court's attention before the jury retired to consider the case. State v. Butcher, 13 N.C. App. 97, 185 S.E.2d 11 (1971).

It was prejudicial for the trial judge, when the defendant did not testify, to inform the jury that the defendant testified that he did shoot "into" the car when in fact a deputy sheriff testified that the defendant told him that he had shot "at" the car. State v. Butcher, 13 N.C. App. 97, 185 S.E.2d 11 (1971).

Correction of Inadvertent Statement. — Where the court instructed the jury to disregard an inadvertent statement previously made and then proceeded to charge the jury correctly, the inadvertence was discovered immediately and the correction was prompt and complete, this is sufficient and is all the law requires. State v. Foster, 284 N.C. 259, 200 S.E.2d 782 (1973).

Instructions which tend to bolster the witnesses for the State, and to impair the effect of defendant's plea of not guilty, are violative of this section. State v. Shinn, 234 N.C. 397, 67 S.E.2d 270 (1951), aff'd, 238 N.C. 535, 78 S.E.2d 388 (1953).

Failure to Instruct on Law Applicable to Evidence Offered in Support of Defense. — See State v. Sherian, 234 N.C. 30, 65 S.E.2d 331 (1951).

Circumstantial Evidence Instruction Not Required Where State Relies Primarily on Direct Evidence. — The duty imposed upon the trial court by this section to "declare and explain the law" arising in the case on trial does not require the court to instruct the jury upon the law of circumstantial evidence in a criminal action involving both direct and circumstantial testimony, where the State relies principally upon the direct evidence, and the direct evidence is sufficient, if believed, to warrant the conviction of the accused. State v. Hicks, 229 N.C. 345, 49 S.E.2d 639 (1948).

Jury instructions on circumstantial evidence were adequate where defendant requested no additional instructions; and where the State relied primarily on direct evidence, instructions on circumstantial evidence were not required. State v. Griffin, 18 N.C. App. 14, 195 S.E.2d 569 (1973).

The trial court is not required to instruct the jury on the law of circumstantial evidence in a criminal action involving direct and circumstantial evidence if the State primarily relies on direct evidence, and if the direct evidence is sufficient to warrant the conviction of the accused. State v. Hageman, 307 N.C. 1, 296 S.E.2d 433 (1982).

Failure to Instruct as to Acquittal. — By failing to give the converse or alternative view that acquittal should result if the jury were not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt as to each and every stated element, the trial judge failed to provide even a general application of the law to the evidence raised by defendant's testimony. State v. Ward, 300 N.C. 150, 266 S.E.2d 581 (1980).

Use of Word "His" to Refer to All Witnesses. — In a prosecution for kidnapping, where the trial judge charged the jury to scrutinize the testimony of interested witnesses, and the trial judge used the personal pronoun "his" to refer to the testimony of such witnesses, the charge does not constitute an expression of opinion upon the credibility of defendant in violation of this section since the admonition to scrutinize included not only the defendant but also the testimony "of any witness" whether male or female. State v. Poole, 289 N.C. 47, 220 S.E.2d 320 (1975).

Definition of Reasonable Doubt. — In a first-degree murder prosecution, the trial judge's definition of reasonable doubt as a "possibility of innocence" was more favorable to defendant than was required and therefore did not constitute prejudicial error. State v. Bryant, 283 N.C. 227, 195 S.E.2d 509 (1973).

Necessity of Proving Prerequisite Evidential Fact beyond Reasonable Doubt. — Where proof of a particular evidential fact beyond a reasonable doubt is obviously a prerequisite to the establishment of the defendant's guilt, if the circumstantial evidence in its entirety is deemed sufficient to withstand a defendant's motion for judgment as in case of nonsuit, an application of the law to the facts arising on the evidence as provided in this section requires that the presiding judge instruct the jury that proof of such fact beyond a reasonable doubt is a prerequisite to a verdict of guilty. State v. Chavis, 270 N.C. 306, 154 S.E.2d 340 (1967).

Statement That Evidence Satisfies "Beyond Reasonable Doubt". — Where the trial court instructed the jury "all the evidence tends to show a homicide committed in the perpetration of a robbery," and that the State has offered evidence, "which, it contends, tends to show, and which should satisfy you, gentlemen, beyond a reasonable doubt," etc., it was held that the charge will not be held for error on defendant's exception on the ground that it contained an expression of opinion by the court in violation of this section. State v. Johnson, 207 N.C. 273, 176 S.E. 581 (1934).

Testimony of Witnesses Having Interest in Case. — There is no hard and fast form of expression or consecrated formula required, but the jury should be instructed that, as to the testimony of relatives or parties interested in the case and defendants, the jury should scrutinize their testimony in the light of that fact; but if, after such scrutiny, the jury should believe that the witness has told the truth, they should give him as full credit as if he were disinterested. State v. Griffin, 280 N.C. 142, 185 S.E.2d 149 (1971).

A charge did not constitute an expression of opinion upon the credibility of defendant or his mother where the admonition to scrutinize their testimony in light of their interest in the case included not only the defendant and his mother but also the testimony of any witness who had an immediate personal interest in the outcome of the verdict. State v. Griffin, 280 N.C. 142, 185 S.E.2d 149 (1971).

It is proper for the trial court to instruct the jury to scrutinize the defendant's testimony in the light of his interest in the outcome of the case, and that if they believe he is telling the truth they will give to his testimony the same weight they would give to the testimony of any other believable witness. State v. Best, 13 N.C. App. 204, 184 S.E.2d 905 (1971), cert. denied, 280 N.C. 495, 186 S.E.2d 514 (1972).

When all the evidence shows a witness to be an accomplice, then the trial judge may, upon timely request, instruct that the witness's testimony should be carefully scrutinized. The trial judge must further advise the jury that if the testimony is believed, it should be given the same weight as any other credible evidence. State v. Diaz, 88 N.C. App. 699, 365 S.E.2d 7, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 327, 368 S.E.2d 870 (1988).

Reading Warrant. — In a drunken driving prosecution, the trial court did not express an opinion by the statement in the instructions that "the offense charged here was committed against the peace and dignity of the State" where the court was reading the warrant upon which the defendant was being tried. State v. Rennick, 8 N.C. App. 270, 174 S.E.2d 122 (1970).

Charge as to Attitude and Conduct of Jurors. — The trial judge's charge was allowed which said that the attitude and conduct of jurors at the outset of their deliberations are matters of considerable importance, and that it is rarely productive of good for a juror upon entering the jury room to make an emphatic expression of his opinion on the case or to announce a determination to stand for a certain verdict. State v. Bryant, 282 N.C. 92, 191 S.E.2d 745 (1972), cert. denied, 410 U.S. 958, 93 S. Ct. 1432, 35 L. Ed. 2d 691; 410 U.S. 987, 93 S. Ct. 1516, 36 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1973).

Informing Jury That Manslaughter Does Not Arise from Evidence. — It is not an expression of opinion, but rather the duty of the trial judge, where the evidence so warrants, to inform the jury that manslaughter does not arise on the evidence in the case. State v. Duboise, 279 N.C. 73, 181 S.E.2d 393 (1971).

Remark on Evidence of Character of Defendant. — An instruction that "there was evidence tending to show that he (the defendant) is a man of bad character," said while stating the contentions of the State, cannot be held for error as an expression of opinion by the court on the weight or credibility of the testimony in violation of this section. State v. Sims, 213 N.C. 590, 197 S.E. 176 (1938).

Charge Based on Uncontradicted Testimony. — A charge by the court for the jury to return a verdict of guilty if they believed or found as true the testimony of an uncontradicted witness (capable of only one meaning), is not an expression of the court's opinion upon the weight and credibility of the evidence. State v. Moore, 192 N.C. 209, 134 S.E. 456 (1926).

Statement Concerning Admission. — Where in the course of his charge to the jury a trial judge said: "I believe the State's evidence further tends to show that the defendant after being warned of his rights made an admission or confession to the police and told them that he had a gun; that is to wit: a .22 caliber pistol with a blue steel barrel and white handles," that was not an expression of opinion that defendant had confessed his guilt. State v. Bailey, 280 N.C. 264, 185 S.E.2d 683, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 948, 93 S. Ct. 293, 34 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1972).

Instruction That Jury Could Consider Inconsistencies in Details. — An instruction to the jury that they can consider inconsistencies in details which did not pertain to the essential elements of the charges in determining the degree of credibility to be given any witness is proper. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

A charge that "... and the State contends that the evidence in the case" is sufficient to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and that upon the testimony of the main witness for the State "and other evidence which corroborates this testimony" the jury should return a verdict of guilty, is not an expression of opinion that "the other evidence" did corroborate the witness since it is clear that both phrases related to the statement of contentions of the State. State v. McKnight, 226 N.C. 766, 40 S.E.2d 419 (1946).

No assumption of fact or opinion expressed or fairly inferable from the charge respecting the credibility of the testimony can be made by the trial court without violating this section. State v. Love, 229 N.C. 99, 47 S.E.2d 712 (1948).

Complete Instructions Not Necessary in Answering Specific Jury Question. — When the trial court has once instructed the jury in such manner as to declare and explain adequately the law arising on the evidence, there is no requirement that complete instructions be given again each time the jury returns to ask a specific question. In such instances, the trial court properly may answer the question asked without resorting to repetition of all of the instructions previously given. State v.

Instruction That Arresting Officer Had No Personal Interest or Bias. — In a prosecution for driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, an instruction to the jury, based on a contention by the State, that the police officer who apprehended defendant had no personal interest in the case or bias toward defendant and that the officer's only interest was in seeing that the law was complied with and in protecting innocent people operating their automobiles on the highway, was a prohibited expression of opinion by the court, and its repetition by the judge, even though stated as a contention, gave it an emphasis that would weigh too heavily upon the defendant. State v. Maready, 269 N.C. 750, 153 S.E.2d 483 (1967).

Testimony of Codefendant. — Where there is a severance on the trial of defendants, and another party charged in the bill testifies in behalf of the accused, it is error, as indicating the opinion of the court on the facts, to charge that the very fact that the witness is included in the same indictment will impair his testimony, and that the same should not be placed on the same plane or footing with that of a witness of undoubted character who is disinterested. State v. Jenkins, 85 N.C. 544 (1881).

Instruction Held to Express Opinion Where Defendants Pleaded Not Guilty and Made No Judicial Admission. — Where defendants entered pleas of not guilty to charges of armed robbery and there is nothing in the record to show that they made any judicial admission that the offense had actually occurred, a trial court's instruction to the jury that defendants "do not deny that somebody did this, but they say they are not the men, and some other men did it, not themselves," is an unauthorized expression of opinion on the evidence in violation of this section. State v. Brinkley, 10 N.C. App. 160, 177 S.E.2d 727 (1970).

Identification of Defendant. — Where the only evidence connecting the defendant with operating a still was a coat found there with a receipt with defendant's name on it in one of the pockets, an instruction that the name on the receipt was sufficient evidence that it was the property of defendant, is an expression of an opinion. State v. Allen, 190 N.C. 498, 130 S.E. 163 (1925).

Reference to Victim Other Than Named in Indictment. — In a prosecution for armed robbery, where the indictment referred only to the robbery of a single victim but the trial judge in his charge to the jury referred to another victim, there was no prejudicial variance since there was only a single criminal transaction, and defendant therefore was in no danger of a subsequent prosecution for the robbery of the other victim. State v. Martin, 29 N.C. App. 17, 222 S.E.2d 718, cert. denied, 290 N.C. 96, 225 S.E.2d 325 (1976).

Flight from Scene of Crime. — Trial judge did not err in failing to instruct, without request, on the weight to be given evidence of flight from the scene of a crime since flight is not an element of the State's case nor is its absence a defense, but is rather a circumstance to be considered by the jury in determining a general mens rea in a criminal case. State v. Lester, 289 N.C. 239, 221 S.E.2d 268 (1976).

Instruction as to Voluntary Flight of Defendant. — The trial court's instruction that the voluntary flight of a defendant immediately after he is accused of a crime is not a circumstance sufficient in itself to establish his guilt, is not an expression of opinion, on the theory that the court implied to the jury that defendant had been formally charged with crime at the time of his flight from a deputy sheriff's car, when in fact the deputy had told defendant that he wanted to talk to him concerning a robbery. State v. Kirby, 7 N.C. App. 366, 172 S.E.2d 93 (1970).

Consideration of Prior Inconsistent Testimony. — In a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury, trial judge did not abuse his discretion in failing to give a limiting instruction immediately before a witness's prior inconsistent statement was read to the jury where he cautioned the jury in his charge that the statement was to be considered not as substantive evidence, but only in weighing the credibility of the witness's testimony. State v. Coffer, 54 N.C. App. 78, 282 S.E.2d 492 (1981).

Failure to Distinguish Counts of Indictment. — Where the charge of the court fails to point out the distinction between the counts in the indictment, and leaves the jury with the impression that both counts are valid when there is only one question to be answered constitutes reversible error, under this section. State v. Ray, 207 N.C. 642, 178 S.E. 224 (1935).

Failure to Instruct Concerning Admissions as to Unrelated Prior Convictions. — The trial court's failure to instruct that admissions as to convictions of unrelated prior criminal offenses were not competent as substantive evidence but were competent as bearing upon defendant's credibility as a witness does not constitute error, absent a request for such instruction. State v. Alexander, 16 N.C. App. 95, 191 S.E.2d 395, cert. denied, 292 N.C. 305, 192 S.E.2d 195 (1972).

Instruction as to Result of Failure to Convict. — In a prosecution for driving a vehicle on a public highway while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, an instruction to the effect that the State contended the statute was enacted to protect life and property and if the jury should fail to "convict on this evidence, then the law or statute commonly referred to as 'the drunken driving' statute, would have no purpose and no effect" was held prejudicial as an expression of opinion by the court on the evidence. State v. Anderson, 263 N.C. 124, 139 S.E.2d 6 (1964).

Giving Correct Instructions on Interested Witnesses and Failing to Repeat All Original Instructions Not Error. — There was no merit to defendant's contention in a homicide prosecution that the trial judge impermissibly expressed an opinion (1) on the credibility of defendant and those of his relatives who testified on his behalf, since the court's instruction on interested witnesses was proper; (2) by failing to reinstruct the jury on the elements of self-defense when the jury on two occasions returned to the courtroom and requested additional instructions on the crimes charged, since a trial judge who has complied with a request by the jury for additional instructions is not required also to repeat his instructions as to other features of the case which have already been correctly given; and (3) in instructing the jury on the procedure which was to be followed upon their return of a verdict which found defendant guilty of first-degree murder, since the judge's comments did not precipitate a rush to judgment by the jury. State v. Price, 301 N.C. 437, 272 S.E.2d 103 (1980).

Where part of the court's instructions omitted the single word "if," it resulted in an expression of opinion by the court that the State had already shown that defendant's act was criminally negligent. State v. Williams, 280 N.C. 132, 184 S.E.2d 875 (1971).

Credibility of Defendant's Testimony. — The testimony of defendant if accepted as true by the jury, is given the same credibility as that of a disinterested witness, and a charge to that effect, after a proper instruction as to interest, is not error. State v. Beavers, 188 N.C. 595, 125 S.E. 258 (1924).

Instruction for Jury to Deliberate Further. — In a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, inflicting serious injury, where one juror, after the verdict was first returned and the jury was being polled, stated that at that time he had some doubt about defendant's mental capacity, the trial judge's instruction to the jury to deliberate further was not error, since the juror's statement was not a vote of guilty, but indicated only that the verdict was not unanimous. State v. Sellers, 29 N.C. App. 22, 222 S.E.2d 750 (1976).

Failure to include instructions as to purposes for which evidence was received is not ground for exception unless counsel has requested such an instruction. State v. Collins, 29 N.C. App. 120, 223 S.E.2d 575 (1976).

Instruction on Weight of Evidence. — That testimony is admissible does not require the judge, without a request therefor, to instruct the jury as to the weight to be given the evidence. State v. Lester, 289 N.C. 239, 221 S.E.2d 268 (1976).

Instruction That Whether Statement Was Oral or Written Made No Difference. — In replying to the jury's question as to whether defendant's statement to the sheriff was oral or written, the trial court's instruction that, if the jury believed that such a statement was made, it would make no difference whether or not the statement was in writing, did not constitute an expression of opinion. State v. Crane, 11 N.C. App. 721, 182 S.E.2d 225 (1971).

Effect of a "Slip of the Tongue". — A mere inadvertent "slip of the tongue" in stating the evidence, will not be held as prejudicial error when counsel for defendant might easily have called attention thereto and had it corrected then and there. State v. Sinodis, 189 N.C. 565, 127 S.E. 601 (1925).

A mere slip of the tongue by the judge while reading his instructions to the jury which is not called to the attention of the court at the time it is made will not constitute prejudicial error when it is apparent from a contextual reading of the charge that the jury could not have been misled thereby. State v. Silhan, 302 N.C. 223, 275 S.E.2d 450 (1981), overruled in part by State v. Sanderson, 346 N.C. 669, 488 S.E.2d 133, State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997).

When Charge Contains a "Powerful Summing Up". — Where the trial judge in his general charge gives "every reasonable contention of the State," it is erroneous to give an entirely new charge, containing "a powerful summing up" for the State. State v. McDowell, 129 N.C. 523, 39 S.E. 840 (1901).

Failure to charge as to the degree of circumstantial proof required to convict is not error, the charge that jury should be satisfied from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt in order to justify conviction being sufficient on the degree of proof required. State v. Shoup, 226 N.C. 69, 36 S.E.2d 697 (1946).

Presumption of Good Character. — Where the character of a witness had not been impeached either by contradictory evidence or the manner of his cross-examination, it is presumed to be good, and the testimony of other witnesses thereto will be excluded; and where in a criminal action the case has been given to the jury, who return to court with a request for a further instruction as to whether a witness's character is considered good until proven bad in court, the judge's reply that it is presumed to be good until the contrary is shown, is free from error. State v. Pugh, 183 N.C. 800, 111 S.E. 849 (1922).

Payment of Detectives to Secure Evidence Against Defendant. — In the absence of a special request for instruction it is not reversible error under this section for the trial judge to have failed to instruct the jury that they should scrutinize the testimony of detectives who were paid to secure evidence to convict the defendant, the same being as to subordinate and not substantive features of the evidence in the case. State v. O'Neal, 187 N.C. 22, 120 S.E. 817 (1924).

Failure to Accede to Juror's Request for Review of Instructions Given Day Before. — See State v. Horn, 18 N.C. App. 377, 197 S.E.2d 274 (1973), aff'd, 285 N.C. 82, 203 S.E.2d 36, cert. denied, 419 U.S. 974, 95 S. Ct. 238, 42 L. Ed. 2d 188 (1974).

Inadvertent Misstatement Held Not Error. — The court did not commit reversible error when it inadvertently used the words "appreciable extent" rather than "appreciable impairment" when referring to the effect which the intoxicating liquors must have upon an individual to sustain a conviction for driving under the influence. State v. Payne, 19 N.C. App. 511, 199 S.E.2d 132 (1973).

When two or more defendants are jointly charged with a crime, a charge which can be construed to mean that the jury must convict all if it finds one guilty constitutes reversible error. State v. Mitchell, 20 N.C. App. 437, 201 S.E.2d 720 (1974).

Statement That Offense Charged Violated Certain Statute. — In prosecution charging resisting lawful arrest in violation of § 14-223, statement of the trial court during the instructions that "the offense charged here was committed in violation of § 14-223" was held to constitute an expression of opinion. State v. Cooper, 4 N.C. App. 210, 166 S.E.2d 509 (1969).

Charge as to How Jury Should Find If They Believe Certain Witness. — It is error for the judge to designate a single witness who is contradicted by other witnesses, and to instruct the jury that if they believe the testimony of such witness, then the prisoner is guilty. State v. Rogers, 93 N.C. 523 (1885).

Attributing Testimony of Another Witness to Defendant. — Where the trial judge attributed much of what a deputy sheriff testified that the defendant told him, as having been testified to by the defendant himself, the case of the State was strengthened to the prejudice of the defendant. State v. Butcher, 13 N.C. App. 97, 185 S.E.2d 11 (1971).

Burden of Rebutting Presumption So as to Reduce Charge. — Trial judge's charge to the jury in a prosecution for first-degree murder placing the burden on defendant to rebut the presumption of malice so as to reduce the charge from second-degree murder to manslaughter was not error where all the evidence revealed a cold-blooded killing done with malice and with premeditation and deliberation, and the jury returned a verdict of murder in the first degree never reaching the questions raised as to instructions relating to second-degree murder and manslaughter. State v. Taylor, 289 N.C. 223, 221 S.E.2d 359 (1976).

Instruction to Disregard Previous Inconsistent Instructions. — The action of the trial court in prefacing a special instruction with a charge that the jury should disregard previous instructions if and to the extent of inconsistency with the instructions about to be given, is not approved, but in the instant case it was held not prejudicial. State v. Jackson, 228 N.C. 656, 46 S.E.2d 858 (1948).

Judicial Notice. — In a prosecution for taking a deer between the hours of sunset and sunrise on a public highway by the use of artificial light, the trial court did not express an opinion that the State had proved the time of commission of the offense by its instruction that as a matter of law "a few minutes after seven o'clock on December 9 is after sunset," the instruction amounting to no more than judicial notice of a physical fact of general knowledge. State v. Link, 13 N.C. App. 568, 186 S.E.2d 634 (1972).

Defendant's Admission of Fact. — In a prosecution for first-degree rape, where the trial court instructed that defendant's admission that he was in the car with the rape victim could be considered by the jury as an admission of a fact relating to the crime charged, there was no merit to defendant's contention that such instruction could have led the jury to believe that his mere presence was sufficient for conviction and that he had therefore committed the crime, since the trial court's instructions made clear what the jury must find in order to convict defendant. State v. Hammonds, 301 N.C. 713, 272 S.E.2d 856 (1981).

Charge on Contention in Defendant's Confession. — In a prosecution for breaking and entering and larceny, the trial court did not express an opinion on the evidence in charging on defendant's contention as contained in his confession that he acted only as a watchman during perpetration of the crimes where the court immediately thereafter instructed the jury that defendant denied being at the scene of the crime and claimed that his confession was made under duress. State v. McIlwain, 18 N.C. App. 230, 196 S.E.2d 614, cert. denied, 283 N.C. 668, 197 S.E.2d 877 (1973).

Instruction on Evidence to Be Considered Where One Victim Unavailable. — In a prosecution of defendants for two armed robberies wherein one of the victims was unavailable to testify at the trial and the jury, after deliberating for some time, asked the court whether "we have to base the verdict on strictly the evidence we have heard due to the fact that one of the State's witnesses is not here," the trial court did not err in instructing the jury that it could consider only the evidence it heard from the witness stand and the exhibits. State v. Jones, 50 N.C. App. 560, 274 S.E.2d 401 (1981).

Defendants Charged with Identical Offenses. — Where the defendants were charged with identical offenses and where the evidence adduced at the consolidated trial was identical as to each defendant, it was not necessary for the trial judge to give wholly separate instructions as to each defendant in order to comply with this section. State v. Lockamy, 31 N.C. App. 713, 230 S.E.2d 565 (1976).

It was reasonable for the court to declare and explain the law arising from the evidence in the cases as to both defendants simultaneously. However, the trial judge must either give a separate final mandate as to each defendant or otherwise clearly instruct the jury that the guilt or innocence of one defendant is not dependent upon the guilt or innocence of a codefendant. State v. Lockamy, 31 N.C. App. 713, 230 S.E.2d 565 (1976).

Court May Not Assume That Any Necessary Fact Is Proved. — It is reversible error for the court to assume that any fact necessary to establish the guilt of the defendant has been proved, and thus, by its instructions, to relieve the jury of its obligation to consider that issue. State v. Butcher, 13 N.C. App. 97, 185 S.E.2d 11 (1971).

Assumption of Existence or Nonexistence of Material Fact. — The trial court in charging a jury may not give an instruction which assumes as true the existence or nonexistence of any material fact in issue. State v. Cuthrell, 235 N.C. 173, 69 S.E.2d 233 (1952).

An instruction that there was evidence that defendant admitted some of the facts related to the crime was an assumption by the judge of a material fact which was not in evidence. It constituted an expression of opinion that a fact had been proven. State v. Clanton, 20 N.C. App. 275, 201 S.E.2d 365 (1973).

Assumption of Unproven Fact. — In homicide prosecution, instruction which assumed that defendant fired the fatal shot is erroneous as an expression of opinion by the trial court, since defendant's admission that he shot at the deceased and his stipulation that the cause of death resulted from gunshot wounds of the chest do not constitute an admission by defendant that he fired the fatal shot. State v. Hardee, 3 N.C. App. 426, 165 S.E.2d 43 (1969).

Eligibility for Parole Is Not Proper Consideration. — The long-standing rule in this jurisdiction is that a defendant's eligibility for parole is not a proper matter for consideration by a jury. A defendant's requested instruction concerning the eligibility for parole, although a correct statement of the law, was not appropriate information for the jury to consider in its deliberations. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

Reasonableness of Detention of Homicide Victim. — Defendant was entitled to requested instruction concerning the reasonableness of his armed detention of homicide victim only if there was evidence that: (1) defendant had probable cause to believe that one or more of the crimes enumerated in § 15A-404(b) had been committed; (2) defendant was trying to "detain" the offender until the police arrived; and (3) the manner of detention was reasonable under the circumstances. State v. Ataei-Kachuei, 68 N.C. App. 209, 314 S.E.2d 751, cert. denied, 311 N.C. 763, 321 S.E.2d 146 (1984).

Instruction That Defendant Was "Scared and Confused" Held Not Required. — Taking the victim's car "while scared and confused" in order to escape the scene of a murder does not mean that defendant would not be guilty of armed robbery. The trial court would not err in failing to so instruct the jury. This evidence is not necessarily exculpatory, even if it is believed. State v. Webb, 309 N.C. 549, 308 S.E.2d 252 (1983).

H. Objections to Instructions.

Exception Must Be Specific. — An exception to the charge on the ground that it failed to explain and apply the law to the evidence as required by this section may be disregarded as a broadside exception. State v. Webster, 218 N.C. 692, 12 S.E.2d 272 (1940).

An alleged error in the charge of the court to the jury must be specified, both as to alleged error in the charge actually given and as to an alleged failure to give an instruction required by the law. State v. Coffey, 289 N.C. 431, 222 S.E.2d 217 (1976).

An assignment of error to the charge on the ground that it failed to explain and apply the law to the evidence as required by statute is a broadside exception and ineffectual, it being required that the assignment of error set forth the part of the charge challenged and point out specifically the error complained of. State v. Black, 14 N.C. App. 373, 188 S.E.2d 634, appeal dismissed, 281 N.C. 624, 190 S.E.2d 467 (1972).

An exception, for failure to charge the jury as required by this section, must be taken in the same manner as any other exception to the charge, and an assignment of error based thereon must particularize and point out specifically wherein the court failed to charge the law arising on the evidence — otherwise it becomes a mere broadside and will not be considered unless pointed out in some other exception. State v. Britt, 225 N.C. 364, 34 S.E.2d 408 (1945).

And Based on Proper Assignment of Error. — An exception for the failure of the court to comply with the provisions of this section must be based upon a proper assignment of error on this ground. State v. Muse, 230 N.C. 495, 53 S.E.2d 529 (1949).

Supreme Court will not go "on a voyage of discovery" to ascertain wherein the judge failed to explain adequately the law in the case. State v. Woolard, 260 N.C. 133, 132 S.E.2d 364 (1963).

Broadside Exception Untenable. — An exception that the court "did not charge the jury as to the law on every substantial feature of the case embraced within the issues and arising on the evidence" is untenable as a broadside exception. State v. Triplett, 237 N.C. 604, 75 S.E.2d 517 (1953).

Assignment of error that the judge failed to explain and apply or correlate the law and statutes to the different phases of the evidence as provided in this section is too general and indefinite to present any question for decision. Unpointed, broadside exceptions will not be considered. State v. Woolard, 260 N.C. 133, 132 S.E.2d 364 (1963).

An argument in an appellate brief that the court failed to charge as to the contentions of the defendant in accordance with the statute is a broadside exception which is not sufficient. State v. McCaskill, 270 N.C. 788, 154 S.E.2d 907 (1967).

An exception to the entire charge of the court is a broadside exception and presents no question for review upon appeal. State v. Jackson, 6 N.C. App. 406, 170 S.E.2d 137 (1969).

An assignment of error to the court's failure to charge the law and explain the evidence as required by statute is a broadside exception and will not be considered. Panhorst v. Panhorst, 9 N.C. App. 258, 175 S.E.2d 609 (1970), rev'd on other grounds, 277 N.C. 664, 178 S.E.2d 387 (1971); State v. Benton, 299 N.C. 16, 260 S.E.2d 917 (1980).

Broadside exception to the charge will not be considered, but appellant must point out wherein the charge failed to comply with the provisions of this section. State v. Sutton, 230 N.C. 244, 52 S.E.2d 921 (1949).

Where the error assigned is that "the court erred in failing to declare and explain the law arising on the evidence given in the case," and that in so failing the court violated this section, such an assignment of error is a broadside exception and will not be considered on appeal. State v. Rigsbee, 15 N.C. App. 218, 189 S.E.2d 583 (1972).

Objections Must Be Timely. — The general rule is that objections to the charge in stating the contentions of the parties or in recapitulating the evidence must be called to the court's attention in apt time to afford opportunity for correction, in order that an exception thereto will be considered on appeal. State v. Weaver, 3 N.C. App. 439, 165 S.E.2d 15 (1969).

A slight inaccuracy in stating the evidence will not be held reversible error when the matter is not called to the court's attention in apt time to afford opportunity for correction. State v. Mull, 24 N.C. App. 502, 211 S.E.2d 515 (1975); State v. Brandon, 24 N.C. App. 558, 211 S.E.2d 496 (1975).

An inadvertence in recapitulating the evidence must be called to the trial court's attention in time for correction and will not be held reversible error when this is not done. State v. Watson, 287 N.C. 147, 214 S.E.2d 85 (1975).

An inadvertence in stating the contentions of the parties or in recapitulating the evidence must be called to the trial court's attention in time for correction. State v. Brandon, 24 N.C. App. 558, 211 S.E.2d 496 (1975).

But instruction containing statement of material fact not shown in evidence must be held prejudicial, even though not called to the court's attention at the time. State v. Mull, 24 N.C. App. 502, 211 S.E.2d 515 (1975).

While ordinarily error in stating contentions of the parties must be brought to the trial court's attention in time to afford opportunity for correction, where the misstatement of a contention upon a material point includes an assumption of evidence entirely unsupported by the record, the misstatement must be held prejudicial, notwithstanding the absence of timely objection. State v. Stroud, 10 N.C. App. 30, 177 S.E.2d 912 (1970).

Errors Should Be Pointed Out at Trial. — Any error or omission in the statement of the evidence by court must be called to the attention of the court at the trial to avail the defendant any relief on his appeal. State v. Thompson, 226 N.C. 651, 39 S.E.2d 823 (1946); State v. Brower, 289 N.C. 644, 224 S.E.2d 551 (1976), reconsideration denied, 293 N.C. 259, 243 S.E.2d 143 (1978).

Objections to the statement of contentions should be brought to the trial judge's attention in order that a misstatement can be corrected by the trial judge before verdict; otherwise they are deemed to have been waived. State v. Wilson, 1 N.C. App. 250, 161 S.E.2d 159 (1968).

Any error or omission by the court in its review of the evidence in the charge to the jury must be then called to the attention of the court so that the court may have an opportunity to make the appropriate correction. State v. McClain, 282 N.C. 396, 193 S.E.2d 113 (1972).

Objections to Be Made Before Jury Retires. — The general rule in this State is that objections to the charge in reviewing the evidence and stating the contentions of the parties must be made before the jury retires to afford the trial judge an opportunity for correction; otherwise they are deemed to have been waived and will not be considered on appeal. State v. Gaines, 283 N.C. 33, 194 S.E.2d 839 (1973); State v. Greer, 18 N.C. App. 655, 197 S.E.2d 601

(1973); State v. West, 21 N.C. App. 58, 203 S.E.2d 86, cert. denied, 285 N.C. 376, 205 S.E.2d 101 (1974); State v. Sanders, 288 N.C. 285, 218 S.E.2d 352 (1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 1091, 96 S. Ct. 886, 47 L. Ed. 2d 102 (1976); State v. Hunt, 289 N.C. 403, 222 S.E.2d 234, death sentence vacated, 429 U.S. 809, 97 S. Ct. 46, 50 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1976); State v. Tolley, 30 N.C. App. 213, 226 S.E.2d 672, cert. denied, 291 N.C. 178, 229 S.E.2d 691 (1976); State v. Flannery, 31 N.C. App. 617, 230 S.E.2d 603 (1976); State v. Womble, 292 N.C. 455, 233 S.E.2d 534 (1977); State v. Hewett, 295 N.C. 640, 247 S.E.2d 886 (1978); State v. Smith, 50 N.C. App. 188, 272 S.E.2d 621 (1980).

Objections to the trial court's review of the evidence must be made before the jury retires in order that the trial court may have an opportunity for correction. State v. Mills, 39 N.C. App. 47, 249 S.E.2d 446 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 588, 254 S.E.2d 33 (1979).

When counsel is unsatisfied with the summary of the evidence or contentions of the parties, in order to preserve the error, he must bring this to the court's attention before the jury is sent to deliberate on the issues. This affords the trial court the opportunity to correct any misstatements or to expand on its summary when this is deemed necessary. State v. Robinson, 40 N.C. App. 514, 253 S.E.2d 311 (1979).

Exception After Verdict Comes Too Late. — The appellant must at the time call the attention of the trial judge to errors he is alleged to have committed in stating the contentions of the parties to the jury, when he has not done so, as an exception after verdict comes too late to be considered on appeal. State v. Beavers, 188 N.C. 595, 125 S.E. 258 (1924); State v. Harvey, 214 N.C. 9, 197 S.E. 620 (1938); State v. Bowser, 214 N.C. 249, 199 S.E. 31 (1938).

Objections Will Not Be Considered for First Time on Appeal. — Where defendant did not object to the court's statement of the State's contentions at the time they were given, objections thereto will not be considered for the first time on appeal. State v. King, 6 N.C. App. 702, 171 S.E.2d 33 (1969).

But Impermissible Comment May Be So Challenged. — Where the court impermissibly expresses an opinion in stating the contentions of the parties, the question may be considered for the first time on appeal. State v. Covington, 48 N.C. App. 209, 268 S.E.2d 231 (1980).

Waiver of Objections. — Generally objections to statements of the contentions of the parties not made at the time of trial so as to permit the court to correct them are deemed waived. State v. Covington, 48 N.C. App. 209, 268 S.E.2d 231 (1980).

If objections to the review of the evidence are not timely made, they are deemed to have been waived and will not be considered on appeal. State v. Mills, 39 N.C. App. 47, 249 S.E.2d 446 (1978), cert. denied, 296 N.C. 588, 254 S.E.2d 33 (1979).

Defendant waived any objection to the manner or length of the judge's statements of the contentions of either side by failing to make an appropriate challenge at trial before the jury retired. State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982).

Exception Held Insufficient to Present Question for Review. — An exception for failure of the court to charge upon the question of manslaughter, without exception to any portion of the charge or exception under this section, on the ground that the court failed to explain the law arising on the evidence and pointing out wherein the court failed to comply with this section does not properly present the question for review. State v. Brooks, 228 N.C. 68, 44 S.E.2d 482 (1947).

I. Error in Instructions.

Considerations Before Appellate Court. — In deciding whether the court's instructions forced a verdict or merely served as a catalyst for further deliberation, an appellate court must consider the circumstances under which the instructions were made and the probable impact of the instructions on the jury. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Must Be Assigned as Error for Consideration on Appeal. — Where there is no assignment of error in the record for failure of the court to state the evidence and declare and explain the law arising thereon, exceptions on this ground will not be considered on appeal. State v. Spivey, 230 N.C. 375, 53 S.E.2d 259 (1949); State v. Thomas, 244 N.C. 212, 93 S.E.2d 63 (1956), overruled on other grounds, State v. Barnes, 324 N.C. 539, 380 S.E.2d 118 (1989).

An assignment of error to a charge should state wherein the charge fails to comply with this section. State v. Jones, 227 N.C. 402, 42 S.E.2d 465 (1947).

Failure to instruct upon a substantive or "material" feature of the evidence and the law applicable thereto will result in reversible error, even in the absence of a request for such an instruction. State v. Ward, 300 N.C. 150, 266 S.E.2d 581 (1980).

Failure of the court to correctly instruct the jury on substantial features of case arising on the evidence was error for which defendant is entitled to a new trial. State v. Watson, 80 N.C. App. 103, 341 S.E.2d 366 (1986).

Trial judge must charge the essential elements of the offense and that when he undertakes to define the law, he must state it correctly. If he does not, it is prejudicial error sufficient to warrant a new trial. State v. Earnhardt, 307 N.C. 62, 296 S.E.2d 649 (1982).

Presumption That Court Correctly Instructed Jury. — When the judge's charge is not shown in the record of case on appeal, it will be presumed that the court correctly instructed the jury on every principle of law applicable to the facts in evidence. State v. Sears, 235 N.C. 623, 70 S.E.2d 907 (1952); State v. Faison, 246 N.C. 121, 97 S.E.2d 447 (1957).

Upon review by certiorari of the denial of defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground that he was denied due process of law in the trial resulting in his conviction, it will be presumed that the trial court correctly instructed the jury as to the facts of the case, in the absence of suggestion to the contrary. State v. Hedgebeth, 228 N.C. 259, 45 S.E.2d 563 (1947), cert. dismissed, 334 U.S. 806, 68 S. Ct. 1185, 92 L. Ed. 1739 (1948).

Where the charge of the court to the jury does not appear in the record, it will be presumed that the court correctly charged the jury as to the law arising upon the evidence as required by this section. State v. Strickland, 254 N.C. 658, 119 S.E.2d 781 (1961); State v. Hedrick, 289 N.C. 232, 221 S.E.2d 350 (1976).

When the charge is not included in a case on appeal, it is presumed to be free from error and also it is presumed that the jury was properly instructed as to the law arising upon the evidence. State v. Murphy, 280 N.C. 1, 184 S.E.2d 845 (1971).

Cure of Error in Instruction. — Any error in the instruction excepted to as an expression of the court's opinion on the facts was completely cured by the instruction which followed, that the court had no opinion. State v. Hutson, 10 N.C. App. 653, 179 S.E.2d 858 (1971).

Erroneous Instruction Not Cured by Correct Instruction. — An error in giving an erroneous instruction is not cured by subsequently correctly stating the law. State v. Morgan, 136 N.C. 628, 48 S.E. 670 (1904).

And New Trial Is Necessary. — Where the court charges correctly at one point and incorrectly at another, a new trial is necessary because the jury may have acted upon the incorrect part, particularly when the incorrect portion of the charge is the application of the law to the facts. State v. Harris, 289 N.C. 275, 221 S.E.2d 343 (1976).

When the court charges correctly at one point and incorrectly at another, a new trial is necessary because the jury may have acted upon the incorrect part. State v. Cousins, 289 N.C. 540, 223 S.E.2d 338 (1976).

Harmless Error. — Although the language used in an instruction was a poor choice for the purpose intended and was expressly disapproved and would ordinarily require a new trial, it did not constitute reversible error because it had no prejudicial effect on the result of the trial and was therefore harmless. State v. Bailey, 280 N.C. 264, 185 S.E.2d 683, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 948, 93 S. Ct. 293, 34 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1972).

Insubstantial technical errors in the charge which could not have affected the result will not be held prejudicial. State v. McWilliams, 277 N.C. 680, 178 S.E.2d 476 (1971); State v. Tilley, 292 N.C. 132, 232 S.E.2d 433 (1977).

Error Not Reversible Where Issues Simple. — Instructions to the jury should be addressed to specific issues, but, where the issues are simple, and they do not appear to have misled the jury, the error in this respect will not be held as reversible. Craig v. Stewart, 163 N.C. 531, 79 S.E. 1100 (1913).

Defendant Cannot Complain of Favorable Error in Instruction. — Where, in a murder case, an instruction on self-defense did not require defendant to show that he was not the aggressor and did not use excessive force in order to be acquitted upon his plea of self-defense, this was error favorable to the defendant of which he cannot complain. State v. Jackson, 284 N.C. 383, 200 S.E.2d 596 (1973), reconsideration denied, 293 N.C. 260, 247 S.E.2d 234 (1977).

The failure of the court to comply with this section will not be sufficient ground for a new trial, where the case on appeal shows that the charge of the court presented the case in the most favorable light for the defendant. State v. Pritchett, 106 N.C. 667, 11 S.E. 357 (1890).

Error as to One Count Cured by Verdict as to Another. — Where there were several counts of an indictment, and the charge was correct upon those on which a conviction was had, the verdict cured the error committed in not giving the principles of law arising from the evidence upon the count under which the appealing defendant was acquitted. State v. Church, 192 N.C. 658, 135 S.E. 769 (1926).

An erroneous instruction on the burden of proof is not ordinarily corrected by subsequent correct instructions upon the point. State v. Harris, 289 N.C. 275, 221 S.E.2d 343 (1976).

New Trial for Opinion Expressed in Stating Testimony and Contention. — Where in recapitulating the testimony and, more grievously, in stating what was said to be the State's contentions, the judge violated the prohibition against expressing an opinion on the evidence and merits of the case, such expressions of opinion entitle the defendant to a new trial. State v. Hall, 11 N.C. App. 410, 181 S.E.2d 240 (1971).

§ 15A-1233. Review of testimony; use of evidence by the jury.

(a) If the jury after retiring for deliberation requests a review of certain testimony or other evidence, the jurors must be conducted to the courtroom. The judge in his discretion, after notice to the prosecutor and defendant, may direct that requested parts of the testimony be read to the jury and may permit the jury to reexamine in open court the requested materials admitted into evidence. In his discretion the judge may also have the jury review other evidence relating to the same factual issue so as not to give undue prominence to the evidence requested.

(b) Upon request by the jury and with consent of all parties, the judge may in his discretion permit the jury to take to the jury room exhibits and writings which have been received in evidence. If the judge permits the jury to take to the jury room requested exhibits and writings, he may have the jury take additional material or first review other evidence relating to the same issue so as not to give undue prominence to the exhibits or writings taken to the jury room. If the judge permits an exhibit to be taken to the jury room, he must, upon request, instruct the jury not to conduct any experiments with the exhibit. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsection (a) is based upon A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury § 5.2. Subsection (b) is a substantial modification of material covered by A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury § 5.1.

CASE NOTES

This statute imposes two duties upon the trial court when it receives a request from the jury to review the evidence. First, the court must conduct all jurors to the courtroom. Second, the trial court must exercise its discretion in determining whether to permit requested evidence to be read to or examined by the jury together with other evidence relating to the same factual issue. State v. Ashe, 314 N.C. 28, 331 S.E.2d 652 (1985).

This section mandates that the judge fulfill two duties: First, that all the jurors be returned to the courtroom and, second, that the judge exercise discretion in ruling upon the request. State v. Helms, 93 N.C. App. 394, 378 S.E.2d 237 (1989).

This statute imposes two duties upon the trial court when it receives a request from the jury to review evidence. First, the trial court must have all jurors present in the courtroom. Second, the trial court must exercise its discretion in determining whether to permit the requested evidence to be read to the jury. State v. Weddington, 329 N.C. 202, 404 S.E.2d 671 (1991).

Exercise of Discretion by Trial Court. — The decision to grant or deny a jury request for a review of evidence is committed to the discretion of the trial court; the trial court errs where it does not exercise its discretion in determining whether the jury should be allowed to review the evidence introduced at trial. State v. Porter, 340 N.C. 320, 457 S.E.2d 716 (1995).

Failure to Conduct Jurors to Courtroom. — Defendant in capital murder case failed to meet his burden of showing prejudice as a result of the trial court's failure to conduct jurors to the courtroom as required by this section. State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

Where the trial court plainly exercised its discretion in denying jury's request to review testimony, and did not rely solely on the fact that the transcript was not readily available, defendant's assignment of error to such refusal was without merit. State v. Fullwood, 343 N.C. 725, 472 S.E.2d 883 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1122, 117 S. Ct. 1260, 137 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1997).

It is a well established rule in North Carolina that the decision whether to grant or refuse a request by the jury for a restatement of the evidence after jury deliberations have begun lies within the discretion of the trial court. State v. Van Johnson, 346 N.C. 119, 484 S.E.2d 372 (1997).

This section authorizes a judge to allow the jury to take into the jury room exhibits and writings which have been admitted into evidence only when the jury so requests and all parties give their consent. State v. Wagner, 343 N.C. 250, 470 S.E.2d 33 (1996).

All Jurors to Be in Courtroom for Request to Review Testimony. — Both N.C. Const., Art. I, § 24 and subsection (a) require the trial court to summon all jurors into the courtroom before hearing and addressing a jury request to review testimony and to exercise its discretion in denying or granting the request. Failure of the trial court to comply with these statutory mandates entitles defendant to press these points on appeal, notwithstanding a failure to object at trial. State v. Ashe, 314 N.C. 28, 331 S.E.2d 652 (1985).

While the statute does not expressly say that the trial judge must have the jurors conducted to the courtroom, the legislature intended to place this responsibility on the judge presiding at the trial. State v. Ashe, 314 N.C. 28, 331 S.E.2d 652 (1985).

The statute means that all jurors must be present not only when the request is made, but also when the trial court responds to the request, whatever that response might be. State v. Ashe, 314 N.C. 28, 331 S.E.2d 652 (1985).

For the trial court to hear the jury foreman's inquiry and to respond to it without first requiring the presence of all jurors was an error in violation of this section. State v. Ashe, 314 N.C. 28, 331 S.E.2d 652 (1985).

No Consent Required for Courtroom Examination. — If the judge simply lets the jury examine requested evidence in open court, but does not allow the jury to take it into the jury room, there is no necessity for obtaining the consent of the parties. State v. Lee, 128 N.C. App. 506, 495 S.E.2d 373 (1998), cert. denied, 348 N.C. 76, 505 S.E.2d 883 (1998), appeal dismissed, 348 N.C. 76, 505 S.E.2d 883 (1998).

Trial judge has sole discretion to decide matter of whether to grant jury's request for restatement of evidence. State v. Burgin, 313 N.C. 404, 329 S.E.2d 653 (1985).

Instructions, as read in their entirety, that the jury, all 12 members, was to use their own memories, was not an abuse of the trial judge's discretion. State v. Burgin, 313 N.C. 404, 329 S.E.2d 653 (1985).

It is a well established rule in North Carolina that the decision whether to grant or refuse a request by the jury for a restatement of the evidence after jury deliberations have begun lies within the discretion of the trial court. State v. Van Johnson, 346 N.C. 119, 484 S.E.2d 372 (1997).

The statutory requirement of subsection (a) that the trial court exercise its discretion is a codification of the common-law rule. State v. Van Johnson, 346 N.C. 119, 484 S.E.2d 372 (1997).

When no reason is assigned by the court for a ruling which may be made as a matter of discretion, the presumption on appeal is that the court made the ruling in the exercise of its discretion; however, where the statements of the trial court show that the trial court did not exercise discretion, the presumption was overcome, and the denial was deemed erroneous. State v. Van Johnson, 346 N.C. 119, 484 S.E.2d 372 (1997).

When the trial court states for the record that, in its discretion, it is allowing or denying a jury's request to review testimony, it is presumed that it does so in accordance with this section. In addition, the trial court must instruct the jury that it must remember and consider the rest of the evidence. State v. Weddington, 329 N.C. 202, 404 S.E.2d 671 (1991).

Defendant waived his right to assert, on appeal, the judge's failure to bring the jury to the courtroom, where defendant's lawyer went beyond simply failing to enter an objection and consented to communication procedure. State v. Helms, 93 N.C. App. 394, 378 S.E.2d 237 (1989).

Subsection (b) Inapplicable to Jury Instructions. — Subsection (b) of this section applies to exhibits and writings received as evidence, not jury instructions. State v. Bass, 53 N.C. App. 40, 280 S.E.2d 7 (1981).

Response to Jury by Message Sent Through Bailiff. — Trial judge's response to jury's request to review certain testimony by sending a message to the jury through the bailiff rather than by addressing the jury as a whole in open court, though erroneous, was not prejudicial to defendant. State v. McLaughlin, 320 N.C. 564, 359 S.E.2d 768 (1987).

Reading and Reexamining Requested Material. — Under this section the trial judge, in his discretion, may, after notice to the prosecutor and defendant, direct that requested parts of the testimony be read to the jury and may permit the jury to reexamine in open court the requested materials admitted into evidence. State v. Lewis, 321 N.C. 42, 361 S.E.2d 728 (1987).

Where jury inquired about reviewing both prior testimony and exhibits, and the trial judge, after conferring with the prosecutor and defense attorney, denied the former and allowed the latter, and further reminded the jurors of his earlier charge to them to depend upon their individual and collective recollection of the evidence rather than any recapitulation of the evidence by the judge or the attorneys, the trial court properly exercised its discretion in accordance with this section. State v. Lewis, 321 N.C. 42, 361 S.E.2d 728 (1987).

Whether to allow a jury's request that previously admitted testimony be read to it lies solely within the discretion of the trial court. State v. Weddington, 329 N.C. 202, 404 S.E.2d 671 (1991).

Where jury foreman asked to review the transcript in general, the trial court exercised its discretion and complied with the requirements of this section, when the court explained it would not be fair to give the jury only portions of the testimony taken out of context of the whole trial, and instructed the jury to rely upon their individual recollections to arrive at a verdict. State v. Corbett, 339 N.C. 313, 451 S.E.2d 252 (1994).

Instruction That Jury Must Remember and Consider Rest of Evidence. — Where, after the jury in this case began deliberations, it submitted a question to the judge regarding rape victim's testimony about a conversation between defendant and her friends, the trial judge located the relevant portion of her testimony and had the court reporter read it to the jury, and immediately after the court reporter read rape victim's testimony, the trial judge instructed the jury that they "must consider and deliberate on all of the evidence and remember what the rest of the evidence was concerning that conversation," based on these instructions, the trial judge properly exercised his discretion in having the requested testimony read to the jury. State v. Watkins, 89 N.C. App. 599, 366 S.E.2d 876, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 129, 373 S.E.2d 123 (1988).

Materials Not Received in Evidence. — This section does not grant the trial judge authority to permit the jury to take exhibits or other materials which have not been received in evidence to the jury room under any circumstances. State v. Grogan, 40 N.C. App. 371, 253 S.E.2d 20 (1979).

The trial judge has no authority to permit the jury to take exhibits or other materials to the jury room that have not been received into evidence. State v. Parker, 61 N.C. App. 94, 300 S.E.2d 451 (1983).

Where the jury's question related to a point for which no direct evidence had been introduced, the trial court could not exercise its discretion as to whether to allow the jury to review evidence on that point. State v. Porter, 340 N.C. 320, 457 S.E.2d 716 (1995).

It is error to allow the jury to take evidence into the jury room over a party's objection. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

By denying the jury's request to hear the testimony of both defendants and prosecution witnesses, and by allowing the jury to take witnesses' written statements, which directly implicated defendant, into the jury room over defendant's objection, there existed a reasonable possibility and a reasonable assumption that the jury may have inadvertently given more weight to witnesses' statements; the trial court's submission of the statements to the jury to take to the jury room over defendant's objection rose to a level of error sufficiently prejudicial to entitle defendant to a new trial. State v. Poe, 119 N.C. App. 266, 458 S.E.2d 242 (1995).

The consent of all parties is required before the jury may take evidence to the jury room. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

The trial court erred in delivering exhibits requested by the jury to the jury without bringing the jury into the courtroom and informing the defendant of the jury's request. State v. Bartlett, 130 N.C. App. 79, 502 S.E.2d 53 (1998).

Defendant must consent to request of jury to reexamine statements admitted into evidence only when the jury is allowed to take writings or exhibits to the jury room. State v. Barnett, 307 N.C. 608, 300 S.E.2d 340 (1983).

Upon the jury's request for defendant's statement, the trial court permitted the document to be taken into the jury room over defendant's objection. To do so was error. State v. Flowe, 107 N.C. App. 468, 420 S.E.2d 475, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 669, 424 S.E.2d 412 (1992).

Failure to Obtain Party's Consent Was Not Prejudicial. — Although the trial court did not obtain the consent of all of the parties in allowing prosecution witnesses' statement to go to the jury to take to the jury room, defendant was not prejudiced by this error; not only did defendant not object to the jury's request at trial, but witnesses' statement made no reference whatsoever to defendant. State v. Poe, 119 N.C. App. 266, 458 S.E.2d 242 (1995).

Trial court erred by allowing the jury to view photographs in the jury room without first obtaining the consent of all parties; however, reversal was not required since defendant was not prejudiced. State v. Thomas, 132 N.C. App. 515, 512 S.E.2d 436 (1999).

Refusal to Allow Jury to See Exhibit Held Not Prejudicial. — The trial court erred in refusing to accede to the jury's request to see an exhibit, and the court misstated the law when it informed the jury that it could only view exhibits during the trial while sitting together in the jury box. However, no prejudice was found by the error where the transcript showed that the jury did not unequivocally demand to see the particular exhibit. See State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to allow the jury to review trial testimony as requested by the defendant, when the testimony taken as a whole supported the State's version of the events at issue, and the evidence and exhibits reviewed by the jury were not inconsistent with the testimony not reviewed by the jury. State v. Cannon, 341 N.C. 79, 459 S.E.2d 238 (1995).

All elements of a trial should be viewed and heard simultaneously by all 12 jurors; to allow a jury foreman, another individual juror, or anyone else to communicate privately with the trial court regarding matters material to the case and then to relay the court's response to the full jury is inconsistent with this policy. The danger presented is that the person, even the jury foreman, having alone made the request of the court and heard the court's response firsthand, may through misunderstanding, inadvertent editorialization, or an intentional misrepresentation, inaccurately relay the jury's request or the court's response, or both, to the defendant's detriment. State v. Tucker, 91 N.C. App. 511, 372 S.E.2d 328 (1988).

Judge's Communication to Jury by Way of Written Notes. — Judge's communication with jury in the jury room via written notes violated the requirements of subsection (a) of this section; however, where the judge communicated with all jurors, since his notes were delivered to the jury as a whole, there was no violation of the North Carolina Constitution, and defendant failed to show other prejudice. State v. Colvin, 92 N.C. App. 152, 374 S.E.2d 126 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 249, 377 S.E.2d 758 (1989).

Refusal to Submit Statement from Which Portion Excised. — Defendant was not prejudiced by the court's refusal to submit his statement to the jury, where a portion of the statement had been deleted and the court felt that submitting the statement without the excised portion would positively prejudice one side or the other. State v. Bell, 48 N.C. App. 356, 269 S.E.2d 201, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 528, 273 S.E.2d 455 (1980).

Effect of Failure to Object. — The defendant waived objection to the action of the trial court in permitting the jury to take into the jury room an item which had been introduced into evidence by failing to enter an objection or otherwise indicate his lack of consent at the trial. State v. Byrd, 50 N.C. App. 736, 275 S.E.2d 522, cert. denied, 303 N.C. 316, 281 S.E.2d 654 (1981).

Under this section, a failure by the defendant to object to the jury's request, and the judge's permission, to take photographic exhibits into the jury room constitutes consent by implication. State v. Rogers, 52 N.C. App. 676, 279 S.E.2d 881 (1981).

Standard of Review on Appeal. — Violations of subsection (b) of this section, in allowing exhibits to go into the jury room over defendant's objection, are corrected by the appellate division only when they prejudice the defendants and such prejudice obtains only when there is a reasonable possibility that, had the error in question not been committed, a different result would have been reached at the trial out of which the appeal arises; the burden of showing such prejudice is upon the defendant. State v. Taylor, 56 N.C. App. 113, 287 S.E.2d 129 (1982); State v. Green, 77 N.C. App. 429, 335 S.E.2d 176 (1985).

Burden on Defendant to Show Abuse of Discretion. — Fact that the trial court granted the jury's request that the testimony of a State's witness be read does not in and of itself constitute prejudicial error. The defendant must show that the trial court abused its discretion. To make the showing, the defendant must demonstrate that the trial court's action was so arbitrary that it could not have been the result of a reasoned decision. State v. Weddington, 329 N.C. 202, 404 S.E.2d 671 (1991).

Exercise of Discretion in Denying Jury's Request. — Defendant's argument that the trial judge failed to exercise his discretion in denying the jury's request for portions of the transcript was without merit, where the transcript revealed that three times the trial judge stated that he was denying the request in the exercise of his discretion, and he even referred to the appropriate statute. State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988).

The trial judge did not impermissibly deny the jury's request based solely on the unavailability of the transcript but plainly exercised his discretion. Moreover, the defendant acquiesced in the instruction and, therefore, could not complain that he was prejudiced by the court's action. State v. Lawrence, 352 N.C. 1, 530 S.E.2d 807 (2000).

Court Not Exercising Discretion Entitled Defendant to New Trial. — The trial court's errors in not exercising its discretion in determining whether to permit the jury to review some of the evidence and in hearing the foreman's request and responding to it in the absence of the remaining jurors, entitled defendant to a new trial. State v. Ashe, 314 N.C. 28, 331 S.E.2d 652 (1985).

The trial court erred in not exercising its discretion in denying the request to review testimony, where he said, "There is no transcript at this point. You and the other jurors will have to take your recollection of the evidence. . . ." State v. Ashe, 314 N.C. 28, 331 S.E.2d 652 (1985).

Where the trial judge did not exercise his discretion in denying the jury's request to rehear testimony of the only witness to identify defendant as the perpetrator, but denied the request because he felt that he could not grant it, the trial court's failure to exercise its discretion constituted reversible error. State v. Thompkins, 83 N.C. App. 42, 348 S.E.2d 605 (1986).

No Abuse of Discretion Found. — Where the trial court explained that to allow the jurors' request to review certain evidence might give undue importance to the portions of the evidence reviewed without giving equal importance to the other evidence in the case and cautioned the jurors that it was their duty to recall and consider all of the evidence, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the jurors' request in part; the transcript made it apparent that the trial court considered the court reporter's absence a factor in its decision. State v. Perez, 135 N.C. App. 543, 522 S.E.2d 102 (1999).

Failure to Exercise Discretion Held Not Prejudicial Error. — Although judge may have failed to exercise his discretion in denying jury's request to have portions of transcript read to it, the error was not prejudicial. The testimony requested by the jury was not significant to defendant's defense; this testimony related to events occurring after defendant fired murder weapon, and thus this requested testimony, unlike alibi testimony, would not have exonerated defendant and was not critical to the jury's determination of defendant's guilt. State v. Hanible, 94 N.C. App. 204, 379 S.E.2d 696, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 548, 385 S.E.2d 505 (1989).

Failure to Exercise Discretion Held Prejudicial Error. — The trial court's statement that it did not have the ability to present the transcript to the jury indicated a failure to exercise discretion and resulted in prejudicial error. State v. Barrow, 350 N.C. 640, 517 S.E.2d 374 (1999).

Error in Permitting Jury to Take Exhibit to Jury Room Not Prejudicial. — Statement which had been admitted but not read into evidence, which did not contradict the trial testimony on critical points, did not prejudice defendant, although it was error to permit jury to take it to the jury room. State v. Cannon, 341 N.C. 79, 459 S.E.2d 238 (1995).

Defendant did not show a reasonable possibility that had the jury not been allowed to review photographs of the deceased in the jury room, a different result would have been reached, where the photographs had been previously admitted and shown to the jury to illustrate the testimony of witnesses, and the trial court had the discretion to permit the jury to reexamine the pictures closely and at length in the courtroom. State v. Cannon, 341 N.C. 79, 459 S.E.2d 238 (1995).

Even if it was error to allow the jury to take an exhibit into the jury room without the defendant giving his consent, the error was harmless where the exhibit consisted of the capital murder defendant's statement to the police, which already had been admitted into evidence, read to the jury in its entirety, and published individually to jurors as the State's rebuttal evidence. State v. Locklear, 349 N.C. 118, 505 S.E.2d 277 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1075, 119 S. Ct. 1475, 143 L. Ed. 2d 559 (1999).

New Trial Not Warranted Where Error Could Not Change Outcome. — The trial court erred in permitting the jury to take written statements of defendant and two witnesses into the jury room during its deliberations without defendant's consent, but such error was not sufficiently prejudicial to warrant a new trial where it does not appear that the error could have changed the outcome of the trial. State v. Bell, 48 N.C. App. 356, 269 S.E.2d 201, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 528, 273 S.E.2d 455 (1980).

Admission of Implicating Statement Held to Be Error. — The court erred in allowing witness' statement, which was inadmissible and which directly implicated defendant, to go into the jury room over defendant's objection and this error was sufficiently prejudicial to warrant a new trial for defendant on all charges. State v. Platt, 85 N.C. App. 220, 354 S.E.2d 332, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 516, 358 S.E.2d 529 (1987).

Denial of Jury's Request Held Error. — Where a note the jury sent to the trial judge during deliberations asked, "May the jurors please be permitted to hear victim's testimony again?," and underneath this question were the words, "NO, That is not possible. Judge Saunders," the judge committed reversible error by failing to exercise discretion when he denied the jury's request and by failing to return the jury to the courtroom to receive and respond to their inquiry. State v. Helms, 93 N.C. App. 394, 378 S.E.2d 237 (1989).

Denial of Jury's Request Held Not Error. — The trial court did not err in refusing to grant the jury's request to "review" the testimony of the State's firearm and tool mark identification expert; the court indicated that it was denying the request because it did not want to give undue emphasis to the testimony of any particular witness. State v. Eason, 328 N.C. 409, 402 S.E.2d 809 (1991).

Refusal to Allow Testimony to Be Read Back Held Error. — Where the trial judge refused the jury's request to have the transcript of one of the defendant's witnesses read to it, on the grounds that the judge did not have the authority to grant the jury's request in his discretion, the trial judge's action was actually a refusal to exercise his discretion and the denial of the jury's request was prejudicial error entitling the defendant to a new trial. State v. Lang, 301 N.C. 508, 272 S.E.2d 123 (1980).

The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in refusing to allow the jurors to have certain testimony read back to them after deliberations had begun, since the judge explained that the witness whose testimony was requested by the jury was one of a number of witnesses, and the court did not want to give special emphasis to any particular witness. State v. Jones, 47 N.C. App. 554, 268 S.E.2d 6 (1980).

Explanation for Not Allowing Jurors to See Materials Held Error. — Where the trial judge told the jury that he could not allow them to take certain photographs which had not been received in evidence into the jury room because the defendant did not consent, his statement was an incorrect statement of the law under this section which was nevertheless harmless in itself, since it led to a correct ruling that the jury could not take photographs not admitted in evidence into the jury room. However, the attempt by the trial judge to explain the reason for his failure to comply with the jury's request constituted an impermissible expression of opinion in violation of §§ 15A-1222 and 15A-1232 which required a new trial. State v. Grogan, 40 N.C. App. 371, 253 S.E.2d 20 (1979).

Medical Records Properly Taken to Jury Room. — Where defendant's objection was made to preserve his objection to the admissibility of the exhibit, and he did not object to the court's decision to permit the jury to take the exhibit into the jury room, the court did not err by permitting the jury to take medical records to the jury room. State v. Woods, 126 N.C. App. 581, 486 S.E.2d 255 (1997).

Applied in State v. Prince, 49 N.C. App. 145, 270 S.E.2d 521 (1980); State v. Dover, 308 N.C. 372, 302 S.E.2d 232 (1983); State v. McDermott, 68 N.C. App. 786, 316 S.E.2d 93 (1984); State v. § 15A-1234. Additional instructions.

(a) After the jury retires for deliberation, the judge may give appropriate additional instructions to:

(1) Respond to an inquiry of the jury made in open court; or

(2) Correct or withdraw an erroneous instruction; or

(3) Clarify an ambiguous instruction; or

(4) Instruct the jury on a point of law which should have been covered in the original instructions.

(b) At any time the judge gives additional instructions, he may also give or repeat other instructions to avoid giving undue prominence to the additional instructions.

(c) Before the judge gives additional instructions, he must inform the parties generally of the instructions he intends to give and afford them an opportunity to be heard. The parties upon request must be permitted additional argument to the jury if the additional instructions change, by restriction or enlargement, the permissible verdicts of the jury. Otherwise, the allowance of additional argument is within the discretion of the judge.

(d) All additional instructions must be given in open court and must be made a part of the record. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is based upon A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury § 5.3.

Legal Periodicals. — For article, "Jury Instructions: A Persistent Failure to Communicate," see 67 N.C.L. Rev. 77 (1988).

CASE NOTES

Discretion of Court. — The trial court is in the best position to determine whether further additional instruction will aid or confuse the jury in its deliberations, or if further instruction will prevent or cause in itself an undue emphasis being placed on a particular portion of the court's instructions. State v. Prevette, 317 N.C. 148, 345 S.E.2d 159 (1986).

Court's Discretion in Using Exact Language Requested by Counsel. — Whether the trial court instructs using the exact language requested by counsel is a matter within its discretion and will not be overturned absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Herring, 322 N.C. 733, 370 S.E.2d 363 (1988).

Where the trial court instructed the jury in substantial conformity with the defense counsel's request, the court's refusal to give the defendant's special instructions verbatim was not an abuse of discretion. State v. Herring, 322 N.C. 733, 370 S.E.2d 363 (1988).

A trial court is not required to give a requested instruction in the exact language prayed for. State v. Herring, 322 N.C. 733, 370 S.E.2d 363 (1988).

Judge is not required to repeat instructions which have been previously given to the jury in the absence of some error in the charge. Needless repetition is undesirable and has been held erroneous on occasion. State v. Hockett, 309 N.C. 794, 309 S.E.2d 249 (1983).

Court is not required to repeat instructions which were previously given to the jury in the absence of some error in the charge but may do so in its discretion. State v. Bartow, 77 N.C. App. 103, 334 S.E.2d 480 (1985).

Giving of Additional Instructions in Response to Inquiry. — Once the jury retires for deliberation, the trial court may give appropriate additional instructions in response to an inquiry made by the jury in open court. When the trial court gives such additional instructions, it may also give or repeat other instructions to avoid giving undue prominence to the additional instructions. State v. Weddington, 329 N.C. 202, 404 S.E.2d 671 (1991).

Additional Instructions Upheld. — Where questions asked by jurors indicated a general confusion about the elements of the crime charged, the trial court properly determined that repeating the pertinent portions of its instructions in their entirety would answer all the jury's questions; and as the trial court's additional instructions avoided giving undue prominence to any one of the questions or any part of the instructions, the trial court did not err. State v. Weddington, 329 N.C. 202, 404 S.E.2d 671 (1991).

This statute does not preclude the trial court from receiving a written communication from the jury and responding to such in open court. State v. Davis, 353 N.C. 1, 539 S.E.2d 243 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 95, 151 L. Ed. 2d 55 (2001).

Additional Instructions Not Warranted. — The defendant was not entitled to additional instructions on his ability to evict trespassers where the focus of the case was on whether he used excessive force when he threw an ashtray at his girlfriend in order to, as he claimed, "defend himself." State v. Clegg, 142 N.C. App. 35, 542 S.E.2d 269 (2001), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 453, 548 S.E.2d 529 (2001).

Repeated or Clarified Instructions Are Not Additional Instructions. — If the trial judge planned to give "additional instructions" in order to add to his previous charge because of omissions therein, then the judge might be required under this statute to inform the parties of the instructions he intended to give. However, when he is repeating or clarifying instructions previously given in response to the jury's question, these are not "additional instructions" as contemplated under subsection (c) of this section. State v. Farrington, 40 N.C. App. 341, 253 S.E.2d 24 (1979).

An instruction which is repeated at the jury's request does not constitute an additional instruction within the meaning of subsection (c) of this section. State v. Buchanan, 108 N.C. App. 338, 423 S.E.2d 819 (1992).

The requirements set forth in subsection (c) do not apply when the court merely repeats a previous instruction; therefore, as long as the trial court is merely repeating a previous instruction, it is not necessary for the judge to give the parties an opportunity to be heard prior to reinstruction. State v. Weathers, 339 N.C. 441, 451 S.E.2d 266 (1994).

Defendant not permitted to make further argument to the jury after the trial court gave additional instructions pursuant to subsection (c), where the court changed its earlier instruction on securities fraud, but the new instruction was for clarification only and did not change the permissible verdicts. State v. Davidson, 131 N.C. App. 276, 506 S.E.2d 743 (1998).

Where the trial judge simply repeats or clarifies instructions previously given and does not add substantively to those instructions, the latter instructions are not "additional instructions" under this section, and the trial judge need not consult with the parties or give them an opportunity to be heard in advance of giving such instructions. State v. Rich, 132 N.C. App. 440, 512 S.E.2d 441 (1999), aff'd, 351 N.C. 386, 527 S.E.2d 299 (2000).

Where jury requested clarification on the term "deliberation," the supplemental oral instructions given by the judge, coupled with the principal instructions he first gave, correctly informed the jury as to the applicable law and in no way prejudiced defendant's right to a fair trial. State v. Lewis, 346 N.C. 141, 484 S.E.2d 379 (1997).

Where the trial court merely repeated and clarified instructions it had previously given in its original charge to the jury and did not add substantively to those instructions, it was unnecessary for the trial court to consult with the parties and give them an opportunity to be heard prior to reinstructing the jury. State v. Williamson, 122 N.C. App. 229, 468 S.E.2d 840 (1996).

In a situation involving an exchange of questions and answers between the court and the jury, it would obviously be cumbersome, impractical and unnecessary for the court to confer with counsel before answering each question put to him by the jury. It is inconceivable that the legislature intended to require such a procedure. State v. Farrington, 40 N.C. App. 341, 253 S.E.2d 24 (1979).

Failure to Answer Question as to Whether Particular Element Proved. — Where the jury had some question as to whether the State had proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the perpetrator of a sexual offense was armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon, and thus, they were inquiring as to the effect of such a finding upon their determination of guilt on the various offenses charged, it was prejudicial error for the trial judge not to answer jury questions on this point. State v. Hockett, 309 N.C. 794, 309 S.E.2d 249 (1983).

Correction of Instruction. — Although the trial judge did not instruct the jury in his original instruction that they could consider the purpose of facilitating flight, that omission was error favorable to the defendant where the indictment and the evidence both supported the instruction, and it was therefore not error for the trial judge to correct his instruction before the jury rendered its verdict on the kidnapping charge, as the State was entitled to the instruction and the instruction did not in any way change any instructions discussed at the charge conference. State v. Mason, 317 N.C. 283, 345 S.E.2d 195 (1986).

Where it did not appear from the jurors' question that they were confused about the burden of proof, nor were additional instructions of a nature to give undue emphasis to the State's case, the judge did not abuse his discretion in denying defendant's request to repeat the instructions. State v. Harper, 96 N.C. App. 36, 384 S.E.2d 297 (1989).

Where the jury specifically requested clarification of elements of first degree murder only, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to reinstruct on second degree murder pursuant to defendant's request. State v. Prevette, 317 N.C. 148, 345 S.E.2d 159 (1986).

Accepted Parahrases Not Additional Instructions. — Trial court was not required to inform the parties or afford them opportunity to be heard concerning a clarifying instruction which consisted of legally-accepted paraphrases of "deliberately bent on mischief" as this did not constitute additional instructions in the legal sense. State v. Rich, 132 N.C. App. 440, 512 S.E.2d 441 (1999), aff'd, 351 N.C. 386, 527 S.E.2d 299 (2000).

On Appeal, No Need to Have Objected at Trial. — Defendant did not have to object at trial in order to pursue his argument concerning this section on appeal. State v. Tucker, 91 N.C. App. 511, 372 S.E.2d 328 (1988).

Failure to Bring Entire Jury to Courtroom to Respond to Jury's Question. — Failure of the trial court to bring the entire jury into the courtroom to respond to the jury's question was reversible error where the court answered only to the jury foreman and the jury foreman struggled in his effort to present the question to the court, thus creating a great opportunity for miscommunication to the remaining jurors to the prejudice of defendant. State v. Tucker, 91 N.C. App. 511, 372 S.E.2d 328 (1988).

The requirement that all jurors be brought to the courtroom helps ensure that the judge understands what the jury has asked. State v. Helms, 93 N.C. App. 394, 378 S.E.2d 237 (1989).

All elements of a trial should be viewed and heard simultaneously by all 12 jurors; to allow a jury foreman, another individual juror, or anyone else to communicate privately with the trial court regarding matters material to the case and then to relay the court's response to the full jury is inconsistent with this policy. The danger presented is that the person, even the jury foreman, having alone made the request of the court and heard the court's response firsthand, may through misunderstanding, inadvertent editorialization, or an intentional misrepresentation, inaccurately relay the jury's request or the court's response, or both, to the defendant's detriment. State v. Tucker, 91 N.C. App. 511, 372 S.E.2d 328 (1988).

Defendant will not be heard to complain on appeal when the trial court has instructed adequately on the law and in a manner requested by the defendant. State v. Weddington, 329 N.C. 202, 404 S.E.2d 671 (1991).

Error in Instructing Jury Held Harmless. — Where the trial court determined that instruction as given adequately explained the law defining felony murder and twice offered to charge the jury again on this subject, the error was harmless. State v. Moore, 339 N.C. 456, 451 S.E.2d 232 (1994).

Applied in State v. Hudson, 331 N.C. 122, 415 S.E.2d 732 (1992); State v. King, 342 N.C. 357, 464 S.E.2d 288 (1995); State v. Price, 344 N.C. 583, 476 S.E.2d 317 (1996).

§ 15A-1235. Length of deliberations; deadlocked jury.

(a) Before the jury retires for deliberation, the judge must give an instruction which informs the jury that in order to return a verdict, all 12 jurors must agree to a verdict of guilty or not guilty.

(b) Before the jury retires for deliberation, the judge may give an instruction which informs the jury that:

(1) Jurors have a duty to consult with one another and to deliberate with a view to reaching an agreement, if it can be done without violence to individual judgment;

(2) Each juror must decide the case for himself, but only after an impartial consideration of the evidence with his fellow jurors;

(3) In the course of deliberations, a juror should not hesitate to reexamine his own views and change his opinion if convinced it is erroneous; and

(4) No juror should surrender his honest conviction as to the weight or effect of the evidence solely because of the opinion of his fellow jurors, or for the mere purpose of returning a verdict.

(c) If it appears to the judge that the jury has been unable to agree, the judge may require the jury to continue its deliberations and may give or repeat the instructions provided in subsections (a) and (b). The judge may not require or threaten to require the jury to deliberate for an unreasonable length of time or for unreasonable intervals.

(d) If it appears that there is no reasonable possibility of agreement, the judge may declare a mistrial and discharge the jury. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The Commission considered three possible approaches to the deadlocked jury:

(1) the "weak" charge set out in the A.B.A. Standards;

(2) the "strong" Allen charge traditionally used in the federal courts; and

(3) the even stronger charges authorized under North Carolina case law.

After much discussion, the Commission approved this section, which in its essentials follows A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury § 5.4. The Commission deleted from its draft a provision previously sanctioned under North Carolina case law which would have authorized the judge to inform the jurors that if they do not agree upon a verdict another jury may be called upon to try the case.

The four subdivisions of subsection (b) are linked together with the conjunction "and." This reflects the Commission's view that whenever the judge gives any of the instructions authorized by subsection (b), he must give all of them.

Subsection (c) requires that the instructions to a deadlocked jury must contain all the provisions of subsections (a) and (b).

CASE NOTES

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Section is based upon the standards approved by the American Bar Association. This enactment provides trial judges and practicing bar with clear standards for instructions urging verdicts. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

This section represents a choice of the "weak" charge approved in the American Bar Association standards, as opposed to the "strong" charge traditionally used in federal courts and the even stronger charges authorized under North Carolina case law. County of Lenoir ex rel. Dudley v. Dawson, 60 N.C. App. 122, 298 S.E.2d 418 (1982).

Purpose. — The legislature intended by enactment of this section to provide that a North Carolina jury may no longer be advised of the potential expense and inconvenience of retrying the case should the jury fail to agree. State v. Easterling, 300 N.C. 594, 268 S.E.2d 800 (1980).

The purpose behind the enactment of this section was to avoid coerced verdicts from jurors having a difficult time reaching a unanimous decision. State v. Evans, 346 N.C. 221, 485 S.E.2d 271 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1057, 118 S. Ct. 712, 139 L. Ed. 2d 653 (1998).

Section Provides Standards for Instructing Deadlocked Jury. — This statute, which borrows from standards approved by the American Bar Association, is the proper reference for standards applicable to charges which may be given a jury that is apparently unable to agree upon a verdict. State v. Easterling, 300 N.C. 594, 268 S.E.2d 800 (1980); State v. Brown, 56 N.C. App. 390, 289 S.E.2d 142 (1982); State v. Williams, 315 N.C. 310, 338 S.E.2d 75 (1986).

Mere failure to follow the form instructions of this section is not in itself reversible error. State v. Sanders, 81 N.C. App. 438, 344 S.E.2d 592, cert. denied, 318 N.C. 419, 349 S.E.2d 604 (1986).

Verbatim Adherence to Section Not Required. — The instructions prescribed in this section need not be given verbatim whenever a jury is deadlocked; rather, such instructions are guidelines, and the trial judge must be allowed to exercise his sound judgment to deal with the myriad different circumstances he encounters at trial. State v. Jeffries, 57 N.C. App. 416, 291 S.E.2d 859, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 306 N.C. 561, 294 S.E.2d 374 (1982); State v. Moore, 77 N.C. App. 553, 335 S.E.2d 535 (1985), aff'd, 317 N.C. 144, 343 S.E.2d 430 (1986).

The plain language of the statute provides that the trial court may give or repeat the instruction provided in subsections (a) and (b). State v. Fernandez, 346 N.C. 1, 484 S.E.2d 350 (1997).

The trial court is not required to give instructions listed in subsection (b) upon request, but may give them in its discretion. State v. Beasley, 118 N.C. App. 508, 455 S.E.2d 880 (1995).

Giving of Some Instructions Under Subsections (a) or (b) Necessitates Giving All. — When a trial judge attempts to give any of the instructions of subsections (a) and (b) of this section to a deadlocked jury, he must give all those instructions. However, where defendant did not object at trial, the evidence of defendant's guilt was very strong, and the instructions given were in substantial conformity with the statute, the error committed did not amount to "plain error". State v. Logan, 79 N.C. App. 420, 339 S.E.2d 449, cert. denied, 316 N.C. 383, 342 S.E.2d 903, writ denied, 316 N.C. 199, 341 S.E.2d 584 (1986).

Whenever the trial judge gives the jury any of the instructions authorized by subsection (b) of this section, whether given before the jury initially retires for deliberation or after the trial judge concludes that the jury is deadlocked, he must give all of them. State v. Williams, 315 N.C. 310, 338 S.E.2d 75 (1986).

Trial judge committed error when, after forming the opinion that the jury was deadlocked, he gave the instructions set out in subdivisions (b)(1) and (b)(2) of this section, but failed to give the instructions set out in (b)(3) and (b)(4). State v. Williams, 315 N.C. 310, 338 S.E.2d 75 (1986), holding, however, that this error was not "plain error" entitling defendant to a new trial.

Subsection (c) is permissive rather than mandatory. State v. Fernandez, 346 N.C. 1, 484 S.E.2d 350 (1997).

Instruction Under Subsection (c) Within Discretion of Trial Judge. — It is clearly within the sound discretion of the trial judge as to whether to give an instruction pursuant to subsection (c) of this section. State v. Williams, 315 N.C. 310, 338 S.E.2d 75 (1986).

Instruction Pursuant to Subsection (c) Held Not Prejudicial. — Any error in the court's decision to instruct the jury pursuant to subsection (c), where the charge was given during a break in the deliberations, and no inquiry was made nor indication given as to the numerical division of the jury, was not prejudicial to defendant, even though the jury had been deliberating less than two hours and there was no indication that the jury was deadlocked. State v. Adams, 85 N.C. App. 200, 354 S.E.2d 338 (1987).

Full Instruction Not Required. — It was not error not to give the full instruction set out in this section where the jury never indicated it was deadlocked or that it was having difficulty reaching a unanimous verdict. State v. Williams, 339 N.C. 1, 452 S.E.2d 245 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 833, 116 S. Ct. 109, 133 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1995), overruled in part, State v. Warren, 347 N.C. 309, 492 S.E.2d 609 (1997).

Where the jury never indicated that it was deadlocked or that it was having difficulty reaching a unanimous decision, the court did not err in delivering less than the full instructions set out in this section. State v. Lyons, 343 N.C. 1, 468 S.E.2d 204 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 894, 117 S. Ct. 237, 136 L. Ed. 2d 167 (1996).

Discretion of Trial Judge as to Mistrial. — The action of the judge in declaring or failing to declare a mistrial under this section is reviewable only in case of gross abuse of discretion. State v. Darden, 48 N.C. App. 128, 268 S.E.2d 225 (1980).

The granting or denial of a motion for a mistrial is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Wall, 304 N.C. 609, 286 S.E.2d 68 (1982); State v. Hall, 73 N.C. App. 101, 325 S.E.2d 639 (1985).

The trial judge did not violate this section by refusing to declare a mistrial where the court never expressed irritation at the jury for failing to reach a unanimous verdict, or intimated that the jury would be held for an unreasonable period of time to reach such a verdict although the jury was required to deliberate late on a Friday night and although it took the jury approximately eight hours to reach a verdict. State v. Baldwin, 141 N.C. App. 596, 540 S.E.2d 815 (2000).

Urging Jury to Reach Verdict. — Absent other factors, giving an instruction urging a jury to reach a verdict before the jury commences its deliberations is not reversible error. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Inquiry as to Jury's Division. — The trial court did not coerce a verdict by his inquiry as to the jury's division. The making of such an inquiry lies within the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Mann, 317 N.C. 164, 345 S.E.2d 365 (1986).

A trial judge's questions about the numerical division of a jury do not constitute a per se violation of N.C. Const., Art. I, § 24. Rather, the proper analysis is whether, in considering the totality of the circumstances, the inquiry was coercive. State v. Bussey, 321 N.C. 92, 361 S.E.2d 564 (1987).

In the totality of the circumstances, judge's inquiry as to the numerical division of the jury was not coercive of the jury's verdict. State v. Bussey, 321 N.C. 92, 361 S.E.2d 564 (1987).

Challenge of defendant in a murder case to the trial court's inquiry into the numerical division of the deliberating jury and its instruction concerning deliberating further toward a verdict would be decided by employing a totality of the circumstances test. State v. Forrest, 321 N.C. 186, 362 S.E.2d 252 (1987), holding that the instruction given was not coercive and did not constitute error. State v. Forrest, 321 N.C. 186, 362 S.E.2d 252 (1987).

An inquiry as to a division, without asking which votes were for conviction or acquittal, is not inherently coercive. Without more, it is not a violation of the defendant's right to a jury trial. State v. Beaver, 322 N.C. 462, 368 S.E.2d 607 (1988).

Deadlock Justifies Mistrial. — A jury's failure to reach a verdict due to deadlock is "manifest necessity" justifying declaration of a mistrial. State v. Pakulski, 319 N.C. 562, 356 S.E.2d 319 (1987).

Jury Indicated They Were Nearing a Decision. — Where the defendant made his motion for a mistrial after the jury indicated to the trial judge that it was approaching a unanimous verdict, and the trial court, in denying the mistrial motion, considered the nature of the charges, the evidence presented in the trial, and the time spent deliberating up to that point in proportion to the total length of the trial proceedings, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying the defendant's mistrial motion based on deadlock. State v. Jones, 110 N.C. App. 169, 429 S.E.2d 597 (1993), cert. denied, 336 N.C. 612, 447 S.E.2d 407 (1994).

Trial judge has no right to coerce a verdict, and a charge which might reasonably be construed by a juror as requiring him to surrender his well-founded convictions or judgment to the views of the majority is erroneous. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978); State v. Moore, 77 N.C. App. 553, 335 S.E.2d 535 (1985), aff'd, 317 N.C. 144, 343 S.E.2d 430 (1986).

The defendant's contention that supplemental instruction which said "[a]ll of us have a considerable amount of time in this case" was coercive was without merit. State v. Green, 336 N.C. 142, 443 S.E.2d 14, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1046, 115 S. Ct. 642, 130 L. Ed. 2d 547 (1994).

In deciding whether instructions have had the effect of coercing a verdict, the court will consider the circumstances under which the instructions were given and the probable impact of the instructions on the jury. State v. Sanders, 81 N.C. App. 438, 344 S.E.2d

592, cert. denied, 318 N.C. 419, 349 S.E.2d 604 (1986).

The totality of circumstances will be considered in determining whether the jury's verdict was coerced. State v. Beaver, 322 N.C. 462, 368 S.E.2d 607 (1988).

Jury's Verdict Held Not Coerced. — The fact that the jury deliberated for a considerable length of time and into the weekend and that the court made several inquiries of the jury because the jury took as much time as it did in the deliberations did not show there was coercion. State v. Beaver, 322 N.C. 462, 368 S.E.2d 607 (1988).

The trial court's statements that "we've got all the time in the world" and "we've got all week" did not convey the meaning that the trial court would force the jury to continue to deliberate until a verdict was reached, no matter how long it took; the trial court facilitated the necessary deliberation, but it did not force a verdict. State v. Porter, 340 N.C. 320, 457 S.E.2d 716 (1995).

Charge Will Be Considered as a Whole. — One of the cardinal rules governing appellate review of trial court instructions is that the charge will be read contextually and an excerpt will not be held prejudicial if a reading of the whole charge leaves no reasonable grounds to believe that the jury was misled. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

And in the Context of the Circumstances. — In deciding whether the court's instructions forced a verdict or merely served as a catalyst for further deliberation, an appellate court must consider the circumstances under which the instructions were made and the probable impact of the instructions on the jury. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978); State v. Peek, 313 N.C. 266, 328 S.E.2d 249 (1985).

No Rule as to How Long Jury Should Deliberate. — Although the jury deliberated for four days, while only two days were used for the presentation of evidence, Supreme Court declined to adopt any rule as to how long the jury should be allowed to deliberate which is based on the time required for the State to present evidence; it is left to the discretion of the trial court to decide if jury agreement as to a verdict is reasonably possible. State v. Porter, 340 N.C. 320, 457 S.E.2d 716 (1995).

Setting of Time Limit for Reaching Verdict. — When the jury informed the court that it was divided 10 to two, the court's response that the jury could continue to deliberate that night, could return to deliberate the next day, and had two more days in which deliberations could take place did not coerce the jury into reaching a decision, particularly in light of the court's instruction the following morning that the jury should reach a unanimous verdict if possible without surrendering their conscientious convictions. State v. Jones, 47 N.C. App. 554, 268 S.E.2d 6 (1980).

Inquiry into Whether to Continue Deliberations That Day. — The provisions of this section were not invoked where the trial judge called in the jury to ask whether they had been able to reach a verdict for the purpose of deciding whether to allow the jury to continue that day or resume deliberations the next day, and the foreman stated that they were still divided, but the jury at no time indicated that they were deadlocked or unable to reach a verdict. State v. Paul, 58 N.C. App. 723, 294 S.E.2d 762, cert. denied, 307 N.C. 128, 297 S.E.2d 402 (1982).

Failure to Reinstruct on Insanity Defense Held Not Error. — The trial court did not err in failing to instruct that the jury could find defendant not guilty by reason of insanity when the court instructed that if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to one of the elements of the offense charged, it should return a verdict of not guilty, or when the court instructed that all 12 minds must agree on a verdict of guilty or not guilty where the court included the possible verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity at the beginning of the instructions, after the instructions on the elements of the offense charged, and in the final mandate. State v. Ward, 301 N.C. 469, 272 S.E.2d 84 (1980).

Discretion of Trial Judge. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it encouraged the jury to overcome its difficulty in reaching a verdict, properly reinstructed the jury as to its duty under this section, and denied defendant's motion for a mistrial due to deadlock. State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

Standard of Review on Appeal. — The fundamental principle is that unless there is a reasonable probability that the alleged error in the instruction changed the result at trial, the verdict should not be disturbed on appeal. State v. Hunter, 48 N.C. App. 689, 269 S.E.2d 736 (1980).

It should be the rule rather than the exception that a disregard of the guidelines established in this statute will require a finding on appeal of prejudicial error. State v. Easterling, 300 N.C. 594, 268 S.E.2d 800 (1980).

Applied in State v. Bunn, 66 N.C. App. 187, 310 S.E.2d 792 (1984); State v. Fowler, 312 N.C. 304, 322 S.E.2d 389 (1984).

II. INSTRUCTING JURORS NOT TO SURRENDER CONVICTIONS.

If the trial judge urges a jury to agree upon a verdict, he should emphasize in language readily understood by a lay juror that he is not injecting his views into the minds of the jurors and that he does not intend that any juror should surrender his own free will and judgment. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Failure to Instruct Jurors Not to Surrender Convictions Not Error Absent Request. — Where the trial court's instruction on unanimity of the verdict complied with this section, the court's failure to instruct that the individual jurors were not to surrender their own convictions solely in order to reach a verdict was not error since the defendant requested no instructions to that effect. State v. Ward, 301 N.C. 469, 272 S.E.2d 84 (1980).

Instruction Held Sufficient. — A strong admonition, in readily understandable language, that, if after due deliberation, any juror sincerely believed that his decision was correct he should "stick to it though (he) stand(s) alone" was amply sufficient to convey to each member of the jury that he should not surrender any conscientious conviction in order to reach a unanimous verdict. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Instructions were proper where the trial court urged the jury to attempt to reach a unanimous decision but to do so without doing violence to the jurors' individual judgment and cautioned the jurors not to surrender their honest convictions solely because of the opinions of their fellow jurors or merely for the purpose of returning a unanimous decision. State v. Jones, 339 N.C. 114, 451 S.E.2d 826 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1169, 115 S. Ct. 2634, 132 L. Ed. 2d 873, reh'g denied, 515 U.S. 1183, 116 S. Ct. 32, 132 L. Ed. 2d 913 (1995).

Where the court's abbreviated version of jury instructions under this section conveyed to jurors that they were not to sacrifice their individual beliefs in order to reach a verdict, the abbreviated instruction did not have a prejudicial impact. State v. Lyons, 343 N.C. 1, 468 S.E.2d 204 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 894, 117 S. Ct. 237, 136 L. Ed. 2d 167 (1996).

Given the length of deliberations, the substantial quantity of conflicting evidence, the failure of the defendant to request the court to instruct the jury on its failure to reach a verdict pursuant to this section, and the fact that the record was devoid of any evidence suggesting that the jury indicated it was deadlocked, the trial court did not err in failing to declare a hung jury or in failing to instruct ex mero motu as to each juror's individual responsibility under this section. State v. Cheek, 351 N.C. 48, 520 S.E.2d 545 (1999), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1245, 120 S. Ct. 2694, 147 L. Ed. 2d 965 (2000).

III. COMMENT ON EXPENSE OF RETRIAL.

Comment Prohibited. — Under this section, trial judges are prohibited from mentioning or suggesting that wasted jury and judicial resources might occur as a result of mistrials in criminal cases. County of Lenoir ex rel. Dudley v. Dawson, 60 N.C. App. 122, 298 S.E.2d 418 (1982).

To charge a jury, in civil or in criminal cases, that failure to reach a verdict will mean another week or more of the court's time for the retrial of this case, and that a mistrial will mean that another jury will have to be selected to hear the case and evidence again, is legally inaccurate. County of Lenoir ex rel. Dudley v. Dawson, 60 N.C. App. 122, 298 S.E.2d 418 (1982).

Isolated mention of the necessity to retry the case does not warrant a new trial unless the charge as a whole is coercive. State v. Darden, 48 N.C. App. 128, 268 S.E.2d 225 (1980).

The isolated mention in an instruction to the jury of the expense and inconvenience of retrying a case does not warrant a new trial unless the charge as a whole coerces a verdict. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Mention of Expense of Retrial Must Be Carefully Scrutinized. — Where the jury is deadlocked, and this fact is known to the trial judge, the mention of inconvenience and additional expense may well be prejudicial and harmful to the defendant, and must be scrutinized with extraordinary care. State v. Mack, 53 N.C. App. 127, 280 S.E.2d 40 (1981).

Such Comment Should Be Accompanied by Instruction That Jurors Not Surrender Convictions. — The trial judge may state to the jury the ills attendant upon disagreement including the resulting expense, the length of time the case has been tried, the number of times the case has been tried and that the case will in all probability have to be tried by another jury in the event that the jury fails to agree. However, when such matters are mentioned in the court's instructions, the trial judge must make it clear to the jury that by such instruction the court does not intend that any juror should surrender his conscientious convictions or judgment. State v. Alston, 294 N.C. 577, 243 S.E.2d 354 (1978).

Error to Comment on Retrial Before Jury Has Announced Deadlock. — It is error to instruct a deadlocked jury that its inability to agree will result in the inconvenience of having to retry the case, where such instruction is given before the jury has returned announcing any deadlock. State v. Lipfird, 302 N.C. 391, 276 S.E.2d 161 (1981).

Instruction Held Not Error. — The trial judge's additional instruction to the jury after it had deliberated for an hour that the case would have to be retried if the jury failed to reach a verdict and that the jurors were as capable of deciding the case as any other group of jurors, if contrary to this section, did not constitute prejudicial error where the instruction was not directed to the minority but to all the jurors; the court's reference to another trial in the event the jurors failed to agree was followed by an almost verbatim recital of the instructions set forth in subsection (b) of this section, and the charge made it clear that the court was not asking any juror to surrender any conscientious opinion he might have but was only asking the jurors to make every reasonable effort to arrive at a unanimous verdict. State v. Hunter, 48 N.C. App. 689, 269 S.E.2d 736 (1980).

The court's instruction that a disagreement meant "that if this case is not brought to a verdict as I previously instructed you that another judge and another jury in another week will try this case again" was not erroneous since an isolated mention of the necessity to retry the case does not warrant a new trial unless the charge as a whole is coercive. State v. Jones, 47 N.C. App. 554, 268 S.E.2d 6 (1980).

Instruction Held Error. — Where the jury foreman advised the court that in his opinion the jury could not reach a decision, it was error for the trial court to charge the jurors that if they did not agree upon a verdict another jury might be called upon to try the case; that the State and defendants had a tremendous amount of time and money invested; and that retrial involved a duplication of all the time and expense. State v. Lamb, 44 N.C. App. 251, 261 S.E.2d 130 (1979), cert. denied, 299 N.C. 739, 267 S.E.2d 667 (1980).

Where not only did the trial judge have a statement from the foreman that the jury was unable to reach a verdict, but in addition the court was advised of the 11 to one numerical division of the jury, his instruction which clearly mentioned the potential inconvenience and use of the court's time incident to the jury's failure to reach a verdict constituted prejudicial error. State v. Johnson, 80 N.C. App. 311, 341 S.E.2d 770 (1986).

The trial judge's instruction that the jury should try to reconcile its differences because of the expense of a retrial, given after the foreperson announced they were unable to agree, constituted prejudicial error. State v. Buckom, 111 N.C. App. 240, 431 S.E.2d 776, aff'd, 335 N.C. 765, 440 S.E.2d 274 (1994).

§ 15A-1236. Admonitions to jurors; regulation and separation of jurors.

(a) The judge at appropriate times must admonish the jurors that it is their duty:

(1) Not to talk among themselves about the case except in the jury room after their deliberations have begun;

(2) Not to talk to anyone else, or to allow anyone else to talk with them or in their presence about the case and that they must report to the judge immediately the attempt of anyone to communicate with them about the case;

(3) Not to form an opinion about the guilt or innocence of the defendant, or express any opinion about the case until they begin their deliberations;

(4) To avoid reading, watching, or listening to accounts of the trial; and

(5) Not to talk during trial to parties, witnesses, or counsel.

The judge may also admonish them with respect to other matters which he considers appropriate.

(b) The judge in his discretion may direct that the jurors be sequestered.

(c) If the jurors are committed to the charge of an officer, he must be sworn by the clerk to keep the jurors together and not to permit any person to speak or otherwise communicate with them on any subject connected with the trial nor to do so himself, and to return the jurors to the courtroom as directed by the judge. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, s. 3.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Compare A.B.A. Standards, Function of the Trial Judge § 5.2.

The Commission considered inserting in subsection (a) an admonition that the jurors should not go and view the place where the offense was alleged to have occurred, but omitted it because in some instances the place may be a public one difficult to avoid. In cases in which viewing the scene may present a problem, the last sentence of subsection (a) may be utilized by the judge.

The Commission directed that the Commentary reflect its interpretation of the word "sequestered" in subsection (b). It intended to authorize either complete sequestration, including separate lodging facilities at night, or partial sequestration during lunch or while in the vicinity of the courthouse.

A companion provision is the amendment to G.S. 9-17 providing that the State will pay all the expenses of sequestration of jurors.

CASE NOTES

Admonition to Maintain an Open Mind. — Where the court was simply admonishing the jurors, pursuant to subdivision (a)(3) of this section, to maintain an open mind until they conducted their deliberations, the court was instructed them to resist their natural impulses to reach preliminary conclusions based on the quantity of evidence presented by the opening side. The court further informed the jurors that it was their duty to hear evidence from both sides and to discuss the case among themselves before reaching a conclusion. The instruction, in context, contained no expression of opinion about any question to be decided by the jury or about the weight of the evidence. State v. Harrington, 335 N.C. 105, 436 S.E.2d 235 (1993).

Failure to Admonish Not Violation of Constitutional Right. — The failure of the trial judge to admonish the jury at an appropriate time in violation of this section does not involve the violation of a constitutional right. State v. Chambers, 52 N.C. App. 713, 280 S.E.2d 175 (1981).

Discretion of Court. — A motion for individual jury selection and jury segregation or sequestration are matters addressed to the trial court's sound discretion, and its exercise of discretion will not be disturbed absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Error Not Reversible Per Se. — Where defense counsel is concerned about the failure of the trial judge to admonish the jury, it is a simple matter for defense counsel to call to the attention of the judge such failure to admonish. Extending the reversible error per se rule to all violations of this Chapter would result in many new trials for mere technical error, a result not intended by the legislature in light of the provisions of § 15A-1443. State v. Chambers, 52 N.C. App. 713, 280 S.E.2d 175 (1981).

Failure to fully admonish the jury on every occasion does not of itself constitute prejudicial error. State v. Richardson, 59 N.C. App. 558, 297 S.E.2d 921 (1982), rev'd in part and aff'd in part, 308 N.C. 470, 302 S.E.2d 799 (1983).

Trial court's failure to admonish the jury regarding their conduct and duties during court recesses was not error, where defendant conceded he did not object, defendant failed to show that he was prejudiced, the trial court did remind the jurors of their duties on several occasions during the trial, as well as referring them to the written instructions, and defendant did not contend that jurors engaged in any improper conduct or conversation or that their deliberations were tainted in any way. State v. Thibodeaux, 341 N.C. 53, 459 S.E.2d 501 (1995).

Counsel for defendant must object to any failure to instruct the jury properly. State v. Richardson, 59 N.C. App. 558, 297 S.E.2d 921 (1982), rev'd in part and aff'd in part, 308 N.C. 470, 302 S.E.2d 799 (1983).

While subdivision (a)(4) of this section requires the trial judge to admonish jurors to avoid contact with any accounts of the trial outside the courtroom, and the trial judge's failure to do so was error, defendant must show prejudice, and furthermore, he must object to any failure to properly instruct the jury. State v. Harris, 315 N.C. 556, 340 S.E.2d 383 (1986).

No Prejudicial Error Where Defendant Failed to Object. — Where defendant failed to object at the times he contended the court was remiss in its duty to instruct the jury on its behavior, and did not request further instructions, there was no prejudicial error in court's failure to give such instructions. State v. Carr, 54 N.C. App. 309, 283 S.E.2d 175 (1981).

Defendant must show prejudice from the court's failure to admonish the jury. State v. Richardson, 59 N.C. App. 558, 297 S.E.2d 921 (1982), rev'd in part and aff'd in part, 308 N.C. 470, 302 S.E.2d 799 (1983).

Oral Arguments Not Required Before Final Ruling. — Although fundamental fairness would seem to require it, at least when a proper and timely request therefor is made, this section does not specifically mandate the receipt and consideration of oral arguments prior to the entry of final rulings by the trial court. State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982).

Failure to Admonish Prior to Overnight Recess. — Failure of the trial court to admonish the jury pursuant to this section prior to an overnight recess was not reversible error per se where defendant failed to show that he was prejudiced by the court's failure to admonish and where defendant and his counsel, who were present in the courtroom when the overnight recess was ordered, should have called the court's attention to its failure to admonish if they were concerned about such omission. State v. Turner, 48 N.C. App. 606, 269 S.E.2d 270 (1980).

The trial court is not required to recite each provision of subsection (a) of this section at each recess. State v. Richardson, 308 N.C. 470, 302 S.E.2d 799 (1983).

Allowing jurors to be transported by an unsworn deputy was harmless error; upon discovery of the error, the trial court asked the deputy several questions for the record and the deputy stated that when he transported the jurors he knew nothing about the case but the defendant's name and he had not discussed the facts or circumstances or proceedings of the case with any jury member. State v. Payne, 328 N.C. 377, 402 S.E.2d 582 (1991).

Delivery of Keys by Juror to Husband. — The admonitions prescribed by this section were not required where the trial judge merely permitted the juror to step out into the courtroom, or to the door of the courtroom, and deliver a set of keys to her husband, and there was nothing to suggest that the court permitted the juror to converse with her husband concerning the case — only that the court permitted the juror to speak to her husband briefly in connection with delivering him the keys. State v. Williams, 296 N.C. 693, 252 S.E.2d 739 (1979).

Where there was no evidence or showing by defendant to suggest the possibility of jury contamination because of publicity and notoriety of other executions, particularly the one of the first woman executed in 25 years, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for sequestration. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Exposure of the jury to a newspaper article that contained an account of most of the testimony offered during the voir dire hearing on the previous day as to whether to allow the testimony of a police officer as to defendant's statement to him was not so prejudicial to the defendant as to require a new trial, since the defendant himself placed information substantially similar to that contained in the article before the jury during the course of the trial. State v. Langford, 319 N.C. 332, 354 S.E.2d 518 (1987).

Failure to Sequester Jurors Held Not Prejudicial. — Where the jury was selected from citizens of another county, the trial court quite frequently admonished the jury against discussing the case or gaining information about it from outside sources, and defendant presented no evidence that the jury did anything other than follow the trial court's orders, therefore he failed to show prejudice in the trial court's decision not to sequester jurors. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Failure to Question Jurors Held Not Prejudicial. — The trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to have jurors questioned concerning whether they had read about a statement she made in the local newspaper because the court repeatedly warned the jurors to avoid reading, watching, or listening to accounts of the trial and because the statement was eventually admitted into evidence. State v. Smith, 135 N.C. App. 649, 522 S.E.2d 321 (1999).

Excused Juror Allowed in Jury Room. — Subsection (c) of this statute was not violated when the trial court sent a juror who had been excused and replaced, to the jury room after admonishing her not to speak to the others about the case. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Admonition Held Sufficient. — When examined in the context in which they were given, instructions made repeatedly not to discuss the case or form an opinion about it which were delivered to a group of adult men and women were perfectly adequate under this section. State v. Larrimore, 340 N.C. 119, 456 S.E.2d 789 (1995).

Applied in State v. Daniels, 59 N.C. App. 442, 297 S.E.2d 150 (1982); State v. Mitchell, 342 N.C. 797, 467 S.E.2d 416 (1996).

Stated in State v. Griffin, 308 N.C. 303, 302 S.E.2d 447 (1983); State v. Brogden, 137 N.C. App. 579, 528 S.E.2d 391 (2000).

§ 15A-1237. Verdict.

(a) The verdict must be in writing, signed by the foreman, and made a part of the record of the case.

(b) The verdict must be unanimous, and must be returned by the jury in open court.

(c) If the jurors find the defendant not guilty on the ground that he was insane at the time of the commission of the offense charged, their verdict must so state.

(d) If there are two or more defendants, the jury must return a separate verdict with respect to each defendant. If the jury agrees upon a verdict for one defendant but not another, it must return that verdict upon which it agrees.

(e) If there are two or more offenses for which the jury could return a verdict, it may return a verdict with respect to any offense, including a lesser included offense on which the judge charged, as to which it agrees. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The provision in subsection (a) requiring written verdicts is new. It is contemplated that the jury will be given a verdict form setting out the permissible verdicts recited by the judge in his instructions. This procedure should cure a great many defects that occur when the foreman of the jury inadvertently omits some essential element of a verdict in stating it orally.

The provision in subsection (c) is also new, but was thought to be quite desirable by the Commission.

The Commission briefly considered and then abandoned any attempt to define a lesser included offense. It determined that this task may be more appropriately tackled during the consideration of revision of the substantive law. Until that time, the Commission recommends the retention of G.S. 15-169 and G.S. 15-170.

CASE NOTES

Purpose. — This section is intended to aid the trial court in avoiding the taking of verdicts which are flawed by the inadvertent omission of some essential element of the verdict itself. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979); State v. Miller, 61 N.C. App. 1, 300 S.E.2d 431 (1983).

This section is intended to aid the trial court in avoiding the taking of verdicts which are flawed by the inadvertent omission of some essential element of the verdict itself when given orally. A verdict form is sufficient for this purpose if it provides the court a proper basis upon which to pass judgment and sentence the defendant appropriately. State v. Sanderson, 62 N.C. App. 520, 302 S.E.2d 899 (1983).

When Verdict Should Be Received and Recorded. — If the verdict substantially answers the issue(s) so as to permit the trial judge to pass judgment in accordance with the manifest intention of the jury, then the verdict should be received and recorded. State v. Smith, 299 N.C. 533, 263 S.E.2d 563 (1980).

Omission of Foreman's Signature Does Not Invalidate Verdict Where Jury's Intention Manifest. — Where no omission of the essential element of the verdict by the jury foreman was possible since the written verdict form properly set forth the essential elements of the verdicts that could be returned, and where the verdict substantially answered the issue so as to permit the trial judge to pass judgment in accordance with the manifest intention of the jury, there was no merit to defendant's contention that the verdict against him was invalid because the jury foreman did not sign it as required by this section. State v. Collins, 50 N.C. App. 155, 272 S.E.2d 603 (1980).

Reading of Verdict by Judge. — Where the trial judge takes the verdict sheet from the jury at the door of the jury room after being informed that they have reached a verdict and the judge then reads the verdict in open court, no violation of this section occurs. State v. Caudle, 58 N.C. App. 89, 293 S.E.2d 205 (1982), cert. denied, 308 N.C. 545, 304 S.E.2d 239 (1983).

A Verdict Sheet Captioning a Different Defendant's Name Was Not Fatally Defective. — Although the verdict sheet which initially was captioned in the name of a different defendant was changed by the trial court to correct what it considered a typographical error, where the verdict sheet listed the proper file number for the case, and the proper charges listed were consistent with the evidence presented at trial and with the court's instructions, and where the transcript and exhibits were replete with references to the defendant by name, verdict would be upheld. State v. Gilbert, 139 N.C. App. 657, 535 S.E.2d 94 (2000).

Lost Verdict Sheet. — Although the verdict sheet was lost in the office of the clerk of superior court the record was sufficient for the Supreme Court to determine the appeal. State v. Gray, 347 N.C. 143, 491 S.E.2d 538 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1031, 118 S. Ct. 1323, 140 L. Ed. 2d 486 (1998).

Inquiry or Polling of Jury Not Barred. — The statutory requirement of a written jury verdict does not bar inquiry from the court or a polling of the jury to insure that the written verdict is sufficiently clear and free from doubt. State v. Smith, 299 N.C. 533, 263 S.E.2d 563 (1980).

Show of Hands Not Polling of Jury. — Trial court did not undertake on its own motion to poll the jurors individually where, after the verdict was read, the court asked the jurors to raise their hands as a group and not individually. State v. Flowers, 347 N.C. 1, 489 S.E.2d 391 (1997).

Submission of Issue in the Disjunctive. — Submission of an issue to the jury in the disjunctive is reversible error if it renders the issue ambiguous and thereby prevents the jury from reaching a unanimous verdict. State v. Diaz, 317 N.C. 545, 346 S.E.2d 488 (1986).

Instructions in a disjunctive form on the charge of maliciously assaulting in a secret manner were fatally ambiguous, thereby resulting in an uncertain verdict in violation of defendant's right to a unanimous verdict. State v. Lyons, 330 N.C. 298, 410 S.E.2d 906 (1991).

A verdict of guilty following submission in the disjunctive of two or more possible crimes to the jury in a single issue is ambiguous and therefore fatally defective. State v. Diaz, 317 N.C. 545, 346 S.E.2d 488 (1986).

Disjunctive phrasing of the jury instruction was not a fatal ambiguity which resulted in a nonunanimous jury verdict. State v. Oliver, 343 N.C. 202, 470 S.E.2d 16 (1996).

By instructing the jury that it could find defendant guilty of trafficking in marijuana if it found that defendant knowingly possessed or knowingly transported 10,000 pounds or more of marijuana, the trial judge submitted two possible crimes to the jury, as the jury could find defendant guilty if it found that he committed either or both of the crimes submitted to it. Thus, the jury's verdict of guilty was fatally defective because it was ambiguous, depriving defendant of his constitutional right to be convicted by a unanimous jury. State v. Diaz, 317 N.C. 545, 346 S.E.2d 488 (1986).

The risk of a nonunanimous verdict arises if the trial court instructs the jury that it may find the defendant guilty of the crime charged on either of two alternative grounds and each alternative ground constitutes a separate and distinct offense. State v. Petty, 132 N.C. App. 453, 512 S.E.2d 428 (1999).

Single Wrong from Multiple Acts. — There is no risk of a nonunanimous verdict where the statute criminalizes a single wrong that may be proved by any one of a number of acts and the court instructs the jury disjunctively as to various alternative acts because the particular act performed is immaterial. State v. Petty, 132 N.C. App. 453, 512 S.E.2d 428 (1999).

Unanimity Regarding the Aggravating Factors Set Out in § 20-141.5. — The eight aggravating factors set out by § 20-141.5(b) are not separately chargeable, discrete criminal activities requiring a jury to unanimously agree on the same two factors for purposes of aggravation; rather, the statutory factors are merely alternative ways of proving the crime of felonious speeding to elude arrest and a defendant may be convicted pursuant to that section if the jury merely agrees that he committed two of those violations although they do not agree on which two. State v. Funchess, 141 N.C. App. 302, 540 S.E.2d 435 (2000).

Written Verdict Not Required on Each Element. — Although every element of the offenses charged was not included in the form verdicts submitted to the jury, the offenses which the jury was to consider were sufficiently identified, and there was no requirement in this section that written verdicts contain each element of the offense to which they referred. State v. Partin, 48 N.C. App. 274, 269 S.E.2d 250, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 404, 273 S.E.2d 449 (1980).

This section contains no requirement that a written verdict contain each element of the offense to which it refers. State v. Sanderson, 62 N.C. App. 520, 302 S.E.2d 899 (1983).

There is no requirement that the written verdict contain each and every element of the subject offense. It is sufficient if the verdict can be properly understood by reference to the indictment, evidence and jury instructions. State v. Connard, 81 N.C. App. 327, 344 S.E.2d 568 (1986), aff'd, 319 N.C. 392, 354 S.E.2d 238 (1987).

The trial court committed reversible error in instructing the jury that it could convict defendant of first degree sex offense if it found that he forced the victim to perform either fellatio or anal intercourse, as defendant had a constitutional right to be convicted by the unanimous verdict of a jury in open court, and under this instruction there was no way to tell whether defendant was convicted of second degree sexual offense because the jury unanimously agreed that defendant engaged in fellatio, anal intercourse, or both fellatio and anal intercourse, or whether some members of the jury found that he engaged in fellatio but not anal intercourse, and some found that he engaged in anal intercourse but not fellatio. State v.Callahan, 86 N.C. App. 88, 356 S.E.2d 403 (1987).

Specification of Theory of Guilty Verdict. — Where, in an indictment for murder, the evidence would support two guilty verdicts to the charge of first-degree murder, guilty by reason of the felony-murder rule or guilty by reason of premeditation and deliberation, it was appropriate for the trial court to require the jury to specify in its verdict the theory upon which they found defendant guilty, since if the jury's verdict specified the theory, the court could sentence appropriately. The required use of a specific written verdict in this case is consistent with the intent of this section and it enabled the trial court to avoid the difficulty which that provision seeks to alleviate. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979).

Value of Property Stolen in Larceny Case. — This section does not require that a verdict in a felonious larceny case establish the value of the allegedly stolen property. State v. Jefferies, 41 N.C. App. 95, 254 S.E.2d 550, cert. denied, 297 N.C. 614, 257 S.E.2d 438 (1979).

Insanity to Be Considered Only If Verdict Is Not Guilty. — In cases where a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity is recorded, the court should first submit general issues of guilt or innocence, and thereafter, where the evidence justifies instructions on the defense of insanity, a special issue as to whether the jury found defendant not guilty because he was insane may be submitted as the last issue, but the jury should be instructed that it is not to consider the special issue unless it has returned a general verdict of not guilty. State v. Linville, 300 N.C. 135, 265 S.E.2d 150 (1980).

Instruction Did Not Permit Conviction by Less Than Unanimous Verdict. — Trial judge correctly instructed jury that it could find immoral, improper, or indecent liberty upon a finding that defendant either improperly touched his son or induced his son to touch him; the instruction did not permit conviction by less than a unanimous verdict. State v. Hartness, 326 N.C. 561, 391 S.E.2d 177 (1990).

Applied in State v. Staley, 71 N.C. App. 286, 321 S.E.2d 551 (1984); State v. Britt, 93 N.C. App. 126, 377 S.E.2d 79 (1989).

Stated in State v. Hicks, 86 N.C. App. 36, 356 S.E.2d 595 (1987).

§ 15A-1238. Polling the jury.

Upon the motion of any party made after a verdict has been returned and before the jury has dispersed, the jury must be polled. The judge may also upon his own motion require the polling of the jury. The poll may be conducted by the judge or by the clerk by asking each juror individually whether the verdict announced is his verdict. If upon the poll there is not unanimous concurrence, the jury must be directed to retire for further deliberations. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is based upon A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury § 5.5. As noted in the commentary to G.S. 15A-1063, this section does not state that the judge may in his discretion declare a mistrial if the poll indicates that the verdict is not unanimous, but leaves the matter to be determined under other principles of law governing mistrials.

CASE NOTES

Purpose of Polling. — The purpose of polling the jury is to ensure that the jurors unanimously agree with and consent to the verdict at the time it is rendered. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

Rationale Behind Polling. — The rationale behind requiring that any polling of the jury be before dispersal is to ensure that nothing extraneous to the jury's deliberations can cause any of the jurors to change their minds. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

Right to Have Jury Polled. — This section gives any party the right to have the jury polled after a verdict is returned before the jury has dispersed. State v. Baynard, 79 N.C. App. 559, 339 S.E.2d 810 (1986).

The right to a poll of the jury in criminal actions is firmly established by N.C. Const., Art. I, § 24, and by statute. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

Polling Not Barred by Written Verdict. — The statutory requirement of a written jury verdict does not bar inquiry from the court or a polling of the jury to insure that the written verdict is sufficiently clear and free from doubt. State v. Smith, 299 N.C. 533, 263 S.E.2d 563 (1980).

This section does not give defendant a right to an unlimited number of polls. State v. Martin, 315 N.C. 667, 340 S.E.2d 326 (1986).

Waiver of Right to Poll. — Defense counsel waives his right to request a polling of the jury where he does not make his request prior to the jury's discharge. State v. Froneberger, 55 N.C. App. 148, 285 S.E.2d 119 (1981), appeal dismissed, 305 N.C. 397, 290 S.E.2d 367 (1982); State v. Baynard, 79 N.C. App. 559, 339 S.E.2d 810 (1986).

When a trial court gave the jury a thirty-minute break, the jury was free to leave the courtroom and go into the streets. During that thirty-minute period, the members of the jury were exposed to influences extraneous to the deliberations of the entire jury as a body. Hence, the jury had been "dispersed" within the meaning of this section, and the motion to poll the jury, made during the jury's recess, came too late. Consequently, the defendant waived the right to poll the jury. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

Where the jury dispersed before defendant requested that the jury be polled, defendant waived his right to poll the jury. State v. Ballew, 113 N.C. App. 674, 440 S.E.2d 565, petition denied as to additional issues, 336 N.C. 610, 447 S.E.2d 404 (1994), aff'd, 339 N.C. 733, 453 S.E.2d 865 (1995).

Request for Repolling Properly Denied. — Defendant's request for a repolling of the jury, occasioned by the attempt of the forelady to change her vote based on testimony presented at the sentencing phase of the trial, was correctly denied, as a juror may not impeach the verdict of the jury after it has been rendered and received in open court, and defendant's request to repoll the jury amounted to an attempt to impeach the jury's verdict. State v. Martin, 315 N.C. 667, 340 S.E.2d 326 (1986).

Defendant was not entitled to repoll a juror who had recanted her death sentence recommendations on two of three murder cases when she had twice been polled on her recommendation in the third case; once during normal course of polling after jury's death sentence recommendation in all three cases, and again after she had recanted in two of the cases but had stood by her original decision in the third case. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

The defendant was not entitled to poll the jury the morning after it returned its verdict. State v. Clark, 138 N.C. App. 392, 531 S.E.2d 482 (2000).

Change of Mind After Verdict Returned of No Consequence. — If the jury is unanimous at the time the verdict is returned, the fact that some of them change their minds at any time thereafter is of no consequence; the verdict rendered remains valid and must be upheld. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

"Dispersed". — Where jurors chose to return to the jury assembly room, and were told that they could discuss the case with anyone if they so desired, the jury had "dispersed" within the meaning of this section. State v. Ballew, 113 N.C. App. 674, 440 S.E.2d 565, petition denied as to additional issues, 336 N.C. 610, 447 S.E.2d 404 (1994), aff'd, 339 N.C. 733, 453 S.E.2d 865 (1995).

Show of Hands Not Polling of Jury. — Trial court did not undertake on its own motion to poll the jurors individually where, after the verdict was read, the court asked the jurors to raise their hands as a group and not individually. State v. Flowers, 347 N.C. 1, 489 S.E.2d 391 (1997).

Polling of Jurors Proper. — Where each of the jurors individually was told the charges for which the jury had returned a guilty verdict and was asked whether this was their verdict and whether they still assented to the verdict, there was no error in the manner in which the jury was polled. State v. Ramseur, 338 N.C. 502, 450 S.E.2d 467 (1994).

Applied in State v. Clark, 73 N.C. App. 277, 326 S.E.2d 637 (1985); State v. Mutakbbic, 317 N.C. 264, 345 S.E.2d 154 (1986).

Untimely Motion to Poll. — Where court allowed defendant until Monday morning to present authority for his request to individually repoll a juror, and he failed to present any arguments on this subject when the court reconvened, instead making a motion to repoll the entire jury, defendant's motion was untimely. State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

§ 15A-1239. Judicial comment on verdict.

The trial judge may not comment upon the verdict of a jury in open court in the presence or hearing of any member of the jury panel. If he does so, any defendant whose case is calendared for that session of court is entitled, upon motion, to a continuance of his case to a time when all members of the entire jury panel are no longer serving. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is in accord with G.S. 1A-1, Rule 51(c). Compare A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury § 5.6.

Cross References. — As to comment on verdict, see also § 1-180.1.

CASE NOTES

The legislature has provided the exclusive remedy for judicial praise, criticism or comment on the verdict by declaring in § 1-180.1 that the prohibited remarks shall constitute valid grounds as a matter of right, for the continuance for the session of any action remaining to be tried during that week at such session of court, upon motion of a defendant or upon motion of the State. The provisions of § 1-180.1 shall not be applicable upon the hearing of motions for a new trial, motions to set aside the verdict of a jury, or a motion made in arrest of judgment. State v. Neal, 60 N.C. App. 350, 299 S.E.2d 654, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 308 N.C. 390, 302 S.E.2d 256 (1983).

This section does not contain any reference to nonapplicability to motions for a new trial, or to set aside the verdict, or arrest of judgment. State v. Neal, 60 N.C. App. 350, 299 S.E.2d 654, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 308 N.C. 390, 302 S.E.2d 256 (1983).

§ 15A-1240. Impeachment of the verdict.

(a) Upon an inquiry into the validity of a verdict, no evidence may be received to show the effect of any statement, conduct, event, or condition upon the mind of a juror or concerning the mental processes by which the verdict was determined.

(b) The limitations in subsection (a) do not bar evidence concerning whether the verdict was reached by lot.

(c) After the jury has dispersed, the testimony of a juror may be received to impeach the verdict of the jury on which he served, subject to the limitations in subsection (a), only when it concerns:

(1) Matters not in evidence which came to the attention of one or more jurors under circumstances which would violate the defendant's constitutional right to confront the witnesses against him; or

(2) Bribery, intimidation, or attempted bribery or intimidation of a juror. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsections (a), (b), and (c) are based on A.B.A. Standards, Trial by Jury § 5.7. Subsections (a) and (b) are almost identical to the wording of the A.B.A. Standard, but subsection (c) is somewhat more restrictive. As the A.B.A. commentary indicates, this is a most troublesome area. The traditional rule has been to disallow almost all attempts by a juror to impeach his verdict because to do otherwise would place the finality of verdicts in great jeopardy and subject jurors after the close of the case to intense pressures to come forward and impeach their verdicts.

It is noteworthy that this section is silent on impeaching verdicts by means other than the testimony of the juror himself.

The General Assembly deleted subsection (d) from the Commission's draft, which allowed counsel to ask jurors about their verdict so long as there was no harassment or embarrassment of jurors or any tendency to influence the jurors' actions in future cases. The members of the General Assembly apparently thought a positive statement of the right of counsel to approach jurors about their verdict immediately after a case could encourage abuse by at least a few attorneys. Omission of this subsection apparently makes little difference in the light of North Carolina State Bar, Code of Professional Responsibility, DR7-108(D), (E), (F), and (G).

CASE NOTES

Applicability. — This section applies only to criminal cases and has no applicability to a paternity proceeding. Smith v. Price, 315 N.C. 523, 340 S.E.2d 408 (1986).

The trial court erred by amending the jury verdict after deliberation to enhance the defendant's conviction to the felony of assault with a deadly weapon upon a government official, pursuant to section 14-34.2, where the trial court instructed the jury on the charge of assault on a government official and the State's motion to amend the verdict did not comport with any of the challenges allowable under this section. State v. Brogden, 137 N.C. App. 579, 528 S.E.2d 391 (2000).

General Rule. — Generally, after the jury renders a verdict and has been discharged, the court will not receive the testimony of jurors to impeach their verdict. This section codified this general rule and provided exceptions. State v. Carter, 55 N.C. App. 192, 284 S.E.2d 733 (1981).

This Section and § 8C-1, Rule 606(b) Do Not Conflict. — Although § 8C-1, Rule 606(b) is broader in some respects than this section, the two do not conflict; the exceptions to the anti-impeachment rule listed in this section are designed to protect the same interests as, and are entirely consistent with, the exceptions in Rule 606(b). State v. Lyles, 94 N.C. App. 240, 380 S.E.2d 390 (1989).

Determination of the existence and effect of jury misconduct is primarily for the trial court whose decision will be given great weight on appeal. State v. Gilbert, 47 N.C. App. 316, 267 S.E.2d 378 (1980).

Subsection (c) Strictly Construed. — As subsection (c) of this section is in derogation of the common law, it must be strictly construed. State v. Froneberger, 55 N.C. App. 148, 285 S.E.2d 119 (1981), appeal dismissed, 305 N.C. 397, 290 S.E.2d 367 (1982); State v. Costner, 80 N.C. App. 666, 343 S.E.2d 241, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 317 N.C. 709, 347 S.E.2d 444 (1986).

Jurors May Testify to Objective Events But Not Subjective Effect. — Jurors may testify regarding the objective events listed as exceptions in the statutes, but are prohibited from testifying to the subjective effect those matters had on their verdict. State v. Lyles, 94 N.C. App. 240, 380 S.E.2d 390 (1989).

Actual Prejudice from Influence of Jury Must Be Shown. — In instances where the contention is made by the defendant that the jury has been improperly influenced, it has been held that it must be shown that the jury was actually prejudiced against the defendant, to avail the defendant relief from the verdict, and the findings of the trial judge upon the evidence and facts are conclusive and not reviewable. State v. Gilbert, 47 N.C. App. 316, 267 S.E.2d 378 (1980).

Evidence of Juror's "Second Thoughts". — Vague hearsay evidence given by defense counsel's secretary, concerning "second thoughts" of a juror, is not sufficient to allow the alleged juror or any other juror to impeach his or her verdict. State v. Froneberger, 55 N.C. App. 148, 285 S.E.2d 119 (1981), appeal dismissed, 305 N.C. 397, 290 S.E.2d 367 (1982).

A juror's doubts were insufficient to impeach the defendant's verdict where these doubts arose after the defendant was convicted when the trial court corrected the verdict form, which had incorrectly captioned the name of another individual, had the foreperson sign it, and allowed the recalled jurors to view it. State v. Gilbert, 139 N.C. App. 657, 535 S.E.2d 94 (2000).

Juror's Knowledge of Possibility of Parole. — Testimony by a newspaper reporter that a juror told her that the jury had recommended the death penalty for defendant because the jurors knew that defendant would be eligible for parole in 20 years if he was sentenced to life imprisonment was not rendered admissible to impeach the verdict by subdivision (c)(1) of this section, since a juror's knowledge that there is a possibility of parole for a defendant would not "violate the defendant's constitutional right to confront the witnesses against him." State v. Cherry, 298 N.C. 86, 257 S.E.2d 551 (1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 941, 100 S. Ct. 2165, 64 L. Ed. 2d 796 (1980).

In a first-degree murder case, the trial court did not err in excluding from the record on appeal a newspaper clipping indicating that the possibility of parole was a major consideration in the jury's deliberation on whether to recommend the death penalty, since no purpose would have been served by inclusion of the newspaper clipping other than impeachment of the verdict. Any evidence relative to the jury's consideration of the possibility of parole would be excluded by subsection (a) of this section. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 355, 259 S.E.2d 752 (1979).

Juror's Questions to Professor Not Inappropriate. — Defendant was not entitled to relief under subsection (b) where a juror, who was enrolled in a psychology class, asked his professor if schizophrenics or paranoid schizophrenics commit violent acts. State v. Heatwole, 344 N.C. 1, 473 S.E.2d 310 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1122, 117 S. Ct. 1259, 137 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1997).

Use of Photographs in Jury Room. — In a first-degree murder case, the trial court did not err in excluding from the record on appeal a juror's affidavit stating in substance that photographic exhibits of the victim's body were taken into the jury room, since no purpose would have been served by inclusion of the juror's affidavit other than impeachment of the verdict. The affidavit concerning the pictures could not have been considered pursuant to subdivision (c)(1) of this section because the pictures had been admitted into evidence and in no event would consideration of them violate the defendant's constitutional right to confront the witnesses against him. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 355, 259 S.E.2d 752 (1979).

Observation of Codefendant in Handcuffs Prior to Defendant's Trial. — Affidavit of one of defendant's jurors, which stated that before defendant's trial some of defendant's jurors observed codefendant, who was tried separately, emerging from courtroom in handcuffs and assumed he had been convicted, did not contain any information permitted by subdivisions (c)(1) or (c)(2) of this section. State v. Ysaguire, 309 N.C. 780, 309 S.E.2d 436 (1983).

Juror Testimony on Effect of Extraneous Information Properly Excluded. — Hearing judge did not err by excluding juror testimony regarding how extraneous information affected jury's decision; although the official comment to § 8C-1, Rule 606 suggests that a juror is competent to testify regarding the effect of extraneous prejudicial information upon the jurors' mental processes, the comment inadvertently misstates the rule, since both this section and § 8C-1, Rule 606(b) unambiguously prohibit inquiry into the effect of anything occurring during deliberations upon jurors' minds. State v. Lyles, 94 N.C. App. 240, 380 S.E.2d 390 (1989).

Juror's Failure to Obey Instructions Not to Watch Television Program. — In prosecution for first-degree sexual offense, the defendant was not entitled to relief under this section, even though the foreman of the jury did not obey the instructions of the court and watched the television program on child abuse, where the matters he reported to the jury did not deal with the defendant or with the evidence introduced in the case. State v. Rosier, 322 N.C. 826, 370 S.E.2d 359 (1988).

Writing on Letter Was Extraneous Information and Matter Not in Evidence. — Where, while viewing an exhibit, one of the jurors peeled back the paper over the bottom of defendant's photograph, revealing the words, "Police Department, Wilson, North Carolina — 12291, 12-07-81" and where the jurors discussed the writing on the photograph as evidence that defendant had been in area in December 1981, a fact which, if true, contradicted the testimony of defendant's alibi witnesses, the writing on defendant's photograph was both "extraneous information" within the meaning of § 8C-1, Rule 606(b) and was a "matter not in evidence" which implicated defendant's confrontation right within the meaning of subdivision (c)(1) of this section because it was information dealing with the defendant and the case being tried which reached a juror without being introduced in evidence. State v. Lyles, 94 N.C. App. 240, 380 S.E.2d 390 (1989).

Later Statement by Juror Held Insufficient to Impeach. — Testimony by one of defendant's friends that, after the trial was over, he heard a juror state, "If he [defendant] wasn't guilty, the judge would have dismissed it," was insufficient by itself to indicate that the juror was unqualified to serve; furthermore, the witness' testimony seeking to impeach the verdict was incompetent. State v. Puckett, 46 N.C. App. 719, 266 S.E.2d 48 (1980), appeal dismissed, 300 N.C. 561, 270 S.E.2d 115 (1980).

Affidavits of three jurors, asserting that the jury's verdict, as reported by the foreman, was not a true verdict, but represented their answer to the foreman's question of whether defendant might have been guilty of some other like offense, but that all 12 jurors, when polled, agreed with the verdict of guilty, were not admissible to impeach the verdict. State v. Costner, 80 N.C. App. 666, 343 S.E.2d 241, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 317 N.C. 709, 347 S.E.2d 444 (1986).

Applied in State v. Hawkins, 59 N.C. App. 190, 296 S.E.2d 324 (1982).

§ 15A-1241. Record of proceedings.

(a) The trial judge must require that the reporter make a true, complete, and accurate record of all statements from the bench and all other proceedings except:

(1) Selection of the jury in noncapital cases;

(2) Opening statements and final arguments of counsel to the jury; and

(3) Arguments of counsel on questions of law.

(b) Upon motion of any party or on the judge's own motion, proceedings excepted under subdivisions (1) and (2) of subsection (a) must be recorded. The motion for recordation of jury arguments must be made before the commencement of any argument and if one argument is recorded all must be. Upon suggestion of improper argument, when no recordation has been requested or ordered, the judge in his discretion may require the remainder to be recorded.

(c) When a party makes an objection to unrecorded statements or other conduct in the presence of the jury, upon motion of either party the judge must reconstruct for the record, as accurately as possible, the matter to which objection was made.

(d) The trial judge may review the accuracy of the reporter's record of the proceedings, but may not make substantive changes in the transcript concerning his charge, rulings, and comments without notice to the State, the defense, and the reporter. When any correction of a transcript is ordered made by a judge, each party is entitled to receive, upon request, a copy of the transcript indicating the text as submitted by the reporter and as changed by the judge. Upon motion of any party, the judge must afford the parties a hearing upon any change ordered by the judge. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

Although the provisions of this section had not been spelled out in statutes before, the Commission had no special difficulty except with subsection (d). The Commission initially considered in the event of a dispute as to a transcript that a party should be allowed to submit the raw transcript of a challenged part of the record to the appellate court as an addendum to the record. It determined that interests of finality outweighed other considerations, and rejected the idea. In a case of serious abuse by a judge with respect to changes in a transcript, the Commission determined that the matter appropriately should be referred to the Judicial Standards Commission.

CASE NOTES

Trial court's failure to order transcript of sentencing hearing did not constitute prejudicial error. In the absence of an abuse of discretion, a judgment will not be disturbed because of either the sentencing procedure or procedural conduct. State v. Chandler, 100 N.C. App. 706, 398 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

Judge's chance encounters in a corridor with jurors during a recess in defendant's murder trial were not a "proceeding." Therefore, the recordation requirement of this section was not triggered, and defendant's federal constitutional right to due process was not implicated. State v. Hudson, 331 N.C. 122, 415 S.E.2d 732 (1992), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1055, 113 S. Ct. 983, 122 L. Ed. 2d 136, rehearing denied, 507 U.S. 967, 113 S. Ct. 1404, 122 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1993).

Private Bench Conferences Not "Statements from Bench." — The phrase "statements from the bench" in subsection (a) of this section does not include private bench conferences between trial judges and attorneys. State v. Cummings, 332 N.C. 487, 422 S.E.2d 692 (1992).

Failure of Defendant to Request Reconstruction. — The trial court did not violate the defendant's statutory right to recordation under this section by failing to record its bench conferences with counsel where defendant never requested that the subject matter of a bench conference be reconstructed for the record. State v. Blakeney, 352 N.C. 287, 531 S.E.2d 799 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1117, 121 S. Ct. 868, 148 L. Ed. 2d 780 (2001).

Unrecorded Conference with Prospective Jurors Improper. — Trial court's excusal of prospective jurors as a result of its private unrecorded bench conferences with them, violated defendant's state constitutional right to be present at every stage of the trial and violated statutory requirements to make a true, complete and accurate record of the jury selection in a capital trial pursuant to subsection (a) of this section. State v. Smith, 326 N.C. 792, 392 S.E.2d 362 (1990).

Lack of Complete Record Harmless. — Based on the record facts and defendant's failure to specifically allege how he was prejudiced by the lack of complete recordation, the trial court's failure to require complete recordation of bench and chamber conferences was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Pittman, 332 N.C. 244, 420 S.E.2d 437 (1992).

Although the trial court erred in failing to have its ex parte conferences with prospective jurors recorded, this failure was harmless as it did not deprive defendant of a juror he would have been entitled to or result in the seating of a juror he would have rejected. State v. Williams, 339 N.C. 1, 452 S.E.2d 245 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 833, 116 S. Ct. 109, 133 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1995), overruled in part, State v. Warren, 347 N.C. 309, 492 S.E.2d 609 (1997).

The trial court did not violate a capital murder defendant's rights under this section by conducting a hearing without recording the proceedings, where the court entered an amended order changing the forensic psychiatrist assigned to evaluate the defendant's competency to stand trial and transferring the defendant from prison to a hospital, but there was nothing in the record to suggest that the trial court conducted a hearing concerning the hospital's request to amend the order, and there was a full record concerning the State's motion for a competency evaluation. State v. Davis, 349 N.C. 1, 506 S.E.2d 455 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1161, 119 S. Ct. 2053, 144 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1999).

Trial judge's failure to record his ex parte communication with one prospective juror, as required by this section, was harmless error, because the record adequately revealed the substance of the unrecorded conversation and the juror was properly excused under §§ 9-6(a) and 9-6.1 "[b]ecause he was over sixty-five." State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

Ex Parte Communications. — The trial court's error in failing to record its ex parte communications with prospective jurors under this section was harmless where the questioning of prospective jurors in defendant's absence did not result in a jury composed differently from one which defendant might have obtained had he been present and participated in the process. State v. Cummings, 353 N.C. 281, 543 S.E.2d 844 (2001).

Private Bench Conferences Need Not Be Recorded. — This section does not require recordation of private bench conferences between trial judges and attorneys. State v. Williams, 339 N.C. 1, 452 S.E.2d 245 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 833, 116 S. Ct. 109, 133 L. Ed. 2d 61 (1995), overruled in part, State v. Warren, 347 N.C. 309, 492 S.E.2d 609 (1997).

Statements from the bench do not include routine bench conferences between the trial court and the attorneys. State v. Speller, 345 N.C. 600, 481 S.E.2d 284 (1997).

Substitution of Affidavit Not Adequate. — Where court reporter did not record bench conferences, as required by this section, the court would not substitute this statutory requirement for an affidavit made approximately three years after the event, as the affidavit was not a part of the record made of the trial. State v. McCarver, 329 N.C. 259, 404 S.E.2d 821 (1991).

Applied in State v. Soloman, 40 N.C. App. 600, 253 S.E.2d 270 (1979); State v. Colbert, 65 N.C. App. 762, 310 S.E.2d 145 (1984); State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

§ 15A-1242. Defendant's election to represent himself at trial.

A defendant may be permitted at his election to proceed in the trial of his case without the assistance of counsel only after the trial judge makes thorough inquiry and is satisfied that the defendant:

(1) Has been clearly advised of his right to the assistance of counsel, including his right to the assignment of counsel when he is so entitled;
(2) Understands and appreciates the consequences of this decision; and
(3) Comprehends the nature of the charges and proceedings and the range of permissible punishments. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is based upon A.B.A. Standards, Function of the Trial Judge § 6.6.

After adoption of this section by the Commission the Supreme Court of the United States decided Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 95 S. Ct. 2525, 45 L. Ed. 2d 562 (1975), holding that a person has a constitutional right to refuse counsel and represent himself. As written, the section does not conflict with Faretta, as the case stresses that the waiver of counsel must be knowing and intelligent. The case does require that the judge exercise his discretion to allow self-representation, however, once he finds that the criteria for waiver have been met.

CASE NOTES

The inquiry required by this section satisfies constitutional requirements. State v. Carter, 338 N.C. 569, 451 S.E.2d 157 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1107, 115 S. Ct. 2256, 132 L. Ed. 2d 263 (1995).

The provisions of this section are mandatory in every case where an accused requests to proceed pro se. State v. Michael, 74 N.C. App. 118, 327 S.E.2d 263 (1985); State v. Lyons, 77 N.C. App. 565, 335 S.E.2d 532 (1985); State v. White, 78 N.C. App. 741, 338 S.E.2d 614 (1986).

The inquiry required by this section is mandatory and must be made in every case in which a defendant elects to proceed without counsel. State v. Callahan, 83 N.C. App. 323, 350 S.E.2d 128 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 225, 353 S.E.2d 409 (1987).

A defendant's right to represent himself is guaranteed by the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution; by Article I, Section 23 of the North Carolina Constitution; and by this section. State v. LeGrande, 346 N.C. 718, 487 S.E.2d 727 (1997).

Section sets forth the prerequisites necessary before a defendant may waive his right to counsel and elect to represent himself at trial. State v. Gerald, 304 N.C. 511, 284 S.E.2d 312 (1981).

Compliance with this section fully satisfies the constitutional requirement that waiver of counsel must be knowing and voluntary. State v. Thacker, 301 N.C. 348, 271 S.E.2d 252 (1980); State v. Gerald, 304 N.C. 511, 284 S.E.2d 312 (1981); State v. Wells, 78 N.C. App. 769, 338 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

Applicability of Section. — Nothing in this section makes it inapplicable to defendants who are magistrates, attorneys or judges. Inquiry under this section is necessary whenever a defendant either implicitly or explicitly indicates a desire to waive the right to counsel. State v. Bullock, 316 N.C. 180, 340 S.E.2d 106 (1986).

Question Presented. — The issue is not whether defendant has the skill and training to represent himself adequately, but whether defendant is able to understand the consequences of waiving court appointed counsel and representing himself. State v. Gerald, 304 N.C. 511, 284 S.E.2d 312 (1981).

Thorough Examination of Waiver Required. — Where defendant proceeds on a waiver of counsel, this section requires a thorough examination of the waiver. State v. Hargrove, 104 N.C. App. 194, 408 S.E.2d 757, cert. denied, 330 N.C. 444, 412 S.E.2d 79 (1991).

A thorough inquiry into the three substantive elements of the statute, conducted at a preliminary stage of a proceeding, meets the requirements of this section, even if it is conducted by a judge other than the judge who presides at the subsequent trial. State v. Lamb, 103 N.C. App. 646, 406 S.E.2d 654 (1991).

What Record Must Show. — Waiver of counsel, like the waiver of all constitutional rights, must be knowing and voluntary, and the record must show that the defendant was literate and competent, that he understood the consequences of his waiver, and that, in waiving his right, he was voluntarily exercising his own free will. State v. Gerald, 304 N.C. 511, 284 S.E.2d 312 (1981).

Absent evidence that defendant was informed of the nature of the charges and the range of permissible punishments or that he understood and appreciated the consequences of proceeding without counsel, the court should not permit him to proceed pro se. State v. Graham, 76 N.C. App. 470, 333 S.E.2d 547 (1985); State v. Gordon, 79 N.C. App. 623, 339 S.E.2d 836 (1986).

The record must affirmatively show that the inquiry required by this section was made and that the defendant, by his answers, was literate, competent, understood the consequences of his waiver, and voluntarily exercised his own free will. State v. Callahan, 83 N.C. App. 323, 350 S.E.2d 128 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 225, 353 S.E.2d 409 (1987).

A written waiver of counsel is no substitute for actual compliance by the trial court with this section. State v. Wells, 78 N.C. App. 769, 338 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

Defendant's written waiver of counsel was not adequate to comply with this section, although it stated that defendant understood the charges against him, the nature of the punishment, and the nature of the proceedings, where the court failed to conduct the inquiry required by this section. State v. Hyatt, 132 N.C. App. 697, 513 S.E.2d 90 (1999).

Strict Compliance Required — The trial court's failure to comply with this section was plain error entitling the defendant to a new trial where the record indicated that the trial court discussed with him the consequences of his decision to represent himself and advised him of his right to assigned counsel but did not make any inquiry to satisfy itself that he comprehended "the nature of the charges and proceedings and the range of permissible punishments." State v. Stanback, 529 S.E.2d 229 (N.C. Ct. App. 2000).

No Right to Appear Both in Propria Persona and by Counsel. — A party has the right to appear in propria persona or, in the alternative, by counsel. There is no right to appear both in propria persona and by counsel. State v. Parton, 303 N.C. 55, 277 S.E.2d 410 (1981), overruled on other grounds, State v. Freeman, 314 N.C. 432, 333 S.E.2d 743 (1985).

While defendant had the right to appear either in propria persona or by counsel, defendant had no right under U.S. Const., Amend. VI to serve as co-counsel with his court-appointed attorney. State v. Parton, 303 N.C. 55, 277 S.E.2d 410 (1981), overruled on other grounds, State v. Freeman, 314 N.C. 432, 333 S.E.2d 743 (1985).

Procedure upon Indication of Problem with Counsel. — When defendant expresses to the trial court that there is a problem with his counsel, the trial court should conduct an inquiry out of the presence of the jury to determine the nature of the problem, the extent of which should be as necessitated by the circumstances. If defendant clearly indicates a desire to have counsel removed and proceed pro se, then the trial judge should make further inquiry; he should advise defendant of his right to represent himself, and determine whether defendant understands the consequences of his decision and voluntarily and intelligently wishes to waive his rights. State v. Gerald, 304 N.C. 511, 284 S.E.2d 312 (1981).

Although the better practice when a defendant indicates problems with his counsel is for the court to inquire whether defendant wishes to conduct his own defense, it is not reversible error for the court not to do so when there has been no intimation that defendant desires to represent himself. Each case must be considered on its own merits. State v. Gerald, 304 N.C. 511, 284 S.E.2d 312 (1981).

Only if a defendant clearly expresses his desire to have counsel removed and to proceed pro se is the trial court obligated to make further inquiry pursuant to this section; in the absence of such an expression by defendant of a desire to proceed pro se, when faced with a claim of conflict between defendant and his attorney, the trial court must determine only that the defendant's present counsel is able to render competent assistance and that the nature of the conflict will not render such assistance ineffective. State v. Johnson, 341 N.C. 104, 459 S.E.2d 246 (1995).

Statements of a desire not to be represented by court-appointed counsel do not amount to expressions of an intention to represent oneself. State v. Hutchins, 303 N.C. 321, 279 S.E.2d 788 (1981).

Failure to Conduct Inquiry. — Where defendant employed counsel who were ready to proceed to trial and in fact demanded trial when the State requested a second continuance, but thereafter, when differences between defendant and his counsel necessitated counsel's withdrawal, defendant attempted to employ other counsel but understandably could not find anyone who would attempt to defend him, with only a few days' preparation time, on charges as serious as the ones he faced, it was prejudicial error for the trial court to proceed to trial without conducting the statutory inquiry in order to clearly establish whether defendant voluntarily, knowingly and intelligently waived his right to counsel. State v. Bullock, 316 N.C. 180, 340 S.E.2d 106 (1986).

In the absence of (1) a clear indication by defendant that he wished to proceed pro se, and (2) the inquiry required by this section, it was error to permit defendant to go to trial without the assistance of counsel. State v. White, 78 N.C. App. 741, 338 S.E.2d 614 (1986).

Absent a clear indication by defendant that he desired to proceed pro se, and absent the inquiries required by this section, the court erred in requiring defendant to proceed pro se at suppression hearing. State v. Gordon, 79 N.C. App. 623, 339 S.E.2d 836 (1986).

When there is no evidence in the record that the trial court, on defendant's waiver of counsel, made a thorough inquiry sufficient to comport with the dictates of this section, due process requirements have not been met. And where the court signs a certification indicating that this procedure has been followed, but the record belies that fact, the waiver will be invalidated. State v. Warren, 82 N.C. App. 84, 345 S.E.2d 437 (1986).

Prejudicial error occurred where judge, without making the mandated inquiry, allowed defendant to speak for himself at a point where his lawyer would most probably have sought a mistrial. State v. Godwin, 95 N.C. App. 565, 383 S.E.2d 234 (1989).

Inquiry Not Required Where Defendant Forfeits Right to Counsel — The defendant forfeited his right to counsel and the trial court did not err by requiring him to proceed pro se, without conducting an inquiry pursuant to this section, where: he was twice appointed counsel as an indigent, each time releasing his appointed counsel and retaining private counsel, was disruptive in the courtroom, and assaulted his attorney, resulting in an additional month's delay in the trial. State v. Montgomery, 138 N.C. App. 521, 530 S.E.2d 66 (2000).

Failure to Record Bench Conferences and In-Chamber Proceedings. — Although trial court's partial denial of defendant's motion for complete recordation, insofar as it precluded recordation of bench conferences and in-chamber proceedings concerning jury instructions, may have constituted error under the applicable statutes, defendant was not prejudiced as a result thereof. State v. Bacon, 326 N.C. 404, 390 S.E.2d 327 (1990).

Remand for Noncompliance. — Where the record reflected that this section was not complied with, the judgment would be vacated and the case remanded for a determination of whether defendant was entitled to have counsel appointed to represent her. State v. Wells, 78 N.C. App. 769, 338 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

Standby Counsel Not a Satisfactory Substitute. — Neither the statutory responsibilities of standby counsel under § 15A-1243, nor the actual participation of standby counsel, is a satisfactory substitute for the right to counsel in the absence of a knowing and voluntary waiver. State v. Dunlap, 318 N.C. 384, 348 S.E.2d 801 (1986).

New Trial Where Judge Did Not Advise Defendant. — Where the trial judge did not advise defendant of the consequences of her decision to proceed pro se, or the nature of the charges and proceedings and the range of permissible punishments, defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Lyons, 77 N.C. App. 565, 335 S.E.2d 532 (1985).

Where the trial judge failed to make the inquiry mandated by this section before permitting the defendant to proceed to trial without counsel, the defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Dunlap, 318 N.C. 384, 348 S.E.2d 801 (1986).

Where the trial court failed to make any inquiry of defendant concerning whether he understood and appreciated the dangers and disadvantages of self-representation or whether he understood the nature of the charges, proceedings, and the range of permissible punishment he faced and there was nothing in the record which showed defendant understood or appreciated the consequences of proceeding pro se nor was there anything in the record which showed defendant understood the nature of the charges and proceedings and the range of permissible punishments. Having a bench conference with defense counsel was insufficient to satisfy the mandate of this section, therefore, defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Pruitt, 322 N.C. 600, 369 S.E.2d 590 (1988).

New Trial Where Proceedings Were Not Recorded. — Although the State noted in its brief that the trial judge addressed defendant pursuant to this section, where the proceedings were not recorded by the court reporter, so that the record was silent as to what questions were asked of defendant and what his responses were, defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Callahan, 83 N.C. App. 323, 350 S.E.2d 128 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 225, 353 S.E.2d 409 (1987).

Having refused to cooperate with appointed counsel and chosen to represent himself, defendant could not later complain that he was entitled to substitute counsel because he would not cooperate with the first one. State v. Kuplen, 316 N.C. 387, 343 S.E.2d 793 (1986).

Fact that defendant chose to represent himself only because trial court refused to appoint substitute counsel did not constitute a violation of his constitutional rights, as an indigent defendant has the right to appointed counsel, but not to counsel of his choice. State v. Kuplen, 316 N.C. 387, 343 S.E.2d 793 (1986).

Presumption from Written Waiver Certified by Court. — When a defendant executes a written waiver which is in turn certified by the trial court, the waiver of counsel will be presumed to have been knowing, intelligent, and voluntary. State v. Hargrove, 104 N.C. App. 194, 408 S.E.2d 757, cert. denied, 330 N.C. 444, 412 S.E.2d 79 (1991).

Defendant knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waived her right to counsel where the trial judge explained to the defendant the maximum penalties for the charges against her and emphasized the seriousness of her plight, and defendant stated on several occasions during the judge's explanations that she understood her situation completely, that she did not want counsel to represent her, and that she wanted to represent herself. State v. Seraphem, 90 N.C. App. 368, 368 S.E.2d 643 (1988).

The defendant's waiver of counsel was knowing, intelligent and voluntary where the trial court apprised the defendant, who, on the day of the trial, rid himself of his attorney of more than a year in the name of strategy, not only of his right to counsel—though not necessarily his right to "fire" counsel and have more appointed—but also of the possible consequences of his "less-than-prudent" decision. Additionally, the trial court asked the counsel to remain for the duration of the trial and the defendant continued to confer with him, thus availing himself of his expertise and experience. State v. Brooks, 138 N.C. App. 185, 530 S.E.2d 849 (2000).

Judgment Vacated Where Transcript Showed Failure to Follow Procedure. — Where although the court signed a certification indicating that the procedure set out under this section had been followed, the transcripts, taken at the time the waiver was signed and at the time at which defendant entered his guilty plea, show that the proper procedure was not followed, the judgment entered would be vacated and the case would be remanded for a determination of whether defendant was entitled to have counsel appointed to represent him in the action. State v. Hardy, 78 N.C. App. 175, 336 S.E.2d 661 (1985).

Request to Proceed Pro Se Properly Granted. — Trial court properly granted defendant's request to proceed pro se where the trial court conducted the required inquiry and entered an order committing defendant to mental hospital for evaluation of his competency to proceed and defendant was found to be competent to proceed to trial and waive representation by an attorney. State v. LeGrande, 346 N.C. 718, 487 S.E.2d 727 (1997).

Based on defendant's prior experience with a capital trial, his familiarity with the criminal justice system and the detailed warnings and explanations of the consequences of proceeding pro se provided by the trial court, there was not error in the decision to allow defendant to proceed pro se. State v. Flowers, 347 N.C. 1, 489 S.E.2d 391 (1997).

The defendant's waiver of appointed counsel and his decision to proceed pro se were knowing and voluntary, where he completed a waiver of counsel form that followed this section and was certified by the trial court. State v. Love, 131 N.C. App. 350, 507 S.E.2d 577 (1998), aff'd, 350 N.C. 586, 516 S.E.2d 382 (1999).

Applied in State v. Brincefield, 43 N.C. App. 49, 258 S.E.2d 81 (1979); State v. Brooks, 49 N.C. App. 14, 270 S.E.2d 592 (1980); State v. Simmons, 56 N.C. App. 34, 286 S.E.2d 898 (1982); State v. McCrowre, 312 N.C. 478, 322 S.E.2d 775 (1984); State v. Heatwole, 344 N.C. 1, 473 S.E.2d 310 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1122, 117 S. Ct. 1259, 137 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1997).

When a defendant has elected to proceed without the assistance of counsel, the trial judge in his discretion may determine that standby counsel should be appointed to assist the defendant when called upon and to bring to the judge's attention matters favorable to the defendant upon which the judge should rule upon his own motion. Appointment and compensation of standby counsel shall be in accordance with rules adopted by the Office of Indigent Defense Services. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 2000-144, s. 30.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is based upon A.B.A. Standards, Function of the Trial Judge § 6.7.

A concurrent amendment to G.S. 7A-452 provides for compensation of standby counsel.

Cross References. — For the Indigent Defense Services Act, see Chapter 7A, Subchapter IX, Article 39B, § 7A-498 et seq.

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2000-144, s. 30, effective July 1, 2001, substituted "determine that standby counsel should be appointed" for "appoint standby counsel" in the first sentence, and added the last sentence.

CASE NOTES

Standby Counsel Not Sufficient Absent Voluntary Waiver of Right to Counsel. — Neither the statutory responsibilities of standby counsel under this section, nor the actual participation of standby counsel, is a satisfactory substitute for the right to counsel in the absence of a knowing and voluntary waiver. State v. Dunlap, 318 N.C. 384, 348 S.E.2d 801 (1986).

Neither the statutory responsibilities of standby counsel, nor the actual participation of standby counsel is a satisfactory substitute for the right to counsel in the absence of a knowing and voluntary waiver. State v. Pruitt, 322 N.C. 600, 369 S.E.2d 590 (1988).

Waiver of Right to Counsel. — Trial court erred by allowing standby counsel's motion, filed over pro se defendant's objection, that he and other attorney be appointed as counsel to represent defendant for the limited purpose of litigating his capacity to knowingly and intelligently waive his right to counsel. State v. Thomas, 346 N.C. 135, 484 S.E.2d 368 (1997).

Intervention by Motion. — When trial court allowed attorney, in his capacity as standby counsel, to intervene by motion in a case, over defendant's objection, it exceeded the authority granted by statute. State v. Thomas, 346 N.C. 135, 484 S.E.2d 368 (1997).

Appointment of standby counsel is a discretionary matter for the trial judge; thus, the standard of review is abuse of discretion. State v. Seraphem, 90 N.C. App. 368, 368 S.E.2d 643 (1988).

Appointment of Court-Appointed Counsel as Standby Counsel Held Proper. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion in appointing as standby counsel, court-appointed counsel removed on motion of defendant, where defendant did not attempt to replace standby counsel, did not question his competence, and conferred with counsel repeatedly during trial. See State v. Seraphem, 90 N.C. App. 368, 368 S.E.2d 643 (1988).

Denial of Standby Counsel Held Proper. — Defendant had no right to standby counsel, and the court did not abuse its discretion in denying such counsel where defendant requested it, the motion was granted, defendant changed his mind and elected not to use standby counsel, defendant later requested such counsel again, and the court refused. State v. Brooks, 49 N.C. App. 14, 270 S.E.2d 592 (1980), appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 723, 276 S.E.2d 285 (1981).

Applied in State v. Brincefield, 43 N.C. App. 49, 258 S.E.2d 81 (1979); State v. Tripp, 52 N.C. App. 244, 278 S.E.2d 592 (1981); State v. Luker, 65 N.C. App. 644, 310 S.E.2d 63 (1983).

Participation of Standby Counsel Upheld. — Where standby counsel participated only "when called upon" by defendant and in a manner that was not at odds with defendant's right to conduct his own defense, trial court did not err in permitting such participation. State v. Thomas, 134 N.C. App. 560, 518 S.E.2d 222 (1999), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 351 N.C. 119, 541 S.E.2d 468 (1999).

SUBCHAPTER XIII. DISPOSITION OF DEFENDANTS.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This Subchapter attempts to gather in one place many of the provisions relating to sentencing and correctional procedures which previously were scattered among Chapter 15, Chapter 148 and case law. In addition it makes some substantial modification in current law or practice. Although in many provisions there is no longer any substantial identity between the two, this Subchapter used as a starting point the sentencing provisions of the Study Draft of the Federal Criminal Code. It might be helpful to point out some of the approaches incorporated in that federal study draft which were rejected by the Commission. Among these are the possibility of unconditional discharge of a person who had been convicted of an offense, a requirement that to place a defendant in prison rather than on probation required an affirmative finding of particular reasons by the court, the prohibition of a suspended sentence at the time probation was imposed and the use instead of a hearing to determine whether imprisonment should be imposed in case of a probation violation, and very substantial (as much as five years) mandatory parole as part of the sentence to imprisonment.

This Subchapter does not attempt to deal with "sentencing" that occurs without a judgment, particularly the matters of continuing prayer for judgment or the entry of a prejudgment conditional discharge under G.S. 90-96.

Although unrelated to sentencing, it was felt that provisions for commitment of persons found not guilty by reason of insanity appropriately could be located here as a "disposition of defendants."

Order of Commitment to Imprisonment.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Comments" under this Article are reprinted from the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly.

§ 15A-1301. Order of commitment to imprisonment when not otherwise specified.

When a judicial official orders that a defendant be imprisoned he must issue an appropriate written commitment order. When the commitment is to a sentence of imprisonment, the commitment must include the identification and class of the offense or offenses for which the defendant was convicted and, if the sentences are consecutive, the maximum sentence allowed by law upon conviction of each offense for the punishment range used to impose the sentence for the class of offense and prior record or conviction level, and, if the sentences are concurrent or consolidated, the longest of the maximum sentences allowed by law for the classes of offense and prior record or conviction levels upon conviction of any of the offenses. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, s. 4; 1993, c. 538, s. 11; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section provides a blanket authorization for the preparation of orders of commitment when there is no other specific authorization. Specific provision for pretrial commitment is contained in G.S. 15A-521. G.S. 15A-1353 provides for the commitment of convicted defendants. This general provision would provide authority for commitment orders in connection with imprisonment for contempt and other instances when no specific provision is made.

Defendants Found Not Guilty by Reason of Insanity.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Comments" under this Article are reprinted from the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly.

§ 15A-1321. Automatic civil commitment of defendants found not guilty by reason of insanity.

(a) When a defendant charged with a crime, wherein it is not alleged that the defendant inflicted or attempted to inflict serious physical injury or death, is found not guilty by reason of insanity by verdict or upon motion pursuant to G.S. 15A-959(c), the presiding judge shall enter an order finding that the defendant has been found not guilty by reason of insanity of a crime and committing the defendant to a State 24-hour facility designated pursuant to G.S. 122C-252. The court order shall also grant custody of the defendant to a law enforcement officer who shall take the defendant directly to that facility. Proceedings thereafter are in accordance with Part 7 of Article 5 of Chapter 122C of the General Statutes.

(b) When a defendant charged with a crime, wherein it is alleged that the defendant inflicted or attempted to inflict serious physical injury or death, is found not guilty by reason of insanity, by verdict, or upon motion pursuant to G.S. 15A-959(c), notwithstanding any other provision of law, the presiding judge shall enter an order finding that the defendant has been found not guilty by reason of insanity of a crime and committing the defendant to a Forensic Unit operated by the Department of Health and Human Services, where the defendant shall reside until the defendant's release in accordance with Chapter 122C of the General Statutes. The court order shall also grant custody of the defendant to a law enforcement officer who shall take the defendant directly to the facility. Proceedings not inconsistent with this section shall thereafter be in accordance with Part 7 of Article 5 of Chapter 122C of the General Statutes. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1983, c. 380, s. 3; 1985, c. 589, s. 10; 1987, c. 596, s. 6; 1991, c. 37, s. 1; 1998-212, s. 12.35B(a).)

At the same time that recent constitutional decisions have focused on the commitment for incapacity of persons charged with crimes, parallel developments in the area of purely civil commitment have resulted in substantially modified and improved civil commitment procedure. This Article will take advantage of that new procedure.

There are three occasions for the consideration of standards of mental competency, each to be measured by a different test. Thus, in chronological order, the first test relates to the person's mental capacity to commit the crime, that is whether he has sufficient understanding and competency for society to hold him accountable for his acts. The second time at which a question of mental capacity is raised is when the trial occurs. The entirely different question then is whether the person has sufficient competency and understanding to participate in the trial and understand the significance of the events. For a person to have been found not guilty by reason of insanity, he must have failed the first test and passed the second test. At this juncture, society is faced with an individual who has been determined not responsible for a crime, but who is competent for some purposes. There must then be a determination whether that person is mentally incompetent and dangerous so that he must be committed on a basis unrelated to the fact that he has been accused of a crime and found not guilty. This is the third occasion.

Since the individual has been found not guilty of the crime, he is free from the criminal charge and is free to go if no other procedures are initiated. This Article provides that if it does appear to the judge that there is a question as to whether the person is mentally ill and dangerous, he may take the initial steps required to begin the standard procedures for determining whether or not a person should be civilly committed in accordance with the normal civil commitment procedure.

CASE NOTES

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under former § 122-84.1, or under this section as it read prior to the 1991 amendment.

Determination of Danger to Self or Others. — The gist of this section is that the trial judge shall hold a defendant who is acquitted on the grounds of insanity for further hearings to determine whether he is imminently dangerous to himself or others. State v. Harris, 306 N.C. 724, 295 S.E.2d 391 (1982).

Instruction Required upon Request of Defendant Interposing Insanity Defense. — Upon request, a defendant who interposed a defense of insanity to a criminal charge was entitled to a jury instruction by the trial judge setting out commitment procedures. State v. Bundridge, 294 N.C. 45, 239 S.E.2d 811 (1978); State v. Harris, 306 N.C. 724, 295 S.E.2d 391 (1982).

Failure to instruct as to this section might tend to cause the jury to return a verdict of guilty to ensure that the defendant would be incarcerated for the safety of the public and for his own safety; by giving the gist of this section, the court removes this confusion and puts the trial back upon an even keel; and giving a more detailed instruction than requested by defendant did not result in prejudicial error. State v. Harris, 306 N.C. 724, 295 S.E.2d 391 (1982).

Pattern Jury Instruction as to Commitment Hearing Procedures. — Pattern jury instruction in N.C.P.I. — Crim. 304.10 which informed the jury of the commitment hearing procedures in this section and § 15A-1322 adequately charged the jury regarding procedures under acquittal on the ground of insanity. State v. Allen, 322 N.C. 176, 367 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Effect of Finding of Not Guilty by Reason of Insanity. — A finding of not guilty by reason of insanity is not the same as an acquittal, nor does it result in defendant's being found guilty of a lesser degree of homicide. It simply means that the defendant is absolved from criminal responsibility for his act and cannot be punished for it. Instead, defendant, upon appropriate findings by the trial court, may be involuntarily committed to a state mental health facility. State v. Marley, 321 N.C. 415, 364 S.E.2d 133 (1988).

For example of proper jury instruction regarding involuntary commitment procedures should defendant be found not guilty by reason of insanity and concomitant responsive argument by district attorney, see State v. Coppage, 94 N.C. App. 630, 381 S.E.2d 169, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 547, 385 S.E.2d 503 (1989), decided prior to 1991 amendment.

Applied in State v. Adcock, 310 N.C. 1, 310 S.E.2d 587 (1983).

If the judge finds that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant-respondent is mentally ill, as defined in G.S. 122C-3, and is dangerous to himself or others, and the judge determines upon appropriate findings of fact that it is appropriate to proceed under the provisions of this Article, he may order that the respondent be held under appropriate restraint pending proceedings under G.S. 15A-1321. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1985, c. 589, s. 12.)

Article 81.

General Sentencing Provisions.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This Article collects various provisions that apply to sentencing without regard to the nature of the sentence.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article derives from those appearing in the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly, as revised by the Commission.

§ 15A-1331. Authorized sentences; conviction.

(a) The criminal judgment entered against a person in either district or superior court shall be consistent with the provisions of Article 81B of this Chapter and contain a sentence disposition consistent with that Article, unless the offense for which his guilt has been established is not covered by that Article.

(b) For the purpose of imposing sentence, a person has been convicted when he has been adjudged guilty or has entered a plea of guilty or no contest. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1993, c. 538, s. 12; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section collects in one place the possible sentence alternatives available upon conviction, but is intended to have no substantive impact. For example, if a provision defining an offense provided only a fine upon conviction, this section would not override it and permit improvement as well.

CASE NOTES

In using the word "adjudged" in subsection (b) of this section with respect to determining when a person has been "convicted" of an offense, the legislature was not referring to the formal entry of judgment by the court but rather to the return by the jury of a verdict of guilty. State v. Fuller, 48 N.C. App. 418, 268 S.E.2d 879, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 403, 273 S.E.2d 448 (1980).

Plea of No Contest Considered Conviction. — Defendant was convicted of the prior offense for purposes of assessing prior record level points when he entered plea of no contest, even though no final judgment had been entered. State v. Hatcher, 136 N.C. App. 524, 524 S.E.2d 815 (2000).

The Fair Sentencing Act does not require a defendant to forego all possible defenses before he may take advantage of statutory mitigating factors. State v. Puckett, 66 N.C. App. 600, 312 S.E.2d 207 (1984).

Sentence fixing identical minimum and maximum terms of imprisonment is invalid. State v. Teat, 24 N.C. App. 621, 211 S.E.2d 816, cert. denied, 286 N.C. 726, 213 S.E.2d 725 (1975); State v. Teachey, 26 N.C. App. 338, 215 S.E.2d 805, appeal dismissed, 288 N.C. 512, 219 S.E.2d 348 (1975), decided under former law.

Improper Correction of Sentence. — After granting defendant's motion for appropriate relief which correctly alleged that a prior trial judge had improperly corrected his sentence outside of defendant's presence when he discovered that the original sentence violated the Structured Sentencing Act, the trial judge properly resentenced defendant to the same amount of time. State v. Roberts, 351 N.C. 325, 523 S.E.2d 417 (2000).

Applied in In re Greene, 297 N.C. 305, 255 S.E.2d 142 (1979); In re Gallimore, 59 N.C. App. 338, 296 S.E.2d 509 (1982); State v. Hasty, 133 N.C. App. 563, 516 S.E.2d 428 (1999); State v. Reaves, 142 N.C. App. 629, 544 S.E.2d 253 (2001).

(a) The following definitions apply in this section:

(1) Licensing agency. — Any department, division, agency, officer, board, or other unit of State or local government that issues licenses for licensing privileges.

(2) Licensing privilege. — The privilege of an individual to be authorized to engage in an activity as evidenced by the following licenses: regular and commercial drivers licenses, occupational licenses, hunting licenses and permits, and fishing licenses and permits.

(3) Occupational license. — A licensure, permission, certification, or similar authorization required by statute or rule to practice an occupation or business. The term does not include a tax license issued under Chapter 105 of the General Statutes, Article 7 of Chapter 153A of the General Statutes, or Article 9 of Chapter 160A of the General Statutes.

(b) Upon conviction of a felony, an individual automatically forfeits the individual's licensing privileges for the full term of the period the individual is placed on probation by the sentencing court at the time of conviction for the offense, if:

(1) The individual is offered a suspended sentence on condition the individual accepts probation and the individual refuses probation, or

(2) The individual's probation is revoked or suspended, and the judge makes findings in the judgment that the individual failed to make reasonable efforts to comply with the conditions of probation.

(c) Whenever an individual's licensing privileges are forfeited under this section, the judge shall make findings in the judgment of the licensing privileges held by the individual known to the court at that time, the drivers license number and social security number of the individual, and the beginning and ending date of the period of time of the forfeiture. The terms and conditions of the forfeiture shall be transmitted by the clerk of court to the Division of Motor Vehicles, in accordance with G.S. 20-24 and to the licensing agencies specified by the judge in the judgment. A licensing agency, upon receiving notice from the clerk of court, shall require the individual whose licensing privileges were forfeited to surrender the forfeited license issued by the agency and shall not reissue a license to that individual during the period of forfeiture as stated in the notice. Licensing agencies are authorized to establish procedures to implement this section.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the court may order that an individual whose licensing privileges are forfeited under this section be granted a limited driving privilege in accordance with the provisions of G.S. 20-179.3. (1994, Ex. Sess., c. 20, ss. 1, 5.)

§ 15A-1332. Presentence reports.

(a) Presentence Reports Generally. — To obtain a presentence report, the court may order either a presentence investigation as provided in subsection (b) or a presentence commitment for study as provided in subsection (c).

(b) Presentence Investigation. — The court may order a probation officer to make a presentence investigation of any defendant. The court may order the investigation only after conviction unless the defendant moves for an earlier presentence investigation. A motion for an earlier presentence investigation may be addressed only to the judge of the session of court for which the defendant's case is calendared or, if the case has not been calendared, to a resident superior court judge if the case is in the jurisdiction of the superior court or to the chief district court judge if the case is in the jurisdiction of the district court. When the court orders a presentence investigation, the probation officer must promptly investigate all circumstances relevant to sentencing and submit either a written report or an oral report either on the record or with defense counsel and the prosecutor present. The report may include sentence recommendations only if such recommendations are requested by the court.

(c) Presentence Commitment for Study. — When the court desires more detailed information as a basis for determining the sentence to be imposed than can be provided by a presentence investigation, the court may commit a defendant to the Department of Correction for study for the shortest period necessary to complete the study, not to exceed 90 days, if that defendant has been charged with or convicted of any felony or a Class A1 or Class 1 misdemeanor crime or crimes for which he may be imprisoned for more than six months and if he consents. The period of commitment must end when the study is completed, and may not exceed 90 days. The Department must conduct a complete study of a defendant committed to it under this subsection, inquiring into such matters as the defendant's previous delinquency or criminal experience, his social background, his capabilities, his mental, emotional and physical health, and the availability of resources or programs appropriate to the defendant. Upon completion of the study or the end of the 90-day period, whichever occurs first, the Department of Correction must release the defendant to the sheriff of the county in which his case is docketed. The Department must forward the study to the clerk in that county, including whatever recommendations the Department believes will be helpful to a proper resolution of the case. When a defendant is returned from a presentence commitment for study, the conditions of pretrial release which obtained for the defendant before the commitment continue until judgment is entered, unless the conditions are modified under the provisions of G.S. 15A-534(e). (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1981, c. 377, s. 1; 1993, c. 538, s. 13; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1995, c. 507, s. 19.5(e).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section provides for two kinds of presentence reports: A presentence report rendered by a probation officer, (referred to in this Article as a "presentence investigation") and a presentence in-custody study of the defendant by the Department of Correction (referred to in this Article as a "presentence commitment for study"). The provisions in subsection (b) on presentence investigation by a probation officer are substantially similar to present law, except this subsection makes presentence reports entirely discretionary with the judge, and permits the investigation only after guilt has been established, unless the defendant moves for an earlier presentence investigation. The Commission was concerned about the outcome of the trial being affected by the gathering of evidence which, although inadmissible, might still be influential. Since the defendant in many cases, however, might be interested in obtaining sentencing as soon as possible following determination of guilt, the defendant should have the option of having the presentence report available immediately upon conviction if he so desires.

As a further safeguard, any presentence report must be known, or capable of being known, to the defendant or his lawyer. Thus, there can be no off-the-record oral report to the judge out of the presence of the defense counsel and district attorney. Subsection (c) is also similar to the provisions in present law except for the restriction that the presentence commitment for study be used only with the consent of the defendant. The Commission felt that the possibility of depriving the defendant of his liberty for a substantial period in a case in which he might be expected to be placed on probation was a possibility which should be avoided; therefore the procedure was made available only if the defendant consents.

CASE NOTES

In sentencing, the trial court is not confined to the evidence relating to the offense charged. It may inquire into such matters as age, character, education, environment, habits, mentality, propensities and record of the person about to be sentenced. And the court may inquire into alleged acts of misconduct in prison. State v. Locklear, 34 N.C. App. 37, 237 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, 293 N.C. 591, 238 S.E.2d 150 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 294 N.C. 210, 241 S.E.2d 65 (1978), decided under former § 15-198.

§ 15A-1333. Availability of presentence report.

(a) Presentence Reports and Sentencing Services Information Not Public Records. — A written presentence report, the record of an oral presentence report, and information obtained in the preparation of a sentencing plan by a sentencing services program under Article 61 of Chapter 7A are not public records and may not be made available to any person except as provided in this section.

(b) Access to Reports. — The defendant, his counsel, the prosecutor, or the court may have access at any reasonable time to a written presentence report or to any record of an oral presentence report. Access to a sentencing plan and information obtained in the preparation of a sentencing plan shall be in accordance with the comprehensive sentencing services program plan developed pursuant to G.S. 7A-774.

(c) Expunging Reports. — On motion of the defendant, the court in its discretion may order a written presentence report, the record of an oral presentence report, or a sentencing plan expunged from the court record. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 2000-67, s. 15.9(c).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is aimed at forbidding any use of the presentence report except in connection with the case for which it was made. Under subsection (b) only the defendant, his counsel, the prosecutor, or the court may obtain access to the report and the court may later expunge any report if the defendant seeks such expunction.

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2000-67, s. 1.1, provides: "This act shall be known as 'The Current Operations and Capital Improvements Appropriations Act of 2000'."

Session Laws 2000-67, s. 28.4, contains a severability clause.

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2000-67, s. 15.9(c), effective July 1, 2000, in subsection (a), inserted "and Sentencing Services Information" and inserted the language beginning "and information obtained and ending "Article 61 of Chapter 7A"; added the last sentence in subsection (b); and in subsection (c), inserted "or a sentencing plan"; and made stylistic changes.

§ 15A-1334. The sentencing hearing.

(a) Time of Hearing. — Unless the defendant waives the hearing, the court must hold a hearing on the sentence. Either the defendant or the State may, upon a showing which the judge determines to be good cause, obtain a continuance of the sentencing hearing.

(b) Proceeding at Hearing. — The defendant at the hearing may make a statement in his own behalf. The defendant and prosecutor may present witnesses and arguments on facts relevant to the sentencing decision and may cross-examine the other party's witnesses. No person other than the defendant, his counsel, the prosecutor, and one making a presentence report may comment to the court on sentencing unless called as a witness by the defendant, the prosecutor, or the court. Formal rules of evidence do not apply at the hearing.

(c) Sentence Hearing in Other District. — The judge who orders a presentence report may, in his discretion, direct that the sentencing hearing be held before him in another county or another district court district as defined in G.S. 7A-133 or superior court district or set of districts as defined in G.S. 7A-41.1, as the case may be, during or after the session in which the defendant was convicted. If sentence is imposed in a county other than the one where the defendant was convicted, the clerk of the county where sentence is imposed must forward the records of the sentencing proceeding to the clerk of the county of conviction.

(d) Sentencing in Capital Cases. — Sentencing in capital cases is governed by Article 100 of this Chapter.

(e) Procedure Applicable when Certain Prior Convictions May Be Used. — The procedure in G.S. 15A-980 governs if the State seeks to use a prior conviction in a sentencing hearing. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1983, c. 513, s. 3; 1987 (Reg. Sess., 1988), c. 1037, s. 66.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Primarily, this section codifies common law and constitutional provisions. It is not intended to require that the sentencing hearing be distinct from the trial itself. Under this section a sentencing hearing may be held immediately upon the return of the verdict or other determination of guilt. Subsection (b) contains a provision prohibiting in-court comments on sentencing by anyone other than one called as a witness. This was aimed at deterring incidents which sometimes occur in the more informal setting of a sentencing hearing. Subsection (c) presents the innovation of a sentencing hearing in a district other than the one where the trial was held, but only in cases in which the judge has ordered a presentence report.

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Evidence.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

This section — not a part of Article 100 — has no application to capital sentencing proceedings which are conducted pursuant to § 15A-2000. This, the only remnant of the common law right of allocution remaining in capital cases is the right to present strictly legal arguments to the presiding judge as to why no judgment should be entered. State v. Green, 336 N.C. 142, 443 S.E.2d 14, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1046, 115 S. Ct. 642, 130 L. Ed. 2d 547 (1994).

Hearing Must Be Fair and Just. — It would be unreasonable to require that all information in a presentence report be free of hearsay, nor should the formal rules of evidence apply to the testimony of witnesses in a sentencing hearing; but the sentencing hearing must be fair and just, and the trial court must provide the defendant with full opportunity to controvert hearsay and other representations in aggravation of punishment. State v. Locklear, 34 N.C. App. 37, 237 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, 293 N.C. 591, 238 S.E.2d 150 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 294 N.C. 210, 241 S.E.2d 65 (1978), decided under former § 15-198.

Subsection (b) Codifies Prior Law. — Subsection (b) of this section codifies the long standing rule in North Carolina that upon the conduct of a sentencing hearing, the court is permitted wide latitude and the rules of evidence are not strictly enforced. State v. Smith, 300 N.C. 71, 265 S.E.2d 164 (1980).

Appropriate Considerations in Imposing Sentence. — In determining the proper sentence to impose upon a convicted defendant, it is appropriate for the trial judge to inquire into such matters as the age, character, education, environment, habits, mentality, propensities, and record of the person about to be sentenced. Such an inquiry is needed if the imposition of the criminal sanction is to best serve the goals of the substantive criminal law. State v. Smith, 300 N.C. 71, 265 S.E.2d 164 (1980).

At a sentencing hearing the court may inquire into such matters as age, character, education, environment, habits, mentality, propensities, and record of a defendant, and may also inquire into alleged acts of misconduct in prison. State v. Rotenberry, 54 N.C. App. 504, 284 S.E.2d 197 (1981), cert. denied, 305 N.C. 306, 290 S.E.2d 705 (1982).

Victim impact statements may be used at sentencing hearings, except in capital cases. State v. Phillips, 325 N.C. 222, 381 S.E.2d 325 (1989).

Defendant Was Not Prejudiced by Allowing Victim's Attorney to Address the Court. — Although it was error to allow victim's attorney, who was not called as a witness at the sentencing hearing, to address the court, defendant was not prejudiced by the attorney's summary of defendant's criminal record and the attorney's statement that he thought defendant deserved a jail sentence; defendant's record had already been detailed to the court by the prosecutor and, in light of defendant's history of threats and violence toward his wife and the serious nature of the current charge, the attorney's comment did not contribute to defendant's receiving the sentence he did. State v. Jackson, 119 N.C. App. 285, 458 S.E.2d 235 (1995).

In determining the existence of aggravating factors, the trial court may rely on evidence presented at the sentencing hearing, or, when a defendant pleads guilty, on the circumstances surrounding the offense, including factual allegations contained in the indictment or other criminal process, despite the fact that the State fails to present evidence at sentencing. State v. Flowe, 107 N.C. App. 468, 420 S.E.2d 475, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 669, 424 S.E.2d 412 (1992).

Hearing Outside of Defendant's Presence. — The trial court acted within its discretion, under this section, in conducting the sentencing hearing after defendant fled the courthouse. State v. Miller, 142 N.C. App. 435, 543 S.E.2d 201 (2001).

Failure to Hold Hearing Not Prejudicial Where Defendant Had No Evidence to Submit. — Where, after the jury returned with its verdict, the trial judge asked if counsel were ready for the sentencing hearing, and then proceeded to sentence defendant without conducting the hearing as required by statute, inasmuch as defense counsel had conceded in oral argument that she had no further evidence to submit at the hearing, the defendant was not prejudiced by the trial judge's failure to conduct the hearing. State v. Sanders, 298 N.C. 512, 259 S.E.2d 258 (1979), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 973, 102 S. Ct. 523, 70 L. Ed. 2d 392 (1981).

Court Need Not Ask If Defendant Wishes to Address Court. — Trial court did not violate this section by sentencing defendant without first asking him if he wished to personally address the court, there having been sufficient compliance with the section where defendant's counsel was given the opportunity to speak in defendant's behalf. State v. Martin, 53 N.C. App. 297, 280 S.E.2d 775 (1981).

It is clear that this section, while permitting a defendant to speak at the sentencing hearing, does not require the trial court to personally address the defendant and ask him if he wishes to make a statement in his own behalf. State v. McRae, 70 N.C. App. 779, 320 S.E.2d 914 (1984), discretionary review denied, 313 N.C. 175, 326 S.E.2d 35 (1985).

Defendant's Rights Chilled. — Trial judge's statement, that having the defendant in a murder trial testify "would be a big mistake," regardless of the reasoning behind the statement, effectively chilled the defendant's right to testify in his own behalf. State v. Griffin, 109 N.C. App. 131, 425 S.E.2d 722 (1993).

After sentence had been entered, it was too late in the proceedings for defendant to inform the court of mitigating factors relevant to sentencing or to plead for leniency. State v. Rankins, 133 N.C. App. 607, 515 S.E.2d 748 (1999).

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure Compared. — Unlike F.R.Cr.P., Rule 32(a), this section does not mandate that a personal invitation to speak personally on his own behalf prior to sentencing be directed to the defendant himself rather than to his attorney. State v. Griffin, 57 N.C. App. 684, 292 S.E.2d 156, cert. denied, 306 N.C. 560, 295 S.E.2d 477 (1982).

A clear distinction exists between F.R.Cr.P., Rule 32(a) and subsection (b) of this section: The federal statute requires the district court affirmatively to afford a defendant an opportunity to speak before sentencing, while subsection (b) of this section provides simply that a defendant "may make a statement in his own behalf." Had the legislature intended for this section to impose the same requirement as the federal statute, it would have plainly said so. While it may be the better practice for the trial court specifically to inquire if the defendant wishes to speak prior to sentencing, this section does not command this practice. State v. Poole, 305 N.C. 308, 289 S.E.2d 335 (1982).

Opportunity to Prepare for Hearing. — Though the demands on the time of trial judges are very onerous, and they have broad discretion in conducting the business of the courts, the sentencing process, especially since the Fair Sentencing Act was adopted, is nevertheless an important part of any trial that must be fairly processed, and a hearing that a defendant has no opportunity to prepare for is not the kind of hearing that the act requires. State v. Ataei-Kachuei, 68 N.C. App. 209, 314 S.E.2d 751, cert. denied, 311 N.C. 763, 321 S.E.2d 146 (1984).

The defendant's rights to a fair trial and to equal protection of the law under the State and Federal Constitutions, and his rights pursuant to this section, were violated by the trial court's refusal to permit him to address the court prior to sentencing. State v. Miller, 137 N.C. App. 450, 528 S.E.2d 626 (2000).

Denial of Opportunity to Speak on Post-trial Motion. — Defendant was not denied the opportunity permitted by this section to make a statement in his own behalf where he made a statement at his sentencing hearing, and was only denied the opportunity to speak during the post-trial motion after the sentence was imposed. State v. Newton, 82 N.C. App. 555, 347 S.E.2d 81 (1986), cert. denied, 318 N.C. 699, 351 S.E.2d 756 (1987).

Continuance Within Discretion of Trial Judge. — Whether to allow a continuance of the sentencing hearing lies within the discretion of the judge upon a showing of what he determines to be good cause. State v. McLaurin, 41 N.C. App. 552, 255 S.E.2d 299 (1979), cert. denied, 300 N.C. 560, 270 S.E.2d 113 (1980).

Motion to continue sentencing hearing is addressed to the discretion of the trial judge who may grant it on good cause. State v. Blandford, 66 N.C. App. 348, 311 S.E.2d 338 (1984).

Good Cause Must Be Shown for Continuance. — Before a continuance of the sentencing hearing will be granted the defendant must show "good cause." That determination is within the trial judge's discretion. In re Gallimore, 59 N.C. App. 338, 296 S.E.2d 509 (1982); State v. Bush, 78 N.C. App. 686, 338 S.E.2d 590 (1986).

Good Cause Was Not Shown. — Where defendant argued that judge misapprehended the law and believed he had to sentence defendant to consecutive life terms for the rape and sex offense convictions and defendant contended that continuance would have enabled him to present evidence that might have resulted in concurrent rather than consecutive life terms, defendant did not demonstrate good cause to continue hearing since judge did not labor under a mistaken notion that statutes mandated consecutive life sentences for four of defendant's convictions and at hearing, State explicitly asked for consecutive terms, and defendant explicitly asked that sentences run concurrently. State v. Hewett, 93 N.C. App. 1, 376 S.E.2d 467 (1989).

Where the defendant offers no reason why the hearing should not proceed, the trial court does not abuse its discretion in denying the request for a continuance. State v. McKenzie, 122 N.C. App. 37, 468 S.E.2d 817 (1996).

No Duty of State to Move for Sentence Following Continuance. — There was no duty of the state to move for the imposition of a sentence within 30 days from the time the prayer for judgment was continued, and when it failed to do so, the court did not lose its jurisdiction to impose a sentence. State v. Absher, 335 N.C. 155, 436 S.E.2d 365 (1993).

Trial in One County and Sentencing in Another. — The court was authorized by subsection (c) of this section to enter judgment and commitment against defendant in one county upon a verdict of guilty returned by a jury after trial in another county, where the court had ordered a presentence report, since defendant had been adjudged guilty in the latter county, even though prayer for judgment was continued in that county. State v. Fuller, 48 N.C. App. 418, 268 S.E.2d 879, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 403, 273 S.E.2d 448 (1980).

Showing Required on Appeal. — A judgment will not be disturbed because of sentencing procedures unless there is a showing of abuse of discretion, procedural conduct prejudicial to defendant, circumstances which manifest inherent unfairness and injustice, or conduct which offends the public sense of fair play. State v. Lane, 39 N.C. App. 33, 249 S.E.2d 449 (1978).

Stated in State v. Jones, 314 N.C. 644, 336 S.E.2d 385 (1985); State v. Smallwood, 112 N.C. App. 76, 434 S.E.2d 615 (1993).

Cited in State v. Haislip, 79 N.C. App. 656, 339 S.E.2d 832 (1986); State v. Mercer, 317 N.C. 87, 343 S.E.2d 885 (1986); State v. Rollins, 131 N.C. App. 601, 508 S.E.2d 554 (1998).

II. EVIDENCE.

Different evidentiary rules govern trial and sentencing procedures. State v. Locklear, 34 N.C. App. 37, 237 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, 293 N.C. 591, 238 S.E.2d 150 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 294 N.C. 210, 241 S.E.2d 65 (1978), decided under former § 15-198.

Formal Rules of Evidence Inapplicable at Sentence Hearing. — At the sentencing hearing, the defendant and the prosecutor may present witnesses and arguments on facts relevant to the sentencing hearing. However, the formal rules of evidence do not apply at the hearing. State v. Cooke, 87 N.C. App. 613, 361 S.E.2d 764 (1987).

Formal rules of evidence do not apply at sentencing hearings. State v. Graham, 61 N.C. App. 271, 300 S.E.2d 716, modified and aff'd, 309 N.C. 587, 308 S.E.2d 311 (1986).

Informal evidentiary procedures used at sentencing hearing were not dispositive of the question of the credibility of the State's evidence, inasmuch as this section expressly suspends application of the formal rules of evidence to a sentencing hearing. State v. Smaw, 96 N.C. App. 98, 384 S.E.2d 304 (1989).

The trial court committed no error by allowing an unsworn victim impact statement at the sentencing hearing where the rules of evidence do not apply. State v. Hendricks, 138 N.C. App. 668, 531 S.E.2d 896 (2000).

Judge should not base his sentence solely on "unsolicited whispered representations" or "rank hearsay." State v. Locklear, 34 N.C. App. 37, 237 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, 293 N.C. 591, 238 S.E.2d 150 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 294 N.C. 210, 241 S.E.2d 65 (1978), decided under former § 15-198.

Trial court did not violate this section by calling a detective on its own motion to testify at defendant's sentencing hearing. State v. Smith, 41 N.C. App. 600, 255 S.E.2d 210 (1979).

Defendant's escape pending his trial was clearly relevant information for the court to consider at sentencing hearing. State v. Rotenberry, 54 N.C. App. 504, 284 S.E.2d 197 (1981), cert. denied, 305 N.C. 306, 290 S.E.2d 705 (1982).

Evidence Held Proper Despite Inadmissibility at Trial. — In a first-degree rape case, there was no merit to defendant's contention that the trial court erred in admitting testimony at his sentencing hearing by a woman who recognized defendant as the man who raped her several days before the rape in question, though this testimony would not have been admissible at the guilt phase of the trial, since formal rules of evidence do not apply at a sentencing hearing, and there was no showing of abuse of discretion, as the sentence of life imprisonment for the rape conviction was mandated by statute. State v. Jackson, 302 N.C. 101, 273 S.E.2d 666 (1981).

A new sentencing hearing is required when a judge conducts an in camera victim input session and pronounces judgment without the defendant having an opportunity to refute any of the matters urged by the victim's statement. State v. Midyette, 87 N.C. App. 199, 360 S.E.2d 507 (1987), aff'd, 322 N.C. 108, 366 S.E.2d 440 (1988).

Insufficiency of Proof of Prior Convictions Not Waived. — While defendant may have waived challenge to the competency of assistant prosecutor's statements as to his prior convictions, defendant was not required to object at sentencing hearing in order to assert the insufficiency of the remarks as a matter of law to prove his prior convictions by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Mack, 87 N.C. App. 24, 359 S.E.2d 485 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 477, 364 S.E.2d 663 (1988).

§ 15A-1335. Resentencing after appellate review.

When a conviction or sentence imposed in superior court has been set aside on direct review or collateral attack, the court may not impose a new sentence for the same offense, or for a different offense based on the same conduct, which is more severe than the prior sentence less the portion of the prior sentence previously served. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section embodies generally the rule of North Carolina v. Pearce, 395 U.S. 711, 89 S. Ct. 2072, 89 S. Ct. 2089, 23 L. Ed. 2d 656 (1969), but does not allow a more severe sentence even if intervening factors would argue for a more severe sentence, as the Pearce decision permits.

CASE NOTES

Section applies to situation where trial judge is weighing aggravating and mitigating factors on resentencing a defendant or on sentencing a defendant after a new trial, and prohibits the trial judge from imposing a more severe sentence because of reweighing aggravating factors or because of new aggravating factors. State v. Williams, 74 N.C. App. 728, 329 S.E.2d 709 (1985).

This section did not apply on resentencing where the judge did not weigh aggravating factors but imposed the minimum sentence of 14 years prescribed by § 14-87(d). State v. Williams, 74 N.C. App. 728, 329 S.E.2d 709 (1985).

Section does not apply to a de novo appeal from the district court to the superior court. On appeal, de novo, the slate is clean; the possibility of a more severe sentence being imposed is a risk inherent to this type of review.

State v. Burbank, 59 N.C. App. 543, 297 S.E.2d 602 (1982).

Section Does Not Prevent Imposition of Sentence Prescribed by Statute. — While this section has been interpreted to prohibit the trial court from imposing a more severe sentence because of reweighing factors in aggravation or because of finding new factors in aggravation, where the trial court is required by statute to impose a particular sentence on resentencing, this section does not prevent the imposition of a more severe sentence. State v. Kirkpatrick, 89 N.C. App. 353, 365 S.E.2d 640 (1988).

Manner of Consolidating Convictions May Be Changed on Remand. — While this section prohibits trial courts from imposing stiffer sentences upon remand than were originally imposed, nothing prohibits the trial court from changing the way in which it consolidated convictions during a sentencing hearing prior to remand. State v. Ransom, 80 N.C. App. 711, 343 S.E.2d 232, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 712, 347 S.E.2d 450 (1986).

Resentencing Upheld. — Where defendant was originally given a 20 year prison sentence, based on 13 counts of breaking or entering and 13 counts of larceny, and after the 20 year sentence was overturned on grounds that the original sentence was in error because it consolidated crimes punishable by a maximum sentence of ten years yet sentenced defendant to 20 years in violation of § 15A-1340.4(b), defendant was sentenced to six three year prison sentences or a total of 18 years imprisonment, it was held that the trial court did not err in changing the way defendant's convictions were consolidated and that the sentence imposed did not violate this section. State v. Ransom, 80 N.C. App. 711, 343 S.E.2d 232, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 712, 347 S.E.2d 450 (1986).

Where defendant's case was remanded on appeal on grounds that defendant was improperly given a separate sentence in an habitual felon court, it was not error for the trial court to increase defendant's sentence on resentencing from three years to 15 years. State v. Kirkpatrick, 89 N.C. App. 353, 365 S.E.2d 640 (1988).

More Severe Sentence Imposed In Violation of Statute. — Where, in consolidated indictments having equal presumptive terms, as to each indictment involved, the trial court resentenced defendant to a term of years greater than the term of years attributable to the indictment at the original sentence, the trial court violated the Fair Sentencing Act by imposing a more severe sentence at resentencing than was imposed originally. State v. Hemby, 333 N.C. 331, 426 S.E.2d 77 (1993).

Because, as to each indictment involved, the trial court resentenced defendant to a term of years greater than the term of years attributable to the indictment at the original sentence, the trial court violated the Fair Sentencing Act by imposing a more severe sentence at resentencing than was imposed originally. State v. Nixon, 119 N.C. App. 571, 459 S.E.2d 49 (1995).

The trial court's imposition of a greater sentence on resentencing violated this section where the trial court first sentenced the defendant as a Class B2 felon to a term of imprisonment of 196 to 245 months under the Structured Sentencing Act (§ 15A-1340.10 et seq.), but at the defendant's resentencing hearing, the trial court sentenced the defendant as a Class C felon to a term of life imprisonment under the Fair Sentencing Act (§ 15A-1340.1 et seq.). State v. Holt, 144 N.C. App. 112, 547 S.E.2d 148 (2001).

Resentencing to Comply with Plea Agreement. — Where defendant's original sentence was the result of a negotiated plea agreement, when the trial court determined that an administrative error had been made on the judgments, the trial court did not err by correcting the error and resentencing defendant in compliance with his original plea agreement. State v. Harris, 115 N.C. App. 42, 444 S.E.2d 226 (1994).

Applied in State v. McLaurin, 41 N.C. App. 552, 255 S.E.2d 299 (1979); State v. Safrit, 47 N.C. App. 189, 266 S.E.2d 719 (1980); State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983); State v. Smith, 73 N.C. App. 637, 327 S.E.2d 44 (1985); State v. Hanes, 77 N.C. App. 222, 334 S.E.2d 444 (1985); State v. Jones, 314 N.C. 644, 336 S.E.2d 385 (1985).

CASE NOTES

Discretion to Impose Consecutive or Concurrent Sentences. — The imposition of consecutive sentences does not violate double jeopardy, as first degree burglary and common law robbery are distinct crimes. State v. Rich, 130 N.C. App. 113, 502 S.E.2d 49 (1998), cert. denied, 349 N.C. 237, 516 S.E.2d 605 (1998).

Construction with Fair Sentencing Act. — Court disagreed with defendant who asserted that there was no outright ban against consolidating offenses committed before the implementation of the Structured Sentencing Act with offenses committed after the act was implemented; crimes committed earlier were controlled by the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Branch, 134 N.C. App. 637, 518 S.E.2d 213 (1999).

Construction with Habitual Felon Act. — The Structured Sentencing Act, §§ 15A-1340.10 to 15A-1340.23, does not irreconcilably conflict with the Habitual Felon Act, §§ 14-7.1 to 14-7.6. State v. Parks, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 695, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 982 (2001).

Decisions Under Prior Law

Editor's Note. — The cases cited below were decided under former §§ 15A-1340.1, 15A-1340.4, and 15A-1380.1.

Minimum Sentence for Armed Robbery to Be Greater Than Presumptive Class D Sentence. — General Assembly intended to impose a minimum sentence for armed robbery greater than the presumptive sentence for a Class D felony, and also intended that the minimum be irreducible, except for credit for good behavior, notwithstanding any other provision of law. State v. Leeper, 59 N.C. App. 199, 296 S.E.2d 7, cert. denied, 307 N.C. 272, 299 S.E.2d 218 (1982).

The Fair Sentencing Act originated in a movement away from indeterminate sentencing and toward the imposition of presumptive terms for specified crimes. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, State v. Vandiver, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

The Fair Sentencing Act is an attempt to strike a balance between the inflexibility of a presumptive sentence which insures that punishment is commensurate with the crime, without regard to the nature of the offender; and the flexibility of permitting punishment to be adapted, when appropriate, to the particular offender. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988); State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985).

The Fair Sentencing Act (FSA) specifically provided that it was applicable only to felonies occurring on or after July 1, 1981; accordingly, since the offenses for which defendant was charged and convicted occurred before the effective date of the FSA, the trial court correctly applied pre-FSA law. State v. Burton, 114 N.C. App. 610, 442 S.E.2d 384 (1994).

Application of Article. — Sentencing of a person convicted of a felony that occurred on or after the effective date of former Article 81A was subject to this Article; a minimum term of imprisonment would not be imposed on such a person. State v. Leggett, 61 N.C. App. 295, 300 S.E.2d 823 (1983).

The Fair Sentencing Act clearly mandates that the act is applicable only to felonies that occur on or after July 1, 1981. Therefore, it was error for trial judge to aggravate a charge on the basis of evidence relating to a pre-Act crime. State v. Jones, 66 N.C. App. 274, 311 S.E.2d 351 (1984).

The Fair Sentencing Act was inapplicable where the defendant was sentenced under § 15A-2000 for convictions of three counts of first-degree murder, and not under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Taylor, 332 N.C. 372, 420 S.E.2d 414 (1992).

The principal purpose of former Article 81A was to provide guidelines and a basis for determining an appropriate punishment for the crime of which the defendant was adjudged guilty, not crimes with which he was charged. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

The Fair Sentencing Act was not intended to remove all discretion from the trial judges. The trial judge should be permitted wide latitude in arriving at the truth as to the existence of aggravating and mitigating circumstances, for it is only he who observes the demeanor of the witnesses and hears the testimony. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

The trial judge still has discretion to increase or reduce sentences from the presumptive term upon findings of aggravating or mitigating factors, the weighing of which is a matter within his sound discretion. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

For the purposes of sentencing under the Fair Sentencing Act, a preponderance of the evidence does not mean number of witnesses or volume of testimony, but refers to the reasonable impression made upon the mind of the sentencing judge by the entire evidence, taking into consideration the character and demeanor of the witnesses, their interest or bias and means of knowledge, and other attending circumstances. State v. Atkins, 66 N.C. App. 67, 310 S.E.2d 629, rev'd on other grounds, 311 N.C. 272, 316 S.E.2d 306 (1984).

The trial court should find nonstatutory mitigating factor when defense counsel has made a specific request therefor, and when the evidence is substantial, uncontradicted and manifestly credible. State v. Corley, 75 N.C. App. 245, 330 S.E.2d 819, appeal dismissed, 315 N.C. 186, 337 S.E.2d 582 (1985).

Judge Must Justify Deviation from Presumptive Term. — The Fair Sentencing Act requires that a sentencing judge justify a sentence which deviates from a presumptive term to the extent that he must make findings in aggravation and mitigation properly supported by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Hill, 105 N.C. App. 489, 414 S.E.2d 73 (1992).

But the judge is not required to justify the weight he or she attaches to any particular factor, and it is within the court's discretion to either increase or decrease a sentence from the presumptive term based upon its conclusion that the factors in aggravation outweigh factors in mitigation or vice versa. State v. Hill, 105 N.C. App. 489, 414 S.E.2d 73 (1992).

Judging Relative Weight of Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — A sentencing judge properly may determine in appropriate cases that one factor in aggravation outweighs more than one factor in mitigation and vice versa. State v. Daniels, 319 N.C. 452, 355 S.E.2d 136 (1987).

A trial judge's weighing of mitigating and aggravating factors will not be disturbed on appeal absent a showing that the judge abused his discretion. State v. Daniels, 319 N.C. 452, 355 S.E.2d 136 (1987).

The weight to be given any particular aggravating or mitigating factor rests in the trial court's sound discretion, and the balance struck by the court will not be disturbed if there is support in the record for the determination. State v. Corley, 75 N.C. App. 245, 330 S.E.2d 819, appeal dismissed, 315 N.C. 186, 337 S.E.2d 582 (1985).

Judge Need Not Justify Decision. — The trial court did not abuse its discretion by failing to give sufficient credit during sentencing to the substantial assistance defendant gave that enabled the State to secure guilty pleas of defendant's codefendants, because a trial judge need not justify the weight he attaches to any aggravating or mitigating factor. State v. Ocasio, 344 N.C. 568, 476 S.E.2d 281 (1996).

Appeal of Sentence Not Exceeding Presumptive Term. — Pursuant to § 15A-1444(a1), a defendant who had entered a plea of guilty to a felony was not entitled to appeal as a matter of right unless his sentence exceeded the presumptive term set by former § 15A-1340.4; however, he could petition for review of the issue by writ of certiorari. State v. Farrior, 117 N.C. App. 429, 451 S.E.2d 332 (1994), cert. granted, 340 N.C. 116, 455 S.E.2d 663 (1995).

Consolidated Offenses. — In order to support a sentence for consolidated offenses varying from the presumptive, each offense had to be treated by the trial court separately, and separately supported by findings tailored to the individual offense and applicable only to that offense. State v. Corley, 75 N.C. App. 245, 330 S.E.2d 819, appeal dismissed, 315 N.C. 186, 337 S.E.2d 582 (1985).

A failure to make separate findings in aggravation and mitigation for each of several consolidated offenses will be deemed harmless error when the factors as found apply equally to each of the consolidated offenses. State v. Corley, 75 N.C. App. 245, 330 S.E.2d 819, appeal dismissed, 315 N.C. 186, 337 S.E.2d 582 (1985).

Joined Offenses Should Not Be Used as Aggravating Factor. — A sentencing judge may not use a joined or joinable offense in aggravation and this prohibition applies to both convictions for joined offenses and to the acts which form the substance of those joined offenses. State v. Williams, 116 N.C. App. 225, 447 S.E.2d 817 (1994), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 339 N.C. 741, 454 S.E.2d 661 (1995).

Course of Conduct Should Not Have Been Considered Where Offenses Joined. — Where the offenses of first-degree murder and assault with a deadly weapon were joined offenses for which defendant was convicted contemporaneously with his conviction for second-degree murder, a Class C felony covered by the Fair Sentencing Act, finding these offenses to have established a "course of conduct" in aggravation of second-degree murder, violated the prohibition of such factors in State v. Westmoreland, 314 N.C. 442, 334 S.E.2d 223 (1985); therefore, defendant is entitled to resentencing in the second-degree murder case, in which the "course of conduct" aggravating factor will not be considered. State v. Terry, 337 N.C. 615, 447 S.E.2d 720 (1994).

The Fair Sentencing Act did not require a defendant to forego all possible defenses before he may take advantage of the statutory mitigating factors. State v. Puckett, 66 N.C. App. 600, 312 S.E.2d 207 (1984).

Discretion to Impose Consecutive or Concurrent Sentences. — Although the General Assembly did not address the issue of consecutive sentences in the Fair Sentencing Act, former § 15A-1340.1 et seq., it left substantially intact § 15A-1354(a), which vested the sentencing judge with discretion to impose either consecutive or concurrent sentences. Since § 15A-1354(a) was in effect when the legislature enacted the Fair Sentencing Act, the legislature by leaving it substantially intact must have intended that the sentencing judge retain the discretion to impose sentences consecutively or concurrently. State v. Ysaguire, 309 N.C. 780, 309 S.E.2d 436 (1983).

Leaving sentencing judges with unbridled discretion on the matter of whether to run multiple sentences concurrently or consecutively conflicts with the general theory of uniformity sought by fair sentencing. Nevertheless, the legislature, in espousing both the spirit and the letter of fair sentencing in North Carolina, elected to incorporate the freedom for judges to impose consecutive sentences. Since that is the prerogative of the legislature, there was nothing inherent in consecutive sentencing which violated the Fair Sentencing Act, former § 15A-1340.1 et seq. State v. Ysaguire, 309 N.C. 780, 309 S.E.2d 436 (1983).

Remand for new sentencing hearing is required where the trial court makes both appropriate and inappropriate findings in aggravation or mitigation of a presumptive criminal sentence, since the reviewing court cannot determine whether the erroneous findings affected the sentence. Smith v. Smith, 71 N.C. App. 242, 322 S.E.2d 393 (1984), modified and aff'd, 314 N.C. 80, 331 S.E.2d 682 (1985).

An offense was a prior conviction under the Fair Sentencing Act only if the judgment had been entered and the time for appeal has expired, or the conviction has been upheld on appeal. State v. Southern, 71 N.C. App. 563, 322 S.E.2d 617 (1984), cert. denied, 313 N.C. 335, 327 S.E.2d 898, aff'd, 314 N.C. 110, 331 S.E.2d 688 (1985).

For discussion and rejection of "real offense sentencing" by North Carolina Supreme Court, see State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

In pronouncing judgment under the Fair Sentencing Act, the court must look first to the trial at which the defendant was convicted. State v. Thompson, 62 N.C. App. 38, 302 S.E.2d 310 (1983), aff'd, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, State v. Vandiver, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

Imposition of consecutive sentences for rape, first-degree sex offense, first-degree burglary and armed robbery violated neither the Fair Sentencing Act, former § 15A-1340.1 et seq., nor any constitutional proportionality requirement. State v. Ysaguire, 309 N.C. 780, 309 S.E.2d 436 (1983).

Consideration of Defendant's Prison Conduct Between Original and Resentencing Hearings. — It was reversible error for the trial court to fail to consider the defendant's prison conduct between his original sentencing hearing and his resentencing hearing, for purposes of mitigation. State v. Corley, 75 N.C. App. 245, 330 S.E.2d 819, appeal dismissed, 315 N.C. 186, 337 S.E.2d 582 (1985).

The Fair Sentencing Act was an attempt to strike a balance between the inflexibility of a presumptive sentence which insures that punishment is commensurate with the crime, without regard to the nature of the offender; and the flexibility of permitting punishment to be adapted, when appropriate, to the particular offender. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

The Fair Sentencing Act established rules which determined what evidence a sentencing judge could consider in aggravating a crime covered by the act; first, a conviction could not be aggravated by prior convictions of other crimes which could have been joined for trial or by a contemporaneous conviction of a crime actually joined or by acts which formed the gravamen of these convictions; second, evidence used to prove an element of a crime could not also be used to prove a factor in aggravation of that same crime; third, the same item of evidence could not be used to prove more than one factor in aggravation; fourth, acts which could have been, but were not, the basis for other joinable criminal convictions could be used to aggravate the conviction for which defendant was being sentenced; finally, evidence used in proving an element of one crime could also be used to support an aggravating factor of a separate, though joined, crime for which defendant was being sentenced. State v. Hayes, 323 N.C. 306, 372 S.E.2d 704 (1988).

The purpose of sentencing is to punish a criminal with the degree of severity that his culpability merits. State v. Flowers, 100 N.C. App. 58, 394 S.E.2d 296 (1990).

One of the primary purposes of sentencing is to impose a punishment commensurate with the injury the offense has caused, taking into consideration factors which may diminish or enhance the offender's culpability. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

Article Established Guidelines. — Former Article 81A did not eliminate the existing discretionary system; it only established certain guidelines for trial judges, which if correctly observed, still left an open door for disparity of sentences. State v. Hinnant, 65 N.C. App. 130, 308 S.E.2d 732 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 310, 312 S.E.2d 653 (1984).

Ordinarily, a resentencing hearing is a de novo proceeding at which the trial judge may find aggravating and mitigating factors without regard to the findings made at the prior sentencing hearing. State v. Vandiver, 326 N.C. 348, 389 S.E.2d 30 (1990).

"The Offense" Referred to Offense Defendant Convicted of. — As it was used in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1), the phrase "the offense" clearly referred to the offense for which the defendant was convicted or to which defendant tendered a plea of guilty. State v. Taylor, 322 N.C. 280, 367 S.E.2d 664 (1988).

Duty of Judge to Examine Evidence. — A duty is placed upon the judge to examine the evidence to determine if it would support any of the statutory factors, even absent a request by counsel. State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985).

Legislature Determines Factors to Be Considered. — The power to determine those statutory mitigating and aggravating factors which must be considered by the sentencing judge lies solely within the discretion of the Legislature. State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985).

Judge Must Consider Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — Unless a sentence has been agreed to during plea bargaining, a sentencing judge is required to consider the statutory list of aggravating and mitigating factors during sentencing, of which many items concern circumstances that may surround the offense. Such circumstances might include facts concerning both a dismissed charge as well as the admitted offense. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

Under former § 15A-1340.4(a) judges had to consider all aggravating and mitigating factors before imposing a prison term other than the presumptive term. State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985); State v. Flowe, 107 N.C. App. 468, 420 S.E.2d 475, cert. denied,.

If the trial court imposes a sentence greater than the presumptive term for any conviction, it must consider each of the aggravating and mitigating factors under the Fair Sentencing Act for each of defendant's convictions, and make written findings of fact concerning the factors and whether one set of factors outweighs the other. State v. Green, 101 N.C. App. 317, 399 S.E.2d 376 (1991).

Consideration of Victim Impact Statements. — While receiving victim impact statements advocating a sentence is "a practice not to be encouraged," the practice does not constitute reversible error. State v. Williams, 116 N.C. App. 225, 447 S.E.2d 817 (1994), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 339 N.C. 741, 454 S.E.2d 661 (1995).

Findings of Factors of Aggravation and Mitigation Required. — Where the conviction for the sale of cocaine, a Class H felony, has a presumptive term of three years and the trial court imposed a 10-year sentence, findings of factors in aggravation and mitigation were required. State v. Artis, 91 N.C. App. 604, 372 S.E.2d 905 (1988).

When Statutory Factor Must Be Found. — Sentencing court is required to find a statutory factor only when the evidence supporting that factor is uncontradicted, substantial, and manifestly credible. State v. Whitaker, 100 N.C. App. 578, 397 S.E.2d 372 (1990).

Finding of Factor Required Where Evidence Uncontradicted, Substantial and Credible. — When evidence in support of a particular mitigating or aggravating factor is uncontradicted, substantial, and there is no reason to doubt its credibility, it is error for the trial court not to find that factor. State v. Daniel, 319 N.C. 308, 354 S.E.2d 216 (1987).

Findings Not Required After Guilty Plea. — Where defendant pled guilty pursuant to a plea arrangement as to sentence, the trial court was not required to make finding as to aggravating or mitigating factors. State v. Williams, 116 N.C. App. 354, 447 S.E.2d 437, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 523, 452 S.E.2d 823 (1994).

Former § 15A-1340.4 did not require that only aggravating or mitigating factors listed therein be considered. The court could use any factors which were supported by a preponderance of the evidence and were reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Setzer, 61 N.C. App. 500, 301 S.E.2d 107 (1983), cert. denied, 308 N.C. 680, 304 S.E.2d 760 (1983).

In addition to specified factors which must be considered, the sentencing judge may consider any aggravating and mitigating factors that he finds are proved by the preponderance of the evidence, and that are reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. It is error, however, to consider factors such that the severity of the sentence imposed relates to the defendant's plea of not guilty. State v. Blackwood, 60 N.C. App. 150, 298 S.E.2d 196 (1982).

Although pecuniary gain was not a factor enumerated, former § 15A-1340.4 did not limit a trial judge to the aggravating and mitigating factors enumerated therein, and the question whether to increase the sentence above the presumptive term remained within the trial court's discretion. State v. Barnes, 116 N.C. App. 311, 447 S.E.2d 478 (1994).

Age of Defendant. — The fact that defendant was 17 years old, without more, did not classify defendant as immature under the statute. State v. Robertson, 115 N.C. App. 249, 444 S.E.2d 643 (1994).

Court's Exercise of Discretion Resulted in Gender Discrimination. — Writ of habeas corpus was issued because the petitioner's prima facie claim of gender discrimination was unrebutted by the respondent where the 19 year-old petitioner was sentenced to between 23 and 36 years whereas a similarly situated 16 year-old female co-defendant received probation and eight months of time already served. The court found no mitigating or aggravating circumstances but, rather, the totality of the evidence, including arguments of the prosecutor and statements of the court, indicated that the two were equally culpable; and where both were due to be sentenced as adults. Williams v. Currie, 103 F. Supp. 2d 858 (M.D.N.C. 2000).

Evidence Proving Offense Not Properly Used to Aggravate Sentence. — As evidence necessary to prove the offense may not be used to prove any factor in aggravation, where the evidence that the defendant took a deadly weapon with him into the victim's neighborhood was so closely connected to the evidence possibly used by the jury to find that the killing was done with malice, it was error for the trial court to consider the use of the pistol again in sentencing. State v. Swann, 115 N.C. App. 92, 443 S.E.2d 740 (1994).

Age as an Aggravating Factor When an Element of the Offense. — Where age is an element of the offense, as with taking indecent liberties with children, if the evidence, by its greater weight, shows that the age of the victim caused the victim to be more vulnerable to the crime committed against him than he otherwise would have been, the trial court can properly find the statutory aggravating factor based on age. If, however, the evidence shows that the victim was not more vulnerable than any other victim of the same crime would have been, the statutory aggravating factor that the victim was "very young" cannot properly be found. State v. Farlow, 336 N.C. 534, 444 S.E.2d 913 (1994).

Factors which would mitigate a sentence if present, cannot be used in aggravation if absent. State v. Harrell, 100 N.C. App. 450, 397 S.E.2d 84 (1990).

All circumstances which are transactionally related to the admitted offense must be considered during sentencing. State v. Wood, 61 N.C. App. 446, 300 S.E.2d 903, cert. denied, 308 N.C. 547, 302 S.E.2d 884 (1983).

As long as they are not elements essential to the establishment of the offense to which the defendant pled guilty, all circumstances which are transactionally related to the admitted offense and which are reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing must be considered during sentencing. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983); State v. Teague, 60 N.C. App. 755, 300 S.E.2d 7 (1983).

The trial court must consider all circumstances that are both transactionally related to the offense and reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing, provided that they are not essential to the establishment of elements of the offense. This is so regardless of whether such factors were specifically listed under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1), and regardless of whether the State specifically requests a finding in this regard. State v. Flowe, 107 N.C. App. 468, 420 S.E.2d 475, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 669, 424 S.E.2d 412 (1992).

If They Are Reasonably Related to the Purposes of Sentencing. — The court could use an aggravating factor not set forth in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1) if it reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Nichols, 66 N.C. App. 318, 311 S.E.2d 38, cert. denied, 311 N.C. 406, 319 S.E.2d 278 (1984).

Former § 15A-1340.4 did not purport to grant trial judge the discretion to create new aggravating factors. Rather, the statute listed several aggravating factors which the trial judge was required to consider and also authorized him to consider any other aggravating factors that he found were proved by a preponderance of the evidence, and that were reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

But the trial judge may wish to exercise restraint when considering nonstatutory aggravating factors after having found statutory factors. This prudent course of conduct would lessen the chance of having the case remanded for resentencing. State v. Baucom, 66 N.C. App. 298, 311 S.E.2d 73 (1984).

Burden of Proving Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — The state has the burden of proving that aggravating factors exist, whereas the defendant has the burden of proving that mitigating factors are present. State v.

Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Factors Must Be Supported by Preponderance of Evidence. — The trial judge may consider aggravating and mitigating factors supported by evidence not used to prove an essential element as long as those factors are reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. Such factors must be supported by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Teague, 60 N.C. App. 755, 300 S.E.2d 7 (1983).

Findings in aggravation and mitigation must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Aggravating Factor Not Shown. — Where the record did not support the court's conclusion that defendant committed the crimes for pecuniary gain, the court erred in finding pecuniary gain as an aggravating factor. State v. Barnes, 116 N.C. App. 311, 447 S.E.2d 478 (1994).

Aggravating Factor Not Proved by Evidence of Element of Offense. — Because proof of embezzlement necessarily involves proof of a position of trust, the trial court erred in finding as an aggravating factor that defendant violated a position of trust. State v. Mullaney, 129 N.C. App. 506, 500 S.E.2d 112 (1998).

Embezzlement Occurring Over a Period of Time. — Where the district attorney chose to proceed with a single indictment charging embezzlement over a period of time that began before October 1, 1994, and ended after that date, the trial court was required to sentence defendant under the Structured Sentencing Act. State v. Mullaney, 129 N.C. App. 506, 500 S.E.2d 112 (1998).

Presumption Evidence Sufficient to Aggravate Sentence. — Absent any indication to the contrary in the record, the Supreme Court will presume the trial court in making its findings of fact relied only on evidence which was proper to consider. Thus, without any indication in the record to the contrary, the Supreme Court will presume that the trial court did not improperly aggravate the sentence with evidence necessary to prove the crime. State v. Brinson, 337 N.C. 764, 448 S.E.2d 822 (1994).

Separate Factors in Aggravation Cannot Be Found on the Same Evidence. — The trial court improperly found two factors in aggravation based upon the same evidence. Therefore, defendant was entitled to a new sentencing hearing on his convictions for burglary and kidnapping. State v. Kyle, 333 N.C. 687, 430 S.E.2d 412 (1993).

Where the trial court found in aggravation of the defendant's conspiracy conviction that the offense was committed to disrupt the lawful exercise of a governmental function or the enforcement of laws and that the offense was committed to hinder the lawful exercise of a governmental function or the enforcement of laws and the trial court used the same item of evidence — that the defendant had conspired to murder a law enforcement officer who was interfering with their drug trade — as the basis for finding both aggravating factors, constituted error. State v. Morston, 336 N.C. 381, 445 S.E.2d 1 (1994).

Absent Rebuttal, Factual Allegations in Indictment Deemed Admitted by Guilty Plea. — Where a defendant pled guilty to an indictment which contained factual allegations which could be the basis for the finding of an aggravating circumstance, and failed to challenge or present any evidence to rebut these factual allegations, they were deemed admitted and could be utilized by the trial court to establish the existence of the aggravating factor. State v. Thompson, 314 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

Defendant Who Pleads Guilty May Present Evidence. — Even where a defendant pleads guilty, he may challenge and present evidence at the sentencing hearing to rebut any factual allegations in the indictment or other criminal process which could be used to establish the existence of an aggravating circumstance. State v. Thompson, 314 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

Behavior Prior to Original Trial and Sentencing Hearing. — An inmate's good behavior prior to his original trial and/or sentencing hearing may be found as a nonstatutory mitigating factor, and his bad conduct during the same time frame may be found as a nonstatutory aggravating factor. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Behavior Prior to Resentencing. — As § 15A-1335 prohibits the trial court from resentencing a defendant to a term of imprisonment greater than the prior sentence less the portion of the prior sentence previously served, a trial judge in North Carolina may not consider a defendant's bad conduct during the period between his conviction and his resentencing hearing in order to increase his sentence. However, bad conduct may be found by the trial judge as a nonstatutory aggravating factor to be utilized by the judge in deciding the sentence to be imposed, so long as the new sentence is no more severe than the original one. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Judge Held Not Required to Find Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — Where defendant was charged, convicted and sentenced for four separate violations of § 14-100, the trial judge was not required to find aggravating and mitigating factors in sentencing defendant, even though charges against defendant were consolidated for trial and for hearing on judgments, as they were not consolidated for judgment and thus did not exceed maximum ten-year term for the offense. State v. Bresse, 101 N.C. App. 519, 400 S.E.2d 73, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 272, 407 S.E.2d 842 (1991).

No Right of Appeal Where Findings Not Required. — Since the court was not required under former § 15A-1340.4(b) to make findings of aggravating and mitigating factors to support the sentence imposed, defendant had no appeal as of right pursuant to § 15A-1444(a1). State v. Washington, 116 N.C. App. 318, 447 S.E.2d 799 (1994).

§ 15A-1340.11. Definitions.

The following definitions apply in this Article:

(1) Active punishment. — A sentence in a criminal case that requires an offender to serve a sentence of imprisonment and is not suspended. Special probation, as defined in G.S. 15A-1351, is not an active punishment.

(2) Community punishment. — A sentence in a criminal case that does not include an active punishment, an intermediate punishment, or any of the conditions of probation listed in subdivision (6) of this section.

(3) Day-reporting center. — A facility to which offenders are required, as a condition of probation, to report on a daily or other regular basis at specified times for a specified length of time to participate in activities such as counseling, treatment, social skills training, or employment training.

(4) Repealed by Session Laws 1997-57, s. 2.

(4a) House arrest with electronic monitoring. — Probation in which the offender is required to remain at his or her residence unless the court or the probation officer authorizes the offender to leave for the purpose of employment, counseling, a course of study, or vocational training. The offender shall be required to wear a device which permits the supervising agency to monitor the offender's compliance with the condition electronically.

(5) Intensive probation. — Probation that requires the offender to submit to supervision by officers assigned to the Intensive Supervision Program established pursuant to G.S. 143B-262(c), and to comply with the rules adopted for that Program. Unless otherwise ordered by the court, intensive supervision also requires multiple contacts by a probation officer per week, a specific period each day during which the offender must be at his or her residence, and that the offender remain gainfully and suitably employed or faithfully pursue a course of study or of vocational training that will equip the offender for suitable employment.

(6) Intermediate punishment. — A sentence in a criminal case that places an offender on supervised probation and includes at least one of the following conditions:
   a. Special probation as defined in G.S. 15A-1351(a).
   b. Assignment to a residential program.
   c. House arrest with electronic monitoring.
   d. Intensive probation.
   e. Assignment to a day-reporting center.

(7) Prior conviction. — A person has a prior conviction when, on the date a criminal judgment is entered, the person being sentenced has been previously convicted of a crime:
   a. In the district court, and the person has not given notice of appeal and the time for appeal has expired; or
   b. In the superior court, regardless of whether the conviction is on appeal to the appellate division; or

c. In the courts of the United States, another state, the armed services of the United States, or another country, regardless of whether the offense would be a crime if it occurred in North Carolina, regardless of whether the crime was committed before or after the effective date of this Article.

(8) Residential program. — A program in which the offender, as a condition of probation, is required to reside in a facility for a specified period and to participate in activities such as counseling, treatment, social skills training, or employment training, conducted at the residential facility or at other specified locations. (1993, c. 538, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 14, s. 17; c. 24, s. 14(b); 1997-57, s. 2; 1997-80, s. 6; 1999-306, s. 2.)

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 1999-306, s. 2, effective January 1, 2000, and applicable to offenses committed on or after that date, deleted the last paragraph regarding regular supervised probation in subdivision (6).

CASE NOTES

Plea of No Contest Considered Conviction. — Defendant was convicted of the prior offense for purposes of assessing prior record level points when he entered the plea of no contest even though no final judgment had been entered. State v. Hatcher, 136 N.C. App. 524, 524 S.E.2d 815 (2000).

Defendant's guilty plea followed by probation under § 90-96 was a "conviction" for the purposes of the Structured Sentencing Act and thus furnished a legitimate basis for the trial court's determination of defendant's sentence. State v. Hasty, 133 N.C. App. 563, 516 S.E.2d 428 (1999).

Editor's Note. — The cases below were decided under former § 15A-1340.2.

Convictions in which prayer for judgment was continued and no fines or other conditions imposed constituted "prior convictions" under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Southern, 314 N.C. 110, 331 S.E.2d 688 (1985).

Time of Prior Conviction. — Based on former § 15A-1340.2(4), at a resentencing hearing, a judge could aggravate a sentence under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1) with a conviction that was entered after defendant's conviction and first sentencing on April 5, 1991, but before his resentencing on December 9, 1993. State v. Mixion, 118 N.C. App. 559, 455 S.E.2d 904 (1995).

§ 15A-1340.12. Purposes of sentencing.

The primary purposes of sentencing a person convicted of a crime are to impose a punishment commensurate with the injury the offense has caused, taking into account factors that may diminish or increase the offender's culpability; to protect the public by restraining offenders; to assist the offender toward rehabilitation and restoration to the community as a lawful citizen; and to provide a general deterrent to criminal behavior. (1993, c. 538, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b).)

Decisions Under Prior Law

Stated goals of former Article 81A should have been to guide trial judges in pronouncing sentence. State v. Jones, 59 N.C. App. 472, 297 S.E.2d 132 (1982), cert. denied, 307 N.C. 579, 299 S.E.2d 651 (1983).

The Fair Sentencing Act originated in a movement away from indeterminate sentencing and toward the imposition of presumptive terms for specified crimes. However, it is not clear the extent to which the act limited the sentencing discretion of the trial judge. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

The Fair Sentencing Act was an attempt to strike a balance between the inflexibility of a presumptive sentence which insures that punishment is commensurate with the crime, without regard to the nature of the offender; and the flexibility of permitting punishment to be adapted, when appropriate, to the particular offender. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

The Fair Sentencing Act was not intended to remove all discretion from the trial judges. The trial judge should be permitted wide latitude in arriving at the truth as to the existence of aggravating and mitigating circumstances, for it is only he who observes the demeanor of the witnesses and hears the testimony. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

The trial judge still has discretion to increase or reduce sentences from the presumptive term upon findings of aggravating or mitigating factors, the weighing of which is a matter within his sound discretion. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

Former Sections 15A-1340.3 and 15A-1340.4 did not require that factors which increased the defendant's culpability be a part of the actions which constituted the crime in order to be aggravating factors. State v. Josey, 328 N.C. 697, 403 S.E.2d 479 (1991).

In sentencing defendant the trial judge is not required to ignore the facts and evidence of the case. Therefore, matters considered and labeled by the trial court as "aggravating" factors are proper and relevant for consideration for purposes of sentencing. State v. Morris, 60 N.C. App. 750, 300 S.E.2d 46 (1983).

In determining the sentence to be imposed, the trial judge may consider such matters as the age, character, education, environment, habits, mentality, propensities and record of the defendant. State v. Morris, 60 N.C. App. 750, 300 S.E.2d 46 (1983).

When a defendant pleads guilty to murder in the second degree, a determination by the preponderance of the evidence in the sentencing phrase that he premeditated and deliberated the killing is reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. Such aggravating factors may be considered in determining an appropriate sentence for the killer. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

To allow trial court to ignore uncontradicted, credible evidence of either an aggravating or a mitigating factor would render the requirement that he consider the statutory factors meaningless, and would be counter to the objective that the punishment imposed take "into account factors that may diminish or increase the offender's culpability," as required under former § 15A-1340.3. State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985).

A factor that increases an offender's culpability is reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Thompson, 328 N.C. 477, 402 S.E.2d 386 (1991).

An aggravating factor can properly be found only if the defendant has exhibited some behavior which serves to increase the offender's culpability. State v. Bates, 76 N.C. App. 676, 334 S.E.2d 73 (1985).

It is error for aggravating factor to be based on circumstances which are part of very essence of crime, because it can be presumed that the legislature was guided by this unfortunate fact when it established presumptive sentences. State v. Bates, 76 N.C. App. 676, 334 S.E.2d 73 (1985).

A defendant's dangerousness to others may be legitimately considered as an aggravating factor. State v. Chatman, 308 N.C. 169, 301 S.E.2d 71 (1983).

Under former §§ 15A-1340.3 and 15A-1340.4, the victim's age was a statutory aggravating factor which the court could consider in an arson case regardless of whether the arson resulted in a death. The court therefore did not aggravate the sentence for arson based on defendant's conviction on the joined murder charge. State v. Allen, 322 N.C. 176, 367 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Pecuniary Gain as Nonstatutory Aggravating Factor. — To find as a nonstatutory aggravating factor that the defendant committed the crimes of murder, conspiracy to commit murder, and solicitation to commit murder for pecuniary gain would be consistent with the purposes of sentencing as set out in former § 15A-1340.3. State v. Manning, 327 N.C. 608, 398 S.E.2d 319 (1990).

Where defendant pleaded guilty to possession of stolen property, and she received this property as the result of a crime in which she participated and in which the victim received serious injuries, this increased her culpability. State v. Josey, 328 N.C. 697, 403 S.E.2d 479 (1991).

Scope of Review. — Because it must be assumed that every factor in aggravation measured against every factor in mitigation, with concomitant weight attached to each, contributes to the severity of the sentence in every case in which it is found that the judge erred in a finding or findings in aggravation and imposed a sentence beyond the presumptive term, the case must be remanded for a new sentencing hearing. State v. Chatman, 308 N.C. 169, 301 S.E.2d 71 (1983).

Court erred in finding as factors in aggravation that sentence given was necessary to deter others, and that a lesser sentence would unduly depreciate the seriousness of the crime. These two factors fall within the exclusive realm of the legislature and were presumably considered in determining presumptive sentences. While both factors served as legitimate purposes for imposing an active sentence, neither could form the basis for increasing or decreasing a presumptive term because neither related to the character or conduct of the offender. State v. Chatman, 308 N.C. 169, 301 S.E.2d 71 (1983).

Even if defendant's child had not been harmed by the burning of his apartment, if the burning resulted in sufficient charring to constitute arson, defendant would be guilty of first-degree arson and the child's vulnerability because of its young age could still have been used to aggravate defendant's arson conviction. State v. Allen, 322 N.C. 176, 367 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Mental Injury in Excess of Injury Normally Present. — The State proved by a preponderance of the evidence, as an additional factor in aggravation, that the victim's mental and emotional injury in this case was in excess of the injury normally present in the offense. The uncontradicted evidence before the trial court at the resentencing hearing was that three years and eight months after defendant's attack on her, the victim was still experiencing nightmares in which she saw defendant laughing while raping and strangling her, and was still feeling that something was wrong with her as a result of defendant's attack; in addition, there was evidence that the victim's trauma was the result of extraordinary circumstances not inherent in second-degree rape. State v. Cofield, 324 N.C. 452, 379 S.E.2d 834 (1989).

Part 2. Felony Sentencing.

§ 15A-1340.13. Procedure and incidents of sentence of imprisonment for felonies.

(a) Application to Felonies Only. — This Part applies to sentences imposed for felony convictions.

(b) Procedure Generally; Requirements of Judgment; Kinds of Sentences. — Before imposing a sentence, the court shall determine the prior record level for the offender pursuant to G.S. 15A-1340.14. The sentence shall contain a sentence disposition specified for the class of offense and prior record level, and its minimum term of imprisonment shall be within the range specified for the class of offense and prior record level, unless applicable statutes require or authorize another minimum sentence of imprisonment. The kinds of sentence dispositions are active punishment, intermediate punishment, and community punishment.

(c) Minimum and Maximum Term. — The judgment of the court shall contain a minimum term of imprisonment that is consistent with the class of offense for which the sentence is being imposed and with the prior record level for the offender. The maximum term of imprisonment applicable to each minimum term of imprisonment is, unless otherwise provided, as specified in G.S. 15A-1340.17. The maximum term shall be specified in the judgment of the court.

(d) Service of Minimum Required; Earned Time Authorization. — An offender sentenced to an active punishment shall serve the minimum term imposed. The maximum term may be reduced to, but not below, the minimum term by earned time credits awarded to an offender by the Department of Correction or the custodian of the local confinement facility, pursuant to rules adopted in accordance with law.

(e) Deviation from Sentence Ranges for Aggravation and Mitigation; No Sentence Dispositional Deviation Allowed. — The court may deviate from the presumptive range of minimum sentences of imprisonment specified for a class of offense and prior record level if it finds, pursuant to G.S. 15A-1340.16, that aggravating or mitigating circumstances support such a deviation. The amount of the deviation is in the court's discretion, subject to the limits specified in the class of offense and prior record level for mitigated and aggravated punishment. Deviations for aggravated or mitigated punishment are allowed only in the ranges of minimum and maximum sentences of imprisonment, and not in the sentence dispositions specified for the class of offense and prior record level, unless a statute specifically authorizes a sentence dispositional deviation.

(f) Suspension of Sentence. — Unless otherwise provided, the court shall not suspend the sentence of imprisonment if the class of offense and prior record level do not permit community or intermediate punishment as a sentence disposition. The court shall suspend the sentence of imprisonment if the class of offense and prior record level require community or intermediate punishment as a sentence disposition. The court may suspend the sentence of imprisonment if the class of offense and prior record level authorize, but do not require, active punishment as a sentence disposition.

(g) Dispositional Deviation for Extraordinary Mitigation. — Except as provided in subsection (h) of this section, the court may impose an intermediate punishment for a class of offense and prior record level that requires the imposition of an active punishment if it finds in writing all of the following:

(1) That extraordinary mitigating factors of a kind significantly greater than in the normal case are present.
(2) Those factors substantially outweigh any factors in aggravation.
(3) It would be a manifest injustice to impose an active punishment in the case.

The court shall consider evidence of extraordinary mitigating factors, but the decision to find any such factors, or to impose an intermediate punishment is in the discretion of the court. The extraordinary mitigating factors which the court finds shall be specified in its judgment.

(h) Exceptions When Extraordinary Mitigation Shall Not Be Used. — The court shall not impose an intermediate sanction pursuant to subsection (g) of this section if:

(1) The offense is a Class A or Class B1 felony;
(2) The offense is a drug trafficking offense under G.S. 90-95(h) or a drug trafficking conspiracy offense under G.S. 90-95(i); or
(3) The defendant has five or more points as determined by G.S. 15A-1340.14. (1993, c. 538, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 14, ss. 18, 18.1, 19; c. 22, s. 9; c. 24, s. 14(b); 1995, c. 375, s. 1.)

Editor's Note. — Subsection (g1) was redesignated as subsection (h) at the direction of the Revisor of Statutes.

CASE NOTES

Extraordinary Mitigation. — The trial court's finding of extraordinary mitigation did not give it discretion under this section to deviate from the applicable sentencing ranges for a defendant sentenced as a Class C felon with a prior record level IV, because extraordinary mitigation is only intended as a tool for dispositional deviation, not as a tool to reduce the minimum term of an active sentence. Decisions Under Prior Law

Editor's Note. — The cases cited below were decided under former §§ 15A-1340.4 and 15A-1340.7.

I. General Consideration.
II. Discretion of Court in Weighing Factors and Imposing Sentence.
III. Sentencing, Generally.
IV. Appellate Review.
V. Additional Sentencing Factors.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

The Fair Sentencing Act originated in a movement away from indeterminate sentencing and toward the imposition of presumptive terms for specified crimes. However, it is not clear the extent to which the act limited the sentencing discretion of the trial judge. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

The Fair Sentencing Act was an attempt to strike a balance between the inflexibility of a presumptive sentence which insures that punishment is commensurate with the crime, without regard to the nature of the offender; and the flexibility of permitting punishment to be adapted, when appropriate, to the particular offender. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

The Fair Sentencing Act established rules which determined what evidence a sentencing judge could consider in aggravating a crime covered by the act; first, a conviction could not be aggravated by prior convictions of other crimes which could have been joined for trial or by a contemporaneous conviction of a crime actually joined or by acts which formed the gravamen of these convictions; second, evidence used to prove an element of a crime could not also be used to prove a factor in aggravation of that same crime; third, the same item of evidence could not be used to prove more than one factor in aggravation; fourth, acts which could have been, but were not, the basis for other joinable criminal convictions could be used to aggravate the conviction for which defendant was being sentenced; finally, evidence used in proving an element of one crime could also be used to support an aggravating factor of a separate, though joined, crime for which defendant was being sentenced. State v. Hayes, 323 N.C. 306, 372 S.E.2d 704 (1988).

The purpose of sentencing is to punish a criminal with the degree of severity that his culpability merits. State v. Flowers, 100 N.C. App. 58, 394 S.E.2d 296 (1990).

One of the primary purposes of sentencing is to impose a punishment commensurate with the injury the offense has caused, taking into consideration factors which may diminish or enhance the offender's culpability. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

Ordinarily, a resentencing hearing is a de novo proceeding at which the trial judge may find aggravating and mitigating factors without regard to the findings made at the prior sentencing hearing. State v. Vandiver, 326 N.C. 348, 389 S.E.2d 30 (1990).

"The Offense" Referred to Offense Defendant Convicted of. — As it was used in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1), the phrase "the offense" clearly referred to the offense for which the defendant was convicted or to which defendant tendered a plea of guilty. State v. Taylor, 322 N.C. 280, 367 S.E.2d 664 (1988).

Duty of Judge to Examine Evidence. — A duty is placed upon the judge to examine the evidence to determine if it would support any of the statutory factors, even absent a request by counsel. State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985).

Legislature Determines Factors to Be Considered. — The power to determine those statutory mitigating and aggravating factors which must be considered by the sentencing judge lies solely within the discretion of the legislature. State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985).

Judge Must Consider Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — Unless a sentence has been agreed to during plea bargaining, a sentencing judge is required to consider the statutory list of aggravating and mitigating factors during sentencing, of which many items concern circumstances that may surround the offense. Such circumstances might include facts concerning both a dismissed charge as well as the admitted offense. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

Under former § 15A-1340.4(a) judges had to consider all aggravating and mitigating factors before imposing a prison term other than the presumptive term. State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985); State v. Flowe, 107 N.C. App. 468, 420 S.E.2d 475, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 669, 424 S.E.2d 412 (1992).

If the trial court imposed a sentence greater than the presumptive term for any conviction, it had consider each of the aggravating and mitigating factors under the Fair Sentencing Act for each of defendant's convictions, and make written findings of fact concerning the factors and whether one set of factors outweighs the other. State v. Green, 101 N.C. App. 317, 399 S.E.2d 376 (1991).

Weighing of factors in aggravation or mitigation is within the sound discretion of the trial judge, once he determines that the aggravating factors outweigh the mitigating factors, the extent by which the sentence exceeds the presumptive sentence is within his discretion so long as it does not exceed the maximum punishment set by the legislature. State v. McKenzie, 122 N.C. App. 37, 468 S.E.2d 817 (1996).

Findings of Factors of Aggravation and Mitigation Required. — Where the conviction for the sale of cocaine, a Class H felony, has a presumptive term of three years and the trial court imposed a 10-year sentence, findings of factors in aggravation and mitigation were required. State v. Artis, 91 N.C. App. 604, 372 S.E.2d 905 (1988).

When Statutory Factor Must Be Found. — Sentencing court is required to find a statutory factor only when the evidence supporting that factor is uncontradicted, substantial, and manifestly credible. State v. Whitaker, 100 N.C. App. 578, 397 S.E.2d 372 (1990).

Finding of Factor Required Where Evidence Uncontradicted, Substantial and Credible. — When evidence in support of a particular mitigating or aggravating factor is uncontradicted, substantial, and there is no reason to doubt its credibility, it is error for the trial court not to find that factor. State v. Daniel, 319 N.C. 308, 354 S.E.2d 216 (1987).

Former § 15A-1340.4 did not require that only aggravating or mitigating factors listed therein be considered. The court could use any factors which were supported by a preponderance of the evidence and were reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Setzer, 61 N.C. App. 500, 301 S.E.2d 107 (1983), cert. denied, 308 N.C. 680, 304 S.E.2d 760 (1983).

In addition to specified factors which must be considered, the sentencing judge may consider any aggravating and mitigating factors that he finds are proved by the preponderance of the evidence, and that are reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. It is error, however, to consider factors such that the severity of the sentence imposed relates to the defendant's plea of not guilty. State v. Blackwood, 60 N.C. App. 150, 298 S.E.2d 196 (1982).

Former § 15A-1340.4 did not limit a trial judge to the aggravating and mitigating factors enumerated therein. State v. Church, 99 N.C. App. 647, 394 S.E.2d 468 (1990).

Cocaine Addiction. — Where defendant presented no evidence compelling a conclusion that her culpability was significantly reduced by her cocaine addiction, the trial court properly refused to find the addiction as a mitigating factor during sentencing. State v. Wilson, 121 N.C. App. 720, 468 S.E.2d 475 (1996).

Factors which would mitigate a sentence if present, cannot be used in aggravation if absent. State v. Harrell, 100 N.C. App. 450, 397 S.E.2d 84 (1990).

All circumstances which are transactionally related to the admitted offense must be considered during sentencing. State v. Wood, 61 N.C. App. 446, 300 S.E.2d 903, cert. denied, 308 N.C. 547, 302 S.E.2d 884 (1983).

As long as they are not elements essential to the establishment of the offense to which the defendant pled guilty, all circumstances which are transactionally related to the admitted offense and which are reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing must be considered during sentencing. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983); State v. Teague, 60 N.C. App. 755, 300 S.E.2d 7 (1983).

The trial court must consider all circumstances that are both transactionally related to the offense and reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing, provided that they are not essential to the establishment of elements of the offense. This is so regardless of whether such factors were specifically listed under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1), and regardless of whether the State specifically requests a finding in this regard. State v. Flowe, 107 N.C. App. 468, 420 S.E.2d 475, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 669, 424 S.E.2d 412 (1992).

If They Are Reasonably Related to the Purposes of Sentencing. — The court could use an aggravating factor not set forth in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1) if it reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Nichols, 66 N.C. App. 318, 311 S.E.2d 38, cert. denied, 311 N.C. 406, 319 S.E.2d 278 (1984).

Former § 15A-1340.4 did not purport to grant trial judge the discretion to create new aggravating factors. Rather, the statute listed several aggravating factors which the trial judge was required to consider and also authorized him to consider any other aggravating factors that he found were proved by a preponderance of the evidence, and that were reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

But the trial judge may wish to exercise restraint when considering nonstatutory aggravating factors after having found statutory factors. This prudent course of conduct would lessen the chance of having the case remanded for resentencing. State v. Baucom, 66 N.C. App. 298, 311 S.E.2d 73 (1984).

Burden of Proving Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — The state has the burden of proving that aggravating factors exist, whereas the defendant has the burden of proving that mitigating factors are present. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Factors Must Be Supported by Preponderance of Evidence. — The trial judge may consider aggravating and mitigating factors supported by evidence not used to prove an essential element as long as those factors are reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. Such factors must be supported by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Teague, 60 N.C. App. 755, 300 S.E.2d 7 (1983).

Findings in aggravation and mitigation must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Separate Factors in Aggravation Cannot be Found on the Same Evidence. — The trial court improperly found two factors in aggravation based upon the same evidence. Therefore, defendant was entitled to a new sentencing hearing on his convictions for burglary and kidnapping. State v. Kyle, 333 N.C. 687, 430 S.E.2d 412 (1993).

Absent Rebuttal, Factual Allegations in Indictment Deemed Admitted by Guilty Plea. — Where a defendant pleads guilty to an indictment which contains factual allegations which could be the basis for the finding of an aggravating circumstance, and fails to challenge or present any evidence to rebut these factual allegations, they are deemed admitted and may be utilized by the trial court to establish the existence of the aggravating factor. State v. Thompson, 314 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

Defendant Who Pleads Guilty May Present Evidence. — Even where a defendant pleads guilty, he may challenge and present evidence at the sentencing hearing to rebut any factual allegations in the indictment or other criminal process which could be used to establish the existence of an aggravating circumstance. State v. Thompson, 314 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

Behavior Prior to Original Trial and Sentencing Hearing. — An inmate's good behavior prior to his original trial and/or sentencing hearing may be found as a nonstatutory mitigating factor, and his bad conduct during the same time frame may be found as a nonstatutory aggravating factor. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Behavior Prior to Resentencing. — As § 15A-1335 prohibits the trial court from resentencing a defendant to a term of imprisonment greater than the prior sentence less the portion of the prior sentence previously served, a trial judge in North Carolina may not consider a defendant's bad conduct during the period between his conviction and his resentencing hearing in order to increase his sentence. However, bad conduct may be found by the trial judge as a nonstatutory aggravating factor to be utilized by the judge in deciding the sentence to be imposed, so long as the new sentence is no more severe than the original one. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Judge Held Not Required to Find Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — Where defendant was charged, convicted and sentenced for four separate violations of § 14-100, the trial judge was not required to find aggravating and mitigating factors in sentencing defendant, even though charges against defendant were consolidated for trial and for hearing on judgments, as they were not consolidated for judgment and thus did not exceed maximum ten-year term for the offense. State v. Bresse, 101 N.C. App. 519, 400 S.E.2d 73, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 272, 407 S.E.2d 842 (1991).

II. DISCRETION OF COURT IN WEIGHING FACTORS AND IMPOSING SENTENCE.

Former Article 81A did not remove, nor intend to remove, all discretion from the sentencing judge. Judges still had discretion to increase or reduce sentences from the presumptive term upon findings of aggravating or mitigating factors, the weighing of which was a matter within their sound discretion. State v. Davis, 58 N.C. App. 330, 293 S.E.2d 658, cert. denied, 306 N.C. 745, 295 S.E.2d 482 (1982); State v. Ahearn, 59 N.C. App. 44, 295 S.E.2d 621 (1982), rev'd on other grounds, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983); State v. Massey, 59 N.C. App. 704, 298 S.E.2d 63 (1982); State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, State v. Vandiver, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988); State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985).

Former Article 81A did not remove all discretion from trial judges. It was necessary that trial judges be permitted great latitude in ascertaining the true existence of aggravating and mitigating circumstances. State v. Graham, 309 N.C. 587, 308 S.E.2d 311 (1983).

The Fair Sentencing Act was not intended to remove all discretion from the trial judges. The trial judge should be permitted wide latitude in arriving at the truth as to the existence of aggravating and mitigating circumstances, for it is only he who observes the demeanor of the witnesses and hears the testimony. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

The question whether to increase the sentence above the presumptive term, and if so, to what extent remains within the trial judge's discretion. The sentence will not be disturbed if the record supports the court's determination. State v. Ruffin, 90 N.C. App. 705, 370 S.E.2d 275 (1988).

Weighing of Factors. — The weight to be given aggravating and mitigating factors is clearly within the sound discretion of the trial judge, whose decision will not be disturbed absent an abuse of that discretion. State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, writ denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 66, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

Weighing Factors Is Not Simple Matter of Mathematics. — The discretionary task of weighing mitigating and aggravating factors is not a simple matter of mathematics. For example, three factors of one kind do not automatically and of necessity outweigh one factor of another kind. The number of factors found is only one consideration in determining which factors outweigh others. Although the court is required to consider all statutory factors to some degree, it may very properly emphasize one factor more than another in a particular case. State v. Ahearn, 59 N.C. App. 44, 295 S.E.2d 621 (1982), rev'd on other grounds, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983); State v. Morris, 59 N.C. App. 157, 296 S.E.2d 309 (1982), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 307 N.C. 471, 299 S.E.2d 227 (1983); State v. Goforth, 59 N.C. App. 504, 297 S.E.2d 128 (1982); State v. Jones, 59 N.C. App. 472, 297 S.E.2d 132 (1982); State v. Thobourne, 59 N.C. App. 584, 297 S.E.2d 774 (1982); State v. Massey, 59 N.C. App. 704, 298 S.E.2d 63 (1982).

The discretionary task of weighing mitigating and aggravating factors is not a simple matter of mathematics. For example, three factors of one kind do not automatically and of necessity outweigh one factor of another kind. The number of factors found is only one consideration in determining which factors outweigh others. State v. Davis, 58 N.C. App. 330, 293 S.E.2d 658, cert. denied, 306 N.C. 745, 295 S.E.2d 482 (1982); State v. Watson, 311 N.C. 252, 316 S.E.2d 293 (1984).

The discretionary task of weighing mitigating and aggravating factors is not a simple matter of mathematics. The number of factors found is only one consideration in determining which factors outweigh others. The balance struck by the trial judge will not be disturbed if there is support in the record for his determination. State v. Abee, 60 N.C. App. 99, 298 S.E.2d 184 (1982), modified on other grounds and aff'd, 308 N.C. 379, 302 S.E.2d 230 (1983).

As former § 15A-1340.4(a) allowed, the court was free to emphasize one factor more than another, as the discretionary weighing of mitigating and aggravating factors did not lend itself to a simple mathematical formula. State v. Sandlin, 61 N.C. App. 421, 300 S.E.2d 893, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 995, 104 S. Ct. 491, 78 L. Ed. 2d 685, cert. denied, 308 N.C. 680, 304 S.E.2d 760 (1983).

But Is Within the Discretion of the Sentencing Judge. — Weighing of aggravating and mitigating factors is within the sound discretion of the sentencing judge. State v. Goforth, 59 N.C. App. 504, 297 S.E.2d 128 (1982); State v. Taylor, 74 N.C. App. 326, 328 S.E.2d 27, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 547, 335 S.E.2d 319 (1985); State v. Freeman, 313 N.C. 539, 330 S.E.2d 465 (1985).

The balancing of the properly found factors in aggravation and mitigation is left to the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Teague, 60 N.C. App. 755, 300 S.E.2d 7 (1983).

Weight attached to particular aggravating or mitigating circumstances in a case is within the discretion of the trial judge. State v. Salters, 65 N.C. App. 31, 308 S.E.2d 512 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 479, 312 S.E.2d 889 (1984); State v. Upright, 72 N.C. App. 94, 323 S.E.2d 479 (1984), cert. denied, 313 N.C. 610, 332 S.E.2d 82 (1985).

Except for maximum sentence limitations in former § 14-1.1, the severity of a sentence imposed pursuant to this Article, insofar as it is based on a weighing of aggravating and mitigating factors, is within the discretion of the judge. State v. Salters, 65 N.C. App. 31, 308 S.E.2d 512 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 479, 312 S.E.2d 889 (1984).

It is within the trial court's discretion to determine the weight given to each aggravating or mitigating factor. State v. Green, 101 N.C. App. 317, 399 S.E.2d 376 (1991).

As Is Decision to Impose Sentence Above Presumptive Term. — Upon a finding by the preponderance of the evidence that aggravating factors outweigh mitigating factors, the question of whether to increase the sentence above the presumptive term, and if so, to what extent remains within the trial judge's discretion. State v. Davis, 58 N.C. App. 330, 293 S.E.2d 658, cert. denied, 306 N.C. 745, 295 S.E.2d 482 (1982); State v. Watson, 311 N.C. 252, 316 S.E.2d 293 (1984).

Once the trial judge determines that the aggravating factors outweigh the mitigating factors, the extent by which the sentence exceeds the presumptive sentence is within his discretion, so long as it does not exceed the maximum punishment set by the legislature. State v. Freeman, 313 N.C. 539, 330 S.E.2d 465 (1985).

Once a trial court has found, by a preponderance of the evidence, that aggravating factors outweigh mitigating factors, the court has the discretion not only to increase the sentence above the presumptive term, but also to determine to what extent the sentence will be increased. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Once the trial court determines that an aggravating factor outweighs a mitigating factor, it is within the sound discretion of the trial court to decide the extent to which the sentence may exceed the presumptive term. State v. Green, 101 N.C. App. 317, 399 S.E.2d 376 (1991).

Or Sentence Below Presumptive Term. — Upon a finding of one or more mitigating factors and no aggravating factors, the question of whether to reduce the sentence below the presumptive term, and if so, to what extent, is within the trial court's discretion. State v. Cain, 79 N.C. App. 35, 338 S.E.2d 898, cert. denied, 316 N.C. 380, 342 S.E.2d 899 (1986).

Finding of an equal number of aggravating and mitigating factors is not determinative. The finding that the sole factor in aggravation outweighed the sole factor in mitigation was in the court's discretion. State v. Massey, 59 N.C. App. 704, 298 S.E.2d 63 (1982).

The discretionary task of a trial court to weigh factors in mitigation and aggravation is not merely an application of simple mathematics; thus, the fact that there are more mitigating factors than aggravating factors is not determinative. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Court May Emphasize One Factor More Than Another. — Although the court is required to consider all statutory factors to some degree, it may very properly emphasize one factor more than another in a particular case. State v. Davis, 58 N.C. App. 330, 293 S.E.2d 658, cert. denied, 306 N.C. 745, 295 S.E.2d 482 (1982); State v. Howard, 99 N.C. App. 347, 393 S.E.2d 139 (1990).

A trial court may properly determine that one factor in aggravation outweighs more than one factor in mitigation and vice versa. State v. Penley, 318 N.C. 30, 347 S.E.2d 783 (1986).

Former § 15A-1340.4 not remove all discretion in sentencing from trial judges. Fact that the number of mitigating factors were greater than the number of aggravating ones did not preclude the trial judge from finding that the aggravating factors outweighed the mitigating ones. State v. Abee, 60 N.C. App. 99, 298 S.E.2d 184 (1982), modified on other grounds and aff'd, 308 N.C. 379, 302 S.E.2d 230 (1983).

Single Aggravating Factor May Support Sentence Greater Than Presumptive

Term. — A finding of a single factor in aggravation supported by a preponderance of evidence is sufficient to support a sentence greater than the presumptive term. State v. Upright, 72 N.C. App. 94, 323 S.E.2d 479 (1984), cert. denied, 313 N.C. 513, 329 S.E.2d 400, cert. denied, 313 N.C. 610, 332 S.E.2d 82 (1985).

Judge need not justify weight accorded any factor supported by preponderance of evidence. State v. Howard, 99 N.C. App. 347, 393 S.E.2d 139 (1990).

Balance Struck by Judge Not Disturbed if Supported by Evidence. — The balance struck by the trial judge in considering circumstances in aggravation and mitigation will not be disturbed if there is support in the record for his determination. State v. Davis, 58 N.C. App. 330, 293 S.E.2d 658, cert. denied, 306 N.C. 745, 295 S.E.2d 482 (1982); State v. Ahearn, 59 N.C. App. 44, 295 S.E.2d 621 (1982), rev'd on other grounds, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983); State v. Morris, 59 N.C. App. 157, 296 S.E.2d 309 (1982), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 307 N.C. 471, 299 S.E.2d 227 (1983); State v. Goforth, 59 N.C. App. 504, 297 S.E.2d 128 (1982); State v. Thobourne, 59 N.C. App. 584, 297 S.E.2d 774 (1982); State v. Massey, 59 N.C. App. 704, 298 S.E.2d 63 (1982); State v. Thompson, 62 N.C. App. 38, 302 S.E.2d 310 (1983), aff'd, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 806 (1984); State v. Baucom, 66 N.C. App. 298, 311 S.E.2d 73 (1984); State v. Mitchell, 67 N.C. App. 549, 313 S.E.2d 201 (1984); State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985); State v. Penley, 318 N.C. 30, 347 S.E.2d 783 (1986); State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Trial judges continue to have great discretion with respect to balancing factors found in aggravation against factors found in mitigation, and this balancing process, if correctly carried out, will not be disturbed on appeal. State v. Hinnant, 65 N.C. App. 130, 308 S.E.2d 732 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 310, 312 S.E.2d 653 (1984).

Lack of Rational Basis Is Abuse of Discretion. — When there is no rational basis for the manner in which the aggravating and mitigating factors are weighed by the sentencing judge, his decision will amount to an abuse of discretion. State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985).

Where the trial judge determined that a single aggravating factor of prior convictions outweighed the two mitigating factors of physical condition and aiding in the apprehension of another felon, there was no abuse of discretion in imposing a 40-year sentence for robbery with a dangerous weapon. State v. Harris, 323 N.C. 112, 371 S.E.2d 689 (1988).

Discretion Not Abused. — Judge's failure to find nonstatutory mitigating factors, even when supported by uncontradicted, substantial, and manifestly credible evidence, will not be disturbed absent a showing of an abuse of that discretion. State v. Harper, 96 N.C. App. 36, 384 S.E.2d 297 (1989).

Under former § 15A-1340.4, it was not an abuse of the court's discretion to find that one aggravating factor out-weighed five mitigating factors in light of evidence that supported the conclusion that the defendant conspired to murder her husband. State v. Cinema Blue of Charlotte, Inc., 98 N.C. App. 628, 392 S.E.2d 136, appeal dismissed, 327 N.C. 142, 394 S.E.2d 181 (1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1083, 111 S. Ct. 953, 112 L. Ed. 2d 1042 (1991).

The trial judge acted within his discretion when he imposed maximum terms of imprisonment with regard to defendant's convictions for breaking or entering into a motor vehicle and felonious larceny, after finding, as aggravating factors, unrelated convictions which had occurred 20 years in the past. State v. Riggs, 100 N.C. App. 149, 394 S.E.2d 670 (1990).

Remand for Resentencing. — When an aggravating factor is incorrect and is overturned on appeal, the trial judge could not properly have balanced the aggravating and mitigating factors, and therefore the case must be remanded for resentencing. State v. Davy, 100 N.C. App. 551, 397 S.E.2d 634 (1990).

Discretion as to Severity of Sentence Limited by former § 15A-1340.4. — Except for maximum sentence limitations in former § 15A-1340.4, the severity of a sentence imposed pursuant to the Fair Sentencing Act, § 15A-1340.1 et seq., insofar as it was based on a weighing of aggravating and mitigating factors, was within the discretion of the judge. State v. Salters, 65 N.C. App. 31, 308 S.E.2d 512 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 479, 312 S.E.2d 889 (1984).

Showing of Atrocity and Cruelty. — There was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's finding that three assaults were heinous, atrocious, or cruel where defendant broke open ex-girlfriend's door and began shooting and all three victims suffered multiple gunshot wounds. The initial act of firing the weapon and injuring the three victims was sufficient to support a conviction for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury in each case, the additional shots which resulted in further injury to each victim were not necessary to the conviction. State v. Evans, 120 N.C. App. 752, 463 S.E.2d 830 (1995).

Permanent Disability. — Court did not err in finding as a nonstatutory aggravating factor that the injuries to victims resulted in permanent disability, this factor was not based on the same evidence used to support the aggravating factor that the offense was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel. State v. Evans, 120 N.C. App. 752, 463 S.E.2d 830 (1995).

III. SENTENCING, GENERALLY.

Former § 15A-1340.4 provided for three methods of sentencing. These methods were in the disjunctive. The statute made no provision for finding aggravating or mitigating factors if two or more crimes were consolidated for judgment, and it was therefore error for the trial court to enhance presumptive sentence by more than the maximum for any of the charges. State v. Ransom, 74 N.C. App. 716, 329 S.E.2d 673 (1985), aff'd, 80 N.C. 711, 343 S.E.2d 232 (1986).

The Fair Sentencing Act did not take away the trial judge's discretion to impose either consecutive or concurrent sentences. State v. Freeman, 313 N.C. 539, 330 S.E.2d 465 (1985).

Constitutionality of Consecutive Sentences. — The imposition of consecutive sentences for conspiracy to commit armed robbery, first-degree murder, armed robbery, second-degree burglary, and breaking or entering and larceny does not violate any constitutional proportionality requirement. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

Trial judge has the discretion to impose either consecutive or concurrent sentences. State v. McKenzie, 122 N.C. App. 37, 468 S.E.2d 817 (1996).

When Sentence Other Than Presumptive Sentence Could Be Imposed. — Under former § 15A-1340.4, the judge could impose a sentence other than the presumptive sentence if he found aggravating or mitigating factors. He could also impose a sentence other than the presumptive sentence pursuant to a plea bargain. The third way he could impose a sentence other than a presumptive sentence was by consolidating two or more charges for judgment. In addition, the judge could, without finding aggravating or mitigating factors, impose a sentence other than the presumptive sentence so long as the sentence complied with the three requirements set forth in this section, including the requirements that the sentence imposed was not for a term longer than the maximum term for any of the charges consolidated. State v. Ransom, 74 N.C. App. 716, 329 S.E.2d 673 (1985), aff'd, 80 N.C. 711, 343 S.E.2d 232 (1986).

Presumptive Sentence Set by Criminal Statute. — In cases in which a statute mandated that an offender be punished as a felon of one of the classifications of former § 15A-1340.4(f), but set a minimum sentence greater than the presumptive sentence established in former § 15A-1340.4(f), the minimum sentence set out in the criminal statute became the presumptive sentence for purposes of sentencing under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Perry, 316 N.C. 87, 340 S.E.2d 450 (1986).

The Fair Sentencing Act's presumptive sentences set out in former § 15A-1340.4(f) did not apply if a separate statute provided its own presumptive sentence, as § 90-95 does. State v. Willis, 92 N.C. App. 494, 374 S.E.2d 613 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 341, 378 S.E.2d 808 (1989).

Factors Contributing to Service Greater Than Presumptive Term to Be Set Out. — A trial judge was required to consider all of the aggravating and mitigating factors listed in former § 15A-1340.4 before imposing a sentence greater than the presumptive term, but was only required to set out in the judgment the factors that he determined by the preponderance of the evidence were present. State v. Greime, 97 N.C. App. 409, 388 S.E.2d 594 (1990).

Departure from Presumptive Sentence Through Weighing of Factors. — A court can depart from the presumptive sentence by weighing mitigating and aggravating factors that are proved by a preponderance of the evidence. If aggravating factors outweigh mitigating factors, the court may impose punishment up to the statutory maximum. Conversely, if mitigating factors preponderate, the court may impose a sentence less than the presumptive sentence. The court must explain its reasons for enhancing or reducing a sentence. United States v. Price, 812 F.2d 174 (4th Cir. 1987).

Presumptive Sentence for Second Degree Murder. — Murder in the second degree was a Class C felony, and therefore the judge sentencing a defendant who was found guilty of such a crime had to impose a 15-year term of imprisonment unless aggravating or mitigating factors merited imposition of a longer or shorter term. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

Burden of Showing Invalidity of Sentence in Excess of Presumptive Term. — Defendant sentenced to a term in excess of the presumptive sentence bears the burden of showing that the sentence imposed is invalid due to an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge or on the basis of procedural conduct or other circumstances prejudicial to him. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

A preponderance of the evidence is sufficient to prove an aggravating factor supporting a sentence in excess of the presumptive term. State v. Mann, 317 N.C. 164, 345 S.E.2d 365 (1986).

In imposing a prison term in excess of 15-year presumptive sentence for Class C felony of second-degree murder under former § 15A-1340.4(f)(1), the sentencing judge had to consider the statutory aggravating and mitigating factors set out in former § 15A-1340.4(a), and could consider other aggravating and mitigating factors if reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Lloyd, 89

N.C. App. 630, 366 S.E.2d 912, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 483, 370 S.E.2d 232 (1988).

Sentence in Excess of Presumptive Term Upheld. — Evidence that assault victim was beaten, shot in the back of the head, driven over by a car, and left on the highway with his leg caught up underneath the car held to justify a sentence in excess of the presumptive term. State v. Poole, 82 N.C. App. 117, 345 S.E.2d 466 (1986), cert. denied, 318 N.C. 700, 351 S.E.2d 757 (1987).

It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial judge to impose a sentence in excess of the presumptive term for second degree murder merely because only two aggravating factors (prior conviction and premeditation and deliberation) were found as compared to seven mitigating factors. State v. Carter, 318 N.C. 487, 349 S.E.2d 580 (1986).

Twenty-five-year sentence for robbery with a dangerous weapon held valid, just and in accordance with the purposes of the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Summerlin, 98 N.C. App. 167, 390 S.E.2d 358, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 143, 394 S.E.2d 183 (1990).

Sentence Other Than Presumptive One Upheld. — The trial judge did not err where he consolidated defendant's offenses for sentencing, made findings of factors in aggravation and mitigation, and imposed a sentence other than the presumptive sentence, but which did not exceed the maximum term for the most serious felony so consolidated. State v. Phillips, 84 N.C. App. 302, 352 S.E.2d 273, cert. denied, 319 N.C. 462, 356 S.E.2d 12 (1987).

Life Sentence Upheld. — Sentencing judge did not abuse his discretion in balancing the aggravating and mitigating factors and in sentencing defendant to the maximum term of life imprisonment. The judge found one aggravating factor, that defendant had prior convictions for criminal offenses punishable by more than 60 days' confinement, and the record reflected that defendant had been convicted of at least eight offenses which were punishable by confinement in excess of 60 days. In mitigation, the judge found that defendant was suffering from a mental condition which significantly reduced his culpability and that the relationship between defendant and victim was an extenuating circumstance. It was entirely reasonable for the sentencing judge to find that the aggravating factor found, involving multiple convictions, outweighed the factors found in mitigation. State v. Bolinger, 320 N.C. 596, 359 S.E.2d 459 (1987).

Increased Sentence on Remand Upheld. — Where defendant's case was remanded on appeal on grounds that defendant was improperly given a separate sentence in an habitual felon court, it was not error for the trial court to increase defendant's sentence on resentencing from three years to 15 years. State v. Kirkpatrick, 89 N.C. App. 353, 365 S.E.2d 640 (1988).

The trial court acted under a misapprehension of law when it sentenced a defendant to a presumptive term of three years for marijuana offenses under § 90-95(b)(2). State v. Pavone, 104 N.C. App. 442, 410 S.E.2d 1 (1991).

Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — In deciding upon the length of a sentence of imprisonment differing from the presumptive term listed in subsection (f) of former § 15A-1340.4, a judge had to consider 16 possible aggravating factors and 14 possible mitigating factors listed in subsection (a) of former § 15A-1340.4. He could also consider any aggravating and mitigating factors that he found were proved by the preponderance of the evidence, and that were reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing, whether or not such aggravating and mitigating factors were set forth in subsection (a) of former§ 15A-1340.4. However, evidence necessary to prove an element of the offense could not be used to prove any factor in aggravation. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

Imposition of a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment for first-degree sexual offense was not so disproportionate as to constitute a violation of U.S. Const., Amend. VIII. State v. Higginbottom, 312 N.C. 760, 324 S.E.2d 834 (1985).

Habitual Felons. — Defendant's sentences were not excessive where defendant was an habitual offender, sentenced to fourteen years of imprisonment, the minimum sentence allowed under the habitual felon statute. State v. Hodge, 112 N.C. App. 462, 436 S.E.2d 251 (1993).

Imposition of a 30-year sentence for a habitual felon who under the facts could have received a maximum sentence of life imprisonment under former § 15A-1340.4 was within constitutional limits and did not constitute cruel and unusual punishment. State v. Aldridge, 76 N.C. App. 638, 334 S.E.2d 107 (1985).

IV. APPELLATE REVIEW.

Under the Fair Sentencing Act, the appellate courts have more supervision over sentencing judgments of the trial divisions than they did before that Act. State v. Wortham, 318 N.C. 669, 351 S.E.2d 294 (1987).

The Fair Sentencing Act does not allow appeal of a presumptive sentence as of right. State v. Cain, 79 N.C. App. 35, 338 S.E.2d 898, cert. denied, 316 N.C. 380, 342 S.E.2d 899 (1986).

Appeal of Right from Sentence in Excess of Presumptive Term. — When a convicted felon is given a sentence in excess of a presumptive sentence, he may appeal as a matter of right, and the only question before the appellate court on such an appeal is whether the sentence is supported by evidence introduced at trial and the sentencing hearing. State v. Teague, 60 N.C. App. 755, 300 S.E.2d 7 (1983).

Consolidation of Presumptive Sentences. — When indictments or convictions with equal presumptive terms were consolidated for sentencing without the finding of aggravating or mitigating circumstances, and the terms were totaled to arrive at the sentence, the sentence, for purposes of appellate review, because of the provisions of former § 15A-1340.4(a), would be deemed to be equally attributable to each indictment or conviction if nothing else appeared in the record. State v. Hemby, 333 N.C. 331, 426 S.E.2d 77 (1993).

Deletion of Aggravating Factor Following Notice of Appeal. — Trial judge has authority to change the judgment, so as to delete a factor found in aggravation, after it has been entered and after defendant has given notice of appeal, where the amendment was made during the session, since all orders and judgments are in fieri during the session and may be amended or vacated by the court during the session, even though notice of appeal has been entered. State v. Davis, 58 N.C. App. 330, 293 S.E.2d 658, cert. denied, 306 N.C. 745, 295 S.E.2d 482 (1982).

Scope of Review. — In sentencing review, the Court of Appeals looks not for errors in judgment, but only for errors of law. State v. Hinnant, 65 N.C. App. 130, 308 S.E.2d 732 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 310, 312 S.E.2d 653 (1984).

A ruling committed to a trial judge's discretion will be upset only upon a showing that it could not have been the result of a reasoned decision. State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985).

Remand for New Hearing. — Because it must be assumed that every factor in aggravation measured against every factor in mitigation, with concomitant weight attached to each, contributes to the severity of the sentence in every case in which it is found that the judge erred in a finding or findings in aggravation and imposed a sentence beyond the presumptive term, such case must be remanded for a new sentencing hearing. State v. Chatman, 308 N.C. 169, 301 S.E.2d 71 (1983); State v. Thompson, 62 N.C. App. 38, 302 S.E.2d 310 (1983), aff'd, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 886 (1984); State v. Isom, 65 N.C. App. 223, 309 S.E.2d 283 (1983); State v. Bates, 76 N.C. App. 676, 334 S.E.2d 73 (1985); State v. Hayes, 314 N.C. 460, 334 S.E.2d 741 (1985); State v. Long, 316 N.C. 60, 340 S.E.2d 392 (1986); State v. Daniel, 319 N.C. 308, 354 S.E.2d 216 (1987); State v. Taylor, 74 N.C. App. 326, 328 S.E.2d 27, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 547, 335 S.E.2d 319 (1985); State v. Green, 309 N.C. 623, 308 S.E.2d 326 (1983).

Finding Aggravating Factor for Misdemeanor Conviction Nonprejudicial Error. — The trial court did not need to find an aggravating factor for the breaking and entering count since the defendant was convicted of a misdemeanor which was not subject to former § 15A-1340.4(b). The finding of an aggravating factor for the misdemeanor conviction, therefore, was superfluous and nonprejudicial error. The extent of punishment for misdemeanors is referred to the discretion of the trial court and its sentence may not be interfered with by the appellate court, except in cases of manifest and gross abuse. State v. Clark, 107 N.C. App. 184, 419 S.E.2d 188 (1992).

Where trial judge stated his intended sentence even before evidence was presented to the jury on the issue of guilt, the appellate court could not conclude that the sentence imposed was based solely upon the evidence, the argument of counsel and the aggravating and mitigating factors found by the trial judge, and the case would be remanded for a new sentencing hearing. State v. Cannon, 326 N.C. 37, 387 S.E.2d 450 (1990).

Sentence Influenced by Insistence on Jury Trial. — Where it could reasonably be inferred from the language of the trial judge that sentence was imposed at least in part because defendant did not agree to a plea offer by the state and insisted on a trial by jury, defendant's constitutional right to trial by jury was abridged, and a new sentencing hearing would result. State v. Cannon, 326 N.C. 37, 387 S.E.2d 450 (1990).

Harmless Error in Factors Found. — Where defendant's sentence of 10 years imprisonment for four consolidated convictions of first degree kidnapping was less than the presumptive sentence for that crime, and trial judge found no mitigating factors, any error in the aggravating factors found was harmless so far as defendant's sentence for kidnapping was concerned. State v. Long, 316 N.C. 60, 340 S.E.2d 392 (1986).

V. ADDITIONAL SENTENCING FACTORS.

Judges still have discretion to increase or reduce sentences from the presumptive term upon findings of aggravating or mitigating factors, the weighing of which is a matter within their sound discretion. The balance struck by the trial judge will not be disturbed if there is support in the record for his determination. State v. Stone, 71 N.C. App. 417, 322 S.E.2d 413 (1984).

Conduct Prior to Original Trial and Sentencing Hearing. — An inmate's good behavior prior to his original trial and/or sentencing hearing may be found as a nonstatutory mitigating factor, and his bad conduct during the same time frame may be found as a nonstatutory aggravating factor. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Conduct Between Conviction and Presentencing. — As § 15A-1335 prohibits the trial court from resentencing a defendant to a term of imprisonment greater than the prior sentence less the portion of the prior sentence previously served, a trial judge in North Carolina may not consider a defendant's bad conduct during the period between his conviction and the resentencing hearing to increase his sentence. However, bad conduct may be found by the trial judge as a nonstatutory aggravating factor to be utilized by the judge in deciding the sentence to be imposed, so long as the new sentence is no more severe than the original one. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

A defendant's good conduct while incarcerated during the period from his conviction until the time of his resentencing hearing may, in the discretion of the trial judge, be found as a nonstatutory mitigating factor under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Trial judge's remarks concerning the effect of "good time" and "gain time" were not an expression of dissatisfaction with the length of time convicted criminals must serve in prison, but were made in an effort to respond to defense counsel's impassioned argument concerning the fact that the defendant would be required to serve other sentences totalling four years at the expiration of the sentence at issue; thus, it could not be said from such remarks that the trial court was using the sentencing process to thwart the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Minimum Sentence Under § 14-87 Irreducible Except for Good Behavior. — The following factors lead to the conclusion that the General Assembly considered the relationship between § 14-87 and former Article 81A. First, § 14-87 was rewritten as part of Session Laws 1979, c. 760. Second, the rewritten version specifically referred to former § 15A-1340.7, which allowed credit for good behavior. Third, the General Assembly amended the last part of § 14-87(a) in the 1979 second session changing the phrase "... punished as a Class D felon" to "... guilty of a Class D felony." These factors lead to the conclusion that the General Assembly intended to impose a minimum sentence for armed robbery greater than the presumptive sentence for a Class D felony and also intended that the minimum be irreducible, except for credit for good behavior, notwithstanding any other provision of law. State v. Leeper, 59 N.C. App. 199, 296 S.E.2d 7, cert. denied, 307 N.C. 272, 299 S.E.2d 218 (1982).

Consideration of Age of Rape Victim. — Due to the General Assembly giving children under 13 greater protection from first-degree rape than victims over 13, the rape of a victim under 13 by a defendant at least 12 and at least four years older than the victim made the defendant more blameworthy, because rape victims under 13 were in fact more vulnerable to the crime of rape than they would otherwise be if older than 12. This did not, however allow the age of the victim to be considered in sentencing for first-degree rape, because (1) age is an element of first-degree rape under § 14-27.2(a)(1) and as such could not be considered an aggravating factor upon sentencing for that crime under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)(p), and (2) first-degree rape was a Class B felony which carried a mandatory life sentence without consideration of aggravating and mitigating factors, under former § 14-1.1. State v. Vanstory, 84 N.C. App. 535, 353 S.E.2d 236, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 176, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

The fact that others tried on similar charges are given shorter sentences is not ground for legal objection, the punishment imposed in a particular case, if within statutory limits, being within the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Best, 11 N.C. App. 286, 181 S.E.2d 138, cert. denied, 279 N.C. 350, 182 S.E.2d 582 (1971); State v. Sligh, 27 N.C. App. 668, 219 S.E.2d 801 (1975).

Excessive Sentence Cannot Be Sustained. — See State v. Sellers, 234 N.C. 648, 68 S.E.2d 308 (1951).

Excessive Judgment Vacated and Remanded. — See State v. Marsh, 234 N.C. 101, 66 S.E.2d 684 (1951).

Credit for Pretrial Detention. — A prisoner should be given credit for time spent in custody prior to commitment where he has been given a maximum sentence. Culp v. Bounds, 325 F. Supp. 416 (W.D.N.C. 1971).

Same — Failure to Give Credit Violates Constitution. — North Carolina's failure to give a prisoner credit for time served before trial where he has received a maximum sentence violates the Constitution in two ways. First, it constitutes multiple punishment for a single offense, thereby offending the double jeopardy clause of the Fifth Amendment which is applicable to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment. Second, the fact that only those accused who are unable to raise bail are subjected to extra pretrial incarceration when their prison time exceeds the statutory maximum is an invidious discrimination against the poor in violation of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Culp v. Bounds, 325 F. Supp. 416 (W.D.N.C. 1971).

The State's refusal to give a prisoner credit for pretrial detention is an unconstitutional discrimination on the basis of wealth prohibited by the Fourteenth Amendment. Wealthy defendants (except where no bail is allowed) are able to remain out of prison until conviction and sentencing; the poor stay behind bars. Culp v. Bounds, 325 F. Supp. 416 (W.D.N.C. 1971).

Same — Pretrial Custody Added to Sentence Cannot Exceed Statutory Maximum Punishment. — The time a prisoner spends in custody prior to trial when added to the sentence to be served upon commitment cannot total more than the statutory maximum punishment for the crime involved. Culp v. Bounds, 325 F. Supp. 416 (W.D.N.C. 1971).

Same — New Conviction. — The constitutional guarantee against multiple punishments for the same offense absolutely requires that punishment already exacted must be fully "credited" in imposing sentence upon a new conviction for the same offense. Culp v. Bounds, 325 F. Supp. 416 (W.D.N.C. 1971).

Where Felony and Misdemeanor Counts Consolidated for Judgment. — Where defendant was tried and convicted upon an indictment charging felonious breaking and entering and misdemeanor larceny, and both counts were consolidated for judgment, the fact that the one sentence imposed was in excess of that permissible upon conviction of the misdemeanor was immaterial and was not prejudicial where it did not exceed that permitted upon conviction of the felony. State v. Cleary, 9 N.C. App. 189, 175 S.E.2d 749 (1970).

§ 15A-1340.14. Prior record level for felony sentencing.

(a) Generally. — The prior record level of a felony offender is determined by calculating the sum of the points assigned to each of the offender's prior convictions that the court finds to have been proved in accordance with this section.

(b) Points. — Points are assigned as follows:

(1) For each prior felony Class A conviction, 10 points.

(1a) For each prior felony Class B1 conviction, 9 points.

(2) For each prior felony Class B2, C, or D conviction, 6 points.

(3) For each prior felony Class E, F, or G conviction, 4 points.

(4) For each prior felony Class H or I conviction, 2 points.

(5) For each prior misdemeanor conviction as defined in this subsection, 1 point. For purposes of this subsection, misdemeanor is defined as any Class A1 and Class 1 nontraffic misdemeanor offense, impaired driving (G.S. 20-138.1), impaired driving in a commercial vehicle (G.S. 20-138.2), and misdemeanor death by vehicle (G.S. 20-141.4(a2)), but not any other misdemeanor traffic offense under Chapter 20 of the General Statutes.

(6) If all the elements of the present offense are included in any prior offense for which the offender was convicted, whether or not the prior offense or offenses were used in determining prior record level, 1 point.

(7) If the offense was committed while the offender was on supervised or unsupervised probation, parole, or post-release supervision, or while the offender was serving a sentence of imprisonment, or while the offender was on escape from a correctional institution while serving a sentence of imprisonment, 1 point.

For purposes of determining prior record points under this subsection, a conviction for a first degree rape or a first degree sexual offense committed prior to the effective date of this subsection shall be treated as a felony Class B1 conviction, and a conviction for any other felony Class B offense committed prior to the effective date of this subsection shall be treated as a felony Class B2 conviction.

(c) Prior Record Levels for Felony Sentencing. — The prior record levels for felony sentencing are:

(1) Level I — 0 points.

(2) Level II — At least 1, but not more than 4 points.

(3) Level III — At least 5, but not more than 8 points.

(4) Level IV — At least 9, but not more than 14 points.

(5) Level V — At least 15, but not more than 18 points.

(6) Level VI — At least 19 points.

In determining the prior record level, the classification of a prior offense is the classification assigned to that offense at the time the offense for which the offender is being sentenced is committed.

(d) Multiple Prior Convictions Obtained in One Court Week. — For purposes of determining the prior record level, if an offender is convicted of more than one offense in a single superior court during one calendar week, only the conviction for the offense with the highest point total is used. If an offender is convicted of more than one offense in a single session of district court, only one of the convictions is used.

(e) Classification of Prior Convictions From Other Jurisdictions. — Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, a conviction occurring in a jurisdiction other than North Carolina is classified as a Class I felony if the jurisdiction in which the offense occurred classifies the offense as a felony, or is classified as a Class 3 misdemeanor if the jurisdiction in which the offense occurred classifies the offense as a misdemeanor. If the offender proves by the preponderance of the evidence that an offense classified as a felony in the other jurisdiction is substantially similar to an offense that is a misdemeanor in North Carolina, the conviction is treated as that class of misdemeanor for assigning prior record level points. If the State proves by the preponderance of the evidence that an offense classified as either a misdemeanor or a felony in the other jurisdiction is substantially similar to an offense in North Carolina that is classified as a Class I felony or higher, the conviction is treated as that class of felony for assigning prior record level points. If the State proves by the preponderance of the evidence that an offense classified as a misdemeanor in the other jurisdiction is substantially similar to an offense classified as a Class A1 or Class 1 misdemeanor in North Carolina, the conviction is treated as a Class A1 or Class 1 misdemeanor for assigning prior record level points.

(f) Proof of Prior Convictions. — A prior conviction shall be proved by any of the following methods:

(1) Stipulation of the parties.

(2) An original or copy of the court record of the prior conviction.

(3) A copy of records maintained by the Division of Criminal Information, the Division of Motor Vehicles, or of the Administrative Office of the Courts.

(4) Any other method found by the court to be reliable.

The State bears the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, that a prior conviction exists and that the offender before the court is the same person as the offender named in the prior conviction. The original or a copy of the court records or a copy of the records maintained by the Division of Criminal Information, the Division of Motor Vehicles, or of the Administrative Office of the Courts, bearing the same name as that by which the offender is charged, is prima facie evidence that the offender named is the same person as the offender before the court, and that the facts set out in the record are true. For purposes of this subsection, "a copy" includes a paper writing containing a reproduction of a record maintained electronically on a computer or other data processing equipment, and a document produced by a facsimile machine. The prosecutor shall make all feasible efforts to obtain and present to the court the offender's full record. Evidence presented by either party at trial may be utilized to prove prior convictions. Suppression of prior convictions is pursuant to G.S. 15A-980. If a motion is made pursuant to that section during the sentencing stage of the criminal action, the court may grant a continuance of the sentencing hearing. If asked by the defendant in compliance with G.S. 15A-903, the prosecutor shall furnish the defendant's prior criminal record to the defendant within a reasonable time sufficient to allow the defendant to determine if the record available to the prosecutor is accurate. Upon request of a sentencing services program established pursuant to Article 61 of Chapter 7A of the General Statutes, the district attorney shall provide any information the district attorney has about the criminal record of a person for whom the program has been requested to provide a sentencing plan pursuant to G.S. 7A-773.1. (1993, c. 538, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, s. 10; c. 24, s. 14(b); 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 767, ss. 11-13; 1995, c. 507, s. 19.5(f); 1995 (Reg. Sess., 1996), c. 742, s. 15; 1997-80, s. 7; 1997-486, s. 1; 1999-306, s. 3; 1999-408, s. 3.)

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 1999-306, s. 1, effective January 1, 2000, except that community penalties plans requested for offenders prior to that date shall be governed by the law in effect at the time the plan was requested, added the last sentence to the end of the second paragraph of subsection (f).

CASE NOTES

Definitions. — Under this section, "prior felony conviction" refers only to a prior entry of a plea of guilty or no contest; it does not refer to the sentence imposed for committing the prior felony. State v. Vaughn, 130 N.C. App. 456, 503 S.E.2d 110 (1998), aff'd, 350 N.C. 88, 511 S.E.2d 638 (1999).

Scoring Common Law Offenses. — The trial court properly assessed the defendant's prior common law misdemeanor kidnapping offense as second degree kidnapping, to reflect its classification at the time of the current offense. State v. Rice, 129 N.C. App. 715, 501 S.E.2d 665 (1998), cert. denied, 349 N.C. 374, 525 S.E.2d 189 (1998).

The Court Should Impose an Enhanced Sentence for the Underlying Felonies, Not for Being a Habitual Felon. — The trial court erred in imposing the habitual felon sentence in a separate judgment from the principal felony convictions, and directing that the latter run at the expiration of the habitual felon sentence. On remand, the court should calculate defendant's prior record level pursuant to this section and impose sentences upon the "underlying felonies as . . . Class C felonies." State v. Wilson, 139 N.C. App. 544, 533 S.E.2d 865 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 279, 546 S.E.2d 395 (2000).

Determination of Prior Record Level. — The trial court improperly assigned Class C level points for a Class H conviction, even though the conviction had resulted in a Class C level sentence. State v. Vaughn, 130 N.C. App. 456, 503 S.E.2d 110 (1998), aff'd, 350 N.C. 88, 511 S.E.2d 638 (1999).

Trial court impermissibly assigned points to defendant's three prior DWI convictions where those same three DWI convictions were the basis for her habitual DWI charge. State v. Gentry, 135 N.C. App. 107, 519 S.E.2d 68 (1999).

Harmless Error. — The defendant's assignment of error to two of the ten points the court used to determined that his record level was level IV did not result in reversal, although one of the points was based on insufficient evidence that he was on probation while committing the current offenses, because he was correctly found to have nine prior record points which still left his point range within level IV. State v. Smith, 139 N.C. App. 209, 533 S.E.2d 518 (2000).

Proof of Criminal History. — A computerized printout not under seal was admissible to prove prior criminal history, as it contained a detailed record of defendant's criminal history with sufficient identifying information to give it the indicia of reliability. State v. Rich, 130 N.C. App. 113, 502 S.E.2d 49 (1998), cert. denied, 349 N.C. 237, 516 S.E.2d 605 (1998).

Copies As Proof. — The State could use a certified computer printout from the Administrative Office of the Courts to establish a prior conviction, where the printout was offered during the defendant's prosecution for impaired driving. State v. Ellis, 130 N.C. App. 596, 504 S.E.2d 787 (1998).

Where it was unclear whether defendant was stipulating, pursuant to this section, that the out-of-state convictions were substantially similar to certain North Carolina felony charges or just agreeing that he did in fact commit those crimes, the case was remanded. State v. Hanton, 140 N.C. App. 679, 540 S.E.2d 376 (2000).

Decisions Under Prior Law

Defendant's prior convictions will either serve to establish his status as an habitual felon pursuant to § 15-7.1 or to increase his prior record level pursuant to subsection (b); the existence of prior convictions may not be used to increase a defendant's sentence pursuant to both provisions at the same time. State v. Bethea, 122 N.C. App. 623, 471 S.E.2d 430 (1996).

Use of Felony Convictions Consolidated With Other Felonies. — Trial court did not err in using three felony convictions to increase defendant's prior record level where each of those convictions had been consolidated for judgment with a felony conviction used to establish habitual felon status. State v. Truesdale, 123 N.C. App. 639, 473 S.E.2d 670 (1996).

Convictions Obtained in Same Week. — There is nothing in this section and § 14-7.6 to prohibit the court from using one conviction obtained in a single calendar week to establish habitual felon status and using another separate conviction obtained the same week to determine prior record level. State v. Truesdale, 123 N.C. App. 639, 473 S.E.2d 670 (1996).

Points for Probation Violations. — The language of subsection (b)(7) is clear and unambiguous that if a defendant commits an offense while on probation, a point is assessed regardless of the type of conviction for which the probation was imposed. State v. Leopard, 126 N.C. App. 82, 483 S.E.2d 469 (1997).

§ 15A-1340.15. Multiple convictions.

(a) Consecutive Sentences. — This Article does not prohibit the imposition of consecutive sentences. Unless otherwise specified by the court, all sentences of imprisonment run concurrently with any other sentences of imprisonment.

(b) Consolidation of Sentences. — If an offender is convicted of more than one offense at the same time, the court may consolidate the offenses for judgment and impose a single judgment for the consolidated offenses. The judgment shall contain a sentence disposition specified for the class of offense and prior record level of the most serious offense, and its minimum sentence of imprisonment shall be within the ranges specified for that class of offense and prior record level, unless applicable statutes require or authorize another minimum sentence of imprisonment. (1993, c. 538, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b).)

§ 15A-1340.16. Aggravated and mitigated sentences.

(a) Generally, Burden of Proof. — The court shall consider evidence of aggravating or mitigating factors present in the offense that make an aggravated or mitigated sentence appropriate, but the decision to depart from the presumptive range is in the discretion of the court. The State bears the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that an aggravating factor exists, and the offender bears the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that a mitigating factor exists.

(b) When Aggravated or Mitigated Sentence Allowed. — If the court finds that aggravating or mitigating factors exist, it may depart from the presumptive range of sentences specified in G.S. 15A-1340.17(c)(2). If the court finds that aggravating factors are present and are sufficient to outweigh any mitigating factors that are present, it may impose a sentence that is permitted by the aggravated range described in G.S. 15A-1340.17(c)(4). If the court finds that mitigating factors are present and are sufficient to outweigh any aggravating factors that are present, it may impose a sentence that is permitted by the mitigated range described in G.S. 15A-1340.17(c)(3).

(c) Written Findings; When Required. — The court shall make findings of the aggravating and mitigating factors present in the offense only if, in its discretion, it departs from the presumptive range of sentences specified in G.S.

15A-1340.17(c)(2). Findings shall be in writing. The requirement to make findings in order to depart from the presumptive range applies regardless of whether the sentence of imprisonment is activated or suspended.

(d) Aggravating Factors. — The following are aggravating factors:

(1) The defendant induced others to participate in the commission of the offense or occupied a position of leadership or dominance of other participants.

(2) The defendant joined with more than one other person in committing the offense and was not charged with committing a conspiracy.

(2a) The offense was committed for the benefit of, or at the direction of, any criminal street gang, with the specific intent to promote, further, or assist in any criminal conduct by gang members, and the defendant was not charged with committing a conspiracy. A "criminal street gang" means any ongoing organization, association, or group of three or more persons, whether formal or informal, having as one of its primary activities the commission of felony or violent misdemeanor offenses, or delinquent acts that would be felonies or violent misdemeanors if committed by an adult, and having a common name or common identifying sign, colors, or symbols.

(3) The offense was committed for the purpose of avoiding or preventing a lawful arrest or effecting an escape from custody.

(4) The defendant was hired or paid to commit the offense.

(5) The offense was committed to disrupt or hinder the lawful exercise of any governmental function or the enforcement of laws.

(6) The offense was committed against or proximately caused serious injury to a present or former law enforcement officer, employee of the Department of Correction, jailer, fireman, emergency medical technician, ambulance attendant, justice or judge, clerk or assistant or deputy clerk of court, magistrate, prosecutor, juror, or witness against the defendant, while engaged in the performance of that person's official duties or because of the exercise of that person's official duties.

(7) The offense was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel.

(8) The defendant knowingly created a great risk of death to more than one person by means of a weapon or device which would normally be hazardous to the lives of more than one person.

(9) The defendant held public office at the time of the offense and the offense related to the conduct of the office.

(10) The defendant was armed with or used a deadly weapon at the time of the crime.

(11) The victim was very young, or very old, or mentally or physically infirm, or handicapped.

(12) The defendant committed the offense while on pretrial release on another charge.

(13) The defendant involved a person under the age of 16 in the commission of the crime.

(14) The offense involved an attempted or actual taking of property of great monetary value or damage causing great monetary loss, or the offense involved an unusually large quantity of contraband.

(15) The defendant took advantage of a position of trust or confidence to commit the offense.

(16) The offense involved the sale or delivery of a controlled substance to a minor.

(17) The offense for which the defendant stands convicted was committed against a victim because of the victim's race, color, religion, nationality, or country of origin.

(18) The defendant does not support the defendant's family.

(18a) The defendant has previously been adjudicated delinquent for an offense that would be a Class A, B1, B2, C, D, or E felony if committed by an adult.

(19) The serious injury inflicted upon the victim is permanent and debilitating.

(20) Any other aggravating factor reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing.

Evidence necessary to prove an element of the offense shall not be used to prove any factor in aggravation, and the same item of evidence shall not be used to prove more than one factor in aggravation. Evidence necessary to establish that an enhanced sentence is required under G.S. 14-2.2 may not be used to prove any factor in aggravation.

The judge shall not consider as an aggravating factor the fact that the defendant exercised the right to a jury trial.

(e) Mitigating Factors. — The following are mitigating factors:

(1) The defendant committed the offense under duress, coercion, threat, or compulsion that was insufficient to constitute a defense but significantly reduced the defendant's culpability.

(2) The defendant was a passive participant or played a minor role in the commission of the offense.

(3) The defendant was suffering from a mental or physical condition that was insufficient to constitute a defense but significantly reduced the defendant's culpability for the offense.

(4) The defendant's age, immaturity, or limited mental capacity at the time of commission of the offense significantly reduced the defendant's culpability for the offense.

(5) The defendant has made substantial or full restitution to the victim.

(6) The victim was more than 16 years of age and was a voluntary participant in the defendant's conduct or consented to it.

(7) The defendant aided in the apprehension of another felon or testified truthfully on behalf of the prosecution in another prosecution of a felony.

(8) The defendant acted under strong provocation, or the relationship between the defendant and the victim was otherwise extenuating.

(9) The defendant could not reasonably foresee that the defendant's conduct would cause or threaten serious bodily harm or fear, or the defendant exercised caution to avoid such consequences.

(10) The defendant reasonably believed that the defendant's conduct was legal.

(11) Prior to arrest or at an early stage of the criminal process, the defendant voluntarily acknowledged wrongdoing in connection with the offense to a law enforcement officer.

(12) The defendant has been a person of good character or has had a good reputation in the community in which the defendant lives.

(13) The defendant is a minor and has reliable supervision available.

(14) The defendant has been honorably discharged from the United States armed services.

(15) The defendant has accepted responsibility for the defendant's criminal conduct.

(16) The defendant has entered and is currently involved in or has successfully completed a drug treatment program or an alcohol treatment program subsequent to arrest and prior to trial.

(17) The defendant supports the defendant's family.

(18) The defendant has a support system in the community.

(19) The defendant has a positive employment history or is gainfully employed.

(20) The defendant has a good treatment prognosis, and a workable treatment plan is available.

(21) Any other mitigating factor reasonably related to the purposes of sentences. (1993, c. 538, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 7, s. 6; c. 22, s. 22; c. 24, s. 14(b); 1995, c. 509, s. 13; 1997-443, ss. 19.25(w), 19.25(ee).)

CASE NOTES

Findings. — As the Structured Sentencing Act provides specifically and without exception that a trial court must make written findings when deviating from the presumptive sentence and, unlike the Fair Sentencing Act, contains no exception for a sentence imposed pursuant to a plea arrangement, the trial court erred in imposing an aggravated sentence upon defendant without making written findings. State v. Bright, 135 N.C. App. 381, 520 S.E.2d 138 (1999).

No findings of mitigating or aggravating factors were required where the trial court sentenced defendant within the presumptive guidelines for his offense. State v. Brooks, 136 N.C. App. 124, 523 S.E.2d 704 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 475, 543 S.E.2d 496 (2000).

Burden of Proof. — Where the defendant contends that the trial court erred in failing to find a mitigating factor established by uncontradicted evidence, his position is analogous to that of a party seeking a directed verdict: he is asking the court to conclude that the evidence so clearly establishes the fact in issue that no reasonable inferences to the contrary can be drawn, and that the credibility of the evidence is manifest as a matter of law. State v. Deese, 127 N.C. App. 536, 491 S.E.2d 682 (1997).

Strong Provocation as Mitigating Factor. — Evidence of "strong provocation" held insufficient where defendant retrieved a shotgun after a confrontation with victim and provoked the later confrontation which resulted in the victim's death. State v. Deese, 127 N.C. App. 536, 491 S.E.2d 682 (1997).

Restitution as Mitigating Factor. — Defendant did not make substantial restitution to the victim so as to merit a mitigating instruction where the evidence indicated that defendant did not return property or money to victim until a civil lawsuit was filed and an investigator was employed. State v. Hughes, 136 N.C. App. 92, 524 S.E.2d 63 (1999).

Mitigating Factors Not Found. — Where the presentence investigative report showed that defendant had held various jobs, mostly part-time, some for undisclosed amounts of time, and only one full-time for six months, the trial court in its discretion could have found that this employment history did not amount to substantial or manifest credible evidence in support of mitigating factors. State v. Hughes, 136 N.C. App. 92, 524 S.E.2d 63 (1999).

The trial court did not err by failing to find either (e)(11) or (e)(15) mitigating factors. While the evidence showed that the defendant was aware that two people had been shot and that he had admitted to shooting one of them, a reasonable inference could be drawn that his statements did not amount to an admission of "culpability, responsibility or remorse, as well as guilt," especially where his testimony regarding the shooting of the victim who survived was that he "raised up [his] hand and the gun went off." State v. Godley, 140 N.C. App. 15, 535 S.E.2d 566 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1499, 149 L. Ed. 2d 384 (2001).

Trial court was not required to justify a decision to sentence a defendant within the presumptive range by making findings of aggravation and mitigation under this section. State v. Campbell, 133 N.C. App. 531, 515 S.E.2d 732 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 111, 540 S.E.2d 370 (1999).

Where the trial court, in its discretion did not depart from the presumptive range of sentences, it was not required to make findings of mitigating factors. State v. Brown, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 428, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 976 (2001).

Discretion of Trial Court. — Trial court had the discretion to choose to not consider aggravating or mitigating factors and to choose to sentence defendant convicted of shooting the victim in the back to consecutive sentences within the presumptive range for the two offenses for which the defendant was convicted; the Structured Sentencing Act did not deprive defendant of due process or equal protection and, since the sentences imposed were within the limits set by the legislature, the Eighth Amendment was not offended. State v. Streeter, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 240, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 989 (2001).

Participation in Drug Treatment Center Program as Mitigating Factor. — Where defendant presented uncontroverted evidence of the mitigating factor, § 15A-1340.16(e)(16), that defendant successfully completed a drug treatment program while awaiting trial, the trial court's failure to consider this mitigating factor was erroneous. State v. Hilbert, — N.C. App. —, 549 S.E.2d 882, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 658 (2001).

Age or Physical Infirmity as Aggravating Factor. — The policy underlying the aggravating factor in (d)(11) is to deter wrongdoers from taking advantage of a victim because of his age or mental or physical infirmity. State v. Deese, 127 N.C. App. 536, 491 S.E.2d 682 (1997).

The victim's age of 73, by itself, did not establish that he was more vulnerable to being mortally wounded by a twelve-gauge shot gun than a younger person would have been; evidence that defendant took advantage of victim's advanced years was required to find the aggravating factor in (d)(11). State v. Deese, 127 N.C. App. 536, 491 S.E.2d 682 (1997).

A criminal may "take advantage," of the age of a victim in two different ways, causing the sentence eventually imposed to be enhanced. First, he may target the victim because of the victim's age, knowing that his chances of success are greater where the victim is very young or very old. Or the defendant may take advantage of the victim's age during the actual commission of a crime against the person of the victim, or in the victim's presence, knowing that the victim, by reason of age, is unlikely to effectively intervene or defend himself. State v. Hilbert, — N.C. App. —, 549 S.E.2d 882, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 658 (2001).

Prior Adjudication of Juvenile Delinquency. — Defendant's contention that use of an adjudication of juvenile delinquency as an aggravating factor in sentencing an adult defendant violates the ex post facto provisions of our state and federal constitutions was unfounded. State v. Taylor, 128 N.C. App. 394, 496 S.E.2d 811 (1998), cert. denied, 348 N.C. 76, 505 S.E.2d 884 (1998), appeal dismissed, — N.C. —, 505 S.E.2d 884 (1998), aff'd, 349 N.C. 219, 504 S.E.2d 785 (1998).

Hispanic Victims. This section was correctly applied where co-defendant testified that he and defendant selected two Hispanic men as their victims because they thought Hispanics carry large sums of cash and are less likely to report crimes committed against them. State v. Hatcher, 136 N.C. App. 524, 524 S.E.2d 815 (2000).

Race as Aggravating Factor. — The trial court properly applied this section in sentencing the defendant where the State introduced evidence that the victim was singled out because he was black and where the defendant's motivation, if any, for his attacks on the other victims was irrelevant in determining whether the attack on the black victim was racially motivated. State v. Choppy, 141 N.C. App. 32, 539 S.E.2d 44 (2000).

The defendant's felonious assault and attempted murder were especially heinous, atrocious or cruel where he assaulted five unsuspecting strangers in the dead of night, took pleasure in the assaults, bragged to his girlfriend that he "made front page," entertained his friends with stories about the assaults, especially ridiculing the black victim, and visited the scene of the first assault and commented upon how the area had "good memories." State v. Choppy, 141 N.C. App. 32, 539 S.E.2d 44 (2000).

The trial court erred in finding as an aggravating factor that defendant joined with more than one other person in committing the offense—felony child abuse—since defendant was not charged with committing a conspiracy because the state failed to meet its burden of proof. State v. Noffsinger, 137 N.C. App 418, 528 S.E.2d 605 (2000).

Age as Aggravating Factor in Crime Where Age Is Already an Element. — Where mother/defendant was accused of shaking her three-week old infant to death, the trial court did not err in finding as an aggravating factor, under subdivision (d)(11) of this section, that the victim was of a very young age, even though the victim's age had already been used as an element of the crime under § 14-318.4(a). State v. Burgess, 134 N.C. App. 632, 518 S.E.2d 209 (1999).

Defendant's Age Not Relevant to Aggravation. — Trial court properly applied the aggravating factor under § 15A-1340.16(d)(13) where the trial court could have concluded that defendant involved a 15-year-old in a robbery and murder; the fact that defendant was 16 years old at the time was not relevant to applicability of the factor. State v. Smarr, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 881, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 789 (2001).

Nonstatutory Aggravating Factors. — Trial court did not err in finding as a nonstatutory aggravating factor that defendant furnished alcohol to sisters and then victimized them, as a preponderance of evidence supported that finding. The State was not required to prove, pursuant to § 15A-1340.16(d) regarding aggravating factors, that the sisters were under the age of 16, even though the State did have to prove that the sisters were under age 16 in order to convict under § 14-202.1, regarding taking indecent liberties. State v. Bowers, — N.C. App. —, 552 S.E.2d 238, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 866 (2001).

Proper Aggravation. — The trial court properly found the aggravating factor that the murder was committed in the course of a robbery and was motivated by pecuniary gain where defendant pled guilty to and was sentenced for second degree murder, which does not require robbery as an element. State v. Baldwin, 139 N.C. App. 65, 532 S.E.2d 808 (2000).

The trial court properly aggravated defendant's sentence based on the subdivision (d)(8) factor that defendant knowingly created a great risk of death to more than one person and based on the non-statutory aggravating factor allowed by subdivision (d)(20) that defendant refused to participate in the proceedings and fled the courthouse. State v. Miller, 142 N.C. App. 435, 543 S.E.2d 201 (2001).

Improper Aggravation. — In sentencing a criminal defendant, the trial court may not consider in aggravation of sentence that the defendant was exercising his right to plead not guilty or asserting his privilege against self-incrimination. State v. Rollins, 131 N.C. App. 601, 508 S.E.2d 554 (1998).

The trial court's finding as an aggravating factor that defendant left without rendering aid and showed no mercy violated the proscription against aggravating a sentence with evidence "used to prove an essential element" of the crime, namely malice, an inherent element of second degree murder. State v. Baldwin, 139 N.C. App. 65, 532 S.E.2d 808 (2000).

The trial court erred, in sentencing the defendant for his assault conviction, by finding as an aggravating factor that the offense involved "damage causing great monetary loss" when the only evidence of monetary loss was loss caused by medical expenses. State v. Godley, 140 N.C. App. 15, 535 S.E.2d 566 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1499, 149 L. Ed. 2d 384 (2001).

Handoff of Weapon Not Aggravating Factor. — The defendant's sentence on weapons charges could not be enhanced under subsection (d) by the aggravating factor that the defendant handed the weapon to a companion after discharging it. State v. Rollins, 131 N.C. App. 601, 508 S.E.2d 554 (1998).

Great Monetary Loss as Aggravating Factor. — The trial court did not err in finding the aggravating factor of damage causing great monetary loss where the crime involved the use of computers to divert millions of dollars and where the amount of money involved in the offense was not an element but came into play only at the time of sentencing. State v. Hughes, 136 N.C. App. 92, 524 S.E.2d 63 (1999).

Evidence Sufficient to Support "Great Monetary Value" Factor. — A sufficient evidentiary basis existed to support the aggravating factor that the defendant's larceny involved the "taking of property of great monetary value" where the defendant pled guilty to all the facts listed in the indictment which listed the value of the property taken as $ 17,000 and where the prosecutor summarized the facts to the judge by saying that "the house had been ransacked." State v. Hendricks, 138 N.C. App. 668, 531 S.E.2d 896 (2000).

The trial court properly found as an aggravating sentencing factor that defendant knowingly created a great risk of death to more than one person by means of a weapon or device which would normally be hazardous to the lives of more than one person where the defendant engaged a trooper in a high speed chase which resulted in the death of two passengers of a truck which the defendant struck. State v. Fuller, 138 N.C. App. 481, 531 S.E.2d 861 (2000).

The defendant "knowingly created a great risk of death to more than one person" where his shotgun went off in a hotel room that had dimensions of approximately 12 ½ by 13 ½ feet when he pointed it at the victim who was sitting on the bed four to six feet away from him and another individual was sitting on the same bed. State v. Baldwin, 139 N.C. App. 65, 532 S.E.2d 808 (2000).

Refusal to Cooperate with Law Enforcement Officials. — The defendant's responsibility to cooperate with authorities does not attach when his silence is protected by the privilege against self-incrimination. State v. Rollins, 131 N.C. App. 601, 508 S.E.2d 554 (1998).

Clerical Error Did Not Entitle Defendant to New Trial. — Contrary to the defendant's assertion, the record reflected that the trial court did not — and recognized that it could not — find the aggravating factor that defendant was armed with a deadly weapon in sentencing defendant for an armed robbery conviction, notwithstanding a clerical error on the sentencing form. State v. Gell, 351 N.C. 192, 524 S.E.2d 332 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 878, 121 S. Ct. 163, 148 L. Ed. 2d 110 (2000).

Capital Sentence Upheld — Equal protection clause was not violated when court applied felony murder rule and punished defendant more severely by sentencing him to death because more victims were harmed as authorized subdivision (d)(8) of this section and § 15A-2000(e)(11). State v. Jones, 133 N.C. App. 448, 516 S.E.2d 405 (1999), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, and remanded, 353 N.C. 159, 538 S.E.2d 917 (2000).

Stated in State v. Heatwole, 344 N.C. 1, 473 S.E.2d 310 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1122, 117 S. Ct. 1259, 137 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1997); Williams v. Currie, 103 F. Supp. 2d 858 (M.D.N.C. 2000).

Decisions Under Prior Law

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under former §§ 15A-1340.4 and 15A-1340.7.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

The Fair Sentencing Act originated in a movement away from indeterminate sentencing and toward the imposition of presumptive terms for specified crimes. However, it is not clear the extent to which the act limited the sentencing discretion of the trial judge. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

The Fair Sentencing Act was an attempt to strike a balance between the inflexibility of a presumptive sentence which insured that punishment was commensurate with the crime, without regard to the nature of the offender; and the flexibility of permitting punishment to be adapted, when appropriate, to the particular offender. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

The Fair Sentencing Act established rules which determined what evidence a sentencing judge could consider in aggravating a crime covered by the act; first, a conviction could not be aggravated by prior convictions of other crimes which could have been joined for trial or by a contemporaneous conviction of a crime actually joined or by acts which formed the gravamen of these convictions; second, evidence used to prove an element of a crime could not also be used to prove a factor in aggravation of that same crime; third, the same item of evidence could not be used to prove more than one factor in aggravation; fourth, acts which could have been, but were not, the basis for other joinable criminal convictions could be used to aggravate the conviction for which defendant was being sentenced; finally, evidence used in proving an element of one crime could also be used to support an aggravating factor of a separate, though joined, crime for which defendant was being sentenced. State v. Hayes, 323 N.C. 306, 372 S.E.2d 704 (1988).

The purpose of sentencing is to punish a criminal with the degree of severity that his culpability merits. State v. Flowers, 100 N.C. App. 58, 394 S.E.2d 296 (1990).

One of the primary purposes of sentencing is to impose a punishment commensurate with the injury the offense has caused, taking into consideration factors which may diminish or enhance the offender's culpability. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

Article Established Guidelines. — Former Article 81A did not eliminate the existing discretionary system; it only established certain guidelines for trial judges, which if correctly observed, still left an open door for disparity of sentences. State v. Hinnant, 65 N.C. App. 130, 308 S.E.2d 732 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 310, 312 S.E.2d 653 (1984).

Ordinarily, a resentencing hearing is a de novo proceeding at which the trial judge may find aggravating and mitigating factors without regard to the findings made at the prior sentencing hearing. State v. Vandiver, 326 N.C. 348, 389 S.E.2d 30 (1990).

"The Offense" Referred to Offense Defendant Convicted of. — As it was used in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1), the phrase "the offense" clearly referred to the offense for which the defendant was convicted or to which defendant tendered a plea of guilty. State v. Taylor, 322 N.C. 280, 367 S.E.2d 664 (1988).

Duty of Judge to Examine Evidence. — A duty is placed upon the judge to examine the evidence to determine if it would support any of the statutory factors, even absent a request by counsel. State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985).

Legislature Determines Factors to Be Considered. — The power to determine those statutory mitigating and aggravating factors which must be considered by the sentencing judge lies solely within the discretion of the legislature. State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985).

Judge Must Consider Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — Unless a sentence has been agreed to during plea bargaining, a sentencing judge is required to consider the statutory list of aggravating and mitigating factors during sentencing, of which many items concern circumstances that may surround the offense. Such circumstances might include facts concerning both a dismissed charge as well as the admitted offense. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

Under former § 15A-1340.4(a) judges had to consider all aggravating and mitigating factors before imposing a prison term other than the presumptive term. State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985); State v. Flowe, 107 N.C. App. 468, 420 S.E.2d 475, cert. denied,.

If the trial court imposed a sentence greater than the presumptive term for any conviction, it had to consider each of the aggravating and mitigating factors under the Fair Sentencing Act for each of defendant's convictions, and make written findings of fact concerning the factors and whether one set of factors outweighed the other. State v. Green, 101 N.C. App. 317, 399 S.E.2d 376 (1991).

Findings of Factors of Aggravation and Mitigation Required. — Where the conviction for the sale of cocaine, a Class H felony, has a presumptive term of three years and the trial court imposed a 10-year sentence, findings of factors in aggravation and mitigation were required. State v. Artis, 91 N.C. App. 604, 372 S.E.2d 905 (1988).

When Statutory Factor Must Be Found. — Sentencing court is required to find a statutory factor only when the evidence supporting that factor is uncontradicted, substantial, and manifestly credible. State v. Whitaker, 100 N.C. App. 578, 397 S.E.2d 372 (1990).

Finding of Factor Required Where Evidence Uncontradicted, Substantial and Credible. — When evidence in support of a particular mitigating or aggravating factor is uncontradicted, substantial, and there is no reason to doubt its credibility, it is error for the trial court not to find that factor. State v. Daniel, 319 N.C. 308, 354 S.E.2d 216 (1987).

Former § 15A-1340.4 did not require that only aggravating or mitigating factors listed therein be considered. The court could use any factors which were supported by a preponderance of the evidence and were reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Setzer, 61 N.C. App. 500, 301 S.E.2d 107 (1983), cert. denied, 308 N.C. 680, 304 S.E.2d 760 (1983).

In addition to specified factors which could be considered, the sentencing judge could consider any aggravating and mitigating factors that he found were proved by the preponderance of the evidence, and that were reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. It was error, however, to consider factors such that the severity of the sentence imposed related to the defendant's plea of not guilty. State v. Blackwood, 60 N.C. App. 150, 298 S.E.2d 196 (1982).

Former § 15A-1340.4 did not limit a trial judge to the aggravating and mitigating factors enumerated therein. State v. Church, 99 N.C. App. 647, 394 S.E.2d 468 (1990).

Factors which would mitigate a sentence if present, cannot be used in aggravation if absent. State v. Harrell, 100 N.C. App. 450, 397 S.E.2d 84 (1990).

Evidence necessary to prove an element of the offense may not be used to prove any factor in aggravation. State v. Beamer, 339 N.C. 477, 451 S.E.2d 190 (1994).

All circumstances which are transactionally related to the admitted offense must be considered during sentencing. State v. Wood, 61 N.C. App. 446, 300 S.E.2d 903, cert. denied, 308 N.C. 547, 302 S.E.2d 884 (1983).

As long as they are not elements essential to the establishment of the offense to which the defendant pled guilty, all circumstances which are transactionally related to the admitted offense and which are reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing must be considered during sentencing. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983); State v. Teague, 60 N.C. App. 755, 300 S.E.2d 7 (1983).

The trial court had to consider all circumstances that were both transactionally related to the offense and reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing, provided that they were not essential to the establishment of elements of the offense. This was so regardless of whether such factors were specifically listed under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1), and regardless of whether the State specifically requested a finding in this regard. State v. Flowe, 107 N.C. App. 468, 420 S.E.2d 475, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 669, 424 S.E.2d 412 (1992).

If They Are Reasonably Related to the Purposes of Sentencing. — The court could use an aggravating factor not set forth in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1) if it reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Nichols, 66 N.C. App. 318, 311 S.E.2d 38, cert. denied, 311 N.C. 406, 319 S.E.2d 278 (1984).

Former § 15A-1340.4 did not purport to grant trial judge the discretion to create new aggravating factors. Rather, the statute listed several aggravating factors which the trial judge was required to consider and also authorized him to consider any other aggravating factors that he found were proved by a preponderance of the evidence, and that were reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Thompson, 310 N.C. 209, 311 S.E.2d 866 (1984), overruled on other grounds, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

But the trial judge may wish to exercise restraint when considering nonstatutory aggravating factors after having found statutory factors. This prudent course of conduct would lessen the chance of having the case remanded for resentencing. State v. Baucom, 66 N.C. App. 298, 311 S.E.2d 73 (1984).

Burden of Proving Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — The state has the burden of proving that aggravating factors exist, whereas the defendant has the burden of proving that mitigating factors are present. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Factors Must Be Supported by Preponderance of Evidence. — The trial judge may consider aggravating and mitigating factors supported by evidence not used to prove an essential element as long as those factors are reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. Such factors must be supported by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Teague, 60 N.C. App. 755, 300 S.E.2d 7 (1983).

Findings in aggravation and mitigation must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Separate Factors in Aggravation Cannot Be Found on the Same Evidence. — The trial court improperly found two factors in aggravation based upon the same evidence. Therefore, defendant was entitled to a new sentencing hearing on his convictions for burglary and kidnapping. State v. Kyle, 333 N.C. 687, 430 S.E.2d 412 (1993).

Absent Rebuttal, Factual Allegations in Indictment Deemed Admitted by Guilty Plea. — Where a defendant pleads guilty to an indictment which contains factual allegations which could be the basis for the finding of an aggravating circumstance, and fails to challenge or present any evidence to rebut these factual allegations, they are deemed admitted and may be utilized by the trial court to establish the existence of the aggravating factor. State v. Thompson, 314 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

Defendant Who Pleads Guilty May Present Evidence. — Even where a defendant pleads guilty, he may challenge and present evidence at the sentencing hearing to rebut any factual allegations in the indictment or other criminal process which could be used to establish the existence of an aggravating circumstance. State v. Thompson, 314 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

Behavior Prior to Original Trial and Sentencing Hearing. — An inmate's good behavior prior to his original trial and/or sentencing hearing may be found as a nonstatutory mitigating factor, and his bad conduct during the same time frame may be found as a nonstatutory aggravating factor. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Behavior Prior to Resentencing. — As § 15A-1335 prohibits the trial court from resentencing a defendant to a term of imprisonment greater than the prior sentence less the portion of the prior sentence previously served, a trial judge in North Carolina may not consider a defendant's bad conduct during the period between his conviction and his resentencing hearing in order to increase his sentence. However, bad conduct may be found by the trial judge as a nonstatutory aggravating factor to be utilized by the judge in deciding the sentence to be imposed, so long as the new sentence is no more severe than the original one. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Judge Held Not Required to Find Aggravating and Mitigating Factors. — Where defendant was charged, convicted and sentenced for four separate violations of § 14-100, the trial judge was not required to find aggravating and mitigating factors in sentencing defendant, even though charges against defendant were consolidated for trial and for hearing on judgments, as they were not consolidated for judgment and thus did not exceed maximum ten-year term for the offense. State v. Bresse, 101 N.C. App. 519, 400 S.E.2d 73, cert. denied, 329 N.C. 272, 407 S.E.2d 842 (1991).

II. AGGRAVATING FACTORS.

A. In General.

Every aggravating factor must be reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Gaynor, 61 N.C. App. 128, 300 S.E.2d 260 (1983).

Former §§ 15A-1340.3 and 15A-1340.4 did not require that factors which increased the defendant's culpability be a part of the actions which constituted the crime in order to be aggravating factors. State v. Josey, 328 N.C. 697, 403 S.E.2d 479 (1991).

Although the same item of evidence may not be used to prove more than one aggravating factor, where detective was killed because he was disrupting the drug trade and because he was going to be involved in the prosecutions of some of the group members, the trial judge's finding of two aggravating factors in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)(d) and (a)(1)(e) was not error. State v. Evans, 113 N.C. App. 644, 439 S.E.2d 775 (1994).

Former § 15A-1340.4, by its terms, prohibited the use of the same item of evidence to prove more than one factor in aggravation. State v. McLean, 74 N.C. App. 224, 328 S.E.2d 451 (1985), appeal dismissed, 316 N.C. 199, 341 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

It was error for the trial court to consider the same evidence of defendant's mental problems to support more than one aggravating factor. State v. Jones, 66 N.C. App. 274, 311 S.E.2d 351 (1984).

In felonious assault case, defendant's contention that the evidence necessary to prove he acted with intent to kill was also necessary to prove premeditation and deliberation was without merit; premeditation means that the defendant formed the intent to kill during some period of time before actually committing the crime; deliberation means that the defendant was in a cool state of blood when he formed the intent to kill; thus, proof of each factor required presenting additional evidence beyond mere intent to kill, and the statutory prohibition against use of evidence necessary to prove an element of the crime to prove a factor in aggravation did not apply. State v. Smith, 92 N.C. App. 500, 374 S.E.2d 617 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 340, 378 S.E.2d 805 (1989).

Where trial court found as non-statutory aggravating factor the assault on victim was premeditated and deliberated, trial court did not use evidence of an element of the offense to aggravate the same offense for sentencing since proof of premeditation and deliberation required presentation of additional evidence beyond evidence necessary to prove defendant's intent to kill. State v. Reed, 93 N.C. App. 119, 377 S.E.2d 84, cert. denied, 324 N.C. 580, 381 S.E.2d 779 (1989).

But Same Factor May Aggravate More Than One Conviction. — The same factor may be used to aggravate more than one conviction. State v. McCullers, 77 N.C. App. 433, 335 S.E.2d 348 (1985).

An aggravating factor can properly be found only if the defendant has exhibited some behavior which serves to increase the offender's culpability. State v. Bates, 76 N.C. App. 676, 334 S.E.2d 73 (1985).

In determining the existence of aggravating factors, the trial court may rely on evidence presented at the sentencing hearing, or, when a defendant pleads guilty, on the circumstances surrounding the offense, including factual allegations contained in the indictment or other criminal process, despite the fact that the State fails to present evidence at sentencing. State v. Flowe, 107 N.C. App. 468, 420 S.E.2d 475, cert. denied, 332 N.C. 669, 424 S.E.2d 412 (1992).

The existence of aggravating factors must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Thompson, 314 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1986); State v. Thompson, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986); State v. Cooke, 87 N.C. App. 613, 361 S.E.2d 764 (1987).

Statement of Prosecuting Attorney as Support for Aggravating Factors. — Statement of the prosecuting attorney which, considered with the statement of defendant's attorney, showed that there was a stipulation that the prosecuting attorney could state what the evidence would show, was sufficient to support aggravating factors. State v. Mullican, 329 N.C. 683, 406 S.E.2d 854 (1991).

Burden of Proof. — The state bears the burden of persuasion on aggravating factors. State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985).

The state bears the burden of proof to establish the existence of aggravating factors if it seeks a term of imprisonment greater than the presumptive sentence. State v. Thompson, 314 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986); State v. Thompson, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

The sentencing judge may consider any aggravating factors that he finds are proved by the preponderance of the evidence, and that are reasonably related to the purpose of sentencing, even though not enumerated on the statutory list. State v. Manning, 327 N.C. 608, 398 S.E.2d 319 (1990).

As long as they are not elements essential to the establishment of the offense to which the defendant pled guilty, all circumstances which are transactionally related to the admitted offense and which are reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing must be considered during sentencing. State v. Manning, 327 N.C. 608, 398 S.E.2d 319 (1990).

Presence of Defendant Required. — Trial court erred in adding an aggravating factor outside of defendant's presence, after the sentencing hearing was completed. State v. Beasley, 118 N.C. App. 508, 455 S.E.2d 880 (1995).

Defendant's plea of guilty does not prevent trial judge from reviewing all circumstances surrounding the offense in finding aggravating factors. State v. Lloyd, 89 N.C. App. 630, 366 S.E.2d 912, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 483, 370 S.E.2d 231 (1988).

Prior Conviction and Commission of Offense While Sentence Suspended Are Distinct Factors. — Defendant's prior conviction for an offense punishable by more than 60 days and the fact that, at the very time he committed the offense for which he was being tried, he was under a suspended sentence for the prior felony conviction are two clearly distinct aggravating factors. State v. Stinson, 65 N.C. App. 570, 309 S.E.2d 528 (1983), rev'd in part, 310 N.C. 737, 314 S.E.2d 546 (1984).

B. Inducing, Leading or Dominating.

The focus of former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)a was on the role of defendant in inducing others to participate in the commission of an offense or in leading or dominating other participants during the commission of an offense. State v. Sanmiguel, 74 N.C. App. 276, 328 S.E.2d 326 (1985).

And Not on the Role of the Participants. — The focus of former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)a was not on the role of the participants in the crime, but on the role of the defendant in inducing others to participate or in assuming a position of leadership. State v. Lattimore, 310 N.C. 295, 311 S.E.2d 876 (1984).

The conduct referred to in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)a was of two types: first, inducing others, and second, leading or dominating others. The words used were not generally synonymous. Since former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)a was stated in the disjunctive, proof of either type of conduct, by the preponderance of the evidence, was sufficient to support the finding of an aggravating factor. State v. Sanmiguel, 74 N.C. App. 276, 328 S.E.2d 326 (1985).

When Inducing Others and Leading Others Could Constitute Two Aggravating Factors. — Inducing others to commit an offense and leading others during the commission of an offense constituted conduct which increased a defendant's culpability. Since proof of either type of conduct, by the preponderance of the evidence, was sufficient to support the finding of an aggravating factor, proof of both types of conduct should have sufficed to support the finding of two aggravating factors so as to reflect the defendant's greater culpability. However, since the same evidence could not be used to prove more than one aggravating factor, two aggravating factors could be found only if there was separate evidence supporting each. State v. Sanmiguel, 74 N.C. App. 276, 328 S.E.2d 326 (1985).

The evidence showed that defendant induced others to participate, and that he lead or dominated others. Since there was separate evidence to support the factors of inducing others to commit a crime and his position of leadership, there was no duplication error. State v. Gibbs, 335 N.C. 1, 436 S.E.2d 321 (1993), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1246, 114 S. Ct. 2767, 129 L. Ed. 2d 881 (1994).

If evidence is presented showing that a defendant induced another or others to participate in the commission of an offense, and separate evidence is presented showing that the defendant also led or dominated another or others during the commission of the offense, the court may find two separate aggravating factors. State v. Sanmiguel, 74 N.C. App. 276, 328 S.E.2d 326 (1985).

The fact that a defendant induced a victim to take part in the offense or exercises leadership or dominance over a victim of a crime was not within the meaning of former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)a. State v. Mosley, 93 N.C. App. 239, 377 S.E.2d 554 (1989).

Inducing Perjury. — Trial court's finding as an aggravating factor that defendant attempted to induce State's witness to perjure herself upheld. State v. Melvin, 99 N.C. App. 16, 392 S.E.2d 740 (1990).

The aggravating factors set forth in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)a could not be proven by conjecture. State v. Sanmiguel, 74

N.C. App. 276, 328 S.E.2d 326 (1985).

Inducing Conspiracy. — A preponderance of the evidence showed that defendants brought about or caused others' involvement in conspiracy and drug sale and thus supported this finding as a factor in aggravation. Defendants' contention that evidence necessary to prove the aggravating factor of inducing another to participate in the commission of the offense was also necessary to prove an essential element of the conspiracy offense was without merit, as an inducement to enter an agreement necessarily precedes the agreement itself, and only the agreement itself is an element of the offense of conspiracy. State v. Sanmiguel, 74 N.C. App. 276, 328 S.E.2d 326 (1985), holding, however, that a finding of the factor of leadership or dominance was in error.

Finding Upheld. — Aggravating factor found by the trial court, that defendant occupied a position of leadership or dominance over the other participants in the commission of the offense and that defendant induced others to commit the crime, was supported by the evidence. State v. Miller, 315 N.C. 773, 340 S.E.2d 290 (1986).

Evidence held sufficient to show that defendant occupied a position of leadership which resulted in his companions' involvement in the crimes. State v. Hager, 320 N.C. 77, 357 S.E.2d 615 (1987).

The evidence supported a finding of aggravation when it showed that defendant, a 26-year-old adult, by his actions and his words influenced co-defendant, a 16-year-old minor, to a course of conduct. Defendant after threatening to shoot the victim and getting a gun, told co-defendant to shoot the victim. The crime did not occur until after the encouragement from defendant. This was sufficient to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant induced co-defendant to participate in the offense. State v. Lloyd, 89 N.C. App. 630, 366 S.E.2d 912, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 483, 370 S.E.2d 232 (1988).

Evidence was sufficient to support finding as an aggravating factor that defendant induced others to participate in the trafficking of cocaine. State v. Smallwood, 112 N.C. App. 76, 434 S.E.2d 615 (1993).

C. Preventing Arrest or Effecting Escape.

Scope of Former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)b. — The language in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)b, like that in § 15A-2000(e)(4), was intended to include situations in which defendant's motivation in committing the second offense was to avoid subsequent detection and apprehension for the underlying crime; it was not to be limited solely to situations where defendant committed the second offense in an effort to avoid an immediate arrest or to escape from custody. State v. Murdock, 325 N.C. 522, 385 S.E.2d 325 (1989).

Assault Committed for Purpose of Avoiding Detection and Apprehension. — Where one of defendant's purposes behind the sexual assault of his grandmother was the desire to avoid detection and apprehension for his prior assault upon her, which resulted in her death, defendant's actions were properly submitted to the jury as an aggravating factor in his sentencing hearing. State v. Murdock, 325 N.C. 522, 385 S.E.2d 325 (1989).

D. Hire or Pay.

Involvement of Money or Valuable Items Not Sufficient. — The language "The defendant was hired or paid to commit the offense" in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)c, clearly evinced the legislature's intent to avoid the enhancement of a defendant's sentence simply because money or other valuable items were involved in the crime charged. State v. Thompson, 62 N.C. App. 585, 303 S.E.2d 85, limited cert. allowed, 309 N.C. 464, 311 S.E.2d 289 (1983).

Evidence Had to Show That Defendant Was Paid or Hired. — Under the Fair Sentencing Act there had to be evidence that the defendant was paid or hired to commit the offense before the aggravating factor of pecuniary gain could be found. State v. Hayes, 314 N.C. 460, 334 S.E.2d 741 (1985), rev'd on other grounds, 323 N.C. 306, 372 S.E.2d 704 (1988).

Pecuniary Gain Inherent in Offense Should Not Be Considered. — If the pecuniary gain at issue in a case is inherent in the offense, then that "pecuniary gain" should not be considered an aggravating factor. However, pecuniary incentive is not always inherent in a crime. Thus, the determination of whether pecuniary gain, as an aggravating factor, is also an element of the underlying offense is a factual one. State v. Morris, 59 N.C. App. 157, 296 S.E.2d 309, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 307 N.C. 471, 299 S.E.2d 227 (1983), decided prior to the 1983 amendment to former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)c.

Pecuniary Gain — Armed Robbery. — Pecuniary gain is not an essential element of the crime of armed robbery. State v. Abdullah, 309 N.C. 63, 306 S.E.2d 100 (1983), decided prior to the 1983 amendment to former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)c.

Same — Felonious Uttering. — It is error for a trial court to consider pecuniary gain as a factor in aggravation of a sentence for uttering a fraudulent instrument, unless defendant is hired or paid for the offense, since pecuniary gain is inherent in the offense of felonious uttering. State v. Thompson, 62 N.C. App. 585, 303 S.E.2d 85, limited cert. allowed, 309 N.C. 464, 311 S.E.2d 289 (1983).

E. Victim Performing or Having Exercised Official Duties.

Hindering the Lawful Exercise of a Governmental Function or Law Enforcement. — The trial court erred in finding as a factor in aggravation of sentencing that the offense was committed to hinder the lawful exercise of a governmental function or the enforcement of laws. State v. Whitley, 111 N.C. App. 916, 433 S.E.2d 826 (1993).

Hindrance of Law Enforcement Officer. — In prosecution in which defendant was convicted of assault on officer with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury and assault on a different law enforcement officer with a firearm, it was not error for the court to find as statutory aggravating factors under former § 15A-1340.4 that: (1) the offense was committed to hinder the lawful exercise of a governmental function or enforcement of the laws, and (2) the offense was committed against a law enforcement officer in the performance of his official duties. State v. Price, 118 N.C. App. 212, 454 S.E.2d 820 (1995).

Victim Who Was Witness Against Defendant. — Evidence that defendant's shooting of his wife occurred in close proximity to defendant's conviction in a trial in which his wife had been the sole witness against him; that in the setting of that trial he made veiled references to "doing something" to his wife; and that while he had threatened and harassed her on numerous prior occasions, he made a life-threatening assault upon her only in the immediate wake of that trial, permitted the court to find as an aggravating factor, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the offense was committed against a witness against defendant while engaged in the performance of her official duties or because of the exercise of her official duties. State v. Laney, 74 N.C. App. 579, 328 S.E.2d 586 (1985).

F. Heinous, Atrocious or Cruel.

Focus Is on Brutality, Pain, Suffering or Dehumanizing Aspects. — In determining whether an offense is especially heinous, atrocious or cruel, the focus should be on whether the facts of the case disclose excessive brutality, or physical pain, psychological suffering, or dehumanizing aspects not normally present in that offense. State v. Blalock, 77 N.C. App. 201, 334 S.E.2d 441 (1985); State v. Brown, 314 N.C. 588, 336 S.E.2d 388 (1985); State v. Bush, 78 N.C. App. 686, 338 S.E.2d 590 (1986); State v. Newton, 82 N.C. App. 555, 347 S.E.2d 81 (1986), cert. denied, 318 N.C. 699, 351 S.E.2d 756 (1987); State v. Torres, 322 N.C. 440, 368 S.E.2d 609 (1988); State v. Hayes, 323 N.C. 306, 372 S.E.2d 704 (1988).

Facts Should Be Compared with Those Attributable to Like Offenses. — Whether an offense is especially heinous, atrocious or cruel depends upon a comparison of the facts of the case with those normally attributable to other like offenses. State v. Newton, 82 N.C. App. 555, 347 S.E.2d 81 (1986), cert. denied, 318 N.C. 699, 351 S.E.2d 756 (1987).

Factor May Be Found Where Serious Injury Is Element. — If the evidence establishes that the infliction of serious injury was done in an especially heinous, atrocious or cruel manner, former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1) did not prohibit the finding of the aggravating factor merely because infliction of a serious injury was an element of the offense. State v. Kuplen, 316 N.C. 387, 343 S.E.2d 793 (1986).

Multiple Acts of Same Offense. — Where proof of one act constituting an offense is sufficient to sustain a defendant's conviction, multiple acts of the same offense are relevant to the question of sentencing, including whether the offense charged was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State v. Blalock, 77 N.C. App. 201, 334 S.E.2d 441 (1985).

Multiple Injuries. — Relevant to the question of sentencing and properly considered under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1) was the impact of the crime on the victim. Where the physical or emotional injury was in excess of that normally present in the offense, multiple injuries would be an important consideration either as an additional factor in aggravation or as proof that the offense was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State v. Blackwelder, 309 N.C. 410, 306 S.E.2d 783 (1983); State v. Hines, 314 N.C. 522, 335 S.E.2d 6 (1985); State v. Cofield, 77 N.C. App. 699, 336 S.E.2d 439 (1985), rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 297, 357 S.E.2d 622 (1987).

Whether death resulted from multiple acts of violence and was immediate are factors properly considered in determining whether a murder is especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State v. Hines, 314 N.C. 522, 335 S.E.2d 6 (1985).

Time Between Acts of Violence and Death. — A factor bearing on physical and psychological suffering is the length of time between a defendant's acts of violence and the victim's death. State v. Brown, 314 N.C. 588, 336 S.E.2d 388 (1985).

Parent-Child Relationship. — The especially heinous, atrocious or cruel factor cannot be based on a parent-child relationship when, as for example in incest, the relationship is an element of the offense. State v. Bush, 78 N.C. App. 686, 338 S.E.2d 590 (1986).

Relationship Held Not to Support Factor. — Trial court erred in finding that defendant's conduct was heinous in that victim was the mother of defendant's nephew. State v. Beasley, 118 N.C. App. 508, 455 S.E.2d 880 (1995).

Consideration of Conduct in Joinable

Offense as Aggravating Factor. — Where in sentencing defendant for first-degree burglary the trial judge found as a statutory aggravating factor that the offense was especially atrocious or cruel, and in so doing the trial court improperly considered evidence of defendant's course of conduct in the commission of a joinable offense, to wit, first degree murder, the case would be remanded for resentencing on defendant's first-degree burglary conviction. State v. Flowers, 84 N.C. App. 696, 354 S.E.2d 240 (1987), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 675, 356 S.E.2d 782 (1987).

Evidence of Handcuffing in Murder Case. — In case in which defendant was convicted of several offenses, including kidnapping and second-degree murder, the fact that the victim's hands were handcuffed behind her back was not necessary to prove any element of the second-degree murder. Therefore, even if defendant's contention that the handcuffing was necessary to prove an element of the first-degree kidnapping was correct, there would still be no error in court's using the handcuffing in aggravation of the murder conviction. State v. Wright, 319 N.C. 209, 353 S.E.2d 214 (1987).

Reference to "Overall Situation" Did Not Amount to Improper Consideration. — Trial court did not err in finding as an aggravating factor in both cases of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to inflict serious injury that offense was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel; trial court's reference to "overall situation" did not necessarily indicate the judge was improperly considering a "course of conduct" that included commission of a joined offense. State v. Reed, 93 N.C. App. 119, 377 S.E.2d 84, cert. denied, 324 N.C. 580, 381 S.E.2d 779 (1989).

Armed Robbery. — While any armed robbery is frightening to the victim and repugnant to lawful society, the aggravating factor set forth in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)(f) expressly applied only to especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel offenses. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

Sufficient Evidence to Support Factor. — Evidence that defendant fired two shots from close range into victim's groin, leaving four wounds or holes in his scrotum and then walked over to victim, who was lying on the living room floor, stood over him for a few seconds, and fired a third and fatal bullet into his head, supported the trial court's finding that the offense was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel. State v. Jones, 83 N.C. App. 593, 351 S.E.2d 122 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 462, 356 S.E.2d 9 (1987).

Where defendant's felonious assault on victim was excessively brutal and dehumanizing, and his comments suggested that he enjoyed committing the offense, the trial court properly found the aggravating factor that the offense was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State v. Hager, 320 N.C. 77, 357 S.E.2d 615 (1987).

Evidence that defendant shot victim six times, that he cruelly taunted victim and indicated his intent to continue shooting until he was dead, that five of the wounds, although painful, would not have been immediately fatal, and that victim could have remained conscious for some time even after receiving the sixth gunshot wound clearly supported a finding that victim suffered a degree of physical and mental pain not normally present in every murder, so as to support the trial court's finding that the murder was especially heinous. State v. Marley, 321 N.C. 415, 364 S.E.2d 133 (1988).

Defendants held victim helpless in the presence of the beating being administered to victim's husband by co-defendant. The kind of suffering, both physical and psychological, that victim endured at the hands of defendant concomitantly with burglary is not ordinarily present when a burglary is committed. Thus, record evidence supports the court's finding of heinous, atrocious or cruel behavior during commission of the burglary. State v. Flowers, 100 N.C. App. 58, 394 S.E.2d 296 (1990).

Where the evidence showed that a homicide involved a violent struggle in which the victim's scalp was torn away from her skull; her torso, head and face were severely bruised from the blows she received; she lost a tremendous amount of blood; her body and the floor around her body were covered with blood, and blood was splattered on the walls of the room; her lungs and trachea were full of blood, and she was beaten and stabbed so many times it is not entirely clear whether a blow or the knife wound was the actual cause of death, multiple injuries such as those found here may demonstrate that a crime was committed in an especially heinous, atrocious or cruel manner. State v. Smart, 99 N.C. App. 730, 394 S.E.2d 475 (1990), cert. denied, 328 N.C. 576, 403 S.E.2d 520 (1991).

Evidence Held Sufficient — Armed Robbery of Mother by Son. — The armed robbery of a mother by her son involves those emotions which the parent-child relationship evokes and thus produces psychological suffering and victim dehumanization beyond that normally present in armed robbery offenses. Thus the finding that such an armed robbery offense was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel was proper. State v. Bush, 78 N.C. App. 686, 338 S.E.2d 590 (1986).

Evidence Held Sufficient — Assault with Deadly Weapon. — Since only a single blow was necessary to prove an element of the offense of assault with a deadly weapon, and the evidence established the infliction of multiple blows with a hatchet, the court could properly find as to the assault offense that the offense was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State

v. Bush, 78 N.C. App. 686, 338 S.E.2d 590 (1986).

The trial court's finding that the offense was heinous, atrocious or cruel was adequately supported by evidence that an initial shot resulted in a wound to victim's heart which was sufficient to support a conviction of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury and that second, third, and fourth shots resulted in a severed jugular vein and permanent nerve injury to victim's arm. Moreover, the record disclosed ample evidence of physical pain and psychological suffering sufficient to support the finding that the offense was heinous, atrocious or cruel, where the victim pled with the defendant to stop firing, and after all four shots were fired, the victim was on the ground, drifting in and out of consciousness, and felt pain and trauma, yet was unable to get help because she could not move. State v. Vaught, 318 N.C. 480, 349 S.E.2d 583 (1986).

Evidence Held Sufficient — Second Degree Murder. — Evidence held to show both psychological and physical suffering beyond that normally present in the offense of second degree murder, so as to justify finding that the offense was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State v. Brown, 314 N.C. 588, 336 S.E.2d 388 (1985).

Judge did not err in finding as a statutory aggravating factor that second degree murder offense was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel where the victim was kidnapped, raped twice, beaten, taunted, and did not lose consciousness or die immediately. State v. Mason, 125 N.C. App. 216, 480 S.E.2d 708 (1997), cert. denied, 346 N.C. 286, 487 S.E.2d 563 (1997).

Evidence Not Sufficient — Second-Degree Murder. — The trial court erred in finding as a factor in aggravation that offense of second-degree murder was especially cruel, where the evidence in the case was that the unsuspecting victim was shot one time in the back. This shooting was no crueler than any other fatal shooting; indeed, since the victim did not know he was going to be shot it might have been less cruel than the usual face-to-face shooting. State v. Nelson, 76 N.C. App. 371, 333 S.E.2d 499, modified on other grounds and aff'd, State v. Nelson, 316 N.C. 350, 341 S.E.2d 561 (1986).

Where the peculiar facts of a case gave no evidence that the murder was excessively brutal or dehumanizing when compared to other second-degree murders, the single fact that the defendant inflicted multiple wounds did not make the second-degree murder especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)f. State v. Torres, 322 N.C. 440, 368 S.E.2d 609 (1988).

Where defendant struck the victim on the head only two or possibly three times with a stick after the victim had fallen and where testimony of the witness nearest the victim indicated that the victim was rendered unconscious immediately, the attack was not excessively more brutal than any other second-degree murder; therefore, the trial court erred when it found that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State v. Stanley, 110 N.C. App. 87, 429 S.E.2d 349 (1993).

Evidence Held Not Sufficient — Armed Robbery. — Where the State presented no evidence to show that defendant's actions in the robbery were more excessively brutal than those of other armed robbers or that the victim endured more psychological or physical pain or dehumanizing aspects than other armed robbery victims, aggravation of sentence was improper. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

Evidence Held Sufficient — Burglary. — The evidence was sufficient to support aggravating factor that burglary of victims' home was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel where the acts in question constituted neither another crime nor the gravamen of another crime for which defendant was convicted and they were not used as evidence to prove any other aggravating circumstancen. With regard to the burglary itself, the state was required to prove that defendant entered the dwelling; but the egregious manner in which the entry occurred and defendant's being armed with a firearm were superfluous to the entry itself. State v. Hayes, 323 N.C. 306, 372 S.E.2d 704 (1988).

Evidence Not Sufficient — Assault with Deadly Weapon. — It was error for the trial court to find as a factor in aggravation that assault with a deadly weapon resulting in serious injury was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel, where the victim received 50 stitches, was hospitalized for two weeks, lost the sight in one eye and had some amnesia, as it could not be said that the conduct of defendant was any more brutal than that inherent in any assault with a deadly weapon resulting in serious bodily injury. State v. McLean, 74 N.C. App. 224, 328 S.E.2d 451 (1985), appeal dismissed, 316 N.C. 199, 341 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

In a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury, defendant's acts of repeatedly striking his wife in the presence of their daughter, telling her to kiss him goodbye, and refusing to get help after she was injured did not represent brutality beyond that found in other assaults with a deadly weapon with the intent to kill inflicting serious injury, and were insufficient to sustain a finding of the aggravating factor. State v. Newton, 82 N.C. App. 555, 347 S.E.2d 81 (1986), cert. denied, 318 N.C. 699, 351 S.E.2d 756 (1987).

G. Risk of Death to More Than One Person.

To impose this aggravating factor, the sentencing judge must focus on two considerations: (1) whether the weapon in its normal use is hazardous to the lives of more than one person; and (2) whether a great risk of death was knowingly created. State v. Rose, 327 N.C. 599, 398 S.E.2d 314 (1990).

What Weapons Are Contemplated by This Factor. — The legislature intended this aggravating factor to be limited to those weapons or devices which are indiscriminate in their hazardous power. Automatic weapons such as machine guns or bombs would fit that description. These weapons are normally hazardous to the lives of more than one person. A rifle, while it may sometimes be dangerous to the lives of more than one person, is not so normally. State v. Bethea, 71 N.C. App. 125, 321 S.E.2d 520 (1984); State v. Jones, 83 N.C. App. 593, 351 S.E.2d 122 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 461, 356 S.E.2d 9 (1987).

Weapon Must Be Indiscriminate. — To qualify as a weapon or device which in its normal use is hazardous to the lives of more than one person, the instrumentality must be one which is indiscriminate in its hazardous power. State v. McBridge, 118 N.C. App. 316, 454 S.E.2d 840 (1995).

A machine gun is one weapon contemplated by the aggravating factor that defendant employed a weapon normally hazardous to the lives of more than one person. State v. Platt, 85 N.C. App. 220, 354 S.E.2d 332 (1987), cert. denied, 320 N.C. 516, 358 S.E.2d 529 (1987).

A shotgun is a weapon which would normally be hazardous to more than one person if it is fired into a group of two or more persons in close proximity to one another. State v. Rose, 327 N.C. 599, 398 S.E.2d 314 (1990).

Rifle. — It was error to find as an aggravating factor that the defendant employed a weapon normally hazardous to the lives of more than one person, where defendant employed a .30-.30 lever action rifle. State v. Bethea, 71 N.C. App. 125, 321 S.E.2d 520 (1984).

Evidence that defendant fired a semi-automatic rifle several times into a crowd of several persons supported a finding of the aggravating factor that defendant knowingly created a great risk of death to more than one person by means of a weapon which would normally be hazardous to the lives of more than one person. State v. Carver, 319 N.C. 665, 356 S.E.2d 349 (1987).

A .38 caliber handgun is not normally dangerous to the lives of more than one person, and thus the trial court erred in finding this aggravating factor. State v. Jones, 83 N.C. App. 593, 351 S.E.2d 122 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 461, 356 S.E.2d 9 (1987).

Semiautomatic Nine-Millimeter. — The aggravating factor under subdivision (d)(8) was properly found where defendant fired more than one shot from a nine-millimeter, semiautomatic pistol. State v. Bruton, 344 N.C. 381, 474 S.E.2d 336 (1996).

Automobile. — Where defendant operated his automobile while legally intoxicated, his blood alcohol concentration being .183 grams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of blood, and drove his automobile recklessly, crossing over into the oncoming lane of traffic and striking an automobile containing three passengers, killing or seriously injuring them, the trial court did not err in finding that defendant's automobile, under the circumstances surrounding its use, constituted a device which in its normal use was hazardous to the lives of more than one person, and that defendant knowingly created great risk of death thereby. State v. McBridge, 118 N.C. App. 316, 454 S.E.2d 840 (1995).

Factor Applied in Case of Assault with Deadly Weapon. — The court did not err in using the factor that defendant employed a weapon normally hazardous to the lives of more than one person to aggravate sentences for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury. State v. Platt, 85 N.C. App. 220, 354 S.E.2d 332, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 516, 358 S.E.2d 529 (1987).

Second-Degree Murder. — Where the record showed that three persons were sitting close to each other on the same couch when defendant fired shotgun from a distance of less than 12 feet away, the record contained sufficient evidence to support the sentencing judge's finding of this aggravating factor on second-degree murder conviction. State v. Rose, 327 N.C. 599, 398 S.E.2d 314 (1990).

H. Deadly Weapon.

Defendant Need Only Be Armed with Deadly Weapon. — As former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)i made clear, this aggravating factor could be found if a defendant either used a deadly weapon or was merely armed with one at the time of the crime. State v. Rios, 322 N.C. 596, 369 S.E.2d 576 (1988).

Co-Defendant's Use of Gun. — By being present at the scene of the crime, with the intent to see it take place, and by performing the overt act of assisting in its commission by driving the getaway car, defendant became a principal in the crime, and his co-defendant's use of the gun in perpetrating the crime was therefore imputed to defendant; there is no indication that the legislature in its enactment of this section, sought to change this well-established rule with respect to the statutory aggravating factor of using a deadly weapon by adding scienter as an element to be found by the court; therefore, the question of defendant's awareness of the gun was not dispositive. State v. Smaw, 96 N.C. App. 98, 384 S.E.2d 304 (1989).

Factor Precluded Where Inference of Malice Arises from Use of Deadly Weapon. — When the facts justify an instruction on the inference of malice arising as a matter of law from the use of a deadly weapon, evidence of the use of that deadly weapon may not be used as an aggravating factor at sentencing. This "bright-line" rule avoids hair-splitting factual disputes necessitated by having to second guess jury decisions as to the existence of malice. State v. Blackwelder, 309 N.C. 410, 306 S.E.2d 783 (1983).

Where malice can be inferred from a murder perpetrated by the use of a deadly weapon, irrespective of whether defendant is convicted of or pleads to the charge, use of the deadly weapon will be deemed evidence necessary to prove the element of malice. State v. Blackwelder, 309 N.C. 410, 306 S.E.2d 783 (1983).

A per se rule exists in this State that when the facts justify an inference of malice arising from the use of a deadly weapon, evidence concerning the use of that deadly weapon may not be used to support an aggravating factor at sentencing. Even where defendant pleads guilty, use of the deadly weapon is deemed to be evidence necessary to prove the element of malice. State v. Taylor, 309 N.C. 570, 308 S.E.2d 302 (1983).

When the facts justify an inference of malice arising only from the use of a deadly weapon, evidence concerning the use of that deadly weapon may not be used to support an aggravating factor at sentencing. This rule is applicable to both convictions or pleas in first or second-degree murder cases where malice is an essential element. State v. Lattimore, 310 N.C. 295, 311 S.E.2d 876 (1984).

And Where Use of Deadly Weapon Is Essential Element of Offense. — The trial court erred in relying upon the aggravating factor of defendant's use of a deadly weapon in sentencing defendant for assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill and discharging a firearm into occupied property, as an essential element of both offenses involves the use of a deadly weapon. State v. Beasley, 118 N.C. App. 508, 455 S.E.2d 880 (1995).

Existence of Deadly Weapon Used to Support More Than One Factor. — In a prosecution for two murders, use of the existence of a deadly weapon in finding both the aggravating circumstance that the defendant was armed with a deadly weapon and the aggravating circumstance that each murder was committed during a course of conduct in which defendant engaged in an act of violence against another person was proper, since although the deadly weapon was common to both factors, evidence tending to prove each factor was necessarily different. State v. Taylor, 309 N.C. 570, 308 S.E.2d 302 (1983).

Use of Weapon to Commit Separate, Joinable Offense. — A trial court may use the possession of a deadly weapon to aggravate the sentence on a burglary conviction, notwithstanding the use of the weapon to commit a separate, though joinable, offense. State v. Taylor, 322 N.C. 280, 367 S.E.2d 664 (1988).

Where assault with a deadly weapon was a joined offense of which defendant was contemporaneously convicted, to aggravate armed robbery offense based on evidence of the assault would be improper. State v. Bush, 78 N.C. App. 686, 338 S.E.2d 590 (1986).

Unlawful Killing Generally. — The General Assembly did not intend that the use of a deadly weapon at the time of a crime be used to enhance sentences in cases where the offense itself is an unlawful killing accomplished by shooting the victim with a deadly weapon. State v. Green, 62 N.C. App. 1, 301 S.E.2d 920, modified on other grounds and aff'd, 309 N.C. 623, 308 S.E.2d 326 (1983).

Murder. — Court erred in finding as a statutory aggravating factor that defendant, who pleaded guilty to second degree murder, used a deadly weapon at the time of the crime. State v. Coleman, 80 N.C. App. 271, 341 S.E.2d 750, cert. denied, 318 N.C. 285, 347 S.E.2d 466 (1986).

Manslaughter. — Standing alone, use of a deadly weapon to shoot a victim and thereby accomplish an unlawful killing may not be considered as a factor in aggravation in manslaughter cases. But if the deadly weapon was used in a manner which rendered the offense especially heinous, atrocious or cruel, that may properly be considered as a factor in aggravation. State v. Green, 62 N.C. App. 1, 301 S.E.2d 920, modified on other grounds and aff'd, 309 N.C. 623, 308 S.E.2d 326 (1983).

Where it appeared that the court erred in finding, in sentencing the defendant for voluntary manslaughter, as an aggravating factor, that the defendant killed her husband with a deadly weapon, the case was remanded for resentencing. State v. Heidmous, 75 N.C. App. 488, 331 S.E.2d 200 (1985).

Where, for the jury to convict the defendant of involuntary manslaughter under the instruction given by the trial court, it necessarily had to find that the defendant was armed with and discharged a firearm, the possession and discharge of the firearm in effect became an element of the offense, and the same evidence could not be considered as a factor aggravating the manslaughter for sentencing. State v. Evangelista, 319 N.C. 152, 353 S.E.2d 375 (1987).

Assault with Deadly Weapon with Intent to Kill. — The trial court, in sentencing, cannot rely upon the aggravating factor of the defendant's use of a deadly weapon when the defendant is convicted of assault under § 14-32. State v. Braswell, 67 N.C. App. 609, 313 S.E.2d 216 (1984), aff'd, 78 N.C. App. 498, 337 S.E.2d 637 (1985).

Rape. — Where the evidence was uncontradicted that defendant used a knife, described by the victim as a "steak knife," to threaten the victim and to facilitate the act of raping her, the trial court, in determining factors in aggravation, and taking into consideration the everyday use of the term "steak knife" and the utilization of the weapon by defendant, had adequate evidence upon which to base its factual determination that a deadly weapon was used in the commission of the crime. State v. Cooke, 87 N.C. App. 613, 361 S.E.2d 764 (1987).

Armed Robbery. — Possession or use of a firearm should not be used as an aggravating factor to lengthen the sentence in a robbery with firearm case. State v. Morris, 59 N.C. App. 157, 296 S.E.2d 309, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 307 N.C. 471, 299 S.E.2d 227 (1983).

One essential element necessary to prove the offense of armed robbery is that of the possession, use or threatened use of a firearm or other dangerous weapon. Thus, the use of this factor is proscribed under this section. State v. Abdullah, 309 N.C. 63, 306 S.E.2d 100 (1983).

Burglary. — In a prosecution for first degree burglary, where the defendant broke into and entered a motel room by pointing a gun at the victim's head and driving him into the room, wherein he committed armed robbery, the trial court erred in sentencing him by considering as a factor in aggravation the use of a deadly weapon. If the evidence of the deadly weapon was removed, the State would have failed to prove three elements of the burglary: breaking, entering and intent to commit a felony. State v. Edwards, 75 N.C. App. 588, 331 S.E.2d 183 (1985).

Larceny. — It was not improper for the court to find the use of a deadly weapon at the time of the crime as a factor in aggravation of larceny offense, even though evidence of its use was necessary to prove an essential element of the joinable offense of second-degree murder. State v. Coleman, 80 N.C. App. 271, 341 S.E.2d 750, cert. denied, 318 N.C. 285, 347 S.E.2d 466 (1986).

Common-Law Robbery. — Use of a deadly weapon has never been an element of proof required to establish common-law robbery in North Carolina; consequently, the State's evidence proving defendant's use of the gun as an aggravating factor was not barred by former § 15A-1340.4(a). State v. Smaw, 96 N.C. App. 98, 384 S.E.2d 304 (1989).

I. Young, Old, or Infirm Victim.

The underlying policy of former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)j was to discourage wrongdoers from taking advantage of a victim because of the victim's young or old age or infirmity. State v. Eason, 67 N.C. App. 460, 313 S.E.2d 221, aff'd, 312 N.C. 320, 321 S.E.2d 881 (1984).

State had the burden of showing (1) that the victim was in fact vulnerable because of conditions at the time of the offense, and (2) that she was targeted because of these conditions or that the defendant took advantage of them while committing the offense. State v. Davy, 100 N.C. App. 551, 397 S.E.2d 634 (1990).

When Age or Infirmity of Victim May Be Used as Aggravating Factor. — The age of the victim may not be used as an aggravating factor unless it appears that the defendant took advantage of the victim's relative helplessness to commit the crime or that the harm was worse because of the age or condition of the victim. State v. Monk, 63 N.C. App. 512, 305 S.E.2d 755 (1983).

Although former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)j provided that extreme youth, old age or physical infirmity could be found to be an aggravating factor, this factor should not have been found unless it appeared that defendant took advantage of the victim's relative helplessness to commit the crime or that age or infirmity increased the resultant harm. State v. Newton, 82 N.C. App. 555, 347 S.E.2d 81 (1986), cert. denied, 318 N.C. 699, 351 S.E.2d 756 (1987).

If the evidence showed that victim was targeted because of a physical infirmity or that defendant took advantage of such infirmity, the aggravating factor of physical infirmity was properly found. State v. Drayton, 321 N.C. 512, 364 S.E.2d 121 (1988).

Defendant's Culpability Must Be Enhanced by Victim's Age or Condition. — Age of the victim was not reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing, as required by former § 15A-1340.4(a), unless culpability was enhanced by defendant's having taken advantage of the victim's relative defenselessness occasioned by age. State v. Eason, 67 N.C. App. 460, 313 S.E.2d 221, aff'd, 312 N.C. 320, 321 S.E.2d 881 (1984).

A victim's age or condition is reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing only when it enhances the defendant's culpability. State v. Williams, 74 N.C. App. 574, 328 S.E.2d 775 (1985).

Age should not be considered as an aggravating factor in sentencing unless it makes the defendant more blameworthy than he or she already is as a result of committing a violent crime against another person. State v. Hines, 314 N.C. 522, 335 S.E.2d 6 (1985).

Vulnerability. — The vulnerability of the victim due to age and mental or physical infirmity was the concern addressed by the aggravating factor established by subdivision (a)(1)j of former § 15A-1340.4 (see now (d)(11) of this section). State v. Long, 316 N.C. 60, 340 S.E.2d 392 (1986).

The gravamen of the aggravating factor that the victim is physically infirm is vulnerability. State v. Drayton, 321 N.C. 512, 364 S.E.2d 121 (1988).

Age or Infirmity Must Make Victim More Vulnerable. — A victim's age does not make a defendant more blameworthy unless the victim's age causes him to be more vulnerable than he otherwise would be to the crime committed against him, as where age impedes a victim from fleeing, fending off attack, recovering from its effects, or otherwise avoiding being victimized. Unless age has such an effect, it is not an aggravating factor under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Hines, 314 N.C. 522, 335 S.E.2d 6 (1985).

As Where Defendant's Decision to Commit Crime Is Based on Victim's Age. — Where a defendant decides to perpetrate a crime against an individual, based in part on the likelihood that the crime will be successfully completed because of the intended victim's advanced age, the victim's age has made him more vulnerable than otherwise would be the case, and the trial court may properly find this aggravating factor. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

But Victim Need Not Be Targeted Because of Age or Infirmity. — For purposes of the aggravating factor of the victim's infirmity, it is not necessary that the victim be targeted because of her infirmity, but only that this condition be taken advantage of by the defendant. State v. Thompson, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

When considering the age of a child kidnapping victim as an aggravating factor, it is not necessary to show that the abduction was caused by the child's vulnerability. It is not the cause of the taking which supports the aggravating factor. Whatever the motive, if the victim is more vulnerable because of age, this aggravates the crime. State v. Nobles, 329 N.C. 239, 404 S.E.2d 668 (1991).

Victim Need Not Be Present During Commission of Crime. — The policy underlying this aggravating factor is to deter criminals from taking advantage of a victim's age or mental or physical infirmity and the presence of victim during the commission of the crime is irrelevant. State v. Rios, 322 N.C. 596, 369 S.E.2d 576 (1988).

Victim's old age was improperly found as an aggravating factor for the crime of first-degree burglary since there was no evidence tending to show victim's home was targeted for burglary because of her old age, as there was no evidence at all that defendant knew the age of the occupants of the house before he broke into it, and since there was no evidence in the record that victim, because of her old age, was more vulnerable to having her home burglarized than anyone else, or that she had a more difficult time recovering from the effects of the crime. State v. Styles, 93 N.C. App. 596, 379 S.E.2d 255 (1989).

If some disability impedes a victim from fleeing, fending off attack, recovering from its effect, or otherwise avoid being victimized, such disability is a physical infirmity. State v. Drayton, 321 N.C. 512, 364 S.E.2d 121 (1988).

How Defendant May Take Advantage of Age or Infirmity of Victim. — For purposes of the aggravating factor of age of the victim, there are at least two ways in which a defendant may take advantage of the age of his victim. First, he may "target" the victim because of the victim's age, knowing that his chances of success are greater where the victim is very young or very old. Secondly, the defendant may take advantage of the victim's age during the actual commission of a crime against the person of the victim, or in the victim's presence, knowing that the victim, by reason of age, is unlikely to effectively intervene or defend himself. State v. Thompson, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

Age of Victim of First-Degree Rape Not to Be Considered. — Due to the General Assembly giving children under 13 greater protection from first-degree rape than victims over 13, the rape of a victim under 13 by a defendant at least 12 and at least four years older than the victim made the defendant more blameworthy, because rape victims under 13 are in fact more vulnerable to the crime of rape than they would otherwise be if older than 12. This did not, however, allow the age of the victim to be considered in sentencing for first-degree rape, because (1) age was an element of first-degree rape under § 14-27.2(a)(1) and as such could not be considered an aggravating factor upon sentencing for that crime under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)p, and (2) first-degree rape was a Class B felony which carried a mandatory life sentence without consideration of aggravating and mitigating factors, under former § 14-1.1(a)(2). State v. Vanstory, 84 N.C. App. 535, 353 S.E.2d 236, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 176, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

Age of Victim of Second-Degree Rape May Be Considered. — Because age of the victim is not a necessary element of second-degree rape, and a determination by a preponderance of the evidence in the sentencing phase that the defendant raped a child 11 years old is reasonably related to the purpose of sentencing, the age of a victim under 13 may be considered as a nonstatutory aggravating factor in sentencing for second-degree rape. State v. Vanstory, 84 N.C. App. 535, 353 S.E.2d 236, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 176, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

Age of Child in Case Involving Indecent Sexual Liberties May Be Considered. — Finding that eight-year old victim was "very young" was not clearly erroneous in the context of case which dealt with the vulnerability of a child to indecent sexual liberties. The element of age in the offense spans 16 years. Proof that the victim was "very young" was not necessary to prove the offense, and consequently the aggravating factor and the offense did not merge. United States v. Price, 812 F.2d 174 (4th Cir. 1987).

Child Victim with Low I.Q. — Trial judge's finding as an aggravating factor that 12-year-old victim of sexual assault was especially vulnerable in that she had an I.Q. in the mildly handicapped range (45-60) and that her development age was six years and two months upheld. State v. Turner, 103 N.C. App. 331, 406 S.E.2d 147 (1991).

Victim's Intoxication Considered an Infirmity. — The trial court was correct in finding as an aggravating factor that the victim was physically infirm in that he was acutely intoxicated. State v. Handy, 331 N.C. 515, 419 S.E.2d 545 (1992).

Blood Alcohol Content of Victim. — Evidence that victim has a blood alcohol content of .29 percent may be used to prove that the victim has a physical disability. State v. Drayton, 321 N.C. 512, 364 S.E.2d 121 (1988).

Sleeping Victim. — Trial court properly aggravated defendant's sentence for rape where victim was asleep and was therefore impeded from fleeing or fending off the attack. State v. Davy, 100 N.C. App. 551, 397 S.E.2d 634 (1990).

Presence of Child During Rape of Mother. — Trial court properly found as an aggravating factor the fact that victim's two young children were present in the house at the time of rape. Particularly compelling was the fact that victim's 15-month-old baby was in the room with defendant and victim during the attack. Because the victim feared for the safety of her baby, she clearly was inhibited in her ability to resist attack and protect herself. Under these circumstances, she was rendered more vulnerable to an attack. State v. Davy, 100 N.C. App. 551, 397 S.E.2d 634 (1990).

Menstrual Cycle. — Court erred by aggravating defendant's sentence on grounds that rape victim was having her period, where there was no evidence in the record that the fact that the victim was menstruating at the time of attack rendered her "physically infirm" or more vulnerable and less able to protect herself from her attacker, and no evidence that the defendant targeted or took advantage of her because she was having her period. State v. Davy, 100 N.C. App. 551, 397 S.E.2d 634 (1990).

Absence of Rape Victim's Husband. — Trial court properly aggravated defendant's sentence based upon a finding that defendant knew that victim's husband was away on military duty and that he proceeded to target her because of this knowledge. State v. Davy, 100 N.C. App. 551, 397 S.E.2d 634 (1990).

Arson. — Under former §§ 15A-1340.3 and 15A-1340.4, the victim's age was a statutory aggravating factor which the court could consider in an arson case regardless of whether the arson resulted in a death. The court therefore did not aggravate the sentence for arson based on defendant's conviction on the joined murder charge. State v. Allen, 322 N.C. 176, 367 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Even if defendant's child had not been harmed by burning of apartment, if it resulted in sufficient charring to constitute arson, defendant would be guilty of first-degree arson and the child's vulnerability because of its young age could still have been used to aggravate defendant's arson conviction. State v. Allen, 322 N.C. 176, 367 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Finding Upheld. — Where the evidence showed that defendant choked 81 year old victim to unconsciousness before raping her and stealing two heaters, it was appropriate for the judge to conclude that the victim's age had made her more vulnerable than most women to the defendant's forcible and felonious invasion of her home and was therefore related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Williams, 74 N.C. App. 574, 328 S.E.2d 775 (1985).

Although the State relied on evidence showing that second-degree murder victim suffered from "battered child syndrome" in order to obtain a conviction (i.e., the age of the victim and the caretaker role of the defendant), the court did not err in sentencing by finding as aggravating circumstances that the victim was very young and that the defendant took advantage of a position of trust or confidence, as these factors were not elements of the offense. State v. Hitchcock, 75 N.C. App. 65, 330 S.E.2d 237, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 334, 333 S.E.2d 493 (1985).

Where, at the time of the offense, victim was wearing a leg cast and, as a result, after being shot, she had difficulty getting up, only managing to get back to her bedroom to call for assistance two hours later, there was little doubt that the victim's physical infirmity impeded her ability to recover from the effects of the attack and to call for assistance, and thus, the trial court did not err in finding the victim's physical infirmity as an aggravating factor in offense of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill. State v. Vaught, 318 N.C. 480, 349 S.E.2d 583 (1986).

Where 70-year-old victim's physical infirmity was not the sole evidence supporting the two aggravating factors of victim's old age and physical infirmity, as there was discrete evidence that victim lived alone in an apartment building for the elderly, and that defendant knew victim and was able to assess her vulnerability, finding of these factors did not violate former § 15A-1340.4(a). State v. Davis, 325 N.C. 607, 386 S.E.2d 418 (1989), cert. denied, 496 U.S. 905, 110 S. Ct. 2587, 110 L. Ed. 2d 268 (1990).

Where evidence showed that 74-year-old victim's advanced age caused her to be more vulnerable to defendant's restraint and removal of her from her home than most women of a younger age as evidenced by her failed escape attempt, consideration of victim's age as an aggravating factor in second-degree kidnapping conviction was appropriate. State v. Flowers, 100 N.C. App. 58, 394 S.E.2d 296 (1990).

The trial court properly found from the evidence that victim's age was an aggravating factor. State v. Hartman, 344 N.C. 445, 476 S.E.2d 328 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1201, 117 S. Ct. 1562, 137 L. Ed. 2d 708 (1997).

Finding Held Error. — The trial court erred in finding as an aggravating factor, in sentencing defendant for robbery with a dangerous weapon and assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury that the victim was very young when the victim was 17 years old at the time of the crimes. State v. Cogdell, 74 N.C. App. 647, 329 S.E.2d 675 (1985).

Where the defendant simply entered and stole from an unoccupied house, the victim's age had nothing to do with it and the trial court erred in finding the victim's age as an aggravating factor. State v. Fair, 77 N.C. App. 641, 335 S.E.2d 783 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 381, 342 S.E.2d 900 (1986).

Aggravation of defendant's sentence for taking indecent liberties with a minor on the ground that the 13 year old victim was very young was error, as she was not, for purposes of this offense, "very young." State v. Sumpter, 318 N.C. 102, 347 S.E.2d 396 (1986).

It was error for the trial judge to aggravate sentence for felonious assault with the factor that the 11 and 14 year old victims were very young, as the victims were not at the beginning of the age spectrum and the State failed to show that they were rendered more vulnerable to defendant's assault than the average person would have been by reason of their age. State v. Long, 316 N.C. 60, 340 S.E.2d 392 (1986).

J. Commission of Crime While on Pretrial Release.

Constitutionality of Considering Defendant's Status as Pretrial Releasee. — Whether or not one on pretrial release on another felony charge is in fact guilty, it is to be expected that he would, while the question of his guilt is pending, be particularly cautious to avoid commission of another criminal offense. If he is not and is convicted of another offense, his status as a pretrial releasee in a pending case is a legitimate circumstance to be considered in imposing sentence. The legislature may constitutionally require that it be considered. State v. Webb, 309 N.C. 549, 308 S.E.2d 252 (1983).

Scope of Enhancement Under Former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)k. — Under § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)k, a sentence could be increased if defendant had committed an offense while on release for a pending felony charge. However, while pending charges could in such narrow instances be admissible to prove a sentencing factor, the sentencing court could never enhance defendant's presumptive sentence merely because defendant had charges for other crimes pending against him. State v. Mack, 87 N.C. App. 24, 359 S.E.2d 485 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 477, 364 S.E.2d 663 (1988).

It is not error for the court to consider as an aggravating factor that the defendant had committed the offenses with which he was charged while on pretrial release on another felony charge. Such consideration does not violate his constitutional rights. State v. Herring, 74 N.C. App. 269, 328 S.E.2d 23 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 188, 340 S.E.2d 105 (1986).

Lack of Speed for Trial of Earlier Felony Charge Was Irrelevant to Factor. — Trial court did not err by finding, in aggravation of burglary sentence, that defendant committed burglary while on pretrial release from another felony charge even though earlier felony charge was left dormant by prosecutor for one and one-half years; speed or lack thereof with which first case is tried is irrelevant to factor's validity, although weight to be given such factor is for judge's discretion. State v. Parks, 324 N.C. 94, 376 S.E.2d 4 (1989).

Commission of Offense While on Release for Misdemeanor. — Fact that defendant committed an offense while on release for a misdemeanor, rather than a felony, does not preclude the court from finding it as an aggravating factor. It simply means that the court is not required to find it as an aggravating factor. State v. Whitaker, 100 N.C. App. 578, 397 S.E.2d 372 (1990).

Finding as an aggravating factor that defendant committed an offense while on release for a misdemeanor, rather than a felony, would not be contrary to the intent of the legislature as expressed by former § 15A-1340.4(o), which required that the sentencing court consider as an aggravating factor the fact that defendant had a prior conviction or convictions for criminal offenses punishable by more than 60 days confinement, when such factor was proven by the evidence. State v. Whitaker, 100 N.C. App. 578, 397 S.E.2d 372 (1990).

K. Person under 16 Involved in Commission of Crime.

Application of Factor. — The legislative intent behind this statutory aggravating factor concerned situations where children were encouraged and actually used in the commission of a crime. The fact that the victim of a particular crime fell below the age of 16 was not included within the meaning of former § 15A-1340.4. State v. Waters, 87 N.C. App. 502, 361 S.E.2d 416 (1987).

The fact that the victim of a particular crime falls below the age of 16 was not included within the meanings of former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)l. State v. Mosley, 93 N.C. App. 239, 377 S.E.2d 554 (1989).

The aggravating factor that defendant involved a person under the age of 16 in a crime was not properly found based on the evidence that a child under 16 was present with the victim and defendant when the victim performed oral sex on defendant. State v. Mosley, 93 N.C. App. 239, 377 S.E.2d 554 (1989).

Evidence held sufficient to support a finding as a factor in aggravation when sentencing defendant on the noncapital felonies of conspiracy to commit murder and conspiracy to commit arson that defendant involved a person under the age of 16 in the commission of the crime. State v. Johnson, 340 N.C. 32, 455 S.E.2d 644 (1995).

L. Great Monetary Value or Loss.

Monetary Loss Must Be Loss from Property Damage. — This aggravating factor under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)m applied only to damage to property causing great monetary loss, and not to great monetary loss incurred because of a personal injury. State v. Sowell, 318 N.C. 640, 350 S.E.2d 363 (1986).

Consideration of the financial burden imposed upon the victim by his or her injury was not statutorily mandated by the aggravating factor contained in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)m. State v. Bryant, 318 N.C. 632, 350 S.E.2d 358 (1986).

Property Taken or Attempted to Be Taken Was Contemplated. — The aggravating factor of the taking of property of great monetary value spoke of the value of the property taken or attempted to be taken, and not the value of the property which was ultimately retained or possessed by a particular defendant. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

The gist of former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)m was the value of the property and not whether there was a taking or attempted taking of property. The aspect of the designated aggravating factor which permitted enhancing the punishment was the great monetary value of the personal property in possession of the defendant. State v. Aldridge, 76 N.C. App. 638, 334 S.E.2d 107 (1985), upholding judge's finding as an aggravating factor in sentencing defendant for possession of stolen goods and being a habitual felon that the offense involved an attempted taking of property of great monetary value.

Taking of Money or Property in Armed Robbery. — Since the offense of robbery with firearms does not require proof that money was actually taken, the taking of a large sum of money is properly considered as an aggravating factor. State v. Thompson, 64 N.C. App. 485, 307 S.E.2d 838 (1983), cert. denied, 313 N.C. 513, 329 S.E.2d 399 (1985).

Since the crime of armed robbery does not require proof that property was actually taken, the mere attempt to take property by use of a firearm or other deadly weapon being sufficient, this aggravating factor may be properly found in armed robbery cases. Thus, where the evidence tended to show that defendant, acting alone or in concert, took $3,200.00 from victim during armed robbery, the court could properly find as an aggravating factor the taking of "property of great monetary value." State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

Great Monetary Value of Subject of Larceny. — Trial court did not err in finding as a factor in aggravation that offense of felonious larceny involved the taking of property of great monetary value, where evidence tended to show that the value of the taxi cab taken was approximately $3,000.00. State v. Coleman, 80 N.C. App. 271, 341 S.E.2d 750, cert. denied, 318 N.C. 285, 347 S.E.2d 466 (1986).

M. Position of Trust.

Factor Not to Be Considered Where It Is an Element of the Charged Offense. — A relationship of trust and confidence was needed to prove the custodial element of custodial sexual offense. The evidence that proved the aggravating factor that the defendant took advantage of a position of trust or confidence to commit the offense thus was necessary to prove the custodial element of the offense, and the finding of the aggravating factor was proscribed by former § 15A-1340.4(a). State v. Raines, 319 N.C. 258, 354 S.E.2d 486 (1987).

Factor Dependent Neither upon Victim's Age Nor Consciousness of Victim's Trust. — A finding of the aggravating factor that the defendant took advantage of a position of trust or confidence depends no more on the youth of the victim than it does on the notion that confidence or trust in the defendant must repose consciously in the victim. Such a finding depends instead upon the existence of a relationship between the defendant and victim generally conducive to reliance of one upon the other. State v. Daniel, 319 N.C. 308, 354 S.E.2d 216 (1987).

The aggravating factor that defendant took advantage of a position of trust or confidence to commit the offense does not require evidence of a conscious mental process on the part of an infant victim and may properly be grounded in the child's dependence upon the defendant. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 689, 365 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Husband-Wife Relationship. — Husband-wife relationship permits a finding of this factor. State v. Arnold, 329 N.C. 128, 404 S.E.2d 822 (1991).

Relationship of Mother to Infant. — A relationship of trust or confidence existed between defendant and her newborn infant, whom she killed, because defendant was the child's mother and because she was singularly responsible for its welfare. The abuse of her parental role related to defendant's character and conduct and was reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Daniel, 319 N.C. 308, 354 S.E.2d 216 (1987).

Nature of Trust Between Defendant and Family Members. — The aggravating sentencing factor under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)n did not require the defendant to abuse a position of greater "trust and confidence" than that inherent among family members whenever defendant was convicted of taking indecent liberties with such family members. State v. Caldwell, 85 N.C. App. 713, 355 S.E.2d 813 (1987).

Parent-Child Relationship Not Factor When Manslaughter Based on Misdemeanor Child Abuse or Criminally Negligent Act. — The aggravating factor that the defendant took advantage of a position of trust or confidence can not be used to increase a sentence beyond the presumptive for involuntary manslaughter when the manslaughter conviction could have been based on the predicate crime of misdemeanor child abuse, which has as an element that the defendant was a parent of the victim, or by a finding that defendant committed a criminally negligent act, and the jury was instructed as to both possibilities. State v. Darby, 102 N.C. App. 297, 401 S.E.2d 791 (1991).

Duty of Drivers to Passengers. — Finding in aggravation that defendant violated a position of trust is not supported merely by the long history of special duties owed by drivers to passengers in their cars. State v. Carroll, 85 N.C. App. 696, 355 S.E.2d 844 (1987), cert. denied, 320 N.C. 514, 358 S.E.2d 523 (1987).

Where defendant was convicted of taking indecent liberties with his stepson and stepson's overnight guest, court properly found as an aggravating factor that he abused a position of trust and confidence to commit the offense. State v. Caldwell, 85 N.C. App. 713, 355 S.E.2d 813 (1987).

Customer of Cocaine Dealer. — The defendant was not put in the type of position of trust or confidence envisioned by legislature in establishing the aggravating factor set forth in this section, even though defendant had been to victim's home on numerous occasions and was one of his regular cocaine customers. State v. Erlewine, 328 N.C. 626, 403 S.E.2d 280 (1991).

Conviction Under § 14-27.7. — Trial court erred in sentencing defendant, convicted of two violations of § 14-27.7, by finding as an aggravating factor that the defendant "took advantage of a position of trust or confidence to commit the offense," as evidence necessary to prove an element of the offense may not be used to prove any factor in aggravation, and the evidence necessary to convict defendant tended to show that he took advantage of his custodial position in committing the offenses involved. State v. Raines, 81 N.C. App. 299, 344 S.E.2d 138, aff'd, 319 N.C. 458, 354 S.E.2d 486 (1987).

Insufficient Evidence to Support Finding of Factor. — Where defendant and victim had met only a day and a half before victim was found fatally wounded and the evidence showed only that the two men talked and that victim decided to ride down to Darlington with defendant in defendant's car, there was no evidence to support the trial court's finding as a factor in aggravation that defendant took advantage of a position of trust or confidence. State v. Carroll, 85 N.C. App. 696, 355 S.E.2d 844, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 514, 358 S.E.2d 523 (1987).

In a rape case, the evidence was insufficient to show as an aggravating factor that there existed a relationship of trust and confidence between victim and defendant, who were acquainted. State v. Midyette, 87 N.C. App. 199, 360 S.E.2d 507 (1987), aff'd, 322 N.C. 108, 366 S.E.2d 440 (1988).

Where the only relationship between victim and defendant was that defendant and victim had worked at the same place of employment and that defendant had driven a van that victim had been in at least five times, the evidence showed only that the victim was acquainted with defendant and the relationship between the victim and defendant did not rise to a relationship of trust that caused the victim to rely upon defendant. State v. Hammond, 118 N.C. App. 257, 454 S.E.2d 709 (1995).

N. Nonstatutory Factors.

The State has the burden of proving the existence of a nonstatutory aggravating factor by a preponderance of the evidence. The State must also show that it is reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Hargrove, 104 N.C. App. 194, 408 S.E.2d 757, cert. denied, 330 N.C. 444, 412 S.E.2d 79 (1991).

Reasonably Related to Purpose of Sentencing. — Pursuant to former § 15A-1340.4, a sentencing judge could consider any nonstatutory aggravating factor which was reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing and was proven by the preponderance of the evidence. State v. Thompson, 328 N.C. 477, 402 S.E.2d 386 (1991).

Exercising the right against self-incrimination cannot be an aggravating factor in the defendant's sentence. State v. Harrell, 100 N.C. App. 450, 397 S.E.2d 84 (1990).

Failure to Perform a Mitigating Act Was Not an Aggravating Factor. — It was improper to aggravate a defendant's sentence for his failure to perform an act when the doing of the act would have supported the finding of a factor in mitigation. State v. Coleman, 80 N.C. App. 271, 341 S.E.2d 750, cert. denied, 318 N.C. 285, 347 S.E.2d 466 (1986).

Omission of an Act. — The trial judge, in proper circumstances, should not be precluded from finding the omission of an act to be an aggravating factor when in other circumstances the performance of that act might be a nonstatutory mitigating factor. State v. Church, 99 N.C. App. 647, 394 S.E.2d 468 (1990).

Serious injury may be an aggravating factor. State v. Nichols, 66 N.C. App. 318, 311 S.E.2d 38, cert. denied, 311 N.C. 406, 319 S.E.2d 278 (1984).

Premeditation and Deliberation in Aggravation of Violent Offense. — It is well established that premeditation and deliberation may properly be found as a factor in aggravation of a violent offense. State v. Whitaker, 100 N.C. App. 578, 397 S.E.2d 372 (1990).

Premeditation and Deliberation in Voluntary Manslaughter Case. — Premeditation and deliberation are appropriate nonstatutory aggravating factors where the defendant pleads guilty to voluntary manslaughter. State v. Easter, 101 N.C. App. 36, 398 S.E.2d 619 (1990).

Finding of Premeditation and Deliberation in Felonious Assault Case. — Where the evidence showed that there was considerable ill will between the parties in the weeks preceding felonious assault, which ill will culminated in violence on at least two occasions prior to felonious assault; that one week before felonious assault, defendant showed his wife butterfly knife, which was type of knife used in assault, and told her drug dealers were after him and were going to get her to get at him; and that, hours before assault, defendant approached wife at concert and told her she was dead, or was going to die, or words of similar import, the State met its burden of proving premeditation by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Whitaker, 100 N.C. App. 578, 397 S.E.2d 372 (1990).

Pregnancy of Victim. — On conviction of assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury, it was not error for the trial judge to find the victim's advanced stage of pregnancy as a nonstatutory aggravating factor and, based thereon, to sentence the defendant to a term of years greater than the presumptive term provided for the offense. State v. Artis, 316 N.C. 507, 342 S.E.2d 847 (1986).

Intoxication of Victim. — Intoxication of the defendant has been recognized as a mitigating factor by the courts. It would be both unreasonable and unfair to allow defendant's intoxication to be considered a mitigating factor, but not to allow the victim's intoxication to be an aggravating factor. Clearly the legislature did not intend this result. State v. Potts, 65 N.C. App. 101, 308 S.E.2d 754 (1983), cert. denied, 311 N.C. 406, 319 S.E.2d 278 (1984).

Child in Hospital at Time of Abduction. — That a child victim of kidnapping was more vulnerable because he was in a hospital at the time of his abduction was a proper non-statutory aggravating factor. It was particularly egregious that defendant disguised herself as a nurse and used this disguise to abduct the baby. The mother of the child had a right to rely on a person dressed as a nurse. This made the victim more vulnerable than he ordinarily would have been and makes it a worse crime than if it had occurred under other circumstances. State v. Nobles, 329 N.C. 239, 404 S.E.2d 668 (1991).

Pattern of Conduct Causing Serious Danger to Society. — Where upon sentencing defendant for larceny and breaking or entering the trial court found as the only aggravating factor that the defendant engaged in a pattern of conduct causing serious danger to society, and the only basis for the trial court's finding of this aggravating factor was evidence of joinable offenses for which defendant was also being sentenced, defendant's convictions of larceny and breaking or entering would be remanded for resentencing. State v. Flowers, 84 N.C. App. 696, 354 S.E.2d 240, cert. denied, 319 N.C. 675, 356 S.E.2d 782 (1987).

Evidence showing that defendant and his companions first went to the victim's home and when victim refused to open the door, the three men left and went to a nightclub, that while at the nightclub, they consumed quantities of liquor and got into a fight with several other people, that during the course of the evening they armed themselves with a sawed-off shotgun, and that armed and intoxicated, they returned a second time to the victim's home, all unrelated to the other crimes for which defendant was convicted, was enough to support the trial court's finding in aggravation that defendant engaged in a pattern of conduct causing serious danger to society. State v. Hayes, 323 N.C. 306, 372 S.E.2d 704 (1988).

Defendants consumed quantities of liquor and got into a fight with several other people; armed themselves with a sawed-off shotgun; and armed and intoxicated, went to victim's home. This evidence, all unrelated to the other crimes for which defendant was convicted, is enough to support the trial court's finding of aggravation that defendant engaged in a pattern of conduct causing serious danger to society. State v. Flowers, 100 N.C. App. 58, 394 S.E.2d 296 (1990).

Inquiry Made to Victim to Determine When She Would be Alone. — The trial court did not commit error in finding as a nonstatutory aggravating factor that defendant used information gained as a result of an inquiry to victim to determine whether she would be alone and used keys surreptitiously copied while they were entrusted to his wife to enter her home. State v. Taylor, 322 N.C. 280, 367 S.E.2d 664 (1988).

Evidence Necessary to Show Elements of Charged Crime. — In sentencing defendant for being an accessory before the fact to second-degree murder, the court erred in finding as a non-statutory aggravating factor that defendant dispensed cocaine to the principals in substantial quantity while inducing them to kill and murder the two victims, promised to forgive debts to him, and furnished a knife and a pistol to the principals to use in the crime, and that the principals who were solicited and procured by the defendant committed murder in the act of robbery and without any legal provocation, as this evidence was necessary to show that defendant participated in the planning or contemplation of the crime in such a way as to counsel, procure, or command the principals to commit it. State v. Kimbrell, 84 N.C. App. 59, 351 S.E.2d 801, rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 762, 360 S.E.2d 691 (1987).

Consideration of Element of Greater Charge Dropped in Exchange for Plea Bargain. — Judge's finding as an aggravating factor that there was vaginal penetration by defendant was not error where defendant pled guilty to attempted first degree sexual offense and attempted indecent liberties with a child, as it was not a violation of defendant's constitutional due process rights to consider as an aggravating factor an element of a greater charge dropped in exchange for a plea bargain for a lesser included offense where the dismissed charge was not used in aggravation. State v. Turner, 103 N.C. App. 331, 406 S.E.2d 147 (1991).

Medical Expenses of Victim. — In sentencing defendant for assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury, consideration of the medical expenses incurred by the victim was not prohibited by the provision of former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1) that "Evidence necessary to prove an element of the offense may not be used to prove any factor in aggravation, and the same item of evidence may not be used to prove more than one factor in aggravation," as although evidence of large medical and hospital expenses was both properly and frequently used to establish the element of serious injury, such expenses were not inherent in every instance of a serious injury, nor were such expenses a necessary method for proving the element of serious injury, and in the case at issue the State did not rely on such expenses to establish the element of serious injury, but instead presented evidence of the permanent disabilities suffered by the victim as a result of the assault to prove serious injury. State v. Sowell, 318 N.C. 640, 350 S.E.2d 363 (1986).

While medical expenses, which represent a financial burden on the victim, could be considered as a non-statutory factor in aggravation under former § 15A-1340.4, they could not be so used unless they were excessive and go beyond that normally incurred from an assault of this type. State v. Jones, 104 N.C. App. 251, 409 S.E.2d 322 (1991).

Where evidence concerning the victim's medical bills and his lack of insurance was placed before the court solely by the oral representation of the prosecuting attorney, no bills or records or other evidence was submitted, and the victim did not testify nor did the defendant stipulate to the amounts or existence of the medical bills, the State presented insufficient evidence to support the non-statutory aggravating factor that the injury caused great monetary damage to the victim. State v. Jones, 104 N.C. App. 251, 409 S.E.2d 322 (1991).

Financial Burden Imposed upon Victim. — There were circumstances under which the financial burden imposed upon the victim by his injury could be used as a non-statutory aggravating factor under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)m. State v. Jones, 104 N.C. App. 251, 409 S.E.2d 322 (1991).

Failure to Aid Victim. — The trial court erred, in sentencing defendant on his plea to voluntary manslaughter, in finding as an aggravating factor defendant's failure to aid his victim, whom he left dying in a field. State v. Bates, 76 N.C. App. 676, 334 S.E.2d 73 (1985).

Where defendant failed to render aid to the helpless 17-month-old child who was in defendant's custody and care for three days, during which time the child was suffering from painful second-degree burns, such conduct increased the injury to the child and clearly increased defendant's culpability. State v. Church, 99 N.C. App. 647, 394 S.E.2d 468 (1990).

Failure to Provide Medical Assistance. — Failure to provide child abuse victim with medical treatment at a reasonable time after his injury could be considered as a factor in aggravation. State v. Church, 99 N.C. App. 647, 394 S.E.2d 468 (1990).

Failure to Aid in Law Enforcement. — Fact that the defendant did not at any time render assistance to the arresting officer or the district attorney and did not offer aid in the apprehension of other felons could not be considered as aggravating factors. Because it was difficult to ascertain what help the defendant could have provided without implicating himself, consideration of these two aggravating factors was a potential infringement on his right to plead not guilty. State v. Thobourne, 59 N.C. App. 584, 297 S.E.2d 774 (1982).

Trial court improperly found as a nonstatutory aggravating factor that the defendant gave no substantial assistance to law enforcement. State v. Harrell, 100 N.C. App. 450, 397 S.E.2d 84 (1990).

Denial of Guilt. — Trial judge improperly considered defendant's denial of all guilt in regard to the charges as an aggravating factor in sentencing. State v. Harrell, 100 N.C. App. 450, 397 S.E.2d 84 (1990).

Imposition by the trial court of maximum sentence on defendant because defendant denied guilt was error entitling defendant to a new sentencing hearing. State v. Bunch, 104 N.C. App. 106, 408 S.E.2d 191 (1991).

Pattern or Course of Violent Conduct. — Where, in addition to evidence relating to the violent acts committed by defendant at the date of the crimes in question, there was evidence that prior to that date defendant had hit several members of his family during attacks of rage, shot a gun while angry at one of his neighbors, hit his boss at another company where he once worked, and was involved in two fist fights, there was sufficient evidence that defendant had engaged in a pattern or course of violent conduct to support the judge's finding of that factor in aggravation, separate and apart from evidence of psychiatrist which supported the additional aggravating factor relating to defendant being a dangerous and mentally abnormal person. Thus the trial court's findings in aggravation were not based on the same item of evidence in violation of former § 15A-1340.4. State v. Avery, 315 N.C. 1, 337 S.E.2d 786 (1985).

Setting Course of Criminal Conduct in Motion. — In sentencing defendant on conviction of soliciting another man to commit common law robbery, it was not improper for the trial judge to find as a nonstatutory factor in aggravation that the defendant set a course of criminal conduct in motion by his own actions which ultimately resulted in the robbery with a dangerous weapon and death of the victim and the second degree burglary of his dwelling, the felonious breaking or entering of his storage shed, the felonious larceny of his truck and the taking of a large amount of cash money from his person, even though the offenses for which this factor purported to hold defendant responsible were dismissed or resulted in acquittals. State v. Mann, 317 N.C. 164, 345 S.E.2d 365 (1986).

Premeditation and Deliberation in Second Degree Murder Case. — As premeditation and deliberation were not elements of murder in the second degree, if a defendant charged with murder in the first degree pled guilty to murder in the second degree, the sentencing judge could conclude that for purposes of sentencing premeditation and deliberation had been established by a preponderance of the evidence and therefore could be used as an aggravating factor. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

A court could properly find premeditation and deliberation to be an aggravating factor when sentencing a defendant who pled guilty to murder in the second degree. State v. Carter, 318 N.C. 487, 349 S.E.2d 580 (1986).

A trial judge could find as an aggravating factor that the killing was done with premeditation and deliberation when a defendant charged with first degree murder pled guilty to second degree murder. State v. Marley, 321 N.C. 415, 364 S.E.2d 133 (1988).

Where a defendant tried for murder in the first degree was found guilty of murder in the second degree, the trial court could not find by a preponderance of the evidence that the killing was after premeditation and deliberation and use this finding as an aggravating factor. State v. Marley, 321 N.C. 415, 364 S.E.2d 133 (1988).

Forty-year sentence imposed on defendant who pled guilty to second-degree murder, based in part on the finding as a nonstatutory factor in aggravation that the killing had been planned for two months and was premeditated, would be upheld. State v. Jackson, 91 N.C. App. 124, 370 S.E.2d 687 (1988).

Where a defendant was convicted on an indictment charging only second degree murder, a determination by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant premeditated and deliberated the killing was reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. Therefore, a sentencing judge was not barred from using premeditation and deliberation as an aggravating factor in such a case. State v. Vandiver, 326 N.C. 348, 389 S.E.2d 30 (1990).

Malice in Manslaughter Case. — Since "malice" was not an element of voluntary manslaughter, the finding of malice as an aggravating factor did not violate the principle that evidence necessary to prove an element of the offense could not be used to support a factor in aggravation. State v. Heidmous, 75 N.C. App. 488, 331 S.E.2d 200 (1985).

Carrying of Loaded Pistol. — Where defendant was convicted of involuntary manslaughter based on evidence that he had shot and killed victim outside nightclub, defendant's possession and use of a pistol could not be used as a factor in aggravation of the crime of voluntary manslaughter. However, the trial court could properly have found as a nonstatutory aggravating factor that defendant returned to the nightclub carrying a loaded pistol after his encounter with the owner. State v. McKinney, 88 N.C. App. 659, 364 S.E.2d 743 (1988).

Danger to Self and Others. — A defendant's dangerousness to others may be legitimately considered as an aggravating factor. State v. Chatman, 308 N.C. 169, 301 S.E.2d 71 (1983).

The trial judge may properly find as an aggravating factor that defendant was dangerous to others as a result of his social and emotional problems, even though evidence of his social and emotional problems was also considered in mitigation. State v. Jones, 66 N.C. App. 274, 311 S.E.2d 351 (1984).

Absent evidence that a defendant poses a greater threat to the public than any other defendant convicted of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury, it was error to find this factor in aggravation. It must be assumed that in setting the presumptive sentence the General Assembly was aware that a person convicted of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury was a person who was dangerous to others. State v. Vaught, 80 N.C. App. 486, 342 S.E.2d 536, aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 318 N.C. 480, 349 S.E.2d 583 (1986).

Finding of Premeditation and Deliberation in Felonious Assault Case. — Where evidence presented tended to show defendant acquired personal information about his victim, adopted an alias, contacted him to schedule a meeting about his girlfriend in order to observe what the victim looked like, and several weeks later on the night of the offense, awaited the victim's return home, spoke his name when the latter passed by, and then fired four shots at him as he tried to escape, the circumstances of this felonious assault supported the trial court's finding of premeditation and deliberation, and tended to show a higher degree of culpability than other assault cases; therefore, the use of nonstatutory factors to aggravate defendant's sentence was proper. State v. Smith, 92 N.C. App. 500, 374 S.E.2d 617 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 340, 378 S.E.2d 805 (1989).

Finding of Dangerousness Upheld. — The trial court's finding as a factor in aggravation that defendant was a dangerous and mentally abnormal person would be upheld where the evidence showed that defendant suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder at the time of the incident for which he was convicted, and the expert testimony also revealed strong indications that defendant had psychotic potential when he was under emotional stress. State v. Avery, 315 N.C. 1, 337 S.E.2d 786 (1985).

Finding of Dangerousness Not Upheld. — Evidence that the defendant harbored deep resentment against her former lover, who testified against her, was not sufficient to support a finding that the defendant posed a danger to others. State v. Vaught, 318 N.C. 480, 349 S.E.2d 583 (1986).

Drug Activities. — Where the evidence of defendant's bad character related in part to his activities in the illegal drug trade, it bore a reasonable relationship to the purposes of sentencing for offenses under § 90-95 by demonstrating his increased culpability and was a proper aggravating factor. State v. Perry, 316 N.C. 87, 340 S.E.2d 450 (1986).

Intent to Sell Controlled Substance. — Intent to sell was not an element of manufacturing, transporting or possessing 28 grams or more of heroin, the reason a person possesses, manufactures or transports the heroin being irrelevant; therefore, the trial judge properly found as an aggravating factor that defendant had the specific intent to sell the heroin that he possessed. State v. Perry, 316 N.C. 87, 340 S.E.2d 450 (1986).

Conspiracy. — Aggravating factor that defendant, although not charged with the crime of conspiracy, entered into a conspiracy to aid and abet another person in the commission of a felony held not supported by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

Taking Firearm. — In sentencing defendant on conviction for second-degree burglary, the trial judge did not err in finding as a nonstatutory aggravating factor that at the time the defendant committed the burglary he also committed larceny of a firearm, which offense was not charged in the case but which the defendant admitted performing. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

Gun Battle. — Where no evidence was presented which tended to show that defendant, convicted of obtaining and attempting to obtain a controlled substance by fraud and forgery, knew that her accomplice was armed, the nonstatutory aggravating factor that accomplice and deputy engaged in a gun battle in which accomplice was killed and the deputy was wounded, as found by the trial judge, was improper and a new sentencing hearing would be required. State v. Baynard, 79 N.C. App. 559, 339 S.E.2d 810 (1986).

Discharge of Firearm into Occupied Property. — In sentencing for discharging a firearm into occupied property, that defendant shot at least two times into the house could properly be used as a basis for aggravation. The crime of discharging a weapon into an occupied building was accomplished when the defendant shot once into the structure, and any further acts of shooting were above and beyond that necessary to prove the offense for which defendant is convicted. State v. Jones, 104 N.C. App. 251, 409 S.E.2d 322 (1991).

In sentencing for discharging a firearm into an occupied building, finding that the shooting endangered a two year old child could be considered as an additional nonstatutory aggravating factor. State v. Jones, 104 N.C. App. 251, 409 S.E.2d 322 (1991).

A defendant's bad character and reputation could be a proper nonstatutory aggravating factor. State v. Perry, 316 N.C. 87, 340 S.E.2d 450 (1986).

Defendant's acknowledged participation under oath in other felonies could properly be considered as pertaining to his character and as a nonstatutory aggravating factor for purposes of sentencing, where defendant had placed his character directly in issue. State v. Moore, 317 N.C. 275, 345 S.E.2d 217 (1986).

Probationary Status of Defendant. — It was not error for the trial court to base a factor in aggravation upon evidence that defendant was on probation, as long as the finding of such a factor in aggravation was reasonably related to sentencing. State v. McLean, 74 N.C. App. 224, 328 S.E.2d 451 (1985), appeal dismissed, 316 N.C. 199, 341 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

Desertion from U.S. Army. — Where defendant in child abuse prosecution admitted that he was AWOL from the U.S. Army and the evidence showed that this fact dictated his family's secretive life style and was directly related to defendant's child care responsibilities and opportunity for abuse of the child, defendant's desertion increased his culpability, and the trial court did not err in finding this factor in aggravation. State v. Church, 99 N.C. App. 647, 394 S.E.2d 468 (1990).

Lack of Remorse. — For the State to prove lack of remorse as an aggravating circumstance, it was not enough to show merely that there was no remorse at the very time the crime was being committed. If, sometime after the commission of the crime, when defendant had an opportunity to reflect on his criminal deed, remorse did not come, and there was evidence of this fact, then lack of remorse could properly be found by the sentencing judge as an aggravating circumstance. State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 250, 377 S.E.2d 760 (1989).

Since evidence which showed that defendant exhibited remorse for the crime could support finding the statutory mitigating factor that defendant voluntarily acknowledged wrongdoing prior to the arrest or at an early stage of the criminal process, assuming arguendo that the record contained evidence showing that defendant exhibited no remorse prior to arrest or at an early stage of the criminal process, this lack of remorse could not be the basis for an additional written finding of a factor in aggravation. State v. Coleman, 80 N.C. App. 271, 341 S.E.2d 750, cert. denied, 318 N.C. 285, 347 S.E.2d 466 (1986).

The only evidence recorded in support of the court's finding that defendant was unremorseful was that during the sentencing proceeding defendant laughed while the prosecutor was reading statements elicited by the police, and the evidence was contradicted by defendant's testimony as to how the sexual encounter started and by his statement that he laughed because the statements read were mostly lies; while this evidence warranted the reprimand that the court administered, the evidence did not support the court's conclusion that the defendant was without remorse. State v. Parker, 92 N.C. App. 102, 373 S.E.2d 558 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 250, 377 S.E.2d 760 (1989).

While an expression of remorse might have mitigated defendant's sentence, the lack of such an expression, which took the form of exercising his right against self-incrimination, could not be an aggravating factor in defendant's sentence. State v. Williams, 98 N.C. App. 68, 389 S.E.2d 830 (1990).

When a defendant has pled not guilty and maintains his plea, finding as non-statutory aggravating factor that he had not exhibited any remorse and imposing a sentence beyond the presumptive term was error warranting a new sentencing hearing. State v. Williams, 98 N.C. App. 68, 389 S.E.2d 830 (1990).

A defendant may not be penalized for electing to plead not guilty. State v. Edwards, 310 N.C. 142, 310 S.E.2d 610 (1984).

Pecuniary Gain as Nonstatutory Aggravating Factor. — Former § 15A-1340.4 did not prohibit the use of pecuniary gain as a nonstatutory aggravating factor. State v. Manning, 327 N.C. 608, 398 S.E.2d 319 (1990).

In cases where defendant was not hired or paid to commit the offense, there was nothing to prevent the use of pecuniary gain as a nonstatutory aggravating factor, provided pecuniary gain was not an element essential to the establishment of the crime which was sought to be aggravated. State v. Manning, 327 N.C. 608, 398 S.E.2d 319 (1990).

Where defendant pleaded guilty to possession of stolen property, and she received this property as the result of a crime in which she participated and in which the victim received serious injuries, this increased her culpability. State v. Josey, 328 N.C. 697, 403 S.E.2d 479 (1991).

Fact that murder was committed for pecuniary gain could be used as a nonstatutory aggravating factor in the absence of any evidence that defendant was hired or paid to commit the offense. State v. Manning, 327 N.C. 608, 398 S.E.2d 319 (1990).

A person who conspired and solicits the taking of a person's life, so that he could live off the insurance proceeds from that person's death and live in that person's home was more culpable by reason of those motives, and a sentence greater than the presumptive was warranted for purposes of deterrence as well as protection of the unsuspecting public. State v. Manning, 327 N.C. 608, 398 S.E.2d 319 (1990).

Contradicted Testimony Was Not Sufficient to Find Failure to Testify Truthfully. — In order to carry out presumptive sentencing as mandated by the General Assembly, a judge could not find as an aggravating factor that the defendant did not testify truthfully, when the only evidence of his untruthfulness was his contradicted testimony at a voir dire hearing or during the trial. State v. Setzer, 61 N.C. App. 500, 301 S.E.2d 107, cert. denied, 308 N.C. 680, 304 S.E.2d 760 (1983).

Deterrence. — Court erred in finding as factors in aggravation that sentence given was necessary to deter others, and that a lesser sentence would unduly depreciate the seriousness of the crime. These two factors fell within the exclusive realm of the legislature and were presumably considered in determining presumptive sentences. While both factors served as legitimate purposes for imposing an active sentence, neither could form the basis for increasing or decreasing a presumptive term because neither related to the character or conduct of the offender. State v. Chatman, 308 N.C. 169, 301 S.E.2d 71 (1983).

Since deterrence, a basic purpose of all sentencing, was necessarily considered by the legislature in establishing presumptive sentences for the various crimes, it could not also be the basis for trial judges exceeding the presumptive terms. State v. Partridge, 66 N.C. App. 427, 311 S.E.2d 53, cert. denied, 310 N.C. 629, 315 S.E.2d 695 (1984).

Peace of Mind and Body. — Although the trial court did not formally find as a nonstatutory aggravating factor that victim, like any other citizen, was entitled to peace of mind and body in her home, the court's comments indicated that it nevertheless improperly considered it in determining defendant's sentence. State v. Shaw, 106 N.C. App. 433, 417 S.E.2d 262, cert. denied, 333 N.C. 170, 424 S.E.2d 914 (1992).

Retaliation by Codefendant. — Finding as an aggravated factor against defendant that his codefendant was motivated to retaliate against victim for seeking child support held error. State v. Beasley, 118 N.C. App. 508, 455 S.E.2d 880 (1995).

Insufficient Presumptive Sentence. — It was error for the trial judge to find, as an additional aggravating factor, that the presumptive sentence of 15 years did not do justice to the seriousness of the crime. State v. Blackwelder, 309 N.C. 410, 306 S.E.2d 783 (1983).

O. Elements of Offense.

"The Offense" Defined. — "The offense," as used in former § 15A-1340.4(a), referred to the criminal charge of which the defendant was convicted or to which he pled guilty or no contest. Had the legislature intended that the crime charged was "the offense," language such as "the crime charged was committed" would have been used throughout the subsection. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

Circumstances that are inherent in the crime of which defendant was convicted could not be used as aggravating factors in order to increase the punishment beyond what the legislature set for the offense involved. State v. Coffey, 65 N.C. App. 751, 310 S.E.2d 123 (1984).

It was error for an aggravating factor to be based on circumstances which were part of the very essence of a crime, because it could be presumed that the legislature was guided by this fact when it established presumptive sentences. State v. Bates, 76 N.C. App. 676, 334 S.E.2d 73 (1985).

Because the jury found the defendant not guilty of first degree rape but guilty only of second degree rape, the jury clearly rejected the theory that the defendant employed a deadly weapon in commission of the crime. Where defendant was in effect found innocent by the jury of an element of a crime with which he was charged, in this case the use of a deadly weapon, the court could not then find such as a factor in aggravation. State v. Ward, 104 N.C. App. 550, 410 S.E.2d 210 (1991).

The trial court erred in finding as an aggravating factor that "the defendant knowingly created a great risk of death to more than one person by means of a weapon or device which would normally be hazardous to the lives of more than one person" because evidence necessary to prove an element of the offense may not be used to prove any factor in aggravation. State v. Antoine, 117 N.C. App. 549, 451 S.E.2d 368 (1995), cert. denied, 340 N.C. 115, 456 S.E.2d 320 (1995).

Duplication of Proof Did Not Prohibit Finding of Factor. — It did not matter that certain evidence essential to establish the giving of aid or advice by defendant convicted of being an accessory before the fact also tended to show he persuaded the principal to commit the offense in question. Such duplication in proof did not prohibit the trial judge from using the evidence to find a factor in aggravation. State v. Cinema Blue of Charlotte, Inc., 98 N.C. App. 628, 392 S.E.2d 136, appeal dismissed, 327 N.C. 142, 394 S.E.2d 181 (1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1083, 111 S. Ct. 953, 112 L. Ed. 2d 1042 (1991).

Many of the factors listed under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1) contemplated a duplication in proof without violating the proscription that evidence necessary to prove an element of the offense could not be used to prove any factor in aggravation. State v. Thompson, 309 N.C. 421, 307 S.E.2d 156 (1983).

Consideration of Fact Constituting Element of Offense That Was Dropped as Part of Plea Bargain. — It was not a violation of defendant's constitutional due process rights to consider as aggravating a fact which was an element of a charge dropped in exchange for a plea bargain, where the dismissed charge was not used in aggravation. The trial judge could use any aggravating or mitigating factors which were proved by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Jones, 59 N.C. App. 472, 297 S.E.2d 132 (1982), cert. denied, 307 N.C. 577, 299 S.E.2d 651 (1983).

The mere fact that a guilty plea had been accepted pursuant to a plea bargain did not preclude the sentencing court from reviewing all of the circumstances surrounding the admitted offense in determining the presence of aggravating or mitigating factors. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

Where the crime that defendant was convicted of was based on the relationship of parent and child, that relationship could not be used again to exceed the presumptive sentence. State v. Young, 67 N.C. App. 139, 312 S.E.2d 665 (1984).

Where evidence of vaginal penetration was not necessary to prove the offense defendant pled guilty to and was sentenced for, namely, taking indecent liberties with a child, the finding that his conduct indicated that he was guilty of the greater offense charged was not forbidden by former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1). State v. Parker, 92 N.C. App. 102, 373 S.E.2d 558 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 250, 377 S.E.2d 760 (1989).

Factors Held Not Elements of § 90-95. — While former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1) prohibits using evidence necessary to prove an element of the offense to prove a factor in aggravation, that the offense was committed for hire or pecuniary gain and involved an attempted or actual taking of property of great monetary value or damage causing great monetary loss, or that the offense involved an unusually large quantity of contraband, were aggravating factors which were not elements of § 90-95(a)(1). State v. Thobourne, 59 N.C. App. 584, 297 S.E.2d 774 (1982).

P. Prior Convictions.

1. In General.

Purposes of Sentencing. — To say that an offense which was punishable by more than 60 days confinement could not be used as an aggravating factor because it was not related to the purposes of sentencing for the crime charged would be substituting the judgment of the Supreme Court for the judgment of the legislature. State v. Rose, 327 N.C. 599, 398 S.E.2d 314 (1990).

"Prior Conviction" Defined. — Former § 15A-1304.4 contained no language to support the argument that the legislature intended to define "prior conviction" as a conviction obtained before a later offense was committed; a fair reading of the statute defined "prior conviction" as one that was obtained before the defendant was sentenced for another offense. State v. McCullers, 77 N.C. App. 433, 335 S.E.2d 348 (1985).

More Than Sixty Days' Confinement. — The legislature determined that conviction of any criminal offense punishable by more than 60 days' confinement was an aggravating factor. State v. Harper, 96 N.C. App. 36, 384 S.E.2d 297 (1989).

Convictions in Which Prayer for Judgment Was Continued. — In finding prior convictions as an aggravating factor, it was improper for the court to consider convictions in cases in which prayer for judgment was continued. State v. Benfield, 76 N.C. App. 453, 333 S.E.2d 753 (1985).

An offense was a "prior conviction" under the Fair Sentencing Act only if the judgment had been entered and the time for appeal had expired, or the conviction had been upheld on appeal. When an accused was convicted with prayer for judgment continued, no judgment was entered, and no appeal was possible (until judgment is entered). Such a conviction could not support a finding of an aggravating circumstance under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)o. State v. Benfield, 76 N.C. App. 453, 333 S.E.2d 753 (1985).

Convictions in which prayer for judgment was continued and no fines or other conditions imposed did not constitute "prior convictions" under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Southern, 314 N.C. 110, 331 S.E.2d 688 (1985).

Prior Conviction Which Was on Appeal. — The trial court erred by finding as the sole aggravating factor that defendant had been convicted of robbery with a dangerous weapon in another case, where that case was on appeal to the Court of Appeals at the time of the sentencing hearing. State v. Dorsett, 81 N.C. App. 515, 344 S.E.2d 342 (1986).

Former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)o did not include any time limit within which convictions had to have occurred. State v. Lane, 77 N.C. App. 741, 336 S.E.2d 410 (1985); State v. Moxley, 78 N.C. App. 551, 338 S.E.2d 122 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 384, 342 S.E.2d 904 (1986).

Nor does it make any distinction among crimes of violence, property crimes and traffic offenses. State v. Lane, 77 N.C. App. 741, 336 S.E.2d 410 (1985).

Sentencing judge was not required to give less weight to the aggravating factor of convictions for criminal offenses punishable by more than 60 days confinement when the prior crimes were property crimes. The statute did not distinguish between crimes of violence and property crimes. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Serving of Sentence Was Subsumed within Prior Conviction Factor. — The fact that the legislature specifically authorized the use of prior convictions as an aggravating factor was an indication that a sentence, whether suspended or served actively, was subsumed within that legislated factor. Thus, it was improper to consider both a prior conviction and the serving of a prison sentence as aggravating factors. State v. Isom, 65 N.C. App. 223, 309 S.E.2d 283 (1983), remanded for resentencing, 73 N.C. App. 306, 326 S.E.2d 94 (1985).

Weighing Severity of Prior Offense in Imposing Sentence. — The General Assembly determined that a conviction of a criminal offense punishable by more than sixty days' confinement would be an aggravating factor. If the court were to hold that such a factor should be of small weight in imposing a sentence if the crime for which the defendant was convicted was a minor offense, it would be substituting its judgment for the judgment of the legislature, which the court could not do. State v. Parker, 319 N.C. 444, 355 S.E.2d 489 (1987).

Defendant on Parole at Time of Offense as Separate Aggravating Factor. — It was not error for a trial court to find as an aggravating factor that a defendant had prior criminal convictions, and then to find as a separate aggravating factor that the defendant was on parole at the time of the offense. State v. McRae, 85 N.C. App. 270, 354 S.E.2d 30, cert. denied, 319 N.C. 676, 356 S.E.2d 783 (1987).

Use of Fact Needed to Prove Contemporaneous Conviction. — The exclusion found in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)o applied only to the use of prior convictions that could have been joined with the conviction for which defendant was being sentenced. It did not apply to the use of a fact needed to prove an element of a contemporaneous conviction. State v. Wright, 319 N.C. 209, 353 S.E.2d 214 (1987).

A conviction of driving while impaired under § 20-138.1, irrespective of the level of punishment imposed, constituted a prior conviction of an offense punishable by more than 60 days' imprisonment for purposes of sentencing under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Johnson, 340 N.C. 32, 455 S.E.2d 644 (1995).

Finding of Prior Conviction as Factor Upheld. — In a prosecution for rape, evidence of defendant's prior conviction of assault with intent to commit rape, while some evidence of intent, was not necessary to prove the intent element. Accordingly, it was not error for the trial court to use evidence of defendant's prior conviction as a factor in aggravation at sentencing. State v. Moser, 74 N.C. App. 216, 328 S.E.2d 315 (1985).

The sentencing judge did not err in treating defendant's plea of nolo contendere to a charge of failure to provide child support as a prior conviction for a crime punishable by imprisonment for more than 60 days and an additional aggravating factor under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)o. State v. Brown, 314 N.C. 588, 336 S.E.2d 388 (1985).

Trial court did not err in utilizing defendant's prior drug offenses as aggravating factors for his then current convictions for indecent liberties. State v. Hartness, 326 N.C. 561, 391 S.E.2d 177 (1990).

Prior conviction of a level four driving while impaired offense which carried a possible sentence of up to 120 days in prison met the standard set out in former section to find such conviction an aggravating factor in sentencing for a second-degree murder conviction. State v. Rose, 327 N.C. 599, 398 S.E.2d 314 (1990).

The trial court did not err in denying second-degree murder defendant's motion to suppress evidence of three prior convictions, later relied upon by the court as aggravating factors to support sentencing defendant to a term greater than the presumptive. State v. Hester, 111 N.C. App. 110, 432 S.E.2d 171 (1993).

Separate Factors Not Shown. — Fact that defendant had prior convictions for criminal offenses punishable by more than 60 days imprisonment and that he had a prior record involving the use of violence covering a span in excess of 10 years were too similar, the latter being based upon the former, to be considered as separate factors for purposes of sentencing. State v. McLean, 74 N.C. App. 224, 328 S.E.2d 451 (1985), appeal dismissed, 316 N.C. 199, 341 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

2. Evidence of Prior Conviction.

The means of proof set out in former § 15A-1340.4(e) were permissive, not mandatory or exclusive. State v. Graham, 61 N.C. App. 271, 300 S.E.2d 716, modified on other grounds and aff'd, 309 N.C. 587, 308 S.E.2d 311 (1983); State v. Thompson, 309 N.C. 421, 307

S.E.2d 156 (1983); State v. Carter, 318 N.C. 487, 349 S.E.2d 580 (1986); State v. Mack, 87 N.C. App. 24, 359 S.E.2d 485 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 477, 364 S.E.2d 663 (1988); State v. Wooten, 104 N.C. App. 125, 408 S.E.2d 202 (1991).

Other Methods of Proof Were Not Precluded. — The language of former § 15A-1340.4(e) was permissive rather than mandatory. It provided that prior convictions "could" be proved by stipulation or by original or certified copy of the court record, not that they had to be. The statute thus did not preclude other methods of proof. State v. Massey, 59 N.C. App. 704, 298 S.E.2d 63 (1982); State v. Thompson, 309 N.C. 421, 307 S.E.2d 156 (1983); State v. Strickland, 318 N.C. 653, 351 S.E.2d 281 (1987); State v. Morgan, 82 N.C. App. 674, 347 S.E.2d 487 (1986); State v. Stone, 104 N.C. App. 448, 409 S.E.2d 719 (1991), cert. denied,.

The State did not bear the burden of proving the validity of a plea of guilty in a prior criminal matter before it could be used to impeach the defendant or to aggravate his sentence. State v. Smith, 96 N.C. App. 235, 385 S.E.2d 349 (1989), cert. denied, 326 N.C. 267, 389 S.E.2d 119 (1990); State v. Pickard, 107 N.C. App. 94, 418 S.E.2d 690 (1992).

A prior conviction could be proven by defendant's admission. State v. Wooten, 104 N.C. App. 125, 408 S.E.2d 202 (1991).

Party Admission Held Sufficient to Support Findings of Aggravating Factor. — Party admission, contained in defendant's motion in limine, of his previous conviction in California, was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's finding of aggravating factor. State v. Duffy, 109 N.C. App. 595, 428 S.E.2d 695 (1993).

Evidence of Prior Convictions Used as Proof as Element of Crime. — As a basis for imposing a life sentence for the offense of second-degree murder (in a drunk driving fatality case), the trial court found one aggravating factor, prior convictions for criminal offenses punishable by more that 60 days confinement, and no mitigating factors. The State had relied on the prior convictions in its case as proof of malice, and evidence offered at trial to prove malice, an element of second degree murder, could not be the basis for aggravating that crime. Because defendant's prior convictions were offered by the State as proof of malice, the trial court's consideration of such convictions as a factor in aggravation was error. State v. McBride, 109 N.C. App. 64, 425 S.E.2d 731 (1993).

Defendant's own statements under oath constituted an acceptable alternate method of proof of a prior conviction. State v. Thompson, 309 N.C. 421, 307 S.E.2d 156 (1983); State v. Graves, 83 N.C. App. 126, 349 S.E.2d 320 (1986).

As Could Defense Counsel's Statement. — A defense counsel's response to the prosecutor's assertion of a prior conviction could in certain cases constitute a stipulation or an admission that the defendant indeed had the convictions represented by the State. State v. Cunningham, 108 N.C. App. 185, 423 S.E.2d 802 (1992).

Defense Counsel's Remarks Held Admission of Prior Convictions as Represented by State. — Considering the state's remarks about defendant's record of convictions and defense counsel's immediate response that he would like to emphasize to the court that defendant's record indicated no convictions for almost 10 years, the court held that the defense counsel was referring to the record of convictions the state had just referenced. Defense counsel's response was tantamount to an admission or a stipulated fact that the defendant had the convictions so represented by the state. Therefore, the credibility of the evidence of defendant's prior convictions was manifest as a matter of law by defense counsel's admission of the truth of the basic facts. State v. Brewer, 89 N.C. App. 431, 366 S.E.2d 580, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 482, 370 S.E.2d 229 (1988).

A prior conviction could be proved by a law enforcement officer's testimony as to his personal knowledge of the conviction. State v. Carter, 318 N.C. 487, 349 S.E.2d 580 (1986); State v. Strickland, 318 N.C. 653, 351 S.E.2d 281 (1987).

The prosecutor's unsworn statements as to defendant's criminal record were not competent evidence to support a finding of an aggravating factor that defendant had prior convictions. State v. Frazier, 80 N.C. App. 547, 342 S.E.2d 534 (1986).

A prosecutor's mere unsupported statement was not sufficient proof of defendant's prior convictions under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)o. State v. Mack, 87 N.C. App. 24, 359 S.E.2d 485 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 477, 364 S.E.2d 663 (1988).

Trial court erred in finding existence of prior conviction based solely on prosecutor's unsworn statement where although prosecutor read from official records he neither offered those records into evidence nor sought defendant's stipulation as to what those records would show. State v. Williams, 92 N.C. App. 752, 376 S.E.2d 21, cert. denied, 324 N.C. 251, 377 S.E.2d 762 (1989).

Where a trial judge based his finding of an aggravating factor of prior convictions solely on a prosecutor's unsworn statements, these statements, standing alone, were insufficient to prove defendant's prior convictions under former section. The defendant's failure to object at trial did not bar her from appealing this issue. State v. Gordon, 104 N.C. App. 455, 410 S.E.2d 4, cert. denied, 330 N.C. 444, 412 S.E.2d 78 (1991).

Proof of a prior conviction by a certified copy was expressly permitted by statute and constituted prima facie evidence of the facts set out therein. State v. Ross, 329 N.C. 108, 405 S.E.2d 158 (1991).

Certified copies of court records were a proper method for proving prior convictions. State v. Johnson, 340 N.C. 32, 455 S.E.2d 644 (1995).

Defendant had burden of proving that records of prior convictions were not in fact his. State v. Benfield, 76 N.C. App. 453, 333 S.E.2d 753 (1985).

Evidence of a kidnapping defendant's prior crimes was properly used to establish the status of a habitual felon as well as to establish the aggravating factor of prior felony convictions to increase the presumptive sentence of the underlying felony. State v. Roper, 328 N.C. 337, 402 S.E.2d 600, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 902, 112 S. Ct. 280, 116 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1991).

Prior Conviction Proven. — The contents of the certified court record of defendant's Virginia conviction for sodomy, along with defendant's admission on cross-examination that "the Judge imposed a judgment ... as a result of that guilty plea," constituted sufficient evidence to refute defendant's argument that no judgment was entered on the Virginia felony conviction. State v. Ross, 329 N.C. 108, 405 S.E.2d 158 (1991).

3. Indigency at Time of Conviction.

Indigent Defendant Must Have Been Represented by Counsel or Waived Same. — A prior conviction which occurred while the defendant was indigent could not be used unless defendant was represented by counsel or waived counsel in the earlier proceeding. State v. Farmer, 60 N.C. App. 779, 299 S.E.2d 842 (1983).

Burden on Defendant to Show Indigency and Lack of Counsel. — The initial burden of raising the issue of indigency and lack of assistance of counsel on a prior conviction was on the defendant. If the defendant elected to challenge the admissibility of evidence of his prior convictions, he had to do so by a method which informed the court of the specific reason for his objection; i.e. that he was indigent and unrepresented by counsel at the time of the prior conviction or convictions. A mere objection to the evidence alone would not be sufficient. State v. Thompson, 309 N.C. 421, 307 S.E.2d 156 (1983).

Use of Prior Conviction Not Error Where Defendant Failed to Contest Validity. — It is not error for the trial court to consider a prior conviction as an aggravating circumstance absent evidence that defendant was not indigent or was represented by counsel at the prior conviction, where defendant does not make an issue of the validity of the prior conviction in the trial court. State v. Massey, 309 N.C. 625, 308 S.E.2d 332 (1983).

Q. Joinable Offenses.

Using Evidence Establishing Element of Offense to Prove Aggravating Factor. — The Fair Sentencing Act prohibited using evidence that established an element of the offense to prove an aggravating factor. United States v. Price, 812 F.2d 174 (4th Cir. 1987).

Evidence of Element of Joined Offense. — The prohibition in former § 15A-1340.4, against using the same evidence to prove both an element of the offense and a factor in aggravation did not also extend to using evidence necessary to prove an element of a joined or joinable offense for which defendant was convicted. State v. Wright, 319 N.C. 209, 353 S.E.2d 214 (1987).

Court could not use the commission of a joinable offense as an aggravating factor. However, the court could use evidence necessary to prove an element of a joinable offense as an aggravating factor. State v. Flowers, 100 N.C. App. 58, 394 S.E.2d 296 (1990).

Joinable Offense Not Charged Could Not Be Used. — The use of evidence of an element of a joinable offense with which defendant had not been charged to show additional criminal acts committed during the crime for which defendant was being sentenced as factors in aggravation was even less valid than the use of evidence of the commission of a joinable offense for which a defendant had been convicted. State v. Puckett, 66 N.C. App. 600, 312 S.E.2d 207 (1984).

It was error to use as an aggravating factor evidence of an element of a joinable offense with which defendant had not been charged. In order for the trial court to impose a prison sentence on defendant for committing such an act, the State had to charge the defendant and prove beyond a reasonable doubt that he committed the offense. State v. McGuire, 78 N.C. App. 285, 337 S.E.2d 620 (1985).

Dismissed Joinable Offense Could Be Aggravating Factor. — A trial court could properly consider evidence in support of an aggravating factor even though the same evidence might also prove an element of an offense joinable with the offense for which defendant was being sentenced, if the joinable offense had been dismissed. State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, writ denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 66, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

When Evidence of Murder Could be Aggravating Factor for Armed Robbery. — It was clear that evidence presented to support a conviction of first-degree murder by premeditation and deliberation could also support an aggravating factor in an armed robbery conviction. However, a premeditated and deliberate murder that occurred during an armed robbery could not be used as an aggravating factor in the armed robbery sentencing here if the murder was a joined offense. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

Offense Held Joinable. — Finding of the trial court that after committing the offense of second-degree rape and thereafter stating to the victim that she was going to tell on him and have him hung, defendant choked the victim until she was unconscious, involved an offense separate but joinable with the rape charge, which could not be used as an aggravating factor. State v. Cofield, 76 N.C. App. 699, 336 S.E.2d 439 (1985), rev'd on other grounds, 320 N.C. 297, 357 S.E.2d 622 (1987).

Robbery and malicious throwing of acid were joinable offenses under § 15A-926(a), which permits joinder of offenses based on the same act or transaction or on a series of acts or transactions connected together, and use of the fact that the acid was thrown after the robbery to aggravate sentence for the malicious throwing of acid was prohibited by former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)o. State v. Knox, 78 N.C. App. 493, 337 S.E.2d 154 (1985).

The trial court did not err by aggravating defendant's sentence on the first-degree burglary conviction with the fact that defendant was armed with a deadly weapon at the time he committed the initial crime of burglary. State v. Oliver, 334 N.C. 513, 434 S.E.2d 202 (1993).

Trial court's decision to aggravate defendant's sentence on first-degree burglary conviction on the basis of an element of a joined felonious assault offense was completely consistent with former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1). State v. Taylor, 322 N.C. 280, 367 S.E.2d 664 (1988).

A Joinable Offense for Which Defendant Not Convicted May Be Used. — Former section 15A-1340.4(a)(1)o, as interpreted in State v. Lattimore, 310 N.C. 295, 311 S.E.2d 876 (1984), only prohibited a sentencing judge from aggravating a sentence on the basis that defendant committed an act when that act constituted a joinable offense for which he had also been convicted. Lattimore did not prohibit a trial court from using as an aggravating circumstance evidence that defendant committed an act for which he was not convicted. State v. Jewell, 104 N.C. App. 350, 409 S.E.2d 757 (1991). Declining to follow State v. McGuire, 78 N.C. App. 285, 337 S.E.2d 620 (1985), and further distinguishing State v. Puckett, 66 N.C. App. 600, 312 S.E.2d 207 (1984).

When a defendant pleads guilty to being an accessory after the fact of a crime, should the trial court find by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant aided and abetted in the commission of that crime, it may use this factor in aggravation of defendant's sentence on the accessory charge. State v. Jewell, 104 N.C. App. 350, 409 S.E.2d 757 (1991), aff'd, 331 N.C. 379, 416 S.E.2d 3 (1992).

III. MITIGATING FACTORS.

A. In General.

The defendant has the burden of proving mitigating factors by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Ingram, 65 N.C. App. 585, 309 S.E.2d 576 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 479, 312 S.E.2d 888 (1984); State v. Bare, 77 N.C. App. 516, 335 S.E.2d 748 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 392, 338 S.E.2d 881 (1986); State v. Faison, 90 N.C. App. 237, 368 S.E.2d 28 (1988); State v. Easter, 101 N.C. App. 36, 398 S.E.2d 619 (1990).

Defendant has the burden of persuading by a preponderance of the evidence that mitigating factors exist. That evidence must be uncontradicted, substantial and manifestly credible. State v. Vanstory, 84 N.C. App. 535, 353 S.E.2d 236, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 176, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

Defendant's Position Analogous to One Seeking Directed Verdict. — When defendant argues that his evidence is such as to compel the finding of a mitigating factor, his position is analogous to that of a party with the burden of persuasion seeking a directed verdict. He is asking the court to conclude that the evidence so clearly establishes the fact in issue that no reasonable inferences to the contrary can be drawn, and that the credibility of the evidence is manifest as a matter of law. State v. Jones, 309 N.C. 214, 306 S.E.2d 451 (1983), aff'd, 314 N.C. 644, 336 S.E.2d 385 (1985); State v. Taylor, 309 N.C. 570, 308 S.E.2d 302 (1983); State v. Ingram, 65 N.C. App. 585, 309 S.E.2d 576 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 479, 312 S.E.2d 888 (1984); State v. Freeman, 313 N.C. 539, 330 S.E.2d 465 (1985).

The sentencing judge is required to find in mitigation any factor proved by uncontradicted, manifestly credible evidence. State v. Seagroves, 78 N.C. App. 49, 336 S.E.2d 684 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 384, 342 S.E.2d 905 (1986).

The judge has a duty to find a statutory mitigating factor when the evidence in support of the factor is uncontradicted, substantial, and manifestly credible. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 689, 365 S.E.2d 626 (1988); State v. Heatwole, 333 N.C. 156, 423 S.E.2d 735 (1992).

Failure to Find Mitigating Factor Supported by Evidence Is Error. — Where the State's own unequivocal evidence clearly establishes the existence of a factor in mitigation which the legislature has included among those which must be considered, it is error for the trial judge to fail to find that factor. State v.

Graham, 61 N.C. App. 271, 300 S.E.2d 716, modified on other grounds and aff'd, 309 N.C. 587, 308 S.E.2d 311 (1983).

Failure to find a mitigating factor when the evidence in support of such is substantial constitutes reversible error. However, in order for the appellate court to make the determination of whether evidence of this nature was introduced at trial and at the sentencing hearing, the record on appeal must reveal what the evidence is in a direct and concise manner. State v. Milam, 65 N.C. App. 788, 310 S.E.2d 141 (1984).

Where the evidence in support of a mitigating factor is uncontradicted and manifestly credible, it is error for the trial court to fail to find such mitigating factor. State v. Bullard, 79 N.C. App. 440, 339 S.E.2d 664 (1986).

A trial judge's failure to find a statutory mitigating factor is error only where evidence supporting the factor is uncontradicted, substantial, and manifestly credible. State v. Maness, 321 N.C. 454, 364 S.E.2d 349 (1988).

But Evidence Must Show Conclusively That This Factor Exists. — To show that the trial court erred in failing to find a mitigating factor, the evidence must show conclusively that this mitigating factor exists, i.e., that no other reasonable inferences can be drawn from the evidence. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988); State v. Heatwole, 333 N.C. 156, 423 S.E.2d 735 (1992).

Only if the evidence offered at the sentencing hearing so clearly establishes the fact in issue that no reasonable inferences to the contrary can be drawn is the court compelled to find that a mitigating factor exists. State v. Leroux, 326 N.C. 368, 390 S.E.2d 314, cert. denied, 498 U.S. 871, 111 S. Ct. 192, 112 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1990).

And Court May Determine What Weight a Mitigatory Factor Will Be Given. — The trial court was required to find a statutory mitigating factor under the Fair Sentencing Act only if the evidence supporting that factor was uncontradicted and there was no reason to doubt its credibility; even then, the trial court was free to determine what weight it would give such a mitigating factor in sentencing under former § 15A-1340.4(a). State v. Hood, 332 N.C. 611, 422 S.E.2d 679 (1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 1055, 113 S. Ct. 1955, 123 L. Ed. 2d 659 (1993), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 1055, 113 S. Ct. 1955, 123 L. Ed. 2d 659 (1993).

The sentencing court is accorded wide latitude in determining the existence of mitigating factors, for it observes the demeanor of the witnesses and hears the testimony. State v. Heatwole, 333 N.C. 156, 423 S.E.2d 735 (1992).

Court's Failure Will Not Be Overturned Absent Substantial Evidence. — The failure of the court to find a factor in mitigation urged by defendant will not be overturned on appeal unless the evidence in support of the factor is uncontradicted, substantial, and there is no reason to doubt its credibility. State v. Lane, 77 N.C. App. 741, 336 S.E.2d 410 (1985).

Unsupported Mitigating Factors May Be Rejected. — A trial court must find a factor in mitigation if it is supported by uncontroverted, substantial and inherently credible evidence; on the other hand, should the defendant fail to produce such evidence, the trial judge may reject the proposed factors. State v. Bare, 77 N.C. App. 516, 335 S.E.2d 748 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 392, 338 S.E.2d 881 (1986).

When Judge Must Find Factor Not Submitted by Defendant. — The duty of the trial judge to find a mitigating factor that had not been submitted by defendant arose only when the evidence offered at the sentencing hearing supported the existence of a mitigating factor specifically listed in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2) and when the defendant met the burden of proof established in State v. Jones, 309 N.C. 214, 306 S.E.2d 451 (1983). The trial judge was not required to consider whether the evidence supported the existence of nonstatutory mitigating factors in the absence of a specific request by defense counsel. State v. Gardner, 312 N.C. 70, 320 S.E.2d 688 (1984).

The trial judge only had a duty to find a statutory mitigating factor that was not submitted by defendant when the evidence offered at the sentencing hearing in support of the factor in mitigation was both uncontradicted and manifestly credible. State v. Torres, 77 N.C. App. 345, 335 S.E.2d 34 (1985).

The duty of the trial judge to find a statutory mitigating factor that has not been submitted by defendant arises only when defendant meets the burden of proof established in State v. Jones, 309 N.C. 214, 306 S.E.2d 451 (1983), i.e., the evidence in support of the statutory factor must be substantial, uncontradicted and manifestly credible. State v. Rathbone, 78 N.C. App. 58, 336 S.E.2d 702 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 200, 341 S.E.2d 582 (1986).

The trial court is required to find a statutory mitigating factor if proved by a preponderance of the evidence, even in the absence of a specific request. State v. Thompson, 314 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

Consideration of Nonstatutory Factors Is Permitted But Not Required. — Regarding nonstatutory factors that are proven by a preponderance of the evidence and are reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing, such as conduct while awaiting sentencing, the trial judge may consider them, but such consideration is not required. State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985).

And Is Entrusted to Judge's Discretion. — Although failure to find a statutory mitigating factor supported by uncontradicted, substantial and manifestly credible evidence was reversible error, a trial judge's consideration of a nonstatutory factor which was (1) requested by the defendant, (2) proven by uncontradicted, substantial and manifestly credible evidence, and (3) mitigating in effect, was a matter entrusted to the sound discretion of the sentencing judge under former § 15A-1340.4(a). State v. Spears, 314 N.C. 319, 333 S.E.2d 242 (1985); State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985); State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986); State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985).

The same evidence may not be used to find more than one mitigating factor; each mitigating factor can be found only if there is separate evidence to support it. State v. Crandall, 83 N.C. App. 37, 348 S.E.2d 826 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 106, 353 S.E.2d 115 (1987).

Separate Findings Must Be Made for Each Offense. — Court did not err in failing to find as a mitigating factor in sentencing defendant for felonious larceny and armed robbery that defendant was suffering from a physical condition which reduced his culpability, even though the court found this factor in mitigation of his second-degree murder offense, as when one sentencing hearing addresses multiple offenses, the trial judge must treat each offense separately and make separate findings as to the aggravating and mitigating factors for each. State v. Coleman, 80 N.C. App. 271, 341 S.E.2d 750, cert. denied, 318 N.C. 285, 347 S.E.2d 466 (1986).

Factors Found by Jury in Capital Case Need Not Be Found by Judge in Non-Capital Case. — Fact that the trial court did not find as mitigating factors in noncapital felony cases all of the mitigating factors specifically found by the jury in the sentencing phase of capital case did not constitute error. State v. Avery, 315 N.C. 1, 337 S.E.2d 786 (1985).

The trial judge, in the sentencing phase of crimes coming within this section, was not bound by the jury's finding in the sentencing phase of a capital charge that the defendant had a reputation for good character in the community in which he lived and led a law abiding life for a substantial period of time prior to his present convictions, especially in the light of the fact that these mitigating factors were not supported by uncontradicted evidence. State v. Freeman, 313 N.C. 539, 330 S.E.2d 465 (1985).

Circumstances set forth in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)d and (a)(2)e were different. The former dealt with a mental disease or illness, such as chronic brain syndrome. The latter concerned a defendant's "immaturity" or "limited mental capacity." State v. Taylor, 309 N.C. 570, 308 S.E.2d 302 (1983).

Effect of Alibi on Mitigating Factors. — The sentencing judge cannot, as a matter of law, refuse to consider mitigating factors after a jury has determined that defendant committed the crime, even though defendant has presented an alibi defense at the guilt determination stage of the trial. State v. Brooks, 68 N.C. App. 298, 314 S.E.2d 565 (1984).

Counsel's Statements Not Evidence of Nonstatutory Mitigating Factors. — Absent a stipulation by the prosecution, statements made by defense counsel during argument at the sentencing hearing do not constitute evidence which would support a finding of nonstatutory mitigating factors. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Reasonable Belief Conduct Was Legal. — Trial court's failure to find mitigating factor was not reversible error where only evidence to support finding that defendant reasonably believed that his conduct was legal was defendant's own testimony to effect that he thought he could settle matter in manner of a civil action; although there was no evidence directly contradicting testimony, evidence showed that defendant never raised issue of settlement in present of authorities but only discussed it with victim over telephone and when requesting payment, defendant made clear to victim that matter could not be settled after defendant signed arrest warrants; thus indicating that he knew that a criminal prosecution could not be settled. State v. Greenspan, 92 N.C. App. 563, 374 S.E.2d 884 (1989).

B. Duress, Coercion, Threat or Compulsion.

Exertion of External Pressure on Defendant. — The statutory mitigating factor of compulsion, which was listed together with duress, coercion, and threat, was intended to apply to situations in which some type of external pressure was directly exerted upon the defendant in an attempt to force commission of the offense. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 689, 365 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Duress Not Found. — Evidence of statutory factor of duress held not so substantial and manifestly credible as to require the sentencing judge to find this statutory mitigating factor. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Trial court was correct in refusing to find mitigating factors based on duress or provocation; victim never directly threatened defendant, and although there was some evidence that victim was attempting to arrange an assault, victim himself contradicted this, and there was no manifestly credible evidence that defendant was the target. State v. Lovell, 93 N.C. App. 726, 379 S.E.2d 101 (1989).

Verdict of Lesser Included Offense Did Not Obviate Duty to Consider Mitigating Factors. — As to mitigating factors of duress, threat and mental condition, the trial court erred when it relied on the jury's verdict of the lesser included offense of assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury to determine that these statutory mitigating factors had been satisfied. The finding by the jury of a lesser included offense did not relieve a trial court from adequately determining the existence of mitigating factors. State v. Faison, 90 N.C. App. 237, 368 S.E.2d 28 (1988).

C. Passive or Minor Role.

Proof May Support Two Factors. — Proof of either passive participation or performance of a minor role, by the preponderance of the evidence, is sufficient to support the finding of a mitigating factor; thus, proof of both types of conduct may suffice to support the finding of two mitigating factors, so as to reflect the defendant's lesser culpability. State v. Crandall, 83 N.C. App. 37, 348 S.E.2d 826 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 106, 353 S.E.2d 115 (1987), holding, however, that the court was not required to find two separate mitigating factors absent separate evidence supporting each.

Attempt to Dissuade Co-Defendant Not Controlling. — Although the attempt to dissuade a co-defendant and the failure to do so constitutes evidence to be considered in determining whether the defendant was a passive participant in the crime, this is not the controlling factor. State v. Parker, 319 N.C. 444, 355 S.E.2d 489 (1987).

Evidence did not so clearly establish that defendant was a passive participant in murder that no reasonable inferences to the contrary could be drawn, and trial judge therefore did not err in failing to find this mitigating circumstance. State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985).

Where defendant did not object to the actions of codefendants in sexually assaulting 12-year-old, did not attempt to persuade them to stop, and, in fact, attempted to have sex with the victim at one codefendant's encouragement, trial judge's refusal to find that the defendant was a passive participant was not error. State v. Turner, 103 N.C. App. 331, 406 S.E.2d 147 (1991).

D. Mental or Physical Condition.

A "mental condition" is defined as a mental disease or illness. State v. Hall, 85 N.C. App. 447, 355 S.E.2d 250, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 515, 358 S.E.2d 525 (1987).

Psychological Disorders. — The term "mental condition" as used in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)d included not only mental diseases and illnesses, such as schizophrenia, but also psychological disorders, such as abused spouse syndrome, which were not necessarily categorized as diseases or illnesses. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 689, 365 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Evidence of Condition, Without More, Is Not Sufficient. — A mental or physical condition may be capable of reducing a defendant's culpability for an offense. However, evidence that the condition exists, without more, did not mandate consideration as a mitigating factor pursuant to former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)d. State v. Grier, 70 N.C. App. 40, 318 S.E.2d 889 (1984), cert. denied, 318 N.C. 698, 350 S.E.2d 860 (1986).

Since there was no evidence that defendant suffered from a mental disease or illness, former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)d was simply inapplicable to defendant who had an IQ of 79, was functioning at a below average level in terms of intelligence, and was below average in his ability to see causes and consequences of behavior. State v. Hall, 85 N.C. App. 447, 355 S.E.2d 250, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 515, 358 S.E.2d 525 (1987).

While a mental or physical condition, such as alcoholism, may be capable of reducing a defendant's culpability for an offense, evidence that the condition exists, without more, does not mandate consideration as a mitigating factor. Defendant has the burden of proof with respect to any alleged mitigating factors. State v. Salters, 65 N.C. App. 31, 308 S.E.2d 512 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 479, 312 S.E.2d 889 (1984); State v. Bush, 78 N.C. App. 686, 338 S.E.2d 590 (1986).

Where there was no medical evidence regarding the state of defendant's mental and physical health other than testimony as to defendant's condition during the trial, and assuming arguendo there was sufficient evidence to show that defendant was suffering from a particular physical or mental condition, there was no evidence that the condition was such as to reduce his culpability in assaulting his brother, the judge did not abuse his discretion in failing to find a mitigating factor. State v. Kinney, 92 N.C. App. 671, 375 S.E.2d 692 (1989).

Condition Must Precede Criminal Act. — Defendant's contention that as a result of having been shot he suffered from a mental or physical condition that reduced his culpability was without merit, where he was wounded after he initiated a shootout. Mental and physical conditions recognized as possible mitigating factors have been those which existed prior to a defendant's criminal act. Since his own culpable conduct led to his being shot, he could not properly claim diminished responsibility on that account. State v. Benfield, 76 N.C. App. 453, 333 S.E.2d 753 (1985).

Intoxication was not enumerated as a separate mitigating factor under the provisions of former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2). However, intoxication of a defendant could be appropriately considered in mitigation under the statutory mitigating factor contained in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)d; regarding defendant's mental or physical condition. State v. Barranco, 73 N.C. App. 502, 326 S.E.2d 903, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 118, 332 S.E.2d 484 (1985).

Alcohol intoxication, or drunkenness, exists when there is a material impairment of mental or physical faculties, or both, induced by excessive consumption of alcohol. Thus, intoxication may constitute a mental condition or a physical condition. The mitigating effect, if any, of intoxication upon an offender's culpability will depend upon the circumstances of each case. State v. Barranco, 73 N.C. App. 502, 326 S.E.2d 903, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 118, 332 S.E.2d 484 (1985).

Alcoholism or drug addiction, while not itself a statutorily enumerated mitigating factor, could properly be found to mitigate an offense under the rubric of the statutory factor contained in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)d. State v. Barts, 321 N.C. 170, 362 S.E.2d 235 (1987).

Proffered evidence of diminished capacity due to intoxication did not compel a finding of the statutory mitigating factor that defendant was suffering from a physical condition which was insufficient to constitute a defense, but which significantly reduced his culpability, because it failed to demonstrate that defendant's alcohol consumption reduced his mental or physical capacity, and thus his culpability to commit the offense. State v. Leroux, 326 N.C. 368, 390 S.E.2d 314 (1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 871, 111 S. Ct. 192, 112 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1990).

Physical Condition Held Not Mitigating. — The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in failing to find that defendant's physical condition, evidenced by poor health and physical deterioration due to physical abuse, seizures, and inadequate recovery from childbirth, significantly reduced her culpability for the offense. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 689, 365 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Mental Condition Held to Be Mitigating. — Evidence of internal, psychological forces which led defendant to take the life of her child was properly considered by the judge when he found in mitigation that defendant was suffering from a mental condition, and the judge appropriately labeled defendant's action as one performed under the influence of mental suffering, rather than one performed under compulsion. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 689, 365 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Factor Not Found. — Where evidence tended to show that co-defendants had explained their plan for robbing the victim, that defendant understood this plan and agreed to participate although he realized he could go back to prison, that defendant attempted to disguise his identity during the crime by wearing a mask and using a false name, and that defendant attempted to conceal the crime by disposing of baseball bat and wallet and by burying stolen pistol, trial judge could properly conclude that defendant's alcoholism and prolonged drug abuse did not affect his presence of mind, his ability to appreciate the nature of his own actions, or his understanding that his conduct was wrong. State v. Barts, 321 N.C. 170, 362 S.E.2d 235 (1987).

Where a defendant failed to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that his alcohol and drug consumption constituted a material impairment to his mental or physical faculties, the trial judge did not err in failing to find the statutory mitigating factor that the defendant was suffering from a mental or physical condition which significantly reduced his culpability for the offense. State v. Jewell, 104 N.C. App. 350, 409 S.E.2d 757 (1991), aff'd, 331 N.C. 379, 416 S.E.2d 3 (1992).

Ignorance of the legal implications of an act, nothing else appearing, is not tantamount to a mental condition sufficient to reduce one's culpability. State v. Benbow, 309 N.C. 538, 308 S.E.2d 647 (1983).

E. Immaturity or Limited Mental Capacity.

The mitigating factor in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)e involved two inquiries: one as to immaturity (or mental capacity) and one as to the effect of such immaturity upon culpability. Clearly, age alone was insufficient to support this factor. State v. Moore, 317 N.C. 275, 345 S.E.2d 217 (1986); State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 687, 365 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

The trial court's determination under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)e involved a two part inquiry: (1) Whether the defendant sufferred from a limited mental capacity (or from "immaturity"), and (2) if so, its effect on his culpability for the offense. State v. Hall, 85 N.C. App. 447, 355 S.E.2d 250, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 515, 358 S.E.2d 525 (1987); State v. Lloyd, 89 N.C. App. 630, 366 S.E.2d 912, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 483, 370 S.E.2d 231, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 483, 370 S.E.2d 232 (1988); State v. Barton, 335 N.C. 741, 441 S.E.2d 306 (1994).

To find a defendant's limited mental capacity as a mitigating factor, the statute required that it significantly reduce his culpability for the offense. State v. Colvin, 90 N.C. App. 50, 367 S.E.2d 340, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 608, 370 S.E.2d 249 (1988).

"Limited mental capacity," as used in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)e, was used in the sense of limited intelligence or low I.Q. State v. Taylor, 309 N.C. 570, 308 S.E.2d 302 (1983); State v. Hall, 85 N.C. App. 447, 355 S.E.2d 250 (1987); State v. Arnette, 85 N.C. App. 492, 355 S.E.2d 498, aff'd, 85 N.C. App. 498, 355 S.E.2d 502 (1987).

Defendant Bears Burden of Showing Reduced Culpability. — Evidence of limited mental capacity, by itself, does not require the trial court to find mitigating circumstances. Defendant bears the burden of showing beyond a reasonable doubt that his lack of capacity significantly reduced defendant's culpability for the offense charged. State v. Williams, 100 N.C. App. 567, 397 S.E.2d 364 (1990), cert. dismissed, 328 N.C. 576, 403 S.E.2d 520 (1991).

It is within the trial judge's discretion to assess the conditions and circumstances of the case in determining whether defendant's immaturity or limited mental capacity significantly reduced culpability. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 689, 365 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Lack of Evidence of Inability to Understand Consequences of Behavior. — Where although reports submitted by defendant established his borderline intelligence, there was no evidence that defendant was unable to understand the consequences of his behavior, so as to significantly reduce his culpability for the offense, there was no error in the trial court's failure to find defendant's limited mental capacity as a mitigating factor. State v. Colvin, 90 N.C. App. 50, 367 S.E.2d 340, cert. denied, 322 N.C. 608, 370 S.E.2d 249 (1988).

Intoxication did not support a finding of the mitigating factor found in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)e. State v. Barranco, 73 N.C. App. 502, 326 S.E.2d 903, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 118, 332 S.E.2d 484 (1985).

Age Alone Insufficient to Show Immaturity. — Defendant being 16, at the time of second-degree rape of 11-year-old victim, by itself, failed to show that his immaturity significantly reduced his culpability. State v. Vanstory, 84 N.C. App. 535, 353 S.E.2d 236, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 176, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

Factor Not Found Despite Some Evidence. — While report which stated that defendant's IQ was 79, that he was functioning at a below average level in terms of intelligence, and that he was below average in his ability to see causes and consequences of behaviors was some evidence of a limited mental capacity, which would reduce defendant's culpability for the offense, it did not require the trial court to find it as a mitigating factor. State v. Hall, 85 N.C. App. 447, 355 S.E.2d 250, cert. denied, 320 N.C. 515, 358 S.E.2d 525 (1987).

Evidence Held Insufficient. — Where the only evidence presented as to defendant's intelligence or I.Q. was that defendant had earned an associate degree in mechanical engineering from the University of Kentucky, this evidence was insufficient to support defendant's contention of limited mental capacity. State v. Arnette, 85 N.C. App. 492, 355 S.E.2d 498, aff'd, 85 N.C. App. 498, 355 S.E.2d 502 (1987).

A trial court was not required to find mitigating circumstances, under this section, when the evidence only showed that defendant had a limited mental capacity, since the evidence must also show that this limited capacity significantly reduced defendant's culpability. State v. Smith, 321 N.C. 290, 362 S.E.2d 159 (1987).

Although defendant on trial for burglary, rape and common-law robbery offered evidence that he was intoxicated on the night in question and that he had only fourth or fifth grade reading and writing skills, he failed to show conclusively that either disability somehow reduced his culpability for the offenses charged; thus, the trial court was not required to find voluntary intoxication or limited mental capacity as a factor in mitigation. State v. Redfern, 98 N.C. App. 129, 389 S.E.2d 846 (1990).

F. Participation or Consent of Victim.

Burden of Proof Under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)g. — Although under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)g a defendant was entitled to a factor in mitigation when the victim was more than 16 years of age and defendant's conduct was "consented to," the burden of establishing both of the conditions stated was on the defendant. State v. Elliott, 77 N.C. App. 647, 335 S.E.2d 774 (1985).

Paid police informant who volunteered to purchase cocaine in furtherance of a police investigation was not a "victim" within the meaning of former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)g. State v. David, 80 N.C. App. 327, 342 S.E.2d 50, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 709, 347 S.E.2d 445 (1986).

Factor Not Found. — Where the evidence did not so clearly establish the fact in issue that no reasonable inference to the contrary could be drawn, the trial court did not err in failing to find as a mitigating factor that the victims were more that 16 years old and willing participants in defendant's conduct. State v. Mixion, 118 N.C. App. 559, 455 S.E.2d 904 (1995).

G. Aid in Apprehension or Prosecution of Another.

Willingness to Testify Against Codefendant. — Evidence that a defendant testified truthfully against a codefendant was one statutory factor which a trial judge had to consider in passing sentence under this former Article 81A. However, evidence that a defendant was merely willing to testify against a codefendant did not meet the statutory requirement. Nevertheless, a trial judge could properly consider nonstatutory mitigating factors in setting a sentence, so long as those factors were logically related to the purposes of sentencing. The crucial difference was that a trial judge had to consider the presence or absence of the statutory mitigating and aggravating factors; whereas a trial judge could, but was not required to consider nonstatutory mitigating factors. State v. Hinnant, 65 N.C. App. 130, 308 S.E.2d 732 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 310, 312 S.E.2d 653 (1984).

Cooperative Conduct. — If he found that defendant's conduct was cooperative, though not sufficient to fit within former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)h, the judge could consider it as a factor in mitigation of his sentence. State v. Salters, 65 N.C. App. 31, 308 S.E.2d 512 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 479, 312 S.E.2d 889 (1984).

Aid to Police after Repeated Refusals to Admit Wrongdoing. — Where police obtained a search warrant which led to the discovery of victim's body on the basis of defendant's statement, but they extracted this statement from defendant only after substantial time and effort and repeated refusals on the part of defendant to admit wrongdoing in connection with the offense, the sentencing judge could have found that whatever consideration defendant earned by helping police locate the body was offset by his earlier persistent denials of wrongdoing; thus, judge's failure to find defendant's statement to be an early acknowledgement of wrongdoing was not an abuse of discretion. State v. Brown, 314 N.C. 588, 336 S.E.2d 388 (1985).

Defendant Held Entitled to Factor. — Where there was uncontradicted, manifestly credible testimony to the effect that defendant aided in the apprehension of another felon or testified truthfully for the State in another felony prosecution in a neighboring prosecutorial district, defendant was entitled to have that fact in mitigation found and considered by the court before sentence was imposed. State v. Cartwright, 81 N.C. App. 144, 343 S.E.2d 557 (1986).

Error in Not Finding Factor. — The trial court erred by not finding as a mitigating factor that defendant aided in the apprehension of another felon where there was uncontradicted testimony by an SBI agent that defendant's statements led to the apprehension of other felons. State v. Flowers, 84 N.C. App. 696, 354 S.E.2d 240, cert. denied, 319 N.C. 675, 356 S.E.2d 782 (1987).

H. Strong Provocation or Extenuating Relationship.

"Strong provocation," as used in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)i, was not synonymous with "legal provocation" necessary to establish a defense and reduce a second-degree murder to manslaughter. Ample support for this conclusion was found in that portion of former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)i which stated that the existence of an extenuating relationship between the defendant and the victim was a mitigating factor. State v. Wood, 61 N.C. App. 446, 300 S.E.2d 903, cert. denied, 308 N.C. 547, 302 S.E.2d 884 (1983).

Threat or Challenge Must Be Shown. — Provocation within the meaning of former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)i required a showing of a threat or challenge by the victim to the defendant. State v. Braswell, 78 N.C. App. 498, 337 S.E.2d 637 (1985); State v. Benfield, 76 N.C. App. 453, 333 S.E.2d 753 (1985); State v. Faison, 90 N.C. App. 237, 368 S.E.2d 28 (1988).

Circumstances That Shift Part of Fault Intended. — In enacting former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)i, the legislature apparently had in mind circumstances that morally shifted part of the fault for a crime from the criminal to the victim. State v. Martin, 68 N.C. App. 272, 314 S.E.2d 805 (1984).

The legislature provided the statutory mitigating factor of strong provocation to reduce a defendant's culpability when circumstances exist that morally shift part of the fault for a crime from the criminal to the victim. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

"Strong provocation" as a mitigating factor is a conclusion which a court may or may not reach from uncontradicted evidence. State v. Cameron, 71 N.C. App. 776, 323 S.E.2d 396 (1984), cert. denied, 313 N.C. 510, 329 S.E.2d 395, aff'd, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985).

When Finding of Strong Provocation Is Compelled. — When evidence is offered to support a claim of a mitigating factor of strong provocation, the trial judge first must determine what facts are established by the preponderance of the evidence, and then determine whether those facts support a conclusion of strong provocation. Only if the evidence offered at the sentencing hearing so clearly establishes the fact in issue that no reasonable inferences to the contrary can be drawn is the court compelled to find that the mitigating factor exists. State v. Clark, 314 N.C. 638, 336 S.E.2d 83 (1985); State v. Faison, 90 N.C. App. 237, 368 S.E.2d 28 (1988).

Legislature did not intend to provide shorter prison terms for defendants motivated by jealousy or rage. State v. Puckett, 66 N.C. App. 600, 312 S.E.2d 207 (1984).

Conflict with Aggravating Factor Not Established. — Mitigating factor that relationship between defendant and her husband, victim of conspiracy to commit murder was an extenuating circumstance did not conflict with aggravating factor that defendant took advantage of position of trust or confidence vis-à-vis her husband, as the mitigating factor was based on evidence that victim told defendant that he was a homosexual and had had an affair with the principal in the conspiracy. State v. Arnold, 329 N.C. 128, 404 S.E.2d 822 (1991).

Relationship Between Husband and Wife. — A relationship between husband and wife, including marital difficulties in the past, is not sufficient, standing alone, to support a finding of the mitigating factor that the relationship between defendant and victim was extenuating. State v. Hudson, 331 N.C. 122, 415 S.E.2d 732 (1992), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1055, 113 S. Ct. 983, 122 L. Ed. 2d 136, rehearing denied, 507 U.S. 967, 113 S. Ct. 1404, 122 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1993).

Strong Provocation Not Shown. — Under evidence that victim had stabbed defendant two days previously, had threatened his life, and had refused to talk to him about the stabbing incident eight hours before the time of the actual shooting, the trial court did not err in failing to find the statutory mitigating factor of strong provocation. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

Where evidence showed that defendant approached the victim at work and a discussion ensued during which no weapons were displayed, that after the discussion, defendant left the building, went to his car, obtained a rifle and returned to the building, and that upon seeing the victim, defendant fired a total of eight shots and eventually shot the victim numerous times, the evidence did not compel the conclusion that strong provocation had been proved by the preponderance of the evidence. State v. Faison, 90 N.C. App. 237, 368 S.E.2d 28 (1988).

Where defendant confronted victim the day after defendant received information that victim had molested defendant's daughter, the lapse of time between the provocation and defendant's actions tended to contradict defendant's contention that he acted under strong provocation. State v. Foster, 101 N.C. App. 153, 398 S.E.2d 664 (1990).

Given the lapse of time between the previous encounter between defendant and victim and the time of the shooting and given the absence of any weapon on victim's person at the time of the shooting, uncontradicted evidence of strong provocation did not exist. State v. Wills, 110 N.C. App. 206, 429 S.E.2d 376, cert. denied, 334 N.C. 438, 433 S.E.2d 184 (1993).

Extenuating Relationship Not Shown. — In a prosecution for murder, although the evidence that defendant and victim had been arguing over an extended period of time was not contradicted, this evidence did not compel a finding that their relationship was "otherwise extenuating," because such evidence did not necessarily lessen the seriousness of the crime committed. State v. Bullard, 79 N.C. App. 440, 339 S.E.2d 664 (1986).

Trial court was not required to find that an extenuating relationship between defendant and victim existed such that defendant's conviction for murder of victim was mitigated. Although woman told defendant the victim had been "torturing" and otherwise mistreating her, since there was evidence of a scheme between woman and defendant to burn the trailer, the trial court did find defendant's relationship with woman mitigated his alleged arson of her trailer; however, any relationship between defendant and the woman did not necessarily compel the trial court to find a similar extenuating relationship existed between defendant and the murder victim. State v. Ward, 93 N.C. App. 682, 379 S.E.2d 251, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 276, 384 S.E.2d 528 (1989).

Despite evidence that murder defendant's relationship with his victim (also his wife) was mutually stormy and difficult, the court could not conclusively determine that the mitigating factor of extenuating relationship existed. State v. Mixion, 110 N.C. App. 138, 429 S.E.2d 363, cert. denied, 334 N.C. 437, 433 S.E.2d 183 (1993).

I. Lack of Foreseeability or Exercise of Caution.

Defendant's Attempts to Restrain Himself Not Contemplated. — That defendant could not reasonably foresee that his conduct would cause or threaten serious bodily harm or fear, or that defendant exercised caution to avoid such consequences, is a mitigating factor that is present when a defendant takes action to avoid harmful results of his criminal action, such as ensuring that accomplices are not armed with weapons. It does not refer to attempts by a criminal defendant to restrain himself from committing the criminal act itself. State v. Puckett, 66 N.C. App. 600, 312 S.E.2d 207 (1984).

Purpose of Factor. — The statutory factor in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)j was not designed to benefit an offender who merely chose to commit lesser crimes when greater ones are within his grasp. State v. Arnette, 85 N.C. App. 492, 355 S.E.2d 498, aff'd, 85 N.C. App. 498, 355 S.E.2d 502 (1987).

When Factor Available. — The mitigating factor in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)j was available only when a defendant exercised caution to prevent or could not reasonably foresee harm that actually occurred. State v. Arnette, 85 N.C. App. 492, 355 S.E.2d 498, aff'd, 85 N.C. App. 498, 355 S.E.2d 502 (1987).

The simple fact that defendant could have broken into occupied cars instead of unoccupied cars was insufficient to invoke the mitigating factor in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)j. State v. Arnette, 85 N.C. App. 492, 355 S.E.2d 498, aff'd, 85 N.C. App. 498, 355 S.E.2d 502 (1987).

J. Voluntary Acknowledgment of Wrongdoing.

Two Opportunities for Mitigation. — Former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)l made it clear that a criminal defendant had two opportunities to mitigate the sentence that he might be given on a guilty plea or verdict. State v. Graham, 61 N.C. App. 271, 300 S.E.2d 716, modified on other grounds and aff'd, 309 N.C. 587, 308 S.E.2d 311 (1983).

Purpose of Factor. — One purpose of the mitigating factor of voluntarily acknowledging wrongdoing prior to arrest or at an early stage is to allow a sentencing judge to give some credit to a defendant who by early confession spares law enforcement officers expense and trouble which might otherwise be required to resolve the crime. Another purpose is to allow a sentencing judge to recognize that the earlier one admits responsibility, the better one's chance of rehabilitation. State v. Brown, 314 N.C. 588, 336 S.E.2d 388 (1985).

Time of Confession. — In order to be absolutely entitled to a finding of a mitigating factor regarding defendant's voluntary acknowledgment of wrongdoing, defendant must make his confession prior to the issuance of a warrant or information, prior to the return of a true bill of indictment or presentment, or prior to arrest, whichever comes first; and since defendant made his statement after his arrest, he was not absolutely entitled to a finding of this mitigating factor, and it was for the trial judge to determine, in his discretion, whether the statement was made at a sufficiently early stage of the criminal process as to qualify as a mitigating factor. State v. Piche, 102 N.C. App. 630, 403 S.E.2d 559 (1991).

Defendant Must Admit Culpability, Responsibility or Remorse. — To prove the mitigating factor of acknowledging wrongdoing at an early stage, defendant must have admitted culpability, responsibility or remorse, as well as guilt. State v. Rathbone, 78 N.C. App. 58, 336 S.E.2d 702 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 200, 341 S.E.2d 582 (1986).

Meaning of "Criminal Process." — The legislature contemplated that "the criminal process," as used in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)l, involved formal legal proceedings and not merely investigation of crimes by law enforcement officers. State v. Graham, 309 N.C. 587, 308 S.E.2d 311 (1983).

When "Criminal Process" Begins. — The "criminal process" begins upon either the issuance of a warrant or information, or upon the return of a true bill of indictment or presentment, or upon arrest, whichever comes first. State v. Graham, 309 N.C. 587, 308 S.E.2d 311 (1983); State v. Hayes, 314 N.C. 760, 334 S.E.2d 741 (1985); State v. Thompson, 314 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

Time of Making Confession. — If defendant's confession was made prior to the issuance of a warrant or information, or upon the return of a true bill of indictment or presentment, or prior to arrest, whichever came first, he was entitled to a finding of the mitigating circumstance set forth in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)l. State v. Graham, 309 N.C. 587, 308 S.E.2d 311 (1983); State v. Hayes, 314 N.C. 760, 334 S.E.2d 741 (1985); State v. Barts, 321 N.C. 170, 362 S.E.2d 235 (1987).

A defendant is entitled to a finding of this statutory mitigating factor if his confession was made prior to the issuance of a warrant or information, prior to the return of a true bill of indictment or presentment, or prior to arrest, whichever comes first. Otherwise, it is for the trial judge to determine, in his discretion, whether a statement was made at a sufficiently early stage of the criminal process as to qualify as a mitigating circumstance. State v. Thompson, 314 N.C. 618, 336 S.E.2d 78 (1985), aff'd, 318 N.C. 395, 348 S.E.2d 798 (1986).

Confession after arrest is not automatically disqualified as a voluntary acknowledgment of wrongdoing at an early stage of the criminal process. Rather, it is for the trial judge to decide, in his discretion, whether the statement was made at a sufficiently early stage of the criminal process to qualify as a mitigating factor. State v. Brown, 314 N.C. 588, 336 S.E.2d 388 (1985).

Burden of Proving Confession Sufficiently Early. — Where the evidence established that defendant, after being stopped by police, confessed to committing other crimes, giving police a fictitious name, although later he gave police his real name, but no evidence was presented establishing when in the criminal process the confession was made, defendant failed to meet his burden of proof and was not entitled to the finding of the factor in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)l by right. Instead, the decision was subject to the sentencing judge's discretion. State v. Arnette, 85 N.C. App. 492, 355 S.E.2d 498, aff'd, 85 N.C. App. 498, 355 S.E.2d 502 (1987).

When defendant in a murder conviction moves to suppress a confession, he repudiates it and is not entitled to use evidence of the confession to prove this mitigating circumstance. State v. Smith, 321 N.C. 290, 362 S.E.2d 159 (1987).

Acknowledgment Not at Early Stage. — Where warrants for defendant's arrest were issued on November 16, 1984, defendant was arrested 11 days later on November 27, 1984, and he did not admit his guilt until the day after his arrest, defendant was not entitled to a finding that he acknowledged his guilt at an early stage of the criminal process. State v. Long, 316 N.C. 60, 340 S.E.2d 392 (1986).

Requirement Goes to Weight of Factor. — Requirement that restitution must be prompted by repentance for the deed, and not solely by fear of punishment does not go to the existence of the mitigating factor, but to its weight. State v. McDonald, 94 N.C. App. 371, 380 S.E.2d 406 (1989).

Discretion of Judge. — If defendant's confession was made after indictment, arrest, or issuance of the warrant, or if defendant fails to establish by a preponderance of the evidence when the confession was made, it is for the sentencing judge to decide, in his discretion, whether the statement was made at a sufficiently early stage of the criminal process as to qualify as a mitigating factor. State v. Arnette, 85 N.C. App. 492, 355 S.E.2d 498, aff'd, 85 N.C. App. 498, 355 S.E.2d 502 (1987).

Discretion as to Weight Given Acknowledgment of Wrongdoing. — Although a trial judge may be required to find in mitigation that a defendant voluntarily acknowledged wrongdoing in connection with the offense, the weight to be given to that factor remains within his sound discretion. State v. Graham, 309 N.C. 587, 308 S.E.2d 311 (1983).

Consideration of Motive. — An unrepudiated acknowledgment of guilt, admissible against defendant, made before arrest or at an early stage in the criminal process, must be considered during sentencing, even if defendant's motives for the acknowledgment are suspect, overruling State v. Sweigart, 71 N.C. App. 383, 322 S.E.2d 188 (1984), to the extent that it is inconsistent with this holding. State v. Daniel, 319 N.C. 308, 354 S.E.2d 216 (1987).

Motive in Acknowledging Guilt Goes to Weight Given It. — The defendant's motive in acknowledging his guilt at an early stage does not go to the existence of the mitigating factor of acknowledgment of wrongdoing, but goes to the weight the trial judge must give that factor. State v. Graham, 309 N.C. 587, 308 S.E.2d 311 (1983); State v. Daniel, 319 N.C. 308, 354 S.E.2d 216 (1987).

Whether confession reflects remorse is a matter for the fact finder to determine. State v. Graham, 309 N.C. 587, 308 S.E.2d 311 (1983).

Retraction of Inculpatory Statement. — The mitigating factor set out in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)l reflected the assumption that a person who admits guilt and acknowledges a responsibility for his actions shows a possibility of rehabilitation which should be rewarded; however, when a defendant later retracts an inculpatory statement, this assumption of the potential for rehabilitation disappears, and it is as though no inculpatory statement was ever made. Thus, if a defendant repudiates his inculpatory statement, he is not entitled to a finding of this mitigating circumstance. State v. Hayes, 314 N.C. 760, 334 S.E.2d 741 (1985).

Repudiation of Statement. — Where defendant moved to suppress an incriminating statement he made to the police department, he repudiated the statement and was not entitled to use it as a mitigating factor under subdivision (e)(15). State v. Crisp, 126 N.C. App. 30, 483 S.E.2d 462 (1997), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 346 N.C. 284, 487 S.E.2d 559 (1997).

Allegation of Self-Defense. — Admission by defendant after arrest that he killed the victim did not constitute an admission of wrongdoing, where defendant denied culpability by contending that the shooting was justified by self-defense. State v. Clark, 314 N.C. 638, 336 S.E.2d 83 (1985).

The trial court did not err in failing to find as a mitigating factor that, prior to arrest or at an early stage of the criminal process, the defendant voluntarily acknowledged wrongdoing, in connection with the offense, to a law enforcement officer, where, although defendant confessed the details of the shooting to a law enforcement officer, at trial he sought, unsuccessfully, to rely on self-defense, as a defendant who seeks to rely on self-defense is not entitled to this mitigating factor. State v. Jones, 83 N.C. App. 593, 351 S.E.2d 122 (1986), cert. denied, 319 N.C. 461, 356 S.E.2d 9 (1987).

Pleas of guilty should not be considered as mitigating factors during sentencing. State v. Tyler, 66 N.C. App. 285, 311 S.E.2d 354 (1984).

Factor to Be Found Though Not Requested by Defendant. — If substantial, uncontradicted, and credible evidence is presented that defendant's confession was made prior to the issuance of a warrant, or upon the return of an indictment, or prior to arrest, whichever comes first, the sentencing judge must find this factor in mitigation or commit reversible error, even if defendant has not requested this factor to be found. State v. Arnette, 85 N.C. App. 492, 355 S.E.2d 498, aff'd, 85 N.C. App. 498, 355 S.E.2d 502 (1987).

Factor Present If Acknowledgment Admissible. — If an acknowledgment is admissible against defendant, it is voluntary within the meaning of the mitigating circumstance of voluntary acknowledgment of wrongdoing. State v. Daniel, 319 N.C. 308, 354 S.E.2d 216 (1987).

Defendant Held Entitled to Factor. — The trial judge, in sentencing a convicted murderer, erred in failing to find as a mitigating factor the fact that defendant voluntarily acknowledged wrongdoing prior to arrest, where the State's own uncontradicted evidence was that defendant told the police immediately upon their arrival at the scene that he shot his wife and then shot himself. State v. Martin, 68 N.C. App. 272, 314 S.E.2d 805 (1984).

Where all the evidence showed, without contradiction, that defendant made her inculpatory statement before her arrest, which statement was sufficient to clearly establish her guilt of a murder, defendant was entitled to have her acknowledgement of wrongdoing found as a mitigating circumstance. State v.

Daniel, 319 N.C. 308, 354 S.E.2d 216 (1987).

Defendant Not Entitled to Factor. — The court was not required to find as a mitigating factor that defendant voluntarily acknowledged wrongdoing at an early stage of the criminal process, based upon evidence that, following his arrest, he told officers of the location of knife and admitted striking victim, where the evidence failed to affirmatively show that defendant acknowledged wrongdoing, and where, while he acknowledged striking victim, defendant denied that he cut and killed him, attributing the fatal blow to someone else. State v. Bullard, 79 N.C. App. 440, 339 S.E.2d 664 (1986).

Where the defendant did not admit to his participation in the crimes until after he was arrested and confronted with codefendant's statement to police implicating him, the trial judge could reasonably have reached the conclusion that this mitigating factor should not be found. State v. Barts, 321 N.C. 170, 362 S.E.2d 235 (1987).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in not finding the factor described in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)l where defendant only admitted wrongdoing after his arrest. State v. Colvin, 92 N.C. App. 152, 374 S.E.2d 126 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 249, 377 S.E.2d 758 (1989).

When Defendant Moves to Suppress His Confession. — When a defendant moves to suppress a confession, he repudiates it and is not entitled to use evidence of the confession to prove the mitigating circumstances of voluntarily acknowledging wrongdoing. State v. Ruffin, 90 N.C. App. 152, 370 S.E.2d 275 (1988).

Substantial or Full Restitution Not Found. — Trial court did not err when it failed to find as a statutory mitigating factor that the defendant made substantial or full restitution to the victim where the defendant initially abandoned the property, but later led police to its location so the police could return it to the victim and where the property was not returned in the condition in which it was stolen. State v. McDonald, 94 N.C. App. 371, 380 S.E.2d 406 (1989).

K. Good Character or Reputation.

Character encompasses both a person's past behavior and the opinion of members of his community arising from it. State v. Benbow, 309 N.C. 538, 308 S.E.2d 647 (1983); State v. Winnex, 66 N.C. App. 280, 311 S.E.2d 594 (1984).

Good moral character is something more than the absence of bad character. It is the good name which the applicant has acquired, or should have acquired, through association with his fellows. It means that he must have conducted himself as a man of upright character ordinarily would, should or does. Such character expresses itself, not in negatives nor in following the line of least resistance, but quite often in the will to do the unpleasant thing, if it is right, and the resolve not to do the pleasant thing, if it is wrong. State v. Benbow, 309 N.C. 538, 308 S.E.2d 647 (1983); State v. Winnex, 66 N.C. App. 280, 311 S.E.2d 594 (1984); State v. Freeman, 313 N.C. 539, 330 S.E.2d 465 (1985); State v. Maness, 321 N.C. 454, 364 S.E.2d 349 (1988).

Good manners and a law-abiding life do not necessarily constitute a good character. State v. Winnex, 66 N.C. App. 280, 311 S.E.2d 594 (1984).

Evidence of Character and Reputation to Be Liberally Received. — Under former § 15A-1340.4(a)(2)m, a defendant's character and his reputation in the community where he lives were direct issues in the case for purposes of sentencing. Evidence of both, therefore, could be liberally received, not only because they were directly in issue, but also because the court accords more liberality in the admissibility of evidence when it is being considered by a trial judge for purposes of sentencing than when by a jury for some other purpose. State v. Taylor, 309 N.C. 570, 308 S.E.2d 302 (1983).

Evidence of good character or reputation must be at least substantial. State v. Winnex, 66 N.C. App. 280, 311 S.E.2d 594 (1984).

Proof of good character requires inherently credible evidence. Even where favorable character evidence is uncontradicted, the trial judge may determine that the witnesses are unreliable and hold that defendant has failed to meet his burden of proof. State v. Winnex, 66 N.C. App. 280, 311 S.E.2d 594 (1984).

For discussion of permissible indicia of unreliability of character witnesses, see State v. Winnex, 66 N.C. App. 280, 311 S.E.2d 594 (1984).

Methods of Proving Good Character. — When the defendant in his sentencing hearing produces evidence of his good character in order to take advantage of that particular mitigating circumstance, character becomes "a direct issue in the case," and thus is not limited to the traditional methods of proof, but may be proved by specific acts, as well as by reputation and by the opinions of others. State v. Benbow, 309 N.C. 538, 308 S.E.2d 647 (1983).

Good moral character is seldom subject to proof by reference to one or two incidents. State v. Benbow, 309 N.C. 538, 308 S.E.2d 647 (1983).

Testimony of witness that defendant was well behaved around her did not establish the fact of his good character or reputation in his community so clearly as to compel a finding of this mitigating circumstance. State v. Brown, 314 N.C. 588, 336 S.E.2d 388 (1985).

No Recent Conviction. — The trial judge justifiably concluded that four years without a conviction did not amount to leading a law-abiding life for a substantial period of time. State v. Freeman, 313 N.C. 539, 330 S.E.2d 465 (1985).

Defendant Not Entitled to Factor. — Evidence of defendant's good reputation was not "substantial, uncontradicted and manifestly credible," so as to compel the trial court to find it as a mitigating factor. State v. Clark, 314 N.C. 638, 336 S.E.2d 83 (1985).

Evidence held not sufficient to mandate a finding that defendant was of good character. State v. Kuplen, 316 N.C. 387, 343 S.E.2d 793 (1986).

Testimony of witness that she had a good opinion of defendant's character because she had never seen him do anything did not constitute evidence of defendant's good character or good reputation. State v. Maness, 321 N.C. 454, 364 S.E.2d 349 (1988).

Trial court's failure to find mitigating factor was not reversible error where defendant's character witness did not testify as to defendant's reputation in community and although testimony was uncontradicted evidence of good character, witness testified that she and defendant were very good friends but she had known defendant for only five months. State v. Greenspan, 92 N.C. App. 563, 374 S.E.2d 884 (1989).

Where defendant's only evidence as to his good reputation in community was testimony of his mother and where defendant had been away from community for ten years and had returned only two or three months prior to crime, trial court did not err in declining to find, as statutory mitigating factor, defendant's good reputation in community. State v. Russell, 92 N.C. App. 639, 376 S.E.2d 458 (1989).

Trial judge's refusal to find as a mitigating factor that defendant was of good character was not improper where the record established, at best, that there was an absence of bad character. State v. Turner, 103 N.C. App. 331, 406 S.E.2d 147 (1991).

L. Minor Defendant.

Seventeen Year Old Is Aware That Murder Wrongful. — A person at 17 years of age should be as well aware as any person of the wrong involved in the commission of murder, and the court did not abuse its discretion in failing to find defendant's age a mitigating factor. State v. Moore, 78 N.C. App. 77, 337 S.E.2d 66 (1985), modified on other grounds and aff'd, 317 N.C. 275, 345 S.E.2d 217 (1986).

M. Honorable Discharge.

Failure to Consider Military Service Held Error. — The failure of the trial judge to consider the defendant's honorable military service as a mitigating factor constituted error requiring that defendant be afforded a new sentencing hearing. State v. Heath, 77 N.C. App. 264, 335 S.E.2d 350 (1985), rev'd on other grounds, 316 N.C. 337, 341 S.E.2d 565 (1986).

The trial judge's refusal to even consider evidence of the defendant's honorable discharge from military service without documentary proof was error. State v. Hanes, 77 N.C. App. 222, 334 S.E.2d 444 (1985).

N. Nonstatutory Factors.

Discretion of Court as to Nonstatutory Factors. — When considering whether nonstatutory mitigating factors exist, the trial judge is given wide discretion that will not be upset absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Canty, 321 N.C. 520, 364 S.E.2d 410 (1988).

The consideration of a nonstatutory factor is in the discretion of the sentencing judge and failure to find such a non-statutory mitigating factor will not be disturbed on appeal absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Watkins, 89 N.C. App. 599, 366 S.E.2d 876, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 179, 373 S.E.2d 123 (1988).

Court's Discretion Not Disturbed Absent Abuse. — Failure of the court to find a nonstatutory mitigating factor, even when it is supported by uncontradicted, substantial, and manifestly credible evidence, will not be disturbed absent an abuse of that discretion. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 689, 365 S.E.2d 626 (1988).

Rendering Aid to Victim. — While actions of defendant in rendering aid to his victim should be encouraged and legislative consideration of making such circumstances a statutory mitigating factor would be appropriate, the Supreme Court would decline to reach this goal under the guise of judicial construction. State v. Blackstock, 314 N.C. 232, 333 S.E.2d 245 (1985).

Rendering aid to a victim is not a statutory mitigating factor; therefore a finding of this mitigating factor is in the exercise of the trial judge's sound discretion. State v. Church, 99 N.C. App. 647, 394 S.E.2d 468 (1990).

Insubstantial Loss to Victim. — The trial court did not err in failing to find, as a nonstatutory mitigating factor on sentencing defendant on convictions of felonious breaking or entering and felonious larceny, that victim suffered only insubstantial loss, where victim's loss was insubstantial merely because the police stopped defendant's accomplice in the middle of the larceny. State v. Litchford, 78 N.C. App. 722, 338 S.E.2d 575 (1986).

Good Work Record. — This section does not require the judge to find nonstatutory factors that the evidence establishes, but merely permits him to do so; thus, when the judge declined to find as a factor in mitigation that the defendant had a good work record, he was exercising his discretion, for which there is no appellate relief in the absence of abuse. State v. Elliott, 77 N.C. App. 647, 335 S.E.2d 774 (1985).

Drug addiction is not per se a statutorily enumerated mitigating factor. It could perhaps be found to mitigate the offense, either under the rubric of the enumerated factors, or otherwise as being reasonably related to the purposes of sentencing. State v. Bynum, 65 N.C. App. 813, 310 S.E.2d 388, cert. denied, 311 N.C. 404, 319 S.E.2d 275 (1984).

Although defendant's evidence could justify a finding that his crimes were committed to support his expensive drug habit, where he presented no evidence that would compel the conclusion that his culpability for the offense committed was significantly reduced because of his drug addiction, there was no error in the sentencing judge's refusal to find defendant's drug addiction a factor in mitigation of his sentence. State v. Arnette, 85 N.C. App. 492, 355 S.E.2d 498, aff'd, 85 N.C. App. 498, 355 S.E.2d 502 (1987).

The sentencing judge's refusal to consider that defendant was a long-term drug addict, under the influence of drugs, and stealing to support his habit as a non-statutory mitigating factor did not constitute an abuse of discretion. State v. Arnette, 85 N.C. App. 492, 355 S.E.2d 498, aff'd, 85 N.C. App. 498, 355 S.E.2d 502 (1987).

Defendant Victim of Child Abuse may not be considered as a mitigating factor. State v. Edwards, 310 N.C. 142, 310 S.E.2d 610 (1984).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion under the circumstances of this case by declining to find as a factor in mitigation that defendant charged with child abuse was himself the victim of child abuse. State v. Church, 99 N.C. App. 647, 394 S.E.2d 468 (1990).

Defendant's Prison Conduct. — The trial court in its discretion did not err in failing to find defendant's prison conduct to be a mitigating factor in determining what sentences to impose for all his convictions. State v. Hayes, 323 N.C. 306, 372 S.E.2d 704 (1988).

Behavior Pending Resentencing Hearing. — A defendant's good conduct while incarcerated during the period from his conviction until the time of his resentencing hearing may, in the discretion of the trial judge, be found as a nonstatutory mitigating factor under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Prevention of Jailbreak. — The trial court did not err in failing to find defendant's possible prevention of a jailbreak as a mitigating factor. State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985).

Rejection of Self-Defense as Mitigating Factor Upheld. — Statement made by trial judge to the effect that defendant used self-defense as a defense and the jury rejected it and the court did likewise did not require the conclusion that trial judge relied on the jury verdict in making its decision on the aggravating factor in question. The record clearly showed that prior to the jury verdict, the trial court did not believe defendant was acting in self-defense. Therefore, the trial court did not err in its rejection of self-defense as a factor in mitigation. State v. Williams, 100 N.C. App. 567, 397 S.E.2d 364 (1990), cert. dismissed, 328 N.C. 576, 403 S.E.2d 520 (1991).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to find defendant's requested nonstatutory factor in mitigation that defendant had sought treatment for his alcoholism where defendant stated that on the weekend before sentencing, he had a few beers. State v. Santon, 101 N.C. App. 710, 401 S.E.2d 117 (1991).

IV. FINDINGS OF COURT.

Findings Must Be Made Where Sentence Imposed Is Longer Than Presumed Sentence. — If the judge imposed a prison sentence longer than the presumed sentence listed in former § 15A-1340.4(f) for the class of felony of which the defendant was adjudged guilty, the judge had to first find that the factors in aggravation outweighed the factors in mitigation. He also had to specifically list in the record each matter in aggravation or mitigation that he found proved by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983); State v. Wood, 61 N.C. App. 446, 300 S.E.2d 903, cert. denied, 308 N.C. 547, 302 S.E.2d 884 (1983).

Trial judge must impose the statutorily set presumptive sentence unless he properly makes written findings of aggravating or mitigating factors and then finds that one set of factors outweighs the other. State v. Teague, 60 N.C. App. 755, 300 S.E.2d 7 (1983).

But Findings Are Not Required Where Judge Imposes Presumptive Term. — Where the judge imposed presumptive terms for all offenses of which defendant was convicted, he had no duty to make findings regarding aggravating and mitigating factors. State v. Teasley, 82 N.C. App. 150, 346 S.E.2d 227 (1986), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 318 N.C. 701, 351 S.E.2d 759 (1987); State v. Newell, 82 N.C. App. 707, 348 S.E.2d 158 (1986); State v. Blake, 83 N.C. App. 77, 349 S.E.2d 78 (1986), petition for discretionary review as to additional issues denied, 318 N.C. 697, 351 S.E.2d 751, aff'd, State v. Allison, 307 N.C. 411, 298 S.E.2d 365 (1983).

Judge is required to find factors proved by uncontradicted and manifestly credible evidence. State v. Potts, 65 N.C. App. 101, 308 S.E.2d 754 (1983), cert. denied, 311 N.C. 406, 319 S.E.2d 278 (1984).

Failure to Do So Is Error. — In order to give proper effect to the Fair Sentencing Act, the appellate court must find the sentencing judge in error if he fails to find a statutory factor when evidence of its existence is both uncontradicted and manifestly credible. State v. Taylor, 309 N.C. 570, 308 S.E.2d 302 (1983); State v. Cameron, 314 N.C. 516, 335 S.E.2d 9 (1985); State v. Faison, 90 N.C. App. 237, 368 S.E.2d 28 (1988).

Record Must Support Factors Found by Preponderance of Evidence. — This section does not require a specific fact finding on each factor to be considered in sentencing. All that is necessary is that the record support the factor by a "preponderance of the evidence." State v. Abee, 60 N.C. App. 99, 298 S.E.2d 184 (1982), modified on other grounds and aff'd, 308 N.C. 379, 302 S.E.2d 230 (1983).

The sentencing judge is required to make written findings in aggravation and mitigation, which findings must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence; that is, by the greater weight of the evidence. State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985).

Separate Findings Required for Each Offense. — In every case in which the sentencing judge is required to make findings in aggravation and mitigation to support a sentence which varies from the presumptive term, each offense, whether consolidated for hearing or not, must be treated separately, and separately supported by findings tailored to the individual offense and applicable only to that offense. State v. Parker, 315 N.C. 249, 337 S.E.2d 497 (1985).

Separate findings must be made for each offense, even if the cases are consolidated for hearing. State v. Ledford, 315 N.C. 599, 340 S.E.2d 309 (1986).

In cases where offenses are not consolidated for judgment, where the sentencing judge is required to make findings in aggravation and mitigation to support a sentence which varies from the presumptive term, each offense, whether consolidated for hearing or not, must be treated separately in determining which aggravating or mitigating factors pertain to which offenses. However, if the offenses are consolidated for judgment, this separate treatment is not necessary. State v. Graves, 83 N.C. App. 126, 349 S.E.2d 320 (1986).

Specific Evidence Relied on Need Not Be Specified. — When finding an aggravating factor, the sentencing judge does not have to specify the specific evidence on which he relied to find that factor. The record, however, must contain sufficient evidence to support the aggravating factor. State v. Rose, 327 N.C. 599, 398 S.E.2d 314 (1990).

Failure to Make Findings on Lesser Offenses Consolidated for Judgment. — When cases are consolidated for judgment and the trial judge finds aggravating and mitigating factors as to the most serious offense, but fails to make such findings as to the lesser consolidated offenses, the defendant is not prejudiced, so long as the sentence given does not exceed the maximum sentence permissible for the most serious offense. State v. Miller, 316 N.C. 273, 341 S.E.2d 531 (1986).

Aggravating and Mitigating Factors Form Sheets on Multiple Offenses. — Where in sentencing the defendant to a term of imprisonment for violations of both §§ 14-54 and 14-72 which exceeded the presumptive term, the trial judge made and listed findings which supported the validity of both judgments under former § 15A-1340.4(b), and in passing judgment on the defendant the court gave separate consideration to each offense and the aggravating and mitigating factors found in each instance, the fact that only one and not two aggravating and mitigating factors form sheets were signed and put in the file, as the judge obviously intended, did not require that defendant be resentenced. State v. Hall, 81 N.C. App. 650, 344 S.E.2d 811, petition for cert. dismissed as moot, 318 N.C. 510, 349 S.E.2d 868 (1986).

Finding on Weight of Factors Not Required Where Only Aggravating Factors Are Found. — Since only aggravating factors were found, it would have been an exercise in futility to require the trial judge to make a specific finding that those factors outweighed nonexistent mitigating factors. State v. Freeman, 313 N.C. 539, 330 S.E.2d 465 (1985).

Weight Attached to Particular Factor Need Not Be Justified. — While the trial judge is required to justify a sentence which deviates from a presumptive term to the extent that he must make findings in aggravation and mitigation properly supported by the evidence and in accordance with the Act, a trial judge need not justify the weight he attaches to any factor. He may properly determine that one factor in aggravation outweighs more than one factor in mitigation and vice versa. State v. Lane, 77 N.C. App. 741, 336 S.E.2d 410 (1985).

Factors Rejected Need Not Be Set Forth in Judgment. — Although the trial judge is required to consider all of the statutory aggravating and mitigating factors, he is only required to set out in the judgment the factors that he determines by the preponderance of the evidence are present. He is not required to list in the judgment statutory factors that he considered and rejected as being unsupported by the preponderance of the evidence. State v. Davis, 58 N.C. App. 330, 293 S.E.2d 658, cert.

denied, 306 N.C. 745, 295 S.E.2d 482 (1982).

Proceedings Do Not Involve Finding of Elemental Facts. — The proceedings under the Fair Sentencing Act do not involve the finding of elemental facts beyond a reasonable doubt in the nature of a guilt or innocence trial. State v. Jones, 314 N.C. 644, 336 S.E.2d 385 (1985).

Where defendant was sentenced pursuant to a plea arrangement, trial court was not required to make findings of aggravating or mitigating factors. State v. Hoover, 89 N.C. App. 199, 365 S.E.2d 920, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 177, 373 S.E.2d 118 (1988).

Judge Did Not Need to Make Findings in Aggravation and Mitigation. — Trial court did not err in sentencing defendant to two consecutive 40-year terms for trafficking in cocaine without finding any aggravating factors; the statutory mandatory minimum sentence for each conviction of trafficking in more than 400 grams of cocaine is 35 years in prison and since each of the 40-year sentences pronounced was less than the total of the presumptive terms of the consolidated convictions, the trial court's sentences for the substantive offenses were lawful. State v. Kamtsiklis, 94 N.C. App. 250, 380 S.E.2d 400 (1989).

On resentencing, the trial court must make a new and fresh determination of the sufficiency of the evidence underlying each factor in aggravation and mitigation, including those factors previously found and affirmed by the appellate court. State v. Daye, 78 N.C. App. 753, 338 S.E.2d 557, aff'd per curiam, 318 N.C. 502, 349 S.E.2d 576 (1986).

Finding of Different Factors at Later Hearing. — In proceedings under the Fair Sentencing Act, the principles of double jeopardy do not bar the finding of aggravating and mitigating factors different from those found at an earlier sentencing hearing. State v. Jones, 314 N.C. 644, 336 S.E.2d 385 (1985).

At a de novo resentencing hearing brought about by a defendant, the trial court may find altogether new aggravating and mitigating factors, without regard to the findings in the prior sentencing hearings. State v. Daye, 78 N.C. App. 753, 338 S.E.2d 557, aff'd per curiam, 318 N.C. 502, 349 S.E.2d 576 (1986).

A resentencing hearing is a de novo proceeding at which the trial judge may find aggravating and mitigating factors without regard to the findings made at the prior sentencing hearing. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Finding in Earlier Hearing Not Law of Case. — The trial court erred during resentencing by treating the prior finding in aggravation that defendant was a danger to others, found in the original sentencing hearing and approved on appeal, as the law of the case. State v. Daye, 78 N.C. App. 753, 338 S.E.2d 557, aff'd per curiam, 318 N.C. 502, 349 S.E.2d 576 (1986).

But May Be Binding Precedent. — If an appellate court has squarely ruled that certain evidence does not support a certain factor in aggravation or mitigation, and the identical evidence is offered at the resentencing hearing to support the same factor, the trial court on resentencing is bound by the appellate ruling, not because it is the law of the case, but because it is binding precedent directly on point. This is not a limitation on the de novo nature of the resentencing proceeding; rather, it is a recognition that the trial court's rulings are always governed by applicable appellate decisions. State v. Daye, 78 N.C. App. 753, 338 S.E.2d 557, aff'd per curiam, 318 N.C. 502, 349 S.E.2d 576 (1986).

Evidence Held Sufficient to Support Finding. — There was sufficient evidence from which the trial judge could find by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant was armed with a deadly weapon at the time he broke into elderly woman's home. Where the evidence tended to show defendant first acquired the revolver when he shot trooper and had it with him when he was captured, also co-defendant's testimony provided direct evidence defendant had trooper's revolver at the time he entered the house. State v. Rios, 322 N.C. 596, 369 S.E.2d 576 (1988).

V. ADDITIONAL SENTENCING FACTORS.

Judges still have discretion to increase or reduce sentences from the presumptive term upon findings of aggravating or mitigating factors, the weighing of which is a matter within their sound discretion. The balance struck by the trial judge will not be disturbed if there is support in the record for his determination. State v. Stone, 71 N.C. App. 417, 322 S.E.2d 413 (1984).

Conduct Prior to Original Trial and Sentencing Hearing. — An inmate's good behavior prior to his original trial and/or sentencing hearing may be found as a nonstatutory mitigating factor, and his bad conduct during the same time frame may be found as a nonstatutory aggravating factor. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Conduct Between Conviction and Presentencing. — As former § 15A-1335 prohibited the trial court from resentencing a defendant to a term of imprisonment greater than the prior sentence less the portion of the prior sentence previously served, a trial judge in North Carolina could not consider a defendant's bad conduct during the period between his conviction and the resentencing hearing to increase his sentence. However, bad conduct could be found by the trial judge as a nonstatutory aggravating factor to be utilized by the judge in deciding the sentence to be imposed, so long as the new sentence was no more severe than the original one. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

A defendant's good conduct while incarcerated during the period from his conviction until the time of his resentencing hearing could, in the discretion of the trial judge, be found as a nonstatutory mitigating factor under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Trial judge's remarks concerning the effect of "good time" and "gain time" were not an expression of dissatisfaction with the length of time convicted criminals must serve in prison, but were made in an effort to respond to defense counsel's impassioned argument concerning the fact that the defendant would be required to serve other sentences totalling four years at the expiration of the sentence at issue; thus, it could not be said from such remarks that the trial court was using the sentencing process to thwart the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Minimum Sentence Under § 14-87 Irreducible Except for Good Behavior. — The following factors lead to the conclusion that the General Assembly considered the relationship between § 14-87 and former Article 81A. First, § 14-87 was rewritten as part of Session Laws 1979, c. 760. Second, the rewritten version specifically referred to this former § 15A-1340.4, which allows credit for good behavior. Third, the General Assembly amended the last part of § 14-87(a) in the 1979 second session changing the phrase "... punished as a Class D felon" to "... guilty of a Class D felony." These factors lead to the conclusion that the General Assembly intended to impose a minimum sentence for armed robbery greater than the presumptive sentence for a Class D felony and also intended that the minimum be irreducible, except for credit for good behavior, notwithstanding any other provision of law. State v. Leeper, 59 N.C. App. 199, 296 S.E.2d 7, cert. denied, 307 N.C. 272, 299 S.E.2d 218 (1982).

§ 15A-1340.16A. Enhanced sentence if defendant is convicted of a Class A, B1, B2, C, D, or E felony and the defendant used, displayed, or threatened to use or display a firearm during the commission of the felony.

(a) If a person is convicted of a Class A, B1, B2, C, D, or E felony and the court finds that the person used, displayed, or threatened to use or display a firearm at the time of the felony, the court shall increase the minimum term of imprisonment to which the person is sentenced by 60 months. The court shall not suspend the 60-month minimum term of imprisonment imposed as an enhanced sentence under this section and shall not place any person sentenced under this section on probation for the enhanced sentence.

(b) Subsection (a) of this section does not apply in any of the following circumstances:

(1) The person is not sentenced to an active term of imprisonment.

(2) The evidence of the use, display, or threatened use or display of a firearm is needed to prove an element of the underlying Class A, B1, B2, C, D, or E felony.

(3) The person did not actually possess a firearm about his or her person. (1994, Ex. Sess., c. 22, s. 20.)

CASE NOTES

This firearm enhancement statute is facially unconstitutional pursuant to the Supreme Court's holding in Apprendi, under the Fifth, Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, and violates the defendant's due process rights as it permits the trial court to make the requisite factual findings for an enhancement that might result in a greater prison term than the statutory maximum prescribed by the underlying felony, instead of requiring that such factual determinations be submitted to the jury and proved beyond a reasonable doubt, although there may be hypothetical circumstances under which the statute could be constitutionally applied. State v. Guice, 141 N.C. App. 177, 541 S.E.2d 474 (2000), cert. dismissed, 353 N.C. 731, 551 S.E.2d 112 (2001).

Armed robbery and kidnapping are two distinct criminal statutes which require proof of different elements, and the punishment of each of these separate offenses by consecutive sentences does not violate the constitutional prohibition against double jeopardy. State v. Evans, 125 N.C. App. 301, 480 S.E.2d 435 (1997), cert. denied, 346 N.C. 551, 488 S.E.2d 813 (1997).

Firearm Enhancement for Kidnapping. — The trial court properly enhanced the defendant's sentence for second-degree kidnapping, although the display of a firearm was neither an essential element of second-degree kidnapping, nor the gravamen of that offense. State v. Ruff, 349 N.C. 213, 505 S.E.2d 579 (1998).

The defendant's sentence was properly enhanced pursuant to this section where the underlying felony was second-degree kidnapping, of which the use or display of a firearm is not an essential element, and in spite of defendant's argument that he was "contemporaneous" convicted on firearm-related charges. State v. Guice, 141 N.C. App. 177, 541 S.E.2d 474 (2000), cert. dismissed, 353 N.C. 731, 551 S.E.2d 112 (2001).

Applied in State v. Williams, 127 N.C. App. 464, 490 S.E.2d 583 (1997).

§ 15A-1340.16B. Life imprisonment without parole for a second or subsequent conviction of a Class B1 felony.

(a) Notwithstanding the sentencing dispositions in G.S. 15A-1340.17, a person convicted of a Class B1 felony shall be sentenced to life imprisonment without parole if:

(1) The offense was committed against a victim who was 13 years of age or younger at the time of the offense;

(2) The person has one or more prior convictions of a Class B1 felony; and

(3) The court finds that there are no mitigating factors in accordance with G.S. 15A-1340.16(e).

(b) If the sentencing court finds that there are mitigating circumstances, then the court shall sentence the person in accordance with G.S. 15A-1340.17.

(c) A prior conviction of a Class B1 felony shall be proved in accordance with G.S. 15A-1340.14. (1998-212, s. 17.16(a).)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1998-212, s. 1.1 provides: "This act shall be known as the 'Current Operations Appropriations and Capital Improvement Appropriations Act of 1998'."

Session Laws 1998-212, s. 17.16(l), made this section effective January 1, 1999, and applicable to offenses committed on or after that date.

Session Laws 1998-212, s. 30.5 contains a severability clause.

§ 15A-1340.16C. Enhanced sentence if defendant is convicted of a felony and the defendant was wearing or had in his or her immediate possession a bullet-proof vest during the commission of the felony.

(a) If a person is convicted of a felony and the court finds that the person was wearing or had in his or her immediate possession a bullet-proof vest at the time of the felony, then the person is guilty of a felony that is one class higher than the underlying felony for which the person was convicted.

(b) This section does not apply if the evidence that the person possessed a bullet-proof vest is needed to prove an element of the underlying felony for which the person was convicted. This section does not apply to law enforcement officers. (1999-263, s. 1.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1999-263, s. 2, made this section effective December 1, 1999, and applicable to offenses committed on or after that date.

§ 15A-1340.17. Punishment limits for each class of offense and prior record level.

(a) Offense Classification; Default Classifications. — The offense classification is as specified in the offense for which the sentence is being imposed. If the offense is a felony for which there is no classification, it is a Class I felony.

(b) Fines. — Any judgment that includes a sentence of imprisonment may also include a fine. If a community punishment is authorized, the judgment may consist of a fine only. Additionally, when the defendant is other than an individual, the judgment may consist of a fine only. Unless otherwise provided, the amount of the fine is in the discretion of the court.

(c) Punishments for Each Class of Offense and Prior Record Level; Punishment Chart Described. — The authorized punishment for each class of offense and prior record level is as specified in the chart below. Prior record levels are indicated by the Roman numerals placed horizontally on the top of the chart. Classes of offense are indicated by the letters placed vertically on the left side of the chart. Each cell on the chart contains the following components:

(1) A sentence disposition or dispositions: "C" indicates that a community punishment is authorized; "I" indicates that an intermediate punishment is authorized; "A" indicates that an active punishment is authorized; and "Life Imprisonment Without Parole" indicates that the defendant shall be imprisoned for the remainder of the prisoner's natural life.

(2) A presumptive range of minimum durations, if the sentence of imprisonment is neither aggravated or mitigated; any minimum term of imprisonment in that range is permitted unless the court finds pursuant to G.S. 15A-1340.16 that an aggravated or mitigated sentence is appropriate. The presumptive range is the middle of the three ranges in the cell.

(3) A mitigated range of minimum durations if the court finds pursuant to G.S. 15A-1340.16 that a mitigated sentence of imprisonment is justified; in such a case, any minimum term of imprisonment in the mitigated range is permitted. The mitigated range is the lower of the three ranges in the cell.

(4) An aggravated range of minimum durations if the court finds pursuant to G.S. 15A-1340.16 that an aggravated sentence of imprisonment is justified; in such a case, any minimum term of imprisonment in the aggravated range is permitted. The aggravated range is the higher of the three ranges in the cell.

(e1) Maximum Sentences Specified for Class B1 through Class E Felonies for Minimum Terms of 340 Months or More. — Unless provided otherwise in a statute establishing a punishment for a specific crime, when the minimum sentence is 340 months or more, the corresponding maximum term of imprisonment shall be equal to the sum of the minimum term of imprisonment and twenty percent (20%) of the minimum term of imprisonment, rounded to the next highest month, plus nine additional months. (1993, c. 538, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 14, ss. 20, 21; c. 22, s. 7; c. 24, s. 14(b); 1995, c. 507, s. 19.5(l); 1997-80, s. 3.)

CASE NOTES

This firearm enhancement statute is facially unconstitutional pursuant to the Supreme Court's holding in Apprendi, under the Fifth, Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, and violates the defendant's due process rights as it permits the trial court to make the requisite factual findings for an enhancement that might result in a greater prison term than the statutory maximum prescribed by the underlying felony, instead of requiring that such factual determinations be submitted to the jury and proved beyond a reasonable doubt, although there may be hypothetical circumstances under which the statute could be constitutionally applied. State v. Guice, 141 N.C. App. 177, 541 S.E.2d 474 (2000), cert. dismissed, 353 N.C. 731, 551 S.E.2d 112 (2001).

Construction with Federal Law. — Defendant was properly indicted for violating 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1) where his prior State felon-in-possession conviction resulted in an 8 to 10 month sentence after the application of this section, because he could potentially have been sentenced to 30 months in prison. United States v. Jones, 195 F.3d 205 (4th Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1029, 120 S. Ct. 1443, 146 L. Ed. 2d 330 (2000).

Because the focus in sentencing under federal law is on the potential punishment for the crime, not the individual, the district court properly considered the North Carolina statutory sentence maximums, not defendant's individual maximum, and used defendant's June 1998, conviction as a prior felony for purposes of United States Sentencing Guidelines (USSG) § 4B1.1. United States v. Chavez-Lopez, — F.3d —, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 3820 (4th Cir. Mar. 14, 2000).

Determining Maximum Period of Imprisonment. — Unless otherwise indicated, the maximum term of imprisonment applicable to each minimum term of imprisonment is as specified in § 15A-1340.17; thus, after a trial court enhances the minimum term of imprisonment, it must determine the applicable maximum term of imprisonment by utilizing the chart found in § 15A-1340.17(e). State v. Van Trusell, 144 N.C. App. 445, 548 S.E.2d 560 (2001).

Deterrence. — Corporation's fine for disseminating obscenity was not excessive considering corporation's financial resources; a lesser fine might have been seen as an acceptable business cost. State v. Sanford Video & News, Inc., — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 217, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 977 (2001).

Findings as to Aggravating Factors. — The defendant's lack of remorse was properly considered as an aggravating factor in sentencing even though the trial court's statement about the lack of remorse more closely resembled a comment on the defendant's continued pattern of reckless behavior and his lack of social duty. State v. Grice, 131 N.C. App. 48, 505 S.E.2d 166 (1998).

Court's Exercise of Discretion Resulted in Gender Discrimination. — Writ of habeas corpus was issued because the petitioner's prima facie claim of gender discrimination was unrebutted by the respondent where the 19 year-old petitioner was sentenced to between 23 and 36 years whereas a similarly situated 16 year-old female co-defendant received probation and eight months of time already served; where the court found no mitigating or aggravating circumstances but, rather, the totality of the evidence, including arguments of the prosecutor and statements of the court, indicated that the two were equally culpable; and where both were due to be sentenced as adults. Williams v. Currie, 103 F. Supp. 2d 858 (M.D.N.C. 2000).

Scope of Discretion of Court. — This section provides for judicial discretion in choosing a minimum sentence within a specified range, but does not provide for judicial discretion in the determination of maximum sentences. State v. Parker, 143 N.C. App. 680, 550 S.E.2d 174 (2001).

Discretion of Trial Court. — Trial court had the discretion to choose to not consider aggravating or mitigating factors and to choose to sentence defendant convicted of shooting the victim in the back to consecutive sentences within the presumptive range for the two offenses for which the defendant was convicted; the Structured Sentencing Act did not deprive defendant of due process or equal protection and, since the sentences imposed were within the limits set by the legislature, the Eighth Amendement was not offended. State v. Streeter, — N.C. App. —, 553 S.E.2d 240, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 989 (2001).

Effect When Substantial Assistance Rendered. — The trial court's discretion in departing from minimum sentencing upon a finding that the defendant has rendered substantial assistance is not limited by the structured sentencing minimum of this section. State v. Saunders, 131 N.C. App. 551, 507 S.E.2d 911 (1998).

Part 3. Misdemeanor Sentencing.

§ 15A-1340.20. Procedure and incidents of sentence of imprisonment for misdemeanors.

(a) Application to Misdemeanors Only. — This Part applies to sentences imposed for misdemeanor convictions.

(b) Procedure Generally; Term of Imprisonment. — A sentence imposed for a misdemeanor shall contain a sentence disposition specified for the class of offense and prior conviction level, and any sentence of imprisonment shall be within the range specified for the class of offense and prior conviction level, unless applicable statutes require otherwise. The kinds of sentence dispositions are active punishment, intermediate punishment, and community punishment. Except for the work and earned time credits authorized by G.S. 162-60, or earned time credits authorized by G.S. 15A-1355(c), if applicable, an offender whose sentence of imprisonment is activated shall serve each day of the term imposed.

(c) Suspension of Sentence. — Unless otherwise provided, the court shall suspend a sentence of imprisonment if the class of offense and prior conviction level requires community or intermediate punishment as a sentence disposition.

(c1) Active Punishment Exception. — The court may impose an active punishment for a class of offense and prior conviction level that does not otherwise authorize the imposition of an active punishment if the term of imprisonment is equal to or less than the total amount of time the offender has already spent committed to or in confinement in any State or local correctional, mental, or other institution as a result of the charge that culminated in the sentence.

(d) Earned Time Authorization. — An offender sentenced to a term of imprisonment that is activated is eligible to receive earned time credit for misdemeanant offenders awarded by the Department of Correction or the custodian of a local confinement facility, pursuant to rules adopted in accordance with law and pursuant to G.S. 162-60. These rules and statute combined shall not award misdemeanant offenders more than four days of earned time credit per month of incarceration. (1993, c. 538, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 767, s. 1; 1997-79, s. 1.)

§ 15A-1340.21. Prior conviction level for misdemeanor sentencing.

(a) Generally. — The prior conviction level of a misdemeanor offender is determined by calculating the number of the offender's prior convictions that the court finds to have been proven in accordance with this section.

(b) Prior Conviction Levels for Misdemeanor Sentencing. — The prior conviction levels for misdemeanor sentencing are:

(1) Level I — 0 prior convictions.

(2) Level II — At least 1, but not more than 4 prior convictions.

(3) Level III — At least 5 prior convictions.

In determining the prior conviction level, a prior offense may be included if it is either a felony or a misdemeanor at the time the offense for which the offender is being sentenced is committed.

(c) Proof of Prior Convictions. — A prior conviction shall be proved by any of the following methods:

(1) Stipulation of the parties.

(2) An original or copy of the court record of the prior conviction.

(3) A copy of records maintained by the Division of Criminal Information, the Division of Motor Vehicles, or of the Administrative Office of the Courts.

(4) Any other method found by the court to be reliable.

The State bears the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, that a prior conviction exists and that the offender before the court is the same person as the offender named in the prior conviction. The original or a copy of the court records or a copy of the records maintained by the Division of Criminal Information, the Division of Motor Vehicles, or of the Administrative Office of the Courts, bearing the same name as that by which the offender is charged, is prima facie evidence that the offender named is the same person as the offender before the court, and that the facts set out in the record are true. For purposes of this subsection, "copy" includes a paper writing containing a reproduction of a record maintained electronically on a computer or other data processing equipment, and a document produced by a facsimile machine. Evidence presented by either party at trial may be utilized to prove prior convictions. Suppression of prior convictions is pursuant to G.S. 15A-980. If a motion is made pursuant to that section during the sentencing stage of the criminal action, the court may grant a continuance of the sentencing hearing.

(d) Multiple Prior Convictions Obtained in One Court Week. — For purposes of this section, if an offender is convicted of more than one offense in a single session of district court, or in a single week of superior court or of a court in another jurisdiction, only one of the convictions may be used to determine the prior conviction level. (1993, c. 538, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 767, s. 13.1; 1997-80, s. 8.)

CASE NOTES

Action Not Moot. — The possibility, however slim, that the petitioner could face an enhanced sentence for a subsequent misdemeanor conviction in North Carolina for his conviction for delaying or obstructing a police officer and that he had paid or was liable to pay a fine that the state might choose to refund if he succeeded in overturning his conviction were collateral consequences that kept the action from becoming moot. Brooks v. North Carolina Dep't of Cor., 984 F. Supp. 940 (E.D.N.C. 1997).

Contempt. — The defendant's 1994 criminal contempt adjudication did not constitute a "prior conviction" under this section; contempt usually constitutes a "petty offense" to which the constitutional guarantee of a trial by jury does not apply. State v. Reaves, 142 N.C. App. 629, 544 S.E.2d 253 (2001).

§ 15A-1340.22. Multiple convictions.

(a) Limits on Consecutive Sentences. — If the court elects to impose consecutive sentences for two or more misdemeanors and the most serious misdemeanor is classified in Class A1, Class 1, or Class 2, the cumulative length of the sentences of imprisonment shall not exceed twice the maximum sentence authorized for the class and prior conviction level of the most serious offense. Consecutive sentences shall not be imposed if all convictions are for Class 3 misdemeanors.

(b) Consolidation of Sentences. — If an offender is convicted of more than one offense at the same session of court, the court may consolidate the offenses for judgment and impose a single judgment for the consolidated offenses. Any sentence imposed shall be consistent with the appropriate prior conviction level of the most serious offense. (1993, c. 538, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1995 (Reg. Sess., 1996), c. 742, s. 16.)

§ 15A-1340.23. Punishment limits for each class of offense and prior conviction level.

(a) Offense Classification; Default Classifications. — The offense classification is as specified in the offense for which the sentence is being imposed. If the offense is a misdemeanor for which there is no classification, it is as classified in G.S. 14-3.

(b) Fines. — Any judgment that includes a sentence of imprisonment may also include a fine. Additionally, when the defendant is other than an individual, the judgment may consist of a fine only. If a community punishment is authorized, the judgment may consist of a fine only. Unless otherwise provided for a specific offense, the maximum fine that may be imposed is two hundred dollars ($200.00) for a Class 3 misdemeanor and one thousand dollars ($1,000) for a Class 2 misdemeanor. The amount of the fine for a Class 1 misdemeanor and a Class A1 misdemeanor is in the discretion of the court.

(c) Punishment for Each Class of Offense and Prior Conviction Level; Punishment Chart Described. — Unless otherwise provided for a specific offense, the authorized punishment for each class of offense and prior conviction level is as specified in the chart below. Prior conviction levels are indicated by the Roman numerals placed horizontally on the top of the chart. Classes of offenses are indicated by the Arabic numbers placed vertically on the left side of the chart. Each grid on the chart contains the following components:

(1) A sentence disposition or dispositions: "C" indicates that a community punishment is authorized; "I" indicates that an intermediate punishment is authorized; and "A" indicates that an active punishment is authorized; and

(2) A range of durations for the sentence of imprisonment: any sentence within the duration specified is permitted.

CASE NOTES

Career Offenders. — For career offender purposes under federal statute, the date the prior conviction was sustained should control, not the date of later sentencing; thus, defendant was properly determined to be a career offender under federal statute where prior felony offense had been amended to become a misdemeanor. United States v. Johnson, 114 F.3d 435 (4th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 903, 118 S. Ct. 257, 139 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1997).

Article 81C.

Restitution.

§ 15A-1340.34. Restitution generally.

(a) When sentencing a defendant convicted of a criminal offense, the court shall determine whether the defendant shall be ordered to make restitution to any victim of the offense in question. For purposes of this Article, the term "victim" means a person directly and proximately harmed as a result of the defendant's commission of the criminal offense.

(b) If the defendant is being sentenced for an offense for which the victim is entitled to restitution under Article 46 of this Chapter, the court shall, in addition to any penalty authorized by law, require that the defendant make restitution to the victim or the victim's estate for any injuries or damages arising directly and proximately out of the offense committed by the defendant. If the defendant is placed on probation or post-release supervision, any restitution ordered under this subsection shall be a condition of probation as provided in G.S. 15A-1343(d) or a condition of post-release supervision as provided in G.S. 148-57.1.

(c) When subsection (b) of this section does not apply, the court may, in addition to any other penalty authorized by law, require that the defendant make restitution to the victim or the victim's estate for any injuries or damages arising directly and proximately out of the offense committed by the defendant. (1998-212, s. 19.4(d).)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1998-212, s. 19.4(d), enacted this section as § 15A-1340.24. It was recodified as this section at the direction of the Revisor of Statutes.

Session Laws 1998-212, s. 1.1 provides: "This act shall be known as the 'Current Operations Appropriations and Capital Improvement Appropriations Act of 1998'."

Session Laws 1998-212, s. 19.4(r), made this Article effective December 1, 1998, and applicable to offenses committed on or after that date.

Session Laws 1998-212, s. 30.5 contains a severability clause.

CASE NOTES

This Section Only Applicable to Crimes Committed after December 1, 1998. — The trial court's imposition of a civil judgment against the defendant in the amount of $ 11,000 to cover the victim's funeral expenses was improper where the crime was committed before this section became effective. State v. Salmon, 140 N.C. App. 567, 537 S.E.2d 829 (2000), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 394, 547 S.E.2d 424 (2001).

§ 15A-1340.35. Basis for restitution.

(a) In determining the amount of restitution, the court shall consider the following:

(1) In the case of an offense resulting in bodily injury to a victim:

a. The cost of necessary medical and related professional services and devices or equipment relating to physical, psychiatric, and psychological care required by the victim;
b. The cost of necessary physical and occupational therapy and rehabilitation required by the victim; and
c. Income lost by the victim as a result of the offense.

(2) In the case of an offense resulting in the damage, loss, or destruction of property of a victim of the offense:
a. Return of the property to the owner of the property or someone designated by the owner; or
b. If return of the property under sub-subdivision (2)a. of this subsection is impossible, impracticable, or inadequate:
1. The value of the property on the date of the damage, loss, or destruction; or
2. The value of the property on the date of sentencing, less the value of any part of the property that is returned.

(3) Any measure of restitution specifically provided by law for the offense committed by the defendant.

(4) In the case of an offense resulting in bodily injury that results in the death of the victim, the cost of the victim's necessary funeral and related services, in addition to the items set out in subdivisions (1), (2), and (3) of this subsection.

(b) The court may require that the victim or the victim's estate provide admissible evidence that documents the costs claimed by the victim or the victim's estate under this section. Any such documentation shall be shared with the defendant before the sentencing hearing. (1998-212, s. 19.4(d).)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1998-212, s. 19.4(d), enacted this section as § 15A-1340.25. It was recodified as this section at the direction of the Revisor of Statutes.

§ 15A-1340.36. Determination of restitution.

(a) In determining the amount of restitution to be made, the court shall take into consideration the resources of the defendant including all real and personal property owned by the defendant and the income derived from the property, the defendant's ability to earn, the defendant's obligation to support dependents, and any other matters that pertain to the defendant's ability to make restitution, but the court is not required to make findings of fact or conclusions of law on these matters. The amount of restitution must be limited to that supported by the record, and the court may order partial restitution when it appears that the damage or loss caused by the offense is greater than that which the defendant is able to pay. If the court orders partial restitution, the court shall state on the record the reasons for such an order.

(b) The court may require the defendant to make full restitution no later than a certain date or, if the circumstances warrant, may allow the defendant to make restitution in installments over a specified time period.

(c) When an active sentence is imposed, the court shall consider whether it should recommend to the Secretary of Correction that restitution be made by the defendant out of any earnings gained by the defendant if the defendant is granted work-release privileges, as provided in G.S. 148-33.2. The court shall also consider whether it should recommend to the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission that restitution by the defendant be made a condition of any parole or post-release supervision granted the defendant, as provided in G.S. 148-57.1. (1998-212, s. 19.4(d).)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1998-212, s. 19.4(d), enacted this section as § 15A-1340.26. It was recodified as this section at the direction of the Revisor of Statutes.

§ 15A-1340.37. Effect of restitution order; beneficiaries.

(a) An order providing for restitution does not abridge the right of a victim or the victim's estate to bring a civil action against the defendant for damages arising out of the offense committed by the defendant. Any amount paid by the defendant under the terms of a restitution order under this Article shall be credited against any judgment rendered against the defendant in favor of the same victim in a civil action arising out of the criminal offense committed by the defendant.

(b) The court may order the defendant to make restitution to a person other than the victim, or to any organization, corporation, or association, including the Crime Victims Compensation Fund, that provided assistance to the victim following the commission of the offense by the defendant and is subrogated to the rights of the victim. Restitution shall be made to the victim or the victim's estate before it is made to any other person, organization, corporation, or association under this subsection.

(c) No government agency shall benefit by way of restitution except for particular damage or loss to it over and above its normal operating costs and except that the State may receive restitution for the total amount of a judgment authorized by G.S. 7A-455(b).

(d) No third party shall benefit by way of restitution as a result of the liability of that third party to pay indemnity to an aggrieved party for the damage or loss caused by the defendant, but the liability of a third party to pay indemnity to an aggrieved party or any payment of indemnity actually made by a third party to an aggrieved party does not prohibit or limit in any way the power of the court to require the defendant to make complete and full restitution to the aggrieved party for the total amount of the damage or loss caused by the defendant. (1998-212, s. 19.4(d).)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1998-212, s. 19.4(d), enacted this section as § 15A-1340.27. It was recodified as this section at the direction of the Revisor of Statutes.

§ 15A-1340.38. Enforcement of certain orders for restitution.

(a) In addition to the provisions of G.S. 15A-1340.36, when an order for restitution under G.S. 15A-1340.34(b) requires the defendant to pay restitution in an amount in excess of two hundred fifty dollars ($250.00) to a victim, the order may be enforced in the same manner as a civil judgment, subject to the provisions of this section.

(b) The order for restitution under G.S. 15A-1340.34(b) shall be docketed and indexed in the county of the original conviction in the same manner as a civil judgment pursuant to G.S. 1-233, et seq., and may be docketed in any other county pursuant to G.S. 1-234. The judgment may be collected in the same manner as a civil judgment unless the order to pay restitution is a condition of probation. If the order to pay restitution is a condition of probation, the judgment may only be executed upon in accordance with subsection (c) of this section.

(c) If the defendant is ordered to pay restitution under G.S. 15A-1340.34(b) as a condition of probation, a judgment docketed under this section may be collected in the same manner as a civil judgment. However, the docketed judgment for restitution may not be executed upon the property of the defendant until the date of notification to the clerk of superior court in the county of the original conviction that the judge presiding at the probation termination or revocation hearing has made a finding that restitution in a sum certain remains due and payable, that the defendant's probation has been terminated or revoked, and that the remaining balance of restitution owing may be collected by execution on the judgment. The clerk shall then enter upon the judgment docket the amount that remains due and payable on the judgment, together with amounts equal to the standard fees for docketing, copying, certifying, and mailing, as appropriate, and shall collect any other fees or charges incurred as in the enforcement of other civil judgments, including accrued interest. However, no interest shall accrue on the judgment until the entry of an order terminating or revoking probation and finding the amount remaining due and payable, at which time interest shall begin to accrue at the legal rate pursuant to G.S. 24-5. The interest shall be applicable to the amount determined at the termination or revocation hearing to be then due and payable. The clerk shall notify the victim by first-class mail at the victim's last known address that the judgment may be executed upon, together with the amount of the judgment. Until the clerk receives notification of termination or revocation of probation and the amount that remains due and payable on the order of restitution, the clerk shall not be required to update the judgment docket to reflect partial payments on the order of restitution as a condition of probation. The stay of execution under this subsection shall not apply to property of the defendant after the transfer or conveyance of the property to another person. When the criminal order of restitution has been paid in full, the civil judgment indexed under this section shall be deemed satisfied and the judgment shall be cancelled. Payment satisfying the civil judgment shall also be credited against the order of restitution.

(d) An appeal of the conviction upon which the order of restitution is based shall stay execution on the judgment until the appeal is completed. If the conviction is overturned, the judgment shall be cancelled. (1998-212, s. 19.4(d).)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1998-212, s. 19.4(d), enacted this section as § 15A-1340.28. It was recodified as this section at the direction of the Revisor of Statutes.

Article 82.

Probation.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This Article consolidates the various provisions on probation.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article derives from those appearing in the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly, as revised by the Commission.

§ 15A-1341. Probation generally.

(a) Use of Probation. — Unless specifically prohibited, a person who has been convicted of any criminal offense may be placed on probation as provided by this Article if the class of offense of which the person is convicted and the person's prior record or conviction level under Article 81B of this Chapter authorizes a community or intermediate punishment as a type of sentence disposition or if the person is convicted of impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1.

(a1) Deferred Prosecution. — A person who has been charged with a Class H or I felony or a misdemeanor may be placed on probation as provided in this Article on motion of the defendant and the prosecutor if the court finds each of the following facts:

(1) Prosecution has been deferred by the prosecutor pursuant to written agreement with the defendant, with the approval of the court, for the purpose of allowing the defendant to demonstrate his good conduct.

(2) Each known victim of the crime has been notified of the motion for probation by subpoena or certified mail and has been given an opportunity to be heard.

(3) The defendant has not been convicted of any felony or of any misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.

(4) The defendant has not previously been placed on probation and so states under oath.

(5) The defendant is unlikely to commit another offense other than a Class 3 misdemeanor.

(a2) Deferred Prosecution for Purpose of Drug Treatment Court Program. — A defendant eligible for a Drug Treatment Court Program pursuant to Article 62 of Chapter 7A of the General Statutes may be placed on probation if the court finds that prosecution has been deferred by the prosecutor, with the approval of the court, pursuant to a written agreement with the defendant, for the purpose of allowing the defendant to participate in and successfully complete the Drug Treatment Court Program.

(b) Supervised and Unsupervised Probation. — The court may place a person on supervised or unsupervised probation. A person on unsupervised probation is subject to all incidents of probation except supervision by or assignment to a probation officer.

(c) Repealed by Session Laws 1995, c. 429, s. 1. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, ss. 4A, 5; 1981, c. 377, ss. 2, 3; 1993, c. 538, s. 15; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1995, c. 429, s. 1; 1999-298, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsection (b) specifies both supervised and unsupervised probation. These two categories replace the present probation and release on suspended sentence; in this Article unsupervised probation is the equivalent of the present release on suspended sentence without probation. The Commission felt that any convicted person should be able to choose to serve a sentence rather than probation, and thus drafted subsection (c).

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1995, c. 429, s. 5, provided that if the constitutional amendment proposed by Session Laws 1995, c. 429, s. 2, were approved, subsection (c) was repealed, effective January 1, 1997, and the repeal of subsection (c) applied to any person whose criminal offense occurred on or after that date. The constitutional amendment was approved by the qualified voters of the State at the general election held in November 1996.

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under former §§ 15-197 and 15-200.

Enactment of Article 81A of this Chapter resulted in revisions to other portions of the general statutes. See e.g., Chapter 14, Articles 1, 2, 2A, 33; Chapter 15A, Articles 58, 81A, 82, 83, 85, 85A, 89, 91; Chapter 148, Article 2, and Chapter 162, Article 4. State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

For case discussing the historical background, policies, purposes, and implementation of the new "Fair Sentencing Act," see State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

Purpose of probation is to avoid imprisonment so long as the guilty man gives promise of reform. Clearly, therefore, probation is not intended to be the equivalent of imprisonment. The aim of the statute is reformatory. Hall v. Bostic, 529 F.2d 990 (4th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 954, 96 S. Ct. 1733, 48 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1976).

Primary purpose of a suspended sentence or parole is to further the reform of the defendant. State v. Baynard, 4 N.C. App. 645, 167 S.E.2d 514 (1969); State v. Simpson, 25 N.C. App. 176, 212 S.E.2d 566, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 263, 214 S.E.2d 436 (1975); Hall v. Bostic, 529 F.2d 990 (4th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 954, 96 S. Ct. 1733, 48 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1976).

Probation and Parole Distinguished. — Probation relates to judicial action taken before the prison door is closed, whereas parole relates to executive action taken after the door has closed on a convict. State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476 (1967).

Probation or suspension of sentence is not a right granted by either the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of this State, but is an act of grace to one convicted of crime. State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476 (1967); State v. Hunter, 315 N.C. 371, 338 S.E.2d 99 (1986).

But an Act of Grace. — Probation is an act of grace accorded one who has been convicted of crime. The defendant carries the keys to his freedom in his willingness to comply with the court's sentence. State v. Lombardo, 306 N.C. 594, 295 S.E.2d 399 (1982).

Court has inherent power to suspend judgment or stay execution of a sentence in a criminal case. This Article did not withdraw this authority from the courts. It provides a procedure which is cumulative and concurrent rather than exclusive. State v. Simmington, 235 N.C. 612, 70 S.E.2d 842 (1952).

Courts having jurisdiction may pronounce judgment as by law provided; and then, with the defendant's consent, express or implied, suspend execution thereof upon prescribed conditions. Long recognized as an inherent power of the court, such authority is now recognized expressly by statute. State v. Cole, 241 N.C. 576, 86 S.E.2d 203 (1955).

The inherent power of a court having jurisdiction to suspend judgment or stay execution of sentence on conviction in a criminal case for a determinate period and for a reasonable length of time has been recognized and upheld in this jurisdiction. State v. Miller, 225 N.C. 213, 34 S.E.2d 143 (1945); State v. Griffin, 246 N.C. 680, 100 S.E.2d 49 (1957).

The adoption of this Article did not affect the inherent power of the court to suspend sentences in criminal cases upon reasonable and just conditions. This Article establishes cumulative and concurrent procedures which supplement rather than limit the inherent sentencing power of the court. This Article only provides the courts with additional authority concurrent with the inherent power of the court. State v. Stallings, 316 N.C. 535, 342 S.E.2d 519 (1986).

And May Dictate Conditions of Probation. — Because a court has the inherent power to suspend a judgment upon reasonable and just conditions, the trial court need not rely on its additional statutory authority to dictate the conditions of probation. State v. Stallings, 316 N.C. 535, 342 S.E.2d 519 (1986).

Due Process to Be Afforded Before Probation Is Revoked. — Under subsection (c) of this section, a defendant is given the election between imprisonment and probation in the first instance; and once he chooses probation, § 15A-1345 guarantees full due process before there can be a revocation of probation and a resulting prison sentence. State v. Hunter, 315 N.C. 371, 338 S.E.2d 99 (1986).

Evidence in Probation Revocation Proceedings. — The trial court, in probation revocation proceedings, is not bound by strict rules of evidence. State v. Darrow, 83 N.C. App. 647, 351 S.E.2d 138 (1986).

Standard of Proof in Probation Revocation Proceedings. — In probation revocation proceedings, grounds for revocation need not be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Instead, the court may allow revocation of probation on evidence which is sufficient to satisfy the court, in its discretion, that defendant has violated a valid condition of his probation. State v. Darrow, 83 N.C. App. 647, 351 S.E.2d 138 (1986).

Probation Revocation Upheld. — Trial court's finding that the State proved, by a preponderance of the evidence, that defendant made an obscene telephone call to burglary victim on two occasions supported conclusion that defendant had violated the terms of the agreement he executed with the State pursuant to this section, whereby he would participate in the felony diversion program and be placed on probation in exchange for deferral of prosecution on the burglary charge and would have certain restrictions, one of which was that he could not contact or harass victim, and that his removal from the felony diversion program was for just cause. State v. Darrow, 83 N.C. App. 647, 351 S.E.2d 138 (1986).

Discretion of Trial Judge. — The propriety of suspending the sentence, ordinarily, is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the trial judge. The General Assembly has endeavored to implement the power of the court in this respect by making further provisions for probation and supervision in this and the following sections. State v. Stallings, 234 N.C. 265, 66 S.E.2d 822 (1951).

Prisoner Has Right to Rely on Conditions of Suspension. — Where a sentence in a criminal case is suspended upon certain valid conditions expressed in the sentence imposed, the prisoner has a right to rely upon such conditions. State v. Seagraves, 266 N.C. 112, 145 S.E.2d 327 (1965); State v. Young, 21 N.C. App. 316, 204 S.E.2d 185 (1974).

When a sentence of imprisonment in a criminal case is suspended upon certain valid conditions expressed in a probation judgment, defendant has a right to rely upon such conditions, and as long as he complies therewith the suspension must stand. In such a case, defendant carries the keys to his freedom in his willingness to comply with the court's sentence. State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476 (1967).

And so long as he complies with such conditions, the suspension should stand. State v. Seagraves, 266 N.C. 112, 145 S.E.2d 327 (1965); State v. Young, 21 N.C. App. 316, 204 S.E.2d 185 (1974).

Assumption of Obligations of Probation. — Defendant is not required to accept a suspended sentence or probationary judgment, but if he does, he voluntarily assumes the obligations imposed. State v. Young, 21 N.C. App. 316, 204 S.E.2d 185 (1974).

A person does not serve a prison sentence while on probation or parole any more than he does while free on bail. In both instances, there are certain restrictions generally on the person's movements but the person's condition is very different from that of confinement in a prison. Hall v. Bostic, 529 F.2d 990 (4th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 954, 96 S. Ct. 1733, 48 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1976).

Period during which the execution of a sentence may be suspended on conditions has been fixed as five years, regardless of the term of imprisonment authorized by the law. State v. Gibson, 233 N.C. 691, 65 S.E.2d 508 (1951).

Suspension of sentence for a period of five years is within the limits provided by law. State v. Baynard, 4 N.C. App. 645, 167 S.E.2d 514 (1969).

The maximum period during which the execution of a sentence in a criminal case may be suspended on conditions is five years. A suspension of sentence for a period in excess of that authorized by this section is not void in toto. Ordinarily it is valid to the extent the court had power to suspend or stay execution and void merely as to the excess. State v. McBride, 240 N.C. 619, 83 S.E.2d 488 (1954); State v. Rowland, 32 N.C. App. 756, 233 S.E.2d 682 (1977).

Suspension May Be for Five Years Although Maximum Imprisonment Is Two Years. — The superior court has the power to suspend execution of a sentence in a criminal prosecution for a period of five years, notwithstanding that the maximum imprisonment authorized for the offense of which defendant is convicted is two years. State v. Wilson, 216 N.C. 130, 4 S.E.2d 440 (1939); State v. McMilliam, 243 N.C. 775, 92 S.E.2d 205 (1956), overruled on other grounds, State v. Lomeareo, 306 N.C. 594, 295 S.E.2d 399 (1982).

Period of Suspension Where Not Specified in Judgment. — Where the judgment does not specify the period of time that execution of the sentence is suspended upon conditions, execution of the sentence is suspended or stayed for the period of time that the court is empowered by this section to suspend the sentence. State v. Simpson, 25 N.C. App. 176, 212 S.E.2d 566, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 263, 214 S.E.2d 436 (1975).

Probation Must Be Consistent with Right of Appeal. — Where the privilege of probation, granted by this Article, is so conditioned as to be inconsistent with a defendant's right of appeal, the judgment is erroneous. State v. Calcutt, 219 N.C. 545, 15 S.E.2d 9 (1941).

Waiver of Right to Appeal Conviction. — An order suspending the imposition or execution of sentence on condition is favorable to the defendant, and when he sits by as the order is entered and does not appeal, he impliedly consents and thereby waives or abandons his right to appeal on the principal issue of his guilt or innocence and commits himself to abide by the stipulated conditions. He may not thereafter complain that his conviction was not in accord with due process of law. He is relegated to his right to contest imposition of judgment or execution of sentence for want of evidence to support a finding that conditions imposed have been breached, or that the conditions are unreasonable or unenforceable, or are for an unreasonable length of time. And the court may not pronounce judgment or invoke execution, after adjournment of the term, so long as defendant observes the conditions imposed. State v. Miller, 225 N.C. 213, 34 S.E.2d 143 (1945).

Where there is a conviction and a sentence imposed, the court may suspend the judgment or its execution upon payment of costs or other conditions, and where no appeal is taken, the judgment will be considered final when the time for appealing the case has expired, and the defendant may not be heard thereafter to complain on the ground that his conviction was not in accord with due process of law. Barbour v. Scheidt, 246 N.C. 169, 97 S.E.2d 855 (1957).

Suspension on Condition That Defendant Not Operate Motor Vehicle. — Upon defendant's conviction of operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating beverage, the court may not suspend judgment upon condition that the defendant not operate a motor vehicle upon the public roads during the period of suspension, unless defendant consents thereto, expressly or by implication. State v. Cole, 241 N.C. 576, 86 S.E.2d 203 (1955); State v. Green, 251 N.C. 141, 110 S.E.2d 805 (1959).

Pretrial Assignment to DAPP. — The legislature has provided for pretrial assignment of a defendant to the Division of Adult Probation and Parole only upon deferred prosecution, and upon the agreement to assume supervision of the person. State v. Gravette, 327 N.C. 114, 393 S.E.2d 856 (1990).

Court Had No Authority to Order DAPP to Supervise Defendant. — Superior court had no authority to enter order requiring Division of Adult Probation and Parole, without its consent, to provide supervision of defendant, who had been determined incompetent to stand trial but not subject to involuntary commitment, while in custody of his former wife. State v. Gravette, 327 N.C. 114, 393 S.E.2d 856 (1990).

Cited in In re Greene, 297 N.C. 305, 255 S.E.2d 142 (1979); State v. Camp, 299 N.C. 524, 263 S.E.2d 592 (1980).

§ 15A-1342. Incidents of probation.

(a) Period. — The court may place a convicted offender on probation for the appropriate period as specified in G.S. 15A-1343.2(d), not to exceed a maximum of five years. The court may place a defendant as to whom prosecution has been deferred on probation for a maximum of two years. The probation remains conditional and subject to revocation during the period of probation imposed, unless terminated as provided in subsection (b) or G.S. 15A-1341(c).

Extension. — The court with the consent of the defendant may extend the period of probation beyond the original period (i) for the purpose of allowing the defendant to complete a program of restitution, or (ii) to allow the defendant to continue medical or psychiatric treatment ordered as a condition of the probation. The period of extension shall not exceed three years beyond the original period of probation. The special extension authorized herein may be ordered only in the last six months of the original period of probation. Any probationary judgment form provided to a defendant on supervised probation shall state that probation may be extended pursuant to this subsection.

(b) Early Termination. — The court may terminate a period of probation and discharge the defendant at any time earlier than that provided in subsection (a) if warranted by the conduct of the defendant and the ends of justice.

(c) Conditions; Suspended Sentence. — When the court places a convicted offender on probation, it must determine conditions of probation as provided in G.S. 15A-1343. In addition, it must impose a suspended sentence of imprisonment, determined as provided in Article 83, Imprisonment, which may be activated upon violation of conditions of probation.

(d) Mandatory Review of Probation. — Each probation officer must bring the cases of each probationer assigned to him before a court with jurisdiction to review the probation when the probationer has served three years of a probationary period greater than three years. The probation officer must give reasonable notice to the probationer, and the probationer may appear. The court must review the case file of a probationer so brought before it and determine whether to terminate his probation.

(e) Out-of-State Supervision. — Supervised probationers are subject to out-of-State supervision under the provisions of G.S. 148-65.1.

(f) Appeal from Judgment of Probation. — A defendant may seek post-trial relief from a judgment which includes probation notwithstanding the authority of the court to modify or revoke the probation.

(g) Invalid Conditions; Timing of Objection. — The regular conditions of probation imposed pursuant to G.S. 15A-1343(b) are in every circumstance valid conditions of probation. A court may not revoke probation for violation of an invalid condition imposed pursuant to G.S. 15A-1343(b1). The failure of a defendant to object to a condition of probation imposed pursuant to G.S. 15A-1343(b1) at the time such a condition is imposed does not constitute a waiver of the right to object at a later time to the condition.

(h) Limitation on Jurisdiction to Alter or Revoke Unsupervised Probation. — In the judgment placing a person on unsupervised probation, the judge may limit jurisdiction to alter or revoke the sentence under G.S. 15A-1344. When jurisdiction to alter or revoke is limited, the effect is as provided in G.S. 15A-1344(b).

(i) Immunity from Prosecution upon Compliance. — Upon the expiration or early termination as provided in subsection (b) of a period of probation imposed after deferral of prosecution and before conviction, the defendant shall be immune from prosecution of the charges deferred.

(j) Immunity for Injury to Defendant Performing Community Service. — Immunity from liability for injury to a defendant performing community service shall be as set forth in G.S. 143B-475.1(d). (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, ss. 6, 7; 1981, c. 377, ss. 4-6; 1983, c. 435, s. 5.1; c. 561, s. 7; 1985 (Reg. Sess., 1986), c. 960, s. 1; 1993, c. 84, s. 1; 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 767, s. 6; 1995, c. 330, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsections (a) to (f) codify prior law and practice. Subsection (g) seeks to make clear the resolution of the dilemma a defendant is placed in when he is placed on probation with invalid conditions. The defendant wishes to contest the conditions but is afraid that if he does so he will be given an active sentence. Subsection (g) makes it clear that he may accept the probation and still contest the validity of the condition if his probation is later sought to be revoked for its violation. Prior law provided that alteration or revocation of probation is possible by any judge, but only a judge who enters the order may alter a suspended sentence without probation. Subsection (h), coupled with the concomitant § 15A-1344 strikes a balance between members of the Commission who felt that both supervised and unsupervised probation should be treated the same, and those who felt the traditional arrangement should be retained (because of the lack of knowledge about an unsupervised probationer available to anyone other than the sentencing judge). The compromise is that a judge placing a defendant on unsupervised probation may specify that only he is to be able to alter the unsupervised probation. In the absence of such specification, however, any judge may do so.

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1983, c. 435, s. 1, provided that that act shall be known as the Safe Roads Act of 1983.

Session Laws 1983, c. 435, s. 41.1, provided: "The original inclusion and ultimate deletion in the course of passing this act of statutory liability for certain persons who sell or furnish alcoholic beverages to intoxicated persons does not reflect any legislative intent one way or the other with respect to the issue of civil liability for negligence by persons who sell or furnish beverages to such persons."

CASE NOTES

Condition for Probation of Restitution Error where Defendant Clearly Could Not Comply. — The trial court erred in imposing a condition on defendant's probation for conviction of misdemeanor death by vehicle on the payment of $500,000 restitution, with which she clearly could not comply. State v. Smith, 90 N.C. App. 161, 368 S.E.2d 33 (1988), aff'd, 323 N.C. 703, 374 S.E.2d 866 (1989), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1100, 109 S. Ct. 2453, 104 L. Ed. 2d 1007 (1989).

Right to Object to Condition at Later Time. — This section means that a probationer is not required to object to a condition of probation at the time probation is imposed, but has the right to object "at a later time" to the condition. State v. Cooper, 304 N.C. 180, 282 S.E.2d 436 (1981).

Words "at a later time" refer to the revocation hearing. State v. Cooper, 304 N.C. 180, 282 S.E.2d 436 (1981).

Section does not mean that probationer has a perpetual right to challenge a condition of probation and exercise such right for the first time at the appellate level. State v. Cooper, 304 N.C. 180, 282 S.E.2d 436 (1981).

Defendant may not raise an initial objection to a condition of probation on appeal, but must first object no later than the revocation hearing. State v. Tozzi, 84 N.C. App. 517, 353 S.E.2d 250 (1987).

Where the record on appeal contained no written or oral objections by defendant raising the issue of a defect in the original judgment at the revocation hearing, defendant waived this issue on appeal. State v. Tozzi, 84 N.C. App. 517, 353 S.E.2d 250 (1987).

§ 15A-1343. Conditions of probation.

(a) In General. — The court may impose conditions of probation reasonably necessary to insure that the defendant will lead a law-abiding life or to assist him to do so.

(b) Regular Conditions. — As regular conditions of probation, a defendant must:

(1) Commit no criminal offense in any jurisdiction.

(2) Remain within the jurisdiction of the court unless granted written permission to leave by the court or his probation officer.

(3) Report as directed by the court or his probation officer to the officer at reasonable times and places and in a reasonable manner, permit the officer to visit him at reasonable times, answer all reasonable inquiries by the officer and obtain prior approval from the officer for, and notify the officer of, any change in address or employment.

(4) Satisfy child support and other family obligations as required by the court. If the court requires the payment of child support, the amount of the payments shall be determined as provided in G.S. 50-13.4(c).

(5) Possess no firearm, explosive device or other deadly weapon listed in G.S. 14-269 without the written permission of the court.

(6) Pay a supervision fee as specified in subsection (c1).

(7) Remain gainfully and suitably employed or faithfully pursue a course of study or of vocational training that will equip him for suitable employment. A defendant pursuing a course of study or of vocational training shall abide by all of the rules of the institution providing the education or training, and the probation officer shall forward a copy of the probation judgment to that institution and request to be notified of any violations of institutional rules by the defendant.

(8) Notify the probation officer if he fails to obtain or retain satisfactory employment.

(9) Pay the costs of court, any fine ordered by the court, and make restitution or reparation as provided in subsection (d).

(10) Pay the State of North Carolina for the costs of appointed counsel, public defender, or appellate defender to represent him in the case(s) for which he was placed on probation.

(11) At a time to be designated by his probation officer, visit with his probation officer a facility maintained by the Division of Prisons.

In addition to these regular conditions of probation, a defendant required to serve an active term of imprisonment as a condition of special probation pursuant to G.S. 15A-1344(e) or G.S. 15A-1351(a) shall, as additional regular conditions of probation, obey the rules and regulations of the Department of Correction governing the conduct of inmates while imprisoned and report to a probation officer in the State of North Carolina within 72 hours of his discharge from the active term of imprisonment.

Regular conditions of probation apply to each defendant placed on supervised probation unless the presiding judge specifically exempts the defendant from one or more of the conditions in open court and in the judgment of the court. It is not necessary for the presiding judge to state each regular condition of probation in open court, but the conditions must be set forth in the judgment of the court.

Defendants placed on unsupervised probation are subject to the provisions of this subsection, except that defendants placed on unsupervised probation are not subject to the regular conditions contained in subdivisions (2), (3), (6), (8), and (11).

(b1) Special Conditions. — In addition to the regular conditions of probation specified in subsection (b), the court may, as a condition of probation, require that during the probation the defendant comply with one or more of the following special conditions:

(1) Undergo available medical or psychiatric treatment and remain in a specified institution if required for that purpose.

(2) Attend or reside in a facility providing rehabilitation, counseling, treatment, social skills, or employment training, instruction, recreation, or residence for persons on probation.

(2a) Submit to a period of residential treatment in the Intensive Motivational Program of Alternative Correctional Treatment (IMPACT), pursuant to G.S. 15A-1343.1, for a minimum of 90 days or a maximum of 120 days and abide by all rules and regulations of that program. This condition may also include a period of supervision through the Post-Boot Camp Probation Program.

(2b) Participate in and successfully complete a Drug Treatment Court Program pursuant to Article 62 of Chapter 7A of the General Statutes.

(3) Submit to imprisonment required for special probation under G.S. 15A-1351(a) or G.S. 15A-1344(e).

(3a) Repealed by Session Laws 1997-57, s. 3.

(3b) Submit to supervision by officers assigned to the Intensive Supervision Program established pursuant to G.S. 143B-262(c), and abide by the rules adopted for that Program. Unless otherwise ordered by the court, intensive supervision also requires multiple contacts by a probation officer per week, a specific period each day during which the offender must be at his or her residence, and that the offender remain gainfully and suitably employed or faithfully pursue a course of study or of vocational training that will equip the offender for suitable employment.

(3c) Remain at his or her residence unless the court or the probation officer authorizes the offender to leave for the purpose of employment, counseling, a course of study, or vocational training. The offender shall be required to wear a device which permits the supervising agency to monitor the offender's compliance with the condition electronically.

(4) Surrender his or her driver's license to the clerk of superior court, and not operate a motor vehicle for a period specified by the court.

(5) Compensate the Department of Environment and Natural Resources or the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, as the case may be, for the replacement costs of any marine and estuarine resources or any wildlife resources which were taken, injured, removed, harmfully altered, damaged or destroyed as a result of a criminal offense of which the defendant was convicted. If any investigation is required by officers or agents of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources or the Wildlife Resources Commission in determining the extent of the destruction of resources involved, the court may include compensation of the agency for investigative costs as a condition of probation. This subdivision does not apply in any case governed by G.S. 143-215.3(a)(7).

(6) Perform community or reparation service and pay any fee required by law or ordered by the court for participation in the community or reparation service program.

(7) Submit at reasonable times to warrantless searches by a probation officer of his or her person and of his or her vehicle and premises while the probationer is present, for purposes specified by the court and reasonably related to his or her probation supervision, but the probationer may not be required to submit to any other search that would otherwise be unlawful. Whenever the warrantless search consists of testing for the presence of illegal drugs, the probationer may also be required to reimburse the Department of Correction for the actual cost of drug screening and drug testing, if the results are positive.

(8) Not use, possess, or control any illegal drug or controlled substance unless it has been prescribed for him or her by a licensed physician and is in the original container with the prescription number affixed on it; not knowingly associate with any known or previously convicted users, possessors or sellers of any such illegal drugs or controlled substances; and not knowingly be present at or frequent any place where such illegal drugs or controlled substances are sold, kept, or used.

(8a) Purchase the least expensive annual statewide license or combination of licenses to hunt, trap, or fish listed in G.S. 113-270.2, 113-270.3, 113-270.5, 113-271, 113-272, and 113-272.2 that would be required to engage lawfully in the specific activity or activities in which the defendant was engaged and which constitute the basis of the offense or offenses of which he was convicted.

(9) If the offense is one in which there is evidence of physical, mental or sexual abuse of a minor, the court should encourage the minor and the minor's parents or custodians to participate in rehabilitative treatment and may order the defendant to pay the cost of such treatment.

(9a) Attend and complete an abuser treatment program if (i) the court finds the defendant is responsible for acts of domestic violence and (ii) the program is approved by the Department of Administration.

(10) Satisfy any other conditions determined by the court to be reasonably related to his rehabilitation.

(b2) Special Conditions of Probation for Sex Offenders and Persons Convicted of Offenses Involving Physical, Mental, or Sexual Abuse of a Minor. — As special conditions of probation, a defendant who has been convicted of an offense which is a reportable conviction as defined in G.S. 14-208.6(4), or which involves the physical, mental, or sexual abuse of a minor, must:

(1) Register as required by G.S. 14-208.7 if the offense is a reportable conviction as defined by G.S. 14-208.6(4).

(2) Participate in such evaluation and treatment as is necessary to complete a prescribed course of psychiatric, psychological, or other rehabilitative treatment as ordered by the court.

(3) Not communicate with, be in the presence of, or found in or on the premises of the victim of the offense.
(4) Not reside in a household with any minor child if the offense is one in which there is evidence of sexual abuse of a minor.
(5) Not reside in a household with any minor child if the offense is one in which there is evidence of physical or mental abuse of a minor, unless the court expressly finds that it is unlikely that the defendant's harmful or abusive conduct will recur and that it would be in the minor child's best interest to allow the probationer to reside in the same household with a minor child.
(6) Satisfy any other conditions determined by the court to be reasonably related to his rehabilitation.

Defendants subject to the provisions of this subsection shall not be placed on unsupervised probation.

(c) Statement of Conditions. — A defendant released on supervised probation must be given a written statement explicitly setting forth the conditions on which he is being released. If any modification of the terms of that probation is subsequently made, he must be given a written statement setting forth the modifications.

(c1) Supervision Fee. — Any person placed on supervised probation pursuant to subsection (a) shall pay a supervision fee of twenty dollars ($20.00) per month, unless exempted by the court. The court may exempt a person from paying the fee only for good cause and upon written motion of the person placed on supervised probation. No person shall be required to pay more than one supervision fee per month. The court may require that the fee be paid in advance or in a lump sum or sums, and a probation officer may require payment by such methods if he is authorized by subsection (g) to determine the payment schedule. Supervision fees must be paid to the clerk of court for the county in which the judgment was entered or the deferred prosecution agreement was filed. Fees collected under this subsection shall be transmitted to the State for deposit into the State's General Fund.

(d) Restitution as a Condition of Probation. — As a condition of probation, a defendant may be required to make restitution or reparation to an aggrieved party or parties who shall be named by the court for the damage or loss caused by the defendant arising out of the offense or offenses committed by the defendant. When restitution or reparation is a condition imposed, the court shall take into consideration the factors set out in G.S. 15A-1340.35 and G.S. 15A-1340.36. As used herein, "reparation" shall include but not be limited to the performing of community services, volunteer work, or doing such other acts or things as shall aid the defendant in his rehabilitation. As used herein "aggrieved party" includes individuals, firms, corporations, associations, other organizations, and government agencies, whether federal, State or local, including the Crime Victims Compensation Fund established by G.S. 15B-23. A government agency may benefit by way of reparation even though the agency was not a party to the crime provided that when reparation is ordered, community service work shall be rendered only after approval has been granted by the owner or person in charge of the property or premises where the work will be done.

(e) Costs of Court and Appointed Counsel. — Unless the court finds there are extenuating circumstances, any person placed upon supervised or unsupervised probation under the terms set forth by the court shall, as a condition of probation, be required to pay all court costs and costs for appointed counsel or public defender in the case in which he was convicted. The cost of appointed counsel or public defender services shall be determined in accordance with rules adopted by the Office of Indigent Defense Services. The court shall determine the amount of those costs to be repaid and the method of payment.

(f) Repealed by Session Laws 1983, c. 561, s. 5.

(g) Probation Officer May Determine Payment Schedules. — If a person placed on supervised probation is required as a condition of that probation to pay any moneys to the clerk of superior court, the court may delegate to a probation officer the responsibility to determine the payment schedule. The court may also authorize the probation officer to transfer the person to unsupervised probation after all the moneys are paid to the clerk. If the probation officer transfers a person to unsupervised probation, he must notify the clerk of that action. OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section specifies a number of conditions of probation, primarily ones that will be used fairly frequently, that may be imposed. The list is meant neither to be exclusive nor to suggest that these conditions should be imposed in all cases. Condition (15), dealing with searches, recognizes that the ability to search a probationer in some instances is an essential element of successful probation. It includes two important limits: (1) only a probation officer, and not a law-enforcement officer, may search the probationer under this condition, and (2) the search may be only for purposes reasonably related to the probation supervision.

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1997-443, s. 19.11(b), provides that the Department of Correction may use up to $350,000 in funds available for the 1997-98 fiscal year to continue the pilot project established in s. 19(b) of c. 24 of the Session Laws of the 1994 Extra Session to provide treatment for offenders completing the IMPACT boot camp program.

Session Laws 1997-443, s. 35.2, provides: "Except for statutory changes or other provisions that clearly indicate an intention to have effects beyond the 1997-99 fiscal biennium, the textual provisions of this act apply only to funds appropriated for, and activities occurring during, the 1997-99 fiscal biennium."

Session Laws 1997-443, s. 35.4, is a severability clause.

Session Laws 1998-212, s. 17.1, provides: "Subsection (c) of Section 19 of Chapter 24 of the Session Laws of the 1994 Extra Session, as amended by Section 19.3 of Chapter 324 of the 1995 Session Laws, reads as rewritten: The Department of Correction shall evaluate the IMPACT program and the post-Boot Camp probation program funded under this section and report by March 1 of each year to the Joint Legislative Commission on Governmental Operations, the Joint Legislative Corrections and Crime Control Oversight Committee [now the Joint Legislative Corrections, Crime Control, and Juvenile Justice Oversight Committee], and the Fiscal Research Division. The evaluation of the IMPACT program and the post-Boot Camp probation program shall focus on the performance, behavior, and attitudes of the offenders while in the program. Specific topics shall include measures of participation and completion, data on completion of educational, substance abuse treatment, and community service programs, drug testing and probation revocation statistics, and the current status of IMPACT graduates. The evaluation shall also include any available information on the difference in outcome among offenders who attend the IMPACT program only, offenders who attend both the IMPACT program and aftercare, and similar offenders who receive other intermediate sanctions."

Session Laws 2001-424, s. 25.22(a) to (c), provide: "(a) Of the funds appropriated to the Department of Correction for the 2001-2003 biennium, the sum of five million twenty-eight thousand two hundred sixty-one dollars ($5,028,261) for the 2001-2002 fiscal year and the sum of four million five hundred twenty-five thousand four hundred thirty-five dollars ($4,525,435) for the 2002-2003 fiscal year shall be used for residential programs for probationers, including the IMPACT boot camp program. The Department of Correction shall maintain a residential program with a community work component for male offenders in both Hoffman and Morganton.

"(b) The Department of Correction shall report to the Chairs of the House of Representatives and Senate Appropriations Subcommittees on Justice and Public Safety and to the Joint Legislative Corrections, Crime Control, and Juvenile Justice Oversight Committee by November 1, 2001, on plans to implement the reduction in funding for the IMPACT program and any proposed modifications in the program capacity or content. The report shall include revised capacity, positions to be eliminated, revised staffing allocation, intended level of community service work, uses of any vacated space, and proposed changes in the program for the 2001-2003 biennium.

"(c) It is the intent of the General Assembly that the IMPACT boot camp program be eliminated by June 30, 2003, and that alternative residential programs for offenders be established in the current IMPACT locations. These alternative programs may include using those facilities as youth development centers or detention centers for juvenile offenders, as residential facilities for juveniles on Level 1 (community) or Level 2 (intermediate) sanctions, or for residential programs for adult offenders under the supervision of the Division of Community Corrections or the Division of Alcohol and Chemical Dependency of the Department of Correction.

"The Secretary of Correction and the Secretary of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention shall report to the Chairs of the House of Representatives and Senate Appropriations Committees and the Chairs of the House of Representatives and Senate Appropriations Subcommittees on Justice and Public Safety on the proposed programs by May 1, 2002. The report shall include details of the proposed treatment and supervision, type of offender to be served, timeline for establishment of revised program, capacity, budget, staffing, use of and need for modification of facilities, and the level of community work to be done by offenders."

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2000-125, s. 8, effective December 1, 2000, and applicable to offenses committed on or after that date, substituted the first instance of "the probationer" for "he" in subdivision (b1)(7); added subdivision (b1)(9a); and inserted "or her" in subdivisions (b1)(4), (b1)(7), and (b1)(8).

Session Laws 2000-144, s. 31, effective July 1, 2001, in subsection (e), inserted the next-to-last sentence, relating to the Office of Indigent Defense Services, and substituted "of those costs to be repaid" for "due" in the last sentence.

CASE NOTES

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under former § 15-199.

Legislative Intent. — The legislature plainly did not intend that this section import wholesale each and every condition precedent to recovery in a civil action as bearing on the trial court's requiring appropriate restitution as a condition of probation. State v. Smith, 99 N.C. App. 184, 392 S.E.2d 625 (1990).

By tying the amount which may be imposed as restitution to such compensation as could ordinarily be recovered in a civil action, the General Assembly meant only that the trial court must refer to the measure of recoverable damages applying in the relevant civil action — such as the measure of damages in a wrongful death action — for the limited purpose of computing an appropriate restitutionary amount to be imposed as a condition of probation. State v. Smith, 99 N.C. App. 184, 392 S.E.2d 625 (1990).

Conditions Which Curtail Constitutional Rights. — This section recognizes a wide variety of conditions which may be imposed upon suspension of sentence, many of which touch upon and curtail rights guaranteed by State and federal Constitutions. State v. Mitchell, 22 N.C. App. 663, 207 S.E.2d 263 (1974).

Statute of Limitations in § 1-53(4) Not Applicable. — In the context of sentencing proceedings under subsection (d) of this section, the two-year statute of limitations in § 1-53(4) pertaining to actions instituted under the wrongful death act is not applicable. State v. Smith, 99 N.C. App. 184, 392 S.E.2d 625 (1990).

Defendant must not be oppressed or unduly burdened by the suspension. State v. Simpson, 25 N.C. App. 176, 212 S.E.2d 566, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 263, 214 S.E.2d 436 (1975).

Defendant's consent does not preclude him from contesting reasonableness of condition which he has broken when such breach is made the ground for putting the prison sentence into effect. State v. Simpson, 25 N.C. App. 176, 212 S.E.2d 566, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 263, 214 S.E.2d 436 (1975).

Determination of Appropriate Conditions. — In determining appropriate conditions of a suspended sentence, it is not necessary that there be evidence to satisfy the sentencing judge beyond a reasonable doubt of the correctness of these conditions. It is sufficient that the conditions be supported by the evidence. State v. Bass, 53 N.C. App. 40, 280 S.E.2d 7 (1981).

Applicability to Juvenile. — The trial court erred in ordering a juvenile to submit to a search by any law enforcement officer without a warrant; while a trial judge can require an adult probationer to "submit at reasonable times to warrantless searches by a probation officer of his person and of his vehicle and premises while he is present, for purposes specified by the court and reasonably related to his probation supervision . . ." under this section, an adult probationer may not be required to submit to warrantless searches conducted by any officer; a juvenile is entitled to the same legal protection. In re Schrimpsher, 143 N.C. App. 461, 546 S.E.2d 407 (2001).

Discretion of Court. — The court has substantial discretion in devising conditions under subdivision (b1)(9) of this section. State v. Harrington, 78 N.C. App. 39, 336 S.E.2d 852 (1985).

A trial court need not make specific findings in support of its recommendation of work release. State v. Hunt, 80 N.C. App. 190, 341 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

Independent Findings as to Probation Violations. — Whether or not the violations of probation by the defendant were adjudicated as criminal charges was irrelevant where the judge, upon revoking defendant's probation, made independent findings of his own as to the commission of these crimes, hearing testimony from four witnesses, including the defendant himself. State v. Monroe, 83 N.C. App. 143, 349 S.E.2d 315 (1986).

A verdict acquitting the defendant of criminal charges is not binding on a judge making independent findings as to revocation of probation based upon the evidence before him or her. State v. Monroe, 83 N.C. App. 143, 349 S.E.2d 315 (1986), cert. denied, 322 N.C. 484, 370 S.E.2d 232 (1988).

Defendant may not raise an initial objection to a condition of probation on appeal, but must first object no later than the revocation hearing. State v. Tozzi, 84 N.C. App. 517, 353 S.E.2d 250 (1987).

Where the record on appeal contained no written or oral objections by defendant raising the issue of a defect in the original judgment at the revocation hearing, defendant waived this issue on appeal. State v. Tozzi, 84 N.C. App. 517, 353 S.E.2d 250 (1987).

Defendant Not Given Written Notice of Modifications. — Where a judge modified a defendant's probation and a written statement setting forth the terms of the new condition was not given to the defendant and where, subsequently, the defendant violated the new condition, the provision of subsection (c) of this section requiring written notice of modifications was mandatory and the modification of the probation terms had no effect; oral notice was not a satisfactory substitute for the written statement. State v. Suggs, 92 N.C. App. 112, 373 S.E.2d 687 (1988).

Normal Operating Cost. — When the phrase "normal operating cost" in subsection (d) of this section is interpreted to refer to overhead costs, and not to those incurred in connection with a specific prosecution, § 90-95.3(b) would not conflict with subsection (d) of this section, as the cost of analyzing drugs is incurred by the prosecution only in connection with particular cases. State v. Johnson, 124 N.C. App. 462, 478 S.E.2d 16 (1996).

Costs in Criminal Cases. — At common law, costs in criminal cases were unknown; therefore, liability for costs in criminal cases is dictated purely by statute. State v. Johnson, 124 N.C. App. 462, 478 S.E.2d 16 (1996).

Applied in State v. Stephenson, 43 N.C. App.

323, 258 S.E.2d 806 (1979); North Carolina Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Greer, 54 N.C. App. 170, 282 S.E.2d 553 (1981); State v. Seay, 59 N.C. App. 667, 298 S.E.2d 53 (1982); State v. Tedder, 62 N.C. App. 12, 302 S.E.2d 318 (1983); In re Kivett, 309 N.C. 635, 309 S.E.2d 442 (1983); State v. Rogers, 68 N.C. App. 358, 315 S.E.2d 492 (1984); State v. Hunter, 71 N.C. II. VALID CONDITIONS.

Constitutionality. — Language of subdivision (b)(1) of this section stating that a probationer must "commit no criminal offense" is not unconstitutionally vague. State v. Monroe, 83 N.C. App. 143, 349 S.E.2d 315 (1986), cert. denied, 322 N.C. 484, 370 S.E.2d 232 (1988).

Condition directly related to and growing out of the offense for which the defendant is convicted, and consistent with proper punishment for the crime, neither violates the defendant's constitutional rights nor is otherwise unreasonable. State v. Simpson, 25 N.C. App. 176, 212 S.E.2d 566, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 263, 214 S.E.2d 436 (1975).

Where defendant had been convicted of disseminating obscene materials, trial court did not abuse its discretion when it imposed as a condition of defendant's probation that he refrain from "working in any retail establishment that sells sexually explicit materials." State v. Johnston, 123 N.C. App. 292, 473 S.E.2d 25 (1996).

Legislature intended the "reasonably related" language of subdivision (b)(17) (which is now subdivision (b1)(9)) to serve as a check on the discretion of judges in devising conditions of probation. Where the judge elects to impose one of the conditions enumerated by this section, no such check is needed since the legislature has deemed all of these conditions "appropriate" to the rehabilitation of criminals and their assimilation into law-abiding society. State v. Parker, 55 N.C. App. 643, 286 S.E.2d 366 (1982).

Condition that Defendant Remain Law-Abiding. — Upon conviction of a misdemeanor, judgment was entered that defendant be imprisoned in the county jail for a term of eight months, with further provision that execution of the judgment should be suspended upon the payment of a fine and upon further condition that defendant remain law-abiding for a period of five years. It was held that the condition upon which execution was suspended was two-fold; first, the payment of the fine and, second, that defendant remain law-abiding for a term of five years; and upon conviction of defendant of a subsequent violation of the criminal law within the period of five years, the order of the court putting into effect the suspended execution is proper, notwithstanding defendant had paid the fine, defendant's contention that judgment suspending execution did not contemplate imprisonment if the fine should be paid, being untenable. State v. Wilson, 216 N.C. 130, 4 S.E.2d 440 (1939).

Condition that a probationer avoid injurious or vicious habits is a valid condition of probation. State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476 (1967).

Condition that probationer shall avoid persons or places of disreputable or harmful character, is within the power of the court to impose. State v. Boggs, 16 N.C. App. 403, 192 S.E.2d 29 (1972).

Condition That Probationer Stay Away from Children. — Where probation condition stated that defendant "shall not be in the presence of any child, male or female, under the age of 16 years, at any time", the term "presence" was not unconstitutionally vague. State v. White, 129 N.C. App. 52, 496 S.E.2d 842 (1998), cert. denied, 348 N.C. 508, 510 S.E.2d 670 (1998), aff'd, 350 N.C. 302, 512 S.E.2d 424 (1999).

The requirement that defendant attend Alcoholics Anonymous meetings during the period of his supervised probation at least two times per week and that defendant provide his probation officer with verification of such attendance was reasonably related to defendant's rehabilitation. State v. McGill, 114 N.C. App. 479, 442 S.E.2d 166 (1994).

Interpretation of "Disreputable or Harmful Character." — In the exercise of common reasoning in the interpretation and understanding of the meaning of the English language, persons who use heroin and marijuana and who have been convicted of a conspiracy to bomb an occupied building are "persons of a disreputable or harmful character." State v. Boggs, 16 N.C. App. 403, 192 S.E.2d 29 (1972).

Condition of Consent to Warrantless Search. — Conditions of the prior suspended sentences by which defendants gave consent to search of their premises at reasonable hours without a search warrant were valid. State v. Mitchell, 22 N.C. App. 663, 207 S.E.2d 263 (1974).

Voluntary waiver and consent to a warrantless search of one's premises may effectively be given by agreeing thereto as one of the conditions of a suspended sentence, and this should especially be true where such a condition is clearly designed to facilitate the State's supervision of the probationer's rehabilitation. State v. Mitchell, 22 N.C. App. 663, 207 S.E.2d 263 (1974).

Effect of Consent to Warrantless Search. — Where defendants agreed to consent to a warrantless search of their premises as a condition of a suspended sentence, officers appearing to conduct the search did not have the right to break unannounced into defendants' home. They should have first announced their presence and requested entry. Had entry been refused, defendants as probationers could have been cited for violation of the terms of their probation, and upon a finding that the conditions had been violated, the previously suspended sentences could have been put into effect. State v. Mitchell, 22 N.C. App. 663, 207 S.E.2d 263 (1974).

Requiring Submission to Search by Any Officer Is Invalid. — Under subdivision (b)(15) (now subdivision (b1)(7)) of this section, a condition of probation that a defendant submit to a search by any law enforcement officer without a warrant is invalid. State v. Grant, 40 N.C. App. 58, 252 S.E.2d 98 (1979); State v. McCoy, 45 N.C. App. 686, 263 S.E.2d 801, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 300 N.C. 378, 267 S.E.2d 681 (1980).

Where subdivision (b)(15) (now subdivision (b1)(7)) was inapplicable because defendant was convicted before the effective date of this section, waiver by the defendant of his constitutional right against a search without a warrant by a law enforcement officer was a valid condition of the suspension of his sentence and probation. State v. Moore, 37 N.C. App. 729, 247 S.E.2d 250 (1978).

Fruit of Unlawful Search Is Admissible to Revoke Probation. — Although a court cannot require, as a condition of probation, that the probationer submit to unlawful searches, it is able to admit evidence obtained from an unlawful search to revoke the probation. To exclude it would not further the interest of deterring police misconduct. State v. Lombardo, 306 N.C. 594, 295 S.E.2d 399 (1982).

Physical Examination for Detection of Drugs. — A condition of defendant's probation requiring him to submit to physical testing or examination at the request of his probation officer for the detection of drugs or controlled substances was directly related to and grew out of the offense for which defendant was convicted and was therefore reasonable, and it was not an invalid condition of probation under subdivision (b)(15) (now subdivision (b1)(7)) of this section. State v. McCoy, 45 N.C. App. 686, 263 S.E.2d 801, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 300 N.C. 378, 267 S.E.2d 681 (1980).

Where defendant was convicted of driving while impaired, the court did not err in imposing, as a condition of probation, the requirement that defendant not go upon the premises of any business or private club licensed by the state for the sale or the on-premises consumption of alcoholic beverages between 8:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m. the following day, as such condition was reasonably aimed at preventing recurrence of the subject misconduct by keeping defendant away from alcohol in public places during the hours when he would most likely be tempted to drink and drive. State v. Harrington, 78 N.C. App. 39, 336 S.E.2d 852 (1985).

III. INVALID CONDITIONS.

Condition which violates defendant's constitutional rights and, therefore, beyond the power of the court to impose is per se unreasonable. State v. Simpson, 25 N.C. App. 176, 212 S.E.2d 566, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 263, 214 S.E.2d 436 (1975).

IV. RESTITUTION.

Constitutionality. — The constitutionality of a reparation requirement may only be considered if and when restitution is ordered. State v. Arnette, 67 N.C. App. 194, 312 S.E.2d 547 (1984).

The constitutionality of a reparation requirement may only be determined by considering defendant's financial status at the time when restitution may be paid. Because restitution has not been imposed as a condition of parole or work release, there has been no equal protection violation here. State v. Arnette, 67 N.C. App. 194, 312 S.E.2d 547 (1984).

A requirement that a defendant pay restitution as a condition of parole or work release is not inherently unconstitutional. State v. Arnette, 67 N.C. App. 194, 312 S.E.2d 547 (1984).

The provision in subsection (d) of this section "that no third party shall benefit by way of restitution or reparation as a result of liability of that third party to pay indemnity to an aggrieved party for the damage or loss caused by the defendant" does not violate the equal protection clause of the federal Constitution or N.C. Const., Art. I, § 19 or N.C. Const., Art. I, § 32. State v. Stanley, 79 N.C. App. 379, 339 S.E.2d 668 (1986).

Purpose of Reparation Is Not Punitive. — The purpose of § 148-33.2 and subdivision (b)(6) (now subdivision (b)(9)) of this section is rehabilitation and not additional penalty or punishment, and the sum ordered or recommended must be reasonably related to the damages incurred. If the trial evidence does not support the amount ordered or recommended, then supporting evidence should be required in the sentencing hearing. State v. Killian, 37 N.C. App. 234, 245 S.E.2d 812 (1978).

Restitution is intended to be compensatory, not punitive. State v. Easter, 101 N.C. App. 36, 398 S.E.2d 619 (1990).

What Restitution Orders Are Constitutionally Valid. — If a restitution order is directly related to the criminal offense for which the defendant was convicted, it is constitutionally valid. State v. Froneberger, 81 N.C. App. 398, 344 S.E.2d 344 (1986).

For an order of restitution to be valid it must be related to the criminal act for which defendant was convicted, or else the provision may run afoul of the constitutional provision prohibiting imprisonment for debt. State v. Froneberger, 81 N.C. App. 398, 344 S.E.2d 344 (1986).

Necessity of Findings of Fact. — The trial court is not required to make specific findings of fact in support of its recommendation of work release. However, any order or recommendation for restitution to the aggrieved party as a condition of obtaining work release must be supported by the evidence. State v. Burkhead, 85 N.C. App. 535, 355 S.E.2d 175 (1987).

Restitution Is an Option. — Restitution, imposed as a condition of probation, is not a legal obligation equivalent to a civil judgment, but rather an option which may be voluntarily exercised by the defendant for the purpose of avoiding the serving of an active sentence. State v. Smith, 99 N.C. App. 184, 392 S.E.2d 625 (1990).

Restitution Does Not Affect Victim's Right to Institute Civil Action. — An imposition of restitution does not affect, and is not affected by, the victim's right to institute a civil action against the defendant based on the same conduct. State v. Smith, 99 N.C. App. 184, 392 S.E.2d 625 (1990).

Restitution cannot be comprised of punitive damages. State v. Burkhead, 85 N.C. App. 535, 355 S.E.2d 175 (1987).

Restitution Cannot Be Imposed with Active Prison Sentence. — When the court imposes an active sentence, it may recommend restitution as a condition of work-release or as a condition of post-release supervision and parole or as a condition of probation, but it may not require the defendant to make restitution while serving an active sentence. State v. Hughes, 136 N.C. App. 92, 524 S.E.2d 63 (1999).

Court Not Required to Consider Ability to Pay. — Trial court did not err in failing to consider defendant's ability to pay restitution, as the potentially binding determination at a later date requiring defendant to pay restitution as a condition of work release or parole by either the Department of Correction or the Parole Commission would by necessity require sufficient evidence of defendant's ability to pay at that time. State v. Wilson, 340 N.C. 720, 459 S.E.2d 192 (1995).

Condition for Probation of Restitution Error Where Defendant Clearly Could Not Comply. — The trial court erred in imposing a condition on defendant's probation for conviction of misdemeanor death by vehicle on the payment of $500,000 restitution, with which she clearly could not comply. State v. Smith, 90 N.C. App. 161, 368 S.E.2d 33 (1988), aff'd, 323 N.C. 703, 374 S.E.2d 866, cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1100, 109 S. Ct. 2453, 104 L. Ed. 2d 1007 (1989).

Trial court erred where it conditioned probation on an amount of restitution the defendant clearly could not pay. State v. Hayes, 113 N.C. App. 172, 437 S.E.2d 717 (1993).

Subsection (d) merely precludes an indemnitor from receiving court-ordered restitution as a condition of a criminal defendant's probation. An indemnitor's right to pursue civil remedies against the criminal defendant, or against the insured to recover funds paid by the criminal defendant to the insured, remains intact. State v. Stanley, 79 N.C. App. 379, 339 S.E.2d 668 (1986).

Reparation of injuries to a party aggrieved as a result of or incident to an offense committed by a criminal defendant as a condition to suspension of sentence has long been recognized in North Carolina judicially and by statute. State v. Gallamore, 6 N.C. App. 608, 170 S.E.2d 573 (1969).

Subdivision (b)(6) (now subdivision (b)(9)) of this section permits the court, as a condition of probation, to require a defendant to make restitution or reparation for loss or injury resulting from the crime for which the defendant is convicted. The amount determined must be limited to that supported by the evidence. It may, but does not necessarily represent the amount of damages that might be recoverable as a result of a civil action. Shew v. Southern Fire & Cas. Co., 307 N.C. 438, 298 S.E.2d 380 (1983).

It is well settled that the trial court has discretionary authority to recommend restitution as a condition of obtaining parole. Further, any order or recommendation of the trial court for restitution must be supported by the evidence. State v. Malloy, 60 N.C. App. 218, 298 S.E.2d 735, rev'd on other grounds, 309 N.C. 176, 305 S.E.2d 718 (1983).

Restitution should not be used as a substitute for determination in the proper forum of a defendant's civil liability: Criminal and civil liability are not synonymous. A criminal conviction does not necessarily establish the existence of civil liability. Civil liability need not be established as a prerequisite to the requirement of restitution as a probation condition. Shew v.

Southern Fire & Cas. Co., 307 N.C. 438, 298 S.E.2d 380 (1983).

The "duty to pay reparations does not affect, and is not affected by, the victim's right to institute a civil action for damages against the defendant based on the same conduct, although, if the victim recovers, a setoff might be ordered for the money already received by the victim under the condition of probation." Shew v. Southern Fire & Cas. Co., 307 N.C. 438, 298 S.E.2d 380 (1983).

Although the North Carolina Supreme Court has never definitively decided the issue, there is persuasive authority in North Carolina law supporting the State's right to claim the status of an aggrieved party for the expenses associated with providing court-appointed counsel. Alexander v. Johnson, 742 F.2d 117 (4th Cir. 1984).

North Carolina, like every jurisdiction, has an irrevocable constitutional duty to provide court-appointed counsel to an indigent defendant once he requests it. The developing jurisprudence in this area, however, does not require the State to absorb the expenses of providing such counsel when the defendant has acquired the financial ability to pay. Alexander v. Johnson, 742 F.2d 117 (4th Cir. 1984).

The North Carolina Legislature has included government agencies, whether federal, State or local in its definition of an aggrieved party. This definition, however, also contains an important proviso limiting the inmate's restitution obligations to particular and definite expenses not related to the government agency's normal operating costs. Alexander v. Johnson, 742 F.2d 117 (4th Cir. 1984).

Order Must Be Supported by Evidence. — Together §§ 148-33.2(c) and subdivision (b)(6) (now subdivision (b)(9)) of this section require that any order or recommendation of the sentencing court for restitution or restoration to the aggrieved party as a condition of attaining work-release privileges must be supported by the evidence. State v. Killian, 37 N.C. App. 234, 245 S.E.2d 812 (1978).

A recommendation of restitution must be supported by the evidence before the trial court. State v. Hunt, 80 N.C. App. 190, 341 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

A trial court's award of restitution must be supported by competent evidence in the record. State v. Buchanan, 108 N.C. App. 338, 423 S.E.2d 819 (1992).

Amount of Restitution Must Be Supported by Evidence. — Regardless of whether restitution is ordered or recommended by the trial court, the amount must be supported by the evidence. State v. Daye, 78 N.C. App. 753, 338 S.E.2d 557 (1986), aff'd per curiam, 318 N.C. 502, 349 S.E.2d 576 (1986).

State v. Wilson, 340 N.C. 720, 459 S.E.2d 192 (1995).

Fair Market Value as Measure of Restitution. — The court could order defendant to pay to victim a sum no higher than the largest figure contained in the evidence representing fair market value as a condition of probation, where defendant destroyed victim's automobile in the course of unauthorized use of it. State v. Maynard, 79 N.C. App. 451, 339 S.E.2d 666 (1986).

This section does not require the trial judge to find and enter facts when imposing a judgment of probation. Rather, it requires the court to take into consideration the resources of defendant, her ability to earn, her obligation to support dependents, and such other matters as shall pertain to her ability to make restitution or reparation. State v. Hunter, 315 N.C. 371, 338 S.E.2d 99 (1986).

Law-Enforcement Agencies Are Not "Victims". — North Carolina statutes authorize the imposition of a condition upon parole eligibility of restitution to victims of crime who have suffered economic loss as a result of that crime, but law-enforcement agencies are not within the class of such victims. Evans v. Garrison, 657 F.2d 64 (4th Cir. 1981).

North Carolina Bureau of Investigation is not a "victim of crime" within the meaning of subsection (d) of this section. It could qualify as such a victim if it suffered losses through embezzlement, but its expenses in investigating drug offenses are among its normal operating costs, restitution of which is specifically excluded by the statute. Evans v. Garrison, 657 F.2d 64 (4th Cir. 1981).

Expenses of Investigating Charges May Not Be Charged to Defendant. — Where, following guilty pleas to drug offenses pursuant to a plea bargain, the trial court ordered as a condition of parole that defendants reimburse the Bureau of Investigation Drug Division for the expenses it had incurred in investigating the charges and obtaining the proof, imposition of the condition without having advised defendants of it before acceptance of their pleas made their pleas both involuntary and unintelligent, since the condition was illegal under state law and quite unanticipated in connection with the plea bargains, and since it clearly was a special limitation on parole eligibility. Evans v. Garrison, 657 F.2d 64 (4th Cir. 1981).

Restitution of Amount Paid by State. — Where defendant was convicted of possession and delivery of cocaine, and the trial court offered him the option of serving a three-year active sentence or serving six months and paying $600.00 restitution, and the amount ordered was patently relevant to the pecuniary injury inflicted upon the State by defendant's criminal activities, in that $600.00 was paid by an agent of the State for the purchase of cocaine, the restitution ordered was reasonably related to the rehabilitative objectives of probation, and the condition was reasonable and just under the circumstances of the case. State v. Stallings, 316 N.C. 535, 342 S.E.2d 519 (1986).

Pawnbrokers as "Aggrieved Parties." — Where, shortly after defendant committed larceny, he presented the stolen items to pawnshops as collateral for loans, and the stolen items were returned to the rightful owner, so that the pawnbrokers thus lost the collateral that secured their loans and were at risk of loss or damage if the loans were not repaid, under the particular facts presented, the pawnbrokers were within the meaning and intent of the phrase "aggrieved parties" as used in subsection (d) of this section and were proper subjects for restitution as a condition of defendant's probation. State v. Froneberger, 81 N.C. App. 398, 344 S.E.2d 344 (1986).

Restitution as a condition of a criminal judgment cannot include the requirement that defendant return, to the loser, money paid on a gambling debt. State v. Hair, 114 N.C. App. 464, 442 S.E.2d 163 (1994).

Neither the Parole Commission nor the Department of Correction is bound by the judge's recommendation of restitution as a condition of parole or work release. State v. Arnette, 67 N.C. App. 194, 312 S.E.2d 547 (1984).

A recommendation of restitution as a condition of work-release is not binding on the Parole Commission or Department of Corrections. State v. Daye, 78 N.C. App. 753, 338 S.E.2d 557, aff'd per curiam, 318 N.C. 502, 349 S.E.2d 576 (1986).

There is no single model to which all State repayment programs must conform. However, the Supreme Court in Fuller v. Oregon, 417 U.S. 40, 94 S. Ct. 2116, 40 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1974); and James v. Strange, 407 U.S. 128, 92 S. Ct. 2027, 32 L. Ed. 2d 600 (1972), has carefully identified the basic features separating a constitutionally acceptable recoupment or restitution program from one that is fatally defective. Alexander v. Johnson, 742 F.2d 117 (4th Cir. 1984).

North Carolina's procedures for imposing the reimbursement of court-appointed counsel fees as a condition of parole are narrowly drawn to avoid unfairness and discriminatory effects. Alexander v. Johnson, 742 F.2d 117 (4th Cir. 1984).

Though far from a paragon of clarity and detail as a complete program, the North Carolina statutes relating to the repayment of attorneys' fees by restitution embody all the required features of a constitutionally acceptable approach. The indigent defendant's fundamental right to counsel is preserved under the North Carolina statute and no preconditions are placed on the exercise of that right beyond a reasonable and minimally intrusive procedure designed to establish the fact of indigency. Alexander v. Johnson, 742 F.2d 117 (4th Cir. 1984).

Review of Court's Recommendation. — Where there is some evidence as to the appropriate amount of restitution, the trial court's recommendation will not be overruled on appeal. State v. Hunt, 80 N.C. App. 190, 341 S.E.2d 350 (1986).

Award Denied Because of Lack of Evidence of Pain and Suffering. — Even if a trial court's recommendation of restitution can include damages for pain and suffering, where the only evidence supporting the amount of restitution was that the victim had unpaid medical bills in the amount of $442.00, and there was no evidence as to the amount of the victim's pain and suffering, the evidence as reported in the record did not support restitution in the amount of $5,000.00. State v. Burkhead, 85 N.C. App. 535, 355 S.E.2d 175 (1987).

Award Not Supported by Evidence. — Where an exhaustive review of the record revealed that no evidence was presented at trial or at sentencing which supported the figures offered by the State, the trial court therefore based the amount of restitution only upon the unsworn statements of the prosecutor, which did not constitute evidence and could not support the amount of restitution recommended. State v. Buchanan, 108 N.C. App. 338, 423 S.E.2d 819 (1992).

Order Vacated. — Order requiring defendant to pay one-third of his income to the clerk was vacated where the record revealed only that the victim was separated from his wife, and that they had two children who lived with their mother at the time the victim died. State v. Easter, 101 N.C. App. 36, 398 S.E.2d 619 (1990).

§ 15A-1343.1. Criteria for selection and sentencing to IMPACT.

The Intensive Motivational Program of Alternative Correctional Treatment (IMPACT) shall be a residential program within the meaning of G.S. 15A-1340.11(8), operated by the Department of Correction. The criteria for selecting and sentencing offenders to the Intensive Motivational Program of Alternative Correctional Treatment as provided under G.S. 15A-1343(b1)(2a) shall be as follows:

(1) The offender must be between the ages of 16 and 30;
(2) The offender must be convicted of a Class 1 misdemeanor, Class A1 misdemeanor, or a felony;
(3) The offender must submit to a medical evaluation by a physician approved by his probation or parole officer and must be certified by the physician to be medically fit for program participation.
(4) Repealed by Session Laws 1995, c. 446, s. 1. (1989 (Reg. Sess., 1990), c. 1010, s. 3; 1993, c. 538, s. 17; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1995, c. 446, s. 1; c. 507, s. 19.5(h); 1998-212, s. 17.21(b).)

§ 15A-1343.2. Special probation rules for persons sentenced under Article 81B.

(a) Applicability. — This section applies only to persons sentenced under Article 81B of this Chapter.

(b) Purposes of Probation for Community and Intermediate Punishments. — The Department of Correction shall develop a plan to handle offenders sentenced to community and intermediate punishments. The probation program designed to handle these offenders shall have the following principal purposes: to hold offenders accountable for making restitution, to ensure compliance with the court's judgment, to effectively rehabilitate offenders by directing them to specialized treatment or education programs, and to protect the public safety.

(c) Probation Caseload Goals. — It is the goal of the General Assembly that, subject to the availability of funds, caseloads for probation officers supervising persons sentenced to community punishment should not exceed an average of 90 offenders per officer, and caseloads for offenders sentenced to intermediate punishments should not exceed an average of 60 offenders per officer by July 1, 1998.

(d) Lengths of Probation Terms Under Structured Sentencing. — Unless the court makes specific findings that longer or shorter periods of probation are necessary, the length of the original period of probation for offenders sentenced under Article 81B shall be as follows:

(1) For misdemeanants sentenced to community punishment, not less than six nor more than 18 months;
(2) For misdemeanants sentenced to intermediate punishment, not less than 12 nor more than 24 months;
(3) For felons sentenced to community punishment, not less than 12 nor more than 30 months; and
(4) For felons sentenced to intermediate punishment, not less than 18 nor more than 36 months.

If the court finds at the time of sentencing that a longer period of probation is necessary, that period may not exceed a maximum of five years, as specified in G.S. 15A-1342 and G.S. 15A-1351.

Extension. — The court may with the consent of the offender extend the original period of the probation if necessary to complete a program of restitution or to complete medical or psychiatric treatment ordered as a condition of probation. This extension may be for no more than three years, and may only be ordered in the last six months of the original period of probation.

(e) Delegation to Probation Officer in Community Punishment. — Unless the presiding judge specifically finds in the judgment of the court that delegation is not appropriate, the Division of Community Corrections in the Department of Correction may require an offender sentenced to community punishment to:

(1) Perform up to 20 hours of community service, and pay the fee prescribed by law for this supervision;

(2) Report to the offender's probation officer on a frequency to be determined by the officer; or

(3) Submit to substance abuse assessment, monitoring or treatment.

If the Division imposes any of the above requirements, then it may subsequently reduce or remove those same requirements.

If the probation officer exercises authority delegated by the court pursuant to this subsection, the offender may file a motion with the court to review the action taken by the probation officer. The offender shall be given notice of the right to seek such a court review. The Division may exercise any authority delegated to it under this subsection only if it first determines that the offender has failed to comply with one or more of the conditions of probation imposed by the court.

(f) Delegation to Probation Officer in Intermediate Punishments. — Unless the presiding judge specifically finds in the judgment of the court that delegation is not appropriate, the Division of Community Corrections in the Department of Correction may require an offender sentenced to intermediate punishment to:

(1) Perform up to 50 hours of community service, and pay the fee prescribed by law for this supervision;

(2) Submit to a curfew which requires the offender to remain in a specified place for a specified period each day and wear a device that permits the offender's compliance with the condition to be monitored electronically;

(3) Submit to substance abuse assessment, monitoring or treatment; or

(4) Participate in an educational or vocational skills development program.

If the Division imposes any of the above requirements, then it may subsequently reduce or remove those same requirements.

If the probation officer exercises authority delegated to him or her by the court pursuant to this subsection, the offender may file a motion with the court to review the action taken by the probation officer. The offender shall be given notice of the right to seek such a court review. The Division may exercise any authority delegated to it under this subsection only if it first determines that the offender has failed to comply with one or more of the conditions of probation imposed by the court.

(g) Repealed by Session Laws 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 19, s. 3.

(h) Definitions. — For purposes of this section, the definitions in G.S. 15A-1340.11 apply. (1993, c. 538, s. 17.1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 14, s. 22; c. 19, s. 3; c. 24, s. 14(b); 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 767, s. 8; 1997-57, s. 4; 2001-487, s. 47(b).)

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-487, s. 47(b), effective December 16, 2001, substituted "Community Corrections" for "Adult Probation and Parole" in the introductory language of subsections (e) and (f).

CASE NOTES

Resentencing was required for defendant's reckless driving conviction when trial court sentenced defendant to a longer period than that provided in this section without making the required finding. State v. Cardwell, 133 N.C. App. 496, 516 S.E.2d 388 (1999).

Findings Required for Exceptional Probation Terms. — Trial court erred in placing defendant on supervised probation for a period of 60 months without making findings that a period longer than 36 months was necessary. State v. Hughes, 136 N.C. App. 92, 524 S.E.2d 63 (1999).

§ 15A-1344. Response to violations; alteration and revocation.

(a) Authority to Alter or Revoke. — Except as provided in subsection (b), probation may be reduced, terminated, continued, extended, modified, or revoked by any judge entitled to sit in the court which imposed probation and who is resident or presiding in the district court district as defined in G.S. 7A-133 or superior court district or set of districts as defined in G.S. 7A-41.1, as the case may be, where the sentence of probation was imposed, where the probationer violates probation, or where the probationer resides. Upon a finding that an offender sentenced to community punishment under Article 81B has violated one or more conditions of probation, the court's authority to modify the probation judgment includes the authority to require the offender to comply with conditions of probation that would otherwise make the sentence an intermediate punishment. The district attorney of the prosecutorial district as defined in G.S. 7A-60 in which probation was imposed must be given reasonable notice of any hearing to affect probation substantially.

(b) Limits on Jurisdiction to Alter or Revoke Unsupervised Probation. — If the sentencing judge has entered an order to limit jurisdiction to consider a sentence of unsupervised probation under G.S. 15A-1342(h), a sentence of unsupervised probation may be reduced, terminated, continued, extended, modified, or revoked only by the sentencing judge or, if the sentencing judge is no longer on the bench, by a presiding judge in the court where the defendant was sentenced.

(c) Procedure on Altering or Revoking Probation; Returning Probationer to District Where Sentenced. — When a judge reduces, terminates, extends, modifies, or revokes probation outside the county where the judgment was entered, the clerk must send a copy of the order and any other records to the court where probation was originally imposed. A court on its own motion may return the probationer to the district court district as defined in G.S. 7A-133 or superior court district or set of districts as defined in G.S. 7A-41.1, as the case may be, where probation was imposed or where the probationer resides for reduction, termination, continuation, extension, modification, or revocation of probation. In cases where the probation is revoked in a county other than the county of original conviction the clerk in that county must issue a commitment order and must file the order revoking probation and the commitment order, which will constitute sufficient permanent record of the proceeding in that court, and must send a certified copy of the order revoking probation, the commitment order, and all other records pertaining thereto to the county of original conviction to be filed with the original records. The clerk in the county other than the county of original conviction must issue the formal commitment to the North Carolina Department of Correction.

(d) Extension and Modification; Response to Violations. — At any time prior to the expiration or termination of the probation period, the court may after notice and hearing and for good cause shown extend the period of probation up to the maximum allowed under G.S. 15A-1342(a) and may modify the conditions of probation. The probation period shall be tolled if the probationer shall have pending against him criminal charges in any court of competent jurisdiction, which, upon conviction, could result in revocation proceedings against him for violation of the terms of this probation. The hearing may be held in the absence of the defendant, if he fails to appear for the hearing after a reasonable effort to notify him. If a convicted defendant violates a condition of probation at any time prior to the expiration or termination of the period of probation, the court, in accordance with the provisions of G.S. 15A-1345, may continue him on probation, with or without modifying the conditions, may place the defendant on special probation as provided in subsection (e), or, if continuation, modification, or special probation is not appropriate, may revoke the probation and activate the suspended sentence imposed at the time of initial sentencing, if any, or may order that charges as to which prosecution has been deferred be brought to trial; provided that probation may not be revoked solely for conviction of a Class 3 misdemeanor. The court, before activating a sentence to imprisonment established when the defendant was placed on probation, may reduce the sentence, but the reduction shall be consistent with subsection (d1) of this section. A sentence activated upon revocation of probation commences on the day probation is revoked and runs concurrently with any other period of probation, parole, or imprisonment to which the defendant is subject during that period unless the revoking judge specifies that it is to run consecutively with the other period.

(d1) Reduction of Initial Sentence. — If the court elects to reduce the sentence of imprisonment for a felony, it shall not deviate from the range of minimum durations established in Article 81B of this Chapter for the class of offense and prior record level used in determining the initial sentence. If the presumptive range is used for the initial suspended sentence, the reduced sentence shall be within the presumptive range. If the mitigated range is used for the initial suspended sentence, the reduced sentence shall be within the mitigated range. If the aggravated range is used for the initial suspended sentence, the reduced sentence shall be within the aggravated range. If the court elects to reduce the sentence for a misdemeanor, it shall not deviate from the range of durations established in Article 81B for the class of offense and prior conviction level used in determining the initial sentence.

(e) Special Probation in Response to Violation. — When a defendant has violated a condition of probation, the court may modify his probation to place him on special probation as provided in this subsection. In placing him on special probation, the court may continue or modify the conditions of his probation and in addition require that he submit to a period or periods of imprisonment, either continuous or noncontinuous, at whatever time or intervals within the period of probation the court determines. In addition to any other conditions of probation which the court may impose, the court shall impose, when imposing a period or periods of imprisonment as a condition of special probation, the condition that the defendant obey the Rules and Regulations of the Department of Correction governing conduct of inmates, and this condition shall apply to the defendant whether or not the court imposes it as a part of the written order. If imprisonment is for continuous periods, the confinement may be in either the custody of the Department of Correction or a local confinement facility. Noncontinuous periods of imprisonment under special probation may only be served in a designated local confinement or treatment facility. Except for probationary sentences for impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1, the total of all periods of confinement imposed as an incident of special probation, but not including an activated suspended sentence, may not exceed six months or one fourth the maximum sentence of imprisonment imposed for the offense, whichever is less. For probationary sentences for impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1, the total of all periods of confinement imposed as an incident of special probation, but not including an activated suspended sentence, shall not exceed one-fourth the maximum penalty allowed by law. No confinement other than an activated suspended sentence may be required beyond the period of probation or beyond two years of the time the special probation is imposed, whichever comes first.

(e1) Criminal Contempt in Response to Violation. — If a defendant willfully violates a condition of probation, the court may hold the defendant in criminal contempt as provided in Article 1 of Chapter 5A of the General Statutes. A finding of criminal contempt by the court shall not revoke the probation. If the offender serves a sentence for contempt in a local confinement facility, the Department of Correction shall pay for the confinement at the standard rate set by the General Assembly pursuant to G.S. 148-32.1(a) regardless of whether the offender would be eligible under the terms of that subsection.

(f) Revocation after Period of Probation. — The court may revoke probation after the expiration of the period of probation if:

(1) Before the expiration of the period of probation the State has filed a written motion with the clerk indicating its intent to conduct a revocation hearing; and

(2) The court finds that the State has made reasonable effort to notify the probationer and to conduct the hearing earlier. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, ss. 11, 11A, 13A; 1979, c. 749, ss. 1-3; 1981, c. 377, s. 7; 1983, c. 536; 1987, (Reg. Sess., 1988), c. 1037, ss. 67, 68; 1993, c. 538, s. 18; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 19, s. 2; c. 24, s. 14(b); 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 767, s. 9; c. 769, s. 21.7(a); 1998-212, s. 17.21(c).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Except for subsection (b), discussed in the commentary to G.S. 15A-1342, the first several subsections codified prior law and practice. Subsection (e) permits the imposition of special probation, of the same kind that may be imposed in sentencing in the first instance under § 15A-1351(a), following a probation violation. Subsection (f) provides that probation can be revoked and the probationer made to serve a period of active imprisonment even after the period of probation has expired if a violation occurred during the period and if the court was unable to bring the probationer before it in order to revoke at that time.

CASE NOTES

Grant of probation is a privilege afforded by the court and not a right to which a felon is entitled. State v. Coltrane, 58 N.C. App. 210, 292 S.E.2d 736 (1982), rev'd on other grounds, 307 N.C. 511, 299 S.E.2d 199 (1983).

Court Has Discretion to Run Revoked Probation Sentence Either Concurrently or Consecutively with Other Sentences. — Where at the time defendant's probation was revoked, he was subject to a separate term of imprisonment of 10 years, it was therefore within the authority and discretion of the judge revoking defendant's probation to run the sentence either concurrently or consecutively. State v. Campbell, 90 N.C. App. 761, 370 S.E.2d 79, appeal dismissed, 323 N.C. 367, 373 S.E.2d 550 (1988).

Subsection (d), which allows the court to activate defendant's suspended probationary sentence and to run it consecutively to another sentence, does not violate the double jeopardy clauses of the U.S. Constitution and the N.C. Constitution. State v. Campbell, 90 N.C. App. 761, 370 S.E.2d 79, appeal dismissed, 323 N.C. 367, 373 S.E.2d 550 (1988).

This section permits the trial court to impose a consecutive sentence when a suspended sentence is activated upon revocation of a probationary judgment without regard to whether the sentence previously imposed ran concurrently or consecutively. State v. Paige, 90 N.C. App. 112, 369 S.E.2d 606 (1988).

Reduction of Prison Sentence. — Subsection (d) authorizes the court to reduce a prison sentence previously imposed only when prison sentence is activated and probation is revoked. State v. Mills, 86 N.C. App. 479, 358 S.E.2d 86 (1987).

Effect of Consent to Probation Conditions. — By consenting to the conditions of probation, defendants do nothing more than acknowledge that they are "subject to" imposition of the original sentence. They do not forfeit their right to a knowing and voluntary waiver of counsel in a subsequent probation revocation hearing. State v. Warren, 82 N.C. App. 84, 345 S.E.2d 437 (1986).

Power of Court to Revoke Suspension. — Absent specific prohibition by the legislature, courts have the power to suspend sentence in their discretion. Obviously, if the sentence is suspended on lawful conditions, the court can revoke the suspension for a violation that occurs during the term of the suspension, even though the act occurs after a period of supervised probation has expired. State v. Cannady, 59 N.C. App. 212, 296 S.E.2d 327 (1982).

When Suspended Sentence May Be Put into Effect. — When a sentence has been suspended and defendant placed on probation on certain named conditions, the court may, at any time during the period of probation, require defendant to appear before it, inquire into alleged violations of the conditions, and, if found to be true, place the suspended sentence into effect. But the State may not do so after the expiration of the period of probation except as provided in subsection (f) of this section. State v. Camp, 299 N.C. 524, 263 S.E.2d 592 (1980).

Court is given considerable discretion in determining whether good cause exists for modifying the terms of probation. State v. Coltrane, 58 N.C. App. 210, 292 S.E.2d 736 (1982), rev'd on other grounds, 307 N.C. 511, 299 S.E.2d 199 (1983).

Under this statute a defendant is entitled to receive notice that a hearing is to take place; the statute does not require that a defendant be given notice of the court's intent to modify the terms of probation. State v. Coltrane, 307 N.C. 511, 299 S.E.2d 199 (1983).

Evidence Required. — In a probation revocation hearing, all that is required is that the evidence be such as to reasonably satisfy the judge in the exercise of his sound discretion that defendant has willfully violated a valid condition of probation or that defendant has violated without lawful excuse a valid condition upon which the sentence was suspended. State v. Lucas, 58 N.C. App. 141, 292 S.E.2d 747, cert. denied, 306 N.C. 390, 293 S.E.2d 593 (1982).

Period May Not Be Tolled with Erroneous Violation Reports. — This section clearly provides that the violation must have occurred during the probation period. The State may not file erroneous violation reports to toll the probation period, and then revoke probation for an action which occurred after the probation period ended. State v. Cannady, 59 N.C. App. 212, 296 S.E.2d 327 (1982).

The court is not to state in its judgment that it considered alternatives to revoking defendant's probation. State v. Parker, 55 N.C. App. 643, 286 S.E.2d 366 (1982).

To satisfy subsection (f), three conditions must be met: the probationer must have committed a violation during his probation, the State must file a motion indicating its intent to conduct a revocation hearing, and the State must have made a reasonable effort to notify the probationer and conduct the hearing sooner. State v. Cannady, 59 N.C. App. 212, 296 S.E.2d 327 (1982).

Applied in State v. Partridge, 110 N.C. App. 786, 431 S.E.2d 550 (1993).

Stated in In re McLean, 135 N.C. App. 387, 521 S.E.2d 121 (1999).

§ 15A-1344.1. Procedure to insure payment of child support.

(a) When the court requires, as a condition of supervised or unsupervised probation, that a defendant support his children, the court may order at any time that support payments be made to the State Child Support Collection and Disbursement Unit for remittance to the party entitled to receive the payments. For child support orders initially entered on or after January 1, 1994, the immediate income withholding provisions of G.S. 110-136.5(c1) apply. If child support is to be paid through income withholding, the payments shall be made in accordance with G.S. 110-139(f).

(b) After entry of such an order by the court, the clerk of court shall maintain records listing the amount of payments, the date payments are required to be made, and the names and addresses of the parties affected by the order.

(c) The parties affected by the order shall inform the clerk of court and the State Child Support Collection and Disbursement Unit of any change of address or of other condition that may affect the administration of the order. The court may provide in the order that a defendant failing to inform the court and the State Child Support Collection and Disbursement Unit of a change of address within reasonable period of time may be held in violation of probation.

(d) When a defendant in a non-IV-D case, as defined in G.S. 110-129, fails to make required payments of child support and is in arrears, upon notification by the State Child Support Collection and Disbursement Unit the clerk of superior court may mail by regular mail to the last known address of the defendant a notice of delinquency that sets out the amount of child support currently due and that demands immediate payment of the amount. Failure to receive the delinquency notice is not a defense in any probation violation hearing or other proceeding thereafter. If the arrearage is not paid in full within 21 days after the mailing of the delinquency notice, or is not paid within 30 days after the defendant becomes delinquent if the clerk has elected not to send a delinquency notice, the clerk shall certify the amount due to the district attorney and probation officer, who shall initiate proceedings for revocation of probation pursuant to Article 82 of Chapter 15A or make a motion in the criminal case for income withholding pursuant to G.S. 110-136.5 or both.

When a defendant in a IV-D case, as defined in G.S. 110-129, fails to make required payments of child support and is in arrears, at the request of the IV-D obligee the clerk shall certify the amount due to the district attorney and probation officer, who shall initiate proceedings for revocation of probation pursuant to Article 82 of Chapter 15A or make a motion in the criminal case for income withholding pursuant to G.S. 110-136.5 or both. (1983, c. 567, s. 1; 1983 (Reg. Sess., 1984), c. 1100, ss. 1, 2; 1985 (Reg. Sess., 1986), c. 949, s. 7; 1993, c. 517, s. 4; 1999-293, ss. 10, 23.)

§ 15A-1345. Arrest and hearing on probation violation.

(a) Arrest for Violation of Probation. — A probationer is subject to arrest for violation of conditions of probation by a law-enforcement officer or probation officer upon either an order for arrest issued by the court or upon the written request of a probation officer, accompanied by a written statement signed by the probation officer that the probationer has violated specified conditions of his probation. However, a probation revocation hearing under subsection (e) may be held without first arresting the probationer.

(b) Bail Following Arrest for Probation Violation. — If at any time during the period of probation the probationer is arrested for a violation of any of the conditions of probation, he must be taken without unnecessary delay before a judicial official to have conditions of release pending a revocation hearing set in the same manner as provided in G.S. 15A-534.

(c) When Preliminary Hearing on Probation Violation Required. — Unless the hearing required by subsection (e) is first held or the probationer waives the hearing, a preliminary hearing on probation violation must be held within seven working days of an arrest of a probationer to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that he violated a condition of probation. Otherwise, the probationer must be released seven working days after his arrest to continue on probation pending a hearing.

(d) Procedure for Preliminary Hearing on Probation Violation. — The preliminary hearing on probation violation must be conducted by a judge who is sitting in the county where the probationer was arrested or where the alleged violation occurred. If no judge is sitting in the county where the hearing would otherwise be held, the hearing may be held anywhere in the district court district as defined in G.S. 7A-133 or superior court district or set of districts as defined in G.S. 7A-41.1, as the case may be. The State must give the probationer notice of the hearing and its purpose, including a statement of the violations alleged. At the hearing the probationer may appear and speak in his own behalf, may present relevant information, and may, on request, personally question adverse informants unless the court finds good cause for not allowing confrontation. Formal rules of evidence do not apply at the hearing. If probable cause is found or if the probable cause hearing is waived, the probationer may be held for a revocation hearing, subject to release under the provisions of subsection (b). If the hearing is held and probable cause is not found, the probationer must be released to continue on probation.

(e) Revocation Hearing. — Before revoking or extending probation, the court must, unless the probationer waives the hearing, hold a hearing to determine whether to revoke or extend probation and must make findings to support the decision and a summary record of the proceedings. The State must give the probationer notice of the hearing and its purpose, including a statement of the violations alleged. The notice, unless waived by the probationer, must be given at least 24 hours before the hearing. At the hearing, evidence against the probationer must be disclosed to him, and the probationer may appear and speak in his own behalf, may present relevant information, and may confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses unless the court finds good cause for not allowing confrontation. The probationer is entitled to be represented by counsel at the hearing and, if indigent, to have counsel appointed. Formal rules of evidence do not apply at the hearing, but the record or recollection of evidence or testimony introduced at the preliminary hearing on probation violation are inadmissible as evidence at the revocation hearing. When the violation alleged is the nonpayment of fine or costs, the issues and procedures at the hearing include those specified in G.S. 15A-1364 for response to nonpayment of fine. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, ss. 12, 13; 1979, c. 749, s. 4; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1316, s. 39; 1987 (Reg. Sess., 1988), c. 1037, s. 69.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section also codifies prior law and practice. Subsections (c) and (d) in particular respond primarily to the dictates of Gagnon v. Scarpelli, 411 U.S. 778, 93 S. Ct. 1756, 36 L. Ed. 2d 656 (1973) which applies the due process requirements first stated in Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484 (1972) to probation revocation. An important point to notice is that the provisions permit the consolidation of the preliminary hearing on revocation and the revocation hearing if the revocation hearing is held within five working days of the probationer's arrest. The preliminary hearing on a probation violation may, of course, be omitted if the probationer is not taken into custody before his revocation hearing, since the preliminary hearing serves roughly the same purpose as the appearance before a magistrate following a conventional arrest for a crime. In granting entitlement to the probationer to representation by counsel at the revocation hearing, subsection (e) goes beyond the Supreme Court requirement and beyond the present requirements of G.S. 7A-451 which provides counsel only "if confinement is likely to be adjudged."

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Notice.
III. Burden and Standard of Proof.
IV. Evidence.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under former § 15-200.

Constitutionality. — The evidentiary standard and State's burden of proof applied to probation revocation hearings pursuant to subsection (e) of this section are not unconstitutionally indefinite. State v. Tozzi, 84 N.C. App. 517, 353 S.E.2d 250 (1987).

Legislative Intent. — This statute, enacted by the North Carolina legislature in 1977, was intended to go beyond the federal constitutional right to counsel enunciated by the United States Supreme Court in Gagnon v. Scarpelli, 411 U.S. 778, 93 S. Ct. 1756, 36 L. Ed. 2d 656 (1973). State v. Coltrane, 307 N.C. 511, 299 S.E.2d 199 (1983).

Due Process to Be Afforded Prior to Revocation. — Under § 15A-1341(c), a defendant is given the election between imprisonment and probation in the first instance; and once he chooses probation, this section guarantees full due process before there can be a revocation of probation and a resulting prison sentence. State v. Hunter, 315 N.C. 371, 338 S.E.2d 99 (1986).

Procedure in This Section Should Be Followed Rather Than Contempt Proceeding. — When a probationer is charged with violating a condition of his probation, the procedure provided in this section should be followed rather than a proceeding to hold him in contempt. State v. Golden, 40 N.C. App. 37, 251 S.E.2d 875 (1979).

Inquiry of the court at the hearing is not directed to the probationer's guilt or innocence, but to the truth of the accusation of a violation of probation. The crucial question is: "Has the probationer abused the privilege of grace extended to him by the court?" State v. Young, 21 N.C. App. 316, 204 S.E.2d 185 (1974).

Jury Question Not Presented. — Whether defendant has violated valid conditions of probation is not an issue of fact for a jury, but is a question of fact for the judge to be determined in the exercise of his sound discretion. State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476 (1967); State v. Butcher, 10 N.C. App. 93, 177 S.E.2d 924 (1970).

A hearing to determine whether or not the terms of a suspended sentence have been violated is not a jury matter, but is to be determined in the sound discretion of the judge. State v. Coffey, 255 N.C. 293, 121 S.E.2d 736 (1961).

Judge has discretion whether to revoke probation upon his finding that a condition of probation has been violated. Thus, liberty hangs in the balance. Hewett v. North Carolina, 415 F.2d 1316 (4th Cir. 1969).

In hearings under this section the findings of fact and the judgment entered thereupon are matters to be determined in the sound discretion of the court, and the exercise of that discretion in the absence of gross abuse cannot be reviewed. State v. Simpson, 25 N.C. App. 176, 212 S.E.2d 566, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 263, 214 S.E.2d 436 (1975).

Revocation of probation is a matter of discretion with the trial court. In making the determination as to whether the conditions of probation have been violated the evidence need be such that reasonably satisfies the trial judge in the exercise of his sound discretion that the defendant has violated a valid condition on which the sentence was suspended. State v. Ginn, 59 N.C. App. 363, 296 S.E.2d 825, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 307 N.C. 271, 299 S.E.2d 217 (1982).

Section does not involve defendant's rights under U.S. Const., Amend. VI, since a hearing to determine whether the terms of a suspended sentence have been violated is not a criminal prosecution and is not a jury matter. State v. Braswell, 283 N.C. 332, 196 S.E.2d 185 (1973).

Proceeding to revoke probation is not a criminal prosecution. State v. Butcher, 10 N.C. App. 93, 177 S.E.2d 924 (1970); State v. Young, 21 N.C. App. 316, 204 S.E.2d 185 (1974); State v. Pratt, 21 N.C. App. 538, 204 S.E.2d 906 (1974).

But is a proceeding solely for the determination of whether there has been a violation of a valid condition of probation so as to warrant putting into effect a sentence theretofore entered. State v. Pratt, 21 N.C. App. 538, 204 S.E.2d 906 (1974).

And Formal Trial Is Not Required. — There is no statute in this State requiring a formal trial in a proceeding to revoke probation. State v. Duncan, 270 N.C. 241, 154 S.E.2d 53 (1967); State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476 (1967); State v. Young, 21 N.C. App. 316, 204 S.E.2d 185 (1974).

Proceedings to revoke probation are often regarded as informal or summary. State v. Duncan, 270 N.C. 241, 154 S.E.2d 53 (1967); State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476 (1967); State v. Young, 21 N.C. App. 316, 204 S.E.2d 185 (1974).

But substantial rights are litigated in every revocation of probation proceeding, irrespective of the preciseness of the claimed violation or the complexity of the factual inquiry. Hewett v. North Carolina, 415 F.2d 1316 (4th Cir. 1969).

At stake in a revocation proceeding is individual liberty, and the substantiality of this right may not be disputed. Hewett v. North Carolina, 415 F.2d 1316 (4th Cir. 1969).

And appointment of counsel is constitutionally required when proceedings to revoke probation are conducted. Hewett v. North Carolina, 415 F.2d 1316 (4th Cir. 1969).

A defendant charged with the violation of conditions of a probation sentence is entitled to representation by an attorney. State v. Atkinson, 7 N.C. App. 355, 172 S.E.2d 249 (1970).

While the right to counsel applies to "criminal proceedings," there is little doubt that the revocation of probation is a stage of criminal proceedings. Even if a new sentence is not imposed, it is the event which makes operative the loss of liberty. Hewett v. North Carolina, 415 F.2d 1316 (4th Cir. 1969).

Under subsection (e) of this section the defendant is entitled to have counsel present at the probation revocation hearing. State v. Coltrane, 307 N.C. 511, 299 S.E.2d 199 (1983).

Statutory Right to Counsel at Probation Revocation Hearings. — There is a statutorily recognized right to counsel at probation revocation hearings in North Carolina that goes beyond the federal constitutional right enunciated in Gagnon v. Scarpelli, 411 U.S. 778, 93 S. Ct. 1756, 36 L. Ed. 2d 656 (1973).

State v. Warren, 82 N.C. App. 84, 345 S.E.2d 437 (1986).

Waiver of Right to Counsel. — Right to counsel at probation revocation hearing can be knowingly, intelligently and voluntarily waived; however, waiver cannot be inferred from a silent record. State v. Warren, 82 N.C. App. 84, 345 S.E.2d 437 (1986).

What Record Must Show on Waiver of Counsel. — When a defendant waives counsel at or before the trial phase of the proceedings against him, the record must show that the defendant was literate and competent, that he understood the consequences of the waiver, and that, in waiving the right, the defendant was voluntarily exercising his own free will. State v. Warren, 82 N.C. App. 84, 345 S.E.2d 437 (1986).

A waiver of counsel is ineffective at the probation revocation stage when the record fails to show that the defendant has knowingly and voluntarily waived the right; that is, after the trial court has made thorough inquiry and is satisfied that the defendant has been clearly advised of the right to counsel, that the defendant understands and appreciates the consequences of the decision to proceed pro se, and that the defendant comprehends the nature of the charges and proceedings and the range of possible punishments. State v. Warren, 82 N.C. App. 84, 345 S.E.2d 437 (1986).

When a defendant executes a written waiver which is in turn certified by the trial court, the waiver of counsel will be presumed to have been knowing, intelligent, and voluntary, unless the rest of the record indicates otherwise. State v. Warren, 82 N.C. App. 84, 345 S.E.2d 437 (1986).

Consenting to Conditions of Probation Does Not Waive Right to Counsel. — By consenting to the conditions of probation, defendants do nothing more than acknowledge that they are "subject to" imposition of the original sentence. They do not forfeit their right to a knowing and voluntary waiver of counsel in a subsequent probation revocation hearing. State v. Warren, 82 N.C. App. 84, 345 S.E.2d 437 (1986).

Denial of Substitute Counsel Upheld. — Where counsel withdrew at defendant's request, presumably because defendant was not satisfied with her, the trial court's denial of substitute counsel was entirely appropriate. State v. Tucker, 111 N.C. App. 907, 433 S.E.2d 476 (1993), appeal dismissed, 335 N.C. 564, 439 S.E.2d 160 (1993), cert. dismissed, — N.C. —, 463 S.E.2d 249 (1995).

Jurisdiction to Conduct Hearing. — The resident judge of a judicial district, the judge holding the courts of a judicial district, or any judge commissioned at the time to hold court in a judicial district, is clothed with jurisdiction to conduct a revocation hearing with respect to all probationers who reside in the district or who were placed on probation in any county in the district or who violated the conditions of probation in any county in the district. State v. Braswell, 283 N.C. 332, 196 S.E.2d 185 (1973).

When Warrant May Issue. — This section authorizes issuance of a probation violation warrant at any time during the period of probation. State v. Best, 10 N.C. App. 62, 177 S.E.2d 772 (1970).

Defendant Need Not Be Apprehended During Probation Period. — This section does not require that the defendant be apprehended and brought into court for hearing during the probation period. State v. Best, 10 N.C. App. 62, 177 S.E.2d 772 (1970).

To argue that the language of this section must be interpreted to require that the warrant not only be issued but that it also be actually served on the defendant and he be taken into custody during the probationary period, else the court lacks power to hear the matter, obviously rewards the defaulting probationer for his skill in eluding the officers, and is required neither by reason nor authority. State v. Best, 10 N.C. App. 62, 177 S.E.2d 772 (1970).

Hearing May Be Held After Period of Probation Has Expired. — If a probation violation warrant and order of arrest is issued during the probationary period, a valid probation revocation hearing may be held and order entered after the period of probation has expired, at least in situations where the delay is not due to any lack of diligence on the part of the probation authorities or the court. State v. Best, 10 N.C. App. 62, 177 S.E.2d 772 (1970).

Although the court failed to comply with the provisions of subsection (c) of this section, which requires a preliminary hearing within seven working days of arrest of probationer unless the probationer waives his right to a hearing, defendant was not prejudiced by the lack of a preliminary hearing where he was arrested in Virginia, there was prima facie evidence of a probation violation, and he did not deny that he violated the conditions of his probation. State v. Clemmons, 97 N.C. App. 502, 389 S.E.2d 135, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 327 N.C. 434, 395 S.E.2d 691 (1990).

Absence from State After Service of Capias. — Upon issuance of notice of service of capias the defendant was under duty to respond and appear and time ceased to run against the period of probation during the period defendant absented himself from the State and was a fugitive from justice. State v. Pelley, 221 N.C. 487, 20 S.E.2d 850 (1942).

Warrantless Arrest of Probationer. — If a simple conclusory statement from the probation officer, containing no factual allegations, is sufficient to permit another officer to arrest a probationer without a warrant, then it is reasonable to conclude that § 15-205 and this section read together, give the probation officer the authority to arrest a probationer under his supervision for violations of conditions of probation without a warrant or other written document. State v. Waller, 37 N.C. App. 133, 245 S.E.2d 808 (1978).

Informing Defendant of Right to Remain Silent. — The court at a probation revocation hearing is not required to inform a defendant who is unrepresented by counsel of his constitutional right to remain silent at the hearing. State v. Gamble, 50 N.C. App. 658, 274 S.E.2d 874 (1981).

Any violation of a valid condition of probation is sufficient to revoke defendant's probation. All that is required to revoke probation is evidence satisfying the trial court, in its discretion, that the defendant violated a valid condition of probation without lawful excuse. State v. Tozzi, 84 N.C. App. 517, 353 S.E.2d 250 (1987).

Breach of Condition Need Not Be "Willful". — It is not necessary for a court to find that a defendant's breach of a condition of his probation was "willful" in order to activate defendant's suspended sentence where the court found that such breach was without lawful excuse. State v. Butcher, 10 N.C. App. 93, 177 S.E.2d 924 (1970).

But Must Be Without Lawful Excuse. — If a court concludes that a breach of a probationary condition by a defendant is without lawful excuse, this is sufficient to support the activation of a suspended sentence. State v. Butcher, 10 N.C. App. 93, 177 S.E.2d 924 (1970).

All that is required in a probation hearing is that the evidence be such as to reasonably satisfy the judge in the exercise of his sound discretion that the defendant has willfully violated a valid condition of probation or that the defendant has violated, without lawful excuse, a valid condition upon which the sentence was suspended. State v. Butcher, 10 N.C. App. 93, 177 S.E.2d 924 (1970); State v. Pratt, 21 N.C. App. 538, 204 S.E.2d 906 (1974).

Court Held Not Required to Find Defendant's Action to Constitute Lawful Excuse. — It is not incumbent upon a court in a probation revocation proceeding to find that a defendant's voluntary payment of certain expenses was a "lawful excuse" for his failure to make periodic payments into the office of the clerk of court as required by a condition of his probation. State v. Butcher, 10 N.C. App. 93, 177 S.E.2d 924 (1970).

Conduct Violating Condition of Suspension on Good Behavior. — Behavior such as will warrant a finding that a defendant has breached the condition of suspension on good behavior must be conduct which constitutes a violation of some criminal law of the State. State v. Seagraves, 266 N.C. 112, 145 S.E.2d 327 (1965).

Scope of Inquiry into Changed Circumstances. — Where the superior court finds that the terms of the suspended sentence have been violated, it "shall enforce the judgment unless" it finds that the circumstances surrounding the conditions have changed so much that revocation would be unjust. However, the inquiry into changed circumstances is directed only to circumstances which are relevant to the conditions of suspension. State v. Cash, 30 N.C. App. 677, 228 S.E.2d 85 (1976).

Effect of Conviction in Another State. — Order suspending a sentence on condition "that the defendant be of good behavior and violate none of the laws of the State" was not violated by proof that defendant was convicted of a criminal law in another state. State v. McBride, 240 N.C. 619, 83 S.E.2d 488 (1954). See also State v. Millner, 240 N.C. 602, 83 S.E.2d 546 (1954).

Provision that the judge "shall proceed to deal with the case as if there had been no probation or suspension of sentence" is not statutory authority for the judge, at a probation revocation hearing, to order the sentence imposed by the trial judge to run consecutively with some other sentence unless the trial judge ordered it at the time the sentence was imposed. State v. Fields, 11 N.C. App. 708, 182 S.E.2d 213 (1971).

Probationary judgment does not have to be formally introduced into evidence at the revocation hearing if the record indicates, as in the case at bar, that the judge has the order before him, and where reference is made in the judgment to specific conditions that defendant allegedly violated. State v. Hogan, 27 N.C. App. 34, 217 S.E.2d 712 (1975).

Imprisonment Is for Original Crime. — A petitioner, upon revocation of his suspended sentence, suffers imprisonment under a sentence, not for the matters that may have caused the revocation of his probation, but for the crime for which he was originally found guilty. Hall v. Bostic, 529 F.2d 990 (4th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 954, 96 S. Ct. 1733, 48 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1976).

Although revocation of probation results in the deprivation of a probationer's liberty, the sentence he may be required to serve is the punishment for the crime of which he had previously been found guilty. State v. Young, 21 N.C. App. 316, 204 S.E.2d 185 (1974).

Denial of Credit for Probation or Parole Time. — There is nothing unusual in the denial by North Carolina law of credit for probation or parole time against a prison sentence; it is common to both State and federal probation and parole systems and the validity of such denial has been universally recognized both in federal and State decisions. Hall v. Bostic, 529 F.2d 990 (4th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 954, 96 S. Ct. 1733, 48 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1976).

The refusal to credit probation time against the prison sentence is not double jeopardy, or an extension or enlargement of the original sentence of imprisonment, since the period of probation is not counted as a part of the period of imprisonment. Hall v. Bostic, 529 F.2d 990 (4th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 954, 96 S. Ct. 1733, 48 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1976).

Constitutionality of Revocation Held Not Moot. — The fact that whether or not a person was actually incarcerated will have an effect upon the time at which he may, under state law, petition the courts for restoration of his civil rights is a sufficiently important legal distinction to preserve his case, as to the constitutionality of his probation revocation, from being moot, although he had served his prison term. Hewett v. North Carolina, 415 F.2d 1316 (4th Cir. 1969).

Cited in State v. Cunningham, 63 N.C. App. 470, 305 S.E.2d 193 (1983).

II. NOTICE.

Written Notice of Hearing. — A defendant on probation or a defendant under a suspended sentence, before any sentence of imprisonment is put into effect and activated, shall be given notice in writing of the hearing in apt time and an opportunity to be heard. State v. Butcher, 10 N.C. App. 97, 177 S.E.2d 730 (1970); State v. Pratt, 21 N.C. App. 538, 204 S.E.2d 906 (1974).

Notice of Intent to Seek Revocation Held Sufficient. — Defendant was given sufficient notice of the State's intent to pray revocation of the suspension of his sentence for abandonment and nonsupport of his wife and children, where the warrant providing the basis for the revocation hearing stated that the defendant had failed to comply with a support order and was in arrears in the amount of $690. State v. Hodges, 34 N.C. App. 183, 237 S.E.2d 576 (1977), decided under former § 15-200.1.

The defendant was given sufficient written notice of his probation revocation hearing as called for under subsection (e) of this section, where defendant was served with an arrest order which alleged that he failed to comply with the probation judgment in an earlier criminal conviction, and where the defendant signed a waiver of counsel form 10 days prior to the hearing which acknowledged that he had been informed of the charges against him. State v. Gamble, 50 N.C. App. 658, 274 S.E.2d 874 (1981).

III. BURDEN AND STANDARD OF PROOF.

The burden is on the defendant to present competent evidence of his inability to comply with the terms of his probation; otherwise, evidence of defendant's failure to comply may justify a finding that defendant's failure to comply was wilful or without lawful excuse. State v. Crouch, 74 N.C. App. 565, 328 S.E.2d 833 (1985); State v. Tozzi, 84 N.C. App. 517, 353 S.E.2d 250 (1987).

Burden of Proving Inability to Pay Fine or Restitution. — In a probation revocation proceeding based upon defendant's failure to pay a fine or restitution which was a condition of his probation, the burden is upon the defendant to offer evidence of his inability to pay money according to the terms of the probationary judgment. State v. Jones, 78 N.C. App. 507, 337 S.E.2d 195 (1985).

Burden of proof is upon the State to show that the defendant has violated one of the conditions of his probation. State v. Seagraves, 266 N.C. 112, 145 S.E.2d 327 (1965).

Evidence Must Reasonably Satisfy Judge. — All that is required in a hearing to revoke probation is that the evidence be such as to reasonably satisfy the judge in the exercise of his sound discretion that the defendant has willfully violated a valid condition of probation or that the defendant has violated without lawful excuse a valid condition upon which the sentence was suspended. State v. Duncan, 270 N.C. 241, 154 S.E.2d 53 (1967); State v. Hewett, 270 N.C. 348, 154 S.E.2d 476 (1967); State v. Martin, 27 N.C. App. 666, 220 S.E.2d 94 (1975); State v. Freeman, 47 N.C. App. 171, 266 S.E.2d 723, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 99, 273 S.E.2d 304 (1980).

The State's burden of proof during probation revocation hearings is to present evidence that reasonably satisfies the trial court in its discretion that defendant has violated a valid condition of probation. State v. Tozzi, 84 N.C. App. 517, 353 S.E.2d 250 (1987).

Standard of Proof Is Not Reasonable Doubt. — The alleged violation of the terms of a suspended sentence need not be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. All that is required is that the evidence be such as to reasonably satisfy the judge in the exercise of his sound discretion that the defendant has violated a valid condition upon which the sentence was suspended. State v. Coffey, 255 N.C. 293, 121 S.E.2d 736 (1961).

Upon a hearing to determine whether or not probation should be revoked, and a sentence previously suspended should be activated, all that is required is that the evidence be such as reasonably to satisfy the judge, in the exercise of his sound discretion, that the defendant has violated a valid condition upon which the sentence was so suspended. State v. Seagraves, 266 N.C. 112, 145 S.E.2d 327 (1965).

The alleged violation of a valid condition of probation need not be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Butcher, 10 N.C. App. 93, 177 S.E.2d 924 (1970).

Probation revocation hearings do not require proof beyond a reasonable doubt since probation is an act of grace. All that is required in a hearing of this character is that the evidence be such as to reasonably satisfy the judge in the exercise of his sound discretion that the defendant has violated a valid condition upon which the sentence was suspended. State v. Seay, 59 N.C. App. 667, 298 S.E.2d 53 (1982).

IV. EVIDENCE.

Rules of Evidence. — In a probation hearing, the court is not bound by strict rules of evidence. State v. Butcher, 10 N.C. App. 93, 177 S.E.2d 924 (1970); State v. Young, 21 N.C. App. 316, 204 S.E.2d 185 (1974); State v. Pratt, 21 N.C. App. 538, 204 S.E.2d 906 (1974).

At a hearing to revoke the suspension of a prison sentence for the alleged violation of a valid condition of suspension, the court is not bound by strict rules of evidence. All that is required in a hearing of this character is that the evidence be such as to reasonably satisfy the judge in the exercise of his sound discretion that the defendant has willfully violated a valid condition of probation or that the defendant has violated without lawful excuse a valid condition upon which the sentence was suspended. State v. Simpson, 25 N.C. App. 176, 212 S.E.2d 566, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 263, 214 S.E.2d 436 (1975).

In a probation revocation hearing, all that is required is that the evidence be such as to reasonably satisfy the judge in the exercise of his sound discretion that defendant has willfully violated a valid condition of probation or that defendant has violated without lawful excuse a valid condition upon which the sentence was suspended. State v. Lucas, 58 N.C. App. 141, 292 S.E.2d 747, cert. denied, 306 N.C. 390, 293 S.E.2d 593 (1982).

Reasons Why Evidentiary Rules Need Not Be Enforced. — The evidence showing violation of terms of probation need be such that reasonably satisfies the trial judge in the exercise of his sound discretion that the defendant has violated a valid condition on which the sentence was suspended. Because of this and also because it is a matter which a judge hears and not a jury, the rules of evidence need not be strictly enforced. State v. Freeman, 47 N.C. App. 171, 266 S.E.2d 723, cert. denied, 301 N.C. 99, 273 S.E.2d 304 (1980).

Evidence which does not meet the standards of U.S. Const., Amends. IV and XIV may be admitted in a probation revocation hearing. State v. Lombardo, 306 N.C. 594, 295 S.E.2d 399 (1982).

Exclusionary rule is not applicable in probation revocation hearings. State v. Lombardo, 306 N.C. 594, 295 S.E.2d 399 (1982).

Where defendant has presented competent evidence of his inability to comply with the terms of his probation, he is entitled to have that evidence considered and evaluated before the trial court can properly order revocation. State v. Crouch, 74 N.C. App. 565, 328 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

Counsel's statements with respect to defendant's inability to comply with the terms of his defendant's probation were not competent evidence, and the trial court was not, therefore, under a duty to make specific findings with respect to defendant's alleged inability to comply. State v. Crouch, 74 N.C. App. 565, 328 S.E.2d 833 (1985).

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

A probation officer may not turn a probationer over to a jail's custody based upon a special condition of probation that the probation officer had up to 30 days of incarceration if deemed necessary for minor infractions or technical violations. See opinion of the Attorney General to Thomas Thornburg, Legal Counsel, N.C. Department of Correction, 60 N.C.A.G. 110 (1992).

§ 15A-1346. Commencement of probation; multiple sentence.

(a) Commencement of Probation. — Except as provided in subsection (b), a period of probation commences on the day it is imposed and runs concurrently with any other period of probation, parole, or imprisonment to which the defendant is subject during that period.

(b) Consecutive and Concurrent Sentences. — If a period of probation is being imposed at the same time a period of imprisonment is being imposed or if it is being imposed on a person already subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment, the period of probation may run either concurrently or consecutively with the term of imprisonment, as determined by the court. If not specified, it runs concurrently. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Probation would be stayed pending appeal under G.S. 15A-1451(a)(4), although under subsection (a) it would start on imposition of sentence. Subsection (b) clarifies the point that a probationary sentence may be imposed to run consecutively after a period of active imprisonment for a different crime.

§ 15A-1347. Appeal from revocation of probation or imposition of special probation upon violation.

When a district court judge, as a result of a finding of a violation of probation, activates a sentence or imposes special probation, the defendant may appeal to the superior court for a de novo revocation hearing. At the hearing the probationer has all rights and the court has all authority they have in a revocation hearing held before the superior court in the first instance. Appeals from lower courts to the superior courts from judgments revoking probation may be heard in term or out of term, in the county or out of the county by the resident superior court judge of the district or the superior court judge assigned to hold the courts of the district, or a judge of the superior court commissioned to hold court in the district, or a special superior court judge residing in the district. When the defendant appeals to the superior court because a district court has found he violated probation and has activated his sentence or imposed special probation, and the superior court, after a de novo revocation hearing, orders that the defendant continue on probation under the same or modified conditions, the superior court is considered the court that originally imposed probation with regard to future revocation proceedings and other purposes of this Article. When a superior court judge, as a result of a finding of a violation of probation, activates a sentence or imposes special probation, either in the first instance or upon a de novo hearing after appeal from a district court, the defendant may appeal under G.S. 7A-27. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, s. 14.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section carries forward prior law, except that under prior law, upon appeal to superior court from a revocation in the district court, the superior court, upon a finding that a violation occurred, must simply affirm the response to the violation imposed by the lower court judge. This section intends that the superior court judge at the hearing have complete freedom if he finds a violation; even if the lower court judge revoked the probation, the superior court judge may instead continue the probationer on probation or alter the terms of his probation.

CASE NOTES

Editor's Note. — Most of the cases cited below were decided under former § 15-200.1.

Court May Not Try Defendant Anew. — The jurisdiction of the superior court under this section is derivative and that court is without authority to try defendant anew. State v. Riddle, 18 N.C. App. 490, 197 S.E.2d 8 (1973).

Adjudication of Guilt May Not Be Challenged. — A defendant on appeal from an order revoking probation may not challenge his adjudication of guilt. State v. Cordon, 21 N.C. App. 394, 204 S.E.2d 715, cert. denied, 285 N.C. 592, 206 S.E.2d 864 (1974).

Since This Is Impermissible Collateral Attack. — Questioning the validity of the original judgment where sentence was suspended, on appeal from an order activating the sentence, is an impermissible collateral attack. State v. Noles, 12 N.C. App. 676, 184 S.E.2d 409 (1971).

Superior Court Is Not Limited to Evidence Heard in Inferior Court. — Since the hearing on appeal must be de novo in superior court, that court is not limited to the evidence heard in the inferior court, and may hear and consider any competent evidence so long as it bears on the issue of whether or not there has been a violation of the terms of the suspended sentence. State v. Coffey, 255 N.C. 293, 121 S.E.2d 736 (1961).

Where matter was not heard de novo by the superior court, on appeal thereto, as required by this section, the judgment putting the sentence into execution was set aside, and the cause remanded to the superior court for further hearing in accordance with law. State v. Thompson, 244 N.C. 282, 93 S.E.2d 158 (1956).

Where there was no factual basis for any change in the sentence imposed by the trial judge, it was error for the judge at the probation revocation hearing, after finding that the conditions were violated, to do anything other than enforce the judgment of the lower court. State v. Fields, 11 N.C. App. 708, 182 S.E.2d 213 (1971).

No Right to Appeal Voluntary Election to Serve Sentence. — Where the trial court activated defendant's sentence upon his voluntary election to serve the sentence in lieu of the remainder of his probation and not as a result of a finding of a violation of probation, defendant had no right to appeal from his activated sentence. State v. Ikard, 117 N.C. App. 460, 450 S.E.2d 927 (1994).

Article 83.

Imprisonment.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article derives from those appearing in the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly, as revised by the Commission.

§ 15A-1351. Sentence of imprisonment; incidents; special probation.

(a) The judge may sentence to special probation a defendant convicted of a criminal offense other than impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1, if based on the defendant's prior record or conviction level as found pursuant to Article 81B of this Chapter, an intermediate punishment is authorized for the class of offense of which the defendant has been convicted. A defendant convicted of impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1 may also be sentenced to special probation. Under a sentence of special probation, the court may suspend the term of imprisonment and place the defendant on probation as provided in Article 82, Probation, and in addition require that the defendant submit to a period or periods of imprisonment in the custody of the Department of Correction or a designated local confinement or treatment facility at whatever time or intervals within the period of probation, consecutive or nonconsecutive, the court determines. In addition to any other conditions of probation which the court may impose, the court shall impose, when imposing a period or periods of imprisonment as a condition of special probation, the condition that the defendant obey the Rules and Regulations of the Department of Correction governing conduct of inmates, and this condition shall apply to the defendant whether or not the court imposes it as a part of the written order. If imprisonment is for continuous periods, the confinement may be in the custody of either the Department of Correction or a local confinement facility. Noncontinuous periods of imprisonment under special probation may only be served in a designated local confinement or treatment facility. Except for probationary sentences of impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1, the total of all periods of confinement imposed as an incident of special probation, but not including an activated suspended sentence, may not exceed six months or one fourth the maximum sentence of imprisonment imposed for the offense, whichever is less, and no confinement other than an activated suspended sentence may be required beyond two years of conviction. For probationary sentences for impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1, the total of all periods of confinement imposed as an incident of special probation, but not including an activated suspended sentence, shall not exceed one-fourth the maximum penalty allowed by law. In imposing a sentence of special probation, the judge may credit any time spent committed or confined, as a result of the charge, to either the suspended sentence or to the imprisonment required for special probation. The original period of probation, including the period of imprisonment required for special probation, shall be as specified in G.S. 15A-1343.2(d), but may not exceed a maximum of five years, except as provided by G.S. 15A-1342(a). The court may revoke, modify, or terminate special probation as otherwise provided for probationary sentences.

(b) Sentencing of a person convicted of a felony or of a misdemeanor other than impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1 that occurred on or after the effective date of Article 81B is subject to that Article. For persons convicted of impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1, a sentence to imprisonment must impose a maximum term and may impose a minimum term. The impaired driving judgment may state the minimum term or may state that a term constitutes both the minimum and maximum terms. If the impaired driving judgment states no minimum term, the defendant becomes eligible for parole in accordance with G.S. 15A-1371(a).

(c) Repealed by Session Laws 1979, c. 749, s. 7.

(d), (e). Repealed by Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 19.

(f) Work Release. — When sentencing a person convicted of a felony, the sentencing court may recommend that the sentenced offender be granted work release as authorized in G.S. 148-33.1. When sentencing a person convicted of a misdemeanor, the sentencing court may recommend or, with the consent of the person sentenced, order that the sentenced offender be granted work release as authorized in G.S. 148-33.1.

(g) Credit. — Credit towards a sentence to imprisonment is as provided in Article 19A of Chapter 15 of the General Statutes.

(h) Substance Abuse Recommendation. — The sentencing court may recommend that the sentenced offender be assigned to the Substance Abuse Treatment Unit for treatment of alcoholism or substance abuse during his imprisonment. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, ss. 15-17; 1979, c. 749, ss. 5-7; c. 760, s. 4; 1985 (Reg. Sess., 1986), c. 1014, s. 201(a); 1987, c. 738, s. 111(e); 1993, c. 84, s. 2; c. 538, s. 19; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 767, ss. 7, 10; 1998-212, s. 17.21(b).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The idea of subsection (a), similar to the former G.S. 15-197.1, is to permit a "taste of jail" to the convicted offender without subjecting him to a full term of imprisonment. A number of points about this provision are worthy of note: the judgment may designate that the active time be served either in the Department of Correction or in a local jail; the active time can be either consecutive or nonconsecutive (that is, the judge may direct that the defendant serve a three weeks' imprisonment immediately after conviction or he may direct that the defendant serve 10 two-day weekends over a 10-week period); the total length of time that may be served is limited — only if the maximum allowable imprisonment for the offense is two years or more may the defender serve as much as six months in prison under special probation; otherwise he is limited to one fourth the maximum penalty allowed by law (in the case of the six-month misdemeanor, for example, the period of imprisonment under special probation would be limited to one and one-half months); no imprisonment as part of special probation may occur more than two years after a person's conviction (that is, one of the weekends in jail an offender is supposed to serve could not occur in February, 1980, if he were convicted in January, 1978); credit for time in confinement prior to conviction does not have to be credited to the time of imprisonment under special probation — it may be credited instead to the suspended sentence.

Subsection (b) contemplates the end of "flat time"; every sentence either by the terms of the judgment or by operation of law will have a minimum and a maximum term (although the judgment could specify that the minimum and maximum are the same). An especially important point is that by operation of law if the judge specifies no minimum term and if no minimum term is required by law, the minimum will automatically be regarded as zero years (which means under the terms of G.S. 15A-1371 the prisoner would be eligible for parole immediately). The significance of the minimum is drastically altered from prior law. Under prior law a minimum term served only to prevent parole of the person before he served one fourth of that minimum term; its real effect under prior law was to give authority to the Secretary of Correction to grant conditional release to the inmate during the period following service of the minimum term. That effect has been totally obliterated by the provisions of this Subchapter. Instead, the minimum term serves as a much more substantial limit on the authority of the Parole Commission to parole a sentenced offender and the device of conditional release is abolished, an effect resulting from the provisions of G.S. 15A-1371(a). Since the minimum term of imprisonment is a more limiting factor, subsection (c) permits reduction of a minimum sentence. It is intended to be used when the Department of Correction has determined from its experience with an inmate that earlier release than that allowed by the minimum sentence would be appropriate. The requirement that a copy of the motion for reduction of a minimum sentence go to the district attorney is intended to deter abuses of the power.

Subsection (d) in conjunction with the provisions of G.S. 15A-1371(c), gives the judge a somewhat more flexible alternative to the imposition of a minimum sentence; he may recommend a minimum that the sentenced offender should serve before parole, but the Parole Commission may override that recommendation if, and only if, it makes a written statement of its reasons for doing so.

§ 15A-1352. Commitment to Department of Correction or local confinement facility.

(a) A person sentenced to imprisonment for a misdemeanor under this Article or for nonpayment of a fine under Article 84 of this Chapter shall be committed for the term designated by the court to the custody of the Department of Correction or to a local confinement facility. If the sentence imposed for a misdemeanor is for a period of 90 days or less, the commitment must be to a facility other than one maintained by the Department of Correction, except as provided in G.S. 148-32.1(b).

If a person is sentenced to imprisonment for a misdemeanor under this Article or for nonpayment of a fine under Article 84 of this Chapter, the sentencing judge shall make a finding of fact as to whether the person would be suitable for placement in a county satellite jail/work release unit operated pursuant to G.S. 153A-230.3. If the sentencing judge makes a finding of fact that the person would be suitable for placement in a county satellite jail/work release unit and the person meets the requirements listed in G.S. 153A-230.3(a)(1), then the custodian of the local confinement facility may transfer the misdemeanant to a county satellite jail/work release unit.

(b) A person sentenced to imprisonment for a felony under this Article shall be committed for the term designated by the court to the custody of the Department of Correction; except that, upon request of the sheriff or the board of commissioners of a county, the presiding judge may, in his discretion, sentence the person to a local confinement facility in that county.

(c) A person sentenced to imprisonment for nonpayment of a fine under Article 84, Fines, shall be committed for the term designated by the court:

(1) To the custody of the Department of Correction if the person was fined for conviction of a felony;

(2) To the custody of the Department of Correction or to a local confinement facility if the person was fined for conviction of a misdemeanor, provided that if the sentence imposed is for a period of 90 days or less, the commitment shall be to a facility other than one maintained by the Department of Correction, except as provided in G.S. 148-32.1(b).

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, when the sentencing court, with the consent of the person sentenced, orders that a person convicted of a misdemeanor be granted work release, the court may commit the person to a specific prison facility or local confinement facility or satellite jail/work release unit within the county of the sentencing court in order to facilitate the work release arrangement. When appropriate to facilitate the work release arrangement, the sentencing court may, with the consent of the sheriff or board of commissioners, commit the person to a specific local confinement facility or satellite jail/work release unit in another county, or, with the consent of the Department of Correction, commit the person to a specific prison facility in another county. The Department of Correction may transfer a prisoner committed to a specific prison facility to a different facility when necessary to alleviate overcrowding or for other administrative purposes. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, s. 18; 1979, c. 456, s. 1; c. 787, ss. 1, 2; 1985 (Reg. Sess., 1986), c. 1014, s. 201(b); 1987, c. 207, s. 3; 1989, c. 761, s. 6; 1991, Ex. Sess., c. 486, s. 1; c. 8, s. 1; 1993, c. 538, s. 37; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section makes clear that a commitment is only to the custody of the Department of Correction, not to any particular facility, including Central Prison, operated by that Department. It also provides that short sentences of imprisonment must be to local jails.

Legal Periodicals. — For note, "North Carolina County Jail Inmates' Right of Access to Courts," see 66 N.C.L. Rev. 583 (1988).

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Definition of "Local Confinement Facility". — Although by its terms, the definition of "local confinement facility in § 153A-217(5) applies only to Chapter 153A, Article 10, Pt. 1, as this definition is the only definition of "local confinement facility" appearing in the General Statutes, it may be assumed that this was the meaning intended by the General Assembly when it adopted § 15A-1352(a). See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Bruce Colvin, Assistant County Attorney, Forsyth County, 55 N.C.A.G. 21 (1985).

Effect of Section on § 15-6. — This section is an exception to § 15-6, regarding imprisonment in county jail, as to those misdemeanants with sentences of more than 180 days, because they may be sentenced to serve their term of imprisonment under the jurisdiction of the Department of Correction, but as to those not placed in the custody of the Department of Correction, the only effect of § 15A-1352 is to broaden the term "common jail" to include other types of local facilities which may be used under appropriate circumstances. See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Bruce Colvin, Assistant County Attorney, Forsyth County, 55 N.C.A.G. 21 (1985).

Section Overrides § 15-6 as to Certain Criminals. — While § 15-6 applies to both felons and misdemeanants, this section overrides § 15-6 to the extent it provides for certain felons and misdemeanants to be sentenced to terms of imprisonment under the jurisdiction of the N.C. Department of Correction. See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Bruce E. Colvin, Assistant County Attorney, Forsyth County, 55 N.C.A.G. 21 (1985).

Place of Imprisonment Where Sentence Less Than and Greater Than 180 Days. — Absent specific statutory authorization (see, e.g., §§ 15A-711, 148-32.1, 162-38 to 162-40), imprisonment of misdemeanants with sentences of 180 days or less must be in the local confinement facility of the county where the crime was committed. If the sentence is greater than 180 days, commitment may be either to such a local facility or to the N.C. Department of Correction. See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Bruce E. Colvin, Assistant County Attorney, Forsyth County, 55 N.C.A.G. 21 (1985).

Misdemeanants with sentences of 180 days or less are not to be sent to the Department of Correction, but must be jailed in a "local confinement facility" (subject to the limited exception found at § 148-32.1). See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Bruce E. Colvin, Assistant County Attorney, Forsyth County, 55 N.C.A.G. 21 (1985).

§ 15A-1353. Order of commitment when imprisonment imposed; release pending appeal.

(a) When a sentence includes a term or terms of imprisonment, the court must issue an order of commitment setting forth the judgment. Unless otherwise specified in the order of commitment, the date of the order is the date service of the sentence is to begin.

If a female defendant is convicted of a nonviolent crime and the court is provided medical evidence from a licensed physician that the defendant is pregnant or the court otherwise determines that the defendant is pregnant, the court may specify in the order that the date of service of the sentence is not to begin until at least six weeks after the birth of the child or other termination of the pregnancy unless the defendant requests to serve her term as the court would otherwise order. The court may impose reasonable conditions upon defendant during such waiting period to insure that defendant will return to begin service of the sentence.

If the court sentences a defendant pursuant to G.S. 15A-1351(a), the period during which that defendant is awaiting imprisonment shall be considered part of the probationary sentence and such defendant shall be subject to all incidents and conditions of probation.

(b) There must be included in the commitment, or in a separate order referred to in the commitment, any provisions with regard to release under Article 26, Bail, if an appeal is taken, and the conditions of the release. If the commitment has been entered before appeal or the setting of the conditions for release, appropriate copies of those documents must be forwarded to the agency having custody of the defendant.

(c) Unless a later time is directed in the order of commitment, or the defendant has been released from custody pursuant to Article 26, Bail, or the defendant is appealing from a judgment of the district court to the superior court for a trial de novo, the sheriff must cause the defendant to be placed in the custody of the agency specified in the judgment on the day service of sentence is to begin or as soon thereafter as practicable.

(d) A certified copy of the order of commitment, together with any separate order providing for release of the defendant pending appeal, must be delivered to the custodian of the confinement facility.

(e) When a defendant has been committed pursuant to this section:

(1) If appeal has been entered and conditions of release have been set as provided in Article 26, Bail, the agency having custody of the defendant may effect his release in the manner provided in G.S. 15A-537; or

(2) If appeal is entered and the conditions of release are not set until after the order of commitment has been issued, and the defendant has been placed in the custody of the agency directed therein, appropriate copies of the conditions of release must be certified by the clerk and forwarded to the agency, which then may effect his release in the manner provided in G.S. 15A-537.

(f) When the sentencing court, with the consent of the person sentenced, orders that a person convicted of a misdemeanor be granted work release, the following provisions must be included in the commitment, or in a separate order referred to in the commitment:

(1) The date work release is to begin;

(2) The prison or local confinement facility to which the offender is to be committed;

(3) A provision that work release terminates the date the offender loses his job or violates the conditions of the work-release plan established by the Department of Correction; and

(4) A determination whether the earnings of the offender are to be disbursed by the Department of Correction or the clerk of the sentencing court in the manner that the court in its order directs. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1979, c. 758, s. 1; 1983, c. 389; 1985 (Reg. Sess., 1986), c. 1014, s. 201(c).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsection (a) applies both to an initial sentence to imprisonment and to the activation of a sentence following probation revocation. Although the presumptive beginning date for the term of imprisonment is the date of the commitment order, the judge may specify a delayed beginning dated to permit the defendant to get his affairs in order.

CASE NOTES

Cited in Allen v. Lowder, 875 F.2d 82 (4th Cir. 1989).

§ 15A-1354. Concurrent and consecutive terms of imprisonment.

(a) Authority of Court. — When multiple sentences of imprisonment are imposed on a person at the same time or when a term of imprisonment is imposed on a person who is already subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment, including a term of imprisonment in another jurisdiction, the sentences may run either concurrently or consecutively, as determined by the court. If not specified or not required by statute to run consecutively, sentences shall run concurrently.

(b) Effect of Consecutive Terms. — In determining the effect of consecutive sentences imposed under authority of this Article and the manner in which they will be served, the Department of Correction must treat the defendant as though he has been committed for a single term with the following incidents:

(1) The maximum prison sentence consists of the total of the maximum terms of the consecutive sentences, less nine months for each of the second and subsequent sentences imposed for Class B through Class E felonies; and

(2) The minimum term consists of the total of the minimum terms of the consecutive sentences. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1979, c. 760, s. 4; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1316, s. 40; 1985, c. 21; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 14, s. 23.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section authorizes consecutive sentences and carries forward the prior law that sentences are to run concurrently unless otherwise specified. Subsection (b) sets out the rules for calculating the effects of consecutive terms, primarily on minimum terms, in order to determine parole eligibility.

Legal Periodicals. — For comment discussing the North Carolina Fair Sentencing Act, see N.C.L. Rev. 631 (1982).

CASE NOTES

Fair Sentencing Act Did Not Remove Power to Impose Consecutive Sentences. — Although the General Assembly did not address the issue of consecutive sentences in the Fair Sentencing Act, § 15A-1340.1 et seq., it left substantially intact subsection (a) of this section, which vests the sentencing judge with discretion to impose either consecutive or concurrent sentences. Since subsection (a) of this section was in effect when the Legislature enacted the Fair Sentencing Act, the Legislature by leaving it substantially intact must have intended that the sentencing judge retain the discretion to impose sentences consecutively or concurrently. State v. Ysaguire, 309 N.C. 780, 309 S.E.2d 436 (1983).

The General Assembly, by leaving this section substantially intact when it enacted the Fair Sentencing Act, must have intended that the sentencing judge retain discretion to impose consecutive sentences. State v. Benfield, 76 N.C. App. 453, 333 S.E.2d 753 (1985).

The court retained the discretion to impose consecutive sentences after the enactment of the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Shea, 80 N.C. App. 705, 343 S.E.2d 437, cert. denied, 317 N.C. 713, 347 S.E.2d 452 (1986).

Consecutive Sentencing Does Not Violate Fair Sentencing Act. — Leaving sentencing judges with unbridled discretion on the matter of whether to run multiple sentences concurrently or consecutively conflicts with the general theory of uniformity sought by fair sentencing. Nevertheless, the Legislature, in espousing both the spirit and the letter of fair sentencing in North Carolina, elected to incorporate the freedom for judges to impose consecutive sentences. Since that is the prerogative of the Legislature, there is nothing inherent in consecutive sentencing which violates the Fair Sentencing Act, § 15A-1340.1 et seq. State v. Ysaguire, 309 N.C. 780, 309 S.E.2d 436 (1983).

Consecutive Sentences Authorized by Subsection (a). — A trial court is given express authority by subsection (a) of this section to require that the sentence imposed for a conviction be served consecutive to any sentence imposed at the same time or any undischarged term of imprisonment to which the defendant is already subject. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

Trial judge was not required to inform jurors whether he intended to impose concurrent or consecutive sentences before they deliberated concerning whether or not to recommend the death sentence. State v. Parker, 350 N.C. 411, 516 S.E.2d 106 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084, 120 S. Ct. 808, 145 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2000).

Trial courts retain discretion to impose consecutive sentences for multiple offenses, and it is not an unusual punishment in this state when they exercise this option in cases involving first degree rape combined with other offenses. State v. Johnson, 320 N.C. 746, 360 S.E.2d 676 (1987).

Consecutive Sentences for Burglary Convictions. — The defendant, who was already serving a sentence for prior convictions, was required, properly, to serve consecutive sentences. State v. Wall, 348 N.C. 671, 502 S.E.2d 585 (1998).

Sentences to Be Aggregated. — Trial court erred by failing to find that defendants are required, pursuant to subsection (b), to aggregate consecutive sentences for armed robbery committed prior to October 1, 1994 for purposes of determining parole eligibility. Robbins v. Freeman, 127 N.C. App. 162, 487 S.E.2d 771 (1997), cert. granted, 347 N.C. 270, 493 S.E.2d 746 (1997), aff'd, 347 N.C. 664, 496 S.E.2d 375 (1998).

Reference in subsection (a) to individual who, at time of sentencing, is "already" subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment does not mean any term of imprisonment to which defendant might become subject in the future. State v. Campbell, 90 N.C. App. 761, 370 S.E.2d 79, appeal dismissed, 323 N.C. 367, 373 S.E.2d 550 (1988).

Imposition of Consecutive Sentences Upheld. — The imposition of consecutive sentences for conspiracy to commit armed robbery, first-degree murder, armed robbery, second-degree burglary, and breaking or entering and larceny does not violate any constitutional proportionality requirement. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

The trial court had the discretion to impose consecutive sentences for multiple offenses where the defendant was convicted of three counts of first-degree murder, and the jury recommended sentences of life imprisonment after finding and weighing the mitigating circumstances and aggravating circumstances. State v. Taylor, 332 N.C. 372, 420 S.E.2d 414 (1992).

The imposition of consecutive sentences was not cruel or unusual punishment, where the defendant was convicted for trafficking in cocaine by possession, conspiracy to traffic in cocaine, possession of drug paraphernalia, and employing a minor to traffic in cocaine. State v. Love, 131 N.C. App. 350, 507 S.E.2d 577 (1998), aff'd, 350 N.C. 586, 516 S.E.2d 382 (1999).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it sentenced defendant to three life sentences plus a term of 288-355 months, all to be served consecutively, in light of the sheer brutality of the sexual acts committed against the victim. State v. Thompson, 139 N.C. App. 299, 533 S.E.2d 834 (2000).

New Sentence Made Consecutive to Prior Sentences on Probation Revocation. — It was not necessary for the trial court, in probation revocation proceedings, to state that the activated sentences in 1983 and 1984 cases would run consecutively with 1985 case, because it was to happen the other way around, and the court properly designated the sentence in the 1985 case to run consecutive with any sentence defendant might receive from probation revocation. State v. Warren, 82 N.C. App. 84, 345 S.E.2d 437 (1986).

Imposition of Consecutive Sentences Outside Defendant's Presence. — Where the written judgment entered by the trial court provided that defendant's sentences would run consecutively, not concurrently, and thereby substantively changed the sentence outside the presence of the defendant, the sentence would be vacated and the case remanded for the entry of a new sentencing judgment. State v. Crumbley, 135 N.C. App. 59, 519 S.E.2d 94 (1999).

Imposition of consecutive sentences for rape, first-degree sex offense, first-degree burglary and armed robbery violates neither the Fair Sentencing Act, § 15A-1340.1 et seq., nor any constitutional proportionality requirement. State v. Ysaguire, 309 N.C. 780, 309 S.E.2d 436 (1983).

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Aggregation Not Permitted. — The post release supervision and parole commission cannot aggregate, pursuant to subsection (b), the sentences imposed for armed robberies committed prior to October 1, 1994. See opinion of Attorney General to Sam F. Boyd, Executive Director Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission, — N.C.A.G. — (Aug. 1, 1995).

Aggregation Appropriate. — If an inmate is sentenced to consecutive armed robbery sentences at the same sentencing hearing, his sentence should be aggregated pursuant to subsection (b). See opinion of Attorney General to Sam F. Boyd, Executive Director Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission, — N.C.A.G. — (Aug. 1, 1995).

§ 15A-1355. Calculation of terms of imprisonment.

(a) Commencement of Sentence. — The commencement date of a sentence of imprisonment under authority of this Article is as provided in G.S. 15A-1353(a), except when the sentence is a consecutive sentence. When it is a consecutive sentence, it commences to run when the State has custody of the defendant following completion of the prior sentence.

(b) Repealed by Session Laws 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, s. 19.

(c) Earned Time; Credit for Good Behavior for Impaired Drivers. — Persons convicted of felonies or misdemeanors under Article 81B of this Chapter may, consistent with rules of the Department of Correction, earn credit which may be used to reduce their maximum terms of imprisonment as provided in G.S. 15A-1340.13(d) for felony sentences and in G.S. 15A-1340.20(d) for misdemeanor sentences.

For sentences of imprisonment imposed for convictions of impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1, the Department of Correction may give credit toward service of the maximum term and any minimum term of imprisonment and toward eligibility for parole for allowances of time as provided in rules and regulations made under G.S. 148-11 and 148-13.

(d) Earned Time Credit for Medically and Physically Unfit Inmates. — Inmates in the custody of the Department of Correction who suffer from medical conditions or physical disabilities that prevent their assignment to work release or other rehabilitative activities may, consistent with rules of the Department of Correction, earn credit based upon good behavior or other criteria determined by the Department that may be used to reduce their maximum term of imprisonment as provided in G.S. 15A-1340.13(d) for felony sentences and in G.S. 15A-1340.20(d) for misdemeanor sentences. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, s. 19; 1979, c. 749, s. 8; c. 760, s. 4; 1981, c. 571; c. 1127, s. 84; 1983, c. 560, § 1; 1993, c. 538, s. 20; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 2001-424, s. 25.1(a).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsection (b) allows direct crediting by the Department of Correction for appropriate time which was not credited at judgment. Crediting by the judge is left to the provisions of Article 19A of General Statutes Chapter 15.

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2001-424, s. 1.2, provides: "This act shall be known as the 'Current Operations and Capital Improvements Appropriations Act of 2001'."

Session Laws 2001-424, s. 36.5 is a severability clause.

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-424, s. 25.1, effective September 26, 2001, and applicable to inmates serving sentences on or after that date, added subsection (d).

CASE NOTES

Conduct Prior to Original Trial and Sentencing. — An inmate's good behavior prior to his original trial and/or the sentencing hearing may be found as a nonstatutory mitigating factor, and his bad conduct during the same time frame may be found as a nonstatutory aggravating factor. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Conduct Between Conviction and Resentencing. — As § 15A-1335 prohibits the trial court from resentencing a defendant to a term of imprisonment greater than the prior sentence less the portion of the prior sentence previously served, a trial judge in North Carolina may not consider a defendant's bad conduct during the period between his conviction and the resentencing hearing to increase his sentence. However, bad conduct may be found by the trial judge as a nonstatutory aggravating factor to be utilized by the judge in deciding the sentence to be imposed, so long as the new sentence is no more severe than the original one. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

A defendant's good conduct while incarcerated during the period from his conviction until the time of his resentencing hearing may, in the discretion of the trial judge, be found as a nonstatutory mitigating factor under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Trial judge's remarks concerning the effect of "good time" and "gain time" were not an expression of dissatisfaction with the length of time convicted criminals must serve in prison, but were made in an effort to respond to defense counsel's impassioned argument concerning the fact that the defendant would be required to serve other sentences totalling four years at the expiration of the sentence at issue; thus it could not be said by such remarks that the trial court was using the sentencing process to thwart the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Swimm, 316 N.C. 24, 340 S.E.2d 65 (1986).

Article 84.

Fines.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article derives from those appearing in the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly, as revised by the Commission.

§ 15A-1361. Authorized fines and penalties.

A person who has been convicted of a criminal offense may be ordered to pay a fine as provided by law. A person who has been found responsible for an infraction may be ordered to pay a penalty as provided by law. Unless the context clearly requires otherwise, references in this Article to fines also include penalties. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1985, c. 764, s. 6.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section merely states that payment of a fine is an appropriate penalty when law otherwise provides for a fine as a punishment available for that offense.

Legal Periodicals. — For article, "Trial Stage and Appellate Procedure Act: An Overview," see 14 Wake Forest L. Rev. 899 (1978).

For article, "Disposition of Defendants Under Chapter 15A," see 14 Wake Forest L. Rev. 971 (1978).

For article, "Sentencing Due Process: Evolving Constitutional Principles," see 18 Wake Forest L. Rev. 523 (1982).

§ 15A-1362. Imposition of fines.

(a) General Criteria. — In determining the method of payment of a fine, the court should consider the burden that payment will impose in view of the financial resources of the defendant.

(b) Installment or Delayed Payments. — When a defendant is ordered to pay a fine, the court may provide for the payment to be made within a specified period of time or in specified installments. If no such provision is made a part of the sentence, the fine is payable forthwith.

(c) Nonpayment. — When a defendant is ordered, other than as a condition of probation, to pay a fine, costs, or both, the court may impose at the same time a sentence to be served in the event that the fine is not paid. The court also may impose an order that the defendant appear, if he fails to make the required payment, at a specified time to show cause why he should not be imprisoned. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsection (a) is a precatory provision urging that fines be tailored to the financial resources of the defendant and not be always imposed at the same amount for the same offense.

Subsection (b) specifically authorizes the practice of permitting installment payment of the fine or deferred payment of a fine, but only if such payment is specified in the judgment.

Subsection (c) specifically authorizes the suspended sentence to encourage payment of the fine. Although this section does not say so, it is intended that the suspended sentence is terminated upon payment of the fine unless the fine is merely one condition of a probationary sentence.

§ 15A-1363. Remission of a fine or costs.

A defendant who has been required to pay a fine or costs, including a requirement to pay fine or costs as a condition of probation, or a prosecutor, may at any time petition the sentencing court for a remission or revocation of the fine or costs or any unpaid portion of it. If it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the circumstances which warranted the imposition of the fine or costs no longer exist, that it would otherwise be unjust to require payment, or that the proper administration of justice requires resolution of the case, the court may remit or revoke the fine or costs or the unpaid portion in whole or in part or may modify the method of payment. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section gives specific approval to the practice of removing or reducing an unpaid fine that is due. Three grounds for this act are stated: that the circumstances warranting imposition of the fine no longer exist; that to require payment would be unjust; or the proper administrator of justice declares resolution of the case. The first two grounds go to changed factual circumstances or changed ability of the defendant to pay. That last ground is aimed at the situation in which an unpaid fine will apparently go unpaid forever and the court wishes to close the case.

§ 15A-1364. Response to nonpayment.

(a) Response to Default. — When a defendant who has been required to pay a fine or costs or both defaults in payment or in any installment, the court, upon the motion of the prosecutor or upon its own motion, may require the defendant to appear and show cause why he should not be imprisoned or may rely upon a conditional show cause order entered under G.S. 15A-1362(c). If the defendant fails to appear, an order for his arrest may be issued.

(b) Imprisonment; Criteria. — Following a requirement to show cause under subsection (a), unless the defendant shows inability to comply and that his nonpayment was not attributable to a failure on his part to make a good faith effort to obtain the necessary funds for payment, the court may order the suspended sentence, if any, activated, or, if the law provides no term of imprisonment for the offense for which the defendant was convicted or if no suspended sentence was imposed, the court may order the defendant imprisoned for a term not to exceed 30 days. The court, before activating a sentence of imprisonment, may reduce the sentence. The court may provide in its order that payment or satisfaction at any time of the fine and costs imposed by the court will entitle the defendant to his release from the imprisonment or, after entering the order, may at any time reduce the sentence for good cause shown, including payment or satisfaction of the fine.

(c) Modification of Fine or Costs. — If it appears that the default in the payment of a fine or costs is not attributable to failure on the defendant's part to make a good faith effort to obtain the necessary funds for payment, the court may enter an order:

(1) Allowing the defendant additional time for payment; or

(2) Reducing the amount of the fine or costs or of each installment; or

(3) Revoking the fine or costs or the unpaid portion in whole or in part.

(d) Organizations. — When an organization is required to pay a fine or costs or both, it is the duty of the person or persons authorized to make disbursement of the assets of the organization to make payment from assets of the organization, and a failure to do so constitutes contempt of court. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is intended to respond to the demands of Tate v. Short, 401 U.S. 395, 91 S. Ct. 668, 28 L. Ed. 2d 130 (1970), holding unconstitutional the imprisonment of a defendant who does not pay his fine because he is unable to. When imprisonment is appropriate it is for the period specified in the suspended sentence. If there is no suspended sentence it is an automatic 30-day jail term. Even after being jailed, however, the defendant may be released if he pays the fine.

Subsection (d) provides jailing of a corporate officer who refuses to pay a fine imposed against the corporation.

CASE NOTES

Burden of Proving Inability to Pay. — In a probation revocation proceeding based upon defendant's failure to pay a fine or restitution which was a condition of his probation, the burden is upon the defendant to offer evidence of his inability to pay money according to the terms of the probationary judgment. State v. Jones, 78 N.C. App. 507, 337 S.E.2d 195 (1985).

Good Faith Effort to Pay Required. — A convicted defendant ordered to pay a fine or costs may not be imprisoned for failure to comply if the delinquency in paying was not attributable to a failure on his part to make a good faith effort to obtain the necessary funds for payment. State v. Johnson, 124 N.C. App. 462, 478 S.E.2d 16 (1996).

§ 15A-1365. Judgment for fines docketed; lien and execution.

When a defendant has defaulted in payment of a fine or costs, the judge may order that the judgment be docketed. Upon being docketed, the judgment becomes a lien on the real estate of the defendant in the same manner as do judgments in civil actions. Executions on docketed judgments may be stayed only when an appeal is taken and security is given as required in civil cases. If the judgment is affirmed on appeal to the appellate division, the clerk of the superior court, on receipt of the certificate from the appellate division, must issue execution on the judgment. The clerk may not issue an execution, however, if the fine or costs were imposed for an offense other than trafficking in controlled substances or conspiring to traffic in controlled substances under G.S. 90-95(h) and (i), respectively, and the defendant elects to serve the suspended sentence, if any, or serve a term of 30 days, if no suspended sentence was imposed. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1985, c. 411.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section largely carries forward prior law except for the last sentence. That provision is new and essentially gives the defendant in any case an election to serve a term of imprisonment rather than pay a fine. It also tries to make clear that the judgment need not be docketed until default.

Article 84A.

Post-Release Supervision.

§ 15A-1368. Definitions and administration.

(a) The following words have the listed meaning in this Article:

(1) Post-release supervision or supervision. — The time for which a sentenced prisoner is released from prison before the termination of his maximum prison term, controlled by the rules and conditions of this Article. Purposes of post-release supervision include all or any of the following: to monitor and control the prisoner in the community, to assist the prisoner in reintegrating into society, to collect restitution and other court indebtedness from the prisoner, and to continue the prisoner's treatment or education.

(2) Supervisee. — A person released from incarceration and in the custody of the Department of Correction and Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission on post-release supervision.

(3) Commission. — The Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission, whose general authority is described in G.S. 143B-266.

(4) Minimum imposed term. — The minimum term of imprisonment imposed on an individual prisoner by a court judgment, as described in G.S. 15A-1340.13(c). When a prisoner is serving consecutive imprisonment terms, the minimum imposed term, for purposes of this Article, is the sum of all minimum terms imposed in the court judgment.

(5) Maximum imposed term. — The maximum term of imprisonment imposed on an individual prisoner by a court judgment, as described in G.S. 15A-1340.13(c). When a prisoner is serving consecutive prison terms, the maximum imposed term, for purposes of this Article, is the sum of all maximum terms imposed in the court judgment or judgments, less nine months for each of the second and subsequent sentences imposed for Class B through Class E felonies.

(b) Administration. — The Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission, as authorized in Chapter 143 of the General Statutes, shall administer post-release supervision as provided in this Article. (1993, c. 538, s. 20.1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 14, ss. 24, 25; c. 24, s. 14(b); 1997-237, s. 2.)

Editor's Note. — The number of this section was assigned by the Revisor of Statutes, the number in Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 20.1 having been § 15A-1370.1.

§ 15A-1368.1. Applicability of Article 84A.

This Article applies to all felons in Class B1 through Class E sentenced to an active punishment under Article 81B of this Chapter, but does not apply to felons in Class B1 sentenced to life imprisonment without parole. Prisoners subject to Articles 85 and 85A of this Chapter are excluded from this Article's coverage. (1993, c. 538, s. 20.1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 14, s. 26; c. 22, s. 8; c. 24, s. 14(b).)

Editor's Note. — The number of this section was assigned by the Revisor of Statutes, the number in Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 20.1 having been § 15A-1370.2.

§ 15A-1368.2. Post-release supervision eligibility and procedure.

(a) A prisoner to whom this Article applies shall be released from prison for post-release supervision on the date equivalent to his maximum imposed prison term less nine months, less any earned time awarded by the Department of Correction or the custodian of a local confinement facility under G.S. 15A-1340.13(d). If a prisoner has not been awarded any earned time, the prisoner shall be released for post-release supervision on the date equivalent to his maximum prison term less nine months.

(b) A prisoner shall not refuse post-release supervision.

(c) A supervisee's period of post-release supervision shall be for a period of nine months, unless the offense is an offense for which registration is required pursuant to Article 27A of Chapter 14 of the General Statutes. For offenses subject to the registration requirement of Article 27A of Chapter 14 of the General Statutes, the period of post-release supervision is five years. The conditions of post-release supervision are as authorized in G.S. 15A-1368.5.

(d) A supervisee's period of post-release supervision may be reduced while the supervisee is under supervision by earned time awarded by the Department of Correction, pursuant to rules adopted in accordance with law. A supervisee is eligible to receive earned time credit toward the period of supervision for compliance with reintegrative conditions described in G.S. 15A-1368.5.

(e) Repealed by Session Laws 1997-237, s. 7.

(f) When a supervisee completes the period of post-release supervision, the sentence or sentences from which the supervisee was placed on post-release supervision are terminated. (1993, c. 538, s. 20.1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 767, s. 4; 1996, 2nd Ex. Sess., c. 18, s. 20.14(a); 1997-237, s. 7.)

Editor's Note. — The number of this section was assigned by the Revisor of Statutes, the number in Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 20.1 having been § 15A-1370.3.

§ 15A-1368.3. Incidents of post-release supervision.

(a) Conditionality. — Post-release supervision is conditional and subject to revocation.

(b) Modification. — The Commission may for good cause shown modify the conditions of post-release supervision at any time before the termination of the supervision period.

(c) Effect of Violation. — If the supervisee violates a condition, described in G.S. 15A-1368.4, at any time before the termination of the supervision period, the Commission may continue the supervisee on the existing supervision, with or without modifying the conditions, or if continuation or modification is not appropriate, may revoke post-release supervision as provided in G.S. 15A-1368.6 and reimprison the supervisee for a term consistent with the following requirements:

(1) The supervisee will be returned to prison up to the time remaining on his maximum imposed term.

(2) The supervisee shall not receive any credit for days on post-release supervision against the maximum term of imprisonment imposed by the court under G.S. 15A-1340.13.

(3) Pursuant to Article 19A of Chapter 15, the Department of Correction shall award a prisoner credit against any term of reimprisonment for all time spent in custody as a result of revocation proceedings under G.S. 15A-1368.6.

(4) The prisoner is eligible to receive earned time credit against the maximum prison term as provided in G.S. 15A-1340.13(d) for time served in prison after the revocation.

(d) Re-Release After Revocation of Post-Release Supervision. — A prisoner who has been reimprisoned prior to completing a post-release supervision period may again be released on post-release supervision by the Commission subject to the provisions which govern initial release.

(e) Timing of Revocation. — The Commission may revoke post-release supervision for violation of a condition during the period of supervision. The Commission may also revoke post-release supervision following a period of supervision if:

(1) Before the expiration of the period of post-release supervision, the Commission has recorded its intent to conduct a revocation hearing; and

(2) The Commission finds that every reasonable effort has been made to notify the supervisee and conduct the hearing earlier. Prima facie evidence of reasonable effort to notify is the issuance of a temporary or conditional revocation order, as provided in G.S. 15A-1376, that goes unserved. (1993, c. 538, s. 20.1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 14, s. 27; c. 24, s. 14(b); 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 767, s. 5.)

Editor's Note. — The number of this section was assigned by the Revisor of Statutes, the number in Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 20.1 having been § 15A-1370.4.

§ 15A-1368.4. Conditions of post-release supervision.

(a) In General. — Conditions of post-release supervision may be reintegrative in nature or designed to control the supervisee's behavior and to enforce compliance with law or judicial order. A supervisee may have his supervision period revoked for any violation of a controlling condition or for repeated violation of a reintegrative condition. Compliance with reintegrative conditions may entitle a supervisee to earned time credits as described in G.S. 15A-1368.2(d).

(b) Required Condition. — The Commission shall provide as an express condition of every release that the supervisee not commit another crime during the period for which the supervisee remains subject to revocation. A supervisee's failure to comply with this controlling condition is a supervision violation for which the supervisee may face revocation as provided in G.S. 15A-1368.3.

(b1) Additional Required Conditions for Sex Offenders and Persons Convicted of Offenses Involving Physical, Mental, or Sexual Abuse of a Minor. — In addition to the required condition set forth in subsection (b) of this section, for a supervisee who has been convicted of an offense which is a reportable conviction as defined in G.S. 14-208.6(4), or which involves the physical, mental, or sexual abuse of a minor, controlling conditions, violations of which may result in revocation of post-release supervision, are:

(1) Register as required by G.S. 14-208.7 if the offense is a reportable conviction as defined by G.S. 14-208.6(4).

(2) Participate in such evaluation and treatment as is necessary to complete a prescribed course of psychiatric, psychological, or other rehabilitative treatment as ordered by the Commission.

(3) Not communicate with, be in the presence of, or found in or on the premises of the victim of the offense.

(4) Not reside in a household with any minor child if the offense is one in which there is evidence of sexual abuse of a minor.

(5) Not reside in a household with any minor child if the offense is one in which there is evidence of physical or mental abuse of a minor, unless a court of competent jurisdiction expressly finds that it is unlikely that the defendant's harmful or abusive conduct will recur and that it would be in the child's best interest to allow the supervisee to reside in the same household with a minor child.

(c) Discretionary Conditions. — The Commission, in consultation with the Division of Community Corrections, may impose conditions on a supervisee it believes reasonably necessary to ensure that the supervisee will lead a law-abiding life or to assist the supervisee to do so.

(d) Reintegrative Conditions. — Appropriate reintegrative conditions, for which a supervisee may receive earned time credits against the length of the supervision period, and repeated violation that may result in revocation of post-release supervision, are:

(1) Work faithfully at suitable employment or faithfully pursue a course of study or vocational training that will equip the supervisee for suitable employment.

(2) Undergo available medical or psychiatric treatment and remain in a specified institution if required for that purpose.

(3) Attend or reside in a facility providing rehabilitation, instruction, recreation, or residence for persons on post-release supervision.

(4) Support the supervisee's dependents and meet other family responsibilities.

(5) In the case of a supervisee who attended a basic skills program during incarceration, continue attending a basic skills program in pursuit of a General Education Development Degree or adult high school diploma.

(6) Satisfy other conditions reasonably related to reintegration into society.

(e) Controlling Conditions. — Appropriate controlling conditions, violation of which may result in revocation of post-release supervision, are:

(1) Not use, possess, or control any illegal drug or controlled substance unless it has been prescribed for the supervisee by a licensed physician and is in the original container with the prescription number affixed on it; not knowingly associate with any known or previously convicted users, possessors, or sellers of any such illegal drugs or controlled substances; and not knowingly be present at or frequent any place where such illegal drugs or controlled substances are sold, kept, or used.

(2) Comply with a court order to pay the costs of reintegrative treatment for a minor and a minor's parents or custodians where the offense involved evidence of physical, mental, or sexual abuse of a minor.

(3) Comply with a court order to pay court costs and costs for appointed counsel or public defender in the case for which the supervisee was convicted.

(4) Not possess a firearm, destructive device, or other dangerous weapon unless granted written permission by the Commission or a post-release supervision officer.

(5) Report to a post-release supervision officer at reasonable times and in a reasonable manner, as directed by the Commission or a post-release supervision officer.

(6) Permit a post-release supervision officer to visit at reasonable times at the supervisee's home or elsewhere.

(7) Remain within the geographic limits fixed by the Commission unless granted written permission to leave by the Commission or the post-release supervision officer.

(8) Answer all reasonable inquiries by the post-release supervision officer and obtain prior approval from the post-release supervision officer for any change in address or employment.

(9) Promptly notify the post-release supervision officer of any change in address or employment.

(10) Submit at reasonable times to searches of the supervisee's person by a post-release supervision officer for purposes reasonably related to the post-release supervision. The Commission shall not require as a condition of post-release supervision that the supervisee submit to any other searches that would otherwise be unlawful. Whenever the search consists of testing for the presence of illegal drugs, the supervisee may also be required to reimburse the Department of Correction for the actual cost of drug testing and drug screening, if the results are positive.

(11) Make restitution or reparation to an aggrieved party as provided in G.S. 148-57.1.

(12) Comply with an order from a court of competent jurisdiction regarding the payment of an obligation of the supervisee in connection with any judgment rendered by the court.

(13) Remain in one or more specified places for a specified period or periods each day, and wear a device that permits the defendant's compliance with the condition to be monitored electronically.

(14) Submit to supervision by officers assigned to the Intensive Post-Release Supervision Program established pursuant to G.S. 143B-262(c), and abide by the rules adopted for that Program.

(e1) Prohibited Conditions. — The Commission shall not impose community service as a condition of post-release supervision.

(f) Required Supervision Fee. — The Commission shall require as a condition of post-release supervision that the supervisee pay a supervision fee of twenty dollars ($20.00) per month. The Commission may exempt a supervisee from this condition only if it finds that requiring payment of the fee is an undue economic burden. The fee shall be paid to the clerk of superior court of the county in which the supervisee was convicted. The clerk shall transmit any money collected pursuant to this subsection to the State to be deposited in the State's General Fund. In no event shall a supervisee be required to pay more than one supervision fee per month. (1993, c. 538, s. 20.1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1996, 2nd Ex. Sess., c. 18, s. 20.14(b); 1997-57, s. 6; 1997-237, s. 6; 2001-487, s. 47(c).)

§ 15A-1368.5. Commencement of post-release supervision; multiple sentences.

A period of post-release supervision begins on the day the prisoner is released from imprisonment. Periods of post-release supervision run concurrently with any federal or State prison, jail, probation, or parole terms to which the prisoner is subject during the period, only if the jurisdiction which sentenced the prisoner to prison, jail, probation, or parole permits concurrent crediting of supervision time. (1993, c. 538, s. 20.1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b).)

Editor's Note. — The number of this section was assigned by the Revisor of Statutes, the number in Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 20.1 having been § 15A-1370.6.

§ 15A-1368.6. Arrest and hearing on post-release supervision violation.

(a) Arrest for Violation of Post-Release Supervision. — A supervisee is subject to arrest by a law enforcement officer or a post-release supervision officer for violation of conditions of post-release supervision only upon issuance of an order of temporary or conditional revocation of post-release supervision by the Commission. However, a post-release supervision revocation hearing under subsection (e) of this section may be held without first arresting the supervisee.

(b) When and Where Preliminary Hearing on Post-Release Supervision Violation Required. — Unless the hearing required by subsection (e) of this section is first held or a continuance is requested by the supervisee, a preliminary hearing on supervision violation shall be held reasonably near the place of the alleged violation or arrest and within seven working days of the arrest of a supervisee to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that the supervisee violated a condition of post-release supervision. Otherwise, the supervisee shall be released seven working days after arrest to continue on supervision pending a hearing. If the supervisee is not within the State, the preliminary hearing is as prescribed by G.S. 148-65.1A.

(c) Officers to Conduct Preliminary Hearing. — The preliminary hearing on post-release supervision violation shall be conducted by a judicial official, or by a hearing officer designated by the Commission. A person employed by the Department of Correction shall not serve as a hearing officer at a hearing provided by this section unless that person is a member of the Commission, or is employed solely as a hearing officer.

(d) Procedure for Preliminary Hearing. — The Department of Correction shall give the supervisee notice of the preliminary hearing and its purpose, including a statement of the violations alleged. At the hearing, the supervisee may appear and speak in the supervisee's own behalf, may present relevant information, and may, on request, personally question witnesses and adverse informants, unless the hearing officer finds good cause for not allowing confrontation. If the person holding the hearing determines there is probable cause to believe the supervisee violated conditions of supervision, the hearing officer shall summarize the reasons for the determination and the evidence relied on. Formal rules of evidence do not apply at the hearing. If probable cause is found, the supervisee may be held in the custody of the Department of Correction to serve the appropriate term of imprisonment, subject to the outcome of a revocation hearing under subsection (e) of this section.

(e) Revocation Hearing. — Before finally revoking post-release supervision, the Commission shall, unless the supervisee waived the hearing or the time limit, provide a hearing within 45 days of the supervisee's reconfinement to determine whether to revoke supervision finally. For purposes of this subsection, the 45-day period begins when the preliminary hearing required by subsection (b) of this section is held or waived, or upon the passage of seven working days after arrest, whichever is sooner. The Commission shall adopt rules governing the hearing. (1993, c. 538, s. 20.1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1996, 2nd Ex. Sess., c. 18, s. 20.15(b); 1997-237, s. 1; 2000-189, s. 1.)

Editor's Note. — The number of this section was assigned by the Revisor of Statutes, the number in Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 20.1 having been § 15A-1370.7.

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2000-189, s. 1, effective August 2, 2000, deleted "and shall file and publish them as provided in Article 5 of Chapter 150B of the General Statutes" at the end of subsection (e).

§ 15A-1371. Parole eligibility, consideration, and refusal.

(a) Eligibility. — Unless his sentence includes a minimum sentence, a prisoner serving a term of imprisonment for a conviction of impaired driving under G.S. 20-138.1 other than one included in a sentence of special probation imposed under authority of this Subchapter is eligible for release on parole at any time. A prisoner whose sentence includes a minimum term of imprisonment imposed under authority of this Subchapter is eligible for release on parole only upon completion of the service of that minimum term or one fifth of the maximum penalty allowed by law for the offense for which the prisoner is sentenced, whichever is less, less any credit allowed under G.S. 15A-1355(c) and Article 19A of Chapter 15 of the General Statutes.

(a1) Repealed by Session Laws 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 21, s. 3.

(b)(1), (2) Repealed by Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 22.

(3) Whenever the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission will be considering for parole a prisoner serving a sentence of life imprisonment the Commission must notify, at least 30 days in advance of considering the parole, by first class mail at the last known address:

a. The prisoner;

b. The district attorney of the district where the prisoner was convicted;

c. The head of the law enforcement agency that arrested the prisoner, if the head of the agency has requested in writing that he be notified;

d. Any of the victim's immediate family members who have requested in writing to be notified; and

e. Repealed by Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 22.

f. As many newspapers of general circulation and other media in the county where the defendant was convicted and if different, in the county where the prisoner was charged, as reasonable.

The Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission must consider any information provided by any such parties before consideration of parole. The Commission must also give the district attorney, the head of the law enforcement agency who has requested in writing to be notified, the victim, any member of the victim's immediate family who has requested to be notified, and as many newspapers of general circulation and other media in the county or counties designated in sub-subdivision f. of this section as reasonable, written notice of its decision within 10 days of that decision. The Parole Commission shall not, however, include the name of any victim in its notification to the newspapers and other media.

(c) Repealed by Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 22.

(d) Criteria. — The Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission may refuse to release on parole a prisoner it is considering for parole if it believes:

(1) There is a substantial risk that he will not conform to reasonable conditions of parole; or

(2) His release at that time would unduly depreciate the seriousness of his crime or promote disrespect for law; or

(3) His continued correctional treatment, medical care, or vocational or other training in the institution will substantially enhance his capacity to lead a law-abiding life if he is released at a later date; or

(4) There is a substantial risk that he would engage in further criminal conduct.

(e) Refusal of Parole. — A prisoner who has been granted parole may elect to refuse parole and to serve the remainder of his term of imprisonment.

(f) Repealed by Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 22.

(g) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), a prisoner serving a sentence of not less than 30 days nor as great as 18 months for impaired driving may be released on parole when he completes service of one-third of his maximum sentence unless the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission finds in writing that:

(1) There is a substantial risk that he will not conform to reasonable conditions of parole; or

(2) His release at that time would unduly depreciate the seriousness of his crime or promote disrespect for law; or

(3) His continued correctional treatment, medical care, or vocational or other training in the institution will substantially enhance his capacity to lead a law-abiding life if he is released at a later date; or

(4) There is a substantial risk that he would engage in further criminal conduct.

If a prisoner is released on parole by operation of this subsection, the term of parole is the unserved portion of the sentence to imprisonment, and the conditions of parole, unless otherwise specified by the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission, are those authorized in G.S. 15A-1374(b)(4) through (10).

In order that the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission may have an adequate opportunity to make a determination whether parole under this section should be denied, no prisoner eligible for parole under this subsection shall be released from confinement prior to the fifth full working day after he shall have been placed in the custody of the Secretary of Correction or the custodian of a local confinement facility.

(h) Community Service Parole. — Notwithstanding the provisions of any other subsection herein, prisoners serving sentences for impaired driving shall be eligible for community service parole, in the discretion of the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission.

Community service parole is early parole for the purpose of participation in a program of community service under the supervision of a probation/parole officer. A parolee who is paroled under this subsection must perform as a condition of parole community service in an amount and over a period of time to be determined by the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission. However, the total amount of community service shall not exceed an amount equal to 32 hours for each month of active service remaining in his minimum sentence. The Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission may grant early parole under this section without requiring the performance of community service if it determines that such performance is inappropriate to a particular case.

The probation/parole officer and the community service coordinator shall develop a program of community service for the parolee. The community service coordinator shall report any willful failure to perform community service work to the probation/parole officer. Parole may be revoked for any parolee who willfully fails to perform community service work as directed by a community service coordinator. The provisions of G.S. 15A-1376 shall apply to this violation of a condition of parole.

Community service parole eligibility shall be available to a prisoner:

(1) Who is serving an active sentence the term of which exceeds six months; and

(2) Who, in the opinion of the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission, is unlikely to engage in further criminal conduct; and

(3) Who agrees to complete service of his sentence as herein specified; and

(4) Who has served one-half of his minimum sentence.

In computing the service requirements of subdivision (4) of this subsection, credit shall be given for good time and gain time credit earned pursuant to G.S. 148-13. Nothing herein is intended to create or shall be construed to create a right or entitlement to community service parole in any prisoner.

(i) A fee of one hundred dollars ($100.00) shall be paid by all persons who participate in the Community Service Parole Program. That fee must be paid to the clerk of court in the county in which the parolee is released. The fee must be paid in full within two weeks unless the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission, upon a showing of hardship by the person, allows him additional time to pay the fee. The parolee may not be required to pay the fee before he begins the community service unless the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission specifically orders that he do so. Fees collected under this subsection shall be deposited in the General Fund. The fee imposed under this section may be paid as prescribed by the supervising parole officer.

(j) The Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission may terminate a prisoner's community service parole before the expiration of the term of imprisonment where doing so will not endanger the public, unduly depreciate the seriousness of the crime, or promote disrespect for the law. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, ss. 19A-22; 1979, c. 749, ss. 9, 10; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1316, s. 42; 1981, c. 63, s. 1; c. 179, s. 14; 1983 (Reg. Sess., 1984), c. 1098, s. 1; 1985, c. 453, ss. 1, 2; 1985 (Reg. Sess., 1986), c. 960, s. 2; c. 1012, ss. 2, 5; 1987, c. 47; c. 783, s. 7; 1989, c. 1, ss. 3, 4; 1991, c. 217, s. 3; c. 288, s. 2; 1993, c. 538, s. 22; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 21, s. 3; c. 24, s. 14(b); c. 25, ss. 1, 2.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsection (a) encompasses the important provision which gives the judge's minimum term considerably more bite than it has under present law. Unless the minimum term of imprisonment is particularly long, the Parole Commission must respect that minimum and the inmate cannot be paroled before that minimum is served. This subsection does place a limit on the effective minimum, however. If the minimum which the judge imposes is greater than one fifth of the maximum penalty allowed by law, then the inmate is eligible for release when he has served one fifth of that maximum. Notice that the limit is based on the maximum penalty allowed by law and not on the maximum term which the judge actually imposes. The Commission wished to avoid the circumstances which occurs under present law in which the judge manipulates the length of the sentence imposed in order to affect the date for which the defendant is eligible for release on parole. This means that a judge if he wished could sentence a safecracker to a prison term of six to 10 years and the offender could not be released on parole until he had served the full six years, since six years is one fifth of the maximum penalty allowed by law. On the other hand, if a judge sentenced the offender to a term of nine to 10 years, the practical effect would be the same as the earlier example. Since the minimum term exceeded one fifth of the maximum allowed by law, he would continue to be eligible for release after serving six years. The prior parole eligibility standard, one fourth of the minimum sentences, has been retained for those crimes which have a mandatory minimum sentence since these mandatory sentences were enacted with the previous parole statutes in mind.

Subsection (b) does two important things: (1) it requires review of each inmate's case as soon as he is eligible for parole and annually thereafter until he is released. The subsection does not, however, have anything to say about the procedure to be followed in this consideration for parole. The subsection also requires that any time the Parole Commission is considering for release one who has served less than half the maximum term it must notify the district attorney in advance and he, in turn, may require that the consideration be made publicly. This provision was added in an attempt to provide some assurance against the feeling sometimes expressed that parole is granted without adequate public exposure of the facts of the case.

Subsection (c) was discussed in the commentary on § 15A-1351(d). Subsection (d) states the reasons why parole may be denied, but it does not require a written finding or other written statement. The Commission intended that this be an exclusive list of legitimate bases for denying parole.

Subsection (e) grants the offender the same kind of election to refuse release that he has in the case of probation and fine.

Subsection (f) provides another of the significant changes brought by this proposal. It requires a minimum of six months parole for every person serving a term of 18 months or more for a felony. The Commission believed that the prisoner who is unable to obtain parole earlier is the very one who most needs this period of gradual readjustment to freedom.

Subsection (g) attempts to overcome the inertia that makes it almost impossible for persons with short sentences to obtain parole; it reverses the normal burden — the person must be released unless the Parole Commission finds to the contrary. The final sentence of this subsection attempts to establish an automatic term of parole and automatic conditions of parole, in those cases since, by definition, the Parole Commission will not be considering these matters individually.

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Credit for Time Served.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under former §§ 148-58, 148-60, 148-61.1, and 148-62, and prior versions of this section.

Purpose of Parole. — Parole is intended to be a means of restoring offenders who are good social risks to society; to afford the unfortunate another opportunity by clemency — under guidance and control of the Board (now Commission). Jernigan v. State, 10 N.C. App. 562, 179 S.E.2d 788, aff'd, 279 N.C. 556, 184 S.E.2d 259 (1971).

Legislature May Establish Parole System. — In the division of governmental authority the legislature has exclusive power to determine the penalogical system of the State. It alone can prescribe the punishment for crime. It may therefore establish a parole system. Jernigan v. State, 279 N.C. 556, 184 S.E.2d 259 (1971).

And Administration of Parole System May Be Delegated. — The granting of parole and the supervision of parolees are purely administrative functions, and accordingly may be entrusted by the legislature to nonjudicial agencies. Jernigan v. State, 279 N.C. 556, 184 S.E.2d 259 (1971).

Grant or Denial of Parole Power Not a Judicial Function. — The granting, withholding or frustration of the parole power is not and has never been a responsibility of the judicial branch of government. State v. Snowden, 26 N.C. App. 45, 215 S.E.2d 157, cert. denied, 288 N.C. 251, 217 S.E.2d 675 (1975).

Originally a Function of Executive Branch. — In this State the power to grant and to revoke paroles developed originally as a function of the executive branch of the government. Jernigan v. State, 10 N.C. App. 562, 179 S.E.2d 788, aff'd, 279 N.C. 556, 184 S.E.2d 259 (1971).

Department and Commission Determine Right to Parole. — Whether a prisoner is entitled to honor-grade status, work release, or parole involves policy decisions which should be decided by the Department of Correction and the Board of Paroles (now Post-Relelase Supervision and Parole Commission). These agencies are charged with the duty and are properly given means of discharging it not available to the courts. Goble v. Bounds, 281 N.C. 307, 188 S.E.2d 347 (1972).

Court Proceeding Not Best Method for Determining When to Grant Parole. — Whether to release a prisoner before the completion of his sentence is a question with many facets. It cannot be answered by rules of law. Those who have watched the prisoner during his confinement are better qualified than the courts to say if and when he merits parole. Court proceeding would be a poor substitute for the method now employed. Goble v. Bounds, 281 N.C. 307, 188 S.E.2d 347 (1972).

Due Process Applicable. — protected by the due process clause, since it creates a presumption that parole release will be granted if there are no findings that fall within the stated exceptions. Harwood v. Johnson, 326 N.C. 231, 388 S.E.2d 439, rehearing denied, 326 N.C. 488, 389 S.E.2d 810 (1990).

Conditions of parole are a restraint upon a parolee's liberty not shared by the public generally. He is still under the supervision of the parole authorities and subject to be remanded if he fails to perform or violates the conditions of the parole. State v. Rhinehart, 267 N.C. 470, 148 S.E.2d 651 (1966).

Rigid Guidelines Neither Necessary Nor Desirable. — In the matter of paroles, which historically, in this State at least, has been considered a function of the executive branch and which by its nature involves evaluation of a large number of intangibles, rigid guidelines are neither necessary nor desirable. Jernigan v. State, 10 N.C. App. 562, 179 S.E.2d 788, aff'd, 279 N.C. 556, 184 S.E.2d 259 (1971).

Parole Must Be Earned. — While a prisoner takes with him into the prison certain rights which may not be denied him, the legal right to the mitigation of his punishment is not one of them. It is contemplated as a part of his rehabilitation that he earn his right to honor-grade status, work release, or parole. Goble v. Bounds, 281 N.C. 307, 188 S.E.2d 347 (1972).

Parole Not to Be Anticipated in Sentencing. — Release of a prisoner before completion of his sentence cannot and should not be anticipated with exactness by the trial judge as the basis for the imposition of sentences in cases. State v. Snowden, 26 N.C. App. 45, 215 S.E.2d 157, cert. denied, 288 N.C. 251, 217 S.E.2d 675 (1975).

Sentencing process may not be expressly employed to thwart the parole process, the responsibility for which is vested in another branch of government. State v. Snowden, 26 N.C. App. 45, 215 S.E.2d 157, cert. denied, 288 N.C. 251, 217 S.E.2d 675 (1975).

Merits of Trial and Validity of Judgment May Not Be Raised. — The granting of honor-grade status, work release, and parole is by way of mitigating the terms of the judgment which the court has entered. The legality and propriety of the trial and sentence have already been determined after the prisoner has been heard and his constitutional rights have been accorded him. The merits of the trial and the validity of the judgment may not again be raised before the Department of Correction and the Board of Paroles (now Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission). Goble v. Bounds, 281 N.C. 307, 188 S.E.2d 347 (1972).

Instruction on Parole Ineligibility in Capital Case. — Due process did not require that the sentencing jury be informed that the defendant charged with first degree murder was parole ineligible, where the jury did not inquire about defendant's parole eligibility and the prosecutors did not argue future dangerousness to the jury; arguing the aggravating circumstances did not amount to arguing future dangerousness. State v. Chapman, 342 N.C. 330, 464 S.E.2d 661 (1995), cert. denied, 518 U.S. 1023, 116 S. Ct. 2560, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1077 (1996).

Right of Appeal Not Affected by Parole. — The fact that a defendant is on parole at the time of his application for certiorari to review an order denying him post-conviction relief does not affect his right to appellate review. State v. Rhinehart, 267 N.C. 470, 148 S.E.2d 651 (1966).

Applied in State v. Bonds, 45 N.C. App. 62, 262 S.E.2d 340 (1980); State v. Wright, 302 N.C. 122, 273 S.E.2d 699 (1981); State v. Parton, 303 N.C. 55, 277 S.E.2d 410 (1981); State v. II. CREDIT FOR TIME SERVED.

Double Jeopardy. — The constitutional guarantee against double jeopardy absolutely requires that punishment already exacted must be fully credited in imposing sentence upon a new conviction for the same offense. Wilson v. North Carolina, 438 F.2d 284 (4th Cir. 1971).

Credit for Time Served Pending Appeal. — Time spent in jail by a prisoner serving a life sentence, between his first conviction and the dismissal of his final appeal must be credited toward his parole eligibility date. Wilson v. North Carolina, 438 F.2d 284 (4th Cir. 1971).

A prisoner may have the time he spends in jail pursuing appeals and awaiting retrial taken into account in determining when he can be considered for parole. Wilson v. North Carolina, 438 F.2d 284 (4th Cir. 1971).

The length of time a prisoner serving a life sentence was imprisoned, from the date of his first conviction to the date his sentence began to run following affirmance of his second appeal, must be included in computing the statutory period of 10 years which he must serve before he can be considered for commutation. Wilson v. North Carolina, 438 F.2d 284 (4th Cir. 1971).

Denial of Credit for Time Pending Appeal Is Multiple Punishment. — Denial of credit to a prisoner for the time he spent in jail from the date of his first conviction until the affirmance of his second appeal is multiple punishment. Such time must be fully credited insofar as possible as "punishment already exacted." Although it cannot be credited against his life sentence, which by its very nature is indefinite, it can be credited toward the 10 years he must wait to be considered for parole. Wilson v. North Carolina, 438 F.2d 284 (4th Cir. 1971).

§ 15A-1372. Length and effect of parole term.

(a) Term of Parole. — The term of parole for any person released from imprisonment may be no greater than one year.

(b) Repealed by Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 23.

(c) Termination of Sentence. — When a parolee completes his period of parole, the sentence or sentences from which he was paroled are terminated.

(d) Repealed by Session Laws 1993, c. 538, s. 23. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1981, c. 642; 1989, c. 1, s. 8; 1989 (Reg. Sess., 1990), c. 1031, s. 3; 1991, c. 217, s. 1; 1993, c. 538, s. 23; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 21, s. 4; c. 24, s. 14(b).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section establishes the permissible length of the parole term, which must always be at least one year or the remainder of his term if the remainder of the term is less than a year. Otherwise, the parole term is within the discretion of the Parole Commission as long as it is no greater than the outside limits set forth in this section, which vary according to the length of the maximum prison sentence imposed.

§ 15A-1373. Incidents of parole.

(a) Conditionality of Parole. — Unless terminated sooner as provided in subsection (b), parole remains conditional and subject to revocation.

(b) Early Termination. — The Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission may terminate a period of parole and discharge the parolee at any time after the expiration of one year of successful parole if warranted by the conduct of the parolee and the ends of justice.

(c) Modification of Conditions. — The Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission may for good cause shown modify the conditions of parole at any time prior to the expiration or termination of the period for which the parole remains conditional.

(d) Effect of Violation. — If the parolee violates a condition at any time prior to the expiration or termination of the period, the Commission may continue him on the existing parole, with or without modifying the conditions, or, if continuation or modification is not appropriate, may revoke the parole as provided in G.S. 15A-1376 and reimprison the parolee for a term consistent with the following requirements:

(1) The time the parolee was at liberty on parole and in compliance with all terms and conditions of that parole shall be credited on a day-for-day basis against the maximum term of imprisonment imposed by the court under G.S. 15A-1351, except that the parolee shall receive no credit for the last six months of his parole.

(2) The prisoner must be given credit against the term of reimprisonment for all time spent in custody as a result of revocation proceedings under G.S. 15A-1376.

(e) Re-parole. — A prisoner who has been reimprisoned following parole may be re-paroled by the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission subject to the provisions which govern initial parole. In the event that a defendant serves the final six months of his maximum imprisonment as a result of being recommitted for violation of parole, he may not be required to serve a further period on parole.

(f) Timing of Revocation. — The Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission may revoke parole for violation of a condition during the period of parole. The Commission also may revoke following the period of parole if:

(1) Before the expiration of the period of parole, the Commission has recorded its intent to conduct a revocation hearing, and

(2) The Commission finds that every reasonable effort has been made to notify the parolee and conduct the hearing earlier. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1979, c. 927; 1991, c. 217, s. 2; 1993, c. 538, s. 38; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section does not give to the parolee whose parole is revoked credit against the remainder of his sentence when he is reimprisoned for the period of time spent on parole prior to revocation. There is at least a minimum six months period on reimprisonment so that even if the parolee has very little time remaining on his active sentence, he still must serve six months in prison upon revocation. Under subsection (e) the recommitted parolee is still subject to the provisions of automatic parole at the end of his term unless he has served out the entire period of his imprisonment.

Subsection (f) provides for revocation and reimprisonment for a parolee after the period of parole if a parole violation occurred during the period of parole. This provision is aimed at the situation in which the violator is outside the jurisdiction and inaccessible earlier. As a precaution against abuse, the subsection requires that the intention to hold a revocation hearing be recorded prior to the expiration of the period of parole and requires a finding that every reasonable effort was made to conduct the hearing earlier.

CASE NOTES

Stated in Hawkins v. Freeman, 195 F.3d 732 (4th Cir. 1999).

§ 15A-1374. Conditions of parole.

(a) In General. — The Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission may in its discretion impose conditions of parole it believes reasonably necessary to insure that the parolee will lead a law-abiding life or to assist him to do so. The Commission must provide as an express condition of every parole that the parolee not commit another crime during the period for which the parole remains subject to revocation. When the Commission releases a person on parole, it must give him a written statement of the conditions on which he is being released.

(b) Appropriate Conditions. — As conditions of parole, the Commission may require that the parolee comply with one or more of the following conditions:

(1) Work faithfully at suitable employment or faithfully pursue a course of study or vocational training that will equip him for suitable employment.

(2) Undergo available medical or psychiatric treatment and remain in a specified institution if required for that purpose.

(3) Attend or reside in a facility providing rehabilitation, instruction, recreation, or residence for persons on parole.

(4) Support his dependents and meet other family responsibilities.

(5) Refrain from possessing a firearm, destructive device, or other dangerous weapon unless granted written permission by the Commission or the parole officer.

(6) Report to a parole officer at reasonable times and in a reasonable manner, as directed by the Commission or the parole officer.

(7) Permit the parole officer to visit him at reasonable times at his home or elsewhere.

(8) Remain within the geographic limits fixed by the Commission unless granted written permission to leave by the Commission or the parole officer.

(9) Answer all reasonable inquiries by the parole officer and obtain prior approval from the parole officer for any change in address or employment.

(10) Promptly notify the parole officer of any change in address or employment.

(11) Submit at reasonable times to searches of his person by a parole officer for purposes reasonably related to his parole supervision. The Commission may not require as a condition of parole that the parolee submit to any other searches that would otherwise be unlawful. Whenever the search consists of testing for the presence of illegal drugs, the parolee may also be required to reimburse the Department of Correction for the actual cost of drug testing and drug screening, if the results are positive.

(11a) Make restitution or reparation to an aggrieved party as provided in G.S. 148-57.1.

(11b) Comply with an order from a court of competent jurisdiction regarding the payment of an obligation of the parolee in connection with any judgment rendered by the court.

(11c) In the case of a parolee who was attending a basic skills program during incarceration, continue attending a basic skills program in pursuit of a General Education Development Degree or adult high school diploma.

(12) Satisfy other conditions reasonably related to his rehabilitation.

(c) Supervision Fee. — The Commission must require as a condition of parole that the parolee pay a supervision fee of twenty dollars ($20.00) per month. The Commission may exempt a parolee from this condition of parole only if it finds that requiring him to pay the fee will constitute an undue economic burden. The fee must be paid to the clerk of superior court of the county in which the parolee was convicted. The clerk must transmit any money collected pursuant to this subsection to the State to be deposited in the general fund of the State. In no event shall a person released on parole be required to pay more than one supervision fee per month. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1979, c. 749, s. 11; 1983, c. 562; 1985, c. 474, s. 6; 1987, c. 579, s. 3; c. 830, s. 17; 1989 (Reg. Sess., 1990), c. 1034, s. 2; 1991, c. 54, s. 1; 1991 (Reg. Sess., 1992), c. 1000, s. 2; 1993, c. 538, s. 39; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The provisions on conditions of parole are parallel to those on conditions of probation, including the provision on search. The search as a condition of parole may be made only by a parole officer, and must be reasonably related to the parole supervision.

CASE NOTES

Restitution May Be Made Condition of Parole. — The Parole Commission (now Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission) may, but is not required to implement the recommendation of the sentencing court for restitution as a condition of parole. State v. Killian, 37 N.C. App. 234, 245 S.E.2d 812 (1978).

As May Reimbursement of State for Counsel Fees. — Under the provisions of this section, the Parole Commission (now Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission) may, but is not required to, implement the recommendation of the sentencing court and impose as a condition of parole that the prisoner reimburse the State for counsel fees. State

v. Killian, 37 N.C. App. 234, 245 S.E.2d 812 (1978).

North Carolina is not barred from structuring a program to collect the amount it is owed from a financially-able defendant through reasonable and fairly administered procedures. The State's initiatives in this area naturally must be narrowly drawn to avoid either chilling the indigent's exercise of the right to counsel, or creating discriminating terms of repayment based solely on the defendant's poverty. Beyond these threshold requirements, however, the State has wide latitude to shape its attorneys fees recoupment or restitution program along the lines it deems most appropriate for achieving lawful State objectives. Alexander v. Johnson, 742 F.2d 117 (4th Cir. 1984).

North Carolina, like every jurisdiction, has an irrevocable constitutional duty to provide court-appointed counsel to an indigent defendant once he requests it. The developing jurisprudence in this area, however, does not require the State to absorb the expenses of providing such counsel when the defendant has acquired the financial ability to pay. Alexander v. Johnson, 742 F.2d 117 (4th Cir. 1984).

Although the North Carolina Supreme Court has never definitively decided the issue, there is persuasive authority in North Carolina law supporting the State's right to claim the status of an aggrieved party for the expenses associated with providing court-appointed counsel. Alexander v. Johnson, 742 F.2d 117 (4th Cir. 1984).

Constitutionality of Repayment Programs. — There is no single model to which all State repayment programs must conform. State repayment programs must conform. However, the Supreme Court in Fuller v. Oregon, 417 U.S. 40, 94 S. Ct. 2116, 40 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1974), and James v. Strange, 407 U.S. 128, 92 S. Ct. 2027, 32 L. Ed. 2d 600 (1972), has carefully identified the basic features separating a constitutionally acceptable recoupment or restitution program from one that is fatally defective. North Carolina's procedures for imposing the reimbursement of court-appointed counsel fees as a condition of parole are narrowly drawn to avoid unfairness and discriminatory effects. Alexander v. Johnson, 742 F.2d 117 (4th Cir. 1984).

Though far from a paragon of clarity and detail as a complete program, the North Carolina statutes relating to the repayment of attorneys' fees by restitution embody all the required features of a constitutionally acceptable approach. The indigent defendant's fundamental right to counsel is preserved under the North Carolina statute and no preconditions are placed on the exercise of that right beyond a reasonable and minimally intrusive procedure designed to establish the fact of indigency. Alexander v. Johnson, 742 F.2d 117 (4th Cir. 1984).

§ 15A-1375. Commencement of parole; multiple sentences.

A period of parole commences on the day the prisoner is released from imprisonment. Periods of parole run concurrently with any federal or State prison, jail, probation, or parole term to which the defendant is subject during the period. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

A person on parole who is during that time sentenced to a term of imprisonment or to a term of probation or parole continues to satisfy his parole term during the period when he is serving the other sentence.

§ 15A-1376. Arrest and hearing on parole violation.

(a) Arrest for Violation of Parole. — A parolee is subject to arrest by a law-enforcement officer or a parole officer for violation of conditions of parole only upon the issuance of an order of temporary or conditional revocation of parole by the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission. However, a parole revocation hearing under subsection (e) may be held without first arresting the parolee.

(b) When and Where Preliminary Hearing on Parole Violation Required. — Unless the hearing required by subsection (e) is first held or a continuance is requested by the parolee, a preliminary hearing on parole violation must be held reasonably near the place of the alleged violation or arrest and within seven working days of the arrest of a parolee to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that he violated a condition of parole. Otherwise, the parolee must be released seven working days after his arrest to continue on parole pending a hearing. If the parolee is not within the State, his preliminary hearing is as prescribed by G.S. 148-65.1A.

(c) Officers to Conduct Hearing. — The preliminary hearing on parole violation must be conducted by a judicial official, or by a hearing officer designated by the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission. No person employed by the Department of Correction may serve as a hearing officer at a hearing provided in this section unless he is a member of the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission or is employed solely as a hearing officer.

(d) Procedure for Preliminary Hearing on Parole Violation. — The Department of Correction must give the parolee notice of the preliminary hearing and its purpose, including a statement of the violations alleged. At the hearing, the parolee may appear and speak in his own behalf, may present relevant information, and may, on request, personally question witnesses and adverse informants, unless the hearing officer finds good cause for not allowing confrontation. If the person holding the hearing determines there is probable cause to believe the parolee violated his parole, he must summarize the reasons for his determination and the evidence he relied on. Formal rules of evidence do not apply at the hearing. If probable cause is found, the parolee may be held in the custody of the Department of Correction to serve the appropriate term of imprisonment, subject to the outcome of a revocation hearing under subsection (e).

(e) Revocation Hearing. — Before finally revoking parole, the Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission must, unless the parolee waived the hearing or the time limit, provide a hearing within 45 days of the parolee's reconfinement to determine whether to revoke parole finally. The Post-Release Supervision and Parole Commission must adopt rules governing the hearing. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, ss. 23-26; 1987, c. 827, s. 1; 1993, c. 538, s. 40; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1996, 2nd Ex. Sess., c. 18, s. 20.15(a); 2000-189, s. 2.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Like the parallel provisions on probation, this section carries forward prior law and practice and conforms procedure requirements for those demanded by the United States Supreme Court in Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484 (1972). The parolee's right to counsel is left to the provisions of G.S. 148-62.1. The provision of subsection (c) goes beyond the constitutional requirements and directs that the hearing examiner in any of the required hearings not be a person who holds some other job with the Department of Correction which might be seen as creating a kind of "conflict of interest." The only instance in which an employee of the Department of Correction may be used as the hearing examiner is either if he is a member of the Parole Commission or if his sole job is being hearing examiner.

Subsection (e) turns to North Carolina's Administrative Procedure Act for the hearing prescribed except for those exceptions noted, but does not intend otherwise to affect the 1975 exemption for the Department of Correction.

Editor's Note. — Pursuant to Session Laws 1987, c. 827, s. 1, reference to Chapter 150B has been substituted for reference to Chapter 150A in this section.

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2000-189, s. 2, effective August 2, 2000, substituted "adopt rules governing the hearing" for "adopt regulations governing the hearing and must file and publish them as provided in Article 5 of the Chapter 150B of the General Statutes" at the end of subsection (e).

SUBCHAPTER XIV. CORRECTION OF ERRORS AND APPEAL.

Article 88.

Post-Trial Motions and Appeal.

§ 15A-1401. Post-trial motions and appeal.

Relief from errors committed in criminal trials and proceedings and other post-trial relief may be sought by:

(1) Motion for appropriate relief, as provided in Article 89.

(2) Appeal and trial de novo in misdemeanor cases, as provided in Article 90.

(3) Appeal, as provided in Article 91. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

A motion for appropriate relief is a post-verdict motion (or a post-sentencing motion where there is no verdict) made to correct errors occurring prior to, during, and after a criminal trial. State v. Handy, 326 N.C. 532, 391 S.E.2d 159 (1990).

Article 89.

Motion for Appropriate Relief and Other Post-Trial Relief.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The motion for appropriate relief provided in this Article provides a single, unified procedure for raising at the trial level errors which are asserted to have been made during the trial. The Article provides a "motion in the cause" which may be used to seek any of the relief formerly available by motions in arrest of judgment, motions to set aside the verdict, motions for new trial, post-conviction proceedings, coram nobis and all other post-trial motions or procedures.

Under this procedure no significance will attach to the name given a motion made at the end of the trial or after the trial, but rather the essential tasks will be to point out the error which is asserted to have been committed and to ask for relief appropriate to correct that error. To this end this Article lists errors which may be raised by motions made in the trial court, sets out the time limits for seeking particular types of relief by motion, and enumerates relief available.

One objective is the elimination of formal lists of motions to be recited at the end of the trial and to move more directly to the problem and its solution. This statute, designed to make the practice simple and eliminate traps for the unwary, appears more complicated in statutory statement than our former codifications. The reason is obvious. Where we may have provided before, for example, for a "motion for a new trial," with a very simple statement in the statute, it was necessary to look to case law, other statutes, and in some instances the rules of civil procedure, for a more complete exposition of what those terms meant. This Article is designed to substantially reduce that search and bring most of these ideas together in one place.

It should be noted that the "post trial motions" Article was drawn with an eye to the "Appeals" Article which follows in Article 91. An attempt was made to maximize the capability of correcting errors at trial level in order to avoid the necessity of appeal. On the other hand, when an error has been pointed out in the trial by appropriate objection, there is no requirement for making formal motions after trial solely for the purpose of preserving the right to appeal.

As the phrase in the title, "and Other Post Trial Relief," indicates, this "motion in the cause" also may be used for post-trial functions other than the correction of errors. For instance, a defendant who has served his sentence to confinement could, pursuant to § 15A-1415(d)(9) utilize this procedure to assert his right to release.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article derives from those appearing in the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly, as revised by the Commission.

§ 15A-1411. Motion for appropriate relief.

(a) Relief from errors committed in the trial division, or other post-trial relief, may be sought by a motion for appropriate relief. Procedure for the making of the motion is as set out in G.S. 15A-1420.

(b) A motion for appropriate relief, whether made before or after the entry of judgment, is a motion in the original cause and not a new proceeding.

(c) The relief formerly available by motion in arrest of judgment, motion to set aside the verdict, motion for new trial, post-conviction proceedings, coram nobis and all other post-trial motions is available by motion for appropriate relief. The availability of relief by motion for appropriate relief is not a bar to relief by writ of habeas corpus. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section is designed to make clear that the simple motion in the original proceeding provided for here is available for assertion of the right to relief which formerly could have been provided by any of a variety of procedures, as prescribed in subsection (c). Of course it would be impossible to eliminate the writ of habeas corpus as the means of seeking relief where that writ is applicable. However, there should be substantial overlap in some areas and the system here, because of its simplicity, is likely to be the easier method of presenting an issue in many cases.

CASE NOTES

The Fair Sentencing Act, as codified in former Article 81A of this Chapter, resulted in revisions to other portions of the general statutes. See e.g., Chapter 14, Articles 1, 2, 2A, 33; Chapter 15A, Articles 58, 81A, 82, 83, 85, 85A, 89, 91; Chapter 148, Article 2, and Chapter 162, Article 4. State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

For case discussing the historical background, policies, purposes, and implementation of the "Fair Sentencing Act," see State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

Exhaustion of Remedies Provided by State. — North Carolina's institution of a new system of post-conviction review reaffirms its desire to review and correct possible criminal trial errors. The federal court welcomes such a manifest spirit and will require all state habeas corpus petitioners to avail themselves of §§ 15A-1411 to 15A-1422, or demonstrate that they would not be allowed to pursue their claims in these proceedings, before deeming the exhaustion requirement met. Vester v. Stephenson, 465 F. Supp. 868 (E.D.N.C. 1978).

Article Provides for Adjudication of Constitutional Claims. — The proper procedure which provides defendant adequate opportunity for adjudication of claimed deprivations of constitutional rights is found in this Article. State v. Neeley, 57 N.C. App. 211, 290 S.E.2d 727, rev'd on other grounds, 307 N.C. 247, 297 S.E.2d 389 (1982).

Definition. — A motion for appropriate relief is a post-verdict motion (or a post-sentencing motion where there is no verdict) made to correct errors occurring prior to, during, and after a criminal trial. State v. Handy, 326 N.C. 532, 391 S.E.2d 159 (1990).

When Motion in Arrest of Judgment Proper. — A motion in arrest of judgment is proper when it is apparent that no judgment against the defendant could be lawfully entered because of some fatal error appearing in (1) the organization of the court, (2) the charge made against the defendant (the information, warrant or indictment), (3) the arraignment and plea, (4) the verdict, and (5) the judgment. State v. McGaha, 306 N.C. 699, 295 S.E.2d 449 (1982).

Motion in Arrest of Judgment May Be First Made on Appeal. — A motion in arrest of judgment is directed to some fatal defect appearing on the fact of the record. Such a motion may be made for the first time on appeal in the Supreme Court. State v. McGaha, 306 N.C. 699, 295 S.E.2d 449 (1982).

Legal effect of arresting judgment is to vacate the verdict and sentence. The State may proceed against the defendants if it so desires, upon new and sufficient bills of indictment. State v. Goforth, 65 N.C. App. 302, 309 S.E.2d 488 (1983).

Judgment must be arrested when indictment fails to charge essential element of the offense. State v. Goforth, 65 N.C. App. 302, 309 S.E.2d 488 (1983).

Motion to Set Aside Verdict Is Addressed to Court's Discretion. — A motion to set aside the verdict for the reason that it is against the greater weight of the evidence is addressed to the discretion of the trial court and its ruling will not be disturbed absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Gilley, 306 N.C. 125, 291 S.E.2d 645 (1982); State v. Pratt, 306 N.C. 673, 295 S.E.2d 462 (1982); State v. Powell, 74 N.C. App. 584, 328 S.E.2d 613 (1985).

Motion to set aside the verdict is directed to the sound discretion of the trial judge. State v. Hageman, 307 N.C. 1, 296 S.E.2d 433 (1982).

Court's Authority To Strike Guilty Plea. — Neither the statutory nor the case law empowers the trial court with the absolute discretion to strike a guilty plea once it has been unconditionally accepted and entered. Thus, a trial court's discretion to strike a guilty plea and set a case for trial derives, if at all, from its comparable authority to overturn a jury verdict and order a new trial. State v. Oakley, 75 N.C. App. 99, 330 S.E.2d 59 (1985).

A motion to withdraw a guilty plea made before sentencing is significantly different from a post-judgment of collateral attack on such a plea, which would be by a motion for appropriate relief. State v. Handy, 326 N.C. 532, 391 S.E.2d 159 (1990).

Prerequisites for a new trial on the grounds of newly discovered evidence are: (1) that the witness or witnesses will give the newly discovered evidence; (2) that such newly discovered evidence is probably true; (3) that it is competent, material and relevant; (4) that due diligence was used and proper means were employed to procure the testimony at the trial; (5) that the newly discovered evidence is not merely cumulative; (6) that it does not tend only to contradict a former witness or to impeach or discredit him; and (7) that it is of such a nature as to show that on another trial a different result will probably be reached and that the right will prevail. State v. Cronin, 299 N.C. 229, 262 S.E.2d 277 (1980).

Motion for a new trial based on misconduct affecting a jury's deliberation is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge, and unless his ruling is clearly erroneous or an abuse of discretion, it will not be disturbed. The circumstances must be such as not merely to put suspicion on the verdict, because there was opportunity and a chance for misconduct, but that there was in fact misconduct. When there is merely matter of suspicion, it is purely a matter in the discretion of the presiding judge. State v. Bailey, 307 N.C. 110, 296 S.E.2d 287 (1982).

Denial of Motion Improper. — The court erred in summarily entering its order denying defendant's motion for appropriate relief, without conducting an evidentiary hearing to address the issues of fact surrounding counsel's alleged conflict of interest. State v. Hardison, 126 N.C. App. 52, 483 S.E.2d 459 (1997).

§ 15A-1412. Provisions of Article procedural.

The provision in this Article for the right to seek relief by motion for appropriate relief is procedural and is not determinative of the question of whether the moving party is entitled to the relief sought or to other appropriate relief. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section makes clear that this Article creates a procedural device by which asserted errors can be raised. That necessitates, at some points, the listing of errors which may be asserted at certain times. A casual reading might create the false impression that providing the procedural device for litigating the question in some way implies that there is a right to relief simply by reason of the error's assertion. Of course, that is not true and the question of whether there was some error, and if so, whether it warrants the relief sought, are questions to be determined on the merits, utilizing the procedural device provided here.

§ 15A-1413. Trial judges empowered to act.

(a) A motion for appropriate relief made pursuant to G.S. 15A-1415 may be heard and determined in the trial division by any judge who is empowered to act in criminal matters in the district court district as defined in G.S. 7A-133 or superior court district or set of districts as defined in G.S. 7A-41.1, as the case may be, in which the judgment was entered.

(b) The judge who presided at the trial is empowered to act upon a motion for appropriate relief made pursuant to G.S. 15A-1414. He may act even though he is in another district or even though his commission has expired.

(c) When a motion for appropriate relief may be made before a judge who did not hear the case, he may, if it is practicable to do so, refer all or a part of the matter for decision to the judge who heard the case. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1987 (Reg. Sess., 1988), c. 1037, s. 71.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Motions made at the end of trial pursuant to G.S. 15A-1414 will be heard by the judge who presided. As has been true in coram nobis, post-conviction proceedings and habeas corpus, matters which may be raised some time after the trial must in some instances be heard by a different judge, and appropriate authority is granted for that judge to act. However, it frequently will be preferable for the judge who heard the case to hear the motion because of the possibility of eliminating lengthy familiarization proceedings and papers. This section provides as fully as possible for that practice.

CASE NOTES

Applied in State v. Lee, 40 N.C. App. 165, 252 S.E.2d 225 (1979); State v. Bonds, 45 N.C. App. 62, 262 S.E.2d 340 (1980).

§ 15A-1414. Motion by defendant for appropriate relief made within 10 days after verdict.

(a) After the verdict but not more than 10 days after entry of judgment, the defendant by motion may seek appropriate relief for any error committed during or prior to the trial.

(b) Unless included in G.S. 15A-1415, all errors, including but not limited to the following, must be asserted within 10 days after entry of judgment:

(1) Any error of law, including the following:
   a. The court erroneously failed to dismiss the charge prior to trial pursuant to G.S. 15A-954.
   b. The court's ruling was contrary to law with regard to motions made before or during the trial, or with regard to the admission or exclusion of evidence.
   c. The evidence, at the close of all the evidence, was insufficient to justify submission of the case to the jury, whether or not a motion so asserting was made before verdict.
   d. The court erroneously instructed the jury.

(2) The verdict is contrary to the weight of the evidence.

(3) For any other cause the defendant did not receive a fair and impartial trial.

(4) The sentence imposed on the defendant is not supported by evidence introduced at the trial and sentencing hearing. This motion must be addressed to the sentencing judge.

(c) The motion may be made and acted upon in the trial court whether or not notice of appeal has been given. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1979, c. 760, s. 3; 1981, c. 179, s. 6.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

As subsection (a) indicates, during the period beginning with the verdict and ending 10 days after the entry of the judgment, the defendant may utilize this motion procedure to seek relief from any error committed prior to or during the trial. Thus there is no limitation as to errors which may be asserted during that period of time. The listing of possible errors, in subsection (b), is designed as a helpful checklist but not in any sense as a limitation.

As subdivision (b)(1) indicates, the procedure may be used to correct errors of law. As subdivisions (b)(2) and (b)(3) indicate, the trial court's discretionary authority is preserved in this revision.

G.S. 15A-1415 lists the errors which may be asserted by motion for appropriate relief after the expiration of the 10-day period. Of course they may also be raised before the expiration of the 10-day period, pursuant to this section.

Giving notice of appeal does not divest the jurisdiction of the trial court to act on a motion. G.S. 15A-1448, relating to appeals, provides that even though notice of appeal is given, the case is not sent forward until a later time, after any additional matters have been disposed of at the trial level. (It is possible that the disposition of the motion could make it desirable to withdraw the appeal.) See the more complete discussion in the Commentary at G.S. 15A-1448.

CASE NOTES

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under former § 15-174.

Discretion of Court. — Disposition of post-trial motions under this section and § 15A-1415 is within the discretion of the trial court and the refusal to grant them is not error absent a showing of abuse of that discretion. State v. Watkins, 45 N.C. App. 661, 263 S.E.2d 846, cert. denied, 300 N.C. 561, 270 S.E.2d 115 (1980); State v. Batts, 303 N.C. 155, 277 S.E.2d 385 (1981).

A motion under subdivision (b)(2) is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and the ruling will not be disturbed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion. State v. Stanley, 74 N.C. App. 178, 327 S.E.2d 902, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 546, 335 S.E.2d 318 (1985); State v. Ruiz, 77 N.C. App. 425, 335 S.E.2d 32 (1985), cert. denied, 315 N.C. 395, 338 S.E.2d 885 (1986).

As a post-trial motion, the disposition of a motion for appropriate relief is subject to the sentencing judge's discretion and will not be overturned absent a showing of abuse of discretion. State v. Arnette, 85 N.C. App. 492, 355 S.E.2d 498 (1987).

Upon a determination that the original sentence in a Driving With Revoked License case was not supported by the evidence, the district court judge clearly had the authority to vacate the sentence pursuant to subdivision (b)(4) of this section and to resentence the defendant pursuant to § 15A-1417(c). State v. Morgan, 108 N.C. App. 673, 425 S.E.2d 1 (1993), cert. granted, 335 N.C. 551, 439 S.E.2d 127 (1994).

Refusal to Set Aside Verdict Within Court's Discretion. — A motion to set aside the verdict is a post-trial motion pursuant to this section, the disposition of which is within the discretion of the trial court. Therefore, refusal to grant a motion to set aside the verdict is not error absent a showing of abuse of that discretion. State v. Lilley, 78 N.C. App. 100, 337 S.E.2d 89 (1985), discretionary review denied as to additional issues, 316 N.C. 199, 341 S.E.2d 582, aff'd, State v. Prince, 49 N.C. App. 145, 270 S.E.2d 521 (1980).

Denial of Motion for Continuance. — A new trial will be awarded because of a denial of a motion for continuance only if the defendant shows that there was error in the denial and that the defendant was prejudiced thereby. State v. Harrill, 289 N.C. 186, 221 S.E.2d 325, death sentence vacated, 428 U.S. 904, 96 S. Ct. 3212, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1211 (1976).

Defendant who, himself, injects incompetent evidence into the trial, may not urge its admission as ground for a new trial. State v. Coffey, 289 N.C. 431, 222 S.E.2d 217 (1976).

Incorrect Charge to Jury. — A new trial is necessary where the court charges the jury correctly at one point and incorrectly at another, particularly when the incorrect portion of the charge is contained in the application of the law to the facts. State v. Cousins, 289 N.C. 540, 223 S.E.2d 338 (1976).

New trial must result when ambiguity in the charge affords an opportunity for the injury to act upon a permissible but incorrect interpretation. State v. Harris, 289 N.C. 275, 221 S.E.2d 343 (1976).

Verdict Required Element of Subsection (a). — Trial court did not have authority to grant criminal defendant's motion to dismiss felony child abuse charges pursuant to § 15A-1414(a), which was contained in defendant's motion for appropriate relief, as that statute required that the motion be made after a jury had reached a verdict and the jury in defendant's first trial did not reach a verdict. State v. Allen, 144 N.C. App. 386, 548 S.E.2d 554 (2001).

Defendant Must Show Prejudice. — New trials are not given, even in capital cases, where there is no reasonable basis for supposing that, but for the error, a different result would have been reached. § 15A-1415. Grounds for appropriate relief which may be asserted by defendant after verdict; limitation as to time.

(a) At any time after verdict, a noncapital defendant by motion may seek appropriate relief upon any of the grounds enumerated in this section. In a capital case, a postconviction motion for appropriate relief shall be filed within 120 days from the latest of the following:

(1) The court's judgment has been filed, but the defendant failed to perfect a timely appeal;

(2) The mandate issued by a court of the appellate division on direct appeal pursuant to N.C.R. App. P. 32(b) and the time for filing a petition for writ of certiorari to the United States Supreme Court has expired without a petition being filed;

(3) The United States Supreme Court denied a timely petition for writ of certiorari of the decision on direct appeal by the Supreme Court of North Carolina;

(4) Following the denial of discretionary review by the Supreme Court of North Carolina, the United States Supreme Court denied a timely petition for writ of certiorari seeking review of the decision on direct appeal by the North Carolina Court of Appeals;

(5) The United States Supreme Court granted the defendant's or the State's timely petition for writ of certiorari of the decision on direct appeal by the Supreme Court of North Carolina or North Carolina Court of Appeals, but subsequently left the defendant's conviction and sentence undisturbed; or

(6) The appointment of postconviction counsel for an indigent capital defendant.

(b) The following are the only grounds which the defendant may assert by a motion for appropriate relief made more than 10 days after entry of judgment:

(1) The acts charged in the criminal pleading did not at the time they were committed constitute a violation of criminal law.

(2) The trial court lacked jurisdiction over the person of the defendant or over the subject matter.

(3) The conviction was obtained in violation of the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of North Carolina.

(4) The defendant was convicted or sentenced under a statute that was in violation of the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of North Carolina.

(5) The conduct for which the defendant was prosecuted was protected by the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of North Carolina.

(6) Repealed by Session Laws 1995 (Regular Session, 1996), c. 719, s. 1, effective June 21, 1996.

(7) There has been a significant change in law, either substantive or procedural, applied in the proceedings leading to the defendant's conviction or sentence, and retroactive application of the changed legal standard is required.

(8) The sentence imposed was unauthorized at the time imposed, contained a type of sentence disposition or a term of imprisonment not authorized for the particular class of offense and prior record or conviction level was illegally imposed, or is otherwise invalid as a matter of law. However, a motion for appropriate relief on the grounds that the sentence imposed on the defendant is not supported by evidence introduced at the trial and sentencing hearing must be made before the sentencing judge.

(9) The defendant is in confinement and is entitled to release because his sentence has been fully served.

(c) Notwithstanding the time limitations herein, a defendant at any time after verdict may by a motion for appropriate relief, raise the ground that evidence is available which was unknown or unavailable to the defendant at the time of trial, which could not with due diligence have been discovered or made available at that time, including recanted testimony, and which has a direct and material bearing upon the defendant's eligibility for the death penalty or the defendant's guilt or innocence. A motion based upon such newly discovered evidence must be filed within a reasonable time of its discovery.

(d) For good cause shown, the defendant may be granted an extension of time to file the motion for appropriate relief. The presumptive length of an extension of time under this subsection is up to 30 days, but can be longer if the court finds extraordinary circumstances.

(e) Where a defendant alleges ineffective assistance of prior trial or appellate counsel as a ground for the illegality of his conviction or sentence, he shall be deemed to waive the attorney-client privilege with respect to both oral and written communications between such counsel and the defendant to the extent the defendant's prior counsel reasonably believes such communications are necessary to defend against the allegations of ineffectiveness. This waiver of the attorney-client privilege shall be automatic upon the filing of the motion for appropriate relief alleging ineffective assistance of prior counsel, and the superior court need not enter an order waiving the privilege.

(f) In the case of a defendant who has been convicted of a capital offense and sentenced to death, the defendant's prior trial or appellate counsel shall make available to the capital defendant's counsel their complete files relating to the case of the defendant. The State, to the extent allowed by law, shall make available to the capital defendant's counsel the complete files of all law enforcement and prosecutorial agencies involved in the investigation of the crimes committed or the prosecution of the defendant. If the State has a reasonable belief that allowing inspection of any portion of the files by counsel for the capital defendant would not be in the interest of justice, the State may submit for inspection by the court those portions of the files so identified. If upon examination of the files, the court finds that the files could not assist the capital defendant in investigating, preparing, or presenting a motion for appropriate relief, the court in its discretion may allow the State to withhold that portion of the files.

(g) The defendant may file amendments to a motion for appropriate relief at least 30 days prior to the commencement of a hearing on the merits of the claims asserted in the motion or at any time before the date for the hearing has been set, whichever is later. Where the defendant has filed an amendment to a motion for appropriate relief, the State shall, upon request, be granted a continuance of 30 days before the date of hearing. After such hearing has begun, the defendant may file amendments only to conform the motion to evidence adduced at the hearing, or to raise claims based on such evidence. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1981, c. 179, s. 7; 1993, c. 538, s. 25; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1995 (Reg. Sess., 1996), c. 719, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

After the 10 days provided in G.S. 15A-1414 have passed, use of the motion for appropriate relief to assert errors committed during or before the trial is limited to those listed in this section. (Of course these grounds may be asserted prior to the expiration of the 10-day period as well as after.)

The question faced by the Commission at this point was the identification of those errors in a trial which are so basic that one should be able to go back into the courts at any time, even many years after conviction, and seek relief. The resolution of this question requires the balancing of concepts of basic fairness with the desire for finality in criminal cases. The grounds stated here incorporate traditional notions of matters which may be asserted at a later time, together with several new items. It should also be taken into account with the latter consideration that additional finality has been added in G.S. 15A-1419 by making it clear that there is but one chance to raise available matters after the case is over, and if there has been a previous assertion of the error, or opportunity to assert the error, by motion or appeal, a later motion may be denied on that basis.

The constitutional grounds have become familiar under the state post-conviction statutes (G.S. 15-217 et seq.). Familiar as well are the jurisdictional grounds and the fact that it is necessary in certain instances to make retroactive applications of changes in the law. (As mentioned above, this statute provides a procedural device to be used when other decisions or statutes impose the requirement of retroactivity, it does not create such a requirement.)

The provision in G.S. 15A-1415(b)(6) making it possible to raise the question of newly discovered evidence without time limitation constitutes a change. G.S. 15-174 has provided that new trials will be granted in criminal cases under the same rules and regulations as new trials in civil cases. That clearly makes it possible to make a motion for new trial within 10 days after entry of judgment on the grounds of newly discovered evidence as is provided in the Rules of Civil Procedure in G.S. 1A-1, Rule 59(4). Less clear is the applicability of Rule 60 permitting relief from a final judgment within one year on the basis of newly discovered evidence. The Commission concluded that the better route was always to permit a hearing on the question and rely on a strict statement of the rule and the idea of "one chance to be heard" described above as fairer limitations than an arbitrary time limitation in criminal cases. Different considerations make the fixed time desirable in civil cases.

The "Motion for appropriate relief and other post trial relief" is not limited to the correction of error. It is a device which may be used for any additional matters which relate to the original case. That is reflected in the authorization to use this motion to raise the question of whether or not a sentence has been served or probation has been unlawfully revoked.

CASE NOTES

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under former law.

Intent of General Assembly. — There is an intent on the part of the General Assembly to expedite the post-conviction process in capital cases while ensuring thorough and complete review. State v. Bates, 348 N.C. 29, 497 S.E.2d 276 (1998).

The apparent legislative intent of subsection (f) is to expedite the post-conviction process in capital cases while ensuring thorough and complete review. State v. Atkins, 349 N.C. 62, 505 S.E.2d 97 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1147, 119 S. Ct. 2025, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1999).

Former subdivision (b)(6) of this section codified substantially the rule previously developed by case law for the granting of a new trial for newly discovered evidence. State v. Powell, 321 N.C. 364, 364 S.E.2d 332, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 830, 109 S. Ct. 83, 102 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1988).

Granting of New Trial Is in Discretion of Trial Court. — The granting of a new trial in a criminal case on the ground of newly discovered evidence rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. State v. Blalock, 13 N.C. App. 711, 187 S.E.2d 404 (1972); State v. Shelton, 21 N.C. App. 662, 205 S.E.2d 316, cert. denied, 285 N.C. 667, 207 S.E.2d 760 (1974); State v. Hammock, 25 N.C. App. 97, 212 S.E.2d 180, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 262, 214 S.E.2d 435; 423 U.S. 894, 96 S. Ct. 193, 46 L. Ed. 2d 126 (1975); State v. Beaver, 291 N.C. 137, 229 S.E.2d 179 (1976); State v. Martin, 40 N.C. App. 408, 252 S.E.2d 859, cert. denied, 297 N.C. 456, 256 S.E.2d 809 (1979); State v. Watkins, 45 N.C. App. 661, 263 S.E.2d 846, cert. denied, 300 N.C. 561, 270 S.E.2d 115 (1980); State v. Sprinkle, 46 N.C. App. 802, 266 S.E.2d 375, cert. denied, 300 N.C. 561, 270 S.E.2d 115 (1980); State v. Oakley, 75 N.C. App. 99, 330 S.E.2d 59 (1985); State v. Hoots, 76 N.C. App. 616, 334 S.E.2d 74 (1985).

The State has the right to immediately appeal a superior court order granting a criminal defendant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. State v. Monroe, 330 N.C. 433, 410 S.E.2d 913 (1991).

And is not subject to review absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. State v. Shelton, 21 N.C. App. 662, 205 S.E.2d 316, cert. denied, 285 N.C. 667, 207 S.E.2d 760 (1974); State v. Hammock, 25 N.C. App. 97, 212 S.E.2d 180, cert. denied, 287 N.C. 262, 214 S.E.2d 435; 423 U.S. 894, 96 S. Ct. 193, 46 L. Ed. 2d 126 (1975); State v. Beaver, 291 N.C. 137, 229 S.E.2d 179 (1976); State v. Martin, 40 N.C. App. 408, 252 S.E.2d 859, cert. denied, 297 N.C. 456, 256 S.E.2d 809 (1979); State v. Watkins, 45 N.C. App. 661, 263 S.E.2d 846, cert. denied, 300 N.C. 561, 270 S.E.2d 115 (1980); State v. Sprinkle, 46 N.C. App. 802, 266 S.E.2d 375, cert. denied, 300 N.C. 561, 270 S.E.2d 115 (1980); State v. Hoots, 76 N.C. App. 616, 334 S.E.2d 74 (1985).

A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge and is not subject to review absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. State v. Newell, 82 N.C. App. 707, 348 S.E.2d 158 (1986); State v. Gappins, 320 N.C. 64, 357 S.E.2d 654 (1987).

Defendant had no right to appeal from a motion for appropriate relief brought pursuant to subdivision (b)(3) when the time for appeal had expired and no appeal was pending. State v. Harris, 115 N.C. App. 42, 444 S.E.2d 226 (1994).

Findings of Trial Judge Are Binding on Review. — On review of orders entered pursuant to this section and § 15A-1420, the findings of fact of the trial judge are binding upon the petitioner if they were supported by evidence, even if the evidence is conflicting, and notwithstanding defendant's testimony at the hearing to the contrary. State v. Stevens, 305 N.C. 712, 291 S.E.2d 585 (1982).

Where a case had been appealed from the superior court to the Court of Appeals, the superior court had no authority to consider defendant's motion under this section for appropriate relief. Under § 15A-1418, such motion should have been made in the appellate division. State v. Brock, 46 N.C. App. 120, 264 S.E.2d 390 (1980).

Once the defendant entered notice of appeal to Supreme Court, the superior court no longer had jurisdiction and could not consider the defendant's motion for appropriate relief based on alleged ineffective assistance of counsel. State v. Ginyard, 334 N.C. 155, 431 S.E.2d 11 (1993).

Where a judgment of the Supreme Court has been certified to the clerk of the superior court, the case is in the latter court for execution of the sentence, and a motion for a new trial may be there entertained for disqualification of jurors and for newly discovered evidence. State v. Casey, 201 N.C. 620, 161 S.E. 81 (1931).

Exhaustion of Remedies Provided by State. — Claims asserted in federal court under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 alleging that the state prisoner was denied the effective assistance of counsel, denied defense witnesses, not advised of the proper procedure for filing an appeal or the applicable time limitations and denied the right to appeal, were cognizable under this section and were required to be presented to a state court in order to meet federal exhaustion requirements. Vester v. Stephenson, 465 F. Supp. 868 (E.D.N.C. 1978).

Establishing Cause for Failing to Raise Claims on Appeal. — Claims asserted in federal court under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 alleging that the state prisoner was convicted on perjured evidence through the state's witnesses, was not given his right to allocution, and was not given a presentence hearing were cognizable under this section if the petitioner could establish good cause for failing to have raised them on appeal, and were required to be presented to a state court in order to meet federal exhaustion requirements. Vester v. Stephenson, 465 F. Supp. 868 (E.D.N.C. 1978).

Section Permits Review of Unappealed Error. — Not only are collateral attacks proper under this section but there now exists the possibility that an unappealed error can be reviewed by the state courts when good cause is shown. Vester v. Stephenson, 465 F. Supp. 868 (E.D.N.C. 1978).

Showing Required for New Trial Based on Newly Discovered Evidence. — In order for a new trial to be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, it must appear by affidavit that (1) the witness or witnesses will give newly discovered evidence; (2) the newly discovered evidence is probably true; (3) the evidence is material, competent and relevant; (4) due diligence was used and proper means were employed to procure the testimony at trial; (5) the newly discovered evidence is not merely cumulative or corroborative; (6) the new evidence does not merely tend to contradict, impeach or discredit the testimony of a former witness; and (7) the evidence is of such a nature that a different result will probably be reached at a new trial. State v. Beaver, 291 N.C. 137, 229 S.E.2d 179 (1976); State v. Parson, 298 N.C. 765, 259 S.E.2d 867 (1979); State v. Martin, 40 N.C. App. 408, 252 S.E.2d 859, cert. denied, 297 N.C. 456, 256 S.E.2d 809 (1979); State v. Sprinkle, 46 N.C. App. 802, 266 S.E.2d 375, cert. denied, 300 N.C. 561, 270 S.E.2d 115 (1980); State v. Clark, 65 N.C. App. 286, 308 S.E.2d 913 (1983), cert. denied, 310 N.C. 627, 315 S.E.2d 693 (1984); State v. Stanley, 74 N.C. App. 178, 327 S.E.2d 902, cert. denied, 314 N.C. 546, 335 S.E.2d 318 (1985); State v. Hoots, 76 N.C. App. 616, 334 S.E.2d 74 (1985); State v. Gappins, 320 N.C. 64, 357 S.E.2d 654 (1987); State v. Britt, 320 N.C. 705, 360 S.E.2d 660 (1987).

New Evidence Must Not Merely Contradict or Discredit Testimony. — In order for a court to grant a motion for a new trial it must appear by affidavit that, among other things, the new evidence does not merely tend to contradict, impeach or discredit the testimony of a former witness. State v. Newell, 82 N.C. App. 707, 348 S.E.2d 158 (1986).

Newly Discovered Evidence Not Credible. — Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for appropriate relief where newly discovered evidence was a confession, was found inconsistent with the facts, and was by an individual who later stated that he only made the statement as a result of threats by police officers to have his girlfriend evicted and have social services take away her child. State v. Garner, 136 N.C. App. 1, 523 S.E.2d 689 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 477, 543 S.E.2d 500 (2000).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for appropriate relief where newly discovered evidence was a witness's recantation of his trial testimony and was probably false. State v. Garner, 136 N.C. App. 1, 523 S.E.2d 689 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 477, 543 S.E.2d 500 (2000).

Merely Cumulative or Deliberately Withheld Evidence. — A motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence will not be granted even in a civil case, where the evidence is merely cumulative or where it was withheld by the party moving. State v. Lilliston, 141 N.C. 857, 54 S.E. 427 (1906).

Nondisclosed information is material only if there is a reasonable probability that, had evidence been disclosed to the defense, the result of the proceeding would have been different. A reasonable probability is a probability sufficient to undermine confidence in outcome. State v. Coats, 100 N.C. App. 455, 397 S.E.2d 512 (1990), cert. denied, 328 N.C. 573, 403 S.E.2d 515 (1991).

Files belonging to the Attorney General's office were excluded from discovery to which the defendant was otherwise entitled under this section where the Attorney General did not prosecute or participate in the actual prosecution. State v. Sexton, 352 N.C. 336, 532 S.E.2d 179 (2000).

Newly Discovered Evidence Did Not Warrant New Trial. — While affidavit of witness changed her account of defendant's involvement in a finance office robbery, it merely served to impeach and contradict earlier testimony by two other victims and was not of "such a nature that a different result will probably be reached at a new trial," given the strength of the two eyewitness identifications. State v. Garner, 136 N.C. App. 1, 523 S.E.2d 689 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 477, 543 S.E.2d 500 (2000).

Defendant failed to show that newly discovered evidence warranted a new trial where the evidence consisted of cellmate's testimony regarding an accomplice's plan to commit perjury, offered to contradict prior testimony; a detective's affidavit relating to the post-conviction investigation, found immaterial or irrelevant; and the affidavits of experts in eyewitness identification and forensic psychiatry, offered to discredit a former witness. State v. Garner, 136 N.C. App. 1, 523 S.E.2d 689 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 477, 543 S.E.2d 500 (2000).

Showing Required for New Trial Based on Recanted Testimony. — The rule for granting a new trial for newly discovered evidence is not the same as the rule for granting a new trial for recanted testimony. A defendant may be allowed a new trial on the basis of recanted testimony if: (1) The court is reasonably well satisfied that the testimony given by a material witness is false, and (2) there is a reasonable possibility that, had the false testimony not been admitted, a different result would have been reached at the trial. State v. Britt, 320 N.C. 705, 360 S.E.2d 660 (1987).

Failure of State to Comply with Discovery. — Where the defendant in a prosecution for arson had filed a request for voluntary discovery of the report of any laboratory test, the prosecutor had agreed to comply and had, in part, complied, but apparently through oversight the prosecutor failed to make a report available when it came into his possession, the defendant was not lacking in due diligence within the meaning of former subdivision (b)(6) of this section in failing to make a motion to compel discovery. There was nothing to put the defendant on notice that the prosecutor had failed or refused to comply with his request.

State v. Jones, 296 N.C. 75, 248 S.E.2d 858 (1978).

Defendant Entitled to Discovery. — Defendant whose motion for appropriate relief was denied on May 21, 1996, was nevertheless entitled to discovery under this section, since trial court resurrected the defendant's motion by allowing him until June 30, 1996, to respond to the State's motion for summary denial of defendant's motion to vacate. State v. Basden, 350 N.C. 579, 515 S.E.2d 220 (1999), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 982, 121 S. Ct. 435, 148 L. Ed. 2d (2000).

Discovery Motion Filed over Three Years after Initial Motion. — The defendant was entitled to postconviction discovery on his motion filed over three years after his initial filing of a motion for appropriate relief because his initial motion was still pending on June 21, 1996, the date that this section became effective. State v. Sexton, 352 N.C. 336, 532 S.E.2d 179 (2000).

Withholding of Work Product. — The statute contains no express provision for withholding work product. State v. Bates, 348 N.C. 29, 497 S.E.2d 276 (1998).

Federal Collateral Review Not Foreclosed. — The state supreme court's grant of the defendant's petition for certiorari for the limited purpose of entering an order treating an appended motion for appropriate relief as a motion for relief filed with the supreme court, and then denying such motion, was a decision on the merits, and thus federal collateral review of the federal claims was not foreclosed. Skipper v. French, 130 F.3d 603 (4th Cir. 1997).

Collateral Attack on Guilty Plea. — An adjudication by a trial judge that a plea of guilty was voluntarily made did not bar a criminal defendant from collaterally attacking that plea in a post-conviction hearing. Edmondson v. State, 33 N.C. App. 746, 236 S.E.2d 397 (1977), overruled on other grounds, State v. Dickens, 299 N.C. 76, 261 S.E.2d 183 (1980).

Failure to Inquire into Reservations After Guilty Plea. — A trial court's failure to inquire into defendant's reservations after the trial court accepted his guilty pleas was subject to being contested on grounds found in either subdivision (b)(3) or (b)(8) of this section. State v. Barnett, 113 N.C. App. 69, 437 S.E.2d 711 (1993).

Where evidence was discovered after the suppression hearing but prior to sentencing, the evidence was not "unknown or unavailable to the defendant at the time of the trial" (i.e., the sentencing hearing); therefore, defendant failed to satisfy this ground for appropriate relief. State v. Smothers, 108 N.C. App. 315, 423 S.E.2d 824 (1992).

Defendant Held Not Entitled to New Trial. — A confession to a murder by a person who was drunk and depressed at the time of his confession and who later recanted the confession did not entitle defendant to a new trial; the person who confessed was confused and unknowledgeable as to the facts of the murder. State v. Eason, 328 N.C. 409, 402 S.E.2d 809 (1991).

Applicability of Subsection (e). — This section did not supersede and effectively overrule State v. Taylor, 327 N.C. 147, 393 S.E.2d 801, and thereby set out a specific, concrete set of discovery rules applicable to materials privileged between defendant and his trial counsel. Discovery under this subsection is not per se limited to merely "oral and written communications," and determining the extent of discovery—the inclusion of work product, for example—under this subsection is the job of the court, not the privilege of the trial counsel who is accused of ineffective assistance of counsel. State v. Buckner, 351 N.C. 401, 527 S.E.2d 307 (2000).

Applicability of Subsection (f). — Subsection (f) applies only to the post-conviction process and only to defendants who have been convicted of a capital crime and sentenced to death. State v. Bates, 348 N.C. 29, 497 S.E.2d 276 (1998).

Subsection (f) provides for broader discovery for a capital defendant's counsel in the post-conviction review process than previously existed, specifically including the discovery of the complete files of all law enforcement and prosecutorial agencies involved in the investigation of the crimes committed or the prosecution of the defendant. State v. Bates, 348 N.C. 29, 497 S.E.2d 276 (1998).

Case law applying the work-product privilege to pretrial discovery and statutes governing pretrial discovery in criminal cases do not control the interpretation of subsection (f). State v. Bates, 348 N.C. 29, 497 S.E.2d 276 (1998).

Subsection (f) requires the State to make available to counsel for a capital defendant in post-conviction proceedings the complete files of all law enforcement and prosecutorial agencies involved in the investigation of the crimes committed or the prosecution of the defendant, subject only to the specific withholding mechanism contained within that statute and specific prohibitions against disclosure contained in other law. State v. Bates, 348 N.C. 29, 497 S.E.2d 276 (1998).

Subsection (f) did not apply to a defendant who was convicted of a capital offense, sentenced to death, and had his post-conviction motion for appropriate relief denied prior to the effective date of subsection (f). State v. Green, 350 N.C. 400, 514 S.E.2d 724 (1999), aff'd, 350 N.C. 400, 514 S.E.2d 724 (1999).

Subsection (f) of this section, which became effective on June 21, 1996, and provides broader post-conviction discovery in capital cases, did not apply to defendant's case, which was filed before the effective date of the act, because the North Carolina Supreme Court held in State v. Green, 350 N.C. 400, 514 S.E.2d 724 (1999), that subsection (f) did not apply retroactively. Self v. Johnson, — F. Supp. 2d —, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21346 (E.D.N.C. Dec. 10, 1999).

Time Requirements of Subsection (f). — To be entitled to postconviction discovery under subsection (f) of this section, a capital defendant, not otherwise eligible under State v. Green, 350 N.C. 400, 514 S.E.2d 724 (1999), must file a written motion for discovery within 120 days of the triggering occurrence under § 15A-1415(a); because the purpose of the statute is to assist capital defendants in investigating, preparing, or presenting all potential claims in a single motion for appropriate relief (MAR), it logically follows that any requests for postconviction discovery must necessarily be made within the same time period statutorily prescribed for filing the underlying MAR. State v. Williams, 351 N.C. 465, 526 S.E.2d 655 (2000).

§ 15A-1416. Motion by the State for appropriate relief.

(a) After the verdict but not more than 10 days after entry of judgment, the State by motion may seek appropriate relief for any error which it may assert upon appeal.

(b) At any time after verdict the State may make a motion for appropriate relief for:

(1) The imposition of sentence when prayer for judgment has been continued and grounds for the imposition of sentence are asserted.

(2) The initiation of any proceeding authorized under Article 82, Probation; Article 83, Imprisonment; and Article 84, Fines, with regard to the modification of sentences. The procedural provisions of those Articles are controlling. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsection (a) gives the State the right to raise by motion for appropriate relief matters which it is entitled to assert upon appeal. Compare G.S. 15A-1445 relating to the State's right to appeal.

Subsection (b) reflects the fact that the motion for appropriate relief is available for any additional steps which are needed in a case. Thus the State is here authorized to utilize this procedure without limitation as to time, to seek imposition of sentence when prayer for judgment has been continued or when provision has been made in Article 81 for modification of sentences.

CASE NOTES

The imposition of an excessive sentence is not error from which the state may appeal within the meaning of subsection (a) of this section. State v. Ransom, 74 N.C. App. 716, 329 S.E.2d 673 (1985), aff'd, 80 N.C. App. 711, 343 S.E.2d 232 (1986).

State had no statutory right to make motion to set aside judgment on basis of newly discovered evidence. But, because the trial court could have set aside the judgment on its own authority, allowing the State's motion was harmless error. State v. Oakley, 75 N.C. App. 99, 330 S.E.2d 59 (1985).

Letter from the Department of Correction, alerting the trial court of its erroneously consolidated sentence and resulting in a less-favorable resentencing, was not a motion for appropriate relief and, therefore, did not need to be filed within the statutory period of 10 days. State v. Branch, 134 N.C. App. 637, 518 S.E.2d 213 (1999).

Applied in State v. Payne, 312 N.C. 647, 325 S.E.2d 205 (1985); State v. Linemann, 135 N.C. App. 734, 522 S.E.2d 781 (1999).

§ 15A-1417. Relief available.

(a) The following relief is available when the court grants a motion for appropriate relief:

(1) New trial on all or any of the charges.

(2) Dismissal of all or any of the charges.

(3) The relief sought by the State pursuant to G.S. 15A-1416.

(4) Any other appropriate relief.

(b) When relief is granted in the trial court and the offense is divided into degrees or necessarily includes lesser offenses, and the court is of the opinion that the evidence does not sustain the verdict but is sufficient to sustain a finding of guilty of a lesser degree or of a lesser offense necessarily included in the one charged, the court may, with consent of the State, accept a plea of guilty to the lesser degree or lesser offense.

(c) If resentencing is required, the trial division may enter an appropriate sentence. If a motion is granted in the appellate division and resentencing is required, the case must be remanded to the trial division for entry of a new sentence. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

As the general commentary at the beginning of this Article indicates, the emphasis is to be placed upon identifying the error sought to be corrected and the relief which is appropriate. Thus it will no longer be necessary to make a "motion for a new trial" in order to assert one ground for relief and to make a "motion in arrest of judgment" to assert another ground for relief. Using the name of a type of relief as the name of the motion, which in turn identifies the errors which may be asserted, imposes unnecessary complications and limitations.

Here one motion, stating what is wrong and asking for the relief desired, will suffice.

The provisions in subsection (b) contemplate that there may be circumstances in which the trial court is of the opinion that the evidence was not sufficient to support the verdict, but would sustain a lower degree or a lesser included offense. The court could, of course, simply grant a new trial in accordance with G.S. 15A-1414(b)(2) and G.S. 15A-1417(a)(1), but it is possible that the necessity of a new trial may be avoided if a finding of the lesser degree or offense can be made on the facts already passed upon by the jury. The defendant, of course, would be prejudiced if the finding, submitted to the jury on the basis of the greater offense, were made sufficient in and of itself. Thus consent of the defendant is required, by a plea of guilty to the lesser included offense. Since it is so treated the consent of the State is required. Subsection (c) grants the authority to appropriately modify the sentence when "appropriate relief" requires it.

CASE NOTES

Authority of Court. — Upon a determination that the original sentence in a Driving With Revoked License case was not supported by the evidence, the district court judge clearly had the authority to vacate the sentence pursuant to § 15A-1414(b)(4) and to resentence the defendant pursuant to subsection (c) of this section. State v. Morgan, 108 N.C. App. 673, 425 S.E.2d 1 (1993), cert. granted, 335 N.C. 551, 439 S.E.2d 127 (1994).

No Authority to Grant Appropriate Relief Benefitting State. — The court, upon motion by the State, exceeded its authority in striking a guilty plea and setting the case for trial. The court did not have the authority to grant "appropriate relief," pursuant to § 15A-1420(d), which benefitted the State. State v. Oakley, 75 N.C. App. 99, 330 S.E.2d 59 (1985).

Resentencing Where No Error of Law Appears. — A trial court upon a motion for appropriate relief does not have authority to resentence a criminal defendant for discretionary reasons after the expiration of the session of court in which he was originally sentenced where no error of law appears upon the face of the judgment. State v. Bonds, 45 N.C. App. 62, 262 S.E.2d 340, appeal dismissed, 300 N.C. 376, 267 S.E.2d 687, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 883, 101 S. Ct. 235, 66 L. Ed. 2d 107 (1980).

Resentencing Inappropriate Outside Presence of Defendant. — After granting defendant's motion for appropriate relief, which correctly alleged that a prior trial judge had improperly corrected his sentence outside of defendant's presence when it was discovered that the original sentence violated the Structured Sentencing Act, the trial judge properly resentenced defendant to the same amount of time. State v. Roberts, 351 N.C. 325, 523 S.E.2d 417 (2000).

Applied in State v. Jones, 296 N.C. 75, 248 S.E.2d 858 (1978); State v. Clark, 307 N.C. 120, 296 S.E.2d 296 (1982); State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

Where defendant was resentenced after trial court discovered that its prior consolidated sentence was illegal, the court retained jurisdiction, even though the term of court had expired, and the judgment was valid under this section. State v. Branch, 134 N.C. App. 637, 518 S.E.2d 213 (1999).

§ 15A-1418. Motion for appropriate relief in the appellate division.

(a) When a case is in the appellate division for review, a motion for appropriate relief based upon grounds set out in G.S. 15A-1415 must be made in the appellate division. For the purpose of this section a case is in the appellate division when the jurisdiction of the trial court has been divested as provided in G.S. 15A-1448, or when a petition for a writ of certiorari has been granted. When a petition for a writ of certiorari has been filed but not granted, a copy or written statement of any motion made in the trial court, and of any disposition of the motion, must be filed in the appellate division.

(b) When a motion for appropriate relief is made in the appellate division, the appellate court must decide whether the motion may be determined on the basis of the materials before it, or whether it is necessary to remand the case to the trial division for taking evidence or conducting other proceedings. If the appellate court does not remand the case for proceedings on the motion, it may determine the motion in conjunction with the appeal and enter its ruling on the motion with its determination of the case.

(c) The order of remand must provide that the time periods for perfecting or proceeding with the appeal are tolled, and direct that the order of the trial division with regard to the motion be transmitted to the appellate division so that it may proceed with the appeal or enter an appropriate order terminating it. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

G.S. 15A-1415 contemplates that a number of items may be the subject of a motion for appropriate relief after the 10-day period following entry of judgment has elapsed. Examples would include rights arising by reason of later constitutional decisions in the Courts or the discovery of new evidence which meets the requirements of G.S. 15A-1415(b)(6). Since "legal" grounds for relief can as well be decided by the appellate court as the trial court, it is appropriate to authorize the making of the motion in the appellate division. (This is contrary to prior practice. See State v. Nance, 253 N.C. 424, 117 S.E.2d 3 (1960).) It is possible that some factual matters could be decided as well in the appellate division, but frequently they would require that the trial court hold an additional evidentiary hearing. Thus the appellate division is also given authority to remand the case to the trial division for a hearing. It is possible that the hearing could determine the disposition of the case and eliminate the necessity for going forward with the review.

It should be noted that in G.S. 15A-1446 a number of items which formerly could be raised in the appellate court by "motion" now are simply listed as matters which can be raised on appeal even though they have not been brought to the attention of the trial court. For example, the insufficiency of the pleading presently may be raised in the appellate division by motion in arrest of judgment, without having been brought to the attention of the trial court. This revision would permit it to be asserted upon appeal, thus eliminating one procedural step. The existence of that authority to assert matters on appeal will mean that this section will be used primarily in asserting matters which have developed since the trial, rather than as a device for raising in the appellate court matters which were not brought to the attention of the trial judge.

CASE NOTES

Remand Required. — Where the materials before the appellate court were insufficient to justify a ruling, the motion for appropriate relief had to be remanded to the trial court for the taking of evidence and a determination of the motion. State v. Barnett, 113 N.C. App. 69, 437 S.E.2d 711 (1993).

Appellate court had no jurisdiction because defendant had no appeal as of right, and had not petitioned for a writ of certiorari; therefore, his motion for appropriate relief filed with the appellate court was dismissed. State v. Waters, 122 N.C. App. 504, 470 S.E.2d 545 (1996).

§ 15A-1419. When motion for appropriate relief denied.

(a) The following are grounds for the denial of a motion for appropriate relief, including motions filed in capital cases:

(1) Upon a previous motion made pursuant to this Article, the defendant was in a position to adequately raise the ground or issue underlying the present motion but did not do so. This subdivision does not apply when the previous motion was made within 10 days after entry of judgment or the previous motion was made during the pendency of the direct appeal.

(2) The ground or issue underlying the motion was previously determined on the merits upon an appeal from the judgment or upon a previous motion or proceeding in the courts of this State or a federal court, unless since the time of such previous determination there has been a retroactively effective change in the law controlling such issue.

(3) Upon a previous appeal the defendant was in a position to adequately raise the ground or issue underlying the present motion but did not do so.

(4) The defendant failed to file a timely motion for appropriate relief as required by G.S. 15A-1415(a).

(b) The court shall deny the motion under any of the circumstances specified in this section, unless the defendant can demonstrate:

(1) Good cause for excusing the grounds for denial listed in subsection (a) of this section and can demonstrate actual prejudice resulting from the defendant's claim; or

(2) That failure to consider the defendant's claim will result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice.

(c) For the purposes of subsection (b) of this section, good cause may only be shown if the defendant establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that his failure to raise the claim or file a timely motion was:

(1) The result of State action in violation of the United States Constitution or the North Carolina Constitution including ineffective assistance of trial or appellate counsel;

(2) The result of the recognition of a new federal or State right which is retroactively applicable; or

(3) Based on a factual predicate that could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence in time to present the claim on a previous State or federal postconviction review.

A trial attorney's ignorance of a claim, inadvertence, or tactical decision to withhold a claim may not constitute good cause, nor may a claim of ineffective assistance of prior postconviction counsel constitute good cause.

(d) For the purposes of subsection (b) of this section, actual prejudice may only be shown if the defendant establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that an error during the trial or sentencing worked to the defendant's actual and substantial disadvantage, raising a reasonable probability, viewing the record as a whole, that a different result would have occurred but for the error.

(e) For the purposes of subsection (b) of this section, a fundamental miscarriage of justice only results if:

(1) The defendant establishes that more likely than not, but for the error, no reasonable fact finder would have found the defendant guilty of the underlying offense; or

(2) The defendant establishes by clear and convincing evidence that, but for the error, no reasonable fact finder would have found the defendant eligible for the death penalty.

A defendant raising a claim of newly discovered evidence of factual innocence or ineligibility for the death penalty, otherwise barred by the provisions of subsection (a) of this section or G.S. 15A-1415(c), may only show a fundamental miscarriage of justice by proving by clear and convincing evidence that, in light of the new evidence, if credible, no reasonable juror would have found the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt or eligible for the death penalty. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1995 (Reg. Sess., 1996), c. 719, s. 2.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

As indicated in the commentary to G.S. 15A-1415, one of the interests in the balance in determining what motions may be made long after the trial is the interest in finality of criminal judgments. The balancing by the Commission included liberality in permitting matters to be raised at times subsequent to the trial, restricted by provisions that once a matter has been litigated or there has been opportunity to litigate a matter, there will not be a right to seek relief by additional motions at a later date. Thus this section provides, in short, that if a matter has been determined on the merits upon an appeal, or upon a post-trial motion or proceeding, there is no right to litigate the matter again in an additional motion for appropriate relief. Similarly, if there has been an opportunity to have the matter considered on a previous motion for appropriate relief or appeal the court may deny the motion for appropriate relief.

There are two exceptions to the rule with regard to the opportunity to present a matter on a previous motion for appropriate relief. The first is the rather obvious one of deprivation of the right to counsel. The other exception relates to a motion made within 10 days after the entry of judgment. The latter exception permits counsel who has moved in open court for a new trial or other relief to come back within 10 days and make additional motions for appropriate relief in the trial court, without being faced with a bar on the basis of not having raised the available grounds when he stood in open court and made his first motion.

Subsection (b) contains the customary provision for the court, in its direction, to grant relief even though the right to relief is barred under the provisions of subsection (a).

Sections similar in import to these are found in New York Criminal Procedure Law in §§ 440.10 and 440.20.

CASE NOTES

Retroactive Application of 1996 Amendment. — The retroactive application of the 1996 version of this section, making the procedural bars mandatory rather than discretionary, did not violate the ex post facto clause since such amendment did not alter the definition of the crime of first degree murder, of which the defendant was convicted, and did not change his available defenses to the crime of murder or otherwise increase the punishment for which he is eligible as a result of that conviction. Rose v. Lee, 252 F.3d 676 (4th Cir. 2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 318, 151 L. Ed. 2d 237 (2001).

Extent of Federal Review. — The federal court will not review claims that defendant could have, but did not, raise on direct appeal. Green v. French, 978 F. Supp. 242 (E.D.N.C. 1997), aff'd, 143 F.3d 865 (4th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1090, 119 S. Ct. 844, 142 L. Ed. 2d 698 (1999).

A federal court is not precluded from reviewing federal claims on the basis that the state supreme court has already ruled on the substantive merits; such a reading of subdivision (a)(2) would effectively eviscerate federal habeas review of state cases. Green v. French, 978 F. Supp. 242 (E.D.N.C. 1997), aff'd, 143 F.3d 865 (4th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1090, 119 S. Ct. 844, 142 L. Ed. 2d 698 (1999).

Construction with Other Law. — The court properly rejected the defendant's challenge to the jury instruction on the basis of the adequate and independent state procedural rule set forth in this section and not because it was statutorily obliged to do so by § 15A-2000(d)(2). Fisher v. Lee, 215 F.3d 438 (4th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1095, 121 S. Ct. 822, 148 L. Ed. 2d 706 (2001).

Subdivision (a)(2) is an appropriate legal standard on which to base a procedural default. Ward v. French, 989 F. Supp. 752 (E.D.N.C. 1997), aff'd, 165 F.3d 22 (4th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1124, 119 S. Ct. 1780, 143 L. Ed. 2d 809 (1999).

The Fourth Circuit has held that this section is a valid procedural bar, thus legitimizing its application as an independent and adequate state law ground for denying federal habeas relief. Ward v. French, 989 F. Supp. 752 (E.D.N.C. 1997), aff'd, 165 F.3d 22 (4th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1124, 119 S. Ct. 1780, 143 L. Ed. 2d 809 (1999).

Denial of Relief Where Claim Not Raised on Previous Appeal. — Where petitioner on previous appeal did not raise claim of mistaken identification, this section authorizes the denial of relief in a subsequent appeal barring not only state collateral review, but federal review as well. Quinerly v. Cherry, 527 F. Supp. 1059 (E.D.N.C. 1981), appeal dismissed, 681 F.2d 815 (4th Cir. 1982).

Smith v. Dixon, 14 F.3d 956 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 841, 115 S. Ct. 129, 130 L. Ed. 2d 72 (1994), rehearing denied, 513 U.S. 1105, 115 S. Ct. 785, 130 L. Ed. 2d 678 (1995).

The defendant's motion for appropriate relief (MAR) challenging the State's use of the short form indictment on constitutional grounds was denied because the defendant was in a position on a previous appeal to raise the issues in the MAR but failed to do so. State v. Riley, 137 N.C. App. 403, 528 S.E.2d 590 (2000), cert. denied, 352 N.C. 596, 545 S.E.2d 218 (2000) .

Federal Habeas Corpus Petition Not a Substitute for State Review Provisions. — Subsection (b) of this section was not intended to provide a state procedure for review of claims involving retroactive applications of law which were not raised on appeal and, it is not the province of federal court on a petition for habeas corpus to reinterpret the state procedural statute; accordingly, petitioner who failed to raise burden of proof issue on motion for appropriate relief in state court could not assert such claim on petition for habeas corpus. Young v. Sams, 510 F. Supp. 141 (E.D.N.C. 1981), appeal dismissed, 679 F.2d 892 (4th Cir. 1982).

Inmate's petition for habeas corpus was denied on the basis of the existence of an adequate and independent state law ground of decision in the form of his procedural default through the filing of multiple successive petitions as stated by Superior Court order. Ashe v. Styles, 39 F.3d 80 (4th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1162, 116 S. Ct. 1051, 134 L. Ed. 2d 196 (1996).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claims, coupled with an alleged failure to adequately inform petitioner of his appeal right, may show "good cause" within the meaning of subsection (b) of this section. Vester v. Stephenson, 465 F. Supp. 868 (E.D.N.C. 1978).

Ineffective assistance claims are not categorically different from other kinds of claims that can be barred under this section; the North Carolina courts are required to examine each claim to determine whether the particular claim at issue could have been brought on direct review. McCarver v. Lee, 221 F.3d 583 (4th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1089, 121 S. Ct. 809, 148 L. Ed. 2d 694 (2001).

Denial Under Subsection (a) Mandatory. — Although subsection (a) is phrased in permissive language, a review of the statute as a whole makes plain that it is a mandatory provision. Smith v. Dixon, 14 F.3d 956 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 841, 115 S. Ct. 129, 130 L. Ed. 2d 72 (1994), rehearing denied, 513 U.S. 1105, 115 S. Ct. 785, 130 L. Ed. 2d 678 (1995).

Applicability of State Procedural Bar to Federal Habeas Review. — In order for a state procedural ground, such as in subsection (a), to provide an adequate basis for decision on a petitioner's motion for appropriate relief, thereby foreclosing federal habeas review of an issue, the state procedural bar must be applied "consistently or regularly." Smith v. Dixon, 14 F.3d 956 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 841, 115 S. Ct. 129, 130 L. Ed. 2d 72 (1994), rehearing denied, 513 U.S. 1105, 115 S. Ct. 785, 130 L. Ed. 2d 678 (1995).

Superior court decision appeared to rest primarily on, or be interwoven with, the resolution of the petitioner's federal claims and did not clearly and expressly rely on independent and adequate state grounds, and thus petitioner's first amendment claim was not procedurally defaulted. Brooks v. North Carolina Dep't of Cor., 984 F. Supp. 940 (E.D.N.C. 1997).

§ 15A-1420. Motion for appropriate relief; procedure.

(a) Form, Service, Filing.

(1) A motion for appropriate relief must:

a. Be made in writing unless it is made:

1. In open court;
2. Before the judge who presided at trial;
3. Before the end of the session if made in superior court; and
4. Within 10 days after entry of judgment;

b. State the grounds for the motion;

c. Set forth the relief sought; and

d. Be timely filed.

(2) A written motion for appropriate relief must be served in the manner provided in G.S. 15A-951(b). When the written motion is made more than 10 days after entry of judgment, service of the motion and a notice of hearing must be made not less than five working days prior to the date of the hearing. When a motion for appropriate relief is permitted to be made orally the court must determine whether the matter may be heard immediately or at a later time. If the opposing party, or his counsel if he is represented, is not present, the court must provide for the giving of adequate notice of the motion and the date of hearing to the opposing party, or his counsel if he is represented by counsel.

(3) A written motion for appropriate relief must be filed in the manner provided in G.S. 15A-951(c).

(b) Supporting Affidavits.

(1) A motion for appropriate relief made after the entry of judgment must be supported by affidavit or other documentary evidence if based upon the existence or occurrence of facts which are not ascertainable from the records and any transcript of the case or which are not within the knowledge of the judge who hears the motion.

(2) The opposing party may file affidavits or other documentary evidence.

(b1) Filing Motion With Clerk; Review of Motion by Judge.

(1) The proceeding shall be commenced by filing with the clerk of superior court of the district wherein the defendant was indicted a motion, with service on the district attorney in noncapital cases, and service on both the district attorney and Attorney General in capital cases.

(2) The clerk, upon receipt of the motion, shall place the motion on the criminal docket. The clerk shall promptly bring the motion, or a copy of the motion, to the attention of the resident judge or any judge holding court in the county or district. In noncapital cases, the judge shall review the motion and enter an order whether the defendant should be allowed to proceed without the payment of costs, with respect to the appointment of counsel, and directing the State, if necessary, to file an answer. In capital cases, the judge shall review the motion and enter an order directing the State to file its answer within 60 days of the date of the order. If a hearing is necessary, the judge shall calendar the case for hearing without unnecessary delay.

(c) Hearings, Showing of Prejudice; Findings.

(1) Any party is entitled to a hearing on questions of law or fact arising from the motion and any supporting or opposing information presented unless the court determines that the motion is without merit. The court must determine, on the basis of these materials and the requirements of this subsection, whether an evidentiary hearing is required to resolve questions of fact. Upon the motion of either party, the judge may direct the attorneys for the parties to appear before him for a conference on any prehearing matter in the case.

(2) An evidentiary hearing is not required when the motion is made in the trial court pursuant to G.S. 15A-1414, but the court may hold an evidentiary hearing if it is appropriate to resolve questions of fact.

(3) The court must determine the motion without an evidentiary hearing when the motion and supporting and opposing information present only questions of law. The defendant has no right to be present at such a hearing where only questions of law are to be argued.

(4) If the court cannot rule upon the motion without the hearing of evidence, it must conduct a hearing for the taking of evidence, and must make findings of fact. The defendant has a right to be present at the evidentiary hearing and to be represented by counsel. A waiver of the right to be present must be in writing.

(5) If an evidentiary hearing is held, the moving party has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence every fact essential to support the motion.

(6) A defendant who seeks relief by motion for appropriate relief must show the existence of the asserted ground for relief. Relief must be denied unless prejudice appears, in accordance with G.S. 15A-1443.

(7) The court must rule upon the motion and enter its order accordingly. When the motion is based upon an asserted violation of the rights of the defendant under the Constitution or laws or treaties of the United States, the court must make and enter conclusions of law and a statement of the reasons for its determination to the extent required, when taken with other records and transcripts in the case, to indicate whether the defendant has had a full and fair hearing on the merits of the grounds so asserted.

(d) Action on Court's Own Motion. — At any time that a defendant would be entitled to relief by motion for appropriate relief, the court may grant such relief upon its own motion. The court must cause appropriate notice to be given to the parties. (1965, c. 352, s. 1; 1973, c. 47, s. 2; 1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1995 (Reg. Sess., 1996), c. 719, ss. 3, 4.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This Article provides for motions for appropriate relief which may be made on two essentially different occasions. There are the immediate motions made while the case is still fresh and the trial judge is still available, and the later motion which may require a substantially greater use of supporting documents or other evidence. This procedural section provides for the formalities of making the oral motion and the written motion, notice, and hearing. It should be noted that the subsections provide for two types of hearings. One is the hearing based upon affidavits, transcripts, or the like, plus matters within the judge's knowledge, to comply with the parties' entitlement to a hearing on questions of law and fact. The other is an evidentiary hearing. G.S. 15A-1420(c)(3) provides that if the only question is a question of law then the matter is to be disposed of without an evidentiary hearing. On the other hand, subdivision (4) makes it clear that if it is necessary to take evidence the court must hold an evidentiary hearing at which the defendant has the right to be present and to be represented by counsel, and the judge must make findings of fact. Obviously, it is unlikely that such an evidentiary hearing would be necessary on the immediate post-trial motion, made within 10 days as provided by G.S. 15A-1414, and that is reflected in subdivision (c)(2).

Pursuant to subsections (c)(5) and (6) the moving party has the burden of proof, by a preponderance of evidence, with regard to facts essential to support the motion. The defendant must show the existence of the ground and prejudice must appear. The definition of prejudice is cross-referenced to G.S. 15A-1443, in the Appeal Article, where the State rule on prejudice and the federal constitutional error rule are set out.

The provisions of subsection (c)(7) require that when the motion is based upon an asserted violation of the rights of the defendant under the Constitution or laws or treaties of the United States, the court must make conclusions of law and a statement of reason for its determination. These requirements are imposed in order that properly made determinations in the State court will not fail in the federal courts because of the lack of a record indicating that there has been a full and fair hearing on the merits on these grounds. See Townsend v. Sain, 372 U.S. 293, 83 S. Ct. 745, 9 L. Ed. 2d 770 and Title 28, U.S. Code, § 2254. Compare also New York Criminal Procedure Law, § 440.30.

CASE NOTES

Minutes Should Be Corrected and Judgments Vacated in County Where They Are Kept. — In the county of conviction are to be found the records of the trial which the prisoner attacks, as well as the court officials and other persons likely to have any knowledge of the truth or falsity of the prisoner's allegations that he suffered a substantial denial of his constitutional rights. If entries in the minutes are to be corrected or judgments vacated, manifestly this should be done in the county where they are required to be kept. State v. Merritt, 264 N.C. 716, 142 S.E.2d 687 (1965).

No Authority to Grant Appropriate Relief Benefitting State. — The court, upon motion by the State, exceeded its authority in striking a guilty plea and setting the case for trial. The court did not have the authority to grant "appropriate relief," pursuant to subsection (d), which benefitted the State. State v. Oakley, 75 N.C. App. 99, 330 S.E.2d 59 (1985).

In an evidentiary hearing for appropriate relief, where the judge sits without a jury, the moving party has the burden of proving by the preponderance of the evidence every fact to support his motion. The court must make findings of fact in support of its ruling. State v. Adcock, 310 N.C. 1, 310 S.E.2d 587 (1983).

In hearings before a judge sitting without a jury adherence to the rudimentary rules of evidence is desirable even in preliminary voir dire hearings. Such adherence invites confidence in the trial judge's findings. State v. Adcock, 310 N.C. 1, 310 S.E.2d 587 (1983).

Evidentiary Hearing Needed. — The court erred in summarily entering its order denying defendant's motion for appropriate relief, without conducting an evidentiary hearing to address the issues of fact surrounding both counsel's alleged conflict of interest and the validity of the plea agreement. State v. Hardison, 126 N.C. App. 52, 483 S.E.2d 459 (1997).

An evidentiary hearing was required to determine if the state had sent to the trial court a proposed order denying defendant's original motion for appropriate relief without providing defendant or his counsel with a copy. State v. McHone, 348 N.C. 254, 499 S.E.2d 761 (1998).

Trial Judge's Findings of Fact Are Binding on Review. — On review of orders entered pursuant to § 15A-1415 and this section, the findings of fact of the trial judge are binding upon the petitioner if they were supported by evidence, even if the evidence is conflicting, and notwithstanding defendant's testimony at the hearing to the contrary. State v. Stevens, 305 N.C. 712, 291 S.E.2d 585 (1982).

The findings made by the trial court are binding if they are supported by any competent evidence, and the trial court's ruling on facts so supported may be disturbed only when there has been a manifest abuse of discretion, or when it is based on an error of law. State v. Pait, 81 N.C. App. 286, 343 S.E.2d 573 (1986).

Remand for New Trial on Court's Motion. — Regardless of whether the defendant, twice charged with Driving While Impaired (DWI) and once with Driving While License Revoked, moved for appropriate relief or the district court judge granted such relief on his own motion, a trial court may set aside properly a guilty verdict, but it was improper for the trial court to thereafter enter a verdict of not guilty; the case should have been remanded for a new trial on the second DWI charge. State v. Morgan, 108 N.C. App. 673, 425 S.E.2d 1 (1993), cert. granted, 335 N.C. 551, 439 S.E.2d 127 (1994).

Amendments by Motion of Court. — Where judgments were facially invalid because both listed habitual felon as a substantive offense, as habitual felon status standing alone will not support a criminal sentence, the trial court had jurisdiction under subsection (d) to amend both judgments on its own motion. Accordingly, the trial court did not err in amending the judgment in the cases consolidated. State v. Harris, 115 N.C. App. 42, 444 S.E.2d 226 (1994).

Motion Asserting Constitutional Violations. — The mere fact that some of the grounds set forth by defendant in his motion for relief were based upon asserted violations of his rights under the United States Constitution did not automatically entitle him to a hearing or to present evidence. State v. McHone, 348 N.C. 254, 499 S.E.2d 761 (1998).

The defendant's motion under this section was properly denied where the evidence showed that the twelve-year-old daughter of his girlfriend had recanted after being repeatedly questioned by family and friends because she was embarrassed and did not want to have to testify on the sexual matters again. State v. Doisey, 138 N.C. App. 620, 532 S.E.2d 240 (2000), cert. denied, 352 N.C. 678, 545 S.E.2d 434 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1177, 121 S. Ct. 1153, 148 L. Ed. 2d 1015 (2001).

§ 15A-1421. Indigent defendants.

The provisions of Chapter 7A of the General Statutes with regard to the appointment of counsel for indigent defendants are applicable to proceedings under this Article. The court also may make appropriate orders relieving indigent defendants of all or a portion of the costs of the proceedings. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

§ 15A-1422. Review upon appeal.

(a) The making of a motion for appropriate relief is not a prerequisite for asserting an error upon appeal.

(b) The grant or denial of relief sought pursuant to G.S. 15A-1414 is subject to appellate review only in an appeal regularly taken.

(c) The court's ruling on a motion for appropriate relief pursuant to G.S. 15A-1415 is subject to review:

(1) If the time for appeal from the conviction has not expired, by appeal.

(2) If an appeal is pending when the ruling is entered, in that appeal.

(3) If the time for appeal has expired and no appeal is pending, by writ of certiorari.

(d) There is no right to appeal from the denial of a motion for appropriate relief when the movant is entitled to a trial de novo upon appeal.

(e) When an error asserted upon appeal has also been the subject of a motion for appropriate relief, denial of the motion has no effect on the right to assert error upon appeal.

(f) Decisions of the Court of Appeals on motions for appropriate relief that embrace matter set forth in G.S. 15A-1415(b) are final and not subject to further review by appeal, certification, writ, motion, or otherwise. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1981, c. 470, s. 3.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsection (a). The motions which may be made pursuant to G.S. 15A-1414 incorporate the trial judge's "supervisory" right to order a new trial or other relief on the basis of unfairness to the defendant in the trial, and his authority to correct legal errors, both present in "new trials" under the prior law. (G.S. 15-174 and Rules of Civil Procedure, G.S. 1A-1, Rule 59.) Under this section, if an error has been committed during the trial, appellate review is related directly to the error and is not dependent upon the reassertion of the error after trial by means of a post-verdict motion.

This section also reflects the somewhat different situation which exists with regard to motions made pursuant to § 15A-1415. That section provides for matters which may be asserted, even for the first time, beyond the 10-day period after entry of judgment, as well as before the expiration of that time. Thus, if those matters are raised in sufficient time to be reviewed in connection with an appeal, the statute permits the alleged error in denial of relief to be asserted in the appeal. If the ruling on the motion is made after the time for appeal has expired and there is no appeal pending, review is discretionary, by means of petition for a writ of certiorari.

Subsection (d) provides the obvious rule that although post-trial motions may be made in the district court, there is no need for appellate review of those motions if the movant is entitled to a trial de novo upon appeal.

The provisions of Chapter 7A have in G.S. 7A-27, 7A-28 and 7A-31(a) limited review of post-conviction proceedings to review in the Court of Appeals, by certiorari. With the change in procedure here, and the limitations created to prevent repetitive motions, the limitation of the review to the Court of Appeals has been eliminated by concurrent amendments to the sections cited.

CASE NOTES

North Carolina Supreme court review of collateral attacks is by way of certiorari and not direct appeal. Felton v. Barnett, 912 F.2d 92 (4th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1032, 111 S. Ct. 693, 112 L. Ed. 2d 683, 502 U.S. 1007, 112 S. Ct. 644, 116 L. Ed. 2d 661 (1991).

Rules Regarding Certiorari Similar to Supreme Court's. — The rules and procedures of the North Carolina Supreme Court regarding writs of certiorari are substantially similar to those of the United States Supreme Court. Felton v. Barnett, 912 F.2d 92 (4th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1032, 111 S. Ct. 693, 112 L. Ed. 2d 683, 502 U.S. 1007, 112 S. Ct. 644, 116 L. Ed. 2d 661 (1991).

Review After Time for Taking Appeal Expires. — Where defendant filed motion for relief long after the time for taking appeal had expired, he could obtain appellate review of the court's ruling only by a petition for a writ of certiorari. State v. Isom, 119 N.C. App. 225, 458 S.E.2d 420 (1995).

Appeal Following Remand. — Where Court of Appeals decided defendant's underlying appeal then remanded the motion for appropriate relief to the trial court, the order of the trial court on the motion for appropriate relief would be subject to review by writ of certiorari. State v. Barnett, 113 N.C. App. 69, 437 S.E.2d 711 (1993).

Discretion of Trial Court. — A motion to set aside the verdict as being against the weight of the evidence is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and its refusal to grant the motion is not reviewable on appeal in the absence of abuse of discretion. State v. Pratt, 306 N.C. 673, 295 S.E.2d 462 (1982).

Defendant's motion for appropriate relief was reviewable where the appellate court's order simply reversed the lower court's judgment, and did not review the decision by the lower court to grant the defendant's motion, and therefore did not constitute a final decision. State v. Roberts, 351 N.C. 325, 523 S.E.2d 417 (2000).

Defendant's appeal from an order denying his petition for writ of error coram nobis treated as petition for writ of certiorari. See State v. Lee, 40 N.C. App. 165, 252 S.E.2d 225 (1979).

Defendant's Testimony Contradicted Proffered Instruction. — The trial court's failure to instruct the jury on defendant's law-abidingness and not using drugs was not prejudicial to defendant where defendant's own testimony contradicted testimony of witness that defendant was law-abiding and there was very strong evidence of defendant's guilt. State v. Moreno, 98 N.C. App. 642, 391 S.E.2d 860 (1990).

Defendant had no right to appeal from a motion for appropriate relief brought pursuant to § 15A-1415(b)(3) when the time for appeal had expired and no appeal was pending. State v. Harris, 115 N.C. App. 42, 444 S.E.2d 226 (1994).

Article 90.

Appeals from Magistrates and District Court Judges.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article derives from those appearing in the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly, as revised by the Commission.

§ 15A-1431. Appeals by defendants from magistrate and district court judge; trial de novo.

(a) A defendant convicted before a magistrate may appeal for trial de novo before a district court judge without a jury.

(b) A defendant convicted in the district court before the judge may appeal to the superior court for trial de novo with a jury as provided by law. Upon the docketing in the superior court of an appeal from a judgment imposed pursuant to a plea arrangement between the State and the defendant, the jurisdiction of the superior court over any misdemeanor dismissed, reduced, or modified pursuant to that plea arrangement shall be the same as was had by the district court prior to the plea arrangement.

(c) Within 10 days of entry of judgment, notice of appeal may be given orally in open court or in writing to the clerk. Within 10 days of entry of judgment, the defendant may withdraw his appeal and comply with the judgment. Upon expiration of the 10-day period, if an appeal has been entered and not withdrawn, the clerk must transfer the case to the appropriate court.

(d) A defendant convicted by a magistrate or district court judge is not barred from appeal because of compliance with the judgment, but notice of appeal after compliance must be given by the defendant in person to the magistrate or judge who heard the case or, if he is not available, notice must be given:

(1) Before a magistrate in the county, in the case of appeals from the magistrate; or

(2) During an open session of district court in the district court district as defined in G.S. 7A-133, in the case of appeals from district court.

The magistrate or district court judge must review the case and fix conditions of pretrial release as appropriate. If a defendant has paid a fine or costs and then appeals, the amount paid must be remitted to the defendant, but the judge, clerk or magistrate to whom notice of appeal is given may order the remission delayed pending the determination of the appeal.

(e) Any order of pretrial release remains in effect pending appeal by the defendant unless the judge modifies the order.

(f) Appeal pursuant to this section stays the execution of portions of the judgment relating to fine and costs. Appeal stays portions of the judgment relating to confinement when the defendant has complied with conditions of pretrial release. If the defendant cannot comply with conditions of pretrial release, the judge may order confinement in a local confinement facility pending the trial de novo in superior court.

(g) The defendant may withdraw his appeal at any time prior to calendaring of the case for trial de novo. The case is then automatically remanded to the court from which the appeal was taken, for execution of the judgment.

(h) The defendant may withdraw his appeal after the calendaring of the case for trial de novo only by consent of the court, and with the attachment of costs of that court, unless the costs or any part of the costs are remitted by the court. The case may then be remanded by order of the court to the court from which the appeal was taken for execution of the judgment with any additional court costs that attached and that have not been remitted. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1979, c. 758, p. 2; 1979, 2nd Sess., c. 1328, s. 1; 1987 (Reg. Sess., 1988), c. 1037, s. 72; 1991, c. 63, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section codifies the appeal from the magistrate to the district court judge for trial de novo and appeal from the district court judge to the superior court for trial de novo, and also deals with a problem which has recurred with some frequency. That problem has been presented by the defendant, not represented by counsel, who pays his fine and then wishes to appeal. When he secures counsel, he finds that he has lost his right to appeal by complying with the sentence. That is not true under this revision. It should be noted that although provision is made for remitting of a fine or costs, that may be delayed pending the determination of the appeal.

It also is made clear that the cut-off point for the right to withdraw an appeal is the time of calendaring of the case for trial de novo. If an appeal is taken to the superior court, the costs of that division will attach at the end of 10 days in accordance with G.S. 7A-304(b). Since remand to the original trial court is automatic when the appeal is withdrawn prior to calendaring of the appeal case for trial de novo, no condition may be imposed on such a remand.

CASE NOTES

Jurisdiction Lacking. — The Superior court did not have jurisdiction to find defendant guilty of speeding offense where the State took a voluntary dismissal on that charge at the district court. State v. Phillips, 127 N.C. App. 391, 489 S.E.2d 890 (1997).

Date of Conviction. — When a defendant withdraws his appeal to the superior court, pursuant to either subsection (g) or (h), and the case is remanded to the district court for execution of the district court judgment, it is as though the appeal had not been taken and the defendant's conviction of the offense occurred upon the date of the entry of judgment in the district court. State v. Wilkins, 128 N.C. App. 315, 494 S.E.2d 611 (1998).

Entry of Judgment. — Defendant's purported appeal was untimely where it was not made within 10 days of the original judgment in which the defendant was found guilty of attempted simple assault, simple assault and communicating threats; the district court's intervening correction of various errors on the sentencing form did not constitute a new judgment from which to start counting the ten days. State v. Linemann, 135 N.C. App. 734, 522 S.E.2d 781 (1999).

Cited in State v. Monroe, 57 N.C. App. 597, 292 S.E.2d 21 (1982); Field v. Sheriff of Wake County, 831 F.2d 530 (4th Cir. 1987).

§ 15A-1432. Appeals by State from district court judge.

(a) Unless the rule against double jeopardy prohibits further prosecution, the State may appeal from the district court judge to the superior court:

(1) When there has been a decision or judgment dismissing criminal charges as to one or more counts.

(2) Upon the granting of a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered or newly available evidence but only on questions of law.

(b) When the State appeals pursuant to subsection (a) the appeal is by written motion specifying the basis of the appeal made within 10 days after the entry of the judgment in the district court. The motion must be filed with the clerk and a copy served upon the defendant.

(c) The motion may be heard by any judge of superior court having authority for the trial of criminal cases in the district. The State and the defendant are entitled to file briefs and are entitled to adequate time for their preparation, consonant with the expeditious handling of the appeal.

(d) If the superior court finds that a judgment, ruling, or order dismissing criminal charges in the district court was in error, it must reinstate the charges and remand the matter to district court for further proceedings. The defendant may appeal this order to the appellate division as in the case of other orders of the superior court, including by an interlocutory appeal if the defendant, or his attorney, certifies to the superior court judge who entered the order that the appeal is not taken for the purpose of delay and if the judge finds the cause is appropriately justiciable in the appellate division as an interlocutory matter.

(e) If the superior court finds that the order of the district court was correct, it must enter an order affirming the judgment of the district court. The State may appeal the order of the superior court to the appellate division upon certificate by the district attorney to the judge who affirmed the judgment that the appeal is not taken for the purpose of delay. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1987, c. 398.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Although G.S. 15-179 had provided the right of the State to appeal to the superior court, procedure had never been provided. This section creates a simplified motion practice for the State's appeal in such circumstances. The right of the State to appeal is defined in the same manner as in G.S. 15A-1445. See the commentary to that section.

CASE NOTES

Applicability. — This section only applies to instances where the superior court reverses a dismissal of criminal charges by the district court. State v. Joseph, 92 N.C. App. 203, 374 S.E.2d 132 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 115, 377 S.E.2d 241 (1989).

Appeal Treated as Petition for Mandamus. — State's attempted appeal of district court's action in setting aside guilty verdicts entered by it five months previously and entering verdicts of not guilty would be treated as a petition for a writ of mandamus pursuant to § 7A-32(c) and N.C.R.A.P., Rule 22. State v. Surles, 55 N.C. App. 179, 284 S.E.2d 738 (1981), cert. denied, 305 N.C. 307, 290 S.E.2d 707 (1982).

Notice of appeal was inadequate to meet the requirements of subsection (b) because the basis for the appeal was not specified. The State had the responsibility to file the notice of appeal in the proper manner. Reliance on defendant's counsel to prepare proper notice did not suffice. State v. Hamrick, 110 N.C. App. 60, 428 S.E.2d 830, appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 334 N.C. 436, 433 S.E.2d 181 (1993).

Failure to Meet Requirements Resulted in Dismissal. — The defendant's appeal did not fall within a statutory exception for interlocutory criminal appeals where nothing in the record before the Court showed that "defendant, or his attorney, certified to the superior court . . . that the appeal was not [being] taken for the purpose of delay . . . ." and where the superior court's order did not reflect that it found defendant's cause "appropriately justiciable in the appellate division as an interlocutory matter." State v. Nichols, 140 N.C. App. 597, 537 S.E.2d 825 (2000).

Name of Document Irrelevant. — Defendant's contention that the superior court was without jurisdiction to hear the State's appeal to that court since the State filed and served a document entitled "Notice of Appeal" instead of a "motion" as required by subsection (b) was without merit. State v. Ward, 127 N.C. App. 115, 487 S.E.2d 798 (1997).

Lack of Findings and Conclusions from District Court Not Fatal. — As the district court is not a court of record, and the superior court's review is de novo, the State's failure to request that the district court make findings of fact and conclusions of law in order to preserve the record on appeal is not fatal. State v. Ward, 127 N.C. App. 115, 487 S.E.2d 798 (1997).

Jeopardy Not Attached. — Where evidence was never accepted by the district court for an adjudication of the defendant's guilt, but the district court entertained defendants' pretrial motions to dismiss based upon prosecutorial misconduct, jeopardy did not attach. State v. Ward, 127 N.C. App. 115, 487 S.E.2d 798 (1997).

Applied in In re Greene, 306 N.C. 376, 297 S.E.2d 379 (1982); State v. Rose, 312 N.C. 441, 323 S.E.2d 339 (1984); State v. Huntley, 105 N.C. App. 709, 414 S.E.2d 380 (1992).

ARTICLE 91.

Appeal to Appellate Division.

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Present provisions of Chapter 15 of the General Statutes, in Article 18, relating to criminal appeals, are very limited. In addition to those limited provisions other sources for rules governing criminal appeals include the Rules of the Appellate Division, and provisions of Chapter 7A of the General Statutes with regard to jurisdiction of the courts.

The attempt here is to bring together the items appropriately left to the criminal statutes relating to criminal appeals. There is one modification of Chapter 7A. This act does not infringe upon those areas which are appropriately within the rule-making power of the appellate division.

Editor's Note. — The "Official Commentary" under this Article derives from those appearing in the Legislative Program and Report of the Criminal Code Commission to the 1977 General Assembly, as revised by the Commission.

§ 15A-1441. Correction of errors by appellate division.

Errors of law may be corrected upon appellate review as provided in this Article, except that review of capital cases shall be given priority on direct appeal and in State postconviction proceedings. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1995 (Reg. Sess., 1996), c. 719, s. 6.)

CASE NOTES

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under former law.

The Fair Sentencing Act, as codified in former Article 81A of this Chapter, resulted in revisions to other portions of the general statutes. See e.g., Chapter 14, Articles 1, 2, 2A, 33; Chapter 15A, Articles 58, 81A, 82, 83, 85, 85A, 89, 91; Chapter 148, Article 2, and Chapter 162, Article 4. State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

Under the Fair Sentencing Act, the trial judge is required to make a record of aggravating and mitigating factors; this gives the reviewing court a means by which to decide whether the sentence is supported by sufficient evidence and whether the judge abused his discretion in weighing aggravating and mitigating factors. State v. Cannon, 92 N.C. App. 246, 374 S.E.2d 604 (1988), rev'd on other grounds, 326 N.C. 37, 387 S.E.2d 450 (1990).

For case discussing the historical background, policies, purposes, and implementation of the "Fair Sentencing Act," see State v. Ahearn, 307 N.C. 584, 300 S.E.2d 689 (1983).

Right to appeal is wholly statutory. State v. Blades, 209 N.C. 56, 182 S.E. 714 (1935).

Appeal as Substitute for Common-Law Writs. — At common law there was no appeal from the decision of any of the courts, high or low, and these decisions could only be reviewed by writ of error or writ of false judgment. In North Carolina appeals are used as a substitute for those writs. State v. Bailey, 65 N.C. 426 (1871); State v. Webb, 155 N.C. 426, 70 S.E. 1064 (1911).

Rules governing appeals are mandatory, not directory. State v. Lewis, 9 N.C. App. 323, 176 S.E.2d 1 (1970).

Appeal Lies Only from Final Judgment. — The right to appeal is wholly statutory, and a defendant may appeal only from a conviction or from some judgment that is final in its nature. Thus an appeal from the denial of defendant's plea in abatement will be dismissed as being an appeal from an interlocutory judgment. State v. Blades, 209 N.C. 56, 182 S.E. 714 (1935).

A defendant is entitled to appeal only from conviction in the superior court or some final judgment thereof, and an appeal from an order of the superior court remanding the case to the recorder's court will be dismissed. State v. Rooks, 207 N.C. 275, 176 S.E. 752 (1934).

The statute does not provide for an appeal in criminal cases except from a final judgment. Hence, upon the indictment of members of the armed forces of the United States by State authorities, an appeal from an adverse ruling on objection to jurisdiction is premature. State v. Inman, 224 N.C. 531, 31 S.E.2d 641 (1944), cert. denied, 323 U.S. 805, 65 S. Ct. 563, 89 L. Ed. 642 (1945).

This right of appeal is a substantial right. State v. Rhinehart, 267 N.C. 470, 148 S.E.2d 651 (1966); State v. May, 8 N.C. App. 423, 174 S.E.2d 633 (1970); State v. Lowry, 10 N.C. App. 717, 179 S.E.2d 888 (1971).

Authority of Court from Which Appeal Taken. — After an appeal is taken, the court from which it is taken has no authority with reference to the appellate procedure except that specifically conferred upon it by the statute. State v. Atkinson, 275 N.C. 288, 167 S.E.2d 241 (1969), death sentence vacated, 403 U.S. 948, 91 S. Ct. 2283, 29 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1971).

Cited in State v. Sturdivant, 304 N.C. 293, 283 S.E.2d 719 (1981).

II. PENALTY FOR EXERCISE OF RIGHT TO APPEAL.

Exercise of Right Should Not Prejudice Defendant. — While the trial judge has the discretionary power to change the sentence during the term, where it appears of record that after prayer for judgment was continued, with defendant's consent, upon specified terms, the court, upon learning of defendant's intention to appeal, struck that judgment out and imposed a jail sentence, the cause will be remanded for resentence, since defendant's exercise of his right to appeal under this section should not prejudice him in any manner. State v. Patton, 221 N.C. 117, 19 S.E.2d 142 (1942); State v. Rhinehart, 267 N.C. 470, 148 S.E.2d 651 (1966).

The trial judge may not impose a penalty on the exercise of the right to appeal. State v. Lowry, 10 N.C. App. 717, 179 S.E.2d 888 (1971).

If an appeal is allowed, it is not to be supposed that any penalty is attached thereto or imposed as a result thereof. State v. May, 8 N.C. App. 423, 174 S.E.2d 633 (1970).

And Sentence May Not Be Suspended on Conditions Conflicting with Such Right. — The execution of a sentence in a criminal action may not be suspended on conditions that conflict with the defendant's right of appeal. State v. Rhinehart, 267 N.C. 470, 148 S.E.2d 651 (1966); State v. May, 8 N.C. App. 423, 174 S.E.2d 633 (1970).

Where defendant could not meet the conditions upon which execution of the judgment was suspended if he exercised his right to appeal, under this section, the judgment on this count is erroneous, and the cause remanded for proper judgment thereon. State v. Calcutt, 219 N.C. 545, 15 S.E.2d 9 (1941).

It is an unwarranted interference with defendant's right of appeal where the trial court, upon learning of defendant's intention to appeal, strikes defendant's suspended sentences and imposes active sentences. State v. May, 8 N.C. App. 423, 174 S.E.2d 633 (1970).

Increase in Sentence. — A trial judge may increase the sentence given a defendant only where the record does not sustain the suggestion that the defendant was being penalized for announcing his intention to appeal. State v. Lowry, 10 N.C. App. 717, 179 S.E.2d 888 (1971).

It is incumbent upon the trial judge to correct a sentence which is less than the statutory minimum in such a manner as to preclude any inference that the greater sentence was given as a penalty for exercising the right of appeal. Such an inference has a chilling effect on the exercise of the right to appeal and cannot be tolerated. State v. Lowry, 10 N.C. App. 717, 179 S.E.2d 888 (1971).

Defendant Held Entitled to Lesser Sentence. — Where a defendant was convicted and sentenced to 45 days in jail, and the minimum statutory sentence was six months, and the sentence was increased to six months only after the defendant had notified the court of his intention to appeal, the trial judge was held to have allowed the inference that the greater sentence was imposed as a penalty for exercising the right of appeal, and the defendant was entitled to the lesser sentence. State v. Lowry, 10 N.C. App. 717, 179 S.E.2d 888 (1971).

§ 15A-1442. Grounds for correction of error by appellate division.

The following constitute grounds for correction of errors by the appellate division.

(1) Lack of Jurisdiction. —
   a. The trial court lacked jurisdiction over the offense.
   b. The trial court did not have jurisdiction over the person of the defendant.

(2) Error in the Criminal Pleading. — Failure to charge a crime, in that:
   a. The criminal pleading charged acts which at the time they were committed did not constitute a violation of criminal law; or
   b. The pleading fails to state essential elements of an alleged violation as required by G.S. 15A-924(a)(5).

(3) Insufficiency of the Evidence. — The evidence was insufficient as a matter of law.

(4) Errors in Procedure. —
   a. There has been a denial of pretrial motions or relief to which the defendant is entitled, so as to affect the defendant's preparation or presentation of his defense, to his prejudice.
   b. There has been a denial of a trial motion or relief to which the defendant is entitled, to his prejudice.
   c. There has been error in the admission or exclusion of evidence, to the prejudice of the defendant.
   d. There has been error in the judge's instructions to the jury, to the prejudice of the defendant.
   e. There has been a denial of a post-trial motion or relief to which the defendant is entitled, to his prejudice. This provision is subject to the provisions of G.S. 15A-1422.

(5) Constitutionally Invalid Procedure or Statute; Prosecution for Constitutionally Protected Conduct. —

a. The conviction was obtained by a violation of the Constitution of the United States or of the Constitution of North Carolina.
b. The defendant was convicted under a statute that is in violation of the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of North Carolina.
c. The conduct for which the defendant was prosecuted was protected by the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of North Carolina.

(5a) Insufficient Basis for Sentence. — The sentence imposed on the defendant is not supported by evidence introduced at the trial and sentencing hearing.

(5b) Violation of Sentencing Structure. — The sentence imposed:
a. Results from an incorrect finding of the defendant's prior record level under G.S. 15A-1340.14 or the defendant's prior conviction level under G.S. 15A-1340.21;
b. Contains a type of sentence disposition that is not authorized by G.S. 15A-1340.17 or G.S. 15A-1340.23 for the defendant's class of offense and prior record or conviction level; or
c. Contains a term of imprisonment that is for a duration not authorized by G.S. 15A-1340.17 or G.S. 15A-1340.23 for the defendant's class or offense and prior record or conviction level.

(6) Other Errors of Law. — Any other error of law was committed by the trial court to the prejudice of the defendant. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1979, c. 760, s. 3; 1979, (2nd Sess.) c. 1316, s. 47; 1981, c. 63, s. 1; 1981, c. 179, s. 14; 1993, c. 538, s. 26; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b).)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

As indicated in the general commentary, this section undertakes to catalogue various errors which may be asserted upon appeal. The listing of these categories of errors which may be asserted on appeal does not of course imply that the mere assertion of such an error implies entitlement to relief. It should be borne in mind that the appealing party must also meet the requirement of preserving his right to view when some particular step is required (see G.S. 15A-1446) and must of course show prejudice in accordance with G.S. 15A-1443. This section should be read in conjunction with the sections relating to the correction of errors by post-trial motions, particularly G.S. 15A-1414 and G.S. 15A-1415. This act undertakes to provide a substantial correlation between the possibility of correction of error at the trial level and at the appellate level.

CASE NOTES

Theory upon which a case is tried must prevail in considering the appeal and interpreting the record and determining the validity of the exceptions. A defendant is not permitted to defend at trial upon one theory and, upon an adverse verdict, call upon the appellate court to grant relief on the ground that the presiding judge should have intervened and guided his defense to another theory. State v. Meadows, 306 N.C. 683, 295 S.E.2d 394 (1982), overruled on other grounds, 307 N.C. 628, 300 S.E.2d 351 (1983).

Guilty Plea Resulting from Ineffective Assistance of Counsel. — Where defendant alleges that ineffective assistance of counsel caused him to enter his guilty plea, an issue of constitutional rights arises, and the fact that defendant signed an agreement form does not bar his right to seek post-conviction relief. State v. Loye, 56 N.C. App. 501, 289 S.E.2d 860, appeal dismissed, 306 N.C. 748, 295 S.E.2d 483 (1982).

Instructions May Be Corrected Only When Prejudicial. — An error in the judge's instructions to the jury must be to the prejudice of defendant in order to warrant corrective relief by the appellate division. State v. Easterling, 300 N.C. 594, 268 S.E.2d 800 (1980); State v. Mack, 53 N.C. App. 127, 280 S.E.2d 40 (1981).

Where the court charges correctly at one point and incorrectly at another, a new trial is necessary because the jury may have acted on the incorrect part. State v. Meadows, 306 N.C. 683, 295 S.E.2d 394 (1982), overruled on other grounds, 307 N.C. 628, 300 S.E.2d 351 (1983).

Erroneous Instruction on Lesser Offense. — Where there is no reasonable possibility that a verdict more favorable to defendant would have occurred absent an erroneous instruction on a lesser offense not supported by the evidence, the error occasioned by such instruction is harmless. Conversely, where there does exist a reasonable possibility that defendant would have been acquitted had not the lesser offense been erroneously submitted, the error is prejudicial and defendant is entitled to appellate relief. State v. Ray, 299 N.C. 151, 261 S.E.2d 789 (1980).

Error in Allowing Exhibits to Go to Jury Room. — Violations of § 15A-1233(b), in allowing exhibits to go into the jury room over defendant's objection, are corrected by the appellate division only when they prejudice the defendants and such prejudice obtains only when there is a reasonable possibility that, had the error in question not been committed, a different result would have been reached at the trial out of which the appeal arises; the burden of showing such prejudice is upon the defendant. State v. Taylor, 56 N.C. App. 113, 287 S.E.2d 129 (1982).

No Error Where Defendant Made No Showing That Ruling Affected Defense. — Although it was arguably error to deny defendant's motion to produce results of analyses of a state's witness' handwriting, nevertheless, there was no error where defendant made no showing that the trial court's ruling affected the preparation or presentation of his defense to his prejudice. State v. Mandina, 91 N.C. App. 686, 373 S.E.2d 155 (1988).

Correction of Sentence. — Section 15A-1442(5b) authorizes the correction of a sentence where a conviction which was used to enhance the sentence was later reversed on appeal. State v. Bidgood, 144 N.C. App. 267, 550 S.E.2d 198 (2001).

Applied in State v. Jeffries, 55 N.C. App. 269, 285 S.E.2d 307 (1982); State v. Ahearn, 59 N.C. App. 44, 295 S.E.2d 621 (1982); State v. Goforth, 59 N.C. App. 504, 297 S.E.2d 128 (1982); State v. Dalton, 96 N.C. App. 65, 384 S.E.2d 573 (1989); State v. Howard, 334 N.C. 602, 433 S.E.2d 742 (1993); State v. Hudson, 123 N.C. App. 336, 473 S.E.2d 415 (1996), rev'd on other grounds, 345 N.C. 729, 483 S.E.2d 436 (1997).

§ 15A-1443. Existence and showing of prejudice.

(a) A defendant is prejudiced by errors relating to rights arising other than under the Constitution of the United States when there is a reasonable possibility that, had the error in question not been committed, a different result would have been reached at the trial out of which the appeal arises. The burden of showing such prejudice under this subsection is upon the defendant. Prejudice also exists in any instance in which it is deemed to exist as a matter of law or error is deemed reversible per se.

(b) A violation of the defendant's rights under the Constitution of the United States is prejudicial unless the appellate court finds that it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden is upon the State to demonstrate, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the error was harmless.

(c) A defendant is not prejudiced by the granting of relief which he has sought or by error resulting from his own conduct. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section provides in subsection (a) a codification of existing definitions of prejudice in North Carolina. See State v. Turner, 268 N.C. 225, 150 S.E.2d 406 (1966). Subsection (b) reflects the standard of prejudice with regard to violation of the defendant's rights under the Constitution of the United States, as set out in the case of Chapman v. California, 386 U.S. 18, 87 S. Ct. 824, 17 L. Ed. 2d 705 (1967).

Subsection (c) is a statutory codification of the "invited error rule." Compare 28 U.S.C. 2111.

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Prejudicial Error.
III. Harmless Error.
IV. Rights under Federal Constitution.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Test for "Plain Error" Compared. — The test for "plain error" places a much heavier burden upon the defendant than that imposed by this section upon defendants who have preserved their rights by timely objection. State v. Walker, 316 N.C. 33, 340 S.E.2d 80 (1986); State v. Morgan, 315 N.C. 626, 340 S.E.2d 84 (1986); State v. Gardner, 315 N.C. 444, 340 S.E.2d 701 (1986); State v. Hartman, 90 N.C. 379, 368 S.E.2d 396 (1988)., cert. denied,.

Where defendant took issue with that portion of the trial court's final instructions in which the jury was charged that testimony regarding prior, similar offenses by defendant could be considered to show defendant's motive for murder, his intent to commit murder, and his scienter regarding the consequences of his attack, because defendant failed to object to this alleged error, appellate review is guided by the "plain error" analysis, whereby the burden on defendant to show prejudice is even greater than that imposed by this section. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Before an error by the trial court amounts to "plain error," we must be convinced that absent the error the jury probably would have reached a different verdict; therefore, the test for "plain error" places a much heavier burden upon the defendant than that imposed by this section upon defendants who have preserved their rights by timely objection. State v. Keel, 337 N.C. 469, 447 S.E.2d 748 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1198, 115 S. Ct. 1270, 131 L. Ed. 2d 147 (1995).

Defendant Must Address the Issue of Prejudice. — Defendant failed to show prejudice under this section where he correctly alleged that the trial court erred in instructing the jury on flight in his burglary trial but never addressed the effect of the error on the jury's verdict. State v. Hutchinson, 139 N.C. App. 132, 532 S.E.2d 569 (2000).

Decisions Affected by McKoy v. North Carolina. — On appeal, the State must demonstrate a McKoy error (McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), holding unanimity requirement for mitigating factors at sentencing unconstitutional) was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt because the error is of constitutional dimension. State v. Sanders, 327 N.C. 319, 395 S.E.2d 412 (1990), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1051, 111 S. Ct. 763, 112 L. Ed. 2d 782 (1991).

Unless the State demonstrates that a McKoy error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, defendant must have a new sentencing proceeding. State v. Joyner, 329 N.C. 211, 404 S.E.2d 653 (1991).

Because McKoy error under McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369, is of constitutional dimension, the State bears the burden of demonstrating that it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Robinson, 330 N.C. 1, 409 S.E.2d 288 (1991).

A prerequisite to the courts' engaging in a plain error analysis is the determination that the instruction complained of constitutes error at all. Where the challenged instruction was not error, a plain error analysis was not required. State v. Johnson, 320 N.C. 746, 360 S.E.2d 676 (1987).

Failure to Rule Formally on Objection to Evidence. — Ordinarily a party is entitled to a timely ruling on an objection to evidence. However, the failure to rule formally does not generally rise to the level of reversible error unless it is accompanied by other conduct of the trial judge evincing an opinion on the merits. State v. Hicks, 79 N.C. App. 599, 339 S.E.2d 806 (1986).

When a motion to continue is based on a constitutional right, the trial court's ruling becomes a question of law and, upon appeal, it is subject to review by examination of the particular circumstances as presented by the record, and the denial of a motion to continue, regardless of its nature, is grounds for a new trial only upon a showing by defendant that the denial was erroneous and that his case was prejudiced as a result of the error. If the error amounts to a constitutional violation, there is prejudice requiring a new trial unless the State satisfies the court that the error is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Gardner, 322 N.C. 591, 369 S.E.2d 593 (1988).

Standard of Review. — Whether the motion for appropriate relief is made by a party or by the court itself, the standard of review for the failure to give a requested instruction which results in a violation of the defendant's constitutional rights remains the same under subsection (b); such an error is deemed prejudicial unless the appellate court finds that it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Pharr, 110 N.C. App. 430, 430 S.E.2d 267, cert. denied, 334 N.C. 437, 433 S.E.2d 183 (1993).

Review of Alleged Error Limited. — Where defendant failed to object to jury instruction at trial, Supreme Court's review of alleged error was limited on appeal to review for plain error. State v. Black, 328 N.C. 191, 400 S.E.2d 398 (1991).

Applied in State v. Hudson, 295 N.C. 427, 245 S.E.2d 686 (1978); State v. Correll, 38 N.C. App. 451, 248 S.E.2d 451 (1978); State v. McQueen, 39 N.C. App. 64, 249 S.E.2d 464 (1978); State v. Johnston, 39 N.C. App. 179, 249 S.E.2d 879 (1978); State v. Sledge, 297 N.C. 227, 254 S.E.2d 579 (1979); State v. Sparks, 297 N.C. 314, 255 S.E.2d 373 (1979); State v. Logner, 297 N.C. 539, 256 S.E.2d 166 (1979); State v. Colvin, 297 N.C. 691, 256 S.E.2d 689 (1979); State v. Lyles, 298 N.C. 179, 257 S.E.2d 410 (1979); State v. II. PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

Test for prejudicial error is whether there is a reasonable possibility that the evidence complained of contributed to the conviction, not whether the appellate court is able to conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that the evidence was harmless to the rights of a defendant. State v. Milby, 302 N.C. 137, 273 S.E.2d 716 (1981).

The test under this section is whether there is a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached at trial had the error not been committed. State v. Brown, 101 N.C. App. 71, 398 S.E.2d 905 (1990).

In order to show prejudicial error, an appellant must show that there is a reasonable possibility that, had the error not been committed, a different result would have been reached at trial. State v. Martin, 322 N.C. 229, 367 S.E.2d 618 (1988); State v. Patterson, 103 N.C. App. 195, 405 S.E.2d 200, aff'd, 332 N.C. 409, 420 S.E.2d 98 (1992).

An error is not prejudicial unless a different result would have been reached at the trial if the error in question had not been committed. State v. Hardy, 104 N.C. App. 226, 409 S.E.2d 96 (1991).

When Error Not Relating to Constitutional Rights Is Prejudicial. — Errors relating to rights that do not arise under the federal Constitution are prejudicial when there is a reasonable possibility that, had the error in question not been committed, a different result would have been reached at trial. State v. Freeland, 316 N.C. 13, 340 S.E.2d 35 (1986), aff'd, 321 N.C. 115, 361 S.E.2d 560 (1987); State v. Gardner, 316 N.C. 605, 342 S.E.2d 872 (1986).

Presumption of Correctness. — A ruling of the trial court on an evidentiary point is presumptively correct, and counsel asserting prejudicial error must demonstrate that the particular ruling was in fact incorrect. State v. Milby, 302 N.C. 137, 273 S.E.2d 716 (1981).

A trial court's ruling on an evidentiary point will be presumed to be correct unless the complaining party can demonstrate that the particular ruling was in fact incorrect. Even if the complaining party can show that the trial court erred in its ruling, relief ordinarily will not be granted absent a showing of prejudice. State v. Herring, 322 N.C. 733, 370 S.E.2d 363 (1988).

Errors Deemed Prejudicial Per Se. — Trial errors which are deemed prejudicial or deemed reversible per se obviate the need for a litigant to show harm to his cause. Such errors generally violate established rules or procedures in the courts and justify reversal because they are prejudicial to the administration of justice. State v. Turner, 48 N.C. App. 606, 269 S.E.2d 270 (1980).

Per Se Rule Not Applicable to All Violations. — Extending the reversible error per se rule to all violations of this Chapter would result in many new trials for mere technical error, a result not intended by the legislature in light of the provisions of this section. State v. Chambers, 52 N.C. App. 713, 280 S.E.2d 175 (1981).

Error Must Affect Probable Result of Trial. — The appellant must show error positive and tangible, that has affected his rights substantially and not merely theoretically, and must show that a different result would have likely ensued. State v. Billups, 301 N.C. 607, 272 S.E.2d 842 (1981).

Even when it is error to deny defendant's motion for mistrial, it is incumbent upon an appellant not only to show error but also to show that the error was prejudicial to him. Where the error claimed could not have made the difference between a guilty verdict and an acquittal, no prejudice results to the defendant. State v. Carr, 61 N.C. App. 402, 301 S.E.2d 430 (1983), cert. denied, 308 N.C. 545, 304 S.E.2d 239 (1983).

An error is not prejudicial unless a different result would have been reached at the trial if the error in question had not been committed. State v. Smith, 87 N.C. App. 217, 360 S.E.2d 495 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 478, 364 S.E.2d 667 (1988).

To meet the burden of showing that he was prejudiced, defendant must show that, had the error in question not been committed, a different result would have been reached at the trial. Where defendant argued only that the evidence was irrelevant, and never addressed the effect of the error on her conviction, defendant failed to show that she was prejudiced by the admission of the evidence. State v. Keys, 87 N.C. App. 349, 361 S.E.2d 286 (1987).

Where trial court erred by not allowing defendant to question the complainant in the presence of the jury regarding the allegation of rape made five months earlier and subsequently withdrawn, defendant was entitled to a new trial because there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different. State v. Ginyard, 122 N.C. App. 25, 468 S.E.2d 525 (1996).

Defendant was granted a new trial where the trial court failed to give a limiting instruction concerning statements from a co-defendant describing defendant's involvement in the robbery, and there was a reasonable possibility the outcome of the trial would have been different for defendant with the instruction. State v. Robinson, 136 N.C. App. 520, 524 S.E.2d 805 (2000).

Joinder Held Prejudicial Error. — Joinder for trial of the defendant's possession of stolen property and financial card theft charges with the charges arising from certain home invasions was prejudicial error where the sole common denominator between the possession of stolen property charges and the charges arising out of the home invasions was that some of the evidence found in defendant's bedroom linked him to the armed robbery and the automobile break-ins, supporting the possession of stolen property and financial card theft charges, while other evidence found in the bedroom linked defendant to the home invasions and where, absent that evidence, the jury might well have reached a different verdict. State v. Perry, 142 N.C. App. 177, 541 S.E.2d 746 (2001).

All Circumstances Considered. — Not every impropriety on the part of the judge results in prejudicial error; whether the judge's actions amount to reversible error is a question to be considered in light of all of the circumstances. State v. Heath, 77 N.C. App. 264, 335 S.E.2d 350 (1985), rev'd on other grounds, 316 N.C. 337, 341 S.E.2d 565 (1986).

Curing of Error by Appropriate Instructions. — When incompetent or objectionable evidence is withdrawn from the jury's consideration by appropriate instructions from the trial judge, any error in the admission of the evidence is cured and, in like manner, improper argument or remarks by counsel are usually cured by appropriate instructions by the court to the jury. State v. Pruitt, 301 N.C. 683, 273 S.E.2d 264 (1981).

When the court withdraws incompetent evidence and instructs the jury not to consider it, any prejudice is ordinarily cured. State v. Smith, 301 N.C. 695, 272 S.E.2d 852 (1981).

Matter Must Appear of Record. — Where the matter complained of does not appear of record, appellant has failed to make the irregularity manifest and it will not be considered as a basis for prejudicial error. State v. Milby, 302 N.C. 137, 273 S.E.2d 716 (1981).

In order to obtain a new trial it is incumbent on a defendant to not only show error but also to show that the error was so prejudicial that without the error it is likely that a different result would have been reached. State v. Loren, 302 N.C. 607, 276 S.E.2d 365 (1981).

To warrant a new trial, defendant must show that the ruling complained of was material and prejudicial to his rights and that a different result would have likely ensued. State v. Haynes, 54 N.C. App. 186, 282 S.E.2d 830 (1981).

Not every erroneous ruling on the admissibility of evidence will result in a new trial being ordered. Where evidence has been improperly admitted would not, if excluded, have changed the result of the trial, a new trial will not be granted. State v. Galloway, 304 N.C. 485, 284 S.E.2d 509 (1981).

Defendant not entitled to new trial based on trial errors unless such errors were material and prejudicial. State v. Alston, 307 N.C. 321, 298 S.E.2d 631 (1983).

For case holding that the trial court's failure to give a requested identification charge was error, although error was not prejudicial error under subsection (a), see State v. Shaw, 322 N.C. 797, 370 S.E.2d 546 (1988).

Although trial court did not allow defense counsel to impeach defendant with evidence of his prior convictions, where defendant made no offer of proof as to the matter excluded, nor was the answer apparent from the context in which the question was asked of defendant, the defendant failed to carry his burden of showing prejudice and the court had no basis for concluding that a substantial right of defendant was affected. State v. Locklear, 322 N.C. 468, 368 S.E.2d 377 (1988).

And Cannot Result from Defendant's Own Conduct. — While the term "duress" may be a legal term of art, the definition of which was not readily apparent to defendant's expert witness, the expert testimony complained of was offered by defendant's own expert witness in regard to defendant's mental condition; a defendant may not complain of prejudice resulting from her own conduct. State v. Gay, 334 N.C. 467, 434 S.E.2d 840 (1993).

Burden is on the appellant not only to show error but also to show that he suffered prejudice as a result of the error. State v. Milby, 302 N.C. 137, 273 S.E.2d 716 (1981); State v. McKnight, 87 N.C. App. 458, 361 S.E.2d 429 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 477, 364 S.E.2d 663 (1988).

On appeal the burden shifts: Once the motion to dismiss has been denied, defendant-appellant assumes the twin burdens of assuring that the record is properly made up and showing that error has occurred to his or her prejudice; if the record is deficient or silent upon a particular point, the reviewing court will presume that the trial judge acted correctly. State v. White, 77 N.C. App. 45, 334 S.E.2d 786, cert. denied, 315 N.C. 190, 337 S.E.2d 864 (1985).

The burden is on the defendant to show prejudice. State v. Heath, 77 N.C. App. 264, 335 S.E.2d 350 (1985), rev'd on other grounds, 316 N.C. 337, 341 S.E.2d 565 (1986).

The defendant bears the additional burden, when challenging a jury instruction, to show that the jury was misled or misinformed by the charge as given, or that a different result would have been reached had the requested instruction been given. State v. Carson, 80 N.C. App. 620, 343 S.E.2d 275 (1986).

The defendant has the burden of showing that he was prejudiced by the admission of the evidence. In order to show prejudice, defendant must meet the statutory requirements of § 15A-1443(a). State v. Melvin, 86 N.C. App. 291, 357 S.E.2d 379 (1987).

When relevant evidence not involving a right arising under the Constitution of the United States is erroneously excluded, a defendant has the burden of showing that the error was prejudicial. This burden may be met by showing that there is a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached had the error not been committed. State v. Weeks, 322 N.C. 152, 367 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

Defendant has the burden under this section of demonstrating that but for the erroneous admission of challenged evidence, there is a "reasonable possibility" that the jury would have reached a verdict of not guilty. State v. Gibson, 333 N.C. 29, 424 S.E.2d 95 (1992), overruled on other grounds, 334 N.C. 402, 432 S.E.2d 349 (1993).

Comments Regarding Defendant's Failure to Testify Prejudicial. — Where the evidence did not overwhelmingly show that defendant was guilty of first degree murder, the prosecutor's comments concerning defendant's failure to testify, which were not timely corrected by the trial court, required a new trial. State v. Riley, 128 N.C. App. 265, 495 S.E.2d 181 (1998).

Incorrect Instruction. — Where the first instruction given by the trial court, although in error, would not have required a new trial if the subsequent instruction was correct, but the second instruction was not correct, the defendants satisfied their burden of showing prejudicial error and were entitled to a new trial. State v. Kelly, 120 N.C. App. 821, 463 S.E.2d 812 (1995).

The trial court committed plain error by instructing the jury on statutory sexual offense instead of first degree sexual offense as charged in three indictments and, by failing to submit the proper jury instructions for the three counts of first degree (forcible) sexual offense against the defendant, effectively dismissed those charges. State v. Bowen, 139 N.C. App. 18, 533 S.E.2d 248 (2000).

Failure to Give Limiting Instruction. — When, at a joint trial, evidence is admitted against one defendant that is not admissible against a co-defendant, it is the duty of the trial court to give a specific limiting instruction due to the inherent danger of confusing the jury with the admission of evidence applicable only to one of multiple defendants. State v. Robinson, 136 N.C. App. 520, 524 S.E.2d 805 (2000).

Failing to Instruct on Necessary Elements of Indecent Liberties Charge. — The trial court committed plain error, and thereby effectively dismissed the indictment, by omitting to instruct the jury on the necessary elements for one of five indecent liberties charges. The State contended that since the jury had already been instructed on the other four indecent liberties charges, one of which was for the same victim, "the jury was fully and completely aware of the elements of the offense," and that the omission was "overlooked by everyone—including [the] Defendant" who failed to object at trial. State v. Bowen, 139 N.C. App. 18, 533 S.E.2d 248 (2000).

Error Held Not Cured by Instruction. — The trial court in a homicide prosecution erred in failing to include not guilty by reason of defense of another in the final mandate to the jury, and such error was not cured by discussion of the law of defense of another in the body of the charge. State v. Patterson, 50 N.C. App. 280, 272 S.E.2d 924 (1981).

Failure to Summarize Evidence. — The trial court's instructions to the jury were prejudicial where the trial court did not summarize the evidence as required by § 15A-1232, but instead consistently and without exception stated the contentions of the parties, and in stating the State's contentions, included matters that were not in evidence. State v. Wagner, 50 N.C. App. 286, 273 S.E.2d 33 (1981).

Exposure of Jury to Evidence of Guilt of Alleged Principals. — Exposure of the jury to strong and virtually irrebuttable evidence that the alleged principals were convicted of the same crimes charged against defendant upon the state's theory that he participated in the crimes as an aider and abettor was not harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Brown, 319 N.C. 361, 354 S.E.2d 225 (1987).

When Inquiry into Prior Convictions Is Prejudicial. — Inquiry into prior convictions which exceeds the limitations established in State v. Finch, 293 N.C. 132, 235 S.E.2d 819 (1977) is reversible error. State v. Gallagher, 101 N.C. App. 208, 398 S.E.2d 491 (1990).

As prosecutor's questions on cross-examination were inquiries which went beyond the time and place of defendant's convictions and the punishment imposed, and as the case turned on credibililty, defendant was prejudiced by the trial judge's order overruling defendant's objections to such questions. State v. Gallagher, 101 N.C. App. 208, 398 S.E.2d 491 (1990).

Introduction of Evidence "Out of Turn". — Although the trial court committed error by allowing the State to introduce evidence of defendant's history of prior criminal activity "out of turn," the error was not prejudicial under the circumstances. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Where murder defendant's incriminating statements were products of police-initiated interrogation without the presence of counsel, the trial court erroneously denied defendant's motion to suppress those statements, as the evidence of her guilt, other than her own confession, was less than overwhelming and, therefore, admission of her incriminating statements was not harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Robey, 91 N.C. App. 198, 371 S.E.2d 711, cert. denied, 323 N.C. 479, 373 S.E.2d 874 (1988).

Erroneous Exclusion of Evidence of Defendant's Understanding of Miranda. — The exclusion of evidence concerning defendant's understanding of the Miranda warnings was error. As a matter of law that there was a reasonable possibility that, had the error not been committed, a different result would have been reached at the trial. State v. Sanchez, 328 N.C. 247, 400 S.E.2d 421 (1991).

Pretrial Identification Erroneously Admitted. — The defendant was entitled to a new trial where the trial court's denial of defendant's motion to suppress the robbery victim's pretrial identification was not demonstrably harmless error; because "there [wa]s a substantial likelihood" that the victim misidentified the defendant, the admission of the pretrial identification violated his right to due process under the Constitution of the United States State v. Pinchback, 140 N.C. App. 512, 537 S.E.2d 222 (2000).

Error Admitting Pretrial Statement. — State failed to meet burden of demonstrating that error in admitting defendant's pretrial statement was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt where the statement at issue contained admissions to elements of all three charged offenses. State v. Morris, 332 N.C. 600, 422 S.E.2d 578 (1992).

New trial ordered where inculpatory statements were admitted, but defendant made the statements to the detectives after invoking his right to counsel. State v. Jackson, 348 N.C. 52, 497 S.E.2d 409 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 943, 119 S. Ct. 365, 142 L. Ed. 2d 301 (1998), overruled in part on other grounds, State v. Buchanan, — N.C. —, 543 S.E.2d 823 (2001).

It was reversible error for trial court to allow extrinsic evidence of prior inconsistent statements to impeach defense witness' testimony when that testimony concerned matters collateral to the issues in the case (what he did or did not tell his parole officer), and had that evidence not been erroneously admitted there was a reasonable possibility of a different result. See State v. Williams, 322 N.C. 452, 368 S.E.2d 624 (1988).

Improper Admission of Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus Test. — Failure to lay a proper foundation for the admission of a horizontal gaze nystagmus test was reversible error where the defendant met his burden of showing a reasonable possibility that a different outcome would have been reached at trial had the test results not been erroneously admitted. State v. Helms, 348 N.C. 578, 504 S.E.2d 293 (1998).

Evidence Erroneously Admitted as Substantive Evidence. — Experts statement, which intimated the cause of the alleged victim's post-traumatic stress syndrome was the sexual abuse inflicted by defendant, was erroneously admitted as substantive evidence to prove victim suffered a sexual assault by anal penetration and that defendant committed the offense. State v. Hensley, 120 N.C. App. 313, 462 S.E.2d 550 (1995).

The state could not show that the improper introduction of letter that contained the only evidence of defendant's motive to kill the victim was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Swindler, 339 N.C. 469, 450 S.E.2d 907 (1994), overruled in part, State v. Jackson, 348 N.C. 644, 503 S.E.2d 101 (1998).

Denial of a motion for a mistrial based on alleged misconduct affecting the jury is equivalent to a finding by the trial judge that prejudicial misconduct has not been shown. State v. Jones, 50 N.C. App. 263, 273 S.E.2d 327, cert. denied, 302 N.C. 400, 279 S.E.2d 354 (1981).

The erroneous admission of hearsay, like the erroneous admission of other evidence, is not always so prejudicial as to require a new trial. State v. Ramey, 318 N.C. 457, 349 S.E.2d 566 (1986).

Even if it were inadmissible as hearsay, the testimony was harmless since there was no reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached at trial had this statement not been admitted. State v. Locklear, 349 N.C. 118, 505 S.E.2d 277 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1075, 119 S. Ct. 1475, 143 L. Ed. 2d 559 (1999).

A trial judge's rulings with respect to the scope of cross-examination will not be disturbed unless the defendant can show that the verdict was improperly influenced thereby. This rule is consistent with the requirement of subsection (a) that a defendant has the burden of showing prejudice. State v. Teeter, 85 N.C. App. 624, 355 S.E.2d 804, writ denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 66, appeal dismissed and cert. denied, 320 N.C. 175, 358 S.E.2d 67 (1987).

Erroneous Jury Instructions as to Mitigating Circumstances. — Where the trial court instructed the jury to answer each mitigating circumstance "no" if the jury did not unanimously find the circumstance by a preponderance of the evidence the instruction constituted error as a juror could have found the capacity of the defendant to appreciate the criminality of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law was impaired because he was under the influence of drugs where defendant consumed two beers and smoked five marijuana cigarettes six-and-one-half hours before the murder. State v. Quesinberry, 328 N.C. 288, 401 S.E.2d 632 (1991).

Where the trial court submitted eight possible mitigating circumstances and the jury, operating under a unanimity instruction, found only one, and there was evidence to support at least some of the circumstances not found, and the State did not deny that the unanimity requirement might have affected at least one juror's vote on at least some of the seven circumstances not found and thus affected the jury's sentencing recommendation, the Supreme Court could not conclude that the McKoy error was harmless, and would order a new sentencing proceeding. State v. Joyner, 329 N.C. 211, 404 S.E.2d 653 (1991).

McKoy error as to issue of whether murder was committed while the defendant was under the influence of a mental or emotional disturbance was not harmless, and because of it, defendant was entitled to be given a new capital sentencing hearing. State v. Greene, 329 N.C. 771, 408 S.E.2d 185 (1991), appeal dismissed, 347 N.C. 580, 502 S.E.2d 605 (1998).

Erroneous Instruction on Lesser Offense. — Where there is no reasonable possibility that a verdict more favorable to defendant would have occurred absent an erroneous instruction on a lesser offense not supported by the evidence, the error occasioned by such instruction is harmless. Conversely, where there does exist a reasonable possibility that defendant would have been acquitted had not the lesser offense been erroneously submitted, the error is prejudicial and defendant is entitled to appellate relief. State v. Ray, 299 N.C. 151, 261 S.E.2d 789 (1980).

In a prosecution for rape where defendant's sole defense was that he did not commit the act upon which the greater and lesser offenses were based, and where there was no contention that there was anything in the charge to the jury which clouded that defense, the jury's verdict finding defendant guilty of second-degree rape implicitly, but clearly, rejected his defense that he did not commit the act upon which the charges were based; therefore, the submission of the lesser-included offense was not prejudicial to defendant but to the contrary was in his favor. State v. Summitt, 301 N.C. 591, 273 S.E.2d 425, cert. denied, 451 U.S. 970, 101 S. Ct. 2048, 68 L. Ed. 2d 349 (1981).

Erroneous Instruction on Willfulness. — Where, in a prosecution of a Nursing Director under § 131E-189, for failing to perform acts required by the North Carolina Medical Care Commission, under the instructions given on the element of willfulness, a jury could have concluded that the defendant was guilty if they determined the defendant failed to act, but with a proper instruction the jury would have understood that the defendant's decisions, even if intentional, were not necessarily a violation of the law, the error required a new trial. State v. Whittle, 118 N.C. App. 130, 454 S.E.2d 688 (1995).

Erroneous Instructions. — Defendants were entitled to a new trial regarding kidnapping charge where instructions on second-degree kidnapping and acting in concert were unclear. State v. Brice, 126 N.C. App. 788, 486 S.E.2d 719 (1997).

The applicable standard to determine prejudice where trial court has failed to submit a statutory mitigating circumstance supported by the evidence is whether the error is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt under subsection (b). State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Failure to Admit Exhibit Which Would Cast Doubt on State's Circumstantial Evidence. — The trial court's failure to admit the exhibit in a murder trial was error, the remaining question was whether its action was sufficiently prejudicial to warrant a new trial. Because the evidence against this defendant was entirely circumstantial and because the excluded evidence was relevant to, and cast doubt upon, such a fundamental element of the state's theory of the case it was sufficiently prejudicial to warrant a new trial. State v. McElrath, 322 N.C. 1, 366 S.E.2d 442 (1988).

Failure to Give Promised Jury Instruction Concerning Defendant's Failure to Testify in His Capital Murder Trial. — In a capital murder case, the trial judge committed error in failing to give a requested and subsequently promised jury instruction concerning defendant's decision not to testify during the guilt-innocence phase of the trial, and because of the historical importance of the right affected and the trial tactics employed by defendant's attorney, the trial judge's error was prejudicial to defendant's cause. State v. Ross, 322 N.C. 26, 367 S.E.2d 889 (1988).

Prejudicial Error in Instructions on Intoxication. — Where although there was little question that defendant committed a homicide, the case was relatively close on the degree of his culpability, due to both substantial evidence of defendant's intoxication at the time he committed the crime and the manner of the fatal assault and defendant's actions immediately before and after it, and the central issue for the jury in light of the evidence adduced was whether defendant should be found guilty of first or second degree murder, since this issue hinged largely on how the jury would consider the evidence of defendant's intoxication, the court was satisfied that had an error in the instructions on intoxication not been made, there was a reasonable possibility that a different result would have obtained at trial and, therefore, defendant would be awarded a new trial. State v. Mash, 323 N.C. 339, 372 S.E.2d 532 (1988).

Failure to appoint additional counsel for the defendant in a timely manner violated the mandate of this section and was prejudicial error per se. State v. Hucks, 323 N.C. 574, 374 S.E.2d 240 (1988).

Exclusion of Evidence Relevant to Defense. — In prosecution of defendant for committing sexual offenses upon two of her young stepsons, trial court committed reversible error in excluding evidence that defendant, her husband and the oldest stepson consulted a lawyer for the purpose of bringing an action for custody of the boys against their natural mother shortly before mother accused defendant of sexual offenses against them, as this evidence was relevant in tending to establish why mother might have suborned her sons' testimony. State v. Helms, 322 N.C. 315, 367 S.E.2d 644 (1988).

The trial court erroneously sustained the State's objection to the question about whether defendant felt that his life was threatened because that evidence was highly relevant to the crucial question of defendant's state of mind at the time of the shooting, his knowledge and belief of danger, and his knowledge and belief of the necessity for action in relation to his plea of self-defense, and the error was prejudicial since the excluded testimony went to the heart of defendant's self-defense claim. State v. Webster, 324 N.C. 430, 378 S.E.2d 748 (1989).

The defendant was entitled to a new trial because a different result might have been reached had the trial court not excluded relevant and admissible evidence which tended to exonerate the defendant of the murder of an elderly victim and which further showed another person as the perpetrator beyond conjecture or mere implication. State v. Israel, 353 N.C. 211, 539 S.E.2d 633 (2000).

The failure to grant defendant access to exculpatory evidence contained in the county's social service records violated his constitutional rights, was prejudicial and entitled him to a new trial. State v. McGill, 141 N.C. App. 98, 539 S.E.2d 351 (2000).

Error in excluding lay testimony on defendant's capacity to proceed required that verdict and judgment be vacated and further proceedings ordered; there was reasonable possibility trial court might have reached different conclusion in determining defendant's capacity to proceed where the only evidence offered suggesting defendant was competent to proceed to trial was two reports written by doctor some three and five months before hearing and the evidence of defendant's condition during the three to five months before trial was improperly excluded testimony of lay witnesses. State v. Silvers, 323 N.C. 646, 374 S.E.2d 858 (1989).

Offer of Proof as to Expert Testimony. — Any error resulting from the trial court's ruling, without allowing an extended offer of proof, that defendant's witness could not testify as to proper narcotics procedures so as to impeach the undercover narcotics officer, whose "buy" resulted in defendant's arrest, was harmless pursuant to this section where the defense counsel had several opportunities to describe the content of the proposed testimony. State v. Mackey, 352 N.C. 650, 535 S.E.2d 555 (2000).

Failure to Allow Relevant Evidence. — Because (1) testimony tending to show that defendant did not have the capacity to premeditate or deliberate was relevant in determining the presence or absence of an element of the offense of murder with which he was charged, (2) § 8C-1, Rule 704 allows opinion testimony even though it relates to an ultimate issue, and (3) the testimony was not inadmissible under any other rule of evidence, the trial court committed prejudicial error in not allowing the testimony. State v. Shank, 322 N.C. 243, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988).

Where defendant sought to reveal that two years ago witness had deceived a person he was investigating in an effort to obtain a confession for that crime, the evidence was probative of the witness's character for untruthfulness, was not too remote and was unfairly prejudicial; thus, the defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Baldwin, 125 N.C. App. 530, 482 S.E.2d 1 (1997), cert. granted, 345 N.C. 756, 485 S.E.2d 299 (1997), discretionary review improvidently allowed, 347 N.C. 348, 492 S.E.2d 354 (1997).

Prejudice from Excluded Evidence Held Cured. — Even if evidence that defendant requested a polygraph exam was erroneously excluded on cross-examination of the detective, any prejudice was cured by defendant's subsequent testimony that such a request was made. State v. Cabe, 136 N.C. App. 510, 524 S.E.2d 828 (2000), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 475, 543 S.E.2d 496 (2000).

Error Held Prejudicial. — Based on the presentation of evidence, the state's arguments, and the jury instruction, the jury almost certainly considered, improperly, defendant's entire criminal history in determining whether the statutory mitigating circumstance of no significant history of prior criminal activity existed. This error entitled defendant to a new sentencing proceeding. State v. Coffey, 336 N.C.

412, 444 S.E.2d 431 (1994).

Where the prosecutor's closing argument included direct references to defendant's failure to testify, the trial court's failure to give a curative instruction was error requiring a new trial. State v. Baymon, 336 N.C. 748, 446 S.E.2d 1 (1994).

In child sexual abuse case where the medical evidence was in conflict, testimony by doctor that was offered to show that the victim was being truthful about allegations was prejudicial. For this reason defendant was entitled to a new trial. State v. Baymon, 336 N.C. 748, 446 S.E.2d 1 (1994).

In spite of the court's conclusion that the admission of the witness's testimony was error, the error was not so prejudicial as to warrant a new trial. State v. Robinson, 115 N.C. App. 358, 444 S.E.2d 475, cert. denied, 337 N.C. 697, 448 S.E.2d 538 (1994).

A confrontation clause violation was substantially and irreparably prejudicial where incriminating materials that had not been admitted into evidence were inadvertently published to the jury. State v. Hines, 131 N.C. App. 457, 508 S.E.2d 310 (1998).

Defendant was granted a new trial because there was a reasonable possibility that, had the improperly admitted evidence of defendant's prior conviction of common law robbery been excluded, a different result might have been reached in defendant's trial. State v. Willis, 136 N.C. App. 820, 526 S.E.2d 191 (2000).

Alleged Prior Bad Acts Erroneously Admitted. — Where defendant was accused of sexually abusing his 14-year-old adopted daughter, the trial court erred in admitting testimony of alleged prior bad acts committed by defendant; namely, defendant's alleged frequent nudity, his alleged frequent fondling of himself, and an adulterous affair in which he was allegedly involved, as under the circumstances of this case, the admission of such evidence was highly prejudicial and of questionable relevance. State v. Maxwell, 96 N.C. App. 19, 384 S.E.2d 553, cert. denied, 326 N.C. 53, 389 S.E.2d 83 (1990).

In case charging defendant with sexual abuse of young children, where defendant's credibility was critical to her defense, erroneous admission of evidence of her prior drug use was not harmless. State v. Wilson, 118 N.C. App. 616, 456 S.E.2d 870, cert. denied, 341 N.C. 424, 461 S.E.2d 768 (1995).

Erroneous Admission of Drug Evidence. — Evidence of substantial amounts of drugs belonging to others and seized at the trailer where the defendant lived was irrelevant, prejudicial and inadmissible to show his knowledge that the substance in a van he was driving was cocaine; the defendant was not charged with any offense in connection with the drugs seized at the trailer and the circumstantial evidence presented at trial—the fact that drugs belonging to other people were discovered at the trailer defendant shared with others—was too weak to support an inference of knowledge on his part. State v. Moctezuma, 141 N.C. App. 90, 539 S.E.2d 52 (2000).

Improper Evidence Reinforced by Jury Argument Held Prejudicial. — Questions of the district attorney and the argument to the jury as to the defendant's failure to tell the police of his defense were prejudicial errors; since there was not an eyewitness to the shooting other than the defendant, and since his defense depended on the jury's acceptance of his version of the event, the State had not demonstrated beyond a reasonable doubt that it was harmless to attack the credibility of this version by improper evidence, which improper evidence was reinforced by jury argument. State v. Hoyle, 325 N.C. 232, 382 S.E.2d 752 (1989).

Defendant's Absence Held Not Prejudicial. — Nothing in the record showed that defendant was prejudiced by his absence during part of the presentation of the prosecution's evidence in defendant's capital case where all proceedings took place in open court, where everything that took place was reflected in the record, and where the record showed that defense counsel were in court and participated throughout defendant's absence to protect his interests, and that the trial judge told counsel they could confer with the defendant as to the possibility of his return at any time, and where the trial judge undertook to perform his duty to assure defendant's presence. State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 777 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

Exclusion of Expert Testimony Held Error. — Trial court's error in excluding expert testimony concerning the defendant's mental capacity was prejudicial. State v. Daniel, 333 N.C. 756, 429 S.E.2d 724 (1993).

Prejudicial Error Not Shown. — Where doctor was allowed to testify about defendant's mental state at the time of the murders and gave his opinion that defendant did not form the specific intent to kill, but was not allowed to give his opinion that the defendant "snapped", defendant received a fair trial, free of prejudicial error. State v. Burgess, 345 N.C. 372, 480 S.E.2d 638 (1997).

The trial court erred, but not to reversal, in allowing the State during the murder trial to question the defendant during cross-examination in an effort to impeach his truthfulness regarding his interest in another woman, where the inquiry was brief and was terminated by a sustained objection and an instruction to disregard the question and the defendant had already testified that his wife had filed for divorce. The State should have been limited to asking defendant to acknowledge the existence of the photographs, and then asking him whether he had told his wife about them. State v. Kimble, 140 N.C. App. 153, 535 S.E.2d 882 (2000).

The trial court did not commit prejudicial error in allowing the defendant-insurer and defendant-driver to amend their answers on the first day of trial after the plaintiff reached a settlement with another defendant-driver. Warren v. GMC, 142 N.C. App. 316, 542 S.E.2d 317 (2001).

III. HARMLESS ERROR.

The proper standard for reversal in reviewing violations of defendant's state constitutional right to be present at his capital trial is the "harmless beyond a reasonable doubt" standard, and not the standard apparently prescribed in subsection (a) of this section. State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

Test of harmless error must be applied on a case-by-case basis. State v. Atkins, 58 N.C. App. 146, 292 S.E.2d 744, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 306 N.C. 744, 295 S.E.2d 480 (1982).

No Reasonable Possibility of Affecting Verdict. — The trial court's error during closing argument was harmless as it had no reasonable possibility of affecting the verdict. State v. Cabe, 131 N.C. App. 310, 506 S.E.2d 749 (1998).

An incorrect instruction on attempted second-degree murder was not prejudicial to the defendant where no such crime exists and the jury found defendant guilty of attempted first-degree murder; they would not have found him totally innocent had the instructions been correct. State v. Choppy, 141 N.C. App. 32, 539 S.E.2d 44 (2000).

The court's allowance of prosecutor's closing remark that defendant had "killed before and ... he's killed again" was not reversible error in light of the overwhelming evidence of his guilt. State v. McEachin, 142 N.C. App. 60, 541 S.E.2d 792 (2001), cert. dismissed, 353 N.C. 392, 548 S.E.2d 151 (2001), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 353 N.C. 392, 548 S.E.2d 152 (2001).

Insubstantial technical error which could not have affected the result of the trial will not be held prejudicial on appeal. State v. Easterling, 300 N.C. 594, 268 S.E.2d 800 (1980).

Mere technical error is not sufficient to require the granting of a new trial. The error must be so prejudicial as to affect the result. State v. Keyes, 56 N.C. App. 75, 286 S.E.2d 861 (1982).

Trial court's failure to order a transcript of sentencing hearing did not constitute prejudicial error. In the absence of an abuse of discretion, a judgment will not be disturbed because of either the sentencing procedure or procedural conduct. State v. Chandler, 100 N.C. App. 706, 398 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

Admission of irrelevant evidence is ordinarily considered harmless error and the burden is upon appellant to show that he was prejudiced. State v. Spicer, 50 N.C. App. 214, 273 S.E.2d 521, appeal dismissed, 302 N.C. 401, 279 S.E.2d 356 (1981).

The admission of irrelevant evidence is generally considered harmless error. The defendant has the burden of showing that he was prejudiced by the admission of the evidence. In order to show prejudice, the defendant must meet the statutory requirements of subsection (a) of this section. State v. Alston, 307 N.C. 321, 298 S.E.2d 631 (1983).

Although evidence was not relevant to any issue in the case and had little probative value, there was no tendency to prejudice the defendant. State v. Beamer, 339 N.C. 477, 451 S.E.2d 190 (1994).

Admission of irrelevant evidence will be treated as harmless unless the defendant shows that he was so prejudiced by the erroneous admission that a different result would have ensued if the evidence had been excluded. State v. Harper, 96 N.C. App. 36, 384 S.E.2d 297 (1989).

The admission of the gun was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt since defendant's defense to the charge of murder was self-defense, not that he was not the killer. State v. Carter, 335 N.C. 422, 440 S.E.2d 268 (1994).

The admission of the victim's Bibles into evidence, although not relevant, did not constitute error prejudicial to defendant. State v. Rose, 335 N.C. 301, 439 S.E.2d 518, cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1246, 114 S. Ct. 2770, 129 L. Ed. 2d 883 (1994), overruled in part on other grounds, State v. Buchanan, — N.C. — 543 S.E.2d 823 (2001).

Incompetent evidence is harmless unless it is made to appear that the defendant was prejudiced thereby and that a different result would have likely occurred if the evidence had been excluded. State v. Jeffers, 48 N.C. App. 663, 269 S.E.2d 731 (1980), appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 724, 276 S.E.2d 285 (1981).

Erroneous admission of hearsay, like erroneous admission of other evidence, is not always so prejudicial as to require a new trial. Unless such error infringes upon a criminal defendant's constitutional rights, the defendant has the burden of showing that he was prejudiced by the error and that there was a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached at trial if the error had not been committed. State v. Sills, 311 N.C. 370, 317 S.E.2d 379 (1984).

The trial court's admission of a police officer's statement recounting that the defendant's wife had told him that the defendant had pulled out a patch of her hair did not constitute prejudicial error, in light of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, although the hearsay statement was collateral to the main issues in the prosecution, and should not have been admitted. State v. Crockett, 138 N.C. App. 109, 530 S.E.2d 359 (2000).

The admission of a dead witness's testimony as related through another witness was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt where the statement was nearly identical to a third witness's prior testimony. State v. Parker, — N.C. App. —, — S.E.2d —, 2000 N.C. App. LEXIS 1107 (Oct. 3, 2000).

Merely asking an improper question to which an objection is sustained does not automatically result in prejudice to a defendant; when the trial court sustains a defendant's objections to improper questions and instructs the jury to disregard such questions, any possible prejudice to the defendant is cured. State v. Knight, 340 N.C. 531, 459 S.E.2d 481 (1995).

Prosecutor's Question as to Details of Prior Conviction. — Where defendant testified on direct examination that he had been convicted of assault, the prosecutor's question as to whether the assault involved a shooting was basically no more than an inquiry into whether the conviction was, in reality, one for a more serious offense, i.e., assault with a deadly weapon, and even if the inquiry was error, the error was not of such magnitude as to require a new trial under the test of prejudicial error contained in subsection (a). State v. Rathbone, 78 N.C. App. 58, 336 S.E.2d 702 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 200, 341 S.E.2d 582 (1986).

Erroneous Exclusion of Evidence. — No prejudice arises from the erroneous exclusion of evidence when the same or substantially the same testimony is subsequently admitted into evidence. State v. Hageman, 307 N.C. 1, 296 S.E.2d 433 (1982).

Trial court's ruling excluding expert's opinion as to defendant's ability to adjust to prison life was error; however, the error was harmless due to testimony on same subject by other expert. State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Evidence Was Not Harmless Beyond Reasonable Doubt. — Jury's exposure to information on photograph which violated defendant's constitutional right of confrontation was not harmless beyond a reasonable doubt; unauthenticated evidence would have been inadmissible at trial as hearsay and incompetent character evidence and the evidence went to the heart of defendant's alibi defense. State v. Lyles, 94 N.C. App. 240, 380 S.E.2d 390 (1989).

Violation of Rights Held Harmless Error. — Although a defendant's exercise of his constitutionally protected rights to remain silent and to request counsel during interrogation may not be used against him at trial, such a constitutional error will not warrant a new trial where it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. Thus, where any violation of the defendant's rights was de minimis and the evidence against defendant was overwhelming, the trial court's error, if any, was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Elmore, 337 N.C. 789, 448 S.E.2d 501 (1994).

Admission of Improper Testimony Held Harmless Error. — In a prosecution for breaking and entering, attempted rape and larceny, testimony by the victim that she had a breast removed because of cancer and that since being struck by defendant she had suffered with her back and had been diagnosed as having bone cancer was irrelevant, but the admission of such testimony was not so prejudicial that a different result would have ensued had such testimony not been admitted. State v. Rick, 54 N.C. App. 104, 282 S.E.2d 497 (1981).

Where the evidence, including the implication of defendant's own admission, pointed overwhelmingly to his culpability in murder, any error in admitting that portion of defendant's statement in which he asserted his constitutional right to remain silent did not contribute to his conviction and was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Hooper, 318 N.C. 680, 351 S.E.2d 286 (1987).

Even if the trial court erred in excluding a statement made by murder victim two weeks before his death, to the effect that he wanted to buy a gun to kill the defendant, was erroneous, defendant failed to carry his burden of showing that he was prejudiced thereby, where extensive testimony of similar import was admitted. State v. Torres, 322 N.C. 440, 368 S.E.2d 609 (1988).

Although it was error to allow prosecutor to cross-examine defendant in a murder case about a fight he was involved in at the hospital where his competency evaluation took place, the error was held harmless where the testimony portrayed defendant as the victim rather than the aggressor and tended to cast him in a favorable light, and there was no reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached at trial absent the error. State v. Harris, 323 N.C. 112, 371 S.E.2d 689 (1988).

Where improperly admitted evidence merely corroborated testimony from other witnesses, there was no reasonable possibility that the jury would have reached a different result absent the testimony. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Where defendant contended the trial court erroneously admitted the witness's testimony that she was "afraid" of defendant at the time of trial and where defendant did not object at trial nor assign error on appeal to the witness's immediately preceding testimony that defendant had threatened to kill her and sell her child if she reported the crime, there was not a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached if the trial court had excluded the witness's statement that she was afraid of defendant at the time of trial. State v. Ward, 93 N.C. App. 682, 379 S.E.2d 251, cert. denied, 325 N.C. 276, 384 S.E.2d 528 (1989).

Even if admitting evidence of murder defendant's involvement with martial arts activities and his interest in, and possession of weapons was error, it was harmless error in light of other evidence presented at trial; victim was shot three times by a .22 rifle which had to be reloaded each time before the next shot could be fired and defendant was heard to state that he wanted to "finish off" the victim after the victim had already been shot. State v. McElroy, 326 N.C. 752, 392 S.E.2d 67 (1990).

Testimony regarding defendant's failure to spend time with his sons did not tend to show that the victim was afraid of defendant or that she had no intention of reconciling with him. Rather, the evidence tended to show defendant's bad character and, as such, should not have been admitted. In light of all the evidence that was properly introduced, however, this tangential bit of evidence could not have affected the outcome of the trial. Therefore, it was not prejudicial error. State v. Jolly, 332 N.C. 351, 420 S.E.2d 661 (1992).

By asserting the testimonial privilege in response to selected questions on cross-examination, witness attempted to disclose part of the facts and withhold the rest. The trial court should have either required witness to answer the questions, or stricken all or part of his direct testimony after allowing him to assert the testimonial privilege; the failure of the trial court to strike all or part of his direct testimony was harmless error. State v. Ray, 336 N.C. 463, 444 S.E.2d 918 (1994).

Erroneous admission of hearsay evidence does not always require a new trial; the burden will be on the state to demonstrate, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the error was harmless. State v. Sisk, 123 N.C. App. 361, 473 S.E.2d 348 (1996), aff'd in part and discretionary review improvidently allowed in part, 345 N.C. 749, 483 S.E.2d 440 (1997).

Error in excluding testimony was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Fullwood, 343 N.C. 725, 472 S.E.2d 883 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1122, 117 S. Ct. 1260, 137 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1997).

In view of the weight of the substantive evidence against the defendant, the admission of improper testimony was harmless. State v. Waddell, 130 N.C. App. 488, 504 S.E.2d 84 (1998), aff'd in part and modified in part, 351 N.C. 413, 527 S.E.2d 644 (2000).

Although it was error for the trial court to permit a licensed clinical psychologist to testify that the alleged assault by defendant was the "triggering event" of the victim's post-traumatic stress disorder since this testimony directly implicated defendant as the person who sexually assaulted her, the error was not prejudicial. State v. Chavis, 141 N.C. App. 177, 540 S.E.2d 404 (2000).

Introduction of evidence concerning defendant's plea bargaining and habitual offender status was not plain error where the defendant himself admitted to the actions underlying the crimes for which he was convicted, then introduced evidence of his plea discussions to support his contention that he did not consider himself guilty of the crimes with which he was charged, presumably an effort to indicate his lack of criminal intent and where the court instructed the jury to disregard the habitual offender evidence. State v. Thompson, 141 N.C. App. 698, 543 S.E.2d 160 (2001), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 396, 548 S.E.2d 157 (2001).

Failure to Admit Testimony Held Harmless Error. — Failure to admit a statement unlikely to have affected the trial's outcome is harmless error. State v. Jordan, 130 N.C. App. 236, 502 S.E.2d 679 (1998).

Instruction Not to Consider Evidence Held Sufficient. — In a prosecution of defendant for armed robbery and murder, trial court did not commit prejudicial error in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial after striking the testimony of several witnesses concerning the absence of fingerprints of defendant at the murder scene and the absence of gunpowder on the hands of bystanders after the robbery-murder. Since the trial court, after the motions to strike were allowed, instructed the jury not to consider the stricken evidence and specifically referred to the evidence and the witness who provided it, there was no way in which defendant would have been prejudiced by the evidence had it not been withdrawn from the jury's consideration, and defendant's motion for mistrial was a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge. No abuse of that discretion appeared. State v. Smith, 301 N.C. 695, 272 S.E.2d 852 (1981).

Inversion of Order of Proof Not Prejudicial. — In a prosecution for first-degree murder, the trial court did not err in requiring defendant to present his evidence before the State put on its evidence during a hearing on defendant's motion to suppress, and there was no merit to defendant's contention that the inversion of the order of proof resulted in a shift of the burden of proof, since the order of proof is merely a matter of practice without legal effect; there was nothing in the trial court's order denying defendant's motion to suppress to indicate that the trial judge believed otherwise; and defendant was not prejudiced by the order of proof because it resulted in his having to call one of the State's principal witnesses as his own. State v. Temple, 302 N.C. 1, 273 S.E.2d 273 (1981).

Failure to Pass Full Panel Not Prejudicial. — Although the jury selection procedure violated the express requirement of § 15A-1214(d) that the state pass a full panel of twelve jurors, the defendant failed to show prejudice where he was not forced to accept an undesirable juror—he did not exhaust his peremptory challenges nor request removal of the juror for cause—and, thus, could not establish any prejudice as a result of the jury selection procedure under this section. State v. Lawrence, 352 N.C. 1, 530 S.E.2d 807 (2000).

Unanimity Requirement for Mitigating Factors at Sentencing Held Not Harmless Error. — Where, in a murder prosecution the jury failed to find unanimously several proposed mitigating circumstances supported by substantial evidence, and where some, but not all, jurors may have found credible the evidence in support of some or all of these circumstances and that the nonstatutory circumstances had mitigating value, had each juror been allowed to consider such of these circumstances as each found to exist, and the evidence supporting them, in the final weighing process, it cannot be said beyond a reasonable doubt that there would not have been a different result in the sentence. State v. McKoy, 327 N.C. 31, 394 S.E.2d 426 (1990).

Trial court's instructions, in a capitol sentencing proceeding, that jury unanimity was required as to any mitigating circumstances was not harmless error where evidence was substantial enough that jury might reasonably have found each of six possible mitigating circumstances; jury was not required to indicate whether it found each individual mitigating circumstances to exist, but only to indicate on the form provided that "yes," it had found "one or more" of the mitigating circumstances to exist. State v. McNeil, 327 N.C. 388, 395 S.E.2d 106 (1990), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 942, 111 S. Ct. 1043, 113 L. Ed. 2d 459 (1991); State v. Upchurch, 332 N.C. 439, 421 S.E.2d 577 (1992).

Failure to Submit Mitigating Circumstance in Capital Case. — A new sentencing hearing under § 15A-2000 will not be ordered for the erroneous failure to submit a mitigating circumstance if that error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Hardy, 293 N.C. 105, 235 S.E.2d 828 (1977); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

The trial court's refusal to submit to the jury the defendant's self-serving statement that "the defendant did not set out to kill [the victim] and attempted to leave the house several times before the lethal acts occurred" was harmless where it submitted the catchall mitigating circumstance and where the underlying requested circumstance was fully argued to the jury by defense counsel during closing argument. State v. Blakeney, 352 N.C. 287, 531 S.E.2d 799 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1117, 121 S. Ct. 868, 148 L. Ed. 2d 780 (2001).

Method of Jury Selection Not Prejudicial. — Voir dire served the dual purpose of ascertaining whether grounds existed for challenging for cause and of enabling counsel for the state and for the defendant to exercise intelligently their peremptory challenges, and any error in restricting defendant's questioning of prospective jurors was harmless error. State v. Simpson, 341 N.C. 316, 462 S.E.2d 191 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1161, 116 S. Ct. 1048, 134 L. Ed. 2d 194 (1996).

Method of Jury Selection Not Prejudicial Where Defendant Failed to Object or Use His Challenges. — Though the trial court deviated from the statutorily prescribed method of jury selection under Article 72 of this Chapter, defendant failed to show that he was prejudiced because he had full opportunity to examine and challenge prospective jurors and because, when the jury was finally constituted, defendant had one peremptory challenge remaining and had exercised no challenges for cause so that the jurors selected obviously met with his approval. State v. Harper, 50 N.C. App. 198, 272 S.E.2d 600 (1980).

A mere slip of the tongue by the judge while reading his instructions to the jury which is not called to the attention of the court at the time it is made will not constitute prejudicial error when it is apparent from a contextual reading of the charge that the jury could not have been misled thereby. State v. Silhan, 302 N.C. 223, 275 S.E.2d 450 (1981), overruled in part by State v. Sanderson, 346 N.C. 669, 488 S.E.2d 133, State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997).

Trial court's failure to conduct a voir dire in order to determine the admissibility of in-court identification testimony allegedly tainted by a suggestive pretrial photographic line-up was error; however, assuming, arguendo, that the photographic line-up was impermissibly suggestive, the presence of clear and convincing evidence of the independent origin of the identification, rendered the trial court's failure to conduct a voir dire harmless. State v. Butler, 331 N.C. 227, 415 S.E.2d 719 (1992).

Erroneously Admitted In-Court Identification of Defendant Held Harmless. — In a rape case where victim's in-court identification of defendant was challenged by defendant the court recognized that only in the most unusual situations would an erroneously admitted in-court identification of defendant by victim be harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. But the facts here where the victim was never able to positively identify defendant coupled with school security officer's unequivocal identification left any improperly suggestive identification procedures harmless. State v. Parker, 322 N.C. 559, 369 S.E.2d 596 (1988).

Reading Portion of Fifth Amendment Held Harmless. — The trial court did not commit reversible error in prohibiting the reading to the jury of that portion of the Fifth Amendment pertinent to the defendant's election not to testify, where in his general instructions to the jury, the judge gave an accurate and complete statement of the law applicable to defendant's election not to testify. State v. Banks, 322 N.C. 753, 370 S.E.2d 398 (1988).

Where the trial court's failure to instruct on alibi did not reduce the State's burden of proof, beyond a reasonable doubt, of every element of the crimes charged, and the trial court's instructions did not violate the defendant's due process rights, the harmless error standard of subsection (a) of this section, rather than the provisions of subsection (b), applied. State v. Hood, 332 N.C. 611, 422 S.E.2d 679 (1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 1055, 113 S. Ct. 1955, 123 L. Ed. 2d 659 (1993).

No Error in Deputy's Testimony That Defendant Stated His Birthdate During Booking. — In prosecution for first-degree sexual offense and taking indecent liberties with children, the defendant was not prejudiced by the admission of the deputy's testimony that the defendant stated his birthdate during the booking procedure, where there was ample evidence aside from defendant's statement from which the jury could have found that defendant was at least 16 years of age at the time of the crimes; therefore, even assuming that the statement was discoverable, that the state should have produced it pursuant to defendant's discovery request and that the trial court should have imposed sanctions pursuant to § 15A-910, the error was harmless. State v. Banks, 322 N.C. 753, 370 S.E.2d 398 (1988).

No Error Where Defendant Failed to Show Prejudice. — Where the jury was selected from citizens of another county, the trial court quite frequently admonished the jury against discussing the case or gaining information about it from outside sources, and defendant presented no evidence that the jury did anything other than follow the trial court's orders, he failed to show prejudice in the trial court's decision not to sequester jurors. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

In prosecution for rape, first-degree kidnapping, sexual offense, and common law robbery, the admission of the officer's testimony that the defendant had a rifle in his car when he was arrested, if error, was not prejudicial, where there was no intimation by the officer that the defendant attempted to use the rifle when he was arrested, that was used in the commission of any crime or that possession of the rifle was otherwise unlawful. State v. Herring, 322 N.C. 733, 370 S.E.2d 363 (1988).

Where jury convicted defendant of murder in the first degree based on malice, premeditation and deliberation, and based on the felony murder rule, defendant's contention that the trial court's instructions to the jury on acting in concert and aiding and abetting allowed him to be convicted on theories unsupported by the evidence was rejected. Without the instructions, the jury would nevertheless have convicted defendant of first degree murder under either theory because the evidence, when viewed as a whole, was sufficient to permit the jury to infer that defendant and his brother acted together with a common purpose to commit, at least, the robbery and that the defendant aided and abetted his brother in the commission of the crime of murder in the first degree based on the felony murder rule. State v. Lane, 328 N.C. 598, 403 S.E.2d 267, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 915, 112 S. Ct. 319, 116 L. Ed. 2d 261 (1991).

Even if the implication that defendant knowingly purchased a stolen handgun was improper argument, there being no evidence to support it, the defendant was unable to sustain the burden of showing prejudice. State v. Terry, 337 N.C. 615, 447 S.E.2d 720 (1994).

Where there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, there was not a reasonable possibility that the jury would have reached a different result if witness had not testified, thus, any error in the admission of the testimony was not prejudicial. State v. Sneeden, 336 N.C. 482, 444 S.E.2d 218 (1994).

Where prosecutor asserted that defendant was lying, although the statements constituted error, defendant failed to object, and considering all the facts and circumstances revealed in the record which showed overwhelming evidence against defendant, defendant failed to show that the error was prejudicial. State v. Sexton, 336 N.C. 321, 444 S.E.2d 879, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1006, 115 S. Ct. 525, 130 L. Ed. 2d 429 (1994), 343 N.C. 516, 472 S.E.2d 23 (1996).

In light of the evidence that was properly admitted, the defendant did not meet his burden of showing that there was a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached if the trial court had allowed expert witness to state his opinion of the defendant's credibility. State v. Jones, 339 N.C. 114, 451 S.E.2d 826 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1169, 115 S. Ct. 2634, 132 L. Ed. 2d 873, reh'g denied, 515 U.S. 1183, 116 S. Ct. 32, 132 L. Ed. 2d 913 (1995).

Defendant failed to show prejudice. State v. Wagner, 343 N.C. 250, 470 S.E.2d 33 (1996).

Testimony of what defendant's brothers said should not have been admitted because the brothers' state of mind was not relevant and could not be used to show defendant's state of mind, but the defendant failed to demonstrate that a reasonable possibility existed that, had this evidence been excluded, a different result would have been reached at trial. State v. Burke, 343 N.C. 129, 469 S.E.2d 901 (1996).

Where there was substantial evidence of defendant's guilt and there was no reasonable possibility that a different verdict would have been reached, the improper admission of testimony was not prejudicial under section (a). State v. Foy, 130 N.C. App. 466, 503 S.E.2d 399 (1998).

No Error Where Defendant Failed to Show Prejudice — Where defendant was incorrectly sentenced to life imprisonment, and, within a few hours, re-sentenced to life without parole based on the court's corrected interpretation of § 14-17, his claim that his being misinformed of his ineligibility for parole prejudiced him by causing him to forgo presenting evidence of imperfect self-defense was without merit. State v. Lesane, 137 N.C. App. 234, 528 S.E.2d 37 (2000).

Giving of Limiting Instructions Did Not Constitute Expression of Opinion by Judge. — Where, in prosecution for conspiracy to commit burglary, second-degree burglary, robbery with a dangerous weapon, and first-degree murder, the defendant objected to co-conspirator's admissions, and the trial court gave a limiting instruction, the giving of limiting instructions did not constitute an impermissible expression of opinion by the trial court, where the defendant did not object to the instructions, nor does he contend on appeal that the instructions were incorrect, except for the contention that the instructions constituted an impermissible expression of opinion, and he did not establish a reasonable possibility that, absent the error, a different result would have been reached at trial. State v. Short, 322 N.C. 783, 370 S.E.2d 351 (1988).

Error in instructions with respect to actual or constructive possession did not entitle defendant to a new trial, because the central issue was whether defendant's use of pistol to threaten and endanger victim was close enough in time to the taking of property as to constitute one continuous transaction, and the trial court's instructions upon this point were clear and correct. State v. Jarrett, 137 N.C. App. 256, 527 S.E.2d 693 (2000).

Limiting Defendant's Argument. — The trial court's error in denying the defendant the right to advise the jury of the possible sentences he could receive if convicted, as allowed by this section, was harmless. State v. Peoples, 141 N.C. App. 115, 539 S.E.2d 25 (2000).

It was not prejudicial error for the prosecuting attorney to argue that the medical expert was paid for testifying when there was no evidence that the medical expert had been paid anything because it is well known that physicians are paid for their work, and the fact that the medical expert might have been paid need not imply that he would not testify truthfully; therefore, the defendant did not show there was a reasonable possibility there would have been a different result if the argument had not been made. State v. Rosier, 322 N.C. 826, 370 S.E.2d 359 (1988).

Erroneous Admission of Expert Testimony on Premeditation. — Where defendant's state of mind at the time of the killing was the central issue of the case, and without the challenged testimony of the State's expert, the only testimony going to the mens rea of first degree murder was lay opinion testimony that defendant knew right from wrong, and the contradictory testimony of three experts called by defendant regarding defendant's ability to plan or to form specific intent, the error in allowing State's expert testimony that defendant was capable of premeditating was compounded by the State's argument to the jury and was not harmless error. Accordingly, defendant was entitled to a new trial on the first degree murder charge. State v. Rose, 327 N.C. 599, 398 S.E.2d 314 (1990).

Admission of Crime Scene Sketches. — Although defendant failed to request a limiting instruction at the time sketches were introduced, the trial court nevertheless gave such an instruction in its charge to the jury. Any error in admitting the sketches into evidence was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Thompson, 332 N.C. 204, 420 S.E.2d 395 (1992).

Admission of Photographs Harmless Error. — The trial court's error in a first-degree murder case in allowing the jury to be shown certain photographs of the victim's body lying in a casket was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt in view of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. State v. Temple, 302 N.C. 1, 273 S.E.2d 273 (1981).

Photographs of the victim's wounds are not highly inflammatory and prejudicial where they depict only minor cuts and where without such photographs there is still sufficient evidence of each and every element of the crimes charged to support the jury's verdict. State v. Whilhite, 58 N.C. App. 654, 294 S.E.2d 396, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 307 N.C. 129, 297 S.E.2d 403 (1982), rev'd in part and aff'd in part, 308 N.C. 798, 303 S.E.2d 788 (1983).

No Error Where Photograph Admitted Did Not Lead Jury to Believe It to Be a Mug Shot. — The trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the officer to testify that during the course of her investigation she identified a photograph of the defendant, where it lent credence to her subsequent identification of him at trial, and a careful review of the record revealed no evidence that would have led the jury to believe that the photograph was a mug shot. State v. Herring, 322 N.C. 733, 370 S.E.2d 363 (1988).

Police Documents Identifying Defendant as Murder Suspect Nonprejudicial. — Trial judge did not err by allowing jurors to see documents from the Police Department, S.B.I. and F.B.I., which identified defendant as the suspect in murder. It seems obvious that any criminal defendant standing trial before a jury is, by definition, a suspect in the case. Thus, even assuming error, defendant could not demonstrate that he suffered prejudice. State v. Ligon, 332 N.C. 224, 420 S.E.2d 136 (1992).

Exclusion of Cumulative Evidence. — Court's refusal to permit witness to testify that, based upon his personal knowledge of the State's only eyewitness, he would not believe the State's witness under oath, where immediately before that evidence was offered, that witness testified without objection that in his opinion the State's witness was a liar and that he had told him he would take a bribe to change his testimony, was not prejudicial, as the refused evidence was cumulative. State v. Burge, 100 N.C. App. 671, 397 S.E.2d 760 (1990).

Admission of Identification with Hypnotically Refreshed Details. — Trial court's determination that witness' identification was based upon her observations the night of the murder and was related immediately to police well before hypnosis, and that it was "not tainted" by her subsequent hypnotic sessions, was uncontradicted by any evidence in the record. State v. Hall, 134 N.C. App. 417, 517 S.E.2d 907 (1999).

The jury had before it sufficient evidence to evaluate witness's credibility, including proof of bias, and no reasonable possibility existed that a different result would have been reached had testimony been allowed in response to other questions; hence, the error in excluding this testimony was harmless. State v. Bell, 338 N.C. 363, 450 S.E.2d 710 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1163, 115 S. Ct. 2619, 132 L. Ed. 2d 861 (1995).

Admission of Hearsay Testimony Held Harmless Error. — Failure of the trial court to determine specifically that murder victim's statement to her attorney was not covered by any explicit exception to the hearsay rule was error, but the error was harmless where the evidence of defendant's guilt was overwhelming. State v. Faucette, 326 N.C. 676, 392 S.E.2d 71 (1990).

The admission of testimony by the victim's mother and grandmother, over defendant's objection, that the victim had been placed "on lock-up" as a result of a back injury that prevented him from working did not prejudice the defendant, by indicating the parties' relative strengths, such that the outcome of his trial would have been different if the trial court had excluded the testimony at issue. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Trial court's exclusion of defendant's proposed cross-examination regarding co-defendant's outstanding warrants was reasonable in view of its repetitive and cumulative effect, was harmless error beyond a reasonable doubt, and was not a violation of the North Carolina Constitution. State v. McNeil, 350 N.C. 657, 518 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1024, 120 S. Ct. 1432, 146 L. Ed. 2d 321 (2000).

Even if a murder defendant's allegation that certain testimony allowed by the court constituted inadmissible hearsay was correct, the evidence was of so little probative value when compared to the overwhelming competent evidence of defendant's guilt, the testimony did not contribute evidence of defendant's guilt and thus, any error in admitting the testimony was harmless. State v. Warren, 327 N.C. 364, 395 S.E.2d 116 (1990).

In light of strong and unequivocal evidence of direct threats against a woman, made by the defendant while she was in his presence and he was armed with a firearm, there was no reasonable possibility that admitting the opinion testimony of a security guard, who testified that defendant "said something else to me that indicated to me that he was planning to shoot a woman," affected the result reached by the jury at trial. Therefore, any error in the admission of this testimony was harmless. State v. Harvell, 334 N.C. 356, 432 S.E.2d 125 (1993).

Defendant could not assign error to hearsay testimony which he elicited. State v. Mitchell, 342 N.C. 797, 467 S.E.2d 416 (1996).

Harmless Error Where Defendant's Testimony Contradicted Proffered Instruction. — The trial court's failure to instruct the jury on defendant's law-abidingness and not using drugs was not prejudicial to defendant where defendant's own testimony contradicted testimony of witness that defendant was law-abiding and where there was very strong evidence of defendant's guilt. State v. Moreno, 98 N.C. App. 642, 391 S.E.2d 860 (1990).

Admission of Written Statement Contradictory Testimony. — Where the defendant argued that a witness' written statement contradicted her trial testimony and was, therefore, inadmissible as corroborative evidence, assuming arguendo that the written statement contradicted her trial testimony and was not corroborative, its admission into evidence was harmless. State v. Farmer, 333 N.C. 172, 424 S.E.2d 120 (1993).

Defendant failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the prosecution's pretrial motion for consolidation, where the defenses of the defendants were not antagonistic, and this was not a case in which testimony was received in evidence against one of the defendants that would not have been admissible had their trials not been consolidated. State v. Short, 322 N.C. 783, 370 S.E.2d 351 (1988).

No Abuse of Discretion Where Burden of Proof Argument Subject to Different Interpretations. — Where the state objected to defendant's closing argument on the basis that it implied that the state bore the burden of disproving the insanity defense, but defense contended that its argument properly stated that the state bore the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt the premeditation and deliberation element of first degree murder, it was held that the argument was reasonably subject to either interpretation, and therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining the state's objection. See State v. McKoy, 323 N.C. 1, 372 S.E.2d 12 (1988), death sentence vacated and case remanded, McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Receipt of Lesser of Two Sentences. — Upon defendant's conviction of first degree murder, he could only be sentenced to death or life imprisonment and he received a life sentence, the less severe of the permissible options; therefore he could not have been prejudiced by the failure of the trial court to grant a motion for mistrial directed only to the sentencing phase. State v. Darden, 323 N.C. 356, 372 S.E.2d 539 (1988).

Denial of Defendant's Motion to Produce Handwriting Analyses. — Although it was arguably error to deny defendant's motion to produce the results of analyses of a state's witness' handwriting, nevertheless, there was no error where defendant made no showing that the trial court's ruling affected the preparation or presentation of his defense, to his prejudice. State v. Mandina, 91 N.C. App. 686, 373 S.E.2d 155 (1988).

Harmless Error Where Jury Not Tainted By Television Broadcast. — Any error which may have been committed by the court was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, where the court, in order to be certain that the jury was not tainted by television broadcast, examined each of the jurors and alternates in chambers with only a court reporter present. State v. Allen, 323 N.C. 208, 372 S.E.2d 855 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), rehearing denied, 507 U.S. 1046, 113 S. Ct. 1885, 123 L. Ed. 2d 503 (1993).

Prosecutor's Misstatement of Testimony. — Where prosecutor misstated a witness' testimony while examining defendant, the misstatement was not harmful because the defendant denied that the witness had testified as stated by the prosecutor and denied that the witness' testimony was truthful. State v. Warren, 327 N.C. 364, 395 S.E.2d 116 (1990).

Prosecutor's Question as to Whether Defendant Prepared His Testimony. — The trial court committed no prejudicial error in allowing prosecutor to cross-examine defendant regarding whether defendant and his family discussed and planned their testimony with attorneys prior to trial. State v. Trogden, 135 N.C. App. 85, 519 S.E.2d 64 (1999), cert. denied, 351 N.C. 190, 541 S.E.2d 725 (1999).

Prosecutor's Questioning of Murder Defendant's Mother Held Harmless Error. — Prosecutor's questioning of capital murder defendant's mother about locks placed on the outside of defendant's bedroom door was highly prejudicial and of no probative value; however such error was harmless where the question of defendant's guilt was strong, the trial court properly sustained defendant's objections to the questions and the mother testified she was not afraid of her son. State v. Payne, 328 N.C. 377, 402 S.E.2d 582 (1991).

The trial court's exclusion of the defendant's letters to his mother was proper where the letters were cumulative and unreliable and where their exclusion was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt; the letters were unreliable in that they were written by a defendant facing a capital sentencing proceeding to a likely witness in the proceeding. State v. Davis, 353 N.C. 1, 539 S.E.2d 243 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 95, 151 L. Ed. 2d 55 (2001).

Deputy's Statements Regarding Witness Statement. — Deputy's unsolicited side comment about a witness having seen blood in defendant's bathtub did not constitute sufficient grounds for a new trial under subsection (a) of this section. State v. Jones, 347 N.C. 193, 491 S.E.2d 641 (1997).

Disallowing Questions About Defendant's Background and Character. — The trial court was correct in not allowing the questions about family history and mental illness without a foundation establishing whether defendant's mental illness was hereditary; where the same or similar evidence was admitted through other witnesses, no prejudice resulted from disallowing a witness' testimony about defendant's background and character. State v. Lynch, 340 N.C. 435, 459 S.E.2d 679 (1995).

Admission of Defendant's Differing Statements as to His Whereabouts Held Harmless. — Although the trial record did not contain the findings required by subsection (d) of § 7A-595 [see now § 7B-2101(d)], admission of defendant's statement at trial was not prejudicial because it was not inculpatory. It merely gave somewhat differing versions of the defendant's whereabouts on the day in question. State v. Small, 328 N.C. 175, 400 S.E.2d 413 (1991).

Admission of Defendant's Illegally Obtained Confession Was Harmless Error. — Defendant's decision to testify in rape case was induced by the strength of the State's evidence and not by the erroneous admission of defendant's statement; therefore, the State met its burden of showing that the erroneous admission of defendant's illegally obtained confession constituted harmless error. State v. Easterling, 119 N.C. App. 22, 457 S.E.2d 913 (1995).

Admission of Refusal to Submit to Alcohol Tests. — The suppression of evidence of the defendant's refusal to submit to blood- and urine-alcohol tests would not have resulted in a different verdict; consequently, the admission of this evidence was not prejudicial error. State v. Davis, 142 N.C. App. 81, 542 S.E.2d 236 (2001), cert. denied, 353 N.C. 386, 547 S.E.2d 818 (2001).

Harmless Error Occurred Where Defendant Invited Error. — Where defense counsel elicited an in-custody statement made by defendant on cross-examination of an SBI agent and did not object to its admission at trial, the error was invited and defendant could not complain of error on appeal. State v. Greene, 324 N.C. 1, 376 S.E.2d 430 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990); State v. Patterson, 332 N.C. 409, 420 S.E.2d 98 (1992).

Where Defense Broached Topic. — Where the jury heard testimony from a defense witness regarding defendant's suspected distribution of drugs, the State's offer of testimony regarding the sheriff's department's investigation of defendant "for the use or distribution of controlled substances," followed by a curative instruction by the trial judge, did not constitute reversible error. State v. Marine, 135 N.C. App. 279, 520 S.E.2d 65 (1999).

Overwhelming Evidence of Defendant's Guilt. — Error in overruling defendant's objection and allowing the State to cross-examine defendant about statements was harmless where the evidence of defendant's guilt was overwhelming. State v. Shannon, 117 N.C. App. 718, 452 S.E.2d 825 (1995).

Given the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt and because the prosecutor's remarks were made in anticipation of contrasting biblical arguments actually made by defendant, any error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Barrett, 343 N.C. 164, 469 S.E.2d 888 (1996).

Error Held Harmless. — In light of the substantive and corroborative testimony from other witnesses, defendant did not demonstrate a reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached absent the admission of the disputed portion of sexual abuse expert's testimony in a trial for committing indecent liberties with a child; the error was therefore harmless. State v. Quarg, 334 N.C. 92, 431 S.E.2d 1 (1993).

The participation of a bailiff in a courtroom demonstration in the role of the murder victim if error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt in spite of the defendant's assertion that the bailiff had "constant contact" with the jury. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Failure to Include Defendant in Discussion Regarding Removal of Leg Shackles. — Even if trial judge's conversation with defendant's standby counsel, held outside defendant's presence, concerning whether or not to remove his leg shackles constituted a "stage" in the proceeding, the error in excluding the defendant was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Thomas, 134 N.C. App. 560, 518 S.E.2d 222 (1999), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 351 N.C. 119, 541 S.E.2d 468 (1999).

Failure to Remove Leg Shackles. — Where State offered overwhelming evidence of malice, premeditation, and deliberation to support a first-degree murder conviction, jury would not likely have reached a different verdict if defendant had not been made to appear in shackles, and any error in allowing such appearance was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Thomas, 134 N.C. App. 560, 518 S.E.2d 222 (1999), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 351 N.C. 119, 541 S.E.2d 468 (1999).

Where, although relevant testimony as to defendant's sanity was excluded, the defendant was able to elicit substantial evidence of a similar nature which tended to negate the defendant's capacity to understand the nature of his acts and the difference between right and wrong in relation thereto, there was not a reasonable possibility that, had the error not been committed in excluding this cumulative evidence, there would have been a different result; this was harmless error. State v. Beach, 333 N.C. 733, 430 S.E.2d 248 (1993).

Even though admission of diary entry was error, there was no reasonable possibility that the admission of the diary entry affected the jury's verdict that defendant was guilty of first-degree murder. State v. Hardy, 339 N.C. 207, 451 S.E.2d 600 (1994).

Where defendant presented substantial expert testimony that described defendant's various mental disorders and lack of capacity to form a specific intent to kill, exclusion of defendant's statement to psychologist during defendant's treatment was not prejudicial error. State v. Kilpatrick, 343 N.C. 466, 471 S.E.2d 624 (1996).

Where the evidence of defendant's guilt was overwhelming, defendant could not show that had the witness not been permitted to describe defendant's use of his knife to skin a deer, a different result would have been reached at trial. State v. Johnston, 344 N.C. 596, 476 S.E.2d 289 (1996).

In light of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, there was no basis for concluding that a different result would have been reached if the items seized from the defendant's temporary residence had not been admitted into evidence. State v. Bruton, 344 N.C. 381, 474 S.E.2d 336 (1996).

There was no prejudice and no reasonable possibility that a different result would have been reached even if the court had granted defendant's motion to strike the identification testimony on the basis that it was vague and conjectural. State v. Roseboro, 344 N.C. 364, 474 S.E.2d 314 (1996).

Where the defendant could show no likelihood of achieving a different result, the trial court's erroneous admission of the state's evidence of prior contradictory statements by one of its witnesses under the guise of corroborating evidence was harmless. State v. Francis, 343 N.C. 436, 471 S.E.2d 348 (1996).

Owing to the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, the admission of a confession in violation of defendant's Sixth Amendment rights was harmless error. State v. Roope, 130 N.C. App. 356, 503 S.E.2d 118 (1998), cert., 349 N.C. 374, 525 S.E.2d 189 (1998).

IV. RIGHTS UNDER FEDERAL CONSTITUTION.

The proper standard of reversal in reviewing violations under N.C. Const., Art. I, § 23 of defendant's right to be present at all stages of his capital trial is the rigorous standard prescribed for review of violations of defendant's right to be present at trial under the federal Constitution. State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 777 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

Defendant Precluded from Challenging Benefit Received. — Where defendant opposed joinder of third murder, and State, consequently, had no evidence available to support a statutory aggravating circumstance related to the severed case and was thereby precluded from submitting it to the jury, defendant obtained a benefit which he could not claim, on appellate review, was illegal. State v. McNeil, 350 N.C. 657, 518 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1024, 120 S. Ct. 1432, 146 L. Ed. 2d 321 (2000).

Errors Affecting Constitutional Rights. — General rule that an instruction that evidence is not to be considered, accompanied by withdrawal of that evidence, cures any error in its admission is inapplicable when the error admitting the evidence is of constitutional dimension; when the error committed deprives a defendant of a constitutional right, prejudice is presumed, and the burden is on the State to prove otherwise. State v. Silva, 304 N.C. 122, 282 S.E.2d 449 (1981).

Error Presumed Prejudicial. — Error committed at trial infringing upon a defendant's constitutional rights is presumed to be prejudicial and entitles him to a new trial unless the error committed was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982); State v. Autry, 321 N.C. 392, 364 S.E.2d 341 (1988).

Overwhelming evidence of guilt may render constitutional error harmless. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

The presence of overwhelming evidence of guilt may render error of constitutional dimension harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Autry, 321 N.C. 392, 364 S.E.2d 341 (1988).

Overwhelming Evidence Held to Render U.S. Const., Amend. IV Violation Harmless. — Where trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained from warrantless seizure of his automobile, error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt since evidence presented at voir dire showing defendant guilty of crimes charged was overwhelming, where defendant admitted in his initial meeting with police that he had been wearing a Dracula costume the night before, where victim positively and unwaveringly identified defendant both in pre-trial photographic showing and at the voir dire hearing, and where defendant confessed to crimes. State v. Russell, 92 N.C. App. 639, 376 S.E.2d 458 (1989).

Prejudice Presumed from Counsel's Inadequate Preparation Time. — Once the inadequacy of time for counsel to prepare is shown, prejudice from the denial of defendant's constitutional right to effective counsel is presumed under subsection (b) of this section, and the burden falls on the State to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the error was harmless. State v. Maher, 305 N.C. 544, 290 S.E.2d 694 (1982).

Trial by Jury. — The trial court's reference to the possibility of a separate sentencing jury did not violate the defendant's rights under the Eighth Amendment by diluting the responsibility of the jury, nor was it misleading, although the better practice would be for the trial court to make no mention of a different jury at the preliminary stage of the trial. State v. Mitchell, 353 N.C. 309, 543 S.E.2d 830 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 475, — L. Ed. 2d — (2001).

The presence of an alternate juror in the jury room during the jury's deliberations violates N.C. Const., Art. I, § 24 and § 9-18 and constitutes reversible error per se. State v. Turner, 48 N.C. App. 606, 269 S.E.2d 270 (1980).

Reading of Search Warrant Affidavit to Jury. — The trial court committed reversible error in permitting the witness in cocaine prosecution to read the entire search warrant affidavit to the jury, because the statements and allegations contained in the affidavit were hearsay statements which deprived the accused of his rights of confrontation and cross-examination. State v. Edwards, 315 N.C. 304, 337 S.E.2d 508 (1985).

Because failure to submit the statutory mitigating circumstance of no significant history of prior criminal activity is a violation of both our statute and the Eighth Amendment, the standard for determining prejudice is subsection (b), which provides that violation of defendant's federal constitutional rights is prejudicial unless the State can demonstrate on appeal that it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Quick, 337 N.C. 359, 446 S.E.2d 535 (1994).

Applied in State v. Grover, 142 N.C. App. 411, 543 S.E.2d 179 (2001), aff'd, — N.C. —, 553 S.E.2d 679 (2001); State v. Washington, 142 N.C. App. 657, 544 S.E.2d 249 (2001).

Cited in State v. Miller, 142 N.C. App. 435, 543 S.E.2d 201 (2001); State v. Mason, 144 N.C. App. 20, 550 S.E.2d 10 (2001); State v. Allen, 353 N.C. 511, 546 S.E.2d 372 (2001).

§ 15A-1444. When defendant may appeal; certiorari.

(a) A defendant who has entered a plea of not guilty to a criminal charge, and who has been found guilty of a crime, is entitled to appeal as a matter of right when final judgment has been entered.

(a1) A defendant who has been found guilty, or entered a plea of guilty or no contest to a felony, is entitled to appeal as a matter of right the issue of whether his or her sentence is supported by evidence introduced at the trial and sentencing hearing only if the minimum sentence of imprisonment does not fall within the presumptive range for the defendant's prior record or conviction level and class of offense. Otherwise, the defendant is not entitled to appeal this issue as a matter of right but may petition the appellate division for review of this issue by writ of certiorari.

(a2) A defendant who has entered a plea of guilty or no contest to a felony or misdemeanor in superior court is entitled to appeal as a matter of right the issue of whether the sentence imposed:

(1) Results from an incorrect finding of the defendant's prior record level under G.S. 15A-1340.14 or the defendant's prior conviction level under G.S. 15A-1340.21;

(2) Contains a type of sentence disposition that is not authorized by G.S. 15A-1340.17 or G.S. 15A-1340.23 for the defendant's class of offense and prior record or conviction level; or

(3) Contains a term of imprisonment that is for a duration not authorized by G.S. 15A-1340.17 or G.S. 15A-1340.23 for the defendant's class of offense and prior record or conviction level.

(b) Procedures for appeal from the magistrate to the district court are as provided in Article 90, Appeals from Magistrates and from District Court Judges.

(c) Procedures for appeal from the district court to the superior court are as provided in Article 90, Appeals from Magistrates and from District Court Judges.

(d) Procedures for appeal to the appellate division are as provided in this Article, the rules of the appellate division, and Chapter 7A of the General Statutes. The appeal must be perfected and conducted in accordance with the requirements of those provisions.

(e) Except as provided in subsections (a1) and (a2) of this section and G.S. 15A-979, and except when a motion to withdraw a plea of guilty or no contest has been denied, the defendant is not entitled to appellate review as a matter of right when he has entered a plea of guilty or no contest to a criminal charge in the superior court, but he may petition the appellate division for review by writ of certiorari. If an indigent defendant petitions the appellate division for a writ of certiorari, the presiding superior court judge may in his discretion order the preparation of the record and transcript of the proceedings at the expense of the State.

(f) The ruling of the court upon a motion for appropriate relief is subject to review upon appeal or by writ of certiorari as provided in G.S. 15A-1422.

(g) Review by writ of certiorari is available when provided for by this Chapter, by other rules of law, or by rule of the appellate division. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1979, c. 760, s. 3; 1981, c. 179, ss. 8, 9; 1993, c. 538, s. 27; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(b); 1997-80, s. 4.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Subsection (a) states the familiar rule of appellate practice that appeal, as a matter of right, is available when final judgment has been entered. (Entry of judgment is defined in G.S. 15A-101, by virtue of a concurrent amendment.)

A number of cross references are included in subsections (b), (c), (d) and (f) for the purpose of pointing out as well as locating other appellate rules, trial de novo in misdemeanor cases, and the rules with regard to appeal from motions for appropriate relief.

Subsection (e) carries forward the provisions of G.S. 15-180.2, a 1973 statute, which provide(d) only discretionary review when a defendant has plead guilty or entered a plea of no contest. The exception relates to review of determinations on motions to suppress vital evidence.

As subsection (g) indicates, review by writ of certiorari is available. That discretionary review is necessarily controlled by the rules of the appellate division.

G.S. 15-179 had provided that the State may appeal in seven enumerated instances. These areas had imposed an effective limitation to appeal on matters of law. The statute here proposed is less complicated in statement and follows the federal revision (Title 18, U.S. Code, § 3731) after the case of United States v. Sisson, 399 U.S. 267, 90 S. Ct. 2117, 26 L. Ed. 2d 608 (1970). Appeals by the State have been few in number and it is not contemplated that this provision will substantially change that situation.

CASE NOTES

This section provides the exclusive statutory authority for appeals in criminal proceedings. State v. Shoff, 118 N.C. App. 724, 456 S.E.2d 875 (1995), appeal dismissed, 340 N.C. 572, 460 S.E.2d 328 (1995), aff'd, 342 N.C. 638, 466 S.E.2d 277 (1996).

Reliance upon a substantial rights analysis as the basis for appellate review appears contrary to the plain and unambiguous language of the statutes governing criminal appeals. State v. Shoff, 118 N.C. App. 724, 456 S.E.2d 875 (1995), appeal dismissed, 340 N.C. 572, 460 S.E.2d 328 (1995), aff'd, 342 N.C. 638, 466 S.E.2d 277 (1996).

Certiorari to Review Judgment in Habeas Corpus. — By analogy, § 7A-27(a), former § 15-180.2 and N.C.R.A.P., Rule 21(b) were logically applicable to petitions for certiorari to review judgments in habeas corpus proceedings involving the restraint of prisoners under sentences of death or life imprisonment. State v. Niccum, 293 N.C. 276, 238 S.E.2d 141 (1977).

The Fair Sentencing Act did not allow appeal of a presumptive sentence as of right. State v. Cain, 79 N.C. App. 35, 338 S.E.2d 898, cert. denied, 316 N.C. 380, 342 S.E.2d 899 (1986); State v. Hardy, 104 N.C. App. 226, 409 S.E.2d 96 (1991).

Appeal under subsection (a1) of this section is limited to the issue of whether the sentence entered is supported by evidence introduced at the trial and the sentencing hearing. State v. Melton, 307 N.C. 370, 298 S.E.2d 673 (1983).

When a convicted felon is given a sentence in excess of the presumptive sentence, he may appeal as a matter of right, and the only question before the appellate court on such an appeal is whether the sentence is supported by evidence introduced at trial and the sentencing hearing. State v. Teague, 60 N.C. App. 755, 300 S.E.2d 7 (1983).

Where defendant was entitled to appeal as of right only in the case in which the sentence exceeds the presumptive, the court neither erred nor abused its discretion in refusing to allow him to appeal in forma pauperis in the other cases. State v. Benfield, 76 N.C. App. 453, 333 S.E.2d 753 (1985).

The defendant was not entitled to assert, on direct appeal, error relating to his sentence, where the sentence which he received was less than the presumptive term set by former § 15A-1340.4(f)(1) for second degree murder, a Class C felony. State v. Knight, 87 N.C. App. 125, 360 S.E.2d 125 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 476, 364 S.E.2d 662 (1988).

A defendant who has been found guilty is entitled under subsection (a1) to appellate review of the issue of whether his sentence is supported by the evidence presented at trial or during the sentencing hearing. The reviewing court must also determine whether the trial court abused its discretion in weighing the aggravating and mitigating factors. State v. Summerlin, 98 N.C. App. 167, 390 S.E.2d 358, cert. denied, 327 N.C. 143, 394 S.E.2d 183 (1990).

Writ of Certiorari Available to Defendant Not Entitled to Appeal Sentence. — Pursuant to subsection (a1) of this section, a defendant who had entered a plea of guilty to a felony was not entitled to appeal as a matter of right unless his sentence exceeded the presumptive term set by former § 15A-1340.4; however, he could petition for review of the issue by writ of certiorari. State v. Farrior, 117 N.C. App. 429, 451 S.E.2d 332 (1994), cert. granted, 340 N.C. 116, 455 S.E.2d 663 (1995).

Although the defendant who was stripped of her jail credit for time in home detention could not appeal under this section, the court elected to treat her appeal as a petition for writ of certiorari and granted it, pursuant to N.C. R. App., Rule 21. State v. Jarman, 140 N.C. App. 198, 535 S.E.2d 875 (2000).

No Appeal from Interlocutory Order in Criminal Proceeding Absent Statutory Provision. — In light of the legislature's enactment of subsection (d) of this section and the North Carolina Supreme Court's decision in State v. Henry, 318 N.C. 408, 348 S.E.2d 593 (1986), the court of appeals has concluded that the statutory basis, § 1-277, for the holding in State v. Childs, 265 N.C. 575, 144 S.E.2d 653 (1965) (per curiam), and dictum in State v. Bryant, 280 N.C. 407, 185 S.E.2d 854 (1972), is no longer relevant to the appeal of interlocutory orders in criminal proceedings; accordingly, the court of appeals would decline to follow. State v. Jones, 67 N.C. App. 413, 313 S.E.2d 264 (1984); State v. Montalbano, 73 N.C. App. 259, 326 S.E.2d 634, cert. denied, 313 N.C. 608, 332 S.E.2d 182 (1985); and State v. Major, 84 N.C. App. 421, 352 S.E.2d 862 (1987), insofar as they might allow interlocutory appeals in criminal proceedings based on Childs, Bryant, or § 1-277. State v. Joseph, 92 N.C. App. 203, 374 S.E.2d 132 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 115, 377 S.E.2d 241 (1989).

Denial of defendant's motion to dismiss, which was based on double jeopardy grounds, was an interlocutory order from which no appeal would lie in absence of statutory provision. State v. Joseph, 92 N.C. App. 203, 374 S.E.2d 132 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 115, 377 S.E.2d 241 (1989).

When the language of subsection (e) of this section is read conversely, it provides that when a motion to withdraw a plea of guilty or no contest has been denied, the defendant is entitled to appellate review as a matter of right when he has entered a plea of guilty or no contest to a criminal charge in the superior court. It follows that a defendant whose motion to withdraw his plea of guilty, made during the term and on the day following pronouncement of judgment, was denied, is entitled to appeal as a matter of right. State v. Dickens, 299 N.C. 76, 261 S.E.2d 183 (1880).

No Conflict with § 7A-27(a). — There is no conflict between subsection (e) and § 7A-27(a). State v. Handy, 326 N.C. 532, 391 S.E.2d 159 (1990).

Evidence offered on the hearing of a post-trial motion for appropriate relief does not relate back so as to justify a holding that the trial judge erroneously instructed the jury at trial. State v. Leonard, 300 N.C. 223, 266 S.E.2d 631, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 960, 101 S. Ct. 372, 66 L. Ed. 2d 227 (1980).

Defendant who entered a plea of guilty to 10 misdemeanors was not entitled to appeal as a matter of right, since none of the exceptions in § 15A-979 or this section applied. State v. Noll, 88 N.C. App. 753, 364 S.E.2d 726 (1988).

Appeal dismissed because defendant was not entitled to appellate review as a matter of right under subsection (a1). State v. Williams, 116 N.C. App. 354, 447 S.E.2d 437, cert. denied, 338 N.C. 523, 452 S.E.2d 823 (1994).

Because defendant had no appeal as of right, and had not petitioned for a writ of certiorari, his notice of appeal was a nullity, and the appellate court had no jurisdiction. State v. Waters, 122 N.C. App. 504, 470 S.E.2d 545 (1996).

Defendant who could not have raised any of the issues enumerated in subsection (a2) had no right to appeal. State v. Hamby, 129 N.C. App. 366, 499 S.E.2d 195 (1998).

Where defendant pleaded guilty to being an habitual felon, and did not move in the trial court to withdraw his guilty plea, defendant was not entitled to an appeal of right from the trial court's ruling. State v. Young, 120 N.C. App. 456, 462 S.E.2d 683 (1995).

Since the court was not required under former § 15A-1340.4(b) to make findings of aggravating and mitigating factors to support the sentence imposed, defendant had no appeal as of right pursuant to subsection (a1). State v. Washington, 116 N.C. App. 318, 447 S.E.2d 799 (1994).

When a convicted felon is given a sentence in excess of the presumptive range, he may appeal as a matter of right, and the only question before the appellate court on such an appeal is whether the sentence is supported by evidence introduced at trial and the sentencing hearing. State v. Weary, 124 N.C. App. 754, 479 S.E.2d 28 (1996).

§ 15A-1445. Appeal by the State.

(a) Unless the rule against double jeopardy prohibits further prosecution, the State may appeal from the superior court to the appellate division:

(1) When there has been a decision or judgment dismissing criminal charges as to one or more counts.

(2) Upon the granting of a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered or newly available evidence but only on questions of law.

(3) When the State alleges that the sentence imposed:

a. Results from an incorrect determination of the defendant's prior record level under G.S. 15A-1340.14 or the defendant's prior conviction level under G.S. 15A-1340.21;

b. Contains a type of sentence disposition that is not authorized by G.S. 15A-1340.17 or G.S. 15A-1340.23 for the defendant's class of offense and prior record or conviction level;

c. Contains a term of imprisonment that is for a duration not authorized by G.S. 15A-1340.17 or G.S. 15A-1340.23 for the defendant's class of offense and prior record or conviction level; or

d. Imposes an intermediate punishment pursuant to G.S. 15A-1340.13(g) based on findings of extraordinary mitigating circumstances that are not supported by evidence or are insufficient as a matter of law to support the dispositional deviation.

(b) The State may appeal an order by the superior court granting a motion to suppress as provided in G.S. 15A-979. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1993, c. 538, s. 28; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 14, s. 28.)

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Editor's Note. — Many of the cases cited below were decided under former § 15-179.

Right Is Statutory. — As a general rule the prosecution cannot appeal or bring error proceedings from a judgment in favor of the defendant in a criminal case, in the absence of a statute clearly conferring that right. State v. Horton, 7 N.C. App. 497, 172 S.E.2d 887 (1970); State v. Harrell, 279 N.C. 464, 183 S.E.2d 638 (1971); State v. Dobson, 51 N.C. App. 445, 276 S.E.2d 480 (1981).

And May Not Be Enlarged by Court. — The right of the State to appeal is statutory, which right may not be enlarged by the superior court, and when the superior court remands a cause with provision that the State may appeal from any judgment thereafter rendered by the lower court, the provision giving the State the right to appeal is void. State v. Cox, 216 N.C. 424, 5 S.E.2d 125 (1939). See State v. Ferguson, 243 N.C. 766, 92 S.E.2d 197 (1956); State v. Dobson, 51 N.C. App. 445, 276 S.E.2d 480 (1981).

Strict Construction. — Statutes authorizing an appeal by the prosecution will be strictly construed. State v. Horton, 7 N.C. App. 497, 172

S.E.2d 887 (1970); State v. Harrell, 279 N.C. 464, 183 S.E.2d 638 (1971); State v. Dobson, 51 N.C. App. 445, 276 S.E.2d 480 (1981); State v. Elkerson, 304 N.C. 658, 285 S.E.2d 784 (1982).

State had no statutory right to make motion to set aside judgment on basis of newly discovered evidence. But, because the trial court could have set aside the judgment on its own authority, allowing the State's motion was harmless error. State v. Oakley, 75 N.C. App. 99, 330 S.E.2d 59 (1985).

Proper Court for Appeal. — If the State's right to appeal arises in the district court, the appeal is to the superior court; if it arises in the superior court, the appeal is to the appellate division. State v. Greenwood, 12 N.C. App. 584, 184 S.E.2d 386 (1971), rev'd on other grounds, 280 N.C. 651, 187 S.E.2d 8 (1972).

The word "appeal" in this section includes appellate review upon writ of certiorari. State v. Ward, 46 N.C. App. 200, 264 S.E.2d 737 (1980).

Scope of Review of Suppression Order. — On appeal by State of an order against the State suppressing evidence, the scope of appellate review is strictly limited to determining whether the trial judge's underlying findings of fact are supported by competent evidence, in which event they are conclusively binding on appeal, and whether those factual findings in turn support the judge's ultimate conclusions of law. State v. Cooke, 306 N.C. 132, 291 S.E.2d 618 (1982).

The defendant's failure to raise the issue of double jeopardy did not prevent the appellate court from considering the issue. State v. Vestal, 131 N.C. App. 756, 509 S.E.2d 249 (1998).

Applied in State v. Whaley, 58 N.C. App. 233, 293 S.E.2d 284 (1982); State v. Holmes, 59 N.C. App. 79, 296 S.E.2d 1 (1982); State v. Baker, 65 N.C. App. 430, 310 S.E.2d 101 (1983); State v. Roberts, 351 N.C. 325, 523 S.E.2d 417 (2000).

App. 175, 374 S.E.2d 123 (1988); State v. Pakulski, 95 N.C. App. 517, 383 S.E.2d 442 (1989); State v. McEachern, 114 N.C. App. 218, 441 S.E.2d 574 (1994); State v. Hatcher, 117 N.C. App. 78, 450 S.E.2d 19 (1994), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 339 N.C. 618, 454 S.E.2d 261 (1995); State v. Munsey, 342 N.C. 882, 467 S.E.2d 425 (1996).

II. APPEALABLE ORDERS AND JUDGMENTS.

What Verdicts Appealable. — In a criminal prosecution where there is a plea and general verdict of not guilty, the State has no right of appeal; such verdict ends the case; but under this section the State may appeal from a judgment for defendant on a special verdict. State v. Lane, 78 N.C. 547 (1878); State v. Monger, 107 N.C. 771, 12 S.E. 250 (1890); State v. Winston, 194 N.C. 243, 139 S.E. 240 (1927).

The State has no right to appeal from a verdict of not guilty. State v. Gilbert, 30 N.C. App. 130, 226 S.E.2d 229 (1976).

Appeal from Dismissal Without Prejudice. — A dismissal without prejudice under former § 15A-703 does not bar further prosecution by the State. It does not finally dispose of the case or charge against defendant, and therefore, it is not appealable. State v. Ward, 46 N.C. App. 200, 264 S.E.2d 737 (1980).

The State must petition for writ of certiorari in order to seek appellate review of dismissal of criminal charges without prejudice for violation of a defendant's statutory speedy trial rights. State v. Ward, 46 N.C. App. 200, 264 S.E.2d 737 (1980).

Appeal of Motions to Suppress. — The language of subsection (c) of § 15A-979 making orders of the superior court granting motions to suppress evidence appealable to the appellate division prior to trial "upon certificate by the prosecutor to the judge who granted the motion that the appeal is not taken for the purpose of delay and that the evidence is essential to the case," constitutes a statutory prerequisite which must be met in order for the State to have the right to appeal, prior to trial, an order granting a motion to suppress. State v. Dobson, 51 N.C. App. 445, 276 S.E.2d 480 (1981).

Appeal from Grant of Motion to Suppress Made In Limine. — When the motion to suppress must be and is made in limine or can be and is made in limine, then the defendant can appeal if the motion is denied and he enters a plea of guilty; and the State can appeal if the motion is granted. State v. Tate, 300 N.C. 180, 265 S.E.2d 223 (1980).

Dismissal of Criminal Charges. — Subsection (a) clearly provides that the State may appeal the dismissal of criminal charges only when further prosecution would not be barred by the rule against double jeopardy. State v. Priddy, 115 N.C. App. 547, 445 S.E.2d 610, cert. denied, 337 N.C. 805, 449 S.E.2d 751 (1994).

The State had the right to appeal, under § 15A-1445(a)(1), where the trial court dismissed a driving while impaired charge, for insufficient evidence, after the jury found the defendant guilty, because the only effect of a successful appeal would be to reinstate the jury's original verdict; the defendant would not be subjected to a second trial and so the rule against double jeopardy would not be violated. State v. Scott, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 916, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 859 (2001).

Double Jeopardy Clause Not Offended. — In a case where the State appealed a trial court order dismissing a driving while impaired charge for insufficient evidence after the jury found the defendant guilty of the offense and reversal on appeal would merely reinstate the jury's verdict, appellate review of such an order did not offend the policy against multiple prosecution. Where there is no threat of either multiple punishments or successive prosecutions, the Double Jeopardy Clause of U.S. Const., amend. V is not offended. State v. Scott, — N.C. App. —, 551 S.E.2d 916, 2001 N.C. App. LEXIS 859 (2001).

III. NONAPPEALABLE ORDERS AND JUDGMENTS.

No Right to Appeal from Dismissal on Merits. — State had no right to appeal from trial court's dismissal of criminal charges against defendant based on (1) defendant's motion to suppress the State's evidence because of entrapment and (2) insufficiency of the evidence, since the charges were dismissed on the merits and involved a determination of guilt or innocence, and further proceedings against defendant would be barred under principles of double jeopardy. State v. Murrell, 54 N.C. App. 342, 283 S.E.2d 173 (1981), cert. denied, 304 N.C. 731, 288 S.E.2d 804 (1982).

A motion to dismiss pursuant to § 15A-1227 tests the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction and, in that respect, is identical to a motion for judgment as in the case of nonsuit under § 15-173. Therefore, following such dismissal defendant cannot again be placed in jeopardy upon these same charges, and the State has no right of appeal from the judgment entered. State v. Ausley, 78 N.C. App. 791, 338 S.E.2d 547 (1986).

Interlocutory Orders. — The State has no right to appeal from: an order of mistrial; a judgment granting a defendant a new trial for newly discovered evidence; and adjudication that certain duties of defendant under a probation judgment had ended; a determination that a suspended sentence could not be revoked. In all these cases, the orders attempted to be appealed were interlocutory and not final. State v. Ward, 46 N.C. App. 200, 264 S.E.2d 737 (1980).

Order Sustaining Plea of Former Acquittal. — The right of the State to appeal to the Supreme Court from adverse rulings of the superior court or to the superior court from adverse rulings of an inferior court is governed by this section. And the State has no right, under this section, to appeal from an order of the superior court sustaining a defendant's plea of former acquittal. State v. Wilson, 234 N.C. 552, 67 S.E.2d 748 (1951); State v. Ferguson, 243 N.C. 766, 92 S.E.2d 197 (1956).

The State has no right to appeal from a judgment allowing a plea of former jeopardy or acquittal. State v. Reid, 263 N.C. 825, 140 S.E.2d 547 (1965); State v. Peguise, 2 N.C. App. 526, 163 S.E.2d 294 (1968).

Refusal to Submit Aggravating Circumstances to Jury. — The State has no right to appeal the trial judge's action in refusing to submit any aggravating circumstances to the jury at the sentencing phase of defendant's trial. If the State's right to appeal is to be enlarged, it must be done by the legislature. State v. Elkerson, 304 N.C. 658, 285 S.E.2d 784 (1982).

Appeal Precluded By Double Jeopardy. — Double jeopardy precluded defendant's retrial for conspiracy to deliver marijuana, where the jury had been sworn and jeopardy had attached, and the trial court dismissed the charges after learning of error, in conducting the undercover investigation. State v. Vestal, 131 N.C. App. 756, 509 S.E.2d 249 (1998).

§ 15A-1446. Requisites for preserving the right to appellate review.

(a) Except as provided in subsection (d), error may not be asserted upon appellate review unless the error has been brought to the attention of the trial court by appropriate and timely objection or motion. No particular form is required in order to preserve the right to assert the alleged error upon appeal if the motion or objection clearly presented the alleged error to the trial court.

Formal exceptions are not required, but when evidence is excluded a record must be made in the manner provided in G.S. 1A-1, Rule 43(c), in order to assert upon appeal error in the exclusion of that evidence.

(b) Failure to make an appropriate and timely motion or objection constitutes a waiver of the right to assert the alleged error upon appeal, but the appellate court may review such errors affecting substantial rights in the interest of justice if it determines it appropriate to do so.

(c) The making of post-trial motions is not a prerequisite to the assertion of error on appeal.

(d) Errors based upon any of the following grounds, which are asserted to have occurred, may be the subject of appellate review even though no objection, exception or motion has been made in the trial division.

(1) Lack of jurisdiction of the trial court over the offense of which the defendant was convicted.

(2) Lack of jurisdiction of the trial court over the person of the defendant.

(3) The criminal pleading charged acts which, at the time they were committed, did not constitute a violation of criminal law.

(4) The pleading fails to state essential elements of an alleged violation, as required by G.S. 15A-924(a)(5).

(5) The evidence was insufficient as a matter of law.

(6) The defendant was convicted under a statute that is in violation of the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of North Carolina.

(7) Repealed by Session Laws 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, s. 28.

(8) The conduct for which the defendant was prosecuted was protected by the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of North Carolina.

(9) Subsequent admission of evidence from a witness when there has been an improperly overruled objection to the admission of evidence on the ground that the witness is for a specified reason incompetent or not qualified or disqualified.

(10) Subsequent admission of evidence involving a specified line of questioning when there has been an improperly overruled objection to the admission of evidence involving that line of questioning.

(11) Questions propounded to a witness by the court or a juror.

(12) Rulings and orders of the court, not directed to the admissibility of evidence during trial, when there has been no opportunity to make an objection or motion.

(13) Error of law in the charge to the jury.

(14) The court has expressed to the jury an opinion as to whether a fact is fully or sufficiently proved.

(15) The defendant was not present at any proceeding at which his presence was required.

(16) Error occurred in the entry of the plea.

(17) The form of the verdict was erroneous.

(18) The sentence imposed was unauthorized at the time imposed, exceeded the maximum authorized by law, was illegally imposed, or is otherwise invalid as a matter of law.

(19) A significant change in law, either substantive or procedural, applies to the proceedings leading to the defendant's conviction or sentence, and retroactive application of the changed legal standard is required. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, s. 28; 1983 (Reg. Sess., 1984), c. 1037, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

A crucial item in any system of appellate procedure is the rule stating the requirements for "preserving the right to appeal." The steps to be taken in the trial level have evolved over the years from the original purpose, which was in effect a statement of "charges" against the judge for making an error, into what is now recognized as a need simply to bring the matter to the attention of the trial judge sufficiently to permit him to correct the error. Thus, the Rules of Civil Procedure in G.S. 1A-1, Rule 46, and the appellate rules (N.C. Appellate Rules, Rule 10(b) make clear that formal "exceptions" are unnecessary and that no particular extra steps need be taken if an appropriate and timely objection has been made clear to the trial judge, at some time sufficiently close to the occurrence of the error to permit its correction. In addition to that notion, there is also the idea that there are certain errors that the defendant may appeal from whether or not he has given some signal that he thinks the judge has committed an error. On occasion this idea has appeared in the statement that certain errors need not be brought to the attention of the judge (as, for example, with regard to his charge). Sometimes that idea has been indicated by the straightforward statement that items were reviewable on appeal without the making of a motion, as was true of the 1967 statute which provided that the sufficiency of the evidence of the State was reviewable upon an appeal without the making of a motion for nonsuit (G.S. 15-173.1). Another form which this idea has taken is permitting a motion to be made in the appellate courts. Thus permitting in the appellate court a motion in arrest of judgment, based, for example, upon a defect in the pleading, is simply another way of stating that during the appeal the sufficiency of the pleadings may be raised even though no question has been raised in that regard in the trial court. This act undertakes to unify those devices and simply states that certain listed items may be raised on appeal whether or not objection, exception, or motion has been made in the trial court. Other errors must be appropriately brought to the attention of the trial court as provided in subsection (a).

Subsection (a) of this section is similar in basic import to G.S. 1A-1, Rule 46, of the Rules of Civil Procedure. It provides essentially that any timely objection or motion is sufficient and no particular formality is required to preserve the right to assert an alleged error upon appeal if that has been done.

Subsection (b) states the corollary that failure to make such timely motion or objection constitutes a waiver of the right to assert the alleged error upon appeal (but of course the court is granted the authority to review such errors in the interest of justice).

Subsection (c) is a duplicate of G.S. 15A-1422(e) and restates the idea that post-trial motions are not steps for the preservation of the right to appellate review, but rather are means of correcting errors at the trial level.

Subsection (d) contains a listing of errors which may be asserted upon appeal even if no objection, motion or exception was made in the trial court at the time the error is asserted to have been committed.

CASE NOTES

Subdivision (d)(6) Unconstitutional. — The General Assembly was without authority to enact subdivision (d)(6) of this section which permits appellate review of a contention that defendant was convicted under a statute that violates the United States Constitution or the North Carolina Constitution even though no objection, exception or motion on such ground was made in the trial division, since the statute violates the provisions of N.C. Const., Art. IV, § 13(2) giving the Supreme Court the exclusive authority to make rules of practice and procedure for the appellate division. State v. Elam, 302 N.C. 157, 273 S.E.2d 661 (1981); State v. O'Neal, 77 N.C. App. 600, 335 S.E.2d 920 (1985).

Subdivision (d)(13) unconstitutional. — N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(2), and subdivision (d)(13) of this section are in conflict. Since N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(2), is a rule of appellate practice and procedure, promulgated by the Supreme Court pursuant to its exclusive authority under N.C. Const., Art. IV, § 13(2), to the extent that subdivision (d)(13) is inconsistent with N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(2), the statute must fail. State v. Bennett, 308 N.C. 530, 302 S.E.2d 786 (1983).

Subdivision (d)(5) Inconsistent with N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(2). — Insofar as subdivision (d)(5) of this section allows a party to raise arguments regarding the sufficiency of the evidence to support a finding of fact at sentencing, it is inconsistent with the spirit and purpose of Rule N.C.R.A.P., 10(b)(2) and statutes which are in conflict with the Rules of Appellate Procedure are ineffective. State v. Bradley, 91 N.C. App. 559, 373 S.E.2d 130 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 337, 378 S.E.2d 798, cert. denied, 324 N.C. 114, 377 S.E.2d 238 (1989).

Construction with N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10. — When a conflict arises between a subsection of this section and N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10, the Rules of Appellate Procedure should control. State v. O'Neal, 77 N.C. App. 600, 335 S.E.2d 920 (1985).

To the extent that subdivision (d)(5) is inconsistent with N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(3), the statute must fail. State v. Stocks, 319 N.C. 437, 355 S.E.2d 492 (1987); State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

Although subdivision (d)(5) of this section provides that questions of insufficiency of the evidence may be the subject of appellate review, even when no objection or motion has been made at trial, N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(3) provides that a defendant who fails to make a motion to dismiss at the close of all of the evidence may not attack on appeal the sufficiency of the evidence at trial. State v. Spaugh, 321 N.C. 550, 364 S.E.2d 368 (1988).

Although subdivision (d)(5) of this section allows a defendant to appeal on insufficiency of evidence grounds, notwithstanding the fact that no objection, exception or motion was made at trial, this statute is negated by N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(3), which states that a defendant may not assign as error the insufficiency of the evidence to prove the crime charged unless he moves to dismiss the action, or for judgment as in case of nonsuit at trial. State v. Jordan, 321 N.C. 714, 365 S.E.2d 617 (1988).

Effect of Failure to Note Exceptions. — Assuming arguendo that State's comment in its opening remarks regarding defendant's prior conviction was inappropriate, it was incumbent upon defendant to timely bring the alleged error to the attention of the court; by failing to do so, defendant deprived the court of the opportunity to appropriately rectify the alleged error, deprived the State of the opportunity to take the proper measures to correct its alleged error, and deprived the jury of the opportunity to hear the evidence, from the beginning, in the clear light of a trial unclouded by the alleged error. State v. Smith, 96 N.C. App. 352, 385 S.E.2d 808 (1989).

Failure to Note Exceptions Constitutes Waiver. — Failure of defendant, who represented himself, to note exceptions to rulings of the trial court constituted waiver of the right to assert the alleged errors on appeal. State v. Brooks, 49 N.C. App. 14, 270 S.E.2d 592 (1980), appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 723, 276 S.E.2d 285 (1981).

Where defendant did not object at trial to the prosecutor's argument to the jury, he waived the alleged errors and cannot raise them on appeal. State v. White, 307 N.C. 42, 296 S.E.2d 267 (1982).

Generally, a defendant's failure to enter an appropriate and timely motion or objection results in a waiver of his right to assert the alleged error upon appeal. State v. McDougall, 308 N.C. 1, 301 S.E.2d 308, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 197, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983); 501 U.S. 1223, 111 S. Ct. 2840, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1991); State v. Fletcher, 92 N.C. App. 50, 373 S.E.2d 681 (1988).

Where there was no improperly overruled objection to the witness's competence due to defendant's failure to object to the court's finding that she was competent, the defendant was precluded from using the exception in subdivision (d)(9) to assign error to her testimony on the ground that she was incompetent. State v. Gordon, 316 N.C. 497, 342 S.E.2d 509 (1986).

Under this section, an assignment of error ordinarily will not be considered on appellate review unless the error has been brought to the attention of the trial court by appropriate and timely objection or motion. Failure to do so amounts to a waiver. State v. Reid, 322 N.C. 309, 367 S.E.2d 672 (1988).

Defendant failed to object to the admission of testimony at trial. A failure to except or object to errors at trial constitutes a waiver of the right to assert the alleged error on appeal. State v. Hartman, 90 N.C. App. 379, 368 S.E.2d 396 (1988).

An assignment of error ordinarily will not be considered on appellate review unless the error has been brought to the attention of the trial court by appropriate and timely objection. State v. Short, 322 N.C. 783, 370 S.E.2d 351 (1988).

Except in Capital Cases. — Ordinarily, objection to the prosecuting attorney's jury argument must be made prior to the verdict for the alleged impropriety to be reversible on appeal. Failure to object waives the alleged error. An exception to this rule is found in capital cases where, because of the severity of the death sentence, this court will review alleged improprieties in the prosecutor's jury argument despite defendant's failure to timely object. However, even in death cases the impropriety must be extreme for the court to find that the trial judge abused his discretion in not recognizing and correcting ex mero motu an argument that defense counsel failed to find prejudicial when he heard it. State v. White, 307 N.C. 42, 296 S.E.2d 267 (1982).

In trial for murder and robbery, although defendant failed to properly object to State's use of peremptory challenges which, under this rule, would normally have precluded appellate review of the issue, the Supreme Court nevertheless would consider defendant's argument, noting that defendant was tried prior to a retroactively effective United States Supreme Court decision upon which defendant based his argument on appeal, that defendant had raised the issue initially by motion at trial, and that defendant was on trial for his life. State v. Davis, 325 N.C. 607, 386 S.E.2d 418 (1989), cert. denied, 496 U.S. 905, 110 S. Ct. 2587, 110 L. Ed. 2d 268 (1990).

The appellate court was precluded, under § 15A-1446(a) and (b), from considering issues which defendant did not preserve for review by making a timely objection before the trial court, despite the fact that this was a capital case. State v. May, 354 N.C. 172, 552 S.E.2d 151 (2001).

Assignments of error must be based upon exceptions duly noted in the record in order for the issue to be preserved for consideration on appeal. State v. Brooks, 58 N.C. App. 407, 293 S.E.2d 653 (1982).

By failing to preserve evidence for review, defendant deprived the Supreme Court of the necessary record from which to ascertain if the alleged error was prejudicial. Proper consideration of defendant's argument was therefore precluded. State v. Miller, 321 N.C. 445, 364 S.E.2d 387 (1988).

Benefit of Objection Lost When Same Evidence Later Admitted without Objection. — Where defendant only interposed a general objection and did not make a special request to have the witness qualified as an expert, this was insufficient to preserve an exception for review, since even if a general objection had been sufficient, its benefit was lost when substantially the same evidence was thereafter admitted without renewed objection. State v. Edwards, 49 N.C. App. 547, 272 S.E.2d 384 (1980).

It is elementary that, nothing else appearing, the admission of incompetent evidence is not ground for a new trial where there was no objection at the time the evidence was offered. An assertion by the appellant that evidence, to the introduction of which he interposed no objection, was obtained in violation of his rights under the Constitution of the United States, or under the Constitution of this State, does not prevent the operation of this rule. State v. Hammond, 307 N.C. 662, 300 S.E.2d 361 (1983).

One of the requirements for appellate review under this statute is that there be an improperly overruled objection to testimony. If there is such a ruling, the appellant does not have to object to questions involving matters in the same line. State v. Battle, 61 N.C. App. 87, 300 S.E.2d 276, cert. denied, 309 N.C. 462, 307 S.E.2d 367 (1983).

Defendants waived exceptions at issue when witness testified to substantially the same effect on other occasions without objection. Polk v. Biles, 92 N.C. App. 86, 373 S.E.2d 570 (1988), cert. denied, 324 N.C. 337, 378 S.E.2d 798 (1989).

Where during the voir dire hearing on a motion to suppress a confession, reference to the arrest warrant was repeatedly made, and defendant never objected or gave any indication that the legality of the arrest would be challenged upon appeal, the defendant could not on appeal for the first time attempt to raise the issue of his arrest as a basis to overturn the ruling of the trial judge. State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988).

Exception to the admission of testimony is waived when testimony of the same import is admitted without objection. State v. Ayers, 92 N.C. App. 364, 374 S.E.2d 428 (1988).

Where a relevant response was not apparent from the context of the examination, defendant was precluded from predicating error upon the trial court's ruling on the State's objection to the question. State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995).

Assignment of error dismissed for failure to make timely objection. See State v. Moore, 75 N.C. App. 543, 331 S.E.2d 251, cert. denied, 315 N.C. 188, 337 S.E.2d 862 (1985).

Objection to Exclusion of Evidence. — Under subsection (a) of this section, a party is required to take an exception to a ruling excluding evidence and offer such evidence into the record when the evidence is excluded. The purpose of this provision is to enable a reviewing court to make an informed decision. State v. Kirkley, 308 N.C. 196, 302 S.E.2d 144 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Shank, 322 N.C. 243, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988).

When evidence is excluded, the record must sufficiently show what purport of the evidence would have been, or the propriety of the exclusion will not be reviewed on appeal. State v. Kirkley, 308 N.C. 196, 302 S.E.2d 144 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Shank, 322 N.C. 243, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988).

Where the relevance of the proffered evidence was not "obvious from the record," and defendant did not make an offer of proof showing the substance of what the witness would have testified, defendant's question regarding the admissibility of the evidence would not be reviewed on appeal. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Sufficiency of the evidence may be raised on appeal pursuant to subdivision (d)(5). State v. Martin, 47 N.C. App. 223, 267 S.E.2d 35, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 238, 283 S.E.2d 134 (1980).

Sufficiency of Proof of Prior Convictions at Sentencing Hearing. — While defendant may have waived challenge to competency of assistant prosecutor's statements as to his prior convictions, he was not required to object at sentencing hearing in order to assert the insufficiency of the remarks as a matter of law to prove his prior convictions by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Mack, 87 N.C. App. 24, 359 S.E.2d 485 (1987), cert. denied, 321 N.C. 477, 364 S.E.2d 663 (1988).

Waiver under § 15-173 Unaffected by Subdivision (d)(5). — Under § 15-173, a defendant, by presenting evidence, has waived his right to assert the denial of his motion to dismiss at the close of the State's evidence as a ground for appeal. The provisions of § 15A-1227(d) and subdivision (d)(5) of this section, allowing review on appeal of the sufficiency of the State's evidence in a criminal case without regard to whether the appropriate motion has been made, do not change this rule. State v. Mendez, 42 N.C. App. 141, 256 S.E.2d 405 (1979).

Although defendant, under § 15-173, waived his motion for nonsuit made at the close of the State's evidence by presenting evidence and failing to renew his motion, pursuant to § 15A-1227(d) and subdivision (d)(5) of this section, defendant could have requested review of the sufficiency of all of the evidence without regard to whether the proper motion or exception had been made during trial. State v. Alston, 44 N.C. App. 72, 259 S.E.2d 767 (1979), cert. denied, 304 N.C. 589, 290 S.E.2d 709 (1981).

By enacting N.C.R.A.P., Rule 10(b)(2), the Supreme Court has by preemption abrogated subdivision (d)(13). State v. Bennett, 59 N.C. App. 418, 297 S.E.2d 138 (1982), modified and aff'd, 308 N.C. 530, 302 S.E.2d 786 (1983).

Statement of a material fact not in evidence will constitute reversible error whether or not it is called to the court's attention. State v. Hall, 59 N.C. App. 567, 297 S.E.2d 614 (1982).

Objection to Recapitulation of Evidence. — Any objection of the court's recapitulation of the evidence presented must be brought to court's attention in time to afford an opportunity for correction. State v. Pratt, 306 N.C. 673, 295 S.E.2d 462 (1982).

Defendant did not attack the admission of his out-of-court statements on the ground of unlawful arrest, but attacked the voluntariness of them; therefore, defendant could not arise the issue of his alleged unlawful arrest for the first time on appeal. State v. Hartman, 90 N.C. App. 379, 368 S.E.2d 396 (1988).

Before granting a new trial to a defendant under the plain error rule, the appellate court must be convinced that absent the alleged error, a jury probably would have reached a different verdict. State v. Robinson, 330 N.C. 1, 409 S.E.2d 288 (1991).

Plain Error Rule May Allow Relief Without Objection. — On rare occasions the "plain error" rule may allow a party relief even though no objection was made. Before relief will be granted under the "plain error" rule, however, the appellate court must be convinced that absent the error the jury probably would have reached a different verdict. In other words, the appellate court must determine that the error in question "tilted the scales" and caused the jury to reach its verdict convicting the defendant. State v. Hartman, 90 N.C. App. 379, 368 S.E.2d 396 (1988).

Right to Appeal Waived by Insufficient Record. — Where the trial judge, upon plaintiff's objection, excluded testimony of defendant's expert witness which the defendant had attempted to elicit at trial, and where defendant made no offer of proof, and the record failed to disclose what the substance of the expert's evidence might have been, defendant waived its right to assert issue on appeal since the essential substance of the witness' testimony was not discernible from the record. River Hills Country Club, Inc. v. Queen City Automatic Sprinkler Corp., 95 N.C. App. 442, 382 S.E.2d 849 (1989).

Waiver Shown. — Where defendant gave notice of intent to appeal following suppression hearing in August, but did not give notice of appeal until April, judgment having been entered a week earlier, since defendant failed to make an appropriate and timely motion in the trial court, he waived his right to assert motions regarding new evidence on appeal, pursuant to this section. State v. Smothers, 108 N.C. App. 315, 423 S.E.2d 824 (1992).

The defendant waived the right to appellate review under subdivision (d)(5) where, after the court denied the initial motion to dismiss, the defendant did not renew his motion to dismiss at the close of all evidence. State v. Hinnant, 131 N.C. App. 591, 508 S.E.2d 537 (1998).

§ 15A-1447. Relief available upon appeal.

(a) If the appellate court finds that there has been reversible error which denied the defendant a fair trial conducted in accordance with law, it must grant the defendant a new trial.

(b) If the appellate court finds that the facts charged in a pleading were not at the time charged a crime, the judgment must be reversed and the charge must be dismissed.

(c) If the appellate court finds that the evidence with regard to a charge is insufficient as a matter of law, the judgment must be reversed and the charge must be dismissed unless there is evidence to support a lesser included offense. In that case the court may remand for trial on the lesser offense.

(d) If the appellate court affirms only some of the charges, or if it finds error relating only to the sentence, it may direct the return of the case to the trial court for the imposition of an appropriate sentence.

(e) If the appellate court affirms one or more of the charges, but not all of them, and makes a finding that the sentence is sustained by the charge or charges which are affirmed and is appropriate, the court may affirm the sentence.

(f) If the appellate court finds that there is an error with regard to the sentence which may be corrected without returning the case to the trial division for that purpose, it may direct the entry of the appropriate sentence.

(g) If the appellate court finds that there has been reversible error and the rule against double jeopardy prohibits further prosecution, it must dismiss the charges with prejudice. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section provides a self explanatory listing of the various types of relief which are available upon appeal, including new trial, dismissal and further action with regard to the sentence. The utility of such a listing would appear to be obvious when read in light of the Rules of Appellate Procedure which provide in Rule 28(b)(4) that the appellant's brief should contain "a short conclusion stating the precise relief sought."

CASE NOTES

When judgment is arrested on predicate felonies in a felony murder case to avoid a double jeopardy problem, the guilty verdicts on the underlying felonies remain on the docket and judgment can be entered if the conviction for the murder is later reversed on appeal and the convictions on the predicate felonies are not disturbed upon appeal. State v. Pakulski, 326 N.C. 434, 390 S.E.2d 129 (1990).

Applied in State v. Boone, 297 N.C. 652, 256 S.E.2d 683 (1979); State v. Prince, 49 N.C. App. 145, 270 S.E.2d 521 (1980).

§ 15A-1448. Procedures for taking appeal.

(a) Time for Entry of Appeal; Jurisdiction over the Case. —

(1) A case remains open for the taking of an appeal to the appellate division for the period provided in the rules of appellate procedure for giving notice of appeal.

(2) When a motion for appropriate relief is made under G.S. 15A-1414 or G.S. 15A-1416(a), the case remains open for the taking of an appeal until the court has ruled on the motion. The time for taking an appeal as provided in subsection (b) shall begin to run immediately upon the entry of an order under G.S. 15A-1420(c)(7), and the case shall remain open for the taking of an appeal until the expiration of that time.

(3) The jurisdiction of the trial court with regard to the case is divested, except as to actions authorized by G.S. 15A-1453, when notice of appeal has been given and the period described in (1) and (2) has expired.

(4) Repealed by Session Laws 1987, c. 624.

(5) The right to appeal is not waived by withdrawal of an appeal if the appeal is reentered within the time specified in (1) and (2).

(6) The right to appeal is not waived by compliance with all or a portion of the judgment imposed. If the defendant appeals, the court may enter appropriate orders remitting any fines or costs which have been paid. The court may delay the remission pending the determination of the appeal.

(b) How and When Appeal of Right Taken. — Notice of appeal shall be given within the time, in the manner and with the effect provided in the rules of appellate procedure.

(c) Certiorari. — Petitions for writs of certiorari are governed by rules of the appellate division. (1977, c. 711, s. 1; 1977, 2nd Sess., c. 1147, s. 29; 1987, c. 624; 1989, c. 377, s. 5.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

Most procedure for the appeal itself will be as provided in the rules of appellate procedure and not in statutory law. However, one appropriate area for statutory regulation is the question of timing of the taking of an appeal, for that relates to activity which must be conducted in the trial division.

Problems have arisen in the processing of appeals when post-trial motions are pending. The system here provides the usual (for North Carolina) 10-day period for taking an appeal, and provides that if a post-trial motion is made within 10 days after the trial there will be a period of not less than 10 days after the ruling on the motion in which to take an appeal. This is in accord with the North Carolina Rules of Appellate Procedure with regard to civil cases under Rule 3, but such an extension has not been incorporated in those rules with regard to criminal cases in Appellate Rule 4.

This section adds a further modification to the prior system. If giving notice of appeal of the case "divests the trial court of jurisdiction" (see State v. Grundler and State v. Jelly, 251 N.C. 177, 111 S.E.2d 1 (1959)) giving notice of appeal must wait until the determination of any post-trial motion. This section permits the defendant to give his notice of appeal, and yet retains the case in the trial court for the full 10-day period. This will insure a period during which matters may, if possible, be corrected at the trial level, without problem as to the timely notice of appeal. In addition to the full 10-day period, the right of the trial court to act in a case is extended for the period of time that a motion for appropriate relief is pending in the trial court. (G.S. 15A-1448(a)(2).)

Subsection (a)(4) is a legislative committee addition to the original proposal by the Commission. It establishes the date an appeal is "taken" as a matter of jurisdictional adjustment, i.e., jurisdiction to compute time does not vest in the appellate division until the conditions of subsection (a)(3) are met. In an effort to avoid the procedural impasse resulting from hopelessly backlogged court reporters' work loads in certain districts, the legislative committee made the time limitations for settling records on appeal, etc., begin to run from the later of the date jurisdiction is divested of the trial court or the date the transcript is delivered to the clerk of superior court.

This timing provision in subsection (a)(4) may be at variance with the current language of the Rules of Appellate Procedure. Cf. Rule 12 (a).

If no motion for relief is pending and the parties wish to expedite the processing of the appeal, they may pursuant to G.S. 15A-1448(a)(3)b file written consent that the case be transferred immediately to the appellate division without waiting for the 10 days to run. Similarly, if a motion for appropriate relief has been made, 30 days have passed, and no ruling has been made on the motion, the appealing party may file a written request that the case be transferred immediately to the appellate division. Of course the trial court would have no power to act once the case was transferred.

The appellant has free choice during the 10-day period. Thus, if appeal is entered and withdrawn, it may be entered again if time remains. To the same end, the statute provides that compliance with all or a portion of the judgment does not waive the right to appeal. There is provision for remitting fines which have been paid, but, in order to simplify collection and remittance procedures, the repayment may be delayed until the appeal is determined. The free right to enter appeal, withdraw it and reenter it, or to comply with a portion of the judgment and then enter the appeal are substantially more important in criminal cases than in civil cases. The litigants are frequently less sophisticated and the consequences of an unknowing waiver may be substantially more severe than loss of monetary damages or property rights.

Subsection (b) provides for oral notice of appeal in open court, and written notice of appeal to be filed with the clerk. No effort is made here to specify additional steps and the formalities of the filed notice. The contents of the notice of appeal, service of copies on other parties, and other procedural details with regard to the notice of appeal are left to the rules of the appellate division, which should be consulted.

CASE NOTES

A court of record has the inherent power to make its records speak the truth and, to that end, to amend its records to correct clerical mistakes or supply defects or omissions therein. State v. Davis, 123 N.C. App. 240, 472 S.E.2d 392 (1996).

Trial Court Loses Jurisdiction to Settle Record after Notice of Appeal. — While the recorded judgment did not reflect the judgment rendered by the trial court in open court, the trial court lacked jurisdiction to correct its judgment after defendant had given notice of appeal and the record on appeal had been filed with the appellate court. State v. Dixon, 139 N.C. App. 332, 533 S.E.2d 297 (2000).

A motion to correct or amend a judgment in order to make it speak the truth is properly made to the appellate court rather than the trial court once the record on appeal has been filed with the appellate court. State v. Dixon, 139 N.C. App. 332, 533 S.E.2d 297 (2000).

Section 15A-979(c) should not be read in conjunction with subdivision (a)(1) of this section. State v. Turner, 305 N.C. 356, 289 S.E.2d 368 (1982).

Subdivision (a)(1) of this section and § 15A-979(c) need not be construed together to require that the prosecutor's certificate also be filed within 10 days of judgment. State v. Lay, 56 N.C. App. 796, 290 S.E.2d 405, cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 306 N.C. 390, 294 S.E.2d 216 (1982).

Failure of Trial Judge to Rule Within 10 Days. — There was no merit to defendant's contention that the trial judge erred in failing to rule upon his motion for appropriate relief, since defendant did receive a ruling on his motion under former subdivision (a)(4) of this section, which provided that, if no ruling had been made by the trial judge on a motion for appropriate relief within 10 days, the motion would be deemed denied. State v. Brooks, 49 N.C. App. 14, 270 S.E.2d 592 (1980), appeal dismissed, 301 N.C. 723, 276 S.E.2d 285 (1981).

Motion Not Recognizable in Supreme Court. — At the time defendant's motion for appropriate relief was filed in the trial court the jurisdiction of the trial court had not been divested under subdivision (a)(3); the case, therefore, was not then pending in the appellate division, and the motion was not properly cognizable in the Supreme Court. State v. Rannels, 333 N.C. 644, 430 S.E.2d 254 (1993).

Applied in State v. Ervin, 38 N.C. App. 261, 248 S.E.2d 91 (1978); State v. Craver, 70 N.C. App. 555, 320 S.E.2d 431 (1984); State v. Aiken, 73 N.C. App. 487, 326 S.E.2d 919 (1985).

Cited in State v. Morris, 41 N.C. App. 164, 254 S.E.2d 241 (1979); State v. Evans, 46 N.C. App. 327, 264 S.E.2d 766 (1980); State v. Hawkins, 110 N.C. App. 837, 431 S.E.2d 503 (1993).

§ 15A-1449. Security for costs not required.

In criminal cases no security for costs is required upon appeal to the appellate division. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

The requirement for security for costs in criminal appeals is eliminated by this section.

§ 15A-1450. Withdrawal of appeal.

An appeal may be withdrawn by filing with the clerk of superior court a written notice of the withdrawal, signed by the defendant and, if he has counsel, his attorney. The clerk must forward a copy of the notice to the clerk of the appellate division in which the case is pending. The appellate division may enter an appropriate order with regard to the costs of the appeal. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section provides a simplified means of withdrawal of an appeal. The notice is given to the Clerk of Superior Court. It is then the responsibility of the Clerk of Superior Court to notify the appellate division if the case has gone forward. No limitations are placed upon the right to withdraw the appeal other than that the notice, which must be written, must be signed by defendant and his counsel if he is represented, and of course, he may be ordered to pay costs. If the appeal is withdrawn, it is no longer pending and the stay pursuant to G.S. 15A-1451 is terminated.

§ 15A-1451. Stay of sentence; bail; no stay when State appeals.

(a) When a defendant has given notice of appeal:
(1) Payment of costs is stayed.

(2) Payment of a fine is stayed.
(3) Confinement is stayed only when the defendant has been released pursuant to Article 26, Bail.
(4) Probation or special probation is stayed.

(b) The effect of dismissal of charges is not stayed by an appeal by the State, and the defendant is free from such charges unless they are subsequently reinstated as a result of the determination upon appeal. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section carries forward in more detail the comments of prior G.S. 15-184 with regard to stay of costs and sentence when an appeal has been taken. Subsection (b) makes clear that if the State appeals from the dismissal of charges, the effect of the dismissal is not stayed during the pendency of the appeal. The defendant is free of the charge unless the State prevails upon the appeal and has the charges reinstated pursuant to the directive of the appellate division.

CASE NOTES

Cited in Allen v. Lowder, 875 F.2d 82 (4th Cir. 1989).

§ 15A-1452. Execution of sentence upon determination of appeal; compliance with directive of appellate court.

(a) If an appeal is withdrawn, the clerk of superior court must enter an order reflecting that fact and directing compliance with the judgment.

(b) If the appellate division affirms the judgment in whole or in part, the clerk of superior court must file the directive of the appellate division and order compliance with its terms.

(c) If the appellate division orders a new trial or directs other relief or proceedings, the clerk must file the directive of the appellate court and bring the directive to the attention of the district attorney or the court for compliance with the directive. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section recodifies and makes a more complete statement of the concepts of prior G.S. 15-186.

§ 15A-1453. Ancillary actions during appeal.

(a) While an appeal is pending in the appellate division, the court in which the defendant was convicted has continuing authority to act with regard to the defendant's release pursuant to Article 26, Bail.

(b) The appropriate court of the appellate division may direct that additional steps be taken in the trial court while the appeal is pending, including but not limited to:
(1) Appointment of counsel.
(2) Hearings with regard to matters relating to the appeal.
(3) Taking evidence or conducting other proceedings relating to motions for appropriate relief made in the appellate division, as provided in G.S. 15A-1418. (1977, c. 711, s. 1.)

OFFICIAL COMMENTARY

This section provides for actions which necessarily must be taken at the trial level while an appeal is pending. Subsection (a) provides that the trial court may act with regard to bail without directive from the appellate division. As to other matters, the appellate division may direct additional steps in the trial court. Of particular note is subdivision (b)(3) which expressly authorizes the direction of hearings or other proceedings relating to motions for appropriate relief which now may be made in the appellate division in accordance with G.S. 15A-1418. See the commentary to that section.

SUBCHAPTER XV. CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Article 100.

Capital Punishment.

§ 15A-2000. Sentence of death or life imprisonment for capital felonies; further proceedings to determine sentence.

(a) Separate Proceedings on Issue of Penalty. —

(1) Except as provided in G.S. 15A-2004, upon conviction or adjudication of guilt of a defendant of a capital felony in which the State has given notice of its intent to seek the death penalty, the court shall conduct a separate sentencing proceeding to determine whether the defendant should be sentenced to death or life imprisonment. A capital felony is one which may be punishable by death.

(2) The proceeding shall be conducted by the trial judge before the trial jury as soon as practicable after the guilty verdict is returned. If prior to the time that the trial jury begins its deliberations on the issue of penalty, any juror dies, becomes incapacitated or disqualified, or is discharged for any reason, an alternate juror shall become a part of the jury and serve in all respects as those selected on the regular trial panel. An alternate juror shall become a part of the jury in the order in which he was selected. If the trial jury is unable to reconvene for a hearing on the issue of penalty after having determined the guilt of the accused, the trial judge shall impanel a new jury to determine the issue of the punishment. If the defendant pleads guilty, the sentencing proceeding shall be conducted before a jury impaneled for that purpose. A jury selected for the purpose of determining punishment in a capital case shall be selected in the same manner as juries are selected for the trial of capital cases.

(3) In the proceeding there shall not be any requirement to resubmit evidence presented during the guilt determination phase of the case, unless a new jury is impaneled, but all such evidence is competent for the jury's consideration in passing on punishment. Evidence may be presented as to any matter that the court deems relevant to sentence, and may include matters relating to any of the aggravating or mitigating circumstances enumerated in subsections (e) and (f) of this section. Any evidence which the court deems to have probative value may be received.

(4) The State and the defendant or his counsel shall be permitted to present argument for or against sentence of death. The defendant or defendant's counsel shall have the right to the last argument.

(b) Sentence Recommendation by the Jury. — Instructions determined by the trial judge to be warranted by the evidence shall be given by the court in its charge to the jury prior to its deliberation in determining sentence. The court shall give appropriate instructions in those cases in which evidence of the defendant's mental retardation requires the consideration by the jury of the provisions of G.S. 15A-2005. In all cases in which the death penalty may be authorized, the judge shall include in his instructions to the jury that it must consider any aggravating circumstance or circumstances or mitigating circumstance or circumstances from the lists provided in subsections (e) and (f) which may be supported by the evidence, and shall furnish to the jury a written list of issues relating to such aggravating or mitigating circumstance or circumstances.

After hearing the evidence, argument of counsel, and instructions of the court, the jury shall deliberate and render a sentence recommendation to the court, based upon the following matters:

(1) Whether any sufficient aggravating circumstance or circumstances as enumerated in subsection (e) exist;

(2) Whether any sufficient mitigating circumstance or circumstances as enumerated in subsection (f), which outweigh the aggravating circumstance or circumstances found, exist; and

(3) Based on these considerations, whether the defendant should be sentenced to death or to imprisonment in the State's prison for life.

The sentence recommendation must be agreed upon by a unanimous vote of the 12 jurors. Upon delivery of the sentence recommendation by the foreman of the jury, the jury shall be individually polled to establish whether each juror concurs and agrees to the sentence recommendation returned.

If the jury cannot, within a reasonable time, unanimously agree to its sentence recommendation, the judge shall impose a sentence of life imprisonment; provided, however, that the judge shall in no instance impose the death penalty when the jury cannot agree unanimously to its sentence recommendation.

(c) Findings in Support of Sentence of Death. — When the jury recommends a sentence of death, the foreman of the jury shall sign a writing on behalf of the jury which writing shall show:

(1) The statutory aggravating circumstance or circumstances which the jury finds beyond a reasonable doubt; and

(2) That the statutory aggravating circumstance or circumstances found by the jury are sufficiently substantial to call for the imposition of the death penalty; and,

(3) That the mitigating circumstance or circumstances are insufficient to outweigh the aggravating circumstance or circumstances found.

(d) Review of Judgment and Sentence. —

(1) The judgment of conviction and sentence of death shall be subject to automatic review by the Supreme Court of North Carolina pursuant to procedures established by the Rules of Appellate Procedure. In its review, the Supreme Court shall consider the punishment imposed as well as any errors assigned on appeal.

(2) The sentence of death shall be overturned and a sentence of life imprisonment imposed in lieu thereof by the Supreme Court upon a finding that the record does not support the jury's findings of any aggravating circumstance or circumstances upon which the sentencing court based its sentence of death, or upon a finding that the sentence of death was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor, or upon a finding that the sentence of death is excessive or disproportionate to the penalty imposed in similar cases, considering both the crime and the defendant. The Supreme Court may suspend consideration of death penalty cases until such time as the court determines it is prepared to make the comparisons required under the provisions of this section.

(3) If the sentence of death and the judgment of the trial court are reversed on appeal for error in the post-verdict sentencing proceeding, the Supreme Court shall order that a new sentencing hearing be conducted in conformity with the procedures of this Article.

(e) Aggravating Circumstances. — Aggravating circumstances which may be considered shall be limited to the following:

(1) The capital felony was committed by a person lawfully incarcerated.

(2) The defendant had been previously convicted of another capital felony or had been previously adjudicated delinquent in a juvenile proceeding for committing an offense that would be a capital felony if committed by an adult.

(3) The defendant had been previously convicted of a felony involving the use or threat of violence to the person or had been previously adjudicated delinquent in a juvenile proceeding for committing an offense that would be a Class A, B1, B2, C, D, or E felony involving the use or threat of violence to the person if the offense had been committed by an adult.

(4) The capital felony was committed for the purpose of avoiding or preventing a lawful arrest or effecting an escape from custody.

(5) The capital felony was committed while the defendant was engaged, or was an aider or abettor, in the commission of, or an attempt to commit, or flight after committing or attempting to commit, any homicide, robbery, rape or a sex offense, arson, burglary, kidnapping, or aircraft piracy or the unlawful throwing, placing, or discharging of a destructive device or bomb.

(6) The capital felony was committed for pecuniary gain.

(7) The capital felony was committed to disrupt or hinder the lawful exercise of any governmental function or the enforcement of laws.

(8) The capital felony was committed against a law-enforcement officer, employee of the Department of Correction, jailer, fireman, judge or justice, former judge or justice, prosecutor or former prosecutor, juror or former juror, or witness or former witness against the defendant, while engaged in the performance of his official duties or because of the exercise of his official duty.

(9) The capital felony was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel.

(10) The defendant knowingly created a great risk of death to more than one person by means of a weapon or device which would normally be hazardous to the lives of more than one person.

(11) The murder for which the defendant stands convicted was part of a course of conduct in which the defendant engaged and which included the commission by the defendant of other crimes of violence against another person or persons.

(f) Mitigating Circumstances. — Mitigating circumstances which may be considered shall include, but not be limited to, the following:

(1) The defendant has no significant history of prior criminal activity.
(2) The capital felony was committed while the defendant was under the influence of mental or emotional disturbance.
(3) The victim was a voluntary participant in the defendant's homicidal conduct or consented to the homicidal act.
(4) The defendant was an accomplice in or accessory to the capital felony committed by another person and his participation was relatively minor.
(5) The defendant acted under duress or under the domination of another person.
(6) The capacity of the defendant to appreciate the criminality of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law was impaired.
(7) The age of the defendant at the time of the crime.
(8) The defendant aided in the apprehension of another capital felon or testified truthfully on behalf of the prosecution in another prosecution of a felony.
(9) Any other circumstance arising from the evidence which the jury deems to have mitigating value. (1977, c. 406, s. 2; 1979, c. 565, s. 1; c. 682, s. 9; 1981, c. 652, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 7, s. 5; 1995, c. 509, s. 14; 2001-81, s. 1; 2001-346, s. 2.)

Editor's Note. — This Article was enacted by Session Laws 1977, c. 406, s. 2. Section 6 of that act provided: "In the event that it is determined by the Supreme Court of North Carolina or by the Supreme Court of the United States that a sentence of death may not be constitutionally imposed for a capital offense for which the death penalty is provided by this act, the punishment for that offense shall be imprisonment in the State's prison for life." Section 7 of that act is a severability clause. Section 8 of that act provided: "The provisions of this act shall apply to murders committed on or after the effective date of this act."

Session Laws 1979, c. 682, s. 9, inserted "or a sex offense" near the middle of subdivision (5) of subsection (e). Section 12 of that act is a severability clause. Section 13 of that act provided: "All laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed, provided however, nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any portion of Article 26 of Chapter 14 which relates to offenses against public morality and decency." Section 14 of that act provided: "This act shall become effective January 1, 1980, and shall apply to offenses occurring on and after that date. Nothing herein shall be construed to render lawful acts committed prior to the effective date of this act [January 1, 1980] and unlawful at the time the said acts occurred; and nothing contained herein shall be construed to affect any prosecution instituted under any section repealed by this act pending on the effective date hereof."

Session Laws 2001-81, s. 1, which amended this section, is effective July 1, 2001, and applicable to pending and future cases, except that the provisions of the act regarding the State's notice of intent to seek the death penalty do not apply to defendants indicted in capital cases before the effective date of the act.

Session Laws 2001-392, s. 1, provides: "The Supreme Court is respectfully requested to adopt rules to improve North Carolina's system of capital punishment by establishing minimum standards of training and experience for court-appointed defense attorneys, prosecutors, and judges handling capital cases. These rules should specify the minimum number of years of legal experience and the minimum amount of felony case experience required of any court-appointed defense attorney, prosecutor, or judge participating in the trial of a capital case, and may also require specialized training in capital case litigation for any or all of those participants in capital trials."

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-81, s. 1, effective July 1, 2001, substituted "Except as provided...to seek the death penalty" for "Upon conviction or adjudication of guilt of a defendant of a capital felony" at the beginning of subdivision (a)(1); and inserted "of this section" following "subsections (e) and (f)" in the second sentence in subdivision (a)(3). See editor's note for applicability.

Session Laws 2001-346, s. 2, effective October 1, 2001, and applicable to trials docketed to begin on or after that date, inserted the second sentence in subsection (b).

CASE NOTES

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Editor's Note. — The opinions below were rendered prior to the 2001 amendment to this section by Session Laws 2001-81, and enactment of § 15A-2004, giving the district attorney discretion as to whether to seek the death penalty for a capital case.

Constitutionality. — For discussion of the constitutionality of the North Carolina death penalty statutes, see State v. Barfield, 298 N.C. 306, 259 S.E.2d 510 (1979), cert. denied, 448 U.S. 907, 100 S. Ct. 3050, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1137, rehearing denied, 448 U.S. 918, 101 S. Ct. 41, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1181 (1980); State v. Kirkley, 308 N.C. 196, 302 S.E.2d 144 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Shank, 322 N.C. 243, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988).

The statutory scheme for determining the sentence in a capital case under this section is not unconstitutional on its face. State v. Rook, 304 N.C. 201, 283 S.E.2d 732 (1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1038, 102 S. Ct. 1741, 72 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1982).

The death penalty statute is not unconstitutional on the ground that it constitutes cruel and unusual punishment, nor does the statute impermissibly extend the court's jurisdiction without a constitutional amendment in violation of N.C. Const., Art. IV, § 12, as subsection (d) of this section vests automatic review in the Supreme Court of North Carolina and provides standards and guidelines for review of the death sentence by the Supreme Court. State v. Williams, 304 N.C. 394, 284 S.E.2d 437 (1981).

The constitutionality of the death penalty statute has been repeatedly upheld. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983); State v. Oliver, 309 N.C. 326, 307 S.E.2d 304 (1983); State v. Maynard, 311 N.C. 1, 316 S.E.2d 197, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 963, 105 S. Ct. 363, 83 L. Ed. 2d 299 (1984), aff'd, 943 F.2d 407 (4th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1110, 112 S. Ct. 1211, 117 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1992); State v. Boyd, 311 N.C. 408, 319 S.E.2d 189 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1030, 105 S. Ct. 2052, 85 L. Ed. 2d 324 (1985); State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 468 U.S. 1227, 105 S. Ct. 28, 82 L. Ed. 2d 920 (1984) in light of State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

The North Carolina Supreme Court reaffirmed its position that the North Carolina death penalty statute does not violate the U.S. Const., Amends. VIII and XIV or N.C. Const., Art. I, §§ 19 and 27. State v. McHone, 334 N.C. 627, 435 S.E.2d 296 (1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1046, 114 S. Ct. 1577, 128 L. Ed. 2d 220 (1994).

Subsection (d) of this section is not unconstitutional. State v. Lawson, 310 N.C. 632, 314 S.E.2d 493 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1120, 105 S. Ct. 2368, 86 L. Ed. 2d 267 (1985), 510 U.S. 1171, 114 S. Ct. 1208, 127 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1994).

Subdivision (e)(9) is constitutional on its face. State v. Young, 312 N.C. 669, 325 S.E.2d 181 (1985).

The North Carolina capital murder scheme is not unconstitutional under Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 92 S. Ct. 2726, 33 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1972), as permitting subjective discretion and discrimination in imposing the death penalty. State v. Maynard, 311 N.C. 1, 316 S.E.2d 197, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 963, 105 S. Ct. 363, 83 L. Ed. 2d 299 (1984), aff'd, 943 F.2d 407 (4th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1110, 112 S. Ct. 1211, 117 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1992).

The United States Supreme Court says the federal Constitution does not prohibit the use of absolute prosecutorial discretion in determining which cases to prosecute for first-degree murder so long as such discretionary decisions are not based on race, religion, or some other impermissible classification, and the North Carolina Supreme Court is not inclined to interpret the Constitution to require more. If prosecutors are to be "guided" in the exercise of this kind of discretion, it is the province of the legislature and not the Court to so provide. State v. Lawson, 310 N.C. 632, 314 S.E.2d 493 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1120, 105 S. Ct. 2368, 86 L. Ed. 2d 267 (1985), 510 U.S. 1171, 114 S. Ct. 1208, 127 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1994).

The Supreme Court would decline to reconsider its prior holdings upholding the constitutionality of the death penalty statute. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

The North Carolina jury process in first degree murder cases is constitutional. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

This section is not unconstitutional. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 249, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

The North Carolina death penalty statute is neither unconstitutionally vague nor overbroad and is not applied in a discriminatory and discretionary manner. State v. Roper, 328 N.C. 337, 402 S.E.2d 600, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 902, 112 S. Ct. 280, 116 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1991).

Petitioner failed to establish that North Carolina's capital sentencing scheme violates the U.S. Constitution. Ward v. French, 989 F. Supp. 752 (E.D.N.C. 1997), aff'd, 165 F.3d 22 (4th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1124, 119 S. Ct. 1780, 143 L. Ed. 2d 809 (1999).

North Carolina's sentencing scheme does not give the jury an option to exercise impermissible discretion or to administer the death penalty in an arbitrary and capricious manner. Ward v. French, 989 F. Supp. 752 (E.D.N.C. 1997), aff'd, 165 F.3d 22 (4th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1124, 119 S. Ct. 1780, 143 L. Ed. 2d 809 (1999).

This section as it read prior to the 2001 amendment by Session Laws 2001-81 did not conflict with Article IV, Section 18 of the North Carolina Constitution; in other words, the district attorney's former lack of discretion as to whether to try a defendant capitally or noncapitally for first-degree murder did not impermissibly conflict with the prosecutor's constitutional duty to prosecute criminal actions on behalf of the state, although he did have broad discretion in a homicide case to determine whether to try a defendant for first-degree murder, second-degree murder, or manslaughter. State v. Blakeney, 352 N.C. 287, 531 S.E.2d 799 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1117, 121 S. Ct. 868, 148 L. Ed. 2d 780 (2001).

Construction with Other Law — The court properly rejected the defendant's challenge to the jury instruction on the basis of the adequate and independent state procedural rule set forth in § 15A-1419(a)(3) and not because it was statutorily obliged to do so by this section. Fisher v. Lee, 215 F.3d 438 (4th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1095, 121 S. Ct. 822, 148 L. Ed. 2d 706 (2001).

Rules of Evidence Inapplicable to Sentencing Proceedings. — In sentencing proceedings the Rules of Evidence do not limit the trial courts discretion over the scope of cross-examination because they do not apply. State v. Warren, 347 N.C. 309, 492 S.E.2d 609 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1109, 118 S. Ct. 1681, 140 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1998).

Evidence Admissible. — A witness psychologist's report was admissible in a sentencing hearing after it was used to cross-examine another witness. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

The holding in McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), did not invalidate North Carolina's capital sentencing statute or any part thereof; at most the decision invalidated only those jury instructions requiring unanimity on mitigating circumstances in a capital sentencing proceeding, and because the invalidated jury instructions amount only to trial error and do not arise from any deficiency inherent in the statute itself, the statute remains constitutional and in full force and effect. State v. McKoy, 327 N.C. 31, 394 S.E.2d 426 (1990).

Death penalty statute does not violate constitutional right to privacy. State v. Jerrett, 309 N.C. 239, 307 S.E.2d 339 (1983).

Procedure Held Constitutionally Adequate. — Procedure during sentencing phase, whereby the jury was instructed to determine (1) whether there were aggravating circumstances; (2) whether the aggravating circumstances were sufficient to warrant a death sentence; (3) whether there were mitigating circumstances; and (4) whether the aggravating circumstances outweighed the mitigating ones, satisfied all requirements to which defendant was constitutionally entitled. Rook v. Rice, 783 F.2d 401 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 478 U.S. 1022, 106 S. Ct. 3315, 92 L. Ed. 2d 745 (1986).

There is no constitutional infirmity in the use of the word "duty" in jury instructions to explain the jury's responsibility to act after it has unanimously made the statutory findings during the sentencing phase of the trial. McDougall v. Dixon, 921 F.2d 518 (4th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1223, 111 S. Ct. 2840, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1009, 502 U.S. 922, 112 S. Ct. 334, 116 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1991).

The rights guaranteed by this section are anchored in the prohibition under U.S. Const., Amend. VIII against cruel and unusual punishment in that the statute requires consideration of the character and record of the individual offender and the circumstances of the particular offense as a constitutionally indispensable part of the process of inflicting the penalty of death. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

General statistical studies of the operation of the death penalty, showing that a person is more likely to be executed if the murder victim is white and the chance is more likely yet if the defendant is black, could not be used by defendant to show a violation of his rights under U.S. Const., Amends. VIII and XIV or under N.C. Const., Art. I, § 19. State v. Green, 329 N.C.

686, 406 S.E.2d 852 (1991).

Unanimity Requirement for Finding of Mitigating Factors Unconstitutional. — The unanimity requirement in North Carolina's capital sentencing scheme, which prevents the jury from considering, in deciding whether to impose the death penalty, any mitigating factor that the jury does not unanimously find, violates the federal Constitution by preventing the sentencer from considering all mitigating evidence. McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Each juror must be allowed to consider all mitigating evidence in deciding whether aggravating circumstances outweigh mitigating circumstances, and whether the aggravating circumstances, when considered with any mitigating circumstances, are sufficiently substantial to justify a sentence of death. Such consideration of mitigating evidence may not be foreclosed by one or more jurors' failure to find a mitigating circumstance. McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

But there is no constitutional requirement that a juror must consider a mitigating circumstance found by another juror to exist. What is constitutionally required is that jurors be individually given the opportunity to consider and give weight to whatever mitigating evidence they deem to be valid. State v. Miller, 339 N.C. 663, 455 S.E.2d 137, rehearing denied, 340 N.C. 118, 458 S.E.2d 183 (1995).

A state may not limit a sentencer's consideration of mitigating evidence merely because it places the same limitation on consideration of aggravating circumstances. McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Evidence presented during the guilt determination phase of a capital case is competent and admissible as a matter of law during a capital sentencing proceeding in the same case; therefore evidence recorded from defendant's prior trial was properly admitted where witness asserted his privilege against incrimination. State v. McLaughlin, 341 N.C. 426, 462 S.E.2d 1 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1133, 116 S. Ct. 956, 133 L. Ed. 2d 879 (1996).

Discretion of District Attorney. — Prior to the 2001 amendment to this section and enactment of § 15A-2004, while the district attorney had broad discretion to decide in a homicide case whether to try defendant for first-degree murder, second-degree murder, or manslaughter, he/she had no discretion whether to try defendant capitally or noncapitally for first-degree murder. State v. Rorie, 348 N.C. 266, 500 S.E.2d 77 (1998).

Duty of Prosecution. — The prosecutor has a duty to strenuously present the state's case, to use every legitimate means to bring about a just conviction and, in a capital case, that duty may be extended to present arguments for the sentence of death. State v. Daniels, 337 N.C. 243, 446 S.E.2d 298 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 953, 130 L. Ed. 2d 895 (1995).

Failure of District Attorney to Timely File Petition. — As a sanction for the district attorney's failure to timely file a petition for a pretrial conference pursuant to Gen. Rules. Prac., Rule 24, the trial court exceeded its authority by prohibiting the state from seeking the death penalty where defendant was charged with first-degree murder. State v. Rorie, 348 N.C. 266, 500 S.E.2d 77 (1998).

This section does not mandate the death penalty, and it does not limit the sentencer's consideration of any relevant information offered by the defendant. McDougall v. Dixon, 921 F.2d 518 (4th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1223, 111 S. Ct. 2840, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1009, 502 U.S. 922, 112 S. Ct. 334, 116 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1991).

Constitutionality of Instruction on Weighing of Factors. — Court's instructions that the jury must recommend a sentence of death if it found that the mitigating circumstances were insufficient to outweigh the aggravating circumstances and if it found that the aggravating circumstances were sufficiently substantial to call for the death penalty when considered with the mitigating circumstances did not impair the jury's fair consideration of evidence in mitigation of the crime. State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

Legislative Intent in Specifying Aggravating Circumstances. — By enacting specific aggravating circumstances to be considered in capital sentencing, the legislature intended that a jury having found one of those statutory aggravating circumstances to exist must give it some weight in aggravation when determining the appropriate sentence to recommend. State v. Laws, 325 N.C. 81, 381 S.E.2d 609 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence aff'd, State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 127, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174, rehearing denied, 502 U.S. 1001, 112 S. Ct. 627, 116 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1991).

Georgia Statute Compared. — This section resembles in many respects that adopted by Georgia and found constitutional in Gregg v.

Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859 (1976), primarily on the grounds that it reliably guides the sentencer's exercise of discretion in determining whether to impose the death penalty. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982).

Maryland Statute Compared. — North Carolina capital sentencing procedure differs significantly from Maryland's sentencing scheme which the Supreme Courts in Mills v. Maryland, 486 U.S. 367, 108 S. Ct. 1860, 100 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1988) declared unconstitutional, and the North Carolina capital-sentencing procedure conforms with federal constitutional requirements. State v. McKoy, 323 N.C. 1, 372 S.E.2d 12 (1988), death sentence vacated and case remanded, McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Intent Requirement of Enmund v. Florida. — Under Enmund v. Florida, 458 U.S. 782, 102 S. Ct. 3368, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1140 (1982), which construed and applied U.S. Const., Amend. XIII, before he may be sentenced to death, a participant must have killed or attempted to kill or intended or contemplated that life would be taken. This requirement is met if the defendant intended or contemplated that lethal force would be used if it became necessary to effectuate the crime. State v. Reese, 319 N.C. 110, 353 S.E.2d 352 (1987), overruled on other grounds, State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997).

It is not necessary that a capital defendant be the only person who delivered fatal blows to the victim, in order for him to be executed. It is enough if the capital defendant is one of two or more who delivered fatal blows. State v. Stokes, 319 N.C. 1, 352 S.E.2d 653 (1987).

Purpose. — This section is drafted and implemented so as to preclude the arbitrary and capricious imposition of the death penalty upon any segment of the State's population. State v. Williams, 304 N.C. 394, 284 S.E.2d 437 (1981).

Section 15A-1334—not a part of Article 100—has no application to capital sentencing proceedings which are conducted pursuant to § 15A-2000. This, the only remnant of the common law right of allocution remaining in capital cases, is the right to present strictly legal arguments to the presiding judge as to why no judgment should be entered. State v. Green, 336 N.C. 142, 443 S.E.2d 14, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1046, 115 S. Ct. 642, 130 L. Ed. 2d 547 (1994).

A charge of first-degree murder carries with it the possibility of a sentence of death and must therefore be, and is, subject to additional safeguards. State v. Strickland, 307 N.C. 274, 298 S.E.2d 645 (1983).

This Article does not create a new offense or add new elements to the crime of first-degree murder; the statutes merely set forth sentencing standards to guide the jury's discretion to the end that the death penalty will not be imposed arbitrarily or capriciously. State v. Williams, 304 N.C. 394, 284 S.E.2d 437 (1981).

The Fair Sentencing Act was inapplicable where the defendant was sentenced under this section for convictions of three counts of first-degree murder, and not under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Taylor, 332 N.C. 372, 420 S.E.2d 414 (1992).

For discussion of factors governing interpretation of the death penalty statute, see State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

Bifurcated Proceedings Constitutional. — The bifurcated trial proceedings of this section, in which the same jury determines both the guilt and punishment issues are constitutional. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

"Death Qualified" Jury Constitutional. — It is not unconstitutional to be tried by a "death qualified" jury. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982); State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 125, 362 S.E.2d 513 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2835, 100 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1988).

The use of challenges for cause to excuse therefrom prospective jurors who are unequivocally opposed to the death penalty is constitutional. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995), overruled on other grounds State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

The applicable constitutional standard permits the excuse of a potential juror for cause if it is established that he would automatically vote against the imposition of capital punishment without regard to any evidence that might be developed at the trial of the case. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L.

Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

"Death qualifying" the jury prior to the guilt determination phase does not result in a guilt prone jury which denies the defendant the right to a fair trial and fair sentencing and subjects him to cruel and unusual punishment in violation of U.S. Const., Amends. VI, VIII, and XIV. State v. Kirkley, 308 N.C. 196, 302 S.E.2d 144 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Shank, 322 N.C. 243, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988).

"Death qualifying" a jury prior to the guilt phase of a trial and permitting the same jury to hear both the guilt and penalty phases of a trial is not unconstitutional. State v. Ladd, 308 N.C. 272, 302 S.E.2d 164 (1983).

The current jury selection process in this State in first-degree murder cases is constitutional. See State v. Maynard, 311 N.C. 1, 316 S.E.2d 197, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 963, 105 S. Ct. 363, 83 L. Ed. 2d 299 (1984), aff'd, 943 F.2d 407 (4th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1110, 112 S. Ct. 1211, 117 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1992).

Defendant was not deprived of her right to a fair trial because her jury was "death qualified." State v. Spangler, 314 N.C. 374, 333 S.E.2d 722 (1985).

Supreme Court would decline to reconsider its holdings on the matter of death-qualifying jury. State v. Woods, 316 N.C. 344, 341 S.E.2d 545 (1986).

Jurors' affirmative response to the question "Is your view of the death penalty such that it would prevent or substantially impair your performing your sworn duties as a juror?" was a valid basis for allowing the prosecutor's challenge for cause, where potential jurors had been indoctrinated by the court and prosecution into the nature of their responsibilities. State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Sentencing Hearing Would Otherwise Be Futile and Meaningless. — If capital cases could be tried by juries which included persons firmly opposed to the maximum prescribed penalty sought by the State, the separate sentencing hearing mandated by this section would almost certainly become a futile and meaningless exercise, contrary to the expressed will of the citizenry in the enactment of capital punishment legislation. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

It is not necessary for jurors to be given basic understanding of the death penalty process before they may be challenged for cause as a result of their answers to certain questions concerning the death penalty. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

A state may use its peremptory challenges to purge a jury of veniremen not excludable for cause under Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 88 S. Ct. 1770, 20 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1967), for scruples about the death penalty. Brown v. Dixon, 891 F.2d 490 (4th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1025, 119 S. Ct. 559, 142 L. Ed. 2d 465 (1998), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 953, 110 S. Ct. 2220, 109 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1990).

It was neither constitutionally nor otherwise improper for the prosecution to use its challenges to excuse potential jurors who were not excludable for cause but who expressed qualms or some hesitancy about their ability to impose the death penalty. State v. Bacon, 326 N.C. 404, 390 S.E.2d 327 (1990).

The defendant is not allowed to rehabilitate a juror who has expressed unequivocal opposition to the death penalty in response to questions propounded by the prosecutor and the trial court. State v. Cummings, 326 N.C. 298, 389 S.E.2d 66 (1990).

Jurors Properly Excused for Cause. — A trial court may excuse for cause a prospective juror whose views regarding the death penalty would prevent or substantially impair the performance of his duty as a juror, and thus where two potential jurors clearly expressed several times that they could not vote for the death penalty under any circumstances, the trial court properly could have concluded that their subsequent equivocation arose out of their desire to perform their duties as jurors according to the dictates of the law and excused them for cause. State v. Miller, 339 N.C. 663, 455 S.E.2d 137, rehearing denied, 340 N.C. 118, 458 S.E.2d 183 (1995).

Court's excusal of juror whose physician had determined that jury duty could cause complications with her pregnancy prior to the sentencing proceeding was not an abuse of discretion. State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

Manner of Execution Not Relevant to Deliberations. — Since the manner of execution is irrelevant to the deliberations of the jury and to the ability of a prospective juror to serve, the court did its duty by allowing excusal for cause of a prospective juror who could not "vote for the death penalty without knowing how it was going to be executed." State v. Smith, 352 N.C. 531, 532 S.E.2d 773 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1419, 149 L. Ed. 2d 360 (2001).

Same Jury Generally to Hear Both Phases of Trial. — Under this section, it is intended that the same jury should hear both phases of the trial unless the original jury is unable to reconvene. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 125, 362 S.E.2d 513 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2835, 100 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1988).

The prosecutor's statements regarding the sentencing phase of defendant's first-degree murder trial, made during jury selection, simply referred to the conditional nature of bifurcated capital prosecutions mandated by this section, and nothing in the statements themselves suggested the prosecutor was attempting to place before the venire prejudicial matters by injecting his own beliefs or personal opinions. State v. Gibbs, 335 N.C. 1, 436 S.E.2d 321 (1993), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1246, 114 S. Ct. 2767, 129 L. Ed. 2d 881 (1994).

Exchange of Jurors for Sentencing Phase Based on Their Convictions as to Death Penalty. — Subdivision (a)(2) of this section permits alternate jurors to serve during the sentencing phase in extraordinary circumstances involving the death, incapacitation or disqualification of an empaneled juror, but does not provide for the exchange of jurors for the sentencing phase based upon their convictions concerning the death penalty. State v. Bondurant, 309 N.C. 674, 309 S.E.2d 170 (1983).

Selecting a jury composed both of those opposed and unopposed to capital punishment for the purpose of determining guilt and then, at the sentencing phase, replacing those opposed by alternates who are unopposed to the death penalty contravenes subdivision (a)(2) of this section, which contemplates that the same jury which determines guilt will recommend the sentence. State v. Bondurant, 309 N.C. 674, 309 S.E.2d 170 (1983).

Allowing jurors opposed to capital punishment to serve during the guilt-innocence determination phase and then replacing them at the sentencing phase would violate subdivision (a)(2) of this section, which contemplates that the same jury which determines guilt will also recommend the sentence to be imposed. State v. Barts, 316 N.C. 666, 343 S.E.2d 828 (1986).

Discretion of Court in Questioning of Jury. — Both the State and defendant have a right to question prospective jurors about their views on the death penalty so as to insure a fair and impartial verdict. However, the trial court is vested with broad discretion in controlling the extent and manner of the inquiry into prospective jurors' qualifications in a capital case. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in reopening the examination of a juror, and then excusing her for cause, when she stated that she could not, after reflection, impose the death sentence. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 125, 362 S.E.2d 513 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2835, 100 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1988).

Imposition of Penalty Not Mandatory. — The present North Carolina death penalty statutes are not mandatory in nature but instead provide for the exercise of guided discretion in the imposition of sentence. State v. Barfield, 298 N.C. 306, 259 S.E.2d 510 (1979), cert. denied, 448 U.S. 907, 100 S. Ct. 3050, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1137, rehearing denied, 448 U.S. 918, 101 S. Ct. 41, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1181 (1980).

Formerly No Discretion as to Whether Case Is Capital or Non-Capital. — Prior to the 2001 amendment to this section and the enactment of § 15A-2004, the question of trying a first degree murder case as capital or non-capital was not within the district attorney's discretion. However, when the State had no evidence of any aggravating circumstance, the district attorney could so inform the court. In doing so, the district attorney was not exercising any discretion as to defendant's sentence, because a jury may not impose a death sentence in the absence of at least one aggravating factor. Rather, by bringing the absence of such factors to the attention of the trial judge, the district attorney was pursuing the laudable goal of avoiding needless judicial proceedings and concomitant waste of judicial resources. State v. Britt, 320 N.C. 705, 360 S.E.2d 660 (1987).

Findings of one judge, relating to whether a case should be tried as a capital case under this section, were not binding on another judge who had heard all the evidence in the case and had to determine the defendant's punishment under the Fair Sentencing Act. State v. Mancuso, 321 N.C. 464, 364 S.E.2d 359 (1988).

Announcement by State That It Will Not Seek Death Penalty. — In a first degree murder case, where the State wishes to announce that it will not seek the death sentence, the State may make its announcement at the close of the guilt phase, but this is not the only permissible moment. Any such announcement must be based upon a genuine lack of evidence to support the submission of any aggravating factors. However, there is nothing to prevent the State from making the announcement at the beginning of the trial. State v. Britt, 320 N.C. 705, 360 S.E.2d 660 (1987).

Jury's Consideration Not to Be Restricted. — The jury's consideration of any factor relevant to the circumstances of the crime or the character of the defendant may not be restricted. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Jury Not Allowed to Disregard Circumstances. — Allowing the jury the discretionary power to completely disregard those circumstances specifically enumerated by the legislature and found from the evidence to exist — whether aggravating or mitigating circumstances — would return the sentencing proceedings in capital cases to the realm of unguided jury discretion, rendering any resulting death sentences constitutionally suspect. State v. Laws, 325 N.C. 81, 381 S.E.2d 609 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence aff'd, State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 127, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174, rehearing denied, 502 U.S. 1001, 112 S. Ct. 627, 116 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1991).

Involvement of Co-defendants. — That capital sentencing must focus on the individual defendant, his crimes, personal culpability, and mitigation, does not also mean that no mention may be made of a co-defendant actively involved at the scene of the crime. State v. Gibbs, 335 N.C. 1, 436 S.E.2d 321 (1993), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1246, 114 S. Ct. 2767, 129 L. Ed. 2d 881 (1994).

Duty of Jury in Assessing Appropriateness of Penalty. — The deliberative process of the jury envisioned by this section is not a mere counting process. The jury is charged with the heavy responsibility of subjectively, within the parameters set out by the statute, assessing the appropriateness of imposing the death penalty upon a particular defendant for a particular crime. Nuances of character and circumstance cannot be weighed in a precise mathematical formula. At the same time, it would be improper to instruct the jury that they may disregard the procedure outlined by the legislature and impose the sanction of death at their own whim. To do so would be to revert to a system pervaded by arbitrariness and caprice. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979).

Under subsection (b) of this statute, the jury is required to consider aggravating factors and mitigating circumstances and then to determine whether the defendant should be sentenced to death or imprisonment in the State's prison for life. These are the only alternatives allowed the jury. Other comments or notations on the verdict sheet are irrelevant. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Discretion of Jury. — Although the jury's sentencing discretion in a capital case is not totally eliminated, it is not unbridled as it must be exercised under the guidance of a carefully defined set of statutory criteria that allows the jury to take into account the nature of the crime and the character of the accused. State v. Silhan, 302 N.C. 223, 275 S.E.2d 450 (1981), overruled in part by State v. Sanderson, 346 N.C. 669, 488 S.E.2d 133, State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997).

Through the exercise of guided discretion, juries in North Carolina are required to assess the appropriateness of imposing the death penalty upon a particular defendant for the commission of a particular crime. It is not the exercise of discretion but the exercise of unbridled discretion which is unconstitutional. State v. Hutchins, 303 N.C. 321, 279 S.E.2d 788 (1981).

By delineating various aggravating and mitigating circumstances, this section equips a jury with the tools it will require if it is to exercise the guided discretion which is constitutionally mandated. State v. Hutchins, 303 N.C. 321, 279 S.E.2d 788 (1981).

The jury may only exercise guided discretion in making the underlying findings required for a recommendation of the death penalty within the carefully defined set of statutory criteria that allow them to take into account the nature of the crime and the character of the accused. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995); State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983); State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982).

Jury may not arbitrarily or capriciously impose or reject a sentence of death. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995); State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983); State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982).

Felony May Support Both Mitigating and Aggravating Circumstance. — The trial court did not err by submitting the statutory mitigating circumstance that the defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity after having submitted the aggravating circumstance that the defendant had been previously convicted of a felony involving the use or threat of violence to the person. State v. Blakeney, 352 N.C. 287, 531 S.E.2d 799 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1117, 121 S. Ct. 868, 148 L. Ed. 2d 780 (2001).

Failure of Jury to Show Weighing of Mitigating and Aggravating Circumstances. — A writing returned by the jury which fails to specifically show that the jury has determined that the mitigating circumstances are insufficient to outweigh the aggravating circumstances found will not support a sentencing recommendation or sentence in a capital case. State v. Coffey, 326 N.C. 268, 389 S.E.2d 48 (1990), cert. denied, — N.C. —, 421 S.E.2d 360 (1992).

Jury must recommend the death penalty if it makes the three findings necessary to support such a sentence under subsection (c) of this section: (1) The statutory aggravating circumstance or circumstances, which the jury finds beyond a reasonable doubt; (2) that the aggravating circumstance or circumstances found by the jury are sufficiently substantial to call for imposition of the death penalty; and, (3) that the mitigating circumstance or circumstances are insufficient to outweigh the aggravating circumstance or circumstances found. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 125, 362 S.E.2d 513 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2835, 100 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1988).

Expression of Jury Concurrence. — Subsection (b) of this section does not specify how or by what method juror concurrence and agreement should be expressed. It does not specifically require that the juror's assent be manifested by spoken word. Rather, the crucial aspect for consideration is whether there was a concurrence with the jury verdict, not the manner in which agreement is manifested. State v. Spruill, 320 N.C. 688, 360 S.E.2d 667 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2833, 100 L. Ed. 2d 934 (1988).

Where a juror makes an affirmative physical act, such as nodding the head, as to the verdict, and there is no evidence that coercion or pressure was placed on the juror, such action by the juror meets the requirement of subsection (b) of this section. State v. Spruill, 320 N.C. 688, 360 S.E.2d 667 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2833, 100 L. Ed. 2d 934 (1988).

Juror Expectations. — The trial court's reference to the possibility of a separate sentencing jury did not violate the defendant's rights under the Eighth Amendment by diluting the responsibility of the jury, nor was it misleading, although the better practice would be for the trial court to make no mention of a different jury at the preliminary stage of the trial. State v. Mitchell, 353 N.C. 309, 543 S.E.2d 830 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 475, — L. Ed. 2d — (2001).

Upon inquiry by the jury, trial court must inform jurors that inability to reach a unanimous verdict should not be their concern but should simply be reported to the court. State v. Smith, 320 N.C. 404, 358 S.E.2d 329 (1987), holding that failure to so instruct, combined with misleading instructions which probably conveyed the erroneous impression that a unanimous decision, either for death or for life imprisonment, was required, constituted plain error warranting a new sentencing hearing.

Reference to Statutory Provision Which Would Minimize Jurors' Role in Their Minds. — In the sentencing phase of a bifurcated trial, a reference to any statutory provision, which would have the effect of minimizing in the jurors' minds their role in recommending the sentence to be imposed, is precluded. The matters which a jury may consider in the sentencing phase of a bifurcated trial are clearly set forth in subsections (e) and (f) of this section. State v. Jones, 296 N.C. 495, 251 S.E.2d 425 (1979).

Suggestion to Jurors That Review Is Available to Correct Their Errors. — The rule precluding any argument which suggests to the jurors that they can depend on judicial or executive review to correct an erroneous verdict and thereby lessen the jurors' responsibility applies with equal force to a sentence recommendation in a bifurcated trial. State v. Jones, 296 N.C. 495, 251 S.E.2d 425 (1979).

Jury Intervention Required. — The death penalty statute does not permit a defendant to plead guilty to first-degree murder and by prearrangement with the State be sentenced to life imprisonment without the intervention of a jury. State v. Howell, 335 N.C. 457, 439 S.E.2d 116 (1994).

A party moving for a new trial grounded upon misrepresentation by a juror during voir dire must show: (1) the juror concealed material information during voir dire; (2) the moving party exercised due diligence during voir dire to uncover the information; (3) and the juror demonstrated actual bias or bias implied as a matter of law that prejudiced the moving party.

State v. Buckom, 126 N.C. App. 368, 485 S.E.2d 319 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 973, 118 S. Ct. 425, 139 L. Ed. 2d 326 (1998).

Argument by prosecutor that the only way the jury could prevent defendant from killing again was to give him the death penalty was not improper. State v. Basden, 339 N.C. 288, 451 S.E.2d 238 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1152, 115 S. Ct. 2599, 132 L. Ed. 2d 845 (1995).

District Attorney's Reference to Parole Statute Was Error. — In a prosecution for murder, during the sentencing phase of a bifurcated trial, the district attorney's reference to the parole statute was erroneous. Neither the State nor the defendant should be allowed to speculate upon the outcome of possible appeals, paroles, executive commutations or pardons. The jury's sentence recommendation should be based solely on their balancing of the aggravating and mitigating factors before them. State v. Jones, 296 N.C. 495, 251 S.E.2d 425 (1979).

When Instruction on Eligibility for Parole Required. — The United States Supreme Court has held that in a capital sentencing proceeding where the state law provides that a defendant sentenced to life imprisonment will not be eligible for parole, it is violative of due process to deny defendant's request for a jury instruction that under state law defendant, if sentenced to life imprisonment, would not be eligible for parole; however, this holding is limited to those situations where the alternative to a sentence of death is life imprisonment without possibility of parole. State v. Robinson, 339 N.C. 263, 451 S.E.2d 196 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 2565, 132 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1995).

Questioning of Prospective Jurors Regarding Parole. — Because defendant could have been eligible for parole, no questioning of prospective jurors during sentencing phase regarding parole eligibility was required to satisfy due process. State v. Robinson, 339 N.C. 263, 451 S.E.2d 196 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 2565, 132 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1995).

The weight any circumstance may be given is a decision entirely for the jury. State v. Kirkley, 308 N.C. 196, 302 S.E.2d 144 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Shank, 322 N.C. 243, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988).

A juror properly may give a nonstatutory circumstance no weight even if the juror finds the circumstance to exist. State v. Miller, 339 N.C. 663, 455 S.E.2d 137, rehearing denied, 340 N.C. 118, 458 S.E.2d 183 (1995).

Jury Decision Must Be Based on Considerations in Subsection (b). — Subsection (b) of this section requires the jury to deliberate and render a sentence recommendation based upon two considerations: (1) whether sufficient aggravating circumstances exist and (2) whether sufficient mitigating circumstances exist which outweigh the aggravating circumstances found. This section specifically requires that the jury sentence recommendation be "based on these considerations," not on unbridled discretion. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

Prerequisite to any jury decision imposing the death penalty the State must prove and the jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt at least one of the enumerated aggravating circumstances listed in subsection (e) of this section, and further, the jury must also find beyond a reasonable doubt: (1) the aggravating circumstances are "sufficiently substantial to call for the imposition of the death penalty"; and (2) the mitigating circumstances are "insufficient to outweigh the aggravating circumstances." State v. Silhan, 302 N.C. 223, 275 S.E.2d 450 (1981), overruled in part by State v. Sanderson, 346 N.C. 669, 488 S.E.2d 133, State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997).

Defense counsel acted improperly where he urged the jurors to base their decision on reasons not based on the mitigating and aggravating evidence presented at the sentencing proceeding. State v. Robinson, 339 N.C. 263, 451 S.E.2d 196 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 2565, 132 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1995).

Individual Poll Required. — Trial court, in questioning the jury collectively and having all members of the jury respond collectively, failed to meet the statutory mandate that the jury be polled individually. State v. Buchanan, 330 N.C. 202, 410 S.E.2d 832 (1991).

The order and form of the issues to be submitted to the jury in capital trials should be substantially as follows: (1) Do you find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of one or more of the following aggravating circumstances? (2) Do you find from the evidence the existence of one or more of the following mitigating circumstances? (3) Do you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the mitigating circumstance or circumstances you have found is, or are, insufficient to outweigh the aggravating circumstance or circumstances you have found? (4) Do you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the aggravating circumstance or circumstances found by you is, or are, sufficiently substantial to call for the imposition of the death penalty when considered with the mitigating circumstance or circumstances found by you? State v. McDougall, 308 N.C. 1, 301 S.E.2d 308, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 197, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983); State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S.

Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), overruled in part State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 900, 118 S. Ct. 248, 139 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1997).

Mathematical Approach Disapproved. — The jury is not required to assign a value to the aggravating circumstances, subtract from it the value of the mitigating circumstances, and then look to the remainder to determine if that value is sufficiently substantial to deserve the death penalty. Such a mechanical mathematical approach to the decision of life or death is disapproved. State v. McDougall, 308 N.C. 1, 301 S.E.2d 308, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 197, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983); 501 U.S. 1223, 111 S. Ct. 2840, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1991).

Thoughtful and full deliberation in an effort to achieve unanimity has only a salutary effect on our judicial system: It tends to prevent arbitrary and capricious sentence recommendations. State v. McCarver, 341 N.C. 364, 462 S.E.2d 25 (1995), cert denied, 517 U.S. 1110, 116 S. Ct. 1332, 134 L. Ed. 2d 482 (1996).

What constitutes a reasonable time for jury deliberation in the sentencing stage should be left to the trial judge's discretion since the trial judge is in the best position to determine how much time is reasonable under the facts of a specific case. State v. Kirkley, 308 N.C. 196, 302 S.E.2d 144 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Shank, 322 N.C. 243, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988).

Burden of Proving Aggravating or Mitigating Circumstances. — Each aggravating or mitigating circumstance must be established by the party who bears the burden of proof and if he fails to meet his burden of proof on any circumstance, that circumstance may not be considered in that case. State v. Kirkley, 308 N.C. 196, 302 S.E.2d 144 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Shank, 322 N.C. 243, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988).

Concession of Guilt and of Aggravating Factors by Defense Counsel. — Statements of defendant's lawyer during penalty phase of capital murder case which involved a concession of guilt and of the existence of two aggravating circumstances did not reflect errors so serious as to have deprived defendant of counsel in the sense of U.S. Const., Amend. VI. Brown v. Dixon, 891 F.2d 490 (4th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1025, 119 S. Ct. 559, 142 L. Ed. 2d 465 (1998), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 953, 110 S. Ct. 2220, 109 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1990).

Defendant's statements to victim concerning his crimes against another victim, if relevant, were admissible pursuant to § 8C-1, Rule 801(d) and were relevant because they tended to show that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel and tended to show the murder was part of a cause of conduct. State v. Lee, 335 N.C. 244, 439 S.E.2d 547 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 891, 115 S. Ct. 239, 130 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1994).

Jury Consideration of Failure to Reach Unanimous Verdict. — It is improper for the jury to consider what may or may not happen in the event it cannot reach a unanimous sentencing verdict. State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982).

Informing the jury of the effect of their failure to reach a unanimous verdict is not permitted. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

Statement that a sentence of life imprisonment would be imposed upon the defendant in the event that the jury was unable to reach unanimous agreement on the proper sentence would be improper, because it would be of no assistance to the jury and would invite the jury to escape its responsibility to recommend the sentence to be imposed. This is true whether such a statement is read by counsel or is contained within the instructions of the trial court. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Refusal to So Instruct Not Error. — Refusing during the sentencing phase of a first-degree murder trial to instruct the jury that its failure to agree unanimously on the sentence within a reasonable time will result in the imposition of a sentence of life imprisonment is not error, as the jury's failure to agree upon a sentence within a reasonable time is not a proper matter for jury consideration. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

It is not error to fail or refuse to instruct the jury that a sentence of life imprisonment will be imposed upon defendant in the event that the jury is unable to reach unanimous agreement on the proper sentence. State v. Smith, 320 N.C. 404, 358 S.E.2d 329 (1987).

Denial of Motion to Impose Life Sentence After Seven Hours of Deliberation. — The trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to impose a life sentence in a capital murder case after the jury had deliberated for seven hours where the jury was considering three separate cases, one of which required consideration of two aggravating and six mitigating factors; another required four aggravating and six mitigating factors; and the third required consideration of three aggravating and six mitigating factors. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Instruction that the trial court would impose a life sentence if the jury could not unanimously agree on a recommendation of punishment would be tantamount to an open invitation for the jury to avoid its responsibility and to disagree. State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982).

Competent Evidence Permitted. — During a capital sentencing proceeding, the State must be permitted to present any competent evidence supporting the imposition of the death penalty. State v. Holden, 346 N.C. 404, 488 S.E.2d 514 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1126, 118 S. Ct. 1074, 140 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1998).

Evidence of Aggravating Circumstances. — The death penalty statute does not permit the State to recommend to the jury during the sentencing proceeding a sentence of life imprisonment when the State has evidence from which a jury could find at least one aggravating circumstance beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Howell, 335 N.C. 457, 439 S.E.2d 116 (1994).

Definition of a Capital Felony. — The General Assembly, when it defined capital felony under this section, meant a crime for which the defendant could receive the death penalty. State v. Bunning, 338 N.C. 483, 450 S.E.2d 462 (1994).

Instruction on Weighing Factors in Aggravation and Mitigation. — Instruction that if the jury found that aggravating circumstances outweighed mitigating circumstances, and that the aggravating circumstances were sufficiently substantial to call for imposition of the death penalty, then it would be the jury's duty to recommend that defendant be sentenced to death is not erroneous. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Although evidence may support the existence of a nonstatutory circumstance, the jury may decide that it is not mitigating; therefore, the court did not err in denying defendant's requested instruction that if the jury found any nonstatutory mitigating circumstances, it must give them some mitigating value. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Jury Instructions Held Proper. — The appellate court rejected the defendants's contention that the trial court's instruction resulted in confusion and may have led to imposition of a death sentence on less than complete jury unanimity and held that the instruction was entirely consistent with the requirements of this section, where the court instructed the jury, pursuant to the pattern instruction, as follows: "Do you unanimously find beyond a reasonable doubt that the mitigating circumstance or circumstances found is, or are, insufficient to outweigh the aggravating circumstance or circumstances found by you?". State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Duty of Prosecutor. — The prosecutor of a capital case has a duty to pursue ardently the goal of persuading the jury that the facts in evidence warrant imposition of the ultimate penalty. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Prosecutor's Statements. — The defendant's constitutional rights under Article I, Sections 19, 23, and 27 of the North Carolina Constitution were not violated by the prosecution's argument in opposition to the "catchall" mitigating circumstance of this section that the jury should not give any mitigating value to the fact that his accomplice was not sentenced to death where the prosecution did not imply that the accomplice's sentence could be treated as a nonstatutory aggravating circumstance. State v. Roseboro, 351 N.C. 536, 528 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1019, 121 S. Ct. 582, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

Trial court does not have the power to overturn a death sentence and is obligated to enter judgments consistent with the jury's unanimous recommendation that defendant be sentenced to death. State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982).

Effect of Guilty Plea on Determination of Sentence. — The question of sentence in a capital case is to be determined in the same manner whether a defendant pleads guilty to the capital offense or is found guilty by a jury. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

A defendant may not plead guilty to first-degree murder and by prearrangement with the State be sentenced to life imprisonment without the intervention of a jury. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

Conditional Guilty Plea Not Permitted. — In a capital case, the trial judge did not err in construing this section and § 15A-2001 as not allowing a defendant to enter a plea of guilty on condition that his sentence be life imprisonment. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 355, 259 S.E.2d 752 (1979).

When Refusal to Sanction Plea Negotiation Proper. — Where, in a capital case, there is evidence tending to show the existence of two aggravating factors, i.e., that the murder occurred in the course of a rape or attempted rape and that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious and cruel, the issue whether the death penalty should be imposed is thus necessarily one for the jury, and it would not be error for the trial court to refuse to sanction a proposed plea negotiation. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

The proper order for the introduction of evidence of aggravating and mitigating circumstances is that the State first offer evidence of the statutory aggravating factors listed in subsection (e) of this section. Defendant then offers evidence of mitigating circumstances listed in subsection (f) of this section. Only then is the State entitled to offer evidence intended to rebut defendant's proffered mitigating circumstances. State v. Taylor, 304 N.C. 249, 283 S.E.2d 761 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3552, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398, rehearing denied, 463 U.S. 1249, 104 S. Ct. 37, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1456 (1983).

Death Penalty Upheld for Felony Murder. — Supreme Court has repeatedly upheld the death penalty in felony murder cases. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

And Is Not Cruel and Unusual Punishment. — The specific contention that the imposition of the death penalty for felony murder constitutes cruel and unusual punishment has been rejected. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

And Legislature May Prescribe Death Penalty for Felony Murder. — Just as the legislature acts within its constitutional power in defining first-degree murder to include felony murder, it is also within its constitutional power to determine that first-degree murder, including felony murder, may be punished by death, providing that the death penalty statute itself is constitutional. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

Rules of Evidence Not Altered. — The language of this section does not alter the usual rules of evidence or impair the trial judge's power to rule on the admissibility of evidence. State v. Cherry, 298 N.C. 86, 257 S.E.2d 551 (1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 941, 100 S. Ct. 2165, 64 L. Ed. 2d 796 (1980).

Evidentiary flexibility is encouraged in the serious and individualized process of life or death sentencing. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Section does not contain a statutorily mandated proscription against use of evidence necessary to prove element of offense as does § 15A-1340.1 et seq. State v. Morris, 59 N.C. App. 157, 296 S.E.2d 309 (1982), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 307 N.C. 471, 299 S.E.2d 227 (1983).

Evidence offered at sentencing must be pertinent and dependable, as in any proceeding, and, if it passes this test in the first instance, it should not ordinarily be excluded. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995).

What Evidence Admissible. — The capital punishment statute provides, in conformity with the constitutional mandates of U.S. Const., Amends. VIII and XIV, that any evidence may be presented at the separate sentencing hearing which the court deems "relevant to sentence" or "to have probative value," including matters related to aggravating or mitigating circumstances. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Admissibility of Evidence Not Presented at Guilt Phase. — Evidence clearly proper for the jury to consider under the statute had it been presented at the guilt phase of the trial is not inadmissible simply because it was introduced at a later stage of the proceedings. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

Lack of Deterrent Effect, Rehabilitation, and Manner of Execution Are Irrelevant. — Evidence offered by the defendant regarding the lack of any deterrent effect of the imposition of the death penalty, the rehabilitative nature of people who have committed even heinous crimes, and the manner of execution in North Carolina was properly excluded by trial court, as such evidence is irrelevant. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

Testimony Is Subject to Cross-Examination. — As a general matter, the truthfulness of any aspect of any witness' testimony may be attacked on cross-examination. This basic rule applies to all trial proceedings, including both the guilt and sentencing phases in capital cases. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Instruction as to When Jury Must Recommend Death Penalty. — It is not error to instruct the jury that it must be recommended that defendant be sentenced to death if it finds that the aggravating circumstances outweigh the mitigating circumstances. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

The jury was correctly informed that it had a duty to recommend a sentence of death if it made the three findings necessary to support such a sentence under subsection (c) of this section, and there is no constitutional infirmity in such an instruction. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Jury instruction was not unconstitutional where it imposed on the jury a duty to return a recommendation of death if it found that the mitigating circumstances were insufficient to outweigh the aggravating circumstances and that the aggravating circumstances were sufficiently substantial to call for the death penalty. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Instruction as to Evidence Admitted During Guilt Phase. — Instruction during sentencing phase that the jury could consider all evidence admitted during the guilt phase was specifically authorized by this section, and there was no error in the judge's failure to instruct the jury not to consider evidence of other murders brought out during the guilt phase, which evidence was relevant and did not create an undue risk of arbitrary imposition of the death penalty. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

Instruction on Parole Eligibility. — Where under the law applicable at the time of defendant's trial, he would have been eligible for parole if given a life sentence, the trial court was neither required nor allowed to give an instruction on the issue of parole eligibility. State v. Miller, 339 N.C. 663, 455 S.E.2d 137, rehearing denied, 340 N.C. 118, 458 S.E.2d 183 (1995).

Competence of Counsel. — Although the death penalty is constitutionally different from other forms of punishment, the standard for measuring the competence of counsel does not vary. Rather, the fact that a defendant risks the death penalty is one fact among many relevant to the evaluation of whether counsel's representation was within the ordinary range of competence. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

The court rejected the defendant's claim that his trial counsel was ineffective in his presentation of expert testimony to support the voluntary intoxication defense, as well as the (f)(2) and (f)(6) mitigating circumstances. Fisher v. Lee, 215 F.3d 438 (4th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1095, 121 S. Ct. 822, 148 L. Ed. 2d 706 (2001).

Scope of argument at the sentencing hearing is governed by the same general rules that apply to argument during the guilt proceedings; consequently, when remarks of the district attorney during such argument, challenged on appeal, were not objected to at trial, the alleged impropriety must be glaring or grossly egregious for Supreme Court to determine that the trial judge erred in failing to take corrective action sua sponte. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S.

Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

In a capital murder case, the court's failure to intervene ex mero motu in the district attorney's sentencing argument was not an abuse of discretion where the district attorney properly stated the law in arguing that the sentence was not purely a matter for the jury's discretion, even though the prosecutor read verses from the Bible which stated a murderer shall be put to death. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Prosecutor's argument that this section was a statute of judgment equivalent to the Biblical law that a murderer shall be put to death was not equivalent to saying that State law is divinely inspired, and was not so improper as to have mandated ex mero motu intervention by the trial court. State v. Brown, 320 N.C. 179, 358 S.E.2d 1 (1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 970, 108 S. Ct. 467, 98 L. Ed. 2d 406 (1988).

Defendant Not Entitled To Make Both First and Last Final Argument. — While clearly providing the defendant with the opportunity to make the final argument at the penalty phase of the trial, neither subdivision (a)(4) nor any other statutory provision gave the defendant the right to make both the first and last arguments. Furthermore, even had this been error, the fact that the defendant received a life sentence rather than the death penalty made the error harmless. State v. Wilson, 315 N.C. 516, 330 S.E.2d 450 (1985).

Defendant always has a statutory right to present the last or final argument during the closing arguments at the sentencing phase, without regard to whether he has presented evidence during that phase. State v. Mitchell, 321 N.C. 650, 365 S.E.2d 554 (1988).

Refusal to Permit Both Defense Counsel to Make Final Arguments as Prejudicial Error. — At the conclusion of the sentencing proceeding in capital murder case, the trial court erred in refusing to permit both counsel for defendant to address the jury during defendant's final argument. This deprived defendant of a substantial right and amounted to prejudicial error. State v. Simpson, 320 N.C. 313, 357 S.E.2d 332 (1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 963, 108 S. Ct. 1230, 99 L. Ed. 2d 430 (1988).

Defendant Not Entitled to Testify Without Being Subjected to Cross-Examination or to Make Unsworn Statements. — The trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for allocution did not violate his rights under this section. State v. Ray, 137 N.C. App. 326, 527 S.E.2d 675 (2000).

Trial for Murder Previously Submitted as Aggravating Circumstance. — Principle of double jeopardy does not preclude trial of defendant for a murder which was submitted to the jury as an aggravating circumstance during the sentencing procedure in a prior trial for a different murder. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

For discussion of whether codefendants who are tried jointly should receive joint or separate sentencing trial, see State v. Oliver, 309 N.C. 326, 307 S.E.2d 304 (1983).

Trial Court's Refusal to Impanel Second Jury Held Appropriate. — Where the trial jury was able to reconvene and decide the penalty issue of a capital murder case, the trial court's refusal to impanel a second jury was entirely appropriate and constitutionally permissible. Subdivision (a)(2) of this section only provides for separate juries to hear the two phases of a capital murder case if the trial jury is unable to reconvene for a hearing on the issue of penalty after having determined the guilt of the accused. Brown v. Rice, 693 F. Supp. 381 (W.D.N.C. 1988), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1025, 119 S. Ct. 559, 142 L. Ed. 2d 465 (1998), rev'd on other grounds sub nom., Brown v. Dixon, 891 F.2d 490 (4th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1025, 119 S. Ct. 559, 142 L. Ed. 2d 465 (1998), cert. denied, 495 U.S. 953, 110 S. Ct. 2220, 109 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1990).

Where defendants were being jointly tried for the same capital offense, when one defendant changed his plea to guilty, it was error for the trial to continue as both a sentencing proceeding as to one defendant and as a trial to determine the guilt or innocence of the other. State v. Hucks, 323 N.C. 574, 374 S.E.2d 240 (1988).

Sentences of death are subject to automatic review by the North Carolina Supreme Court. Ward v. French, 989 F. Supp. 752 (E.D.N.C. 1997), aff'd, 165 F.3d 22 (4th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1124, 119 S. Ct. 1780, 143 L. Ed. 2d 809 (1999).

The trial judge's authority to rule on the admissibility of evidence is not impaired by the language of this section; therefore, the court properly sustained defense counsel's general question of "what kind of things [defendant] would talk with you about" on the ground of relevance and prohibited defense counsel from asking defendant's sister what effect being biracial had on him, since this question related to his thoughts and feelings of which his sister lacked personal knowledge and, in effect, would have elicited unreliable testimony. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000),

Lee, 252 F.3d 676 (4th Cir. 2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 318, 151 L. Ed. 2d 237 (2001).

II. REVIEW OF JUDGMENT AND SENTENCE.

Subsection (d) is not unconstitutional as an impermissible expansion of the Supreme Court's jurisdiction. State v. Williams, 304 N.C. 394, 284 S.E.2d 437 (1981).

Purpose of Subsection (d). — Subsection (d) of this section serves as a check against the capricious or random imposition of the death penalty. State v. Hutchins, 303 N.C. 321, 279 S.E.2d 788 (1981); State v. Hill, 311 N.C. 465, 319 S.E.2d 163 (1984).

Proportionality review serves as check against the random or arbitrary imposition of the death penalty. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

The intended ultimate emphasis of proportionality review under subdivision (d)(2) of this section is upon the independent consideration of the individual defendant and the nature of the crime or crimes which he has committed. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

The purpose of proportionality review is to serve as a check against the capricious or random imposition of the death penalty. State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

A proportionality review is to be undertaken only in cases where both phases of the trial of a defendant have been found to be without error. Only then can the court have before it the true decision of the jury to which great deference should be accorded. State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

For discussion of proportionality review, see State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

The Supreme Court will not necessarily feel bound during its proportionality review to give a citation to every case in the pool of "similar cases" used for comparison. The court has chosen to use all of these "similar cases" for proportionality review purposes. State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

Errors Under McKoy v. North Carolina — Standard of Review. — At least for all trials conducted after State v. Kirkley, 308 N.C. 196, 302 S.E.2d 144 (1983) and before Mills v. Maryland, 486 U.S. 367, 108 S. Ct. 1860, 100 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1988), the Supreme Court will decline to require that a McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990) error be reviewed under the plain error standard when the defendant failed to object at trial to the error, and will instead will apply N.C.R.A.P., Rule 2. State v. Sanderson, 327 N.C. 397, 394 S.E.2d 803 (1990).

Same — State's Burden of Proof. — On appeal, the state must demonstrate that a McKoy error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt because the error is of constitutional dimension. State v. Sanders, 327 N.C. 319, 395 S.E.2d 412 (1990), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1051, 111 S. Ct. 763, 112 L. Ed. 2d 782 (1991).

Because McKoy error under McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369, is of constitutional dimension, the State bears the burden of demonstrating that it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Robinson, 330 N.C. 1, 409 S.E.2d 288 (1991).

The harmless error analysis is to be applied to the review of a unanimity instruction found to be constitutionally erroneous under McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990). State v. Hunt, 330 N.C. 501, 411 S.E.2d 806, cert. denied, 505 U.S. 1226, 112 S. Ct. 3045, 120 L. Ed. 2d 913 (1992).

McKoy Error Rarely Harmless. — It would be a rare case in which a McKoy error could be deemed harmless. State v. Robinson, 330 N.C. 1, 409 S.E.2d 288 (1991).

Proportionality Review Required. — Even though defendant made no argument that his sentence of death was disproportionate to his crimes of first-degree kidnapping and murder, second-degree burglary, and robbery with a dangerous weapon, North Carolina Supreme Court is required to conduct a proportionality review. State v. White, 343 N.C. 378, 471 S.E.2d 593 (1996).

Where there is evidence to support a mitigating circumstance on either of two grounds, and the jury is so instructed, an appellate court should not speculate as to which ground served as the basis of the jury's finding. State v. Robinson, 330 N.C. 1, 409 S.E.2d 288 (1991).

Effect of Victim Impact Evidence. — Admission of victim impact evidence was not plain error, where the murder victims' mothers testified how the murders affected them and their families, but there was no evidence that the jury based its death penalty decision on this testimony. State v. Bowman, 349 N.C. 459, 509 S.E.2d 428 (1998), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1040, 119 S. Ct. 2403, 144 L. Ed. 2d 802 (1999).

Subdivision (d)(2) Protects Against Cruel and Unusual Punishment. — The review mandated by subdivision (d)(2) of this section provides a sufficient constitutional safeguard against the unconstitutional imposition of cruel and unusual punishment. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

The language of subdivision (d)(2) of this section is mandatory. State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

The responsibility placed upon the State by subdivision (d)(2) is as serious as any responsibility placed upon an appellate court. State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

"Finding" Required by Subdivision (d)(2). — Subdivision (d)(2) of this section requires the Supreme Court to determine, as a matter of law, whether (1) the record supports the jury's finding of any aggravating circumstance upon which the trial court based its sentence of death, (2) the sentence of death was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice or any other arbitrary factor, or (3) the sentence of death is excessive or disproportionate to the penalty imposed in similar cases; it neither contemplates nor requires the court to make factual findings. State v. Lawson, 310 N.C. 632, 314 S.E.2d 493 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1120, 105 S. Ct. 2368, 86 L. Ed. 2d 267 (1985), 510 U.S. 1171, 114 S. Ct. 1208, 127 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1994); State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at Sink v. Moore, 267 N.C. 344, 148 S.E.2d 265 (1966) in light of Gray v. Clark, 9 N.C. App. 319, 176 S.E.2d 16 (1970); Sink v. Moore, 267 N.C. 344, 148 S.E.2d 265 (1966), vacated and remanded for further consideration at Lafayette Transp. Serv., Inc. v. County of Robeson, 283 N.C. 494, 196 S.E.2d 770 (1973) in light of Porter v. Suburban San. Serv., Inc., 283 N.C. 479, 196 S.E.2d 760 (1973).

Death sentence imposed upon defendant's conviction of the first-degree murder of his infant son was not excessive or disproportionate. State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

While subdivision (d)(2) of this section uses the word "finding" in prescribing the Supreme Court's review of death sentences, a "finding of fact" as that term is generally understood is not contemplated. Rather, "finding" means a "determination" or a "conclusion." State v. Lawson, 310 N.C. 632, 314 S.E.2d 493 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1120, 105 S. Ct. 2368, 86 L. Ed. 2d 267 (1985), 510 U.S. 1171, 114 S. Ct. 1208, 127 L. Ed. 2d 556 (1994).

Where the court finds no error in the guilt and sentencing phases, it is required to review the record and determine: (1) Whether the record supports the jury's findings of the aggravating circumstances upon which the sentencing court based its sentence of death; (2) whether the sentence was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor; and (3) whether the sentence of death is excessive or disproportionate to the penalty imposed in similar cases, considering both the crime and the defendant. State v. McKoy, 323 N.C. 1, 372 S.E.2d 12 (1988), death sentence vacated and case remanded, McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

The fact that in one or more cases factually similar to the one under review a jury has recommended life imprisonment is not determinative, standing alone, on the issue of whether the death penalty is disproportionate in the case under review. State v. Keel, 337 N.C. 469, 447 S.E.2d 748 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1198, 115 S. Ct. 1270, 131 L. Ed. 2d 147 (1995).

The fact that one, two, or several juries have returned recommendations of life imprisonment in cases similar to the one under review does not automatically establish that juries have consistently returned life sentences in factually similar cases, because the court independently considers the individual defendant and the nature of the crime or crimes which he has committed; therefore, single aggravating circumstance may outweigh a number of mitigating circumstances and may be sufficient to support a death sentence. State v. Bacon, 337 N.C. 66, 446 S.E.2d 542 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1159, 115 S. Ct. 1120, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1083 (1995).

Power of Review in Supreme Court. — Read together, subdivisions (d)(1) and (d)(3) of this section empower the Supreme Court of this State to review errors assigned in the trial and sentencing phases. When prejudicial error is found, the court must order a new sentencing hearing. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979).

Remand for Resentencing. — When the supreme court finds prejudicial error in a sentencing-phase jury instruction in a capital case, it remands the case for resentencing under subdivision (d)(3) and does not reach the question of whether the defendant's sentence of death should be overturned as arbitrary. State v. Flippen, 349 N.C. 264, 506 S.E.2d 702 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1135, 119 S. Ct. 1813, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1015 (1999).

Scope of Review. — The review function of the Supreme Court under subsection (d) of this section should be employed only in those instances where both phases of the trial of a defendant in a capital case have been found to be without error. State v. Martin, 303 N.C. 246, 278 S.E.2d 214, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 933, 102 S. Ct. 431, 70 L. Ed. 2d 240, rehearing denied, 454 U.S. 1117, 102 S. Ct. 693, 70 L. Ed. 2d 655 (1981); State v. Hutchins, 303 N.C. 321, 279 S.E.2d 788 (1981).

In exercising its role in the statutory scheme, the Supreme Court must be sensitive not only to the mandate of the legislature but also to the constitutional dimensions of its review. State v. Martin, 303 N.C. 246, 278 S.E.2d 214, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 933, 102 S. Ct. 431, 70 L. Ed. 2d 240, rehearing denied, 454 U.S. 1117, 102 S. Ct. 693, 70 L. Ed. 2d 655 (1981).

Where there is evidence to support the aggravating factors relied upon by the State, the jury's balancing of aggravation and mitigation will not be disturbed unless it appears that the jury acted out of passion or prejudice or made its sentence arbitrarily. State v. Zuniga, 320 N.C. 233, 357 S.E.2d 898, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 959, 108 S. Ct. 359, 98 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1987).

The supreme court is required to review the record and determine (i) whether the record supports the jury's findings of the aggravating circumstances upon which the court bases its death sentence; (ii) whether the sentence was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor; and (iii) whether the death sentence is excessive or disproportionate to the penalty imposed in similar cases, considering both the crime and the defendant. State v. Hipps, 348 N.C. 377, 501 S.E.2d 625 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1180, 119 S. Ct. 1119, 143 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1999).

Supreme Court accords the utmost diligence and care in its review of capital cases. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995); State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982).

Means for Implementing Review Not Specified. — Subdivision (d)(2) of this section does not require that the Supreme Court establish a particular means for implementing proportionality review. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

The fact that a defendant is sentenced to death while a codefendant receives a life sentence for the same crime is not determinative of proportionality. State v. McNeill, 349 N.C. 634, 509 S.E.2d 415 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 102, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

Subsection (d) of this section does not require records to be presented to the reviewing court indicating which mitigating factors, if any, the jury found during their deliberations. State v. Rook, 304 N.C. 201, 283 S.E.2d 732 (1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1038, 102 S. Ct. 1741, 72 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1982).

Pool of Similar Cases Used for Comparison. — In comparing "similar cases" for purposes of proportionality review, the Supreme Court uses as a pool for comparison purposes all cases arising since the effective date of the capital punishment statute, June 1, 1977, which have been tried as capital cases and reviewed on direct appeal by the Supreme Court and in which the jury recommended death or life imprisonment or in which the trial court imposed life imprisonment after the jury's failure to agree upon a sentencing recommendation within a reasonable period of time. State v. Bondurant, 309 N.C. 674, 309 S.E.2d 170 (1983); State v. Hill, 311 N.C. 465, 319 S.E.2d 163 (1984); State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

For purposes of proportionality review, the pool of similar cases includes all cases arising since the effective date of the capital punishment statute, June 1, 1977, which have been tried as capital cases and reviewed on direct appeal by the supreme court and in which the jury recommended death or life imprisonment or in which the trial court imposed life imprisonment after the jury's failure to agree upon a sentencing recommendation. The pool is further restricted to those cases that the court has found to be free of error in both phases of the trial. State v. Brown, 320 N.C. 179, 358 S.E.2d 1, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 970, 108 S. Ct. 467, 98 L. Ed. 2d 406 (1987).

Where case was similar to cases in which the death penalty has been affirmed, and dissimilar to cases holding the death penalty to be disproportionate and cases in which juries have recommended life sentences, sentence of death was not disproportionate. State v. Carter, 338 N.C. 569, 451 S.E.2d 157 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1107, 115 S. Ct. 2256, 132 L. Ed. 2d 263 (1995).

After comparing this case with other cases in the proportionality pool, focusing on the defendant and the crime, the sentence of death was neither excessive nor disproportionate. State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Citation to Every "Similar Case" Not Necessary. — The Supreme Court will not necessarily feel bound during its proportionality review to give a citation to every case in the pool of "similar cases" used for comparison. State v. Bondurant, 309 N.C. 674, 309 S.E.2d 170 (1983).

District Attorney's Reading of Subsection (d) to Jury Was Error. — During the sentencing phase of a bifurcated prosecution for murder, it was error for the district attorney to read to the jury subsection (d) of this section, relating to the review of judgment and sentence by the Supreme Court. A reference to appellate review has no relevance with regard to the jury's task of weighing any aggravating and mitigating circumstances for the purpose of recommending a sentence. More importantly such reference will, in all likelihood, result in the jury's reliance on the Supreme Court for the ultimate determination of sentence. State v. Jones, 296 N.C. 495, 251 S.E.2d 425 (1979).

Review Held Sufficient. — A proportionately review which considers both the circumstances of the murder, the aggravating circumstances found by the jury and the mitigating circumstances submitted with those in other relevant cases satisfies constitutional requirements and adequately protects against arbitrary, capricious, excessive or disproportionate imposition of the death penalty. State v. Rook, 304 N.C. 201, 283 S.E.2d 732 (1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1038, 102 S. Ct. 1741, 72 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1982).

Where evidence indicated that defendant snatched 4 year old from her yard, took her to his house, raped her, strangled her, and brutally beat her to death, the case fell within the category of first-degree murders for which the death penalty has been upheld as proportionate. State v. Kandies, 342 N.C. 419, 467 S.E.2d 67 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 894, 117 S. Ct. 237, 136 L. Ed. 2d 167 (1996).

The record fully supported the two aggravating circumstances found by the jury and there was no evidence that the sentence of death was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary consideration. State v. Barrett, 343 N.C. 164, 469 S.E.2d 888 (1996).

In conducting a proportionality review the Supreme Court did not find it necessary to extrapolate or analyze in its opinion all, or any particular number, of the cases in its proportionality pool. State v. McKoy, 323 N.C. 1, 372 S.E.2d 12 (1988), sentence vacated and case remanded, McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Trial court had no authority to engage in proportionality review, since that duty is reserved exclusively for the Supreme Court. State v. Payne, 327 N.C. 194, 394 S.E.2d 158 (1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 1092, 111 S. Ct. 977, 112 L. Ed. 2d 1062 (1991).

Error in Instruction Without Effect on Sentence. — In light of trial court's entire instruction regarding defendant's impaired capacity, the jury's finding that defendant was under the influence of an emotional disturbance, and the brutality of the killing, the error in one sentence of the trial court's instruction had no probable effect on the outcome of the sentencing proceeding. State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Instruction requiring unanimity in finding mitigating factors did not lead to imposition of sentence under arbitrary factor. Although the Supreme Court's decision in McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. —, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), condemned certain jury instructions with regard to sentencing and the need for unanimity concerning mitigating circumstances because of their potential for producing an arbitrary result, but where there was no showing that the potential for arbitrariness was actually realized or that defendant's death sentence resulted from arbitrariness, imposition of a life sentence was not required under subdivision (d)(2) of this section. State v. McKoy, 327 N.C. 31, 394 S.E.2d 426 (1990).

Court did not err in permitting murder case to be tried capitally and in permitting death qualification of the jury on grounds that the evidence was insufficient to obtain either a murder conviction or the death penalty. State v. Moxley, 78 N.C. App. 551, 338 S.E.2d 122 (1985), cert. denied, 316 N.C. 384, 342 S.E.2d 904 (1986).

No Prejudice Suffered from Improperly Admitted Testimony. — Because defendant received the minimum allowable sentence for conviction of first-degree murder, he necessarily suffered no prejudice in sentencing from the improperly admitted testimony of his co-conspirator. State v. Harris, 136 N.C. App. 611, 525 S.E.2d 208 (2000).

Jury-Recommended Life Sentence Did Not Affect Capital Nature of Trial. — The fact that the jury recommended and the trial court entered a sentence of life imprisonment did not change the capital nature of that trial or his status as a capital defendant in that trial. Therefore, the unwaivable requirement of his presence applied at every stage of his trial and was violated by the trial court's private bench conferences with prospective jurors. State v. Johnston, 331 N.C. 680, 417 S.E.2d 228 (1992).

Facts held to support the jury's decision to recommend a sentence of death. — State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1986); State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at Arnold v. Varnum, 34 N.C. App. 22, 237 S.E.2d 272 in light of 293 N.C. 740, 241 S.E.2d 513 (1977).

In light of the horrendous nature of the crimes perpetrated upon victim by defendant, who was found guilty of abducting, beating, raping and running over victim with an automobile, the death sentence was not excessive as applied to him. Rook v. Rice, 783 F.2d 401 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 478 U.S. 1022, 106 S. Ct. 3315, 92 L. Ed. 2d 745 (1986); State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Death sentence upheld where two coconspirators in a robbery/murder received life sentences, even though only one of them actually did the shooting, and where the jury found three aggravating factors as to the defendant. State v. Bonnett, 348 N.C. 417, 502 S.E.2d 563 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1124, 119 S. Ct. 909, 142 L. Ed. 2d 907 (1999).

Death sentence was upheld where defendant heinously murdered his eight-month-old son. State v. Atkins, 349 N.C. 62, 505 S.E.2d 97 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1147, 119 S. Ct. 2025, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1999).

Death sentence upheld where the defendant shot his stepfather in the back with a shotgun and again in the neck as he lay on the ground, and where the defendant had been convicted of a felony involving a knife attack on a person in a wheelchair. State v. Locklear, 349 N.C. 118, 505 S.E.2d 277 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1075, 119 S. Ct. 1475, 143 L. Ed. 2d 559 (1999).

The defendant received a fair trial and capital sentencing proceeding, free of prejudicial error, and the judgment of death recommended by the jury was not disturbed where defendant cold-heartedly and calmly planned to obtain the pesticide which he eventually put in his children's Kool-Aid, passed the blame on to his ex-girlfriend, and remained silent as they lay dying or deathly ill in the hospital. State v. Smith, 351 N.C. 251, 524 S.E.2d 28 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 862, 121 S. Ct. 151, 148 L. Ed. 2d 100 (2000).

The imposition of the death penalty for the murder of defendant's aunt was proper where, after being taken into her home, he stole from her, then furtively waited for her in the home, shot her one time because he had "no more bullets;" then, when she attempted to reach the telephone, pulled the cord from the receptacle; and, when she tried to leave the house, took a meat cleaver from the kitchen and struck her with it ten or twelve times as he stood on top of her in the presence of her two foster children. State v. Davis, 353 N.C. 1, 539 S.E.2d 243 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 95, 151 L. Ed. 2d 55 (2001).

Sentence Supported by Other Aggravating Factors Where One Factor Was Unconstitutionally Vague. — Defendant could not demonstrate a miscarriage of justice to excuse the application of the procedural bar of § 15A-1419(a), where the instruction to defendant's sentencing jury on the aggravating factor that the murder was "heinous, atrocious, or cruel" was unconstitutionally vague, because defendant remained eligible for the death penalty based on the subdivision (e)(5) aggravating factor of this section on three circumstances — defendant murdered the victim while in the process of kidnapping, robbing, and raping her. Smith v. Dixon, 14 F.3d 956 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 841, 115 S. Ct. 129, 130 L. Ed. 2d 72 (1994), rehearing denied, 513 U.S. 1105, 115 S. Ct. 785, 130 L. Ed. 2d 678 (1995).

Death Penalty Not Appropriate. — Where a murder conviction was based solely upon the felony murder theory; it had only one aggravating circumstance, pecuniary gain; and the jury found as mitigating circumstances that defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity, that defendant was under the influence of mental or emotional disturbance, that he confessed and cooperated upon arrest, that he voluntarily consented to a search of his motel room, car, home, and storage bin, and that he was abandoned by his natural mother at an early age; and since defendant also pleaded guilty during the trial and acknowledged his wrongdoing before the jury, the murder did not rise to the level of those cases in which the death penalty has been approved. State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988).

Death Penalty Was Appropriate. — The defendant who was convicted of both felony murder and premeditated and deliberate murder received a fair trial and capital sentencing proceeding, free from prejudicial error, and defendant's death sentence was not excessive or disproportionate. State v. Hyde, 352 N.C. 37, 530 S.E.2d 281 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1114, 121 S. Ct. 862, 148 L. Ed. 2d 775 (2001).

Death Penalty Held Appropriate. — Defendant convicted of two counts of first degree murder received a fair trial and capital sentencing proceeding; the evidence supported the aggravating circumstances found by the jury; and the sentences of death were neither disproportionate nor imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice or any other arbitrary factor. State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct. 951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

The death penalty was proper where the defendant knifed the victim to death in the shower of a prison facility after he failed to pay $17.00 owed for items charged at defendant's illegal canteen. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001); State v. Blakeney, 352 N.C. 287, 531 S.E.2d 799 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1117, 121 S. Ct. 868, 148 L. Ed. 2d 780 (2001).

The sentence of death was neither excessive nor disproportionate and the defendant, convicted of killing an 80 year-old lady after breaking into her home by hitting her over the head with a blunt object and leaving her to die in the nude on the floor of her bathroom, received a fair trial and capital sentencing proceeding, free of prejudicial error. State v. Steen, 352 N.C. 227, 536 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1131, 148 L. Ed. 2d 997 (2001).

Defendant's capital resentencing proceeding was fair, free of prejudicial error and not based on any undue influence of passion, prejudice or other arbitrary factor and his sentence was appropriate, where defendant had numerous previous convictions, including first-degree murder of his uncle, larceny, two counts of auto larceny, breaking and entering, several escapes from prison, and three counts of driving under the influence and he himself testified about several incidents of extreme violence with other prison inmates. State v. Cummings, 352 N.C. 600, 536 S.E.2d 36 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1660, 149 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2001).

Where defendant was convicted of first-degree murder on the basis of premeditation and deliberation, the imposition of death was not imposed under the influence of any arbitrary considerations, the evidence fully supported the aggravating circumstance of prior felony convictions, and the sentence of death was not disproportionate. State v. Hamilton, 351 N.C. 14, 519 S.E.2d 514 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1102, 120 S. Ct. 1841, 146 L. Ed. 2d 783 (2000).

The defendant's sentence of death was held appropriate where one of the three victims was shot in his home and another was a 14-year-old boy who was shot five times after hearing the shots that killed the other two victims. State v. Mitchell, 353 N.C. 309, 543 S.E.2d 830 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 475, — L. Ed. 2d — (2001).

A capital sentence was appropriate where the defendant gave victim a severe beating and tied him up on the ground before victim died. State v. Call, 353 N.C. 400, 545 S.E.2d 190 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 628, 151 L. Ed. 2d 548 (2001).

The death sentence was proper even though defendant's accomplice received only life imprisonment where defendant and his accomplice entered the victims' home dressed as ninjas, attacked and killed them with various martial arts weapons. State v. Meyer, 353 N.C. 92, 540 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Death sentence held excessive and disproportionate. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

In a robbery murder case which rested solely on a felony murder theory, where the jury found that the murder was "especially heinous," but also found one or more mitigating circumstances, and where defendant's accomplice had previously been given life imprisonment, as a matter of law the death sentence given to defendant was disproportionate within the meaning of this section, and the Supreme Court would therefore vacate same and order instead that defendant be sentenced to life imprisonment. State v. Stokes, 319 N.C. 1, 352 S.E.2d 653 (1987).

The North Carolina Supreme Court has never found a death sentence disproportionate in a case involving a victim of first-degree murder who was also sexually assaulted. State v. Penland, 343 N.C. 634, 472 S.E.2d 734 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1098, 117 S. Ct. 781, 136 L. Ed. 2d 725 (1997).

The court has never found disproportionality in a case in which the defendant was convicted of killing more than one victim. State v. Harden, 344 N.C. 542, 476 S.E.2d 658 (1996).

Death Penalty Warranted. — The death penalty was not disproprotionate and the trial free of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor where defendant was convicted of first-degree murder based upon premeditation and deliberation, and under the felony murder rule as well as conspiracy to commit murder, conspiracy to commit kidnapping, first-degree burglary and first-degree kidnapping. State v. Lawrence, 352 N.C. 1, 530 S.E.2d 807 (2000).

The death sentence was upheld for defendant who choked, beat, raped, mutilated, and stabbed his victim to death. State v. Grooms, 353 N.C. 50, 540 S.E.2d 713 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Sentence Held Not Excessive or Disproportionate. — Where defendant deliberately sought out not one, but two, lone employees of business establishments in relatively isolated areas during the early morning hours when no one was around, robbed them at gunpoint, and then shot them to death at very close range with a shotgun before fleeing with money, sentence of death imposed was not excessive or disproportionate to the penalty imposed on similar cases, considering both the crime and the defendant. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

Death sentence held not disproportionate within the meaning of subdivision (d)(2) of this section. State v. Robbins, 319 N.C. 465, 356 S.E.2d 279, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 918, 108 S. Ct. 269, 98 L. Ed. 2d 226 (1987).

Sentence of death held not disproportionate. State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at Shelton v. Morehead Mem. Hosp., 76 N.C. App. 253, 332 S.E.2d 499 (1985) in light of 318 N.C. 76, 347 S.E.2d 824 (1986); Shelton v. Morehead Mem. Hosp., 318 N.C. 76, 347 S.E.2d 824 (1986), vacated and remanded for further consideration at Cohn v. Wilkes Gen. Hosp., 127 F.R.D. 117 (W.D.N.C. 1989) in light of Cameron v. New Hanover Mem. Hosp., 58 N.C. App. 414, 293 S.E.2d 901; 307 N.C. 127, 297 S.E.2d 399 (1982), vacated and remanded for further consideration at Cameron v. New Hanover Mem. Hosp., 58 N.C. App. 414, 293 S.E.2d 901 in light of 307 N.C. 127, 297 S.E.2d 399 (1982), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding,.

Death sentences imposed against defendant for three counts of murder were not disproportionate. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

Defendant's violent history as well as his brutality and calculation in the killing and disfiguring of his victim's body and his total lack of remorse for the murder, as demonstrated by his further murders of victim's wife and her small child, fully supported the jury's recommendation of death. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Where the jury found the single aggravating factor that defendant had been previously convicted of another capital felony and found no mitigating circumstances, the death sentence imposed by the jury was held not disproportionate when compared to other cases involving a prior homicide conviction. State v. Cummings, 323 N.C. 181, 372 S.E.2d 541 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Where defendant was involved in two premeditated and deliberated first degree murders, jury found that defendant had been convicted previously of felony involving the use of violence to person — voluntary manslaughter of his wife, and where evidence at trial showed, therefore, that defendant had killed three people, death penalty recommendation was not excessive or disproportionate to penalty imposed in similar cases. State v. McNeil, 324 N.C. 33, 375 S.E.2d 909 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1050, 110 S. Ct. 1516, 108 L. Ed. 2d 756 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Where jury found premeditation and deliberation on defendant's part, victim was defendant's father, attack on victim was unprovoked, and defendant displayed no remorse for his act, the case rose to the level of murders in which court had approved death sentence upon proportionality review. State v. Greene, 324 N.C. 1, 376 S.E.2d 430 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

The death sentence was not excessive or disproportionate, considering both the crime and the defendant where the case included (1) a murder of a wife preceded by many years of physical abuse and threats to her; (2) fear on the part of the victim; (3) a calculated plan of attack by the defendant; (4) a senseless and brutal stabbing in front of other people, found to be "especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel" by the jury; (5) a period of time in which the victim suffered great physical and psychological pain before death; and (6) a distinct failure by the defendant to exhibit remorse after the killing, and where the jury found only one statutory mitigating circumstance, that the crime was committed while the defendant was under the influence of mental or emotional disturbance. State v. Syriani, 333 N.C. 350, 428 S.E.2d 118, cert. denied, 510 U.S. 948, 114 S. Ct. 392, 126 L. Ed. 2d 341 (1993), reh'g denied, 510 U.S. 1066, 114 S. Ct. 745, 126 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1994).

Death penalty upheld where defendant offered companionship to a small, trusting woman but then took her to a secluded place, where he sexually assaulted her, raped her, and brutally beat, tortured, stabbed, and strangled her until she was dead. State v. Moseley, 338 N.C. 1, 449 S.E.2d 412 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1091, 115 S. Ct. 1815, 131 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1995).

Where the jury found only one aggravating circumstance, that the murder was committed for pecuniary gain, and nine mitigating circumstances, the death penalty was not disproportionate. State v. Basden, 339 N.C. 288, 451 S.E.2d 238 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1152, 115 S. Ct. 2599, 132 L. Ed. 2d 845 (1995).

Imposition of death penalty for robbery-murder of store clerk upheld on proportionality review. State v. Miller, 339 N.C. 663, 455 S.E.2d 137, rehearing denied, 340 N.C. 118, 458 S.E.2d 183 (1995).

In robbery-murder case in which defendant had been previously convicted of murder in another state several years earlier and of armed robbery committed one week prior to, death sentence was not disproportionate. State v. Davis, 340 N.C. 1, 455 S.E.2d 627, cert. denied, 516 U.S. 846, 116 S. Ct. 136, 133 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1995).

The sentence of death recommended by the jury and ordered by the court was not disproportionate. State v. Walker, 343 N.C. 216, 469 S.E.2d 919 (1996).

Sentence of death not disproportionate where defendant bound, tortured, and stabbed defendant in the presence of her 14 month old child and left her to bleed to death. State v. Woods, 345 N.C. 294, 480 S.E.2d 647 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 875, 118 S. Ct. 194, 139 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1997).

Sentence of death held not disproportionate where defendant stabbed his girlfriend to death in front of her two sons. State v. McNeill, 346 N.C. 233, 485 S.E.2d 284 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1053, 118 S. Ct. 704, 139 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1998).

Death penalty not disproportionate where defendant killed the victim by intentionally setting her on fire and watching her burn, showed no remorse, and appeared in full control of his mental and physical condition. State v. Tyler, 346 N.C. 187, 485 S.E.2d 599 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1001, 118 S. Ct. 571, 139 L. Ed. 2d 411 (1998).

Death sentence appropriate where victim was only sixteen years old, she was at home, sick and alone, when defendant attempted to break into the house, she was kidnapped and driven around for at least two hours before she was taken to an isolated area where she was raped, choked, and stabbed to death and before defendant killed the victim, but just after he raped her, he placed her in the trunk of his car while he dug her shallow grave. State v. Sanderson, 346 N.C. 669, 488 S.E.2d 133 (1997).

Where defendant had been found guilty of multiple murders, all of women whom he strangled, a sentence of death was not disproportionate. State v. Warren, 348 N.C. 80, 499 S.E.2d 431 (1998).

Where defendant killed the 17-year-old victim in her home, the victim was the mother of his infant son, defendant assaulted with intent to kill the victim's 15-year-old brother, and defendant knew the victims and their family, the death sentence was not disproportionate. State v. Gregory, 348 N.C. 203, 499 S.E.2d 753 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 952, 119 S. Ct. 382, 142 L. Ed. 2d 315 (1998).

Where defendant raped the 11-year old female victim in her home and then kidnapped and killed her and repeatedly stabbed the brother of the victim, a sentence of death was not disproportionate. State v. Billings, 348 N.C. 169, 500 S.E.2d 423 (1998).

The death sentence was properly imposed where the defendant shot and killed three people, and wounded two others, at the business from which he was fired, he randomly shot at people and into doors as he walked through the building, and after the defendant finished shooting, he stood in the doorway of the building smoking a cigarette. State v. Davis, 349 N.C. 1, 506 S.E.2d 455 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1161, 119 S. Ct. 2053, 144 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1999).

The death sentence was warranted for a robbery/murder, where the defendant shot and killed a jewelry store employee during a robbery, the jury found the three aggravating circumstances that the defendant was convicted previously of a violent felony, that the crime was committed for pecuniary gain, and that the crime was part of course of conduct including other violent crimes, and the jury found no mitigating circumstances. State v. Hoffman, 349 N.C. 167, 505 S.E.2d 80 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1053, 119 S. Ct. 1362, 143 L. Ed. 2d 522 (1999).

The death penalty was not disproportionate for the defendant's conviction of the premeditated murder of his wife, where there was a long history of abuse, the shooting occurred in the victim's home, and the defendant had shot and killed his previous wife. State v. Murillo, 349 N.C. 573, 509 S.E.2d 752 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 103, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

Where (1) defendant was convicted of first-degree murder of one victim under the theory of premeditation and deliberation; (2) defendant shot second victim directly in the face at close range; (3) defendant showed no remorse for brutal murder and castration of first victim; and (4) defendant murdered both victims in their homes, sentences of death were neither excessive nor disproportionate. State v. Parker, 350 N.C. 411, 516 S.E.2d 106 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084, 120 S. Ct. 808, 145 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2000).

Where defendant shot former wife and her date in a restaurant after months of premeditation, and expressed regret about running "out of bullets," the record supported the aggravating circumstances found by the jury and the death sentence was not arbitrary, disproportionate, or excessive. State v. Hedgepeth, 350 N.C. 776, 517 S.E.2d 605 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 1274, 146 L. Ed. 2d 223 (2000).

Where evidence showed that defendant murdered first victim in her home before robbing her, then lured second victim to that location and interrupted his strangling of her to make her perform oral sex on him before finally killing her, the court concluded that the record supported the aggravating circumstances found by the jury and the imposition of capital punishment was not arbitrary, disproportionate or excessive. State v. Morganherring, 350 N.C. 701, 517 S.E.2d 622 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1024, 120 S. Ct. 1432, 146 L. Ed. 2d 322 (2000).

The defendant's trial was free of prejudicial error where the death penalty was neither disproportionate nor arbitrarily imposed, was not unconstitutional as applied, and where the aggravating circumstance was supported by evidence. State v. Gell, 351 N.C. 192, 524 S.E.2d 332 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 878, 121 S. Ct. 163, 148 L. Ed. 2d 110 (2000).

The death penalty was not disproportionate where defendant was convicted of nine counts of first-degree murder. State v. Wallace, 351 N.C. 481, 528 S.E.2d 326 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1018, 121 S. Ct. 581, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

The death penalty was not excessive or disproportionate in case involving the premeditated murder of an elderly woman in her home. The fact that defendant raped the victim in her own bed while she was dead or in her "last breath of life" elevated the brutality. State v. Roseboro, 351 N.C. 536, 528 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1019, 121 S. Ct. 582, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

The defendant convicted for murdering his invalid bedridden stepmother by stabbing her numerous times while robbing and killing his father received a fair trial and capital sentencing proceeding, free from prejudicial error, and the sentence of death recommended by the jury and entered by the trial court was not disproportionate. State v. Frogge, 351 N.C. 576, 528 S.E.2d 893 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 994, 121 S. Ct. 487, 148 L. Ed. 2d 459 (2000).

The defendant's trial and capital sentencing proceeding were fair and free of prejudicial error. The sentence was based on properly supported aggravating circumstances, was entered without influence of passion, prejudice or any other arbitrary factor, and was neither excessive nor disproportionate where the evidence indicated that the victim, defendant's wife, suffered before she died, and that she was conscious during at least part of her attack; her hands were discolored and swollen; the left hand had 12 separate broken bones, and the right hand had similar injuries which were defensive-type wounds received while the victim was conscious as she tried to ward off blows to her head. Furthermore, she suffered six to eight individual contusions to the left side of her head, and six to eight abrasions on the back of her neck, with associated bruises. She also sustained 50 to 75 discrete blows to the head, as well as a hole in her skull resulting from a blow with a hammer. State v. Thibodeaux, 352 N.C. 570, 532 S.E.2d 797 (2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1155, 121 S. Ct. 1106, 148 L. Ed. 2d 976 (2001).

Defendant's sentencing proceeding was fair and free of prejudicial error and the sentence of death was neither excessive nor proportionate where he planned the stabbing and burning of his grandmother and nephew. State v. Brewington, 352 N.C. 489, 532 S.E.2d 496 (2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1165, 121 S. Ct. 1126, 148 L. Ed. 2d 992 (2001).

The sentence of death was neither excessive nor disproportionate where defendant gained entrance to victim's apartment by asking to use the phone, then demanded money at knife point and raped her before stabbing her 60 times, and finally set fire to the apartment to cover up the evidence. State v. Smith, 352 N.C. 531, 532 S.E.2d 773 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1419, 149 L. Ed. 2d 360 (2001).

Death sentence was not disproportionate in a case involving multiple murders. State v. Rose, 339 N.C. 172, 451 S.E.2d 211 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct.

2565, 132 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1995).

Death sentences, imposed for two murders which defendants planned over a period of at least nine hours, apparently to avenge the loss of some jewelry the victim allegedly had taken from a relative of the defendants, were not excessive or disproportionate to the penalties imposed in similar cases. State v. Bowie, 340 N.C. 199, 456 S.E.2d 771 (1995).

The court found that this case was not substantially similar to any case in which the Court had found the death penalty disproportionate in that none of those cases involved a double murder. State v. Barrett, 343 N.C. 164, 469 S.E.2d 888 (1996).

Death sentences were not excessive or disproportionate in double murder. State v. Conner, 345 N.C. 319, 480 S.E.2d 626 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 876, 118 S. Ct. 196, 139 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1997).

Sentence of death held proportionate where defendant kidnapped two boys and locked them in the trunk of his car while he murdered their father, then held them in an attic for 8 hours and murdered them. State v. Sidden, 347 N.C. 218, 491 S.E.2d 225 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1097, 118 S. Ct. 1583, 140 L. Ed. 2d 797 (1998).

When compared to other cases in which the death penalty had been judged appropriate, defendant's death penalty sentences were not disproportionate, considering his efforts to conceal the crimes and his lack of remorse. State v. May, 354 N.C. 172, 552 S.E.2d 151 (2001).

Death penalty was not disproportionate where defendant was found guilty of killing and robbing a victim, and the jury found that three of the four aggravating circumstances applied. State v. Fair, — N.C. —, 552 S.E.2d 568, 2001 N.C. LEXIS 944 (2001).

Sentence Not Imposed Under Influence of Passion, Prejudice or Other Arbitrary Consideration. — The record fully supported the aggravating circumstances found by the jury in defendant's first-degree murder trial. Further, there was no indication that the sentence of death was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary consideration. State v. McCollum, 334 N.C. 208, 433 S.E.2d 144 (1993), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1254, 114 S. Ct. 2784, 129 L. Ed. 2d 895, reh'g denied, 512 U.S. 1278, 115 S. Ct. 26, 129 L. Ed. 2d 924 (1994).

Where facts reveal that defendant, using an assault rifle, gunned down a totally defenseless elderly woman after she had already given him all the money from cash register in family run grocery store, and the jury found the existence of various aggravating circumstances, including the fact that defendant had previously been convicted of a felony involving the use or threat of violence to the person, the death sentence was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice or other arbitrary considerations in violation of this section. State v. Peterson, 350 N.C. 518, 516 S.E.2d 131 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1164, 120 S. Ct. 1181, 145 L. Ed. 2d 1087 (2000).

The evidence supported the aggravating circumstances found by the jury; the sentence was entered absent passion, prejudice or any arbitrary factor, and the sentence of death was not excessive or disproportionate as a matter of law. State v. Cheek, 351 N.C. 48, 520 S.E.2d 545 (1999), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1245, 120 S. Ct. 2694, 147 L. Ed. 2d 965 (2000).

Life Sentence Mandatory Where Death Sentence Held Excessive and Disproportionate. — Where the court held as a matter of law that the death sentence imposed was disproportionate within the meaning of this section, the statute required that the court sentence defendant to life imprisonment in lieu of the death sentence. The language of the statute is mandatory, and the court had no discretion in determining whether the death sentence should be vacated. State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988).

New Sentence Hearing Required. — Where the trial court's instructions and the verdict form required the jury to find unanimously the existence of each of eleven submitted mitigating circumstances, two of which were statutory, the mental or emotional disturbance circumstance, subdivision (f)(2), and the impaired capacity circumstance, subdivision (f)(6), and the jury failed to find unanimously any of the mitigating circumstances submitted, although there was substantial evidence to support at least some, if not all, of these circumstances, including those defined by statute, defendant was entitled to a new sentencing hearing. State v. Hedgepeth, 330 N.C. 38, 409 S.E.2d 309 (1991).

Illustrative Cases. — The record, transcript, and briefs in this case fully support the aggravating circumstances found by the jury and the defendant's sentence of death was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice or any other arbitrary factor nor was it disproportional. State v. Greene, 351 N.C. 562, 528 S.E.2d 575 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1041, 121 S. Ct. 635, 148 L. Ed. 2d 543 (2000).

Defendant received a fair trial and capital sentencing proceeding, free from prejudicial error, and the death sentence was not disproportionate where the jury convicted defendant on the basis of premeditation and deliberation and under the felony murder rule and the defendant committed the murder while on pretrial release pending a separate murder trial. State v. Hardy, 353 N.C. 122, 540 S.E.2d 334 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 96, 151 L. Ed. 2d 56 (2001).

Habeas Corpus Relief. — The defendant who claimed that his counsel was ineffective for failing to put forth available evidence that would support the mitigating circumstance that he aided in the apprehension of another capital felon, as recognized by § 15A-2000(f)(8), was not entitled to habeas corpus relief because the state MAR court's denial of defendant's ineffectiveness of counsel claim was not contrary to, or an unreasonable application of, Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 104 S. Ct. 2052 (1984). Bacon v. Lee, 225 F.3d 470 (4th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1420, 149 L. Ed. 2d 360 (2001).

III. AGGRAVATING CIRCUMSTANCES.

A. In General.

Not Unconstitutionally Vague. — The aggravating circumstances listed in this section are not so vague as to violate due process or to allow a jury arbitrarily and capriciously to impose the death penalty. State v. Rook, 304 N.C. 394, 284 S.E.2d 437 (1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1038, 102 S. Ct. 1741, 72 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1982), remanded for resentencing, 317 N.C. 474, 346 S.E.2d 405 (1986).

Constitutionality of Considering Pecuniary Gain. — The fact that pecuniary gain may be considered as an aggravating circumstance in a robbery-murder case does not constitute a violation of U.S. Const., Amend. VIII. State v. Williams, 317 N.C. 474, 346 S.E.2d 405 (1986).

Jury instruction regarding capital felony committed for pecuniary gain to support submission of aggravating circumstance under subdivision (e)(6) of this section did not violate defendant's due process and fair trial rights under N.C. Const., Art. I, §§ 19 and 23; although gun may have been intended for his personal use, it had pecuniary value. State v. Parker, 350 N.C. 411, 516 S.E.2d 106 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084, 120 S. Ct. 808, 145 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2000).

The Supreme Court has never found the death penalty to be disproportionate for a convicted murderer of multiple victims; in fact, that defendant is a multiple killer is a heavy factor to be weighed against the defendant. State v. Garner, 340 N.C. 573, 459 S.E.2d 718 (1995).

A defendant is not constitutionally entitled to an enumeration of aggravating factors to be used against him; statutory notice as contained in subsection (e) of this section is sufficient. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

State May Only Rely on Subsection (e) Circumstances. — The factors enumerated in this section are not elements of the offense but rather are guidelines defining the parameters of the jury's discretion in determining punishment. The only aggravating circumstances upon which the State may rely are enumerated in subsection (e) of this section. State v. Taylor, 304 N.C. 249, 283 S.E.2d 761 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3552, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398, rehearing denied, 463 U.S. 1249, 104 S. Ct. 37, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1456 (1983).

The only aggravating circumstances on which the State may rely are enumerated in subsection (e) of this section and this statutory notice is sufficient to meet the constitutional requirements of due process. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982); State v. Young, 312 N.C. 669, 325 S.E.2d 181 (1985).

The aggravating circumstances which may be considered during the sentencing phase in a capital case are limited to the 11 listed in subsection (e) of this section. State v. Edgerton, 86 N.C. App. 329, 357 S.E.2d 399, rev'd on other grounds, 328 N.C. 319, 401 S.E.2d 351 (1991).

The prosecutor may not argue an aggravating factor not supported by the evidence or not included in the statutory list of aggravating factors found in subsection (e). State v. Zuniga, 320 N.C. 233, 357 S.E.2d 898, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 959, 108 S. Ct. 359, 98 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1987).

There are four statutory aggravating circumstances which, standing alone, the North Carolina Supreme Court has held sufficient to sustain death sentences, and the aggravator in (e)(3) is among them. State v. Burke, 343 N.C. 129, 469 S.E.2d 901 (1996).

A jury may not base its sentencing recommendation on an improper aggravating factor. State v. Zuniga, 320 N.C. 233, 357 S.E.2d 898 (1987).

Notice of State Evidence in Support of Aggravating Circumstances. — Defendant is not entitled to notice of the evidence which the State intends to offer in support of and to prove aggravating circumstances under subsection (e) of this section. State v. Taylor, 304 N.C. 249, 283 S.E.2d 761 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3552, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398, rehearing denied, 463 U.S. 1249, 104 S. Ct. 37, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1456 (1983).

Where the defense counsel was afforded the opportunity, at a time prior to the sentencing hearing, to ascertain the evidence upon which the State would rely through an examination of the district attorney's entire file, the prosecution has satisfied fully the defendant's right to discover evidence under § 15A-903, however, the discovery procedure does not require the State to enumerate specifically the aggravating circumstances upon which it will rely in seeking the death penalty in the sentencing phase. State v. Taylor, 304 N.C. 249, 283 S.E.2d 761 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3552, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398, rehearing denied, 463 U.S. 1249, 104 S. Ct. 37, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1456 (1983).

Subsection (e) of this section gives sufficient notice to meet the constitutional requirements of due process, and a defendant is not entitled to notice of the evidence the State intends to offer in support of and to prove aggravating circumstances. State v. Edgerton, 86 N.C. App. 329, 357 S.E.2d 399, rev'd on other grounds, 328 N.C. 319, 401 S.E.2d 351 (1991).

Indictment Need Not List Aggravating Circumstances. — There is no statutory or case law which requires an indictment in a death case to list the aggravating circumstances upon which the State will rely in seeking the death penalty. State v. Williams, 304 N.C. 394, 284 S.E.2d 437 (1981); State v. Young, 312 N.C. 669, 325 S.E.2d 181 (1985); State v. Dixon, 321 N.C. 117, 361 S.E.2d 562 (1987).

A prosecutor during jury voir dire should limit references to aggravating factors, including the underlying felonies listed in this section, to those of which there will be evidence and upon which the prosecution intends to rely. State v. Payne, 328 N.C. 377, 402 S.E.2d 582 (1991).

The State's disclosure of its desire to present aggravating circumstances not specifically listed under this section did not require the court to intervene ex mero motu where the prosecutor did not misstate the law or ask the jury to consider aggravating circumstances which were not included in this section and where the trial court properly instructed the jurors and cautioned them to apply the law as given, "not as you think it is or as you might like it to be." State v. Cummings, 352 N.C. 600, 536 S.E.2d 36 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1660, 149 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2001).

Error for State to Agree Not to Submit Circumstances. — It was error for the state, via a plea bargain, to agree not to submit aggravating circumstances which could be supported by the evidence. State v. Case, 330 N.C. 192, 410 S.E.2d 57 (1991).

Where there is no evidence of an aggravating circumstance, the prosecutor may so announce, but this announcement must be based upon a genuine lack of evidence of any aggravating circumstance. State v. Case, 330 N.C. 192, 410 S.E.2d 57 (1991).

Trial court may not require State to declare which aggravating factors it intends to rely on at the punishment phase, since subsection (e) of this section sets forth the only aggravating factors the State may rely upon in seeking the death penalty. The notice provided by this section is sufficient to satisfy the constitutional requirements of due process. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 125, 362 S.E.2d 513 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2835, 100 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1988).

When Multiple Aggravating Circumstances May Be Submitted. — There is no error in submitting multiple aggravating circumstances, provided that the inquiry prompted by their submission is directed at distinct aspects of the defendant's character or the crime for which he is to be punished. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

The trial court properly submitted to the jury as aggravating circumstances both that the murder was committed during the course of a felony (burglary), and that the murder was part of a course of conduct which involved commission of other crimes of violence against other persons. The trial court properly instructed the jury not to consider the same evidence as the basis of more than one aggravating circumstance, that different evidence supported each aggravating circumstance, and that the two circumstances were not inherently duplicative. State v. Lawrence, 352 N.C. 1, 530 S.E.2d 807 (2000).

Substantial separate evidence supported the submission of jury instructions regarding aggravating circumstances under both subdivision (e)(5) of this section (defendant murdered one victim while engaged in the murder of another) and subdivision (e)(11) of this section (defendant murdered one victim while engaged in the commission of malicious castration on another). State v. Parker, 350 N.C. 411, 516 S.E.2d 106 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084, 120 S. Ct. 808, 145 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2000).

Multiple Factors Improper. — Where the trial court submitted to the jury as statutory aggravating circumstances whether a murder was committed for pecuniary gain, and whether the murder was committed while defendant was engaged in the commission of a burglary it was improper for the trial court to submit two aggravating circumstances supported by the same evidence and defendant was entitled to a new capital sentencing proceeding. State v. Howell, 335 N.C. 457, 439 S.E.2d 116 (1994).

Submission of Multiple Factors Upheld. — As the circumstance of violent course of conduct directed the jury's attention to the factual circumstances of defendant's crimes, while the circumstance of witness elimination required the jury to consider not defendant's actions but his motive in shooting a man in a defenseless posture, there was no error in submitting both of these aggravating circumstances to the jury. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

Where the State presented distinct evidence that defendant committed both robbery and kidnapping against the victim during the course of a murder, the trial court properly submitted the subdivision (e)(5) circumstance twice. State v. Cheek, 351 N.C. 48, 520 S.E.2d 545 (1999), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1245, 120 S. Ct. 2694, 147 L. Ed. 2d 965 (2000).

Only Statutory Circumstances May Be Considered. — A jury considering the sentence in a capital case in North Carolina may consider only statutory aggravating circumstances. Barfield v. Harris, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1210, 104 S. Ct. 2401, 81 L. Ed. 2d 357, rehearing denied, 468 U.S. 1227, 105 S. Ct. 28, 82 L. Ed. 2d 920 (1984).

Poisoning Not Aggravating Circumstance. — The act of poisoning itself makes a killing first-degree murder, the fact that the poison is administered in small doses over an extended period of time thereby causing excruciating and prolonged pain and suffering was not essential to prove the offense and was properly submitted as an aggravating circumstance. State v. Moore, 335 N.C. 567, 440 S.E.2d 797, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 898, 115 S. Ct. 253, 130 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1994).

The prosecution must be permitted to present any competent, relevant evidence relating to the defendant's character or record which will substantially support the imposition of the death penalty, so as to avoid an arbitrary or erratic imposition of the death penalty. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Bad reputation or character is not listed in subsection (e) as an aggravating circumstance, and the State may not offer evidence of the defendant's bad character in its case in chief. State v. Brown, 320 N.C. 179, 358 S.E.2d 1, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 970, 108 S. Ct. 467, 98 L. Ed. 2d 406 (1987).

Evidence of Violence Despite Stipulation to Same. — The prosecution may establish the use or threat of violence to the person in the commission of a prior felony by the testimony of witnesses, notwithstanding defendant's stipulation of the record of conviction, even where defendant was prepared to stipulate not just to the existence of convictions, but also to the fact that each involved the use or threat of violence. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Vague Heinousness Instruction Was Harmless Error. — Appellate court conducting harmless error review raised by habeas corpus petition concluded that had the jury been properly instructed it would have found that murder was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel and would have imposed the death penalty; thus, the constitutional error that resulted from the jury weighing an unconstitutionally vague heinousness instruction did not have a substantial and injurious influence in determining the jury's verdict. Smith v. Dixon, 14 F.3d 956 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 841, 115 S. Ct. 129, 130 L. Ed. 2d 72 (1994), rehearing denied, 513 U.S. 1105, 115 S. Ct. 785, 130 L. Ed. 2d 678 (1995).

Trial court's instruction to jury relieved the State of its burden to prove each element of this section's aggravating circumstances and constituted plain error, entitling defendant to a new capital sentencing proceeding. State v. Nobles, 350 N.C. 483, 515 S.E.2d 885 (1999).

Perjury may no longer constitute a nonstatutory aggravating factor in North Carolina, effective in all sentencing hearings commencing on or after the certification date of the opinion at hand, including the resentencing of defendant. State v. Vandiver, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1988).

Rule in State v. Vandiver Not to Apply Retroactively. — The rule in State v. Vandiver, 321 N.C. 570, 364 S.E.2d 373 (1980), which holds that perjury may not constitute a nonstatutory aggravating factor in a sentencing decision is not to apply retroactively. State v. Hudson, 331 N.C. 122, 415 S.E.2d 732 (1992), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1055, 113 S. Ct. 983, 122 L. Ed. 2d 136, rehearing denied, 507 U.S. 967, 113 S. Ct. 1404, 122 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1993).

Use of Evidence Necessary to Prove Element of Offense. — This section does not contain a statutorily mandated proscription against the use of evidence necessary to prove an element of the offense as does § 15A-1340.1 et seq. State v. Morris, 59 N.C. App. 157, 296 S.E.2d 309 (1982), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 307 N.C. 471, 299 S.E.2d 227 (1983).

Aggravating Factors Not Unduly Emphasized by Separate Findings. — There is no merit in defendant's contention that since the jury had to answer each aggravating circumstance specifically but did not have to answer which mitigating circumstances they found, that placed undue emphasis on the aggravating circumstances. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Test of When Aggravating Circumstance Erroneously Submitted. — Whether there is a reasonable possibility that the evidence complained might have contributed to the conviction is the test which should be applied when one of the aggravating circumstances listed in subsection (e) of this section is erroneously submitted by the court and answered by the jury against the defendants. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979).

The harmless error test should be applied when one of the aggravating circumstances listed in this section is erroneously submitted by the court and answered by the jury against the defendant. State v. Williams, 304 N.C. 394, 284 S.E.2d 437 (1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 932, 102 S. Ct. 1985, 72 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1982).

It is error to submit the underlying felony as an aggravating circumstance during the sentencing phase of the trial for a capital crime when felony murder is the theory under which defendant was convicted. State v. Jackson, 309 N.C. 26, 305 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

Test for Prejudicial Error in Submission of Aggravating Circumstances to Jury. — Where there is a reasonable possibility that the erroneous submission of an aggravating circumstance tipped the scales in favor of the jury finding that the aggravating circumstances were sufficiently substantial to justify imposition of the death penalty, the test for prejudicial error has been met. State v. Quesinberry, 319 N.C. 228, 354 S.E.2d 446 (1987) vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, 328 N.C. 288, 401 S.E.2d 632 (1991).

Need for Deterrence and That Lesser Sentence Would Depreciate Seriousness May Not Be Considered. — It is error for the trial judge to find as aggravating factors that the sentence imposed was necessary to deter others, and that a lesser sentence would unduly depreciate the seriousness of the crime. These two factors fall within the exclusive realm of the legislature and were presumably considered in determining the presumptive sentence for this offense. While both factors serve as legitimate purposes for imposing an active sentence, neither may form the basis for increasing or decreasing a presumptive term because neither relates to the character or conduct of the offender. State v. Jerrett, 309 N.C. 239, 307 S.E.2d 339 (1983).

Life Sentence Proper Absent Any Aggravating Circumstance. — Where State failed to produce evidence of an aggravating circumstance in either the guilt determination phase or the sentencing phase, the trial court properly imposed a life imprisonment sentence without the intervention of the jury at the sentencing phase of the trial. State v. Calloway, 305 N.C. 747, 291 S.E.2d 622 (1982).

Redundant Aggravating Factors in Robbery-Murder Case. — In the particular context of a premeditated and deliberate robbery-murder where evidence is presented that the robbery was attempted or effectuated for pecuniary gain, the submission of both the aggravating factors enumerated in subdivisions (e)(5) and (e)(6) is redundant and should be regarded as surplusage. Therefore it is error to submit both of these aggravating factors to the jury. State v. Quesinberry, 319 N.C. 228, 354 S.E.2d 446 (1987) vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, 328 N.C. 288, 401 S.E.2d 632 (1991).

In trial for first-degree murder and common-law robbery, where all the evidence suggested that defendant committed the robbery for pecuniary gain, i.e., to resell a ring and radio for cash, submission of both subdivisions (e)(5) and (e)(6) of this section in aggravation was duplicative and constituted error. Moreover, in view of the fact that jury deliberations regarding sentencing lasted two full days, indicating that the jury did not reach a unanimous recommendation of a sentence of death easily, the sentence of death would be set aside and the case remanded for a new capital sentencing hearing. State v. Davis, 325 N.C. 607, 386 S.E.2d 418 (1989), cert. denied, 496 U.S. 905, 110 S. Ct. 2587, 110 L. Ed. 2d 268 (1990).

Instruction on Pecuniary Gain Sufficient. — The trial court properly instructed the jury that it had to find that defendant murdered for the purpose of pecuniary gain in order to find the (e)(6) aggravating circumstance. State v. Davis, 353 N.C. 1, 539 S.E.2d 243 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 95, 151 L. Ed. 2d 55 (2001).

An assault on a woman with intent to commit rape is an act exhibiting violence with the intent to commit a subsequent act of violence; as such it is, as a matter of law, an offense involving the use or threat of violence to the person. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Evidence of Sexual Offense. — Although some photographs were gruesome, they were relevant to illustrate the circumstances of the killing and tended to establish that the murder was committed during the commission of a sexual offense; accordingly, the trial court did not err in admitting these photographs into evidence. State v. Thomas, 344 N.C. 639, 477 S.E.2d 450 (1996), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 824, 118 S. Ct. 84, 139 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1997).

Evidence held sufficient to support finding of murder for pecuniary gain. See State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), overruled in part State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 900, 118 S. Ct. 248, 139 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1997).

Malicious Castration. — Substantial evidence showing that defendant engaged in a violent felony, malicious castration, while committing murder, supported an aggravating circumstances jury instruction under this section. State v. Parker, 350 N.C. 411, 516 S.E.2d 106 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084, 120 S. Ct. 808, 145 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2000).

Where the evidence showed that defendant broke and entered decedent's home with the intent to steal, and there was no evidence that the burglary was motivated by some impulse other than pecuniary gain, the evidence was sufficient to support a finding of the pecuniary gain aggravating circumstance. State v. Chandler, 342 N.C. 742, 467 S.E.2d 636 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 875, 117 S. Ct. 196, 136 L. Ed. 2d 133 (1996).

Evidence Supported Multiple Aggravating Circumstances. — The record supported the jury's finding of aggravating circumstances that the capital felony (murder) was committed during the commission of a felony (burglary) (subdivision (e)(5)), was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel (subdivision (e)(9)), and was part of a course of conduct which included other crimes of violence committed by the defendant against additional victim (subdivision (e)(11)). Nothing in the record suggested that the sentence of death was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor. State v. Gibbs, 335 N.C. 1, 436 S.E.2d 321 (1993), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1246, 114 S. Ct. 2767, 129 L. Ed. 2d 881 (1994).

Arson. — Substantial evidence showing that victim was murdered while defendant was engaged in the commission of arson, supported an aggravating circumstances jury instruction under this section. State v. Parker, 350 N.C. 411, 516 S.E.2d 106 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084, 120 S. Ct. 808, 145 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2000).

No evidence was needed to prove that dwelling was "occupied" for purposes of the arson statute, § 14-58, where the burning of a downstairs apartment, after the murder of that apartment's tenant, and the murder of an upstairs victim were parts of a continuous transaction. State v. Parker, 350 N.C. 411, 516 S.E.2d 106 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084, 120 S. Ct. 808, 145 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2000).

After a thorough review of the transcript, record on appeal briefs, and oral arguments of counsel, the Supreme Court concluded that the evidence supported the jury's finding that each of the aggravating circumstances in subdivisions (e)(9), (e)(10), and (e)(11) existed; that nothing in the record suggested that the sentences of death were imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor. State v. Lynch, 340 N.C. 435, 459 S.E.2d 679 (1995).

Off-Duty Law Enforcement Officers. — Subdivision (e)(8) appropriately includes duly sworn law enforcement officers in uniform performing off-duty, secondary law enforcement related duties, when it is clear that such duties and the pay therefrom are incidental and supplemental to their primary duties of law enforcement on behalf of the general public. State v. Gaines, 332 N.C. 461, 421 S.E.2d 569 (1992), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 900, 118 S. Ct. 248, 139 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1997), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 1038, 113 S. Ct. 1866, 123 L. Ed. 2d 486 (1993).

Murder of Law Enforcement Officer. — The murder of a law enforcement officer engaged in the performance of his official duties differs in kind and not merely in degree from other murders. When in the performance of his duties, a law enforcement officer is the representative of the public and a symbol of the rule of law. The murder of a law enforcement officer engaged in the performance of his duties in the truest sense strikes a blow at the entire public, the body politic, and is a direct attack upon the rule of law which must prevail if our society as we know it is to survive. State v. McKoy, 323 N.C. 1, 372 S.E.2d 12 (1988), death sentence vacated and case remanded, McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

The aggravating circumstance, found in subdivision (e)(8) of this section, reflects the General Assembly's recognition of the common concern that the collective conscience requires the most severe penalty for those who flout our system of law enforcement. State v. McKoy, 323 N.C. 1, 372 S.E.2d 12 (1988), death sentence vacated and case remanded, McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

The trial court correctly submitted to the jury the aggravating circumstance that the murder was committed against a law enforcement officer while engaged in the performance of his official duties, even though the defendant argued that the officer was killed after making an illegal entry into the defendant's home to arrest the defendant. State v. Guevara, 349 N.C. 243, 506 S.E.2d 711 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1133, 119 S. Ct. 1809, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1013 (1999).

Same — Prosecutor's Argument. — It was not improper for the district attorney to argue that the jury should consider the bravery of the law enforcement officers who captured the defendant before he could go into the jurors' homes or rob or hurt someone, that the widow of the deceased highway patrolman had done her painful duty by coming to court each day to see that justice was done, that the law enforcement officers across the State expected the jury to do its duty, and that unless the jury did its duty by recommending death, the jurors would be telling law enforcement officers that their lives and services were without value. Since one of the aggravating circumstances to be considered in determining whether to impose the death penalty is that the person killed was a law enforcement officer in the performance of his official duty, this argument was proper to focus the jurors' attention on this aggravating factor. It was not an appeal to the jury to impose the death penalty because that was what was desired by the public, an argument which is improper. State v. Allen, 323 N.C. 208, 372 S.E.2d 855 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), rehearing denied, 507 U.S. 1046, 113 S. Ct. 1885, 123 L. Ed. 2d 503 (1993).

B. Prior Convictions.

Constitutionality. — The "prior violent felony" aggravating factor is not unconstitutionally vague and overbroad or so inscrutable that a jury is not given sufficient guidance concerning the relevant factors about defendant and the crime which he was found to have committed. State v. Brown, 320 N.C. 179, 358 S.E.2d 1, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 970, 108 S. Ct. 467, 98 L. Ed. 2d 406 (1987).

The "previously convicted" language in subdivision (e)(2) includes capital felonies committed before the events out of which the murder charge arose, even though the conviction came after those events, so long as the conviction precedes the capital sentencing proceeding in which it forms the basis of the subdivision (e)(2) aggravating circumstance. State v. Warren, 348 N.C. 80, 499 S.E.2d 431 (1998).

Court Did Not Usurp Jury's Role in Determining Mitigation. — The trial court did not err by assuming the jury's duty to determine whether defendant's history was significant for mitigating purposes; rather, the trial court listed defendant's prior criminal activity, which was supported by the evidence, and asked that the jury determine the significance of this activity. State v. Davis, 353 N.C. 1, 539 S.E.2d 243 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 95, 151 L. Ed. 2d 55 (2001).

A pardoned prior conviction may not be considered as an aggravating factor during sentencing absent revocation of the pardon by the governor. State v. Clifton, 125 N.C. App. 471, 481 S.E.2d 393 (1997), cert. granted, 346 N.C. 182, 486 S.E.2d 200 (1997), discretionary review improvidently allowed, 347 N.C. 391, 493 S.E.2d 56 (1997).

The reasoning that an increased punishment for a current offense due to a prior pardoned conviction is not punishment for the prior pardoned offense is a legal fiction that conflicts with logic and the administrative duties of the governor; thus, trial court infringed upon the prerogatives of the governor by finding that defendant's prior conviction constituted an aggravating factor. State v. Clifton, 125 N.C. App. 471, 481 S.E.2d 393 (1997), cert. granted, 346 N.C. 182, 486 S.E.2d 200 (1997), discretionary review improvidently allowed, 347 N.C. 391, 493 S.E.2d 56 (1997).

Defendant's conviction under military law of attempted rape was a conviction for a prior felony involving at minimum the "threat of violence." State v. Green, 336 N.C. 142, 443 S.E.2d 14, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1046, 115 S. Ct. 642, 130 L. Ed. 2d 547 (1994).

Subdivision (e)(3) of this section includes felonies which were committed through the use or threat of violence to the person, regardless of whether violence was an element of the offense. McDougall v. Rice, 685 F. Supp. 532 (W.D.N.C. 1988).

Under subdivision (e)(3), a prior felony can be either one which has as an element the use or threat of violence to the person, such as rape or armed robbery, or a felony which does not have the use or threat of violence to the person as an element, but as to which the use or threat of violence to the person was actually involved. State v. Green, 336 N.C. 142, 443 S.E.2d 14, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1046, 115 S. Ct. 642, 130 L. Ed. 2d 547 (1994).

Subdivisions (e)(5) and (e)(3) Compared. — Subdivision (e)(5) of this section differs from subdivision (e)(3) in that it guides the jury's deliberation upon criminal conduct of the defendant which takes place "while" or during the same transaction as the one in which the capital felony occurs, whereas subdivision (e)(3) of this section deals with prior conduct. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979).

Subdivision (e)(3) Refers to Acts Prior to Present Charge. — The "previously convicted" language used by the legislature in subdivision (e)(3) of this section refers to criminal activity conducted prior to the events out of which the charge arose. To decide otherwise would lead to unnecessary duplication within the statute, for subdivision (e)(5) of this section enumerates those felonies which occur simultaneously with the capital felony which the legislature deems worthy of consideration by the jury. It would be improper, therefore, to instruct the jury that this subdivision encompassed conduct which occurred contemporaneously with or after the capital felony with which the defendant is charged. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979).

It will be determined that defendant "had been previously convicted of a felony involving the use or threat of violence to the person" when the prior violent felony occurred before the date the capital defendant committed murder and the capital defendant is convicted of the violent felony at some point prior to the capital trial; the emphasis is on the date of the prior violent felony, not on the date of conviction. State v. Lyons, 343 N.C. 1, 468 S.E.2d 204 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 894, 117 S. Ct. 237, 136 L. Ed. 2d 167 (1996).

When Subdivision (e)(3) Instruction Proper. — It would be improper to instruct the jury upon the factor enumerated in subdivision (e)(3) of this section when there is no evidence which tends to show a felony conviction. Also, the felony for which the defendant has been convicted must be one involving threat or use of violence to the person. It cannot, under this provision, be a crime against property. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979).

Subdivision (e)(3) of this section requires that there be evidence that: (1) defendant had been convicted of a felony, (2) the felony for which be was convicted involved the "use or threat of violence to the person," and (3) the conduct upon which this conviction was based was conduct which occurred prior to the events out of which the capital felony charge arose. If there is no such evidence, it would be improper for the court to instruct the jury on this subsection. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979).

When the State establishes that a defendant of a capital offense was convicted of a felony which involved the use or threat of violence to the person and the conduct upon which this conviction was based occurred prior to the event out of which the capital offense arose, the aggravating circumstance listed in subdivision (e)(3) of this section must be submitted to the jury, and the State need not in fact show him to have acted violently in the previous felony rather than merely showing a previous felony involving violence. State v. Hamlette, 302 N.C. 490, 276 S.E.2d 338 (1981).

For purposes of subdivision (e)(3) of this section, a prior felony can be either one which has as an element of the involvement of the use or threat of violence to the person, such as rape or armed robbery, or a felony which does not have the use or threat of violence to the person as an element, but the use or threat of violence to the person was involved in its commission. State v. McDougall, 308 N.C. 1, 301 S.E.2d 308, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 197, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983); 501 U.S. 1223, 111 S. Ct. 2840, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1991).

Subdivision (e)(3) of this section contains the word "involving," which indicates an interpretation much more expansive than one restricting the jury to consider only felonies having the use or threat of violence to the person as an element. Crimes that do not have violence as an element may be committed by the use or threat of violence. By using "involving" instead of language delimiting consideration to the narrow class of felonies in which violence is an element of the offense, the legislature intended the prior felony in subdivision (e)(3) of this section to include any felony whose commission involved the use or threat of violence to the person. State v. McDougall, 308 N.C. 1, 301 S.E.2d 308, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 197, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983); 501 U.S. 1223, 111 S. Ct. 2840, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1991).

Must Show Prior Convictions Were Felonies. — Where it was not at all clear which, if any, of the prior convictions offered to impeach defendant in his trial for first-degree murder were felonies, the convictions were not admissible for the purpose of establishing the aggravating circumstance set out in subdivision (e)(3) of this section. State v. Porter, 326 N.C. 489, 391 S.E.2d 144 (1990).

Capital Felony Based on Non-Capital Case Appropriately Used as Aggravating Factor. — Although defendant pled guilty to first-degree murder and, under the now repealed § 15-162.1, his case was not a "capital case," the crime of first-degree murder was still a "capital felony" and could be used in his subsequent capital case as an aggravating factor pursuant to this section. State v. Cummings, 352 N.C. 600, 536 S.E.2d 36 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1660, 149 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2001).

Evidence Offered in Support of (e)(3) Instruction. — Expert's testimony regarding defendant's wife's death offered to rebut the defendant's line of questioning and to establish the existence of (e)(3) aggravating circumstances was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. McNeil, 350 N.C. 657, 518 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1024, 120 S. Ct. 1432, 146 L. Ed. 2d 321 (2000).

Offense of voluntary manslaughter fell within this section and that evidence supported trial court's instruction that the death of defendant's wife, who was thrown from a bridge while under the influence of narcotics, involved an inherently violent act. State v. McNeil, 350 N.C. 657, 518 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1024, 120 S. Ct. 1432, 146 L. Ed. 2d 321 (2000).

It is the duty of the trial court to determine whether a rational jury could conclude that a defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity. Then, once the trial court makes such a determination, the mitigating circumstance must then be submitted to the jury, which must decide for itself whether the evidence is sufficient to constitute a significant history of criminal activity, thereby precluding a finding of that circumstance. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988); State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Photographs and other evidence of defendant's prior murder conviction was held admissible to establish the subdivision (e)(3) aggravating circumstance, since the testimony and photographs illustrated the significant injury that was inflicted on the victim of the prior murder, thereby demonstrating the violence used to commit the felony. State v. King, 353 N.C. 457, 546 S.E.2d 570 (2001).

Acts Sufficient to Show Use or Threat of Violence. — The acts of having or attempting to have sexual intercourse with another person who is mentally defective or incapacitated and statutorily deemed incapable of consenting involve the "use or threat of violence to the person" within the meaning of subdivision (e)(3). State v. Holden, 338 N.C. 394, 450 S.E.2d 878 (1994), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1126, 118 S. Ct. 1074, 140 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1998).

It is not necessary to show that the use or threat of violence is an element of a prior felony in order for a prior felony to be used in support of the aggravating circumstance described in subdivision (e)(3) of this section, as in order to substantiate this aggravating circumstance, it is enough to cite a prior felony in which the commission of the felony simply involved use or threat of violence. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Instruction Under Subdivision (e)(3) Held Proper. — Court's instruction, that voluntary manslaughter is crime involving use of violence to the person, did not amount to plain error where defendant did not offer evidence that killing of his former wife did not involve use of violence of the person and where voluntary manslaughter usually — probably always — involves violence to person within meaning and intent of subdivision (e)(3) of this section. State v. McNeil, 324 N.C. 33, 375 S.E.2d 909 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1050, 110 S. Ct. 1516, 108 L. Ed. 2d 756 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Proof of Prior Felony Under Subdivision (e)(3). — The most appropriate way to show the "prior felony" aggravating circumstance would be to offer duly authenticated court records, and the testimony of the victims themselves should not ordinarily be offered unless such testimony is necessary to show that the crime for which the defendant was convicted involved the use or threat of violence to the person; however, if the defendant denies that he was the defendant shown on the conviction record, the occurrence of the conviction, or that the crime involved the use or threat of violence to the person, then the State should be permitted to offer such evidence as it has to overcome defendant's denials. State v. Silhan, 302 N.C. 223, 275 S.E.2d 450 (1981), overruled in part by State v. Sanderson, 346 N.C. 669, 488 S.E.2d 133, State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997).

Where defendant testified he had been convicted of common law robbery within the last ten years, and the State offered criminal records illustrating the conviction, and the robbery victim there testified that defendant used violence in the commission of the robbery, there was substantial evidence that defendant had been convicted of a felony which involved the use or threat of violence to the person and that the felony occurred prior to the murders at issue. State v. Chapman, 342 N.C. 330, 464 S.E.2d 661 (1995), cert. denied, 518 U.S. 1023, 116 S. Ct. 2560, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1077 (1996).

Methods of Proof. — Prior convictions may be proved by stipulation or by original certified copy of the court record, not that they must be. The statute does not preclude other methods of proof. State v. Thompson, 309 N.C. 421, 307 S.E.2d 156 (1983).

Evidence of a defendant's prior conviction for attempted second-degree rape consisting solely of the judgment against the defendant for that offense satisfies the state's burden of proving the aggravating circumstance that a defendant had been previously convicted of a felony involving the use or threat of violence to the person. State v. Holden, 338 N.C. 394, 450 S.E.2d 878 (1994), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1126, 118 S. Ct. 1074, 140 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1998).

Submission of the prior violent felony aggravating circumstance upheld where the State provided certified copies of prior judgments showing one count of accessory after the fact to murder and two counts of accessory after the fact to assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill. State v. Bonnett, 348 N.C. 417, 502 S.E.2d 563 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1124, 119 S. Ct. 909, 142 L. Ed. 2d 907 (1999).

The preferred method for proving a prior conviction includes the introduction of the judgment itself into evidence. State v. Maynard, 311 N.C. 1, 316 S.E.2d 197, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 963, 105 S. Ct. 363, 83 L. Ed. 2d 299 (1984), aff'd, 943 F.2d 407 (4th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1110, 112 S. Ct. 1211, 117 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1992).

The State is entitled to present witnesses in the penalty phase of the trial to prove the circumstances of prior convictions and is not limited to the introduction of evidence of the record of conviction. We hold that the testimony of the circumstances of a prior killing was admissible in the penalty phase of a murder defendant's trial. State v. Roper, 328 N.C. 337, 402 S.E.2d 600, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 902, 112 S. Ct. 280, 116 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1991).

Testimony by a store clerk that the defendant previously had threatened her with a gun and forced her to give him money was admissible in support of the aggravating circumstance that the defendant had been convicted of a prior violent felony involving the use or threat of violence, even though the defendant stipulated to his conviction in that case. State v. Thomas, 350 N.C. 315, 514 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 503, 145 L. Ed. 2d 388 (1999).

Notice of Prior Crimes. — The provisions of subdivision (e)(3) of this section, and defendant's own personal knowledge of his criminal history provide defendant with adequate notice of what crimes might be presented as aggravating circumstances. State v. Roper, 328 N.C. 337, 402 S.E.2d 600, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 902, 112 S. Ct. 280, 116 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1991).

Effect of Introduction of Prior Conviction. — Although the introduction of the record of the prior conviction establishes a prima facie case where the prior felony has the use or threat of violence as an element and could support a peremptory instruction, it is not conclusive upon the jury. Where violence is not an element of the felonious offense, the introduction of the record of conviction would not create a prima facie case. In either event, the State cannot be deprived of an opportunity to carry its burden of proof by the use of competent, relevant evidence. State v. McDougall, 308 N.C. 1, 301 S.E.2d 308, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 197, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983); 501 U.S. 1223, 111 S. Ct. 2840, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1991).

Evidence of Prior Conviction in Another State. — Upon the conviction of first-degree murder, evidence that defendant was convicted for the crime of rape in Virginia in 1969 and was sentenced to 10 years in prison was admissible at the sentencing phase to support the aggravating circumstance that "defendant had been previously convicted of a felony involving the use or threat of violence to the persons." State v. Taylor, 304 N.C. 249, 283 S.E.2d 761 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3552, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398, rehearing denied, 463 U.S. 1249, 104 S. Ct. 37, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1456 (1983).

Previous Conviction of a Felony in Another State. — Because there was no death penalty in Virginia at the time the defendant pled guilty to first-degree murder in that state, that crime was not punishable by death and was not a capital felony as defined in subdivision (a)(1); therefore, the state's evidence did not support the finding of the aggravating circumstance that the defendant had previously been convicted of another capital felony, and a new capital sentencing proceeding was required. State v. Bunning, 338 N.C. 483, 450 S.E.2d 462 (1994).

Additional Evidence in Support of Stipulations under Subdivision (e)(2). — Under subdivision (e)(2) of this section both sides are allowed to introduce evidence in support of aggravating and mitigating circumstances which have been admitted into evidence by stipulation. If the capital felony of which defendant has previously been convicted was a particularly shocking or heinous crime, the jury should be so informed. Conversely, it could be to defendant's advantage that he be allowed to offer additional evidence in support of possible mitigating circumstances, instead of being bound by the State's stipulation. State v. Taylor, 304 N.C. 249, 283 S.E.2d 761 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3552, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398, rehearing denied, 463 U.S. 1249, 104 S. Ct. 37, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1456 (1983).

Proof of a no contest plea and final judgment entered thereon constitute a conviction and may be properly found to be an aggravating circumstance. State v. Holden, 321 N.C. 125, 362 S.E.2d 513 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2835, 100 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1988).

A no contest plea may not be used to aggravate a crime so as to sustain a death sentence under subsection (e) of this section. State v. Petty, 100 N.C. App. 465, 397 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

The state may not be limited to the introduction of the record of a prior conviction when attempting to prove a circumstance in aggravation, whether or not defendant has stipulated to the record of conviction. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

Testimony Not Excessively In-Depth or Prejudicial. — Testimony concerning a prior armed robbery conviction was not excessively in-depth or prejudicial. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

Testimony of Alleged Prior Rape Held Admissible. — Testimony of an alleged prior rape victim that defendant raped her and threatened to rape and kill her daughter three months prior to the present rape charge was offered in response to defendant's request that the court consider the mitigating circumstance that defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity and was, therefore, properly admissible. State v. Roper, 328 N.C. 337, 402 S.E.2d 600, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 902, 112 S. Ct. 280, 116 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1991).

Prior Attempted Rape Conviction. — The trial court did not err in submitting evidence of defendant's prior conviction of attempted rape and instructing the jury that attempted rape is a crime of violence as a matter of law. Green v. French, 978 F. Supp. 242 (E.D.N.C. 1997), aff'd, 143 F.3d 865 (4th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1090, 119 S. Ct. 844, 142 L. Ed. 2d 698 (1999).

Guilty Plea to Second Degree Murder. — Where the record established that defendant had pled guilty to second degree murder and had been sentenced to imprisonment of not less than 22 nor more than 28 years, defendant's prior offense thus involved the unlawful killing of another human being with malice, and was therefore among the most serious of the many felonies involving the use or threat of violence to the person. State v. McKoy, 323 N.C. 1, 372 S.E.2d 12 (1988), death sentence vacated and case remanded, McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Postmortem photographs of prior murder victim were properly admitted to support the existence of the aggravating circumstance that defendant had been previously convicted of a felony involving the use of violence to a person. State v. Warren, 347 N.C. 309, 492 S.E.2d 609 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1109, 118 S. Ct. 1681, 140 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1998).

Prosecutor's Argument Regarding Prior First-Degree Murder Held Proper. — The prosecutor's argument that "no aggravating circumstance anywhere in the United States demands the death penalty like a prior first-degree murder" was not improper and did not warrant the court's ex mero motu intervention. State v. Cummings, 352 N.C. 600, 536 S.E.2d 36 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1660, 149 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2001).

Prior Manslaughter Conviction. — The probative value of defendant's prior conviction for involuntary manslaughter was not outweighed by its prejudicial effect in a capital murder case and was, therefore, clearly admissible as an aggravating factor in the sentencing phase of defendant's trial where defendant admitted the conviction and stipulated to it. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

The murder defendant's California conviction for involuntary manslaughter qualified as a prior violent felony under this section and thus as an aggravating circumstance supporting imposition of the death penalty, even though the conviction occurred 22 years before. State v. Murillo, 349 N.C. 573, 509 S.E.2d 752 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 838, 120 S. Ct. 103, 145 L. Ed. 2d 87 (1999).

Where defendant admitted his prior conviction for involuntary manslaughter and stipulated to it, the evidence of the conviction is clearly admissible in the sentencing phase of defendant's trial as an appropriate method of establishing a subdivision (e)(3) aggravating factor. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

The admission of photographs of defendant's victims in prior murders was relevant to support the existence of the subdivision (e)(2) aggravating circumstance, that defendant had been previously convicted of another capital felony. State v. Warren, 348 N.C. 80, 499 S.E.2d 431 (1998).

Photographs of Prior Violent Crime. — A photograph depicting blood in a victim's grocery store, which resulted from a head injury defendant inflicted on the victim when he struck him with a gun during the robbery, and the accompanying testimony were relevant to support the existence of the aggravating circumstance that defendant had been previously convicted of a felony involving the use of violence to the person. State v. Blakeney, 352 N.C. 287, 531 S.E.2d 799 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1117, 121 S. Ct. 868, 148 L. Ed. 2d 780 (2001).

Defendant was not prejudiced by the admission of evidence of dynamiting convictions, where the court instructed the jury not to consider it and where there was uncontradicted evidence that the defendant had committed armed robbery to support the finding of an aggravating circumstance. State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), overruled in part State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 900, 118 S. Ct. 248, 139 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1997).

Failure to Submit Limiting Instruction Not Plain Error. — In a murder prosecution, where testimony and photographic exhibits of a prior murder were properly admitted into evidence during the sentencing phase, and it was appropriate for the jury to consider the evidence of the prior murder in finding the course of conduct aggravating circumstance, the trial court's failure to submit a limiting instruction to the jury did not rise to the level of plain error entitling defendant relief. State v. Moseley, 338 N.C. 1, 449 S.E.2d 412 (1994), cert. denied, 514

Use of the pattern jury instruction for subdivision (e)(2) in effect at the time of the trial, rather than the instruction in effect at the time of the offense, did not constitute an ex post facto violation since the state of the law, as applicable to defendant, had not changed, and the instruction was merely altered to conform to the law. State v. Warren, 348 N.C. 80, 499 S.E.2d 431 (1998).

Circumstances Supported by Different Evidence. — The trial court's submission of (e)(4) and (e)(5) was not error as the evidence underlying these circumstances was not the same: the (e)(4) circumstance was based on the evidence that the murder itself was affected for the purpose of avoiding lawful arrest; the (e)(5) circumstance was based on the evidence that the murder occurred during the commission of a kidnapping. Because these circumstances were supported by different evidence, they cannot be considered redundant. State v. Sanderson, 336 N.C. 1, 442 S.E.2d 33 (1994).

Evidence Admissible to Prove Circumstances of Prior Felony. — The State properly could introduce search warrant and supporting affidavit into evidence during the sentencing proceeding to prove the circumstances of a prior felony conviction. State v. Robinson, 339 N.C. 263, 451 S.E.2d 196 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 2565, 132 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1995).

The court properly allowed the jury to consider defendant's conviction for assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury which came after the events of this case for a violent felony which was committed prior to the events of this case of capital murder. State v. Burke, 343 N.C. 129, 469 S.E.2d 901 (1996).

Sentence Upheld. — Death sentence was not disproportionate where defendant ambushed and shot down an unarmed victim with an illegal machine gun, and defendant had previously been convicted of a felony involving the use of violence to the person. State v. Wooten, 344 N.C. 316, 474 S.E.2d 360 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1127, 117 S. Ct. 1270, 137 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1997).

C. Avoiding Arrest or Escaping Custody.

Scope of Factor. — The language in former § 15A-1340.4(a)(1)b, like that in subdivision (e)(4) of this section, was intended to include situations where defendant's motivation in committing the second offense was to avoid subsequent detection and apprehension for the underlying crime; it is not to be limited solely to situations where defendant committed the second offense in an effort to avoid an immediate arrest or to escape from custody. State v. Murdock, 325 N.C. 522, 385 S.E.2d 325 (1989).

Not Every Killing Has Effect of Avoiding Arrest. — Subdivision (e)(4) of this section on its face is unambiguous, but it must be construed properly so that instructions on the aggravating circumstances will only be given the jury in appropriate cases. In a broad sense every murder silences the victim, thus having the effect of aiding the criminal in the avoidance or prevention of his arrest. It is not accurate to say, however, that in every case this "purpose" motivates the killing. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979); State v. Williams, 304 N.C. 394, 284 S.E.2d 437 (1981).

When Submission of Factor Is Proper. — Submission of the aggravating circumstance that the capital felony was committed for the purpose of avoiding or preventing a lawful arrest has been upheld in circumstances where a murder was committed to prevent the murder victim from capturing defendant, and where a purpose of the killing was to eliminate a witness. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

The "lawful arrest" referred to in subdivision (e)(4) need not be the defendant's own arrest. State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), overruled in part State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 900, 118 S. Ct. 248, 139 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1997).

Mere Fact of Death Insufficient to Invoke This Factor. — Before the trial court can instruct the jury on the aggravating circumstance in subdivision (e)(4) of this section, there must be evidence from which the jury can infer that at least one of the purposes motivating the killing was defendant's desire to avoid subsequent detection and apprehension for his crime. The mere fact of a death is not enough to invoke this factor. State v. Williams, 304 N.C. 394, 284 S.E.2d 437 (1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 932, 102 S. Ct. 1985, 72 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1982).

The isolated fact that a killing occurred during the commission of a felony is not sufficient to justify the submission of the aggravating circumstance set out in subdivision (e)(4) of this section. There must be evidence from which the jury could infer that at least one of the purposes which motivated the killing was defendant's desire to avoid or prevent a lawful arrest or effect an escape. State v. Williams, 304 N.C. 394, 284 S.E.2d 437 (1981).

While the fact that a killing was committed to avoid a lawful arrest may be a proper aggravating factor where there is competent evidence that the killing was committed for this purpose, such fact must be supported by evidence to that effect. Thus, it was not properly submitted where the only evidence relied upon to support this factor was the killing itself. State v. Reese, 319 N.C. 110, 353 S.E.2d 352 (1987), overruled on other grounds, State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997).

The aggravating circumstance of witness elimination may be presented to the jury only when evidence in addition to the mere fact of death is presented in support of it. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

Statement by Defendant Not Essential. — While a statement made by defendant prior to shooting to the effect that fear of arrest was a motivating factor could be adduced in evidence to support the factor of witness elimination, such statements are not essential to establish this aggravating circumstance. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

Statement Held Not to Raise Inference That Defendant Was Avoiding Lawful Arrest. — Defendant's statement that defendant wanted to leave store parking lot at a slow rate of speed so as not to attract attention, which statement by the defendant occurred after the killing, did not raise a reasonable inference that at the time of the killing defendant killed for the purpose of avoiding lawful arrest. State v. Williams, 304 N.C. 394, 284 S.E.2d 437 (1981).

Murdering Witness to Avoid Arrest. — To put before the jury the aggravating circumstance that the killing was committed to avoid arrest. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988); State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at Hildebrand v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 219 N.C. 402, 14 S.E.2d 252 (1941) in light of Van Leuven v. Akers Motor Lines, 261 N.C. 539, 135 S.E.2d 640 (1964), overruled in part.

Where the State's witness testified that he and defendant schemed to kill the victim to prevent her from exposing their involvement in her husband's death, and the evidence presented made it clear that they then killed the victim's daughter to prevent her from identifying them as the men who had murdered her mother, that aggravating factor was properly submitted to the jury. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Evidence was sufficient to support a rational jury's finding that one of defendant's purposes for killing the victim was to eliminate a witness whom he thought would report him to the authorities where the defendant had made a statement to the police investigators to that effect and his girlfriend testified that he said that "he wasn't for sure about [whether the victim would say anything] . . ." State v. Hyde, 352 N.C. 37, 530 S.E.2d 281 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1114, 121 S. Ct. 862, 148 L. Ed. 2d 775 (2001).

Testimony indicating that instead of wearing a mask during the robbery the defendant planned to kill the victim, whom he knew from his place of work, constituted sufficient, substantial evidence to support submission of this aggravating circumstance. State v. Hardy, 353 N.C. 122, 540 S.E.2d 334 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 96, 151 L. Ed. 2d 56 (2001).

The aggravating circumstance of avoiding arrest or escaping from custody was found where no evidence showed that shooting murder victim either posed a threat to the defendant or tried to resist the robbery, defendant shot the victim from behind from close range with a .44 caliber gun, and the victim was on the ground at the time of the shooting. State v. Fowler, 353 N.C. 599, 548 S.E.2d 684 (2001).

Prosecutor's Insinuations Held Improper. — The prosecutor's insinuations in argument at the close of the sentencing phase of defendant's capital case that victim was killed in order to prevent her from identifying the perpetrators of the robbery were improper, where the prosecution presented absolutely no evidence whatsoever which showed that victim's killing was motivated by a desire to eliminate a potential witness, and where such a contention was not a reasonable inference from the facts which were introduced. State v. Williams, 317 N.C. 474, 346 S.E.2d 405 (1986).

Use of Motive Not Element of Crime. — The motive of defendant, who was convicted of first degree murder based not on the felony murder rule but on the theory that he aided and abetted a premeditated and deliberated killing, was to avoid arrest, and since avoiding arrest is not an element of aiding and abetting a killing, the merger rule did not preclude its use as an aggravating circumstance. State v. Hunt, 323 N.C. 407, 373 S.E.2d 400 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), overruled in part State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 900, 118 S. Ct. 248, 139 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1997).

Evidence Supported Aggravating Circumstances. — The trial court properly allowed the jury to consider and find two related aggravating circumstances where the evidence in support of the aggravating circumstance under subdivision (e)(4) indicated that defendants were motivated by the desire to avoid arrest for stealing a vehicle and where there was also evidence in support of a finding under subdivision (e)(8) that the first trooper was performing an official duty when he stopped the defendant on I-95 for not wearing a seat belt and then learned of defendants' theft and that the deputy was also performing an official duty when he arrived on the scene to provide assistance to a fellow officer. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

D. Felony Murder.

When Subdivision (e)(5) Instruction Proper. — Instruction on the provision of subdivision (e)(5) of this section is appropriate only when the defendant is convicted for first-degree murder upon the theory of premeditation and deliberation. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979).

Instruction Inappropriate. — The trial court's instruction regarding the (e)(5) aggravating circumstance was erroneous as it failed to submit the essential timing element to the jury—the murder occurred while a felony was taking place or during a felony—but its error was not a reversible one violating his constitutional rights. State v. Davis, 353 N.C. 1, 539 S.E.2d 243 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 95, 151 L. Ed. 2d 55 (2001).

Type of Felony. — Nothing in the wording of this section hints at a legislative intent that, to be used as an aggravating circumstance, the prior felony conviction must have involved an intentional use of or a threat of violence to another person. State v. Keel, 337 N.C. 469, 447 S.E.2d 748 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1198, 115 S. Ct. 1270, 131 L. Ed. 2d 147 (1995).

The submission of the aggravating factor that the killing was committed during an armed robbery was erroneous, where the theory of premeditation and deliberation was not properly before the jury, and defendant was properly convicted only on the theory of felony murder. State v. Reese, 319 N.C. 110, 353 S.E.2d 352 (1987), overruled on other grounds, State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997).

When a defendant is convicted of first-degree murder solely under the theory of felony murder, submission of the underlying felony as an aggravating circumstance is error; proof of the underlying felony is an essential element of the State's proof of felony murder thus, the underlying felony cannot provide a basis for additional punishment. State v. Gregory, 340 N.C. 365, 459 S.E.2d 638 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1108, 116 S. Ct. 1327, 134 L. Ed. 2d 478 (1996).

When a defendant is convicted of first degree murder based on both premeditation and deliberation, and felony murder rule, and both theories are supported by the evidence, the underlying felony may be submitted as aggravating circumstance. State v. McNeil, 324 N.C. 33, 375 S.E.2d 909 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1516, 108 L. Ed. 2d 756 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990); State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Where the jury convicts a defendant of first-degree murder based solely on the felony murder rule, it is error for the court to submit the underlying felony as one of the aggravating circumstances defined by subdivision (e)(5); however, when a defendant is convicted of first-degree murder based on both premeditation and deliberation and the felony murder rule, and both theories are supported by the evidence, the underlying felony may be submitted as an aggravating circumstance. State v. Davis, 340 N.C. 1, 455 S.E.2d 627, cert. denied, 516 U.S. 846, 116 S. Ct. 136, 133 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1995).

When a defendant is convicted under the theory of premeditation and deliberation and under the felony murder theory enumerated in subdivision (e)(5) and both are supported by the evidence, submission of the underlying felony as an aggravating circumstance is proper. State v. Gregory, 340 N.C. 365, 459 S.E.2d 638 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1108, 116 S. Ct. 1327, 134 L. Ed. 2d 478 (1996).

Defendant Convicted Under the Theory of Premeditation and Deliberation. — When a murder is committed during one of the felonies enumerated in subdivision (e)(5) and a defendant is convicted solely under the theory of premeditation and deliberation, the other felony may properly be admitted as an aggravating circumstance. State v. Gregory, 340 N.C. 365, 459 S.E.2d 638 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1108, 116 S. Ct. 1327, 134 L. Ed. 2d 478 (1996).

Murder for Pecuniary Gain. — In a prosecution for the first-degree murder of a storekeeper during the perpetration of an armed robbery and the first-degree murder of an innocent bystander who had pulled up to the store to purchase gas, the trial court properly submitted to the jury during the sentencing phase of the trial the aggravating circumstances as to whether the bystander was murdered for "pecuniary gain" although the evidence showed that the money had already been obtained from the storekeeper at the time the bystander was shot, since the murder of the bystander was apparently committed in an effort to eliminate a witness to the robbery, and the jury could find that both murders were committed for the purpose of permitting the defendants to enjoy pecuniary gain. State v. Oliver, 302 N.C. 28, 274 S.E.2d 183 (1981).

Considering the totality of the evidence, there were ample facts to support the conclusion that defendant's motive for the murder was pecuniary gain and the trial court did not err in submitting pecuniary gain as a possible aggravating circumstance. State v. Bacon, 337 N.C. 66, 446 S.E.2d 542 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1159, 115 S. Ct. 1120, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1083 (1995).

The evidence sufficiently supported the submission of the pecuniary gain aggravating circumstance in the murder of a restaurant employee where the State presented evidence that the victim had obtained a roll of quarters from her employer as she left work the night of her murder, the investigator testified that he was unable to find them when he searched her home, and defendant admitted taking the quarters from the victim's apartment in his statement to police which was given in redacted form to the jury. State v. Wallace, 351 N.C. 481, 528 S.E.2d 326 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1018, 121 S. Ct. 581, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

The court upheld the following instruction: "A murder is committed for pecuniary gain if the defendant, when he commits it, has obtained, or intends or expects to obtain, money or some other thing which can be valued in money, either as compensation for committing it, or as a result of the death of the victim," in spite of defendant's claim that the instruction allowed the jury to find the existence of the aggravating circumstance in a situation where the defendant obtained money or something of value as a result of the murder rather than where the defendant committed the murder for the purpose of obtaining the money or valuable thing. State v. Wallace, 351 N.C. 481, 528 S.E.2d 326 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1018, 121 S. Ct. 581, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

Evidence held sufficient to show the subdivision (e)(6) aggravating circumstance. State v. Cummings, 353 N.C. 281, 543 S.E.2d 844 (2001).

Murder While Committing Rape. — Because the jury had to hear evidence concerning the offense in order to consider the aggravating circumstance of whether the capital felony was committed while the defendant was engaged in the commission of a rape, the prosecutor's questions which did not refer specifically to the circumstance were relevant to sentencing. State v. Payne, 337 N.C. 505, 448 S.E.2d 93 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1038, 115 S. Ct. 1405, 131 L. Ed. 2d 292 (1995).

Murder While Committing Kidnapping and Rape. — Since the State presented distinct evidence that defendant committed both rape and kidnapping against the victim during the course of the capital felony, the trial court properly twice submitted the aggravating circumstance that the murder was committed during the course of a rape or a kidnapping. State v. Trull, 349 N.C. 428, 509 S.E.2d 178 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 835, 120 S. Ct. 95, 145 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1999).

Murder While Committing Burglary and Rape. — The trial court did not err when it instructed the jury that it could consider as separate aggravating circumstances whether the murder was committed in the course of a burglary and whether the murder was committed in the course of a rape where the evidence showed that defendant broke into the victim's home at night with the intent to steal her television and that he returned later, entered the victim's bedroom and raped her. State v. Roseboro, 351 N.C. 536, 528 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1019, 121 S. Ct. 582, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

Defendant Found Guilty of First-Degree Burglary. — The prosecutor did not misstate the law and impermissibly lessen the state's burden of proof by telling the jurors that since they had found defendant guilty of first-degree burglary, they also found the existence of the aggravating circumstance in subdivision (e)(5) of this section. State v. Gibbs, 335 N.C. 1, 436 S.E.2d 321 (1993), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1246, 114 S. Ct. 2767, 129 L. Ed. 2d 881 (1994).

The evidence of robbery with a dangerous weapon was sufficient for the trial court to submit it as an aggravating circumstance where the wallet—containing a driver's license and other papers, but no money—was found lying open in front of the victim's body. Inside the wallet were a drop and a smear of blood which the defendant admitted could have come from his hand but which he could not explain given the fact that he claimed not to have taken the money until after cleaning up and disposing of the murder weapon and bloody clothes, supporting a reasonable inference that defendant removed the money immediately after the murder. State v. Frogge, 351 N.C. 576, 528 S.E.2d 893 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 994, 121 S. Ct. 487, 148 L. Ed. 2d 459 (2000).

Murder As Evidence of Burglary. — The evidence supported the submission of burglary as an aggravating circumstance where the state's evidence that defendant killed the victim after he entered the mobile home was substantial evidence that he had the intent to commit murder when he entered the mobile home. State v. Lawrence, 352 N.C. 1, 530 S.E.2d 807 (2000).

Defendant's actions in killing a man to facilitate the rape of a woman were sufficiently aggravated to support the death sentence; the evidence indicated the fatal shot was fired with cold-blooded calculation and even the defendant's own witness was afraid defendant might shoot him, and although there were numerous mitigating circumstances, only three were statutory and much of defendant's mitigating evidence related to his conduct after he was in jail and to his relationship with family and close friends. State v. Roper, 328 N.C. 337, 402 S.E.2d 600, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 902, 112 S. Ct. 280, 116 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1991).

Closing Argument Appropriate. — The prosecutor's statements about the victim being killed in his home served to inform the jury about the aggravating circumstance that "the capital felony was committed while the defendant was engaged, or was an aider or abettor, in the commission of . . . burglary," and not some other circumstance not listed in this section. State v. Hyde, 352 N.C. 37, 530 S.E.2d 281 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1114, 121 S. Ct. 862, 148 L. Ed. 2d 775 (2001).

Evidence Held Sufficient. — Evidence was sufficient to support finding of aggravating circumstance of commission of murder while defendant was engaged in armed robbery; witness testified that defendant went to his father's house carrying a shotgun, he returned with a good-sized wad of money belonging to his father, which he later counted as fourteen hundred dollars, and defendant returned from his father's house covered with blood and told witness he had beaten his father to death using the shotgun. State v. Greene, 324 N.C. 1, 376 S.E.2d 430 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Disjunctive Instruction Based on Two Theories Upheld. — The trial court did not err by using a disjunctive instruction for two theories in support of one aggravating circumstance under subdivision (e)(5) where the jury could have found the aggravating circumstance to exist if the jury found defendant guilty of either armed robbery of a car or of robbery of the police officer's weapon; unanimity on one of the two charges was not required. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

E. Especially Heinous, Atrocious, or Cruel Act.

Factor Is Constitutional. — Submission of the sufficiently clear statutory aggravating circumstance of subdivision (e)(9) of this section, that the capital felony is "especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel," in appropriate cases, is constitutional. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Several types of murders meet the especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel criteria of § 15A-2000(e)(9): one type includes killings physically agonizing or otherwise dehumanizing to the victim; a second type includes killings less violent but conscienceless, pitiless, or unnecessarily torturous to the victim, including those which leave the victim in her last moments aware of but helpless to prevent impending death; a third type exists where the killing demonstrates an unusual depravity of mind on the part of the defendant beyond that normally present in first-degree murder; the length of time during which the victim fears for his life may qualify as especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel criteria despite any brevity. State v. Hooks, 353 N.C. 629, 548 S.E.2d 501 (2001).

And Not Unconstitutionally Vague. — The aggravating circumstances of an "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel" murder set forth in subdivision (e)(9) of this section is not unconstitutionally vague when interpreted to permit the imposition of the death penalty based on such factor only in those situations where the evidence showed that the murder was committed in such a way as to amount to a conscienceless or pitiless crime which was unnecessarily torturous to the victim. State v. Martin, 303 N.C. 246, 278 S.E.2d 214, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 933, 102 S. Ct. 431, 70 L. Ed. 2d 240, rehearing denied, 454 U.S. 1117, 102 S. Ct. 693, 70 L. Ed. 2d 655 (1981); Smith v. Dixon, 14 F.3d 956 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 841, 115 S. Ct. 129, 130 L. Ed. 2d 72 (1994), rehearing denied, 513 U.S. 1105, 115 S. Ct. 785, 130 L. Ed. 2d 678 (1995).

The aggravating factor of especially heinous, atrocious or cruel is not unconstitutionally vague on its face as construed and applied in North Carolina and under the Due Process Clause of U.S. Const., Amend. XIV. State v. Boyd, 311 N.C. 408, 319 S.E.2d 189 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1030, 105 S. Ct. 2052, 85 L. Ed. 2d 342 (1985).

Propriety of Submitting Factor Depends on Surrounding Facts. — An issue concerning the propriety of the submission of the aggravating factor under subdivision (e)(9) of this section is resolved according to the peculiar surrounding facts of the capital case under consideration. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

To submit the aggravating factor under subdivision (e)(9) to a jury, the capital offense must not be merely heinous, atrocious, or cruel; it must be especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel. The defendant's acts must be characterized by excessive brutality, or physical pain, psychological suffering, or dehumanizing aspects not normally present in a first-degree murder case. State v. Stanley, 310 N.C. 332, 312 S.E.2d 393 (1984).

Aggravating factor that the killing was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel is appropriate when the killing demonstrates an unusual depravity of mind on the part of the defendant beyond that normally present in first-degree murder. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 165 (1986).

Aggravating circumstance that murder was "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel" may be found when the killing demonstrates an unusual depravity of mind on the part of the defendant, beyond that normally present in first-degree murder. State v. Bonney, 329 N.C. 61, 405 S.E.2d 145 (1991).

A finding that this aggravating circumstance exists is only permissible when the level of brutality involved exceeds that normally found in first degree murder or when the first degree murder in question was conscienceless, pitiless, or unnecessarily torturous to the victim. State v. Quick, 329 N.C. 1, 405 S.E.2d 179 (1991).

The aggravating factor that the killing was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel is properly submitted where there is evidence that the killing involved a prolonged death or was committed in a fashion beyond that necessary to effect death. State v. Reese, 319 N.C. 110, 353 S.E.2d 352 (1987), overruled on other grounds, State v. Barnes, 345 N.C. 184, 481 S.E.2d 44 (1997).

Consideration of Evidence. — In determining whether the evidence is sufficient to support the trial court's submission of the especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel aggravating circumstance, the appellate court must consider the evidence in the light most favorable to the State, and the State is entitled to every reasonable inference to be drawn therefrom. State v. Fleming, 350 N.C. 109, 512 S.E.2d 720 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 941, 120 S. Ct. 351, 145 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1999).

For purposes of determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support the submission of the subdivision (e)(9) aggravating circumstance to the jury, the trial court must consider the evidence in the light most favorable to the State, and the State is entitled to every reasonable inference to be drawn from the facts. State v. Hipps, 348 N.C. 377, 501 S.E.2d 625 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1180, 119 S. Ct. 1119, 143 L. Ed. 2d 114 (1999).

Vagueness Cured. — The jury instruction on the statutory aggravating circumstance of "especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel," given pursuant to this section, although similar to one previously struck down, was not unconstitutionally vague because it was accompanied by a limiting instruction—defining the level of brutality or torture to the victim—which provided sufficient guidance to the jury. Frye v. Lee, 235 F.3d 897 (4th Cir. 2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 2614, 150 L. Ed. 2d 769 (2001).

Vagueness Not Cured. — District court's grant of habeas relief was affirmed because the North Carolina Supreme Court on direct appeal did not cure the unconstitutionally vague sentencing instruction in a capital murder case on the aggravating factor relating to an "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel" murder. Smith v. Dixon, 996 F.2d 667 (4th Cir. 1993).

Multiple Acts of Same Offense. — Where proof of one act constituting an offense is sufficient to sustain a defendant's conviction, multiple acts of the same offense are relevant to whether the offense charged was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State v. Mancuso, 321 N.C. 464, 364 S.E.2d 359 (1988).

Subdivision (e)(9) Not Applicable to Every Homicide. — While every murder is, at least arguably, heinous, atrocious, and cruel, subdivision (e)(9) of this section is not intended to apply to every homicide. By using the word "especially" the legislature indicated that there must be evidence that the brutality involved in the murder in question must exceed that normally present in any killing before the jury would be instructed upon this subsection. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979); State v. Hamlet, 312 N.C. 162, 321 S.E.2d 837 (1984).

The submission of subdivision (e)(9) of this section is appropriate only when there is evidence of excessive brutality, beyond that normally present in any killing, or when the facts as a whole portray the commission of a crime which was conscienceless, pitiless or unnecessarily torturous to the victim. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622

(1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995); State v. Hamlet, 312 N.C. 162, 321 S.E.2d 837 (1984); State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1185, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 165 (1986).

Although every murder may be characterized as heinous, atrocious, and cruel, this aggravating factor is not to be applied in every first-degree murder case, but only in cases in which the first-degree murder committed was especially heinous, especially atrocious, or especially cruel. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Although every murder may be characterized as heinous, atrocious, or cruel, the General Assembly has made it clear that this aggravating circumstance may be found only in cases in which the first-degree murder committed was either especially heinous, especially atrocious, or especially cruel. For example, a finding that this statutory aggravating circumstance exists is permissible only when the level of brutality involved exceeds that normally found in first-degree murder or when the first-degree murder in question was conscienceless, pitiless or unnecessarily torturous to the victim. State v. Bonney, 329 N.C. 61, 405 S.E.2d 145 (1991).

It Is Limited to Acts During Capital Felony. — Limiting application of subdivision (e)(9) of this section to acts done to the victim during the commission of the capital felony itself is an appropriate construction of the language of this provision. Under this construction, subdivision (e)(9) will not become a "catch all" provision which can always be employed in cases where there is no evidence of other aggravating circumstances. State v. Goodman, 298 N.C. 1, 257 S.E.2d 569 (1979).

And Is Not a "Catchall" Provision. — Subdivision (e)(9) of this section may not be employed as a "catchall" provision which could be submitted when there is no evidence of other aggravating circumstances. State v. Martin, 303 N.C. 246, 278 S.E.2d 214, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 933, 102 S. Ct. 431, 70 L. Ed. 2d 240, rehearing denied, 454 U.S. 1117, 102 S. Ct. 693, 70 L. Ed. 2d 655 (1981); State v. Oliver, 309 N.C. 326, 307 S.E.2d 304 (1983).

Whether death was immediate or delayed is relevant to whether the crime was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State v. Mancuso, 321 N.C. 464, 364 S.E.2d 359 (1988).

And Section Is Inapplicable Where Death Is Immediate. — In accordance with the dictates of U.S. Const., Amend. VIII, the court has adhered to the position that the aggravating circumstance of subdivision (e)(9) of this section does not arise in cases in which death was immediate and in which there was no unusual infliction of suffering upon the victim. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Victim Choked to Death. — A jury could reasonably infer that as the breath of life was choked out of the victim, she experienced extreme anguish and psychological terror. State v. Sexton, 336 N.C. 321, 444 S.E.2d 879, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1006, 115 S. Ct. 525, 130 L. Ed. 2d 429 (1994), 343 N.C. 516, 472 S.E.2d 23 (1996).

Death by Poison. — Where the State's testimony showed that defendant coldly and designedly planned and carried out the murder of his child, and attempted to murder his other two children, their mother, and his ex-girlfriend, using pesticide to poison them, the record fully supported the aggravating circumstances found by the jury: the crime was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel, pursuant to subdivision (e)(9) of this section, part of a course of conduct in which defendant engaged, and which included the commission by defendant of other crimes of violence against another person or persons, pursuant to subdivision (e)(11) of this section. State v. Smith, 351 N.C. 251, 524 S.E.2d 28 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 862, 121 S. Ct. 151, 148 L. Ed. 2d 100 (2000).

Considerations for submitting the heinous, atrocious, or cruel aggravating circumstance to the jury include (1) those that are physically agonizing or otherwise dehumanizing to the victim, and (2) those that are less violent but involve the infliction of psychological torture. State v. Carter, 338 N.C. 569, 451 S.E.2d 157 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1107, 115 S. Ct. 2256, 132 L. Ed. 2d 263 (1995).

There are two types of murder which would warrant the submission of the especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel aggravating circumstance to the jury. One type involved killings which are physically agonizing for the victim or which were in some other way dehumanizing. The other type consists of those killings which are less violent, but involve infliction of psychological torture by leaving the victim in his last moments aware of but helpless to prevent impending death. State v. Hamlet, 312 N.C. 162, 321 S.E.2d 837 (1984).

Facts as a Whole Must Be Considered. — The cruelty and brutality of a particular crime is determined by looking at the facts as a whole. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

The North Carolina Supreme Court declined to limit the definition of an especially heinous, atrocious or cruel murder to include only those which involve physical injury or torture prior to death. The court upheld the submission of this aggravating circumstance even though the evidence did not establish at what point during a brutal attack the victim's death occurred. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

Evidence Showed Victim's Awareness of But Helplessness to Prevent Impending Death. — Sufficient evidence existed to support the submission of the aggravating circumstance under subdivision (e)(9) to the jury in defendant younger brother's murder trial where the co-defendant older brother shot the trooper, causing him to become incapacitated and allowing the younger brother to shake himself free of his grasp and retrieve the trooper's pistol, after which he then shot the trooper multiple times as he lay on the ground moaning; the fact that the trooper had the presence of mind to attempt to grab the defendant after he had been shot was evidence that he was aware of his fate and unable to prevent impending death. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

The victim's murder was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel where defendant beat victim and tied him up on the ground before his death. State v. Call, 353 N.C. 400, 545 S.E.2d 190 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 628, 151 L. Ed. 2d 548 (2001).

Evidence Not Limited to Physical Injury or Torture. — The North Carolina Supreme Court has declined to limit the interpretation of an especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel murder to one which involves only physical injury or torture prior to death or to physical injury alone in any event. State v. Oliver, 309 N.C. 326, 307 S.E.2d 304 (1983).

Evidence used to show premeditation and deliberation as a basis for conviction of first-degree murder may also be used to show, for purposes of this section, that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious, and cruel. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

Evidence depicting the slow and agonizing demise of victim while petitioner stood by for days, never telling family or medical personnel of the cause of his illness when his life could have been saved, and that she watched him suffer horribly, fully supported submission of "especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel" aggravating circumstance. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

Where deceased died as a result of being battered to death by what can only have been a prolonged series of blows, blows with a cast-iron skillet so severe as to fracture her skull, neck, jaws, and collarbone and to cause her skull to be pushed into her brain, the severity and the brutality of the numerous wounds inflicted amply justified submission of this aggravating circumstance to the jury. State v. Huffstetler, 312 N.C. 92, 322 S.E.2d 110 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1009, 105 S. Ct. 1877, 85 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1985).

That death is not instantaneous does not alone make a murder especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State v. Stanley, 310 N.C. 332, 312 S.E.2d 393 (1984).

Excessive Level of Brutality. — There are two of the types of murders which are conscienceless, pitiless, or unnecessarily, tortuous to the victim or which demonstrate an unusual depravity of mind on the part of the defendant: (1) those that are physically agonizing or otherwise dehumanizing to the victim, and (2) those that are less violent but involve the infliction of psychological torture. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Evidence of a victim's begging for his life is, like torture, one factor for jury consideration in determining whether a murder is especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel. However, it is not necessarily a determinative factor. Nor does this factor alone always necessitate a finding that a murder was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel. State v. Oliver, 309 N.C. 326, 307 S.E.2d 304 (1983).

Conscienceless, Pitiless Act. — The evidence was sufficient to support submitting the aggravating circumstances in subdivision (e)(9) to the jury. Evidence that defendant shot victim because her crying made him nervous was evidence that in killing her, he acted in a conscienceless, pitiless manner. State v. Gibbs, 335 N.C. 1, 436 S.E.2d 321 (1993), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1246, 114 S. Ct. 2767, 129 L. Ed. 2d 881 (1994).

No Authority to Avoid Statutory Scheme in Proper Case. — In a prosecution for first-degree murder, where there was evidence which tended to show the especially heinous, atrocious, and cruel manner in which the victim was clubbed to death, an aggravating circumstance listed in subsection (e)(9) of this section, the presiding judge, district attorney, and defense counsel had no legal authority whatsoever: (1) to announce that the State would not seek the death penalty, (2) to agree to make no motions concerning the death penalty, (3) to eliminate voir dire examinations of jurors with respect to the death penalty, (4) to eliminate the separate sentencing proceeding to determine whether the punishment should be death or life imprisonment, or (5) by consent to fix the punishment at life imprisonment should the jury convict defendant of murder in the first degree. State v. Jones, 299 N.C. 298, 261 S.E.2d 860 (1980), decided prior to the 2001 amendment by Session Laws 2001-81 and the enactment of § 15A-2004.

A jury may infer that manual strangulation involves the infliction of psychological torture as, manual strangulation, by its very nature, may require a continued murderous effort on the part of the assailant for a period of up to four to five minutes, during which time the victim is rendered helpless, aware of impending death, but utterly incapable of preventing it. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Humiliating and Debasing Action. — When a murder takes place during the perpetration of a violent sexual assault upon the victim, it is unusually humiliating and debasing. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Inappropriate Commentary by Prosecutor. — Where prosecutor declared that it was "pathetic" that consideration of the "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel" statutory aggravating circumstance requires the jury "to decide that some murders — can you believe this? — are worse than others," the prosecutor's unobjected-to commentary, while inappropriate, was not so grossly improper as to require the trial court to intervene ex mero motu; any resulting effect of such comments was de minimis in light of the fact that the jury was told at all times it must follow the law and that the law required that the first-degree murders be especially heinous, atrocious or cruel for this circumstance to exist. State v. Laws, 325 N.C. 81, 381 S.E.2d 609 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence aff'd, State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 127, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174, rehearing denied, 502 U.S. 1001, 112 S. Ct. 627, 116 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1991).

Age as a Factor to Be Weighed. — Jury could properly consider the age of victim in determining the weight of the aggravating circumstance that the act was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel. State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

Defendant as Child Victim's Caretaker. — Evidence that the defendant repeatedly beat and abused the two-year old murder victim while she was in the defendant's care supported submission of the especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel aggravating circumstance, where the defendant had assumed the role of primary care giver to the child. State v. Anderson, 350 N.C. 152, 513 S.E.2d 296 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 973, 120 S. Ct. 417, 145 L. Ed. 2d 326 (1999).

Victim's Age and Existence of Parental Relationship as Factor. — Evidence of the victim's age and the existence of a parental relationship between the victim and defendant may be considered in determining the existence of the especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel aggravating circumstance, as does evidence that the defendant was the primary caregiver of the infant. State v. Flippen, 349 N.C. 264, 506 S.E.2d 702 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1135, 119 S. Ct. 1813, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1015 (1999).

Expert Testimony. — Expert medical testimony was admissible as evidence of the aggravating circumstance that the defendant's murder of his infant son was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel in that the evidence attempted to quantify and qualify the infant's injuries for the jury. State v. Atkins, 349 N.C. 62, 505 S.E.2d 97 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1147, 119 S. Ct. 2025, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1999).

Closing Argument of Prosecutor Properly Allowed. — Trial court properly allowed segment of the closing argument in which the prosecutor stated that the evidence supported inferences that: (1) the victim was alive as defendant bludgeoned her, (2) the victim was alive when defendant inserted tree limb in her rectum, and (3) defendant twisted the stick in the rectum as he inserted it; the argument sought to give the jury a complete picture of the merciless nature of the crime. It did not encourage the jury to find the murder especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel simply on the basis of the sex offense but rather on the basis of the overwhelming brutality of the crime. State v. Daughtry, 340 N.C. 488, 459 S.E.2d 747 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1079, 116 S. Ct. 789, 133 L. Ed. 2d 739 (1996).

Evidence Held Sufficient. — Evidence that defendant robbed Zip Mart convenience store and forced the clerk to accompany him in her car to a secluded area approximately five miles away, where she was shot six times, that victim's hands had been bound, and that the principal cause of death was a gunshot wound to the right central lower back, but that the victim may have lived as long as 15 minutes after being shot, although she would have gone into shock during the last phases of life and would have lost consciousness in the later stages of shock, was sufficient to support submission of the aggravating factor that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel to the jury. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Evidence held sufficient for trial judge to find that victims endured psychological and physical suffering beyond that normally present in a second degree murder, and thus to find as an aggravating factor that the murders were especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel. State v. Miller, 316 N.C. 273, 341 S.E.2d 531 (1986).

Evidence clearly revealed that defendant's acts upon the victim were characterized by excessive brutality, physical pain and psychological suffering not normally present in a first-degree murder case. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Evidence of the nature of the fatal wounds inflicted and the victim's lingering death supported the jury's finding of the existence of the "especially heinous" circumstance. State v. Stokes, 319 N.C. 1, 352 S.E.2d 653 (1987).

The aggravating factor that a murder was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel, was not improperly submitted to the jury, where evidence was elicited which tended to show that defendant beat victim with an iron pipe, stuffed her mouth with a rag to stop her screaming, straddled her body, grabbed her by the throat and dragged into the bathroom where he forced her head under the water in a half-filled tub and held it there while she struggled desperately for her life. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Trial court did not err in submitting as an aggravating circumstance that murder was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel where witness testified that defendant grabbed victim around her neck, pulled out a knife and forced her into a bedroom, demanded her food stamps, choked her until she lost consciousness, then told witness to get his rifle from next door, and when she did, he shot the victim. State v. McNeil, 324 N.C. 33, 375 S.E.2d 909 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1050, 110 S. Ct. 1516, 108 L. Ed. 2d 756 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Trial court did not err in submitting this aggravating circumstance because the facts of the case supported its submission where defendant's killing of his own child violated the unique bond parents feel for their own children and was a denial of the normal parental need to protect one's own children and where evidence tended to show that the infant was struggling for his life while suffocating in earthen grave. State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

Evidence supported a finding that the level of brutality exceeded that normally found in first-degree murder cases and that it was pitiless and unnecessarily torturous to the victim and was an especially "heinous, atrocious, or cruel" murder, where the evidence, taken in the light most favorable to the State, tended to show an extremely brutal attack consisting of 27 separate gunshot entrance wounds. Two gunshot wounds to the left forehead had been inflicted from extremely close range, and wounds to the face and chest occurred before the victim died. State v. Bonney, 329 N.C. 61, 405 S.E.2d 145 (1991).

Submission of an aggravating circumstance was proper where the victim, a 78-year-old man who had undergone heart surgery and suffered a ruptured appendix, while practically helpless, temporarily fended off defendant's attack, but ultimately suffered stab wounds in the chest area, abrasions on the face, bruises and lacerations around the mouth, and bruises and incisions on the forearm, and where there was testimony that the victim could have lived up to 10 minutes after sustaining the stab wounds. State v. Quick, 329 N.C. 1, 405 S.E.2d 179 (1991).

Evidence was sufficient to support a finding that a first-degree murder was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel, where both victims were unable to defend themselves due to extreme intoxication when the defendant began beating them severely with his fists, where they remained helpless as he took a claw hammer from the car and proceeded to beat each helpless victim mercilessly about the head and torso with the hammer, causing numerous lacerations, bruises, skull fractures and areas of hemorrhaging and where the victims were found in pools of blood, with pieces of flesh, skull and brain matter scattered about their bodies. State v. Laws, 325 N.C. 81, 381 S.E.2d 609 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence aff'd, State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 127, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174, rehearing denied, 502 U.S. 1001, 112 S. Ct. 627, 116 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1991).

Where the jury found the capital felony was committed while the defendant was engaged in the commission of the crime of first degree burglary and the capital felony was especially heinous, atrocious and cruel, the evidence presented at trial showed that defendant broke down the door and entered the victim's home around 3:00 a.m. and brutally stabbed her in front of her daughter and her mother who tried to stop him and defendant then proceeded to drag her out of the front door and into the driveway while continuously stabbing, hitting, and kicking her, the evidence clearly supported the jury's finding of each of these aggravating circumstances. State v. Fisher, 336 N.C. 684, 445 S.E.2d 866 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1098, 115 S. Ct. 768, 130 L. Ed. 2d 665 (1995).

Where the jury found a single aggravating circumstance but found no mitigating circumstance, specifically rejected the impaired capacity circumstance, and where the murder was particularly brutal and the defendant showed no remorse, the death sentence was not excessive or disproportionate, considering both the crime and the defendant. State v. Payne, 337 N.C. 505, 448 S.E.2d 93 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1038, 115 S. Ct. 1405, 131 L. Ed. 2d 292 (1995).

When a murderer attacked an elderly victim by surprise and beat his brains out of his head by repeated blows of an axe handle without the slightest sign of provocation, it may be said that there is an inference that the murder was conscienceless and pitiless. Evidence that defendant committed a similar set of murders just six weeks later, after a boastful discussion of his murderous capabilities, was further evidence of a lack of pity for defendant's victims. Thus, the facts suggest a depravity of mind on the part of the killer not easily matched by even the most egregious of slayings, as well as a level of brutality that exceeds that ordinarily present in the first degree murders. State v. Ingle, 336 N.C. 617, 445 S.E.2d 880 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1020, 115 S. Ct. 1366, 131 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1995).

Where defendant was convicted of three first-degree murders and the record established a cold-blooded, calculated course of conduct on the part of defendant which amounted to a wanton disregard for the value of human life, the two death sentences were not excessive or disproportionate, considering both the crimes and defendant. State v. Robinson, 339 N.C. 263, 451 S.E.2d 196 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 2565, 132 L. Ed. 2d 818 (1995).

Death sentence held appropriate where the murder victim was a defenseless four-month-old baby who was left in the care of defendant at the time of the murder and the injuries inflicted upon the child were numerous, going beyond what would be necessary to kill the victim, and brutal. The child suffered bruises all over her body, including bruises on her neck, bruises on her arms, ears, torso, and legs, and both of the child's arms and legs were broken. State v. Burr, 341 N.C. 263, 461 S.E.2d 602 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1123, 116 S. Ct. 1359, 134 L. Ed. 2d 526 (1996).

Sentence of death was not disproportionate where defendant wrapped two belts around 92-year-old Reverend's neck, beat the Reverend in the face with a glass bottle and, with a double-edged razor blade, sliced the Reverend's arms, 17 inches on one arm and 14 inches on the other. State v. Simpson, 341 N.C. 316, 462 S.E.2d 191 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1161, 116 S. Ct. 1048, 134 L. Ed. 2d 194 (1996).

Where the victim, who suffered for hours before being killed, was hog-tied, tied to a tree, beaten and interrogated before being killed, there was enough evidence to establish that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious, and cruel. State v. Bates, 343 N.C. 564, 473 S.E.2d 269 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1131, 117 S. Ct. 992, 136 L. Ed. 2d 873 (1997).

Court held that the imposition of the death penalty was not aberrant or capricious where the murder was committed for pecuniary gain and was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel. State v. Williams, 343 N.C. 345, 471 S.E.2d 379 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1061, 117 S. Ct. 695, 136 L. Ed. 2d 618 (1997).

Death penalty held not disproportionate where the defendant was convicted of killing two individuals, and multiple aggravating circumstances existed, one of which was the especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel nature of the murder. State v. Cole, 343 N.C. 399, 471 S.E.2d 362 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1064, 117 S. Ct. 703, 136 L. Ed. 2d 624 (1997).

Especially heinous, atrocious, and cruel aggravating circumstances existed and death penalty was appropriate where defendant raped seven-year-old girl while smothering her with a pillow, it took ten to twenty minutes for the victim to die and she would have been conscious for three to seven minutes, and her three-year-old brother watched. State v. Perkins, 345 N.C. 254, 481 S.E.2d 25 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 837, 118 S. Ct. 111, 139 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1997).

Sentence of death held proportionate where defendant raped and murdered adult victim, then awoke and murdered her two children. State v. Richmond, 347 N.C. App. 412, 495 S.E.2d 677 (1998).

The evidence was sufficient to support the submission of the especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel aggravating circumstance, where the large, powerful stepfather of a two-year-old, 30-pound girl beat her to death with numerous blows to the head, neck, and abdomen, and her resulting injuries went well beyond what was necessary to kill her. State v. Flippen, 349 N.C. 264, 506 S.E.2d 702 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1135, 119 S. Ct. 1813, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1015 (1999).

The death sentence was neither excessive nor disproportionate, where the defendant pled guilty to first-degree murder based on the theory of premeditation and deliberation and under the felony murder rule, and the evidence showed that he repeatedly beat and raped the 83-year old victim while trying to steal money to buy more crack cocaine. State v. Williams, 350 N.C. 1, 510 S.E.2d 626 (1999), cert. denied 528 U.S. 880, 120 S. Ct. 193, 145 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1999).

Where the evidence, although not conclusive, was sufficient for a jury to find that not only was the victim alive when her taxicab was set on fire, but that she was aware of her impending death, the trial court did not err in submitting this aggravating circumstance to the jury. State v. Cheek, 351 N.C. 48, 520 S.E.2d 545 (1999), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1245, 120 S. Ct. 2694, 147 L. Ed. 2d 965 (2000).

The defendant's murder of his wife was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel where he chased and rammed her car, returned to the parking lot once the police officer had left, shot her in the back, got back into his car, shot her again, and left her helpless on the ground and where, while being chased by defendant, the victim said to the 911 operator, "my husbands [sic] trying to kill me," and, "Oh please God. Oh please I don't want to die now," in spite of his contention that his actions were not calculated to cause the victim unnecessary fear and that he took only the actions necessary to carry out his goal of killing her. State v. Holman, 353 N.C. 174, 540 S.E.2d 18 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 250, 151 L. Ed. 2d 181 (2001).

The aggravating circumstance of § 15A-2000(e)(9) was found where defendant, after arguing with victim over defendant's missing shirt and his search of victim's apartment, told the victim that he would "f—k him up," pulled a gun, shot the victim four times, and kicked, pistol-whipped, and taunted the victim who was down. State v. Hooks, 353 N.C. 629, 548 S.E.2d 501 (2001).

Evidence Held Insufficient. — Where one wound was inflicted, to the jugular vein, and victim walked approximately 45 feet and collapsed, losing consciousness soon after the wound was inflicted, finding that murder was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel was not sufficiently supported by the evidence. State v. Coleman, 80 N.C. App. 271, 341 S.E.2d 750, cert. denied, 318 N.C. 285, 347 S.E.2d 466 (1986).

The Performance of Court and of Defense Counsel Held Adequate. — The court's instruction regarding the aggravating circumstance that "the capital felony was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel" was adequately limited to guide the jury, and the defendant's counsel was not constitutionally deficient for failing to challenge the instruction on direct appeal since, given the gruesome facts underlying the murder, the result would not have been different if the counsel had challenged it. Fisher v. Lee, 215 F.3d 438 (4th Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1095, 121 S. Ct. 822, 148 L. Ed. 2d 706 (2001).

Instruction Under Subdivision (e)(9) Held Proper. — The trial court properly submitted to the jury the aggravating circumstances as to whether the first-degree murder of a storekeeper was "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel" where the State's evidence showed that the storekeeper, after opening his cash register in response to defendants' demands, begged for his life and that one defendant mercilessly shot him to death. However, the trial court erred in submitting the aggravating circumstance as to whether the death of an innocent bystander was "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel" where the State's evidence showed that one defendant, as he was running from the store, shot and killed the bystander who had pulled up to purchase gas, there was no unusual infliction of pain or suffering on the victim, and the brutality of the killing did not exceed that normally present in a case of first-degree murder. State v. Oliver, 302 N.C. 28, 274 S.E.2d 183 (1981).

In a prosecution for murder, the trial court should have submitted to the jury during the sentencing phase of a first-degree murder trial the aggravating circumstance as to whether the crime was "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel" where the evidence tended to show that the victim was stripped from the waist down before she was murdered; her hands were tied behind her back and her brassiere was tied around her neck; she was marched at knife point by her assailant into nearby woods where she was forced to lie on the ground; and she was beaten before she was murdered. State v. Silhan, 302

N.C. 223, 275 S.E.2d 450 (1981), overruled in part by State v. Sanderson, 346 N.C. 669, 488 S.E.2d 133, State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997).

It was not error for the trial judge to instruct the jury that they could find from the evidence that the murder was especially heinous, atrocious and cruel despite defendant's argument that the evidence did not support this aggravating circumstance because the victim, with a blood alcohol level of .29, was so intoxicated that she must have been practically anesthetized against the torture of the 37 stab wounds inflicted with a pocket knife by the defendants. State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 887, 108 S. Ct. 42, 98 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1987).

The evidence supported the aggravating circumstances that the killing was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel, where it showed that defendant had assaulted his victim on two previous occasions; that on the night of the killing defendant "coattailed" the victim, constantly following her and her companion, and would not allow them to leave the nightclub without him; and that when victim left nightclub defendant followed her and when he had the opportunity pounced on her not once but twice, wounding her the first time and cutting her throat the second time, causing her to drown in her own blood. This evidence supported a finding that the level of brutality exceeded that normally found in first degree murder cases and that it was pitiless and unnecessarily torturous to the victim. State v. Spruill, 320 N.C. 688, 360 S.E.2d 667 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2833, 100 L. Ed. 2d 934 (1988).

Where jury instruction in a capital murder case stated in part: "This murder must have been a consciencelessness [sic] or pitiless crime which was unnecessarily torturous to the victim," the jury received adequate guidance concerning the meaning of the "especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel" aggravating circumstance; therefore, the verdict was not subjective and arbitrary. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990); State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

The trial court's charge did not constitute an impermissible expression of opinion on the evidence where the court referred to the circumstance as "alleged." State v. Meyer, 353 N.C. 92, 540 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Instruction Held Improper. — In a first-degree murder case the trial court, during the sentencing phase of the trial, erred in instructing the jury to consider as an aggravating circumstance whether the murder was especially heinous, since the evidence tended to show that defendant, after riding around and drinking beer most of the evening, saw the victim and shot him three times from behind without any established motive and then fled; the victim lingered for 12 days and then died from the gunshot wounds; and this was heinous but not "especially heinous" within the meaning of that term as used in subdivision (e)(9) of this section. State v. Hamlette, 302 N.C. 490, 276 S.E.2d 338 (1981).

Trial court erred in finding that shooting of defendant who died from four gunshot wounds was an especially heinous, atrocious, and cruel aggravating circumstance. State v. Lloyd, 354 N.C. 76, 552 S.E.2d 596 (2001).

Submission Not Prejudicial Where Factor Not Found. — While there was sufficient evidence to submit the circumstance that the murder was "especially heinous, atrocious or cruel" to the jury, even if there were not, defendant could have suffered no prejudice as a result of the submission where the jury answered that this aggravating circumstance was not present. State v. Green, 321 N.C. 594, 365 S.E.2d 587, cert. denied, 488 U.S. 900, 109 S. Ct. 247, 102 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1988).

Instruction Not Based on Combined Actions of Two Defendants. — Evidence did not support defendant's assertion that trial court's instructions impermissibly allowed the jury to find the existence of the statutory aggravating circumstance for victim's murder based upon the combined actions of defendant and co-defendant. State v. McNeil, 350 N.C. 657, 518 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1024, 120 S. Ct. 1432, 146 L. Ed. 2d 321 (2000).

No Distinction Made as to Accessory Before the Fact. — The court rejected the defendant's contention that the submission of the especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel aggravating circumstance violated his rights under the North Carolina and United States Constitutions because it impermissibly allowed the jury to find the existence of an aggravating circumstance based solely upon his codefendants' actions; although defendant was not present when his nephew and his grandmother who adopted him were stabbed and burned to death, defendant admitted to planning the murders and enlisting his codefendants to perform them. State v. Brewington, 352 N.C. 489, 532 S.E.2d 496 (2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1165, 121 S. Ct. 1126, 148 L. Ed. 2d 992 (2001).

Instruction Under Subdivision (e)(9)

Held Proper. — Trial court's submission of instructions regarding aggravating circumstance, pursuant to this section, that murder was especially heinous, atrocious, or cruel did not violate the defendant's rights to due process nor result in cruel and unusual punishment, nor was the language unconstitutionally vague. State v. Parker, 350 N.C. 411, 516 S.E.2d 106 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084, 120 S. Ct. 808, 145 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2000).

Evidence of Racial Motivation. — The jury could properly consider defendant's note, which was drafted in the court room and confiscated in the prison holding area during the jury selection phase of the trial, when determining if the murder of the police officer was especially heinous, atrocious or cruel, where the note contained references to "the beast" and "Babylon," which were interpreted at trial to mean "the police" and "Caucasian-run America," respectively; the note was evidence that the murders were racially motivated. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

F. Risk of Death to More Than One Person.

Burden of Proof Not Shifted by Deadly Weapon Instruction. — The trial court's instruction did not create a mandatory presumption that shifted the burden of persuasion to the defendant on the subdivision (e)(10) aggravator, where the trial court instructed the jurors that the carbine rifle used during the capital murder defendant's shooting spree constituted a deadly weapon as a matter of law, regardless of the weapon's use; the fact that a deadly weapon is used is not enough to support a finding that this aggravator exists. State v. Davis, 349 N.C. 1, 506 S.E.2d 455 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1161, 119 S. Ct. 2053, 144 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1999).

Equal Protection Clause was not violated when court applied felony murder rule and punished defendant more severely by sentencing him to death because more victims were harmed as authorized by § 15A-1340.16(d)(8) and subdivision (e)(11) of this section. State v. Jones, 133 N.C. App. 448, 516 S.E.2d 405 (1999), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, and remanded, 353 N.C. 159, 538 S.E.2d 917 (2000).

Evidence that defendant fired a semi-automatic rifle several times into a crowd of several persons supported a finding of the aggravating factor that defendant knowingly created a great risk of death to more than one person by means of a weapon which would normally be hazardous to the lives of more than one person. State v. Carver, 319 N.C. 665, 356 S.E.2d 349 (1987).

Use of a Shotgun. — A shotgun in its normal use may be considered a weapon hazardous to the lives of more than one person as those words are used in subdivision (e)(10) of this section. State v. Rose, 327 N.C. 599, 398 S.E.2d 314 (1990).

Use of Weapon Normally Hazardous to More Than One Person. — Evidence was sufficient to support the jury's finding that the defendant knowingly created a great risk of death to more than one person by use of a weapon which would normally be hazardous to the lives of more than one person. State v. Jones, 339 N.C. 114, 451 S.E.2d 826 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1169, 115 S. Ct. 2634, 132 L. Ed. 2d 873, reh'g denied, 515 U.S. 1183, 116 S. Ct. 32, 132 L. Ed. 2d 913 (1995).

Shooting Spree as Endangering Several Lives. — The evidence supported submission of the aggravating circumstance that the defendant knowingly created great risk of death to more than one person by means of a weapon or device that normally would be hazardous to the lives of more than one person, where there was evidence that the defendant killed three people and wounded two others during a shooting spree at the business from which he was fired, and also that he randomly fired shots as he walked down the hall, thus endangering the lives of everyone in the building. State v. Davis, 349 N.C. 1, 506 S.E.2d 455 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1161, 119 S. Ct. 2053, 144 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1999).

The fact that a defendant is a multiple murderer stands as a "heavy" factor against defendant when determining the proportionality of a death sentence. State v. Wilkinson, 344 N.C. 198, 474 S.E.2d 375 (1996).

G. Course of Conduct.

Not Unconstitutionally Vague. — The term "course of conduct" in this section is not unconstitutionally vague or without definition. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

Reliance on Related Course of Conduct Is Not Double Jeopardy. — The principle of double jeopardy has not evolved to the point that it prevents the prosecution from relying, at the sentencing phase of a capital case, upon a related course of criminal conduct by the defendant as an aggravating factor to enhance the punishment of defendant for another distinct offense, and this is so, irrespective of whether the defendant was also convicted of another capital charge arising out of that very same course of criminal conduct and subjected to separate punishment therefor. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995); State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

Some Connection Required. — The further apart the acts are temporally, the more incumbent it is upon a court to carefully consider other factors, such as modus operandi and motivation, in determining whether the acts of violence are part of a course of conduct; thus, in order to find course of conduct, a court must consider the circumstances surrounding the acts of violence and discern some connection, common scheme, or some pattern or psychological thread that ties them together. State v. Cummings, 332 N.C. 487, 422 S.E.2d 692 (1992).

The State's evidence tended to show that four days before the double murder at motel, defendant robbed convenience store and killed the clerk and that less than three weeks after the motel shootings, defendant shot a taxicab driver, there was a span of only twenty-two days from the murder of the clerk and robbery at the convenience store to the shooting of the taxicab driver; the time frame was sufficiently close to support the submission of this aggravating circumstance. Further, the modus operandi was similar in that evidence tended to show that defendant used the same pistol to kill, or attempt to kill each victim and had one or two accomplices during each crime and, finally, the evidence of motivation was strong; numerous witnesses testified that these acts were robberies for the purpose of obtaining money to buy drugs. State v. Garner, 340 N.C. 573, 459 S.E.2d 718 (1995).

Submission of the course of conduct aggravating circumstance is proper where there is evidence that the victim's murder and other violent crimes were part of a pattern of intentional acts establishing that there existed in the defendant's mind a plan, scheme, or design involving both the murder of the victim and other crimes of violence. State v. Cole, 343 N.C. 399, 471 S.E.2d 362 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1064, 117 S. Ct. 703, 136 L. Ed. 2d 624 (1997).

Shooting Spree as Course of Conduct. — The evidence supported submission of the aggravating circumstance that the murder was part of a course of conduct where the defendant killed three people and wounded two others during a shooting spree at the business from which he was fired. State v. Davis, 349 N.C. 1, 506 S.E.2d 455 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1161, 119 S. Ct. 2053, 144 L. Ed. 2d 219 (1999).

Common Modus Operandi and Motivation. — Defendant's challenge to evidence of a course of conduct which was the sole aggravating circumstance in one murder and one of only two aggravating circumstances admitted in a second murder was denied where the similarities in the two murders demonstrated that there did exist in the defendant's mind a common plan, scheme or design. State v. Moses, 350 N.C. 741, 517 S.E.2d 853 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1124, 120 S. Ct. 951, 145 L. Ed. 2d 826 (2000).

Submission of each of two killings as an aggravating circumstance for the other under the "course of conduct" provision of subdivision (e)(11) of this section did not constitute double jeopardy nor deprive him of due process of law. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

The submission of each of two murders as an aggravating circumstance for the other does not violate double jeopardy. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

There is no constitutional authority mandating a conclusion that the submission of subdivision (e)(11) of this section in aggravation of both of murders of which defendant was convicted violated defendant's protection against double jeopardy. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Transactionally Connected Offenses Joined for Trial. — Where several similarities tied murders together and suggested a common motivation or modus operandi supporting the finding of a transactional connection for purposes of joinder, they also supported the submission and finding of the course of conduct aggravating circumstance. State v.

Chapman, 342 N.C. 330, 464 S.E.2d 661 (1995), cert. denied, 518 U.S. 1023, 116 S. Ct. 2560, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1077 (1996).

Prosecutor's Comment. — Prosecutor's reference to the defendants as animals was made for a legitimate purpose supported by the evidence where he was arguing that the evidence established the aggravating factor that the murder was part of a course of conduct which included the commission of crimes of violence against other people. State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 887, 108 S. Ct. 42, 98 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1987).

Where the crimes occurred within moments of each other at the same location and the same modus operandi was used in each killing, the facts clearly established that the two crimes were committed as a part of a course of conduct in which defendant engaged and which included the commission by defendant of a crime of violence against another person. State v. Skipper, 337 N.C. 1, 446 S.E.2d 252 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1134, 115 S. Ct. 953, 130 L. Ed. 2d 895 (1995), cert. dismissed, 342 N.C. 417, 465 S.E.2d 547 (1995).

Where four prior unadjudicated assaults were virtually identical to the circumstances surrounding attempted rape, the facts were sufficiently similar to permit the jury to conclude the defendant intended to rape victim; thus, testimony was properly admitted. State v. Holden, 346 N.C. 404, 488 S.E.2d 514 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1126, 118 S. Ct. 1074, 140 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1998).

References to woman that defendant raped, murdered, and burned less than one month after committing the crimes at issue were properly admitted to support the aggravating circumstance of course of conduct. State v. Smith, 347 N.C. App. 453, 496 S.E.2d 357 (1998).

Evidence Held Sufficient. — Where the State presented substantial evidence that after killing victim, defendant fired his weapon at another individual, intending to kill him, and the jury, by returning guilty verdicts, found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant had committed this murder and assault, the trial court properly submitted the aggravating circumstance that the murder for which defendant stood convicted was part of a course of conduct in which defendant engaged and which included the commission by defendant of other crimes of violence against another person or persons to the jury for its consideration. State v. Rogers, 316 N.C. 203, 341 S.E.2d 713 (1986), overruled in part, State v. Gaines, 345 N.C. 647, 483 S.E.2d 396 (1997).

Evidence was sufficient to warrant the submission of the course of conduct aggravating circumstance to the jury where defendant undertook a violent course of conduct, over a period of two days, in which he physically battered his girlfriend, threatened to kill her and ultimately tried to drown her — the very day he succeeded in drowning her son. State v. Walls, 342 N.C. 1, 463 S.E.2d 738 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1197, 116 S. Ct. 1694, 134 L. Ed. 2d 794 (1996).

The aggravating circumstance that defendant had been previously convicted of a felony involving the use or threat of violence reflects upon a defendant's long-term course of violent conduct. State v. Heatwole, 344 N.C. 1, 473 S.E.2d 310 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1122, 117 S. Ct. 1259, 137 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1997).

Murder held part of a course of conduct where the defendant participated in two bank robberies in the two months preceding the robbery/murder for which he was being tried, and the circumstances surrounding the crimes were similar. State v. Hoffman, 349 N.C. 167, 505 S.E.2d 80 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1053, 119 S. Ct. 1362, 143 L. Ed. 2d 522 (1999).

The trial court properly submitted the course of conduct aggravating circumstance to the jury, where the jury's affirmative response that it did find defendant guilty of first-degree murder under one theory, on the basis of malice, premeditation, and deliberation, did not indicate that the jury rejected conviction under a felony murder theory. State v. Guevara, 349 N.C. 243, 506 S.E.2d 711 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1133, 119 S. Ct. 1809, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1013 (1999).

Failure to Submit (e)(11) Evidence Upheld. — Where defendant opposed joinder of third murder, and State, consequently, had no evidence available to support a statutory aggravating circumstance related to the severed case and was thereby precluded from submitting it to the jury, defendant obtained a benefit which he could not claim, on appellate review, was illegal. State v. McNeil, 350 N.C. 657, 518 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1024, 120 S. Ct. 1432, 146 L. Ed. 2d 321 (2000).

Evidence of Prior Conviction Admitted to Show Course of Conduct. — The court properly admitted evidence of a different murder of which defendant had been convicted and for which he had received a death sentence, in order to support the submission of the (e)(11) aggravating circumstance; the evidence of this other murder was clearly relevant to support submission of the (e)(11) aggravating circumstance because it occurred two days after the murder of the victim and, in both instances, defendant robbed and killed elderly victims to obtain money to purchase cocaine. State v. Cummings, 353 N.C. 281, 543 S.E.2d 844 (2001).

IV. MITIGATING CIRCUMSTANCES.

A. In General.

Editor's Note. — For case holding unanimity requirement for finding of mitigating factors unconstitutional, see McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), annotated under analysis lines I and II, above.

Definition of Mitigating Circumstance. — A mitigating circumstance under this section is a fact or group of facts which do not constitute any justification or excuse for killing or reduce it to a lesser degree of the crime of first-degree murder, but which may be considered as extenuating, or reducing the moral culpability of the killing, or making it less deserving of the extreme punishment than are other first-degree murders. State v. Irwin, 304 N.C. 93, 282 S.E.2d 439 (1981); State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982); State v. Boyd, 311 N.C. 408, 319 S.E.2d 189 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1030, 105 S. Ct. 2052, 85 L. Ed. 2d 324 (1985).

The law differs in the treatment of statutory and nonstatutory mitigating factors, and the defendant was not entitled to a jury charge applying a nonstatutory mitigating circumstance to a statutory mitigating circumstance. Green v. French, 978 F. Supp. 242 (E.D.N.C. 1997), aff'd, 143 F.3d 865 (4th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1090, 119 S. Ct. 844, 142 L. Ed. 2d 698 (1999).

Consideration of Mitigating Circumstances on Voir Dire. — A defendant may not use voir dire to stake out potential jurors by asking whether they could consider specific mitigating circumstances during the sentencing phase. State v. Miller, 339 N.C. 663, 455 S.E.2d 137, rehearing denied, 340 N.C. 118, 458 S.E.2d 183 (1995).

Due process is not violated by requiring the defendant to prove mitigating circumstances by the preponderance of the evidence. State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

"McKoy" Error — Held Harmless. — Trial court's error in requiring the jury to answer each mitigating circumstance "no" if it did not find the circumstance unanimously by a preponderance of the evidence was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt because there was unequivocal extrinsic evidence, both from the jury foreman's colloquy with the court and the individual jurors' answers, that the instruction did not prevent any juror's consideration of the defendant's mitigating evidence; rather, the jury was unanimous in rejecting the one mitigating circumstance that it failed to find. State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 216, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1991), rehearing denied, 502 U.S. 1001, 112 S. Ct. 627, 116 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1991).

Since the jury found all submitted mitigating circumstances, any error in trial court's instructions requiring the jury to unanimously find a mitigating circumstance before it could be meaningfully considered in defendant's favor was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Roper, 328 N.C. 337, 402 S.E.2d 600, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 902, 112 S. Ct. 280, 116 L. Ed. 2d 232 (1991).

Absent extraordinary facts, the erroneous submission of a mitigating circumstance is harmless. State v. Walker, 343 N.C. 216, 469 S.E.2d 919 (1996).

Same — Harm Found. — Where there was evidence to support the submitted but unfound mitigating circumstances, the error under McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990) was not harmless. State v. Sanders, 327 N.C. 319, 395 S.E.2d 412 (1990), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1051, 111 S. Ct. 763, 112 L. Ed. 2d 782 (1991).

Where, in a murder prosecution the jury failed to find unanimously several proposed mitigating circumstances supported by substantial evidence, and where some, but not all jurors may have found credible the evidence in support of some or all of these circumstances and that the nonstatutory circumstances had mitigating value, had each juror been allowed to consider such of these circumstances as each found to exist, and the evidence supporting them, in the final weighing process, it cannot be said beyond a reasonable doubt that there would not have been a different result in the sentence. State v. McKoy, 327 N.C. 31, 394 S.E.2d 426 (1990).

The North Carolina Supreme Court could not conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that the erroneous unanimity jury instruction did not preclude one or more jurors from considering in mitigation defendant's evidence of his diminished capacity to appreciate the criminality of his act or to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law. Nor could it conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that had such jurors been permitted, under proper instructions, to consider the circumstance, they would nevertheless have voted for the death penalty rather than life imprisonment. State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 127, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174, rehearing denied, 502 U.S. 1001, 112 S. Ct. 627, 116 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1991).

Where the trial court instructed the jury to answer each mitigating circumstance "no" if the jury did not unanimously find the circumstance by a preponderance of the evidence, the instruction constituted error as a juror could have found the capacity of the defendant to appreciate the criminality of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law was impaired because he was under the influence of drugs where defendant consumed two beers and smoked five marijuana cigarettes six-and-one-half hours before the murder. State v. Quesinberry, 328 N.C. 288, 401 S.E.2d 632 (1991).

Instruction that the jury had to unanimously find each mitigating circumstance before considering that circumstance in the ultimate sentencing decision constituted error requiring a new sentencing proceeding where there was evidence tending to support the statutory circumstance of impaired capacity. State v. Wynne, 329 N.C. 507, 406 S.E.2d 812 (1991).

Where there was substantial evidence to support each of the submitted mitigating circumstances, one of which was by statute deemed to have mitigating value and the others of which were such as a juror could reasonably find to have mitigating value, instructions contrary to the dictates of McKoy necessitated a new sentencing hearing. State v. Artis, 329 N.C. 679, 406 S.E.2d 827 (1991).

Where there was substantial evidence from which a juror reasonably might have found the "catchall" statutory mitigating circumstance that was submitted, McKoy error in the instructions would necessitate a new capital sentencing proceeding. State v. Stager, 329 N.C. 278, 406 S.E.2d 876 (1991).

McKoy error as to issue of whether murder was committed while the defendant was under the influence of a mental or emotional disturbance was not harmless, and because of it, defendant was entitled to be given a new capital sentencing hearing. State v. Greene, 329 N.C. 771, 408 S.E.2d 185 (1991), appeal dismissed, 347 N.C. 580, 502 S.E.2d 605 (1998).

Where evidence presented at trial and during sentencing proceeding supported reasonable inferences that defendant's participation in both murders was relatively minor, that he acted under the domination of another person, and that his low I.Q. impaired his ability to make judgments, court could not conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that erroneous unanimity instruction did not preclude one or more jurors from considering in mitigation defendant's lesser and subordinate role in the two murders or his impaired mental abilities. State v. Barnes, 330 N.C. 104, 408 S.E.2d 843 (1991).

Where the jury was required to be unanimous in finding mitigating circumstances and uncontradicted evidence could have supported determination that defendant's ability to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law was impaired, or that defendant acted under influence of mental or emotional disturbance, yet jury answered "no" as to statutory mitigating circumstances addressing defendant's mental condition, the McCoy error was not harmless. State v. Simpson, 331 N.C. 267, 415 S.E.2d 351 (1992), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1161, 116 S. Ct. 1048, 134 L. Ed. 2d 194 (1996).

All the Evidence Must Be Taken into Account by the Trial Court. — Whereas subsection (b) of this section mandates that a mitigating circumstance be submitted to the jury for its consideration when it may be supported by the evidence, all the evidence must be taken into account by the trial court — not just that which the court has ruled admissible for other purposes. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

An honorable discharge is a nonstatutory mitigating circumstance that the jury may consider but need not find to be mitigating. State v. Heatwole, 344 N.C. 1, 473 S.E.2d 310 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1122, 117 S. Ct. 1259, 137 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1997).

Absent extraordinary facts, the erroneous submission of a mitigating circumstance is harmless. State v. White, 343 N.C. 378, 471 S.E.2d 593 (1996).

Weight of Mitigating Circumstances for Jurors to Determine. — Where, after being instructed by the court to consider impaired capacity as a mitigating circumstance if defendant proved that circumstance by a preponderance of the evidence, juror answered, "I would weigh it, your honor, but it would carry little weight, I'm afraid. I don't consider that a mitigating circumstance, but I would weigh it," trial court did not err in denying the challenge to this potential juror as defendant is entitled to have the jury consider all appropriate mitigating circumstances, but the weight to be given each circumstance is for the individual juror to determine. State v. Smith, 328 N.C. 99, 400 S.E.2d 712 (1991).

Admissibility Generally. — The circumstances of the offense and the defendant's age, character, education, environment, habits, mentality, propensities and criminal record are generally relevant to mitigation; however, the ultimate issue concerning the admissibility of such evidence must still be decided by the presiding trial judge, and his decision is guided by the usual rules which exclude repetitive or unreliable evidence or that lacking an adequate foundation. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds,

State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995); State v. Boyd, 311 N.C. 408, 319 S.E.2d 189 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1030, 105 S. Ct. 2052, 85 L. Ed. 2d 324 (1985).

The admissibility of mitigating evidence during the penalty phase is not constrained by the Rules of Evidence, although the trial judge must determine the admissibility of such evidence subject to general rules excluding evidence that is repetitive, unreliable, or lacking an adequate foundation. State v. Locklear, 349 N.C. 118, 505 S.E.2d 277 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1075, 119 S. Ct. 1475, 143 L. Ed. 2d 559 (1999).

Jury Must Be Permitted to Consider Mitigating Circumstances. — As the General Assembly has determined that certain circumstances, as a matter of law, have mitigating value, and has expressly provided by statute for their submission to the jury under appropriate circumstances, if the jury is not permitted to consider a mitigating circumstance supported by the evidence, a defendant's due process rights are implicated. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Instruction that told jurors they could give no weight to statutory mitigating circumstances they found to exist was contrary to the intent of subsection (f) and was an incorrect statement of the law. State v. Howell, 343 N.C. 229, 470 S.E.2d 38 (1996).

But Mitigating Circumstances May Be Subsumed. — The trial court's refusal to submit a requested nonstatutory mitigating circumstance concerning the defendant's suicidal depression after returning from Korea was proper where this circumstance was subsumed in an already-given instruction concerning the defendant's emotional problems. State v. Meyer, 353 N.C. 92, 540 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

All Proposed Mitigating Circumstances Subsumed. — Trial court did not err in excluding defendant's proposed mitigating circumstance that he was under the influence of a mental or emotional disturbance after the trial court did not permit defendant's witness to testify as to defendant's mental state because the sociologist and criminologist was not qualified to make such a conclusion; further the trial court's final list of mitigating circumstances subsumed the proposed mitigating circumstances to the exclusion of none; and finally, defendant's death sentence was not disproportional when compared to the penalty in similar cases. State v. Taylor, 354 N.C. 28, 550 S.E.2d 141 (2001).

The trial judge's jury instructions were proper where they mirrored the requirements of a constitutional instruction by instructing the jury that only one juror needed to deem a factor mitigating for it to receive consideration. Skipper v. Lee, — F. Supp. 2d —, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21347 (E.D.N.C. Nov. 30, 1999), aff'd, 238 F.3d 414 (4th Cir. 2000).

The court rejected the defendant's allegation that a jury instruction "lumped together" several mitigating circumstances in the conjunctive. State v. Cummings, 352 N.C. 600, 536 S.E.2d 36 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1660, 149 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2001).

The trial court must offer for the jury's consideration any mitigating circumstance that the jury might reasonably find supported by the evidence, and when the evidence adduced at trial appears to support the mitigating circumstance that defendant had no prior significant history of criminal activity, both parties must be given the opportunity to introduce additional evidence supporting or rebutting that circumstance. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

The trial judge's determination of whether a mitigating circumstance should be submitted to the sentencing jury should be guided by the following statement of the State Supreme Court in State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), reh. denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983): Common sense, fundamental fairness and judicial economy dictate that any reasonable doubt concerning the submission of a statutory or requested mitigating factor be resolved in the defendant's favor to ensure the accomplishment of complete justice at the first sentencing hearing. State v. Stokes, 308 N.C. 634, 304 S.E.2d 184 (1983), death sentence vacated and life sentence imposed, 319 N.C. 1, 352 S.E.2d 653 (1987).

The trial court's exclusion of defendant's father's mitigation testimony during the sentencing proceeding regarding a conversation he had with defendant during defendant's pretrial incarceration was harmless where the father testified as to the substance of the conversation and the defendant failed to make an offer of proof after the objection was sustained. State v. Hardy, 353 N.C. 122, 540 S.E.2d 334 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 96, 151 L. Ed. 2d 56 (2001).

Prior Mitigating Circumstances Not Established As a Matter of Law. — Trial court did not err by refusing to instruct the jury that the mitigating circumstances found at previous sentencing proceeding were established as a matter of law. State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1096, 118 S. Ct. 892, 139 L. Ed. 2d 878 (1998).

Substantial Evidence of Mitigating Factors. — The trial court is not required to instruct upon a statutory mitigating circumstance unless substantial evidence has been presented to the jury which would support a reasonable finding by the jury of the existence of the circumstance. State v. Daniels, 337 N.C. 243, 446 S.E.2d 298 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1135, 115 S. Ct. 953, 130 L. Ed. 2d 895 (1995).

Where evidence as to subdivision (f)(2) and (f)(6) mitigating circumstances conflicted (defendant's experts testified that he had borderline mental intelligence and a reading disorder while his psychologist conceded that he worked, earned his living, had a driver's license and functioned within the limits of his intelligence; the State's testimony showed defendant coldheartedly and calmly planning to obtain the pesticide which he eventually put in his children's Kool-Aid, cunningly passing the blame on to his ex-girlfriend and remaining silent as they lay dying or deathly ill in the hospital; and no one testified that defendant was in any way enraged or intoxicated at the time of the crimes), the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's request for instructions regarding mitigating circumstances. State v. Smith, 351 N.C. 251, 524 S.E.2d 28 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 862, 121 S. Ct. 151, 148 L. Ed. 2d 100 (2000).

In order to show reversible error in the trial court's omission of a statutory mitigating circumstance in a capital case, defendant must affirmatively establish three things: (1) That the particular factor was one which the jury could have reasonably deemed to have mitigating value (this is presumed to be so when the factor is listed in subsection (f) of this section); (2) that there was sufficient evidence of the existence of the factor; and (3) that, considering the case as a whole, the exclusion of the factor from the jury's consideration resulted in ascertainable prejudice to the defendant. State v. Bacon, 326 N.C. 404, 390 S.E.2d 327 (1990).

The weight a mitigating circumstance is assigned during the sentencing phase of a trial for a capital offense is entirely for the jury to decide. It follows that counsel is entitled to argue what weight circumstances should ultimately be assigned. State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 887, 108 S. Ct. 42, 98 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1987).

Mitigating circumstances are given sufficient "independent mitigating weight" in a balancing with aggravating factors. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

Jury must be permitted to consider any and all possible mitigating factors. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

Motion for Listing of Possible Mitigating Circumstances. — If, in a capital case, a defendant makes a timely request for a listing in writing of possible mitigating circumstances, supported by the evidence, and if these circumstances are such that the jury could reasonably deem them to have mitigating value, the trial judge must put such circumstances on the written list. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

Where, in a capital case, there are a number of things including good character, which a defendant contends the jury should consider in mitigation, in order to insure that the trial judge mentions these to the jury in his instructions the defendant must file a timely request. Otherwise, failure of the court to mention any particular item as a possible mitigating factor will not be held for error so long as the trial judge instructs that the jury may consider any circumstances which it finds to have mitigating value pursuant to subdivision (f)(9) of this section. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

The legislature intended that all mitigating circumstances, both those expressly mentioned in this statute and others which might be submitted under subdivision (f)(9) of this section, be on equal footing before the jury. If those which are expressly mentioned are submitted in writing, as they should be, then any other relevant circumstance proffered by the defendant as having mitigating value which is supported by the evidence and which the jury may reasonably deem to have mitigating value must, upon defendant's timely request, also be submitted in writing. Where, however, defendant makes no specific request to include possible "other mitigating circumstances" on the written verdict form submitted to the jury and, likewise, makes no timely request to include defendant's good character as a mitigating circumstance, the actions of the trial judge in failing to do these things are not erroneous. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

Burden on Issue of Mitigating Circumstances. — The burden of persuading the jury on the issue of the existence of any mitigating circumstance is upon the defendant and the standard of proof is by a preponderance of the evidence. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

The burden of persuading the jury as to the existence of any mitigating circumstance is upon the defendant to so prove by a preponderance of the evidence, and when all the evidence tends to show the existence of a particular mitigating circumstance, a defendant is entitled to a peremptory instruction on that issue. State v. Stokes, 308 N.C. 634, 304 S.E.2d 184 (1983), death sentence vacated and life sentence imposed, 319 N.C. 1, 352 S.E.2d 653 (1987).

Whether a violation of a defendant's federal constitutional rights is prejudicial is controlled by subsection (b) of this section, and such violation is prejudicial unless the appellate court finds that it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden is upon the state to so prove. State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988).

Burden Constitutional. — The North Carolina Supreme Court abandoned the Pinch test with respect to statutory mitigating circumstances because due process constitutional issues are involved and, as to constitutional issues, the Pinch test impermissibly shifts the burden of proof to the defendant. State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988). See also, State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

State Does Not Have Burden of Proving Absence of Mitigating Factors. — The State does not have the burden of proof that, in a given capital case, no mitigating circumstances exist. It is the responsibility of the defendant to go forward with evidence that tends to show the existence of a given mitigating circumstance and to prove its existence to the satisfaction of the jury. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

Right to Peremptory Instruction. — Where, all of the evidence in the case, if believed, tends to show that a particular mitigating circumstance does exist, the defendant is entitled to a peremptory instruction on that circumstance. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979); State v. Noland, 312 N.C. 1, 320 S.E.2d 642 (1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1230, 105 S. Ct. 1232, 84 L. Ed. 2d 369, rehearing denied, 471 U.S. 1050, 105 S. Ct. 2044, 85 L. Ed. 2d 342 (1985).

Although the defendant has the burden of proving the existence of a mitigating circumstance, upon a proper request where all of the evidence in the case, if believed, tends to show that a particular mitigating circumstance does exist, the defendant is entitled to a peremptory instruction on that circumstance, but such a peremptory instruction is inappropriate when there is conflicting evidence on that issue. State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982).

When a mitigating factor is uncontroverted, the trial judge must give a peremptory instruction to the jury on that circumstance. The effect of this type of instruction is to remove the question of whether the mitigating circumstance exists from the jury's determination and to conclusively establish the existence of that factor; it also requires the jury to consider the peremptorily instructed circumstance in its final determination of a sentence recommendation. It does not, however, affect the weight that ultimately may be assigned to that circumstance by the jury. State v. Kirkley, 308 N.C. 196, 302 S.E.2d 144 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Shank, 322 N.C. 243, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988).

The trial court is required to give a peremptory instruction, if the defendant so requests, when evidence showing that the mitigating circumstance exists is uncontroverted. State v. Simpson, 341 N.C. 316, 462 S.E.2d 191 (1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1161, 116 S. Ct. 1048, 134 L. Ed. 2d 194 (1996).

Instructions on Defendant's Relatively Minor Role in Murder Inappropriate. — The jury's factual findings underlying the determination that defendant was guilty of first-degree murder at the guilt-phase precluded the resentencing jury from considering the statutory mitigating circumstance that "defendant was an accomplice in or accessory to the capital felony committed by another person and his participation was relatively minor." State v. Roseboro, 351 N.C. 536, 528 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1019, 121 S. Ct. 582, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

The trial court did not err in refusing to peremptorily instruct the jury, etc. — Under subdivision (f)(3) of this section that victim was a voluntary participant in defendant's homicidal act, where the State produced ample evidence to contradict defendant's claim that victim initially attacked him with a knife. State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 165 (1986).

Where there was contradictory evidence supporting the subdivision (f)(2) and (f)(6) mitigators, the defendant's evidence was not "uncontroverted and manifestly credible" so as to warrant preemptory instructions. State v. Cheek, 351 N.C. 48, 520 S.E.2d 545 (1999), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1245, 120 S. Ct. 2694, 147 L. Ed. 2d 965 (2000).

The court's denial of the nonstatutory mitigating circumstance of "[t]he defendant having found a closer path to the Lord" was not improper where the evidence was controverted. State v. Gell, 351 N.C. 192, 524 S.E.2d 332 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 878, 121 S. Ct. 163, 148 L. Ed. 2d 110 (2000).

The trial court's properly denied defendant's motion for a peremptory instruction regarding two statutory mitigating circumstances where the evidence conflicted concerning his mental state and ability to conform his conduct to the law. The girlfriend of the defendant, who carried out nine premeditated, calculated, and vicious murders while carefully avoiding detection for two years, testified that she had not observed anything unusual about him and had not known him to experience hallucinations. Defendant held numerous jobs involving management responsibilities and maintained nonabusive relationships with his girlfriend and other women during the time these crimes were committed. State v. Wallace, 351 N.C. 481, 528 S.E.2d 326 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1018, 121 S. Ct. 581, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

The trial court's refusal to give peremptory instruction including the mitigating circumstances of mental disturbance and capacity to appreciate criminality was proper where the evidence was controverted. The prosecution's witness testified based on his evaluation performed two months after the murder whereas the evaluation done by defendant's expert was performed 11 years after the murder. State v. Cummings, 352 N.C. 600, 536 S.E.2d 36 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1660, 149 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2001).

The trial court did not err in refusing to peremptorily instruct the jury on the statutory mitigating circumstances under subdivisions (f)(2), (f)(6), and (f)(7), where the court actually instructed on the first and where the evidence on the other two was controverted. State v. Call, 353 N.C. 400, 545 S.E.2d 190 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 628, 151 L. Ed. 2d 548 (2001).

Defendant Must Bring Forward Evidence of Factor's Existence. — Although the trial court has a fundamental duty to declare and explain the law arising upon the evidence, it is not required to instruct upon a statutory mitigating circumstance sua sponte unless defendant, who has the burden of persuasion, brings forward sufficient evidence of the existence of the specified factor. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Additional Factors Requested by Defendant. — The trial court must include additional factors, which are timely requested by the defendant, on the written list submitted to the jury if they are supported by the evidence, and are such that the jury could reasonably deem them to have mitigating value. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Nonstatutory mitigating circumstances do not have mitigating value as a matter of law. State v. Miller, 339 N.C. 663, 455 S.E.2d 137, rehearing denied, 340 N.C. 118, 458 S.E.2d 183 (1995).

No Duty to Instruct on Nonstatutory Factors Absent Request. — The court has no obligation specifically to instruct on nonstatutory mitigating circumstances which are not called to its attention. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

Where neither defendant nor the state introduced evidence to show that defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity, the court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on this mitigating circumstance. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Sympathy. — Notwithstanding that the trial court should not specifically refer to sympathy, the catchall mitigating circumstance permits jurors to weigh sympathy in their determinations, if they in fact have sympathy for the defendant, and consider that sympathy to be a circumstance having mitigating value. State v. Conner, 345 N.C. 319, 480 S.E.2d 626 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 876, 118 S. Ct. 196, 139 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1997).

Court Not Required to Sift Through Evidence for Mitigating Facts. — Although the jury's consideration of any factor relevant to the circumstances of the crime or the character of the defendant may not be restricted, the trial court is not required to sift through the evidence and search out every possible circumstance which the jury might find to have mitigating value, especially when the trial court instructs the jury upon the open-ended provision of subdivision (f)(9) of this section and thus does not hinder it from evaluating on its own anything of mitigating value. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Nonstatutory Mitigating Factors. — Nonstatutory mitigating circumstances do not necessarily have mitigating value and it is for the jury to determine whether submitted nonstatutory mitigating circumstances have mitigating value for although evidence may support the existence of the nonstatutory circumstance, the jury may decide that the circumstance is not mitigating. State v. Daniels, 337 N.C. 243, 446 S.E.2d 298 (1994).

When a jury determines that a statutory mitigating circumstance exists, it is not free to refuse to consider the circumstance and must give it some weight in its final sentencing determinations; however, it is for the jury to determine whether submitted nonstatutory mitigating circumstances established by the evidence should be given any mitigating value and nonstatutory mitigating circumstances are mitigating only when one or more jurors deem them to be so. State v. Keel, 337 N.C. 469, 447 S.E.2d 748 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1198, 115 S. Ct. 1270, 131 L. Ed. 2d 147 (1995).

Failure to Submit. — Where defendant had been previously convicted of two counts of larceny, fifteen counts of injury to property, an alcoholic beverage violation, and five counts of felony breaking and entering, trial court did not abuse its discretion by failing to submit mitigating circumstances to the jury in defendant's murder trial. State v. Rowsey, 343 N.C. 603, 472 S.E.2d 903 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1151, 117 S. Ct. 1087, 137 L. Ed. 2d 221 (1997).

Failure to Submit Nonstatutory Mitigating Circumstances to Jury Raises Federal Constitutional Issues. — Upon such showing by a defendant, (1) that a nonstatutory mitigating circumstance is one which the jury could reasonably find had mitigating value, and (2) that there is sufficient evidence of the existence of the circumstance to require it to be submitted to the jury, the failure by the trial judge to submit such nonstatutory mitigating circumstance to the jury for its determination raises federal constitutional issues. State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988).

Refusal to Submit Nonstatutory Factors Held Not Error. — The trial court did not err in refusing to submit defendant's proposed nonstatutory mitigating circumstances where these were already subsumed in the mitigating circumstance under subdivision (f)(4) submitted to the jury. State v. Brewington, 352 N.C. 489, 532 S.E.2d 496 (2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1165, 121 S. Ct. 1126, 148 L. Ed. 2d 992 (2001).

Failure to Submit Particular Factor Absent Request. — When counsel makes no request for additional mitigating circumstance instructions, failure of the court to mention any particular item as a possible mitigating factor will not be held for error, so long as the trial judge instructs that the jury may consider any circumstance which it finds to have mitigating value pursuant to subsection (f)(9) of this section. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

No Requirement to Specify Those Factors Found and Those Not Found. — While it is the better practice to require the jury to specify mitigating factors found and not found for the benefit of Supreme Court in reviewing the appropriateness of the death penalty, there is no such requirement in the statutes. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

There are no statutory or constitutional requirements of specific findings on the mitigating circumstances submitted to the jury. State v. McDougall, 308 N.C. 1, 301 S.E.2d 308, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 197, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983); 501 U.S. 1223, 111 S. Ct. 2840, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1009 (1991).

Although it is the better practice for a jury to specify on the verdict form which mitigating circumstances it finds and which it does not find, there is no constitutional or statutory requirement that it do so. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Testimony Offered Solely to Refute Possible Mitigating Circumstances. — Admission of testimony offered by the State solely to refute mitigating circumstances upon which defendant might later rely was error; however, it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt as (1) much of the testimony objected to by defendant, in addition to rebutting mitigating circumstances, also was competent as evidence of aggravating circumstances, and (2) a review of the evidence shows that the jury had before it a clear record of what must be described as defendant's unconscionable acts toward many of his victims. State v. Taylor, 304 N.C. 249, 283 S.E.2d 761 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3552, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398, rehearing denied, 463 U.S. 1249, 104 S. Ct. 37, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1456 (1983).

The court's admission of state-proffered hearsay testimony during the sentencing proceeding as rebuttal to the hearsay evidence offered by defendant in support of the (f)(4) mitigating circumstance and a nonstatutory mitigating circumstance that defendant requested, i.e. based on his contentions that someone else pulled the trigger and that his role in the murders was relatively small, did not result in plain error where other evidence existed from which the jury could infer that he shot and killed the victims. State v. Lemons, 352 N.C. 87, 530 S.E.2d 542 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1091, 121 S. Ct. 813, 148 L. Ed. 2d 698 (2001).

Any aspect of defendant's character, record or circumstance of the particular offense which defendant offers as a mitigating circumstance should be considered by the sentencer. State v. Irwin, 304 N.C. 93, 282 S.E.2d 439 (1981).

In determining whether a mitigating circumstance exists, the jury is free to consider all the evidence relevant to that circumstance. State v. Kirkley, 308 N.C. 196, 302 S.E.2d 144 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Shank, 322 N.C. 243, 367 S.E.2d 639 (1988); State v. McKoy, 323 N.C. 1, 372 S.E.2d 12 (1988), death sentence vacated and case remanded, McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Evidence irrelevant to mitigating factors may be properly excluded by the trial court. State v. Irwin, 304 N.C. 93, 282 S.E.2d 439 (1981).

Evidence Unrelated to Defendant Properly Excluded. — Where the evidence offered by the defendant in a capital case and excluded by the trial judge was in no way connected to defendant, his character, his record or the circumstances of the charged offense, it was, therefore, irrelevant and of no probative value as mitigating evidence in the sentencing procedure of defendant's trial, and the trial judge's ruling excluding the evidence did not unduly limit the jury's consideration of mitigating factors in violation of subdivision (f)(9) of this section. State v. Cherry, 298 N.C. 86, 257 S.E.2d 551 (1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 941, 100 S. Ct. 2165, 64 L. Ed. 2d 796 (1980).

Evidence that wife suffered from the battered woman syndrome did not entitle her to a charge on self-defense, following State v. Norman, 324 N.C. 253, 378 S.E.2d 8 (1989). State v. Grant, 343 N.C. 289, 470 S.E.2d 1 (1996).

Character Evidence. — In a capital sentencing proceeding character evidence may be offered in hope of lending a convicted murderer some degree of "humanness." Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

In a prosecution for a capital offense the State may not in its case in chief offer evidence of a defendant's bad character; a defendant, however, may offer evidence of whatever circumstances may reasonably be deemed to have mitigating value, whether or not they are listed in subsection (f) of this section. State v. Silhan, 302 N.C. 223, 275 S.E.2d 450 (1981), overruled in part by State v. Sanderson, 346 N.C. 669, 488 S.E.2d 133, State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997).

Although the State cannot in its case in chief offer evidence of a defendant's bad character as an aggravating circumstance in a capital case, the State can offer evidence of a defendant's bad character to rebut evidence of his good character presented by a defendant as a mitigating circumstance. State v. Silhan, 302 N.C. 223, 275 S.E.2d 450 (1981), overruled in part by State v. Sanderson, 346 N.C. 669, 488 S.E.2d 133, State v. Adams, 347 N.C. 48, 490 S.E.2d 220 (1997).

Evidence of bad reputation or character is admissible when its sole purpose is to rebut mitigating circumstances upon which defendant might later rely. However, when defendant offers evidence of any circumstance that may reasonably be deemed to have mitigating value, whether or not it appears in the statutory list, the State may rebut this with evidence of defendant's bad character. State v. Brown, 320 N.C. 179, 358 S.E.2d 1, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 970, 108 S. Ct. 467, 98 L. Ed. 2d 406 (1987).

The fact that defendant was raped while in prison subsequent to the crime charged does not have mitigating value as to that crime. State v. Zuniga, 320 N.C. 233, 357 S.E.2d 898, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 959, 108 S. Ct. 359, 98 L. Ed. 2d 384 (1987).

Mentality of a defendant is generally relevant to sentencing and it can, with supporting evidence, be properly considered in mitigation of a capital felony. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Score on Intelligence Test. — Fact that defendant scored 66 on an intelligence test unquestionably related to defendant's mentality, and defendant would have been entitled to an instruction about his specific intelligence quotient if he had tendered a properly worded request therefor. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339

N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Age of 45 at the time of the crime could not rationally be considered a mitigating circumstance. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

Punishment of Accomplice. — Accomplices' punishment is not an aspect of the defendant's character or record nor a mitigating circumstance of the particular offense. It bears no relevance to these factors, and thus there is no error in judge's refusal to submit it to the jury. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

The fact that the defendant's accomplices received a lesser sentence is not an extenuating circumstance; it does not reduce the moral culpability of the killing nor make it less deserving of the penalty of death than other first-degree murders. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

That a murder was not committed in a calculated manner is not a mitigating circumstance. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

Testimony on Religious, Ethical, etc., Perspectives of Capital Punishment. — The trial court did not err under subsection (f) of this section by excluding testimony by defense witnesses on the religious, ethical, legal and public policy perspectives of capital punishment as it was totally irrelevant and of no probative value as mitigating evidence in the sentencing phase of defendant's trial. State v. Taylor, 304 N.C. 249, 283 S.E.2d 761 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3552, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398, rehearing denied, 463 U.S. 1249, 104 S. Ct. 37, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1456 (1983).

Evidence Defendant Showed Remorse. — The jury cannot be precluded from considering mitigating evidence relating to the defendant's character or record and the circumstances of the offense that the defendant offers as the basis for a sentence less than death. Proffered testimony that the defendant was sorry for what he had done showed his remorse and should have been admitted as relevant mitigating evidence in the sentencing phase of his capital trial. State v. Jones, 339 N.C. 114, 451 S.E.2d 826 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1169, 115 S. Ct. 2634, 132 L. Ed. 2d 873, reh'g denied, 515 U.S. 1183, 116 S. Ct. 32, 132 L. Ed. 2d 913 (1995).

Evidence that defendant showed remorse held insufficient where the defendant beat his two-year-old stepdaughter to death; even though he called 911 to obtain help for her before she died, he misled the medical technicians by saying that the child had fallen from a chair rather than directing them to the fatal injuries hidden beneath her clothes. State v. Flippen, 349 N.C. 264, 506 S.E.2d 702 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1135, 119 S. Ct. 1813, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1015 (1999).

Eyewitness Account of Execution Properly Excluded. — In a capital case, it was not error for the trial judge to refuse to allow the defendant to present during the sentencing phase of the trial, an eyewitness account of a gas chamber execution, since the evidence was in no way connected to defendant, his character, his record or the circumstances of the charged offense. It was totally irrelevant and, therefore, properly excluded by the trial judge. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 355, 259 S.E.2d 752 (1979).

A defendant's failure to harm eyewitnesses is not a mitigating circumstance. State v. Miller, 339 N.C. 663, 455 S.E.2d 137, rehearing denied, 340 N.C. 118, 458 S.E.2d 183 (1995).

Willingness to Take Polygraph Test. — The mere fact that a defendant desires to take a polygraph test is not, standing alone, evidence of a mitigating circumstance. State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 887, 108 S. Ct. 42, 98 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1987).

The defendants' desire to take a polygraph test is not evidence from which the jury could have found as a mitigating factor their willingness to cooperate with the police, where there is no evidence that the State even suggested that the defendants take a polygraph test. A defendant's personal desire to submit to a polygraph examination, absent a police request, does not indicate a willingness to cooperate with the police. State v. Craig, 308 N.C. 446, 302 S.E.2d 740 (1983), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 887, 108 S. Ct. 42, 98 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1987).

Inadvertent Omission in Instruction. — The inadvertent omission of the words "circumstance to exist" following "One or more of us finds this mitigating" in the issues and recommendations form setting forth a particular mitigating circumstance was not plain error. State v. Warren, 348 N.C. 80, 499 S.E.2d 431 (1998).

Counsel's Failure to Request Instructions Does Not Indicate Ineffectiveness. — Trial counsel's failure to request specific, explanatory instructions with respect to mitigating circumstances arguably present in a case is not evidence of ineffectiveness, for a trial court is required to instruct the jury only on the basis of actual evidence offered and received in open court and not as to mere arguments of counsel. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C.

1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

No New Hearing if Failure to Submit Circumstance Was Harmless. — A new sentencing hearing under this section will not be ordered for the erroneous failure to submit a mitigating circumstance if that error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995).

As to when the trial court's omission or restriction of a statutory or timely requested mitigating circumstance is reversible error, see State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Rebuttal of Evidence of Mitigating Factors. — The prosecution is entitled to offer evidence designed to rebut mitigating circumstances only after defendant offers evidence in support of such mitigating factors. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Prosecutor May Minimize Value of Mitigating Circumstances. — The prosecutor's explanation of the catchall mitigating circumstance of this section neither diminished the importance of mitigation nor denigrated the list of nonstatutory mitigating circumstances, but was a legitimate attempt to minimize the value of those circumstances. State v. Cummings, 352 N.C. 600, 536 S.E.2d 36 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1660, 149 L. Ed. 2d 641 (2001).

Trial court did not err in resorting to a dictionary when responding to jury foreman's question as to the meaning of "extenuating" in a nonstatutory mitigating factor. State v. Brown, 320 N.C. 179, 358 S.E.2d 1, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 970, 108 S. Ct. 467, 98 L. Ed. 2d 406 (1987).

Court's Refusal to Submit Mitigating Factors Independently Was Not Error. — Where court refused to submit three mitigating circumstances as separate factors, but instead incorporated their content into its instructions on two other mitigating circumstances, court's refusal to submit proposed circumstances to the jury as independent mitigating circumstances was not error since mechanical, mathematical approach to capital sentencing was rejected and refusal to submit proposed circumstances separately and independently was within dictates of constitutional precedent. State v. Greene, 324 N.C. 1, 376 S.E.2d 430 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

The trial court correctly refused to submit the defendant's nonstatutory mitigating circumstance which was subsumed in other mitigating circumstances submitted to the jury. State v. Cheek, 351 N.C. 48, 520 S.E.2d 545 (1999), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1245, 120 S. Ct. 2694, 147 L. Ed. 2d 965 (2000).

Catchall Mitigating Circumstance Cures Failure to Submit Others. — The trial court's refusal to submit to the jury the defendant's self-serving statement that "the defendant did not set out to kill [the victim] and attempted to leave the house several times before the lethal acts occurred" was harmless where it submitted the catchall mitigating circumstance under subdivision (f)(9) and where the underlying requested circumstance was fully argued to the jury by defense counsel during closing argument. State v. Blakeney, 352 N.C. 287, 531 S.E.2d 799 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1117, 121 S. Ct. 868, 148 L. Ed. 2d 780 (2001).

Refusal to Submit Nonstatutory Factors Held Not Error. — Where the court's instructions required the jury to consider defendant's relationship with the victim in determining defendant's sentence, the court did not err in refusing to submit defendant's requested nonstatutory mitigating circumstance of an extenuating relationship between defendant and the victim. State v. Fullwood, 323 N.C. 371, 373 S.E.2d 518 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1464, 108 L. Ed. 2d 602 (1990) in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

A capital murder defendant was not entitled to have submitted to the jury the mitigating circumstance that there was an extenuating circumstance between the defendant and the victim, where the defendant never established that there was "a stepfather/stepson relationship." State v. Locklear, 349 N.C. 118, 505 S.E.2d 277 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1075, 119 S. Ct. 1475, 143 L. Ed. 2d 559 (1999).

Refusal to Submit That Crime Was Out of Character for Defendant. — In a first-degree murder case, the trial judge properly refused to submit as a mitigating circumstance that the crime was out of character for defendant, where the evidence that might have supported that circumstance did not include defendant's character and behavior between 1980, when he joined the Marines, and 1985, when the offenses occurred. State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988).

Evidence as to the different levels of security in the prison was properly excluded. as irrelevant to show defendant's character, prior record, or circumstances of the offense although its exclusion prevented him from showing that he was not considered by the prison staff to be dangerous or to require special supervision. State v. Roseboro, 351 N.C. 536, 528 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1019, 121 S. Ct. 582, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

Refusal to Submit Adjustment to Jail Life. — In a first-degree murder case the trial judge properly refused to submit the mitigating circumstance that defendant had adjusted well to jail life, where the trial judge noted that there was no evidence to support the proposed circumstance and called upon defendant's counsel to point out the evidence supporting it, but defendant's counsel replied that he did not want to be heard. State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988).

Refusal to Submit That Defendant Did Not Resist Arrest. — In a first-degree murder case, the refusal of the trial judge to submit as a mitigating circumstance that defendant did not resist arrest was not error, where the trial judge submitted as mitigating circumstances that defendant cooperated with the police upon his arrest, that he voluntarily confessed, and that he voluntarily agreed to searches of his car, motel room, home, and storage bin. The proposed circumstance was subsumed in these mitigating circumstances. State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988).

Brain Injury Did Not Entitle Defendant to Factors. — The court was not required to find mitigating factors under subdivision (f)(2) or (f)(6) just because it determined there was sufficient evidence to warrant a peremptory instruction that defendant's brain injury affected his ability to function on a daily basis and also substantially affected his personality. State v. Steen, 352 N.C. 227, 536 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1131, 148 L. Ed. 2d 997 (2001).

Mitigating Circumstances Far Outnumbered Aggravating Circumstances. — Trial court did not violate subsection (b) of this section by failing to impose a life sentence in the killing of two victims when the jury returned with its non-unanimous verdict after two hours' deliberation, or after 45 minutes' additional deliberation, when the trial was reconvened on Monday morning; the trial court did not abuse his discretion since two aggravating circumstances and 24 mitigating circumstances were submitted in the killing of one victim and one aggravating circumstance and 24 mitigating circumstances in the killing of the other victim, for a total of three aggravating circumstances and 48 mitigating circumstances, and since at the time the jury returned with its nonunanimous verdict it had deliberated for less than two hours, and at the time the jury reconvened on Monday morning, it had deliberated for less than two hours and 45 minutes. State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

Nonstatutory Mitigating Circumstance. — Even though the trial judge found that the evidence of mitigating circumstances was uncontroverted, it was not error for the judge to require the jury both to find that the circumstance existed and to find that the circumstance had mitigating value; the jury only "finds" a nonstatutory mitigating circumstance if it finds that the evidence supports the existence of the circumstance and if it deems it to have mitigating value. State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

Where prosecutor stated that the statutory mitigating circumstances submitted in this case had been passed into law by the Legislature, so that the Legislature had therefore provided for their consideration by the jury, and that the nonstatutory mitigating circumstances were created and urged upon the jury by defense counsel, there was no implication in this statement that the nonstatutory mitigating circumstances submitted to the jury were unworthy of the jury's consideration. State v. Huff, 325 N.C. 1, 381 S.E.2d 635 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 497 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 3266, 111 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence vacated, remanded for new capital sentencing proceeding, State v. Huff, 328 N.C. 532, 402 S.E.2d 577 (1991).

Finding and Weighing of "Any Other Circumstance". — Prosecutor did not improperly limit the scope of the matters in mitigation which the jury could have found and weighed under the "any other circumstance" provision of subdivision (f)(9) of this section; the prosecutor's statement essentially told the jurors that they could find any circumstance supported by the evidence to be mitigating, and taken in its entirety it would have been reasonably interpreted by jurors only as an admonition to base their finding and weighing of "any other circumstance" in mitigation upon the evidence and not upon their emotions. State v. Laws, 325 N.C. 81, 381 S.E.2d 609 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S.

1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence aff'd, State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 127, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174, rehearing denied, 502 U.S. 1001, 112 S. Ct. 627, 116 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1991).

Evidence Held Insufficient. — Where there was nothing in the transcript to show that defendant in a murder prosecution was an excessive user of drugs or alcohol which might have brought him under the influence of his codefendant, and the only evidence as to parental obligation was that defendant's daughter lived with his mother and he visited her and brought her presents, the evidence on both mitigating factors was insufficient to require their submission to the jury. State v. McLaughlin, 323 N.C. 68, 372 S.E.2d 49 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

B. No Significant Prior Criminal Activity.

Duty of Court to Determine If Evidence Will Support This Mitigating Circumstance. — Subsection (b) of this section does not require evidence of no history of prior criminal activity before the mitigating circumstance must be submitted for the jury's consideration. Rather, the statute places upon the trial court the duty to determine whether the evidence will support a reasonable finding of the mitigating circumstance of "no significant history of prior criminal activity." State v. Lloyd, 321 N.C. 301, 364 S.E.2d 316, vacated and remanded for further consideration, 488 U.S. 807, 109 S. Ct. 38, 102 L. Ed. 2d 18, reinstated, 323 N.C. 622, 374 S.E.2d 277 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration, 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990, death sentence vacated, 329 N.C. 662, 407 S.E.2d (1991).

And to Submit It If Present in the Record. — Even though defendant did not offer evidence supporting submission of the mitigating circumstance of no significant history of prior criminal activity, where such evidence was in fact present in the record, it was error not to submit this mitigating circumstance to the jury. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Where the evidence showed that the defendant had been convicted of five misdemeanors and two felonies as well as the unlawful consumption of drugs and alcohol, the trial court was required to submit the mitigating circumstance of no significant history of prior criminal activity to the jury. State v. Billings, 348 N.C. 169, 500 S.E.2d 423 (1998).

It is not merely the number of prior criminal activities, but the nature and age of such acts that the trial court considers in determining whether by such evidence a rational juror could conclude that this mitigating circumstance exists. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Standard for Determining Prejudice Upon Failure to Submit. — Because failure to submit the statutory mitigating circumstance of no significant history of prior criminal activity, when it is supported by the evidence, is a violation of both our statute and the Eighth Amendment, the standard for determining prejudice is § 15A-1443(b), which provides that violation of defendant's federal constitutional rights is prejudicial unless the State can demonstrate on appeal that it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Quick, 337 N.C. 359, 446 S.E.2d 535 (1994).

In determining whether to submit to the jury the statutory mitigating circumstance that the defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity, the trial court must consider all relevant circumstances and determine whether a rational jury could conclude that the defendant had no significant history of criminal activity as it relates to the sentencing decision. State v. Williams, 343 N.C. 345, 471 S.E.2d 379 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1061, 117 S. Ct. 695, 136 L. Ed. 2d 618 (1997).

Time of Prior Criminal Activity. — The history of prior criminal activity referred to defendant's criminal activity prior to the murder for which he was being sentenced, not prior to sentencing; therefore, the crimes for which defendant was convicted in 1986 were not relevant to the mitigator, "history of prior criminal activity", as used in subdivision (f)(1). State v. Coffey, 336 N.C. 412, 444 S.E.2d 431 (1994).

Not Submitted Where No Evidence of Prior Record. — Where the record showed defense counsel stated that no evidence of defendant's criminal history was presented by the defense or the state and the defense had chosen not to request submission of mitigating circumstances in subdivision (f)(1) of this section, since the record showed that no evidence was offered to support an instruction on mitigating circumstances in subdivision (f)(1), the trial court did not err in failing to submit it. State v. Gibbs, 335 N.C. 1, 436 S.E.2d 321 (1993), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1246, 114 S. Ct. 2767, 129 L. Ed. 2d 881 (1994).

Where there is no recorded evidence of a capital defendant's criminal history, the subdivision (f)(1) mitigating circumstance may not be submitted to the jury; where there is evidence supporting this circumstance, it is the trial court's duty to determine whether a rational jury could conclude that defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity. State v. Baker, 338 N.C. 526, 451 S.E.2d 574 (1994).

Evidence Must Be Uncontroverted. — The trial court properly refused to submit to the jury a preemptory instruction on the mitigating factor that the defendant had no prior history of significant criminal activity, even though the parties had stipulated to that mitigating circumstance in the defendant's first sentencing hearing, where the State presented evidence during the new sentencing proceeding that the defendant previously had twice assaulted his wife. State v. Flippen, 349 N.C. 264, 506 S.E.2d 702 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1135, 119 S. Ct. 1813, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1015 (1999).

Finding of No Prior Criminal Activity Not Required. — Subsection (b), requiring the submission of mitigating and aggravating circumstances to the jury, does not require a finding of no evidence of prior criminal activity before this mitigating circumstance must be submitted for the jury's consideration. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

Evidence that defendant had a prior felony conviction for the second-degree kidnapping of his wife and had stored illegal drugs in his shed and evidence of his complicity in a theft did not amount to such a significant history of prior criminal activity that no rational jury could find the existence of the mitigating circumstance of no significant history of prior criminal activity. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

"Prior criminal activity" is not limited to prior convictions. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983); State v. Maynard, 311 N.C. 1, 316 S.E.2d 197, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 963, 105 S. Ct. 363, 83 L. Ed. 2d 299 (1984), aff'd, 943 F.2d 407 (4th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1110, 112 S. Ct. 1211, 117 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1992); State v. Gladden, 315 N.C. 398, 340 S.E.2d 673, cert. denied, 479 U.S. 871, 107 S. Ct. 241, 93 L. Ed. 2d 165 (1986).

Prior Criminal History Must Be Significant. — The court must determine whether a rational jury could conclude that the defendant had no "significant" history of prior criminal activity; a defendant's criminal history is considered "significant" if it is likely to affect or have an influence upon the determination by the jury of its recommended sentence. State v. Jones, 339 N.C. 114, 451 S.E.2d 826 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1169, 115 S. Ct. 2634, 132 L. Ed. 2d 873, reh'g denied, 515 U.S. 1183, 116 S. Ct. 32, 132 L. Ed. 2d 913 (1995).

Where the defendant's conduct in the robbery-murder of his father was strikingly similar to his lengthy history of prior criminal activity and convictions, the trial court properly refused to submit the mitigating circumstance of no significant history of prior criminal activity to the jury. The focus for determining submission of instructions under this section should be on whether the criminal activity is such as to influence the jury's sentencing recommendation. State v. Greene, 351 N.C. 562, 528 S.E.2d 575 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1041, 121 S. Ct. 635, 148 L. Ed. 2d 543 (2000).

Significant Criminal Activity Shown. — A capital murder defendant who battered and beat his infant son to death was not entitled to submission of the mitigating circumstance that he lacked a significant history of prior criminal activity, where his prior criminal activities included an illegal sexual relationship with the mother of the child and another male, he was discharged from the Air Force after only three months for alcohol-related fights, he assaulted the mother of the victim during her pregnancy and threatened further violence if she informed on him, and he repeatedly abused his son over the course of his brief life. State v. Atkins, 349 N.C. 62, 505 S.E.2d 97 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1147, 119 S. Ct. 2025, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1999).

While the trial court is obligated to determine that a rational juror could find from the evidence that defendant had no significant history of criminal activity before submitting the subdivision (f)(1) mitigator, there is no requirement that such finding be made prior to admitting the state's rebuttal evidence. State v. Williams, 350 N.C. 1, 510 S.E.2d 626 (1999), cert. denied 528 U.S. 880, 120 S. Ct. 193, 145 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1999).

The trial court properly refrained from submitting the statutory mitigating circumstance that defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity where the evidence included a conviction for indecent liberties with a minor, previous recent assaults on his ex-girlfriend, recent communicated death threats against her and her new boyfriend, a history of drowning young puppies and kittens, and where the defendant did not request such an instruction. State v. Smith, 351 N.C. 251, 524 S.E.2d 28 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 862, 121 S. Ct. 151, 148 L. Ed. 2d 100 (2000).

Defendant had significant history of prior criminal activity where defendant had been convicted of the first-degree murder of his former wife and was sentenced to life imprisonment, from which he was later paroled. State v. King, 353 N.C. 457, 546 S.E.2d 570 (2001).

New Trial Warranted. — Where the trial court gave a peremptory instruction on the mitigating circumstance of the defendant's lack of criminal history but did not give a peremptory instruction on other nonstatutory mitigating circumstances which were supported by uncontroverted evidence, the trial court erred and defendant was entitled to a new sentencing proceeding for convictions for three first-degree murders. State v. Gay, 334 N.C. 467, 434 S.E.2d 840 (1993).

New Sentencing Proceeding Warranted. — Defendant's death sentence was vacated and the case was remanded for a new capital sentencing proceeding where the trial court erred by failing to submit the (f)(1) mitigating circumstance of no significant history of prior criminal activity by the defendant. State v. Jones, 346 N.C. 704, 487 S.E.2d 714 (1997).

Good Character Not Encompassed by Subdivision (f)(1). — The mitigating circumstance in a capital case which refers to a defendant's lack of "significant history of prior criminal activity" does not encompass a contention regarding defendant's good character, since good character imports more than simply the absence of criminal convictions. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

Criminal Record Admissible to Negate Evidence Under Subdivision (f)(1). — Portions of defendant's criminal record which were read to the jury during the sentencing phase of a first-degree murder case were relevant and competent to negate evidence that defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity which was submitted to the jury on his behalf as a possible mitigating circumstance. State v. Oliver, 302 N.C. 28, 274 S.E.2d 183 (1981).

Submission of Mitigating Factor over Defendant's Objection. — The trial court did not commit prejudicial error by submitting to the jury, over his objection, the mitigating factor that defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity, where despite evidence concerning his convictions on six counts of felony breaking or entering, six counts of felonious larceny, five counts of armed robbery, and one count of felonious assault in 1963 and 1965, defense counsel had strenuously argued that there was no evidence that defendant had committed any violent acts or violated any prison rules during the 18 years that he was incarcerated following such convictions, and where there was also evidence that defendant was only 20 years old when convicted of the 1965 offenses. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

Trial court had to submit evidence of the defendant's history of prior criminal activity — his drug use, juvenile delinquency and violence — as a mitigating circumstance under this section if a rational jury could conclude that such history was insignificant, and failure to inform jury that submission was required as a matter of law, in spite of defendant's objections, was harmless error. State v. Parker, 350 N.C. 411, 516 S.E.2d 106 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084, 120 S. Ct. 808, 145 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2000).

The submission of the (f)(1) mitigating factor, showing that defendant's prior criminal history including robbery and armed robbery occurred six years earlier, and that evidence indicated that defendant had put his past behind him, as required by law, did not prejudice defendant nor did it injure the defense team's credibility before the jury. State v. Peterson, 350 N.C. 518, 516 S.E.2d 131 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1164, 120 S. Ct. 1181, 145 L. Ed. 2d 1087 (2000).

Submission of Mitigating Factor and Potentially Conflicting Aggravating Factor. — Trial court's mitigating instruction of no prior criminal activity in case where it also gave aggravating instruction of prior criminal activity based on defendant's criminal record was harmless error; and defendant's death sentence was not disproportional. State v. Bone, 354 N.C. 1, 550 S.E.2d 482 (2001).

Submission of Mitigating Circumstance Upheld. — Where defendant's only felony convictions occurred almost 20 years before trial, and all of defendant's misdemeanor convictions were alcohol related, e.g., public drunkenness and driving while under the influence, while the evidence tended to show that defendant had suffered from episodic alcohol abuse since 1973, the trial court was correct in its view that a jury could reasonably find the mitigating circumstance of "no significant history of prior criminal activity" and in submitting that factor for consideration. State v. Lloyd, 321 N.C. 301, 364 S.E.2d 316, vacated and remanded for further consideration, 488 U.S. 807, 109 S. Ct. 38, 102 L. Ed. 2d 18, reinstated, 323 N.C. 622, 374 S.E.2d 277 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration, 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990, death sentence vacated, 329 N.C. 662, 407 S.E.2d (1991).

Failure to Submit Held Harmless Error. — Assuming that the trial court's failure to submit the statutory mitigating circumstance of no significant history of prior criminal activity was error, the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt; given the lack of any substantial evidence on the matter of prior criminality of the defendant and the trial court's erroneous peremptory instruction — favorable to the defendant — that the jury must find the nonstatutory mitigating circumstance of no prior convictions for violent felonies, the defendant received virtually the same benefit he would have received if the jury had found the statutory mitigating circumstance of no significant history of prior criminal activity. State v. Laws, 325 N.C. 81, 381 S.E.2d 609 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L.

Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence aff'd, State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 127, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174, rehearing denied, 502 U.S. 1001, 112 S. Ct. 627, 116 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1991).

Failure to Submit Upheld. — Trial court properly found that no reasonable juror could have concluded that defendant's criminal history was insignificant and therefore properly precluded instructions on the statutory mitigating circumstance under this section. State v. McNeil, 350 N.C. 657, 518 S.E.2d 486 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1024, 120 S. Ct. 1432, 146 L. Ed. 2d 321 (2000).

Where defendant stipulated to the State's evidence that his prior record included convictions for second-degree rape and second-degree murder and he objected to the State's request for the (f)(1) mitigating circumstance, the trial court did not err by failing to submit it to the jury. State v. Hamilton, 351 N.C. 14, 519 S.E.2d 514 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1102, 120 S. Ct. 1841, 146 L. Ed. 2d 783 (2000).

Where during capital sentencing proceeding the trial court erroneously failed to submit the statutory mitigating circumstance that the defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity, the sentence of death entered against the defendant was vacated and the case remanded to the Superior Court for a new capital sentencing proceeding. State v. Mahaley, 332 N.C. 583, 423 S.E.2d 58 (1992), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1089, 115 S. Ct. 749, 130 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1995).

In a death penalty case, where nonstatutory mitigating circumstances were submitted to the jury in lieu of the statutory mitigating circumstance of "no significant history of prior criminal activity," the state did not prove that the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, since the jury was not required to give any weight to the nonstatutory mitigating circumstances, but, by contrast, would have been required to give value to a statutory mitigating circumstance. State v. Mahaley, 332 N.C. 583, 423 S.E.2d 58 (1992), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1089, 115 S. Ct. 749, 130 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1995).

Where evidence of prior history of criminal activities was limited to that tending to show defendant's use of illegal drugs and her theft of money and credit cards to support her drug habit, it did not establish that the defendant had such a significant history of prior criminal activity that no rational jury could find the existence of the statutory mitigating circumstance. Therefore, the trial court erred by failing to submit this mitigating circumstance to the jury. State v. Mahaley, 332 N.C. 583, 423 S.E.2d 58 (1992), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1089, 115 S. Ct. 749, 130 L. Ed. 2d 649 (1995).

No New Hearing If Failure to Submit Was Harmless. — Defendant was not entitled to a new sentencing proceeding because the trial court did not submit the statutory mitigating circumstance that the defendant has no significant history or prior criminal activity; witness's cursory and unsubstantiated references to past marijuana use by the defendant were not, standing alone, substantial evidence as to whether the defendant had a significant history of criminal activity and a jury finding of no significant history of criminal activity, solely upon witness's remarks about marijuana use, would have been based purely upon speculation and conjecture, not upon substantial evidence. State v. Laws, 325 N.C. 81, 381 S.E.2d 609 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence aff'd, State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 127, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174, rehearing denied, 502 U.S. 1001, 112 S. Ct. 627, 116 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1991).

Failure to Submit Held Erroneous. — Where the jury was aware of the prior criminal activity of defendant, but was not allowed to consider the quality of this activity in its deliberations because the statutory mitigating circumstance of no significant history of prior criminal activity was not submitted, and the court could not state affirmatively that had this one mitigating circumstance been found and balanced against the four aggravating circumstances, the jury would still have returned a sentence of death, the case would be remanded for a new sentencing hearing. State v. Wilson, 322 N.C. 117, 367 S.E.2d 589 (1988).

The trial court erred in not submitting to the jury the mitigating factor that defendant had no significant history of prior criminal activity, even though the defendant had a history of stealing since he was a child and had been convicted of numerous offenses involving stealing, because his history of nonviolent criminal activity was less significant than that of other defendants for whom this mitigating circumstance has been found. State v. Fletcher, 348 N.C. 292, 500 S.E.2d 668 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1180, 119 S. Ct. 1118, 143 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1999).

New Sentencing Proceeding Not Warranted. — The trial court's admission of a felony larceny conviction occurring after the murder for the jury's consideration vis-a-vis the subdivision (f)(1) mitigating circumstance, where the truck theft was the subject of collateral attack by a pending motion for appropriate relief at the time of defendant's murder trial, was not reversible error; the pending motion was irrelevant and the submission of this later occurring felony, although in error, was not highly prejudicial given the prosecutor's emphasis on the defendant's drug activity. State v. Gell, 351 N.C. 192, 524 S.E.2d 332 (2000), cert.

denied, 531 U.S. 878, 121 S. Ct. 163, 148 L. Ed. 2d 110 (2000).

C. Mental or Emotional Disturbance.

Mental Retardation No Exception. — This statute, which provides for the death penalty, does not have an exception for mental retardation. State v. Best, 342 N.C. 502, 467 S.E.2d 45 (1996).

Use of the word "disturbance" shows the General Assembly intended something more in the mitigating circumstance at subdivision (f)(2) of this section than mental impairment, which is found in another mitigating circumstance. State v. Spruill, 320 N.C. 688, 360 S.E.2d 667 (1987).

Timing of Mental Disturbance. — A defendant's mental or emotional disturbance does not warrant submission of the (f)(2) circumstance unless the disturbance existed at the time of the murder. State v. Hill, 347 N.C. App. 275, 493 S.E.2d 264 (1997).

The fact that a juror accepted the expert's testimony to support the nonstatutory mitigating circumstance that the defendant " . . . lacked parental involvement or support in treatment for psychological problems" was not determinative of the sufficiency of the evidence in support of the statutory mitigating circumstance under subdivision (f)(2); the two mitigating circumstances emphasize different times and different events. The nonstatutory circumstance relates to parental support at the time the defendant sought psychological treatment, before these crimes were committed. The statutory circumstance involves his mental or emotional state at the time the crimes were committed. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Evidence was insufficient to warrant submission of the mitigating circumstance under § 15A-2000(f)(2) based either on defendant's drug abuse or on claims of depression and family crisis; there was no evidence that defendant was depressed or in crisis at the time of the murder. State v. Fair, — N.C. —, 552 S.E.2d 568, 2001 N.C. LEXIS 944 (2001).

Provocation Not Prerequisite to Factor. — Although some provocation will almost always be present where defendant suffers from a mental or emotional disturbance contemplated by subdivision (f)(2) of this section, it is not a prerequisite to submission of this mitigating circumstance. State v. Greene, 329 N.C. 771, 408 S.E.2d 185 (1991), appeal dismissed, 347 N.C. 580, 502 S.E.2d 605 (1998), explaining State v. Irwin, 304 N.C. 93, 282 S.E.2d 439 (1981).

Failure of State to Controvert Expert Testimony. — The trial court should have instructed peremptorily on the mitigating circumstance that the defendant suffered a mental or emotional disturbance at the time of the murder where the defendant submitted evidence in support of this statutory mitigating circumstance in the form of expert testimony, and the state presented no evidence that controverted the defendant's evidence on this mitigating circumstance. State v. Holden, 338 N.C. 394, 450 S.E.2d 878 (1994), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1126, 118 S. Ct. 1074, 140 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1998).

Voluntary intoxication by alcohol or narcotic drugs at the time of the commission of a murder is not within the meaning of a mental or emotional disturbance under subdivision (f)(2) of this section. State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

Defendant's alleged voluntary alcohol use on the night that he committed burglary and murder did not qualify as a mental or emotional disturbance for purposes of subsection (f)(2). State v. Chandler, 342 N.C. 742, 467 S.E.2d 636 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 875, 117 S. Ct. 196, 136 L. Ed. 2d 133 (1996).

As to the mitigating circumstance that the defendant was under the influence of a mental or emotional disturbance at the time of the offense, § 15A-2000(f)(2), his or her mental and emotional state at the time of the crime is the central question presented; the use of the word "disturbance" in § 15A-2000(f)(2) shows the General Assembly intended something more than mental impairment that is found in another mitigating circumstance (§ 15A-2000(f)(6)); voluntary intoxication is not a mental disturbance for purposes of § 15A-2000(f)(2). Section 15A-2000(f)(6) applies where there is evidence of some mental disorder to the degree that it affected the defendant's ability to understand and control his actions. State v. Hooks, 353 N.C. 629, 548 S.E.2d 501 (2001).

Drug withdrawal stemming from voluntary intoxication does not qualify as a mental or emotional disturbance for purposes of subdivision (f)(2). State v. Miller, 339 N.C. 663, 455 S.E.2d 137, rehearing denied, 340 N.C. 118, 458 S.E.2d 183 (1995).

Equivocal testimony of psychiatrist as to the mental and emotional condition of defendant held sufficient to make it a jury question as to whether he was under the influence of a mental or emotional disturbance at the time of the killing. State v. Spruill, 320 N.C. 688, 360 S.E.2d 667 (1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1061, 108 S. Ct. 2833, 100 L. Ed. 2d 934 (1988).

Controverted and conflicting evidence proffered by defendant in support of mitigating circumstances to show that murder was committed while defendant was under the influence of a mental or emotional disturbance did not entitle him to a jury instruction under this section. State v. Hedgepeth, 350 N.C. 776, 517 S.E.2d 605 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 1274, 146 L. Ed. 2d 223 (2000).

No Mitigating Circumstance Where Psychiatrists Examined Defendant Long After Crime. — Defendant did not present uncontradicted and inherently credible evidence to support the existence of the statutory mitigating circumstance that he was under the influence of mental or emotional disturbance, where, even though defendant presented two psychiatrists who testified that he was suffering from significant psychological disorders at the time of the shooting, those experts did not examine the defendant until several weeks or months after the crime and there was other evidence which contradicted the experts. State v. McKoy, 323 N.C. 1, 372 S.E.2d 12 (1988), death sentence vacated and case remanded, McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Argument of Prosecutor. — Defendant failed to show prejudice in the prosecutor's argument to the jury where he quoted irrelevant law, repeatedly reminded the jury that they were being asked to consider whether mitigating circumstances reduced defendant's culpability, and argued against mitigating circumstances in subdivision (f)(2) of this section by emphasizing evidence that the greater component of defendant's incapacity consisted of his personality disorder, not his low mental capacity. State v. Gibbs, 335 N.C. 1, 436 S.E.2d 321 (1993), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1246, 114 S. Ct. 2767, 129 L. Ed. 2d 881 (1994).

Peremptory Instruction Not Required. — The trial court was not required to give a peremptory instruction on the mitigating circumstance under subdivision (f)(2) where defendant's evidence was not uncontroverted. For example, a defense witness testified that there was nothing about defendant's condition that would have forced him to beat an elderly lady to death, and defendant's supervisor testified that he did his job correctly, exhibited no memory problems, came to work on time, picked up his paycheck on time, demonstrated good common sense, caused no trouble and did not appear to be mentally deficient. State v. Steen, 352 N.C. 227, 536 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1131, 148 L. Ed. 2d 997 (2001).

Peremptory Instruction Not Allowed. — The defendant was not entitled to a peremptory instruction under subdivision (f)(2) where the evidence as to his mental state at the time he murdered two people was conflicting. State v. White, 349 N.C. 535, 508 S.E.2d 253 (1998), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1026, 119 S. Ct. 2376, 144 L. Ed. 2d 779 (1999).

The trial court did not err in declining to submit the mitigating circumstance under subdivision (f)(2) to the jury where the defendant's testimony that he always carried a knife for his personal safety and to enforce order at his card games and that he attacked the victim with his knife since he "felt like if I didn't try to do something, then I'd have been in the situation where I would have been stabbed up, and I probably been dead" demonstrated that he was in a rational, calculating state of mind. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Submission of Nonstatutory Mitigating Factor Instead. — Where a trial judge did not instruct the jury to consider defendant's mental retardation with respect to the statutory mitigating circumstance, but instead submitted a separate, nonstatutory circumstance, instructing the jury to consider whether defendant bordering on mild mental retardation, with a full scale intelligence quotient of 67, was a mitigating factor, this was not an abuse of discretion. State v. Artis, 325 N.C. 278, 384 S.E.2d 470 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1023, 110 S. Ct. 1466, 108 L. Ed. 2d 604 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990).

Failure to Submit Held Erroneous. — The trial court erred in not submitting to the jury the subdivision (f)(2) mitigating factor where a juror could reasonably have found from the testimony of the defendant's psychologist that the defendant was under the influence of a mental or emotional disturbance at the time of the killing. State v. Fletcher, 348 N.C. 292, 500 S.E.2d 668 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1180, 119 S. Ct. 1118, 143 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1999).

D. Duress.

Inapplicable Absent Evidence of Duress or Coercion. — Mitigating circumstances of acting under duress was inapplicable where there was no evidence that petitioner acted under the influence or coercion of any other person. Barfield v. Harris, 540 F. Supp. 451 (E.D.N.C. 1982), aff'd, 719 F.2d 58 (4th Cir. 1983).

The capital murder defendant was not entitled to a jury instruction on the statutory mitigating circumstance that she acted under duress or under the domination of the two-year old murder victim's uncle, where she admitted that she repeatedly beat and abused the child during the time the child lived with her and the uncle. State v. Anderson, 350 N.C. 152, 513 S.E.2d 296 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 973, 120 S. Ct. 417, 145 L. Ed. 2d 326 (1999).

E. Impaired Capacity.

Model Penal Code Test for Mental Capacity Adopted. — The legislature, by enactment of subdivision (f)(6) of this section, has determined to depart from the traditional M'Naghten test and to adopt the Model Penal Code test for mental capacity as a mitigating circumstance to be considered on the question of punishment in capital cases. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

When Subdivision (f)(6) Circumstance Exists. — This mitigating circumstance may exist even if a defendant has capacity to know right from wrong, to know that the act he committed was wrong, and to know the nature and quality of that act. It would exist even under these circumstances if the defendant's capacity to appreciate (to fully comprehend or be fully sensible of) the criminality (wrongfulness) of his conduct was impaired (lessened or diminished), or if defendant's capacity to follow the law and refrain from engaging in the illegal conduct was likewise impaired (lessened or diminished). State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

Impaired mental capacity would exist if the defendant's capacity to appreciate (to fully comprehend or be fully sensible of) the criminality (wrongfulness) of his conduct was impaired (lessened or diminished), or if defendant's capacity to follow the law and refrain from engaging in the illegal conduct was likewise impaired (lessened or diminished). State v. Allen, 323 N.C. 208, 372 S.E.2d 855 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), rehearing denied, 507 U.S. 1046, 113 S. Ct. 1885, 123 L. Ed. 2d 503 (1993).

Refusal to Instruct Where Not All Evidence Supports Existence of Factor. — Where not all of the evidence supported the existence of the mitigating circumstance of subdivision (f)(6) of this section, the trial court correctly refused to give defendant's requested peremptory instructions upon it. State v. Smith, 305 N.C. 691, 292 S.E.2d 264, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982).

Where the record disclosed conflicting evidence concerning whether defendant's ability to appreciate the criminality of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law was impaired, the trial court did not err by denying his motion for a peremptory instruction on this mitigating circumstance. State v. Roseboro, 351 N.C. 536, 528 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1019, 121 S. Ct. 582, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

Evidence contradicted the mitigating circumstance, that defendant's capacity to appreciate the criminality of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law was impaired, where a fellow inmate's testimony tended to show that defendant committed a calculated and planned crime, entering 80-year-old lady's house at a time when he was not likely to be detected. State v. Steen, 352 N.C. 227, 536 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1131, 148 L. Ed. 2d 997 (2001).

The trial court did not err in refusing to give a peremptory instruction on the statutory mitigating circumstance under subdivision (f)(6) where, while there was evidence which supported the defendant's contention that he could not "appreciate the criminality of his conduct," there was also evidence that he attempted to eliminate one individual as a witness and that he initially denied shooting two police officers. State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Controverted and conflicting evidence proffered by defendant in support of mitigating circumstances to show that murder was committed while defendant was under the influence of a mental or emotional disturbance did not entitle him to a jury instruction under this section. State v. Hedgepeth, 350 N.C. 776, 517 S.E.2d 605 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 1274, 146 L. Ed. 2d 223 (2000).

Where None of the Evidence Supports Existence of Factor. — The trial court properly declined to submit the mitigating circumstance under subdivision (f)(6) where the record was devoid of any evidence that defendant's paranoia and fear of violence from the prison environment so impaired him as to prevent him from understanding the criminality of his conduct or that it affected his ability to control his actions. Defendant had completed a psychology course, obtaining a "4.0" grade; he owned and operated a canteen, card games, and a loan business, all illegal or against prison regulations. On the afternoon of the murder, defendant played a card game; and he testified that he pulled his knife in the shower since he had heard that the victim had a knife. State v. Braxton, 352 N.C. 158, 531 S.E.2d 428 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 890, 148 L. Ed. 2d 797 (2001).

Timing of Impairment of Capacity. — Evidence was insufficient to warrant submission of the mitigating circumstance under § 15A-2000(f)(6) where defendant failed to show a link between defendant's drug habit and defendant's allegedly impaired capacity at the time of the murder. State v. Fair, — N.C. —, 552 S.E.2d 568, 2001 N.C. LEXIS 944 (2001).

Legislature did not intend the mere ingestion of alcohol to be a mitigating circumstance. State v. Williams, 305 N.C. 656, 292 S.E.2d 243, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983).

Voluntary Intoxication Not Subsumed Under Subdivision (f)(2). — Voluntary intoxication by alcohol or narcotic drugs at the time of the commission of a murder is not within the meaning of a "mental or emotional disturbance" under subdivision (f)(2) of this section. State v. Irwin, 304 N.C. 93, 282 S.E.2d 439 (1981).

But Properly Considered Under Subdivision (f)(6). — Voluntary intoxication, to the degree that it affects defendant's ability to understand and control his actions, is properly considered under the provision for impaired capacity, subdivision (f)(6) of this section. State v. Irwin, 304 N.C. 93, 282 S.E.2d 439 (1981); State v. Brown, 306 N.C. 151, 293 S.E.2d 569, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1080, 103 S. Ct. 503, 74 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1982).

Under some circumstances, evidence of a defendant's intoxication at the time of the crime may properly be evaluated by the jury as a mitigating circumstance under subdivision (f)(6) of this section. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

To What Degree of Intoxication Subdivision (f)(6) Applies. — When the defendant contends that his faculties were impaired by intoxication, such intoxication must be to such a degree that it affects defendant's ability to understand and control his actions before subdivision (f)(6) of this section is applicable. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Defendant's habits regarding alcohol and drug misuse were relevant mitigating factors for the jury's consideration; however, the precise details of his particular overdoses were not pertinent to his sentencing. State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1056, 103 S. Ct. 474, 74 L. Ed. 2d 622 (1982), rehearing denied, 459 U.S. 1189, 103 S. Ct. 839, 74 L. Ed. 2d 1031 (1983), overruled on other grounds, State v. Benson, 323 N.C. 318, 372 S.E.2d 517 (1988); State v. Robinson, 336 N.C. 78, 443 S.E.2d 306 (1994), cert. denied, 115 S. Ct. 750, 130 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1995); State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

No Error Not to Submit Impaired Mental Capacity Due to Drugs or Alcohol. — It was not error not to submit the mitigating circumstance of defendant's impaired mental capacity to the jury where the fact that defendant may have taken a drug several hours before the shooting or that he may have drunk some beer was not sufficient alone to show a diminished capacity to appreciate the criminality of the offense or to refrain from illegal conduct. State v. Allen, 323 N.C. 208, 372 S.E.2d 855 (1988), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1021, 110 S. Ct. 1463, 108 L. Ed. 2d 601 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), rehearing denied, 507 U.S. 1046, 113 S. Ct. 1885, 123 L. Ed. 2d 503 (1993).

Schizophrenia. — In a first-degree murder prosecution in which there was evidence from which the jury could have found that, although defendant knew the difference between right and wrong at the time of the killing, he suffered from schizophrenia and that at the time of the killing defendant's schizophrenia had surfaced, defendant would be entitled to a new sentencing hearing where the trial judge, in his instruction, failed to explain the difference between defendant's capacity to know right from wrong, and the impairment of his capacity to appreciate the criminality of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law within the meaning of subdivision (f)(6) of this section. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 355, 259 S.E.2d 752 (1979).

Bipolar Disorder. — Where the record revealed no evidence that defendant was under the influence of either bipolar disorder or antisocial personality disorder at the time he committed attempted robbery with a dangerous weapon and first-degree murder, the submission of a peremptory instruction was not required, and the trial court did not err in failing to make such instruction during the sentencing phase of defendant's trial. State v. Lyons, 343 N.C. 1, 468 S.E.2d 204 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 894, 117 S. Ct. 237, 136 L. Ed. 2d 167 (1996).

Separate Instructions Not Required. — The trial court did not err by denying defendant's request for separate instructions on each of his three alleged mental impairments under this section or by giving a single instruction combining all of the mental impairments into a single mitigating circumstance. The trial court's instruction specifically referred to each of the alleged mental disorders—his "personality disorder," "borderline range of intelligence," and "long-term, chronic and severe abuse of crack-cocaine at and around the time of the offenses"—and instructed the jury to consider whether one or all of them impaired his capacity to appreciate the criminality of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the law. State v. Roseboro, 351 N.C. 536, 528 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1019, 121 S. Ct. 582, 148 L. Ed. 2d 498 (2000).

Oversimplification of Law Held Not Gross Impropriety. — While some of prosecutor's language may have oversimplified the law concerning the statutory mitigating circumstance of impaired capacity and might have been construed as additional improper commentary on the sentencing law, his argument did not rise to the level of gross impropriety requiring the trial court to intervene ex mero motu, as any potential impact of the statements was de minimis and as the jury found this statutory circumstance in mitigation of the crimes. State v. Laws, 325 N.C. 81, 381 S.E.2d 609 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence aff'd, State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 127, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174, rehearing denied, 502 U.S. 1001, 112 S. Ct. 627, 116 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1991).

Presumption of Mitigating Value. — Since the capacity of a defendant to appreciate the criminality of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law is a statutory mitigating circumstance, it is presumed to have mitigating value if found. State v. Cummings, 329 N.C. 249, 404 S.E.2d 849 (1991).

New Sentencing Proceeding Where Jury Instruction Erroneous. — The sentence of death was vacated and a new sentencing proceeding ordered due to error in instructing jury to find unanimously each mitigating circumstance before considering that circumstance in the ultimate sentencing decision; there was evidence tending to support the statutory mitigating circumstance of impaired capacity. State v. Payne, 328 N.C. 377, 402 S.E.2d 582 (1991).

Plain Error Not Found. — Where defendant's evidence concentrated on the combined effects of gasoline inhalation, alcohol consumption and lower intelligence, the trial court's instruction in the conjunctive accorded with defendant's evidence and thus, the instruction on impaired capacity did not constitute plain error. State v. Payne, 337 N.C. 505, 448 S.E.2d 93 (1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1038, 115 S. Ct. 1405, 131 L. Ed. 2d 292 (1995).

The defendant's deficient mental status did not render the death sentence disproportionate. State v. Norwood, 344 N.C. 511, 476 S.E.2d 349 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1158, 117 S. Ct. 1341, 137 L. Ed. 2d 500 (1997).

F. Age of Defendant.

Age Must Have Mitigating Value. — Unless a defendant's age has mitigating value as a matter of law, a juror need consider the defendant's age only if that juror finds by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant's age has mitigating value. State v. Rouse, 339 N.C. 59, 451 S.E.2d 543 (1994), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 832, 116 S. Ct. 107, 133 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1995).

Link Between Condition and Culpability Required. — Evidence that a physical condition exists is not enough to establish a mitigating factor, and although petitioner established the existence of his age, the jury did not believe, as evidenced by the verdict, that defendant had established a link between his age and his culpability by a preponderance of the evidence. Skipper v. Lee, — F. Supp. 2d —, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21347 (E.D.N.C. Nov. 30, 1999), aff'd, 238 F.3d 414 (4th Cir. 2000).

The following instruction was upheld where the defendant failed to object, waived appellate review and could not show prejudice because one or more jurors found the circumstance under subdivision (f)(7) : "The evidence tends to show that the defendant was seventeen years of age at the time of each of these murders. The mitigating effect of the age of the defendant is for you to determine from all the facts and circumstances which you find from the evidence. 'Age' is a flexible and relative concept. The chronological age of the defendant is not always the determinative factor." State v. Golphin, 352 N.C. 364, 533 S.E.2d 168 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1379, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1380, 149 L. Ed. 2d 305 (2001).

Chronological age of a defendant is not the determinative factor under subdivision (f)(7) of this section. Relevant to this inquiry is not only the chronological age of the defendant, but also his experience, criminal tendencies, and presumably the rehabilitative aspects of his character. State v. Oliver, 309 N.C. 326, 307 S.E.2d 304 (1983).

The chronological age of a defendant is not the determinative factor under subdivision (f)(7) of this section. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Independent Duty of Court to Submit Factor of Age. — Testimony of clinical psychologist that the defendant's mental age was ten years and that his problem-solving skills were closer to those of a ten-year-old was substantial evidence from which a juror or jurors reasonably could find that the defendant's age at the time of the offense was mitigating; therefore, regardless of the defendant's wishes about the matter, the trial court had an independent duty to submit the statutory mitigating circumstances. State v. Holden, 338 N.C. 394, 450 S.E.2d 878 (1994), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1126, 118 S. Ct. 1074, 140 L. Ed. 2d 132 (1998).

Chronological age is not the determinative factor with regard to the mitigating circumstance of age of the defendant at the time of the crime, the defendant's immaturity, youthfulness, or lack of emotional or intellectual development at the time of the crime must also be considered. State v. Bowie, 340 N.C. 199, 456 S.E.2d 771 (1995).

Failure to Consider Mental Age. — Where the jury did not consider the nonstatutory factor that the mental age of the defendant at the time of the murder was a mitigating circumstance, although defendant had offered credible evidence that defendant was functioning in a mentally retarded range of intellect with an I.Q. that placed him in the lowest two percent of the population, McKoy error in instruction as to unanimity in finding mitigating circumstances necessitated a new sentencing hearing. State v. Robinson, 330 N.C. 1, 409 S.E.2d 288 (1991).

When the testimony of doctors constituted substantial evidence that the defendant's mental age was mitigating at the time of the crime, the trial court was required to submit the circumstance and failure to do so was prejudicial error such that defendant was entitled to a new capital sentencing trial. State v. Zuniga, 348 N.C. 214, 498 S.E.2d 611 (1998).

Any hard and fast rule as to age would tend to defeat the ends of justice, so the term "youth" must be considered as relative and this factor weighed in the light of varying conditions and circumstances. It is well known that two young persons may vary greatly in mental and physical development, experience and criminal tendencies (citation omitted). One of these factors may have greater significance than the others in some cases, depending on the circumstances. State v. Oliver, 309 N.C. 326, 307 S.E.2d 304 (1983).

Largely conclusory statements that defendant was emotionally immature for his 23 years, made by foster parents with whom defendant lived from the time he was 16 until he was almost 18 years old, when balanced against defendant's chronological age, his apparently normal physical and intellectual development, and his level of experience, did not require the trial court to submit the mitigating circumstance listed at subdivision (f)(7) of this section. State v. Johnson, 317 N.C. 343, 346 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Age Properly Not Considered. — The trial court did not err in failing to submit the mitigating circumstance of age, where the defendant was 29 at the time he murdered his infant son; even though the defendant suffered from a dissociative identity disorder, had a learning disability, and spent long periods of time playing video games, he also functioned in the average to high-average IQ range, he graduated from high school, he served in the Air Force, and he was able to operate complicated machinery at work. State v. Atkins, 349 N.C. 62, 505 S.E.2d 97 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1147, 119 S. Ct. 2025, 143 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1999).

Where defendant presented evidence of a restricted childhood and a lack of friends to support a showing of immaturity relative to his age, but evidence existed that he had completed his GED, had a normal level of reading skills, had a stable marital relationship, handled his own finances, and had held various jobs including aiding his ill father-in-law in running his business, the trial court did not err in failing to submit the age statutory mitigating circumstance. State v. Peterson, 350 N.C. 518, 516 S.E.2d 131 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1164, 120 S. Ct. 1181, 145 L. Ed. 2d 1087 (2000).

In light of the evidence that defendant was 26 at the time of the murder, that he was gainfully employed and able to perform his job duties proficiently and that he functioned adequately in society, the court could not conclude that the evidence of defendant's immaturity was so substantial as to require the trial court to submit the mitigating circumstance of age ex mero motu. State v. Steen, 352 N.C. 227, 536 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1131, 148 L. Ed. 2d 997 (2001).

Where doctors disagreed about whether the defendant had AIDS-related dementia and where defendant was 33 years of age at the time of the murders, appeared to be fairly well adjusted in society, and had sufficient intelligence to attend community college and establish a good work history, the evidence of defendant's immaturity was not so substantial as to require the trial court to submit the mitigating circumstance of age pursuant to this section. State v. Brewington, 352 N.C. 489, 532 S.E.2d 496 (2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1165, 121 S. Ct. 1126, 148 L. Ed. 2d 992 (2001).

The evidence did not support an (f)(7) mitigating circumstance where the defendant presented evidence through several lay witnesses regarding his emotional immaturity, but no evidence whatsoever of mental impairment; the evidence showed that defendant "was of normal intelligence," that he was in honors English and history classes in high school, that he was a "voracious" reader, that he completed his General Equivalency Diploma, and that he served in the military and did well in quartermaster school. State v. Meyer, 353 N.C. 92, 540 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 93, 151 L. Ed. 2d 54 (2001).

Defendant was not entitled to a new sentencing proceeding because the trial court failed to submit to the jury the statutory mitigating circumstance of his age at the time of the crimes; no evidence concerning the defendant's age was before the jury and the defendant's only witness introduced no substantial evidence of his immaturity, youthfulness or lack of emotional or intellectual development at the time of these crimes and on the contrary, witness testified that the defendant had been a trustworthy, responsible and dependable employee who was soon to become an unsupervised construction foreman with a crew of his own. State v. Laws, 325 N.C. 81, 381 S.E.2d 609 (1989), vacated and remanded for further consideration at 494 U.S. 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1465, 108 L. Ed. 2d 603 (1990), in light of McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1990), death sentence aff'd, State v. Laws, 328 N.C. 550, 402 S.E.2d 573, cert. denied, 502 U.S. 876, 112 S. Ct. 127, 116 L. Ed. 2d 174, rehearing denied,

Where the evidence was not sufficient to show that a 20-year-old defendant had not developed normally mentally or emotionally, it was not error for the judge to fail to submit the mitigating circumstance of age of the defendant. State v. Bowie, 340 N.C. 199, 456 S.E.2d 771 (1995).

G. Aid in Apprehension of Another or Testimony on Behalf of Prosecution of Another Felony.

Aiding in Apprehension of Coconspirator. — Where there was sufficient evidence to support the assertion that defendant aided in the apprehension of his coconspirator, and the omission of this factor in the witness's submission to the jury potentially worked to the prejudice of defendant, he was entitled to a new sentencing hearing. State v. Bacon, 326 N.C. 404, 390 S.E.2d 327 (1990).

Evidence Insufficient to Support Submission of Age as Factor. — Where defendant asserted at sentencing phase of his trial for first-degree murder that his borderline I.Q. of 71 and his chronological age of 61, combined, supported submission of the circumstances of his age to the jury as a mitigating circumstance, when balanced against defendant's youthful interest in the victim, his vigorous responses to the prosecutor's cross-examination, and his physical prowess in his attempts to escape, the evidence did not require submission of this circumstance. State v. Porter, 326 N.C. 489, 391 S.E.2d 144 (1990).

State's Failure to Contradict Defendant's Evidence. — Defendant was entitled to peremptory instruction on the statutory mitigating circumstance of his giving testimony in another defendant's trial as the State presented no evidence to contradict defendant's evidence on the mitigating circumstance. State v. Lloyd, 354 N.C. 76, 552 S.E.2d 596 (2001).

§ 15A-2001. Capital offenses; plea of guilty.

(a) Any defendant who has been indicted for an offense punishable by death may enter a plea of guilty at any time after the indictment.

(b) If the defendant enters a guilty plea to first degree murder and the State has not given notice of intent to seek the death penalty as provided in G.S. 15A-2004 or the State has agreed to accept a sentence of life imprisonment where it initially gave notice of intent to seek the death penalty, then the court shall sentence the person to life imprisonment. The defendant may plead guilty to first degree murder and the State may agree to accept a sentence of life imprisonment, even if evidence of an aggravating circumstance exists.

(c) If the defendant enters a guilty plea to first degree murder and the State has given notice of its intent to seek the death penalty, then the court may sentence the defendant to life imprisonment or to death pursuant to the procedures of G.S. 15A-2000. Before sentencing the defendant in a case in which the State has given notice of its intent to seek the death penalty, the presiding judge shall impanel a jury for the limited purpose of hearing evidence and determining a sentence recommendation as to the appropriate sentence pursuant to G.S. 15A-2000. The jury's sentence recommendation in cases where the defendant pleads guilty and the State has given notice of its intent to seek the death penalty shall be determined under the same procedure of G.S. 15A-2000 applicable to defendants who have been tried and found guilty by a jury. (1977, c. 406, s. 2; 2001-81, s. 2.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2001-81, s. 1, which amended this section, is effective July 1, 2001, and applicable to pending and future cases, except that the provisions of the act regarding the State's notice of intent to seek the death penalty do not apply to defendants indicted in capital cases before the effective date of the act.

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-81, s. 2, effective July 1, 2001, rewrote the section. See editor's note for applicability.

CASE NOTES

Guilty Plea Not Permitted Formerly. — Before the enactment of this statute defendant would not have been permitted to enter a plea of guilty to a crime for which the punishment might be death. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 47, 257 S.E.2d 597 (1979).

But Now Upheld As a Result of a Shift in Public Policy And Law. — The practice of accepting a plea of guilty for an offense that could result in capital punishment as laid out in this section resulted from a shift in both public policy and the law, and the court will not disregard such provisions unless they are unconstitutional. State v. Smith, 352 N.C. 531, 532 S.E.2d 773 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 121 S. Ct. 1419, 149 L. Ed. 2d 360 (2001).

Conditional Plea of Guilty Not Proper. — In a capital case, the trial judge did not err in construing § 15A-2000 and this section as not allowing a defendant to enter a plea of guilty on condition that his sentence be life imprisonment. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 355, 259 S.E.2d 752 (1979), decided prior to the 2001 amendment.

Where defendants were being jointly tried for the same capital offense when one defendant changed his plea to guilty, it was error for the trial to continue as both a sentencing proceeding as to one defendant and as a trial to determine the guilt or innocence of the other. State v. Hucks, 323 N.C. 574, 374 S.E.2d 240 (1988).

§ 15A-2002. Capital offenses; jury verdict and sentence.

If the recommendation of the jury is that the defendant be sentenced to death, the judge shall impose a sentence of death in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 15, Article 19 of the General Statutes. If the recommendation of the jury is that the defendant be imprisoned for life in the State's prison, the judge shall impose a sentence of imprisonment for life in the State's prison, without parole.

The judge shall instruct the jury, in words substantially equivalent to those of this section, that a sentence of life imprisonment means a sentence of life without parole. (1977, c. 406, s. 2; 1993, c. 538, s. 29; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 21, s. 5; c. 24, s. 14(b).)

Legal Periodicals. — For note on jury discretion in capital cases in light of State v. Pinch, 306 N.C. 1, 292 S.E.2d 203, cert. denied, 103 S. Ct. 474 (1982), see 5 Campbell L. Rev. 451 (1983).

CASE NOTES

Legislative Intent. — This section clearly indicates the legislature's intention that the jury's sentence recommendation be binding on the trial judge. State v. Johnson, 298 N.C. 355, 259 S.E.2d 752 (1979).

The General Assembly has amended this section to require the trial court to instruct the jury during a capital sentencing proceeding concerning the parole eligibility of a defendant sentenced to life; however, the General Assembly has decided that the legislation is to be applied prospectively. State v. Skipper, 337 N.C. 1, 446 S.E.2d 252 (1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1134, 115 S. Ct. 953, 130 L. Ed. 2d 895 (1995), cert. dismissed, 342 N.C. 417, 465 S.E.2d 547 (1995).

1994 Amendment. — The 1994 amendment was not an ameliorative act; it clearly increased the punishment for first-degree murder by making it a crime for which parole is no longer a possibility. Therefore, retroactive application of the amendment would violate the constitutional prohibition on ex post facto application of punitive laws. State v. Conner, 345 N.C. 319, 480 S.E.2d 626 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 876, 118 S. Ct. 196, 139 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1997).

Effect of Amendments. — Where legislative changes to this section were deemed only to have prospective force and defendant committed his crimes two years before, the changes in the statute were inapplicable to defendant. State v. Roseboro, 344 N.C. 364, 474 S.E.2d 314 (1996).

The trial court has no power to overturn jury's sentencing recommendation. State v. Brown, 315 N.C. 40, 337 S.E.2d 808 (1985), cert. denied, 476 U.S. 1165, 106 S. Ct. 2293, 90 L. Ed. 2d 733 (1986).

This section does not apply to the jury selection process, only to the sentencing hearing. State v. Steen, 352 N.C. 227, 536 S.E.2d 1 (2000), cert denied, — U.S. —, 121 S.

Ct. 1131, 148 L. Ed. 2d 997 (2001).

Instructions Regarding Parole Upheld. — The trial court's instruction to "determine the question as though life imprisonment without parole means exactly what the statute says 'imprisonment for life without parole in the state's prison'" did not violate this section. State v. Lawrence, 352 N.C. 1, 530 S.E.2d 807 (2000).

Instructions Regarding Parole Not Required. — Although the General Assembly amended this section to require the trial court to instruct the jury during a capital sentencing proceeding concerning the parole eligibility of a defendant sentenced to life, defendant was not entitled to such an instruction. State v. Green, 336 N.C. 142, 443 S.E.2d 14, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1046, 115 S. Ct. 642, 130 L. Ed. 2d 547 (1994).

The trial court did not err in refusing to permit voir dire questions about parole and rejecting proposed jury instructions about the law of parole; although North Carolina has enacted legislation mandating a parole eligibility instruction, the statute was not in effect at the time of defendant's trial and is not retroactive. Green v. French, 978 F. Supp. 242 (E.D.N.C. 1997), aff'd, 143 F.3d 865 (4th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1090, 119 S. Ct. 844, 142 L. Ed. 2d 698 (1999).

Substantial Compliance. — While the better practice would be to charge precisely as this section states: "a sentence of life imprisonment means a sentence of life without parole," the trial court did not err in instructing the jurors that "[i]f you unanimously recommend a sentence of life imprisonment without parole, the Court will impose a sentence of life imprisonment without parole." State v. Smith, 351 N.C. 251, 524 S.E.2d 28 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 862, 121 S. Ct. 151, 148 L. Ed. 2d 100 (2000).

Where offense predated new law providing that jury must be informed that a sentence of life imprisonment means a sentence of life without parole, trial court correctly denied defendant's pretrial motion to question the jurors about their understanding of life imprisonment. State v. Morganherring, 350 N.C. 701, 517 S.E.2d 622 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1024, 120 S. Ct. 1432, 146 L. Ed. 2d 322 (2000).

Instructions Not Required to Be Repeated. — Trial judge who, on one occasion, correctly instructed jury, pursuant to this section, "that a sentence of life imprisonment means a sentence of life without parole" was not required to give the same instructions again during voir dire, as well as on each and every other occasion where the issue arose. State v. Peterson, 350 N.C. 518, 516 S.E.2d 131 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1164, 120 S. Ct. 1181, 145 L. Ed. 2d 1087 (2000).

Instructions Regarding Result of Lack of Unanimity Not Required. — The trial court did not err by instructing that the jury must be unanimous in its recommendation of a sentence of life and by prohibiting defendant from informing the jury that a life sentence would be imposed if the jury was not unanimous. State v. Blakeney, 352 N.C. 287, 531 S.E.2d 799 (2000), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1117, 121 S. Ct. 868, 148 L. Ed. 2d 780 (2001).

Nothing in this statute requires the judge to state "life imprisonment without parole" every time he alludes to or mentions the alternative sentence to the death penalty. State v. Davis, 353 N.C. 1, 539 S.E.2d 243 (2000), cert. denied, — U.S. —, 122 S. Ct. 95, 151 L. Ed. 2d 55 (2001).

Instructions Upheld. — Where trial court instructed jury, pursuant to this section, that "life" meant life imprisonment "without parole," fact that court would not tell the jury what he would do if they returned two life sentences did not constitute reversible error. State v. Parker, 350 N.C. 411, 516 S.E.2d 106 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1084, 120 S. Ct. 808, 145 L. Ed. 2d 681 (2000).

§ 15A-2003. Disability of trial judge.

In the event that the trial judge shall become disabled or unable to conduct the sentencing proceeding provided in this Article, the Chief Justice shall designate a judge to conduct such proceeding. (1977, c. 406, s. 2.)

Legal Periodicals. — For article on the former North Carolina Speedy Trial Act, see 17 Wake Forest L. Rev. 173 (1981).

§ 15A-2004. Prosecutorial discretion.

(a) The State, in its discretion, may elect to try a defendant capitally or noncapitally for first degree murder, even if evidence of an aggravating circumstance exists. The State may agree to accept a sentence of life imprisonment for a defendant at any point in the prosecution of a capital felony, even if evidence of an aggravating circumstance exists.

(b) A sentence of death may not be imposed upon a defendant convicted of a capital felony unless the State has given notice of its intent to seek the death penalty. Notice of intent to seek the death penalty shall be given to the defendant and filed with the court on or before the date of the pretrial conference in capital cases required by Rule 24 of the General Rules of Practice for the Superior and District Courts, or the arraignment, whichever is later.

(c) If the State has not given notice of its intent to seek the death penalty prior to trial, the trial shall be conducted as a noncapital proceeding, and the court, upon adjudication of the defendant's guilt of first degree murder, shall impose a sentence of life imprisonment.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of Article 100 of Chapter 15A of the General Statutes, the State may agree to accept a sentence of life imprisonment for a defendant upon remand from the Supreme Court of North Carolina of a capital case for resentencing or upon an order of resentencing by a court in a State or federal post-conviction proceeding. If the State exercises its discretion and does agree to accept a sentence of life imprisonment for the defendant, then the court shall impose a sentence of life imprisonment. (2001-81, s. 3.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2001-81, s. 4, which enacted this section, is effective July 1, 2001, and applicable to pending and future cases, except that the provisions of the act regarding the State's notice of intent to seek the death penalty do not apply to defendants indicted in capital cases before the effective date of the act.

§ 15A-2005. Mentally retarded defendants; death sentence prohibited.

(a)(1) The following definitions apply in this section:

a. Mentally retarded. — Significantly subaverage general intellectual functioning, existing concurrently with significant limitations in adaptive functioning, both of which were manifested before the age of 18.

b. Significant limitations in adaptive functioning. — Significant limitations in two or more of the following adaptive skill areas: communication, self-care, home living, social skills, community use, self-direction, health and safety, functional academics, leisure skills and work skills.

c. Significantly subaverage general intellectual functioning. — An intelligence quotient of 70 or below.

(2) The defendant has the burden of proving significantly subaverage general intellectual functioning, significant limitations in adaptive functioning, and that mental retardation was manifested before the age of 18. An intelligence quotient of 70 or below on an individually administered, scientifically recognized standardized intelligence quotient test administered by a licensed psychiatrist or psychologist is evidence of significantly subaverage general intellectual functioning;

however, it is not sufficient, without evidence of significant limitations in adaptive functioning and without evidence of manifestation before the age of 18, to establish that the defendant is mentally retarded.

(b) Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, no defendant who is mentally retarded shall be sentenced to death.

(c) Upon motion of the defendant, supported by appropriate affidavits, the court may order a pretrial hearing to determine if the defendant is mentally retarded. The court shall order such a hearing with the consent of the State. The defendant has the burden of production and persuasion to demonstrate mental retardation by clear and convincing evidence. If the court determines the defendant to be mentally retarded, the court shall declare the case noncapital, and the State may not seek the death penalty against the defendant.

(d) The pretrial determination of the court shall not preclude the defendant from raising any legal defense during the trial.

(e) If the court does not find the defendant to be mentally retarded in the pretrial proceeding, upon the introduction of evidence of the defendant's mental retardation during the sentencing hearing, the court shall submit a special issue to the jury as to whether the defendant is mentally retarded as defined in this section. This special issue shall be considered and answered by the jury prior to the consideration of aggravating or mitigating factors and the determination of sentence. If the jury determines the defendant to be mentally retarded, the court shall declare the case noncapital and the defendant shall be sentenced to life imprisonment.

(f) The defendant has the burden of production and persuasion to demonstrate mental retardation to the jury by a preponderance of the evidence.

(g) If the jury determines that the defendant is not mentally retarded as defined by this section, the jury may consider any evidence of mental retardation presented during the sentencing hearing when determining aggravating or mitigating factors and the defendant's sentence.

(h) The provisions of this section do not preclude the sentencing of a mentally retarded offender to any other sentence authorized by G.S. 14-17 for the crime of murder in the first degree. (2001-346, s. 1.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2001-346, s. 4, made this section effective October 1, 2001, and applicable to trials docketed to begin on or after that date.

§ 15A-2006. (Effective until October 1, 2002.) Request for postconviction determination of mental retardation.

In cases in which the defendant has been convicted of first-degree murder, sentenced to death, and is in custody awaiting imposition of the death penalty, the following procedures apply:

(1) Notwithstanding any other provision or time limitation contained in Article 89 of Chapter 15A, a defendant may seek appropriate relief from the defendant's death sentence upon the ground that the defendant was mentally retarded, as defined in G.S. 15A-2005(a), at the time of the commission of the capital crime.

(2) A motion seeking appropriate relief from a death sentence on the ground that the defendant is mentally retarded, shall be filed:

Victims Compensation.

§ 15B-1. Short title.

This Chapter may be cited as the "North Carolina Crime Victims Compensation Act." (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1991, c. 301, s. 1.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1983, c. 832, s. 6, as amended by Session Laws 1991, c. 301, s. 1, provides: "This act shall become effective when funds are appropriated by the General Assembly to the Department of Crime Control and Public Safety to implement the provisions of this act. No claims may be filed under this act for any criminally injurious conduct occurring before the effective date of this act. The Revisor of Statutes is informed that funds were appropriated by Session Laws 1987, c. 738, s. 118."

§ 15B-2. Definitions.

As used in this Chapter, unless the context requires otherwise:

(1) "Allowable expense" means reasonable charges incurred for reasonably needed products, services, and accommodations, including those for medical care, rehabilitation, medically related property, and other remedial treatment and care.

Allowable expense includes a total charge not in excess of three thousand five hundred dollars ($3,500) for expenses related to funeral, cremation, and burial, including transportation of a body, but excluding expenses for flowers, gravestone, and other items not directly related to the funeral service.

(2) "Claimant" means any of the following persons who claims an award of compensation under this Chapter:

a. A victim;

b. A dependent of a deceased victim;

c. A third person who is not a collateral source and who provided benefit to the victim or his family other than in the course or scope of his employment, business, or profession;

d. A person who is authorized to act on behalf of a victim, a dependent, or a third person described in subdivision c.

The claimant, however, may not be the offender or an accomplice of the offender who committed the criminally injurious conduct.

(3) "Collateral source" means a source of benefits or advantages for economic loss otherwise compensable that the victim or claimant has received or that is readily available to him from any of the following sources:
   a. The offender;
   b. The government of the United States or any of its agencies, a state or any of its political subdivisions, or an instrumentality of two or more states;
   c. Social security, medicare, and medicaid;
   d. State-required, temporary, nonoccupational disability insurance;
   e. Worker's compensation;
   f. Wage continuation programs of any employer;
   g. Proceeds of a contract of insurance payable to the victim for loss that he sustained because of the criminally injurious conduct;
   h. A contract providing prepaid hospital and other health care services, or benefits for disability.

(4) "Commission" means the Crime Victims Compensation Commission established by G.S. 15B-3.

(5) "Criminally injurious conduct" means conduct that by its nature poses a substantial threat of personal injury or death, and is punishable by fine or imprisonment or death, or would be so punishable but for the fact that the person engaging in the conduct lacked the capacity to commit the crime under the laws of this State. Criminally injurious conduct includes conduct that amounts to an offense involving impaired driving as defined in G.S. 20-4.01(24a), and conduct that amounts to a violation of G.S. 20-166 if the victim was a pedestrian or was operating a vehicle moved solely by human power or a mobility impairment device. For purposes of this Chapter, a mobility impairment device is a device that is designed for and intended to be used as a means of transportation for a person with a mobility impairment, is suitable for use both inside and outside a building, and whose maximum speed does not exceed 12 miles per hour when the device is being operated by a person with a mobility impairment. Criminally injurious conduct does not include conduct arising out of the ownership, maintenance, or use of a motor vehicle when the conduct is punishable only as a violation of other provisions of Chapter 20 of the General Statutes. Criminally injurious conduct shall also include an act of terrorism, as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 2331, that is committed outside of the United States against a citizen of this State.

(6) "Dependent" means an individual wholly or substantially dependent upon the victim for care and support and includes a child of the victim born after his death.

(7) "Dependent's economic loss" means loss after a victim's death of contributions of things of economic value to his dependents, not including services they would have received from the victim if he had not suffered the fatal injury, less expenses of the dependents avoided by reason of the victim's death.

(8) "Dependent's replacement service loss" means loss reasonably incurred by dependents after a victim's death in obtaining ordinary and necessary services in lieu of those the victim would have performed for their benefit if he had not suffered the fatal injury, less expenses of the dependents avoided by reason of the victim's death and not subtracted in calculating dependent's economic loss.

Dependent's replacement service loss will be limited to a 26-week period commencing from the date of the injury and compensation shall not exceed two hundred dollars ($200.00) per week.

(9) "Director" means the Director of the Commission appointed under G.S. 15B-3(g).

(10) "Economic loss" means economic detriment consisting only of allowable expense, work loss, replacement services loss, and household support loss. If criminally injurious conduct causes death, economic loss includes a dependent's economic loss and a dependent's replacement service loss. Noneconomic detriment is not economic loss, but economic loss may be caused by pain and suffering or physical impairment.

(10a) "Household support loss" means the loss of support that a victim would have received from the victim's spouse for the purpose of maintaining a home or residence for the victim and the victim's dependents. A victim may be compensated fifty dollars ($50.00) per week for each dependent child. Compensation for household support loss shall not exceed three hundred dollars ($300.00) per week and shall be limited to 26 weeks commencing from the date of the injury. A victim may receive only one compensation for household support loss. Household support loss is only available to an unemployed victim whose spouse is the offender who committed the criminally injurious conduct that is the basis of the victim's claim under this act.

(11) "Noneconomic detriment" means pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, or other nonpecuniary damage.

(12) "Replacement services loss" means expenses reasonably incurred in obtaining ordinary and necessary services in lieu of those the injured person would have performed, not for income but for the benefit of himself or his family, if he had not been injured.

Replacement service loss will be limited to a 26-week period commencing from the date of the injury, and compensation may not exceed two hundred dollars ($200.00) per week.

(12a) "Substantial evidence" means relevant evidence that a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion.

(13) "Victim" means a person who suffers personal injury or death proximately caused by criminally injurious conduct.

(14) "Work loss" means loss of income from work that the injured person would have performed if he had not been injured and expenses reasonably incurred by him to obtain services in lieu of those he would have performed for income, reduced by any income from substitute work actually performed by him, or by income he would have earned in available appropriate substitute work that he was capable of performing but unreasonably failed to undertake.

Compensation for work loss will be limited to 26 weeks commencing from the date of the injury, and compensation shall not exceed three hundred dollars ($300.00) per week. A claim for work loss will be paid only upon proof that the injured person was gainfully employed at the time of the criminally injurious conduct and, by physician's certificate, that the injured person was unable to work. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1987, c. 819, ss. 1-8; 1989, c. 322, s. 1; c. 679, s. 1; 1991, c. 301, s. 1; 1997-227, ss. 1, 2; 1998-212, s. 19.4(l).)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1997-227, s. 4, provides: "No additional funds shall be appropriated to implement this act as provided in G.S. 15B-22."

Subdivision (10a) was added by Session Laws 1998-212, s. 19.4(l), as subdivision (15), and was redesignated to preserve alphabetical order at the direction of the Revisor of Statutes.

CASE NOTES

See Opinion of Attorney General to Gary B. Eichelberger, Director, North Carolina Crime Control and Public Safety, Division of Victim and Justice Services, — N.C.A.G. — (May 8, 1995).

(b) Compensation shall only be awarded for criminally injurious conduct that occurs or is attempted in this State except that criminally injurious

(b) All medical information relating to the mental, physical, or emotional condition of a victim or claimant and all law enforcement records and information and any juvenile records shall be held confidential by the Commission and Director. Except for information held confidential under this subsection, the records of the Division shall be open to public inspection. (1989, c. 679, s. 3.)

(a) The Director shall decide the award of compensation for an initial claim or follow-up claim when the claim does not exceed seven thousand five hundred dollars ($7,500) and does not include future economic loss. The Director shall report all awards under this subsection to the Commission.

(b) The Director shall recommend the award of compensation for an initial claim or follow-up claim when the claim exceeds seven thousand five hundred dollars ($7,500) or involves future economic loss. The Commission shall decide the award of compensation for a claim based on a review of written evidence submitted to the Commission by the Director.

(c) In reporting a decision under subsection (a) or recommending a decision under subsection (b), the Director shall submit to the Commission documentation to establish the economic loss of the claimant by substantial evidence.

(d) The Director shall send each claimant a written statement of a decision made under subsection (a) or (b) that gives the reasons for the decision. A claimant who is dissatisfied with a decision may commence a contested case under Article 3 of Chapter 150B of the General Statutes. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1987, c. 819, s. 16; 1991, c. 301, s. 1; 1999-269, s. 2.)

§ 15B-11. Grounds for denial of claim or reduction of award.

(a) An award of compensation shall be denied if:

(1) The claimant fails to file an application for an award within two years after the date of the criminally injurious conduct that caused the injury or death for which the claimant seeks the award;

(2) The economic loss is incurred after one year from the date of the criminally injurious conduct that caused the injury or death for which the victim seeks the award, except in the case where the victim for whom compensation is sought was 10 years old or younger at the time the injury occurred. In that case an award of compensation will be denied if the economic loss is incurred after two years from the date of the criminally injurious conduct that caused the injury or death for which the victim seeks the award;

(3) The criminally injurious conduct was not reported to a law enforcement officer or agency within 72 hours of its occurrence, and there was no good cause for the delay;

(4) The award would benefit the offender or the offender's accomplice, unless a determination is made that the interests of justice require that an award be approved in a particular case;

(5) The criminally injurious conduct occurred while the victim was confined in any State, county, or city prison, correctional, youth services, or juvenile facility, or local confinement facility, or half-way house, group home, or similar facility; or

(6) The victim was participating in a felony at or about the time that the victim's injury occurred.

(b) A claim may be denied or an award of compensation may be reduced if:

(1) The victim was participating in a nontraffic misdemeanor at or about the time that the victim's injury occurred; or

(2) The claimant or a victim through whom the claimant claims engaged in contributory misconduct.

The Commission shall use its discretion in determining whether to deny a claim under this subsection. In exercising its discretion, the Commission may consider whether any proximate cause exists between the injury and the misdemeanor or contributory misconduct.

(c) A claim may be denied, an award of compensation may be reduced, and a claim that has already been decided may be reconsidered upon finding that the claimant or victim has not fully cooperated with appropriate law enforcement agencies with regard to the criminally injurious conduct that is the basis for the award.

(c1) A claim may be denied upon a finding that the claimant has been convicted of any felony classified as a Class A, B1, B2, C, D, or E felony under the laws of the State of North Carolina and that such felony was committed within 3 years of the time the victim's injury occurred.

(d) After reaching a decision to approve an award of compensation, but before notifying the claimant, the Director shall require the claimant to submit current information as to collateral sources on forms prescribed by the Commission.

An award that has been approved shall nevertheless be denied or reduced to the extent that the economic loss upon which the claim is based is or will be recouped from a collateral source. If an award is reduced or a claim is denied because of the expected recoupment of all or part of the economic loss of the claimant from a collateral source, the amount of the award or the denial of the claim shall be conditioned upon the claimant's economic loss being recouped by the collateral source. If it is thereafter determined that the claimant will not receive all or part of the expected recoupment, the claim shall be reopened and an award shall be approved in an amount equal to the amount of expected recoupment that it is determined the claimant will not receive from the collateral source, subject to the limitations set forth in subsections (f) and (g). The existence of a collateral source that would pay expenses directly related to a funeral, cremation, and burial, including transportation of a body, shall not constitute grounds for the denial or reduction of an award of compensation.

(e) Repealed by Session Laws 1998-212, s. 19.4(m), effective December 1, 1998.

(f) Compensation for replacement services loss, dependent's economic loss, and dependent's replacement services loss may not exceed two hundred dollars ($200.00) per week. Compensation for work loss and household support loss may not exceed three hundred dollars ($300.00) per week.

(g) Compensation payable to a victim and to all other claimants sustaining economic loss because of injury to, or the death of, that victim may not exceed thirty thousand dollars ($30,000) in the aggregate in addition to allowable funeral, cremation, and burial expenses.

(h) The right to reconsider or reopen a claim does not affect the finality of its decision for the purpose of judicial review. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1987, c. 819, ss. 17-21; 1989 (Reg. Sess., 1990), c. 898, s. 1; c. 1066, s. 131; 1991, c. 301, s. 1; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 3, s. 1; 1997-227, s. 3; 1998-212, s. 19.4(m); 1999-269, s. 3.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 1997-227, s. 4, provides: "No additional funds shall be appropriated to implement this act as provided in G.S. 15B-22."

CASE NOTES

Misconduct by Claimant. — The conduct of the claimant is misconduct if it is not within the accepted norm or standard of proper behavior, which includes unlawful conduct. The test for determining accepted norms and proper behavior is best determined by the use of a reasonable man standard, or what a reasonable person would have done under similar and like circumstances. Evans v. North Carolina Dep't of Crime Control & Pub. Safety, 101 N.C. App. 108, 398 S.E.2d 880 (1990), decided prior to the 1994 Extra Session amendment to this section.

When Claimant's Misconduct Will Occasion Denial or Reduction in Award. — Where a claimant's injuries are a direct result of the criminally injurious conduct of another, the claimant's own misconduct must have been a proximate cause of those injuries for the Commission to deny or reduce a claim under the statute. Evans v. North Carolina Dep't of Crime Control & Pub. Safety, 101 N.C. App. 108, 398 S.E.2d 880 (1990), decided prior to the 1994 Extra Session amendment to this section.

The test for contributory misconduct is two-pronged, that is (1) was there misconduct on the part of petitioner and, if so, (2) was that misconduct a proximate cause of the injury? McCrimmon v. Crime Victims Comp. Comm'n, 121 N.C. App. 144, 465 S.E.2d 28 (1995).

Robber was not entitled to benefits after being shot while attempting to flee a convenience store with money he stole from a customer. McCrimmon v. Crime Victims Comp. Comm'n, 121 N.C. App. 144, 465 S.E.2d 28 (1995).

Criminals Not Entitled to Compensation. — The Victims' Compensation Fund is not a Workers' Compensation fund for criminals that are injured during their illicit employment. McCrimmon v. Crime Victims Comp. Comm'n, 121 N.C. App. 144, 465 S.E.2d 28 (1995).

Applied in Ellis v. North Carolina Crime Victims Comp. Comm'n, 111 N.C. App. 157, 432 S.E.2d 160 (1993).

OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Payments made to the victim pursuant to under-insured or uninsured coverage are a from collateral source as defined in § 15B-2, and an award under the Crime Victims Compensation Act will be reduced to the extent that the economic loss will be recouped from under-insured or uninsured coverage. See opinion of Attorney General to Gary B. Eichelberger, Director, North Carolina Crime Control and Public Safety, Division of Victim and Justice Services, — N.C.A.G. — (May 8, 1995).

§ 15B-12. Evidence in contested cases.

(a) Except as provided in this section, evidence in a contested case shall be taken in accordance with Article 3 of Chapter 150B of the General Statutes.

(b) In a proceeding under this Chapter, the privileges set forth in G.S. 8-53, 8-53.3, 8-53.4, 8-53.7, 8-53.8, and 8-56 do not apply to communications or records concerning the physical, mental or emotional condition of the claimant or victim if that condition is relevant to a claim for compensation.

(c) If the mental, physical, or emotional condition of a victim or claimant is material to a claim for an award of compensation, the administrative law judge may order the victim or claimant to submit to a mental or physical examination by a physician or psychologist, and may order an autopsy of a deceased victim. The order may be made for good cause shown and upon notice to the person to be examined and to the claimant. The order shall specify the time, place, manner, conditions, and scope of the examination or autopsy and the person by whom it is to be made, and shall require the person who performs the examination or autopsy to file with the administrative law judge a detailed written report of the examination or autopsy. The report shall set out the findings, including the results of all tests made, diagnosis, prognosis, and other conclusions, and reports of earlier examinations of the same conditions. On request of the person examined, the administrative law judge shall furnish him a copy of the report. If the victim is deceased, the administrative law judge on request, shall furnish the claimant a copy of the report.

(d) The administrative law judge may request that law-enforcement officers employed by the State or any political subdivision thereof provide it with copies of any information or data gathered in the investigation of the criminally injurious conduct that is the basis of any claim to enable it to determine whether, and the extent to which, a claimant qualifies for an award of compensation. The administrative law judge may also request that prosecuting attorneys, law-enforcement officers, and State agencies conduct investigations and provide information necessary to enable the administrative law judge to determine whether, and the extent to which, a claimant qualifies for an award of compensation. Information obtained pursuant to this subsection is subject to the same privilege against public disclosure that may be asserted by the providing source.

(e) The administrative law judge may require the claimant to supplement the application for an award of compensation with any reasonably available medical or psychological reports relating to the injury for which the award of compensation is claimed.

(f) The administrative law judge may not request the victim or the claimant to supply any evidence that would not be admissible at a trial under G.S. 8C-1, Rule 412.

(g) Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary relating to the confidentiality of juvenile records, the administrative law judge shall have access to the records of juvenile proceedings which bear upon an application for compensation, but to the extent possible, it shall maintain the confidentiality of those records.

(h) The administrative law judge may exclude from a hearing of any matter at issue all persons, except those engaged in the hearing, during the taking of medical information and law-enforcement investigative records and information as evidence.

(i) Except for information held confidential by the administrative law judge, the official record in a contested case under this Chapter is open to public inspection. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1987, c. 819, s. 22; 1989, c. 679, ss. 4, 5; 1991, c. 301, s. 1.)

§ 15B-13: Repealed by Session Laws 1987, c. 819, s. 23.

§ 15B-14. Effect of prosecution or conviction of offender.

(a) An award of compensation may be approved whether or not any person is prosecuted or convicted for committing the conduct that is the basis of the award. Proof of conviction of a person whose conduct gave rise to a claim is conclusive evidence that the crime was committed, unless an application for rehearing, an appeal of the conviction, or a writ of certiorari is pending, or a rehearing or new trial has been ordered.

(b) Upon a request of the Attorney General, the proceedings in a claim for an award of compensation may be suspended pending disposition of a criminal prosecution that has been commenced or is imminent.

(c) In making an award, any specific statement of loss to a victim that a trial court has included in its judgment in the case may be considered. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1987, c. 819, s. 24; 1991, c. 301, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

Cited in Ellis v. North Carolina Crime Victims Comp. Comm'n, 111 N.C. App. 157, 432 S.E.2d 160 (1993).

§ 15B-15. Clerks of court to be notified.

The Director shall notify in writing the clerk of superior court of the county in which the offense occurred of any award made from the Crime Victims Compensation Fund to the victim. The clerk shall place the notice in the case file of any defendant charged with the offense that gave rise to the award to the victim. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1987, c. 819, s. 25; 1991, c. 301, s. 1.)

§ 15B-16. Manner of payment; non-assignability and exemptions.

(a) The Director shall pay award payments directly to the service provider on behalf of the claimant. Eligible out-of-pocket costs borne by the claimant shall be paid directly to the victim only if such costs can be documented and verified.

(b) Upon request of the claimant, future economic loss, other than allowable expense, may be commuted to a lump sum only on a finding that:

(1) The award in a lump sum will promote the interests of the claimant; or

(2) The present value of all future economic loss other than allowable expense does not exceed one thousand dollars ($1,000).

(c) An award for future economic loss payable in installments may be made only for a period as to which future economic loss can reasonably be determined. An award for future economic loss payable in installments may be reconsidered and modified upon a finding that a material and substantial change of circumstances has occurred.

(d) An order on reconsideration of an award may not require refund of amounts previously paid unless the award was obtained by fraud.

(e) The Director, even after an award made by the Commission, may negotiate with any service provider in order to obtain a reduction of the amount claimed by the provider in exchange for a full release of any claim against a claimant. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1987, c. 819, s. 26; 1989, c. 679, s. 6; 1991, c. 301, s. 1.)

§ 15B-17. Award not subject to taxation or execution.

(a) An award is exempt from taxation.

(b) An award is not subject to execution, attachment, garnishment, or other process, except that, upon receipt of an award by a claimant, the part of the award that is for allowable expense is not exempt from such an action by a creditor to the extent that he provides products, services, or accommodations the costs of which are included in the award, and the part of the award that is for work loss is not exempt from such an action to secure payment of alimony, maintenance, or child support. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1991, c. 301, s. 1.)

§ 15B-18. Subrogation by State.

(a) If compensation is awarded, the Crime Victims Compensation Fund is subrogated to all the claimant's rights to receive or recover benefits or advantages for economic loss from a source that is, or if readily available to the victim or claimant would be, a collateral source, to the extent of the compensation awarded.

(b) The Crime Victims Compensation Fund is an eligible recipient for restitution under G.S. 15A-1021, 15A-1343, 148-33.1, 148-33.2, 148-57.1, and any other applicable statutes.

(c) As a prerequisite to bringing an action to recover damages related to criminally injurious conduct for which compensation is claimed or awarded, the claimant shall give the Commission prior written notice of the proposed action. After receiving the notice the Commission shall immediately notify the Attorney General who shall promptly:

(1) Join in the action as a party plaintiff to recover compensation awarded;

(2) Require that the claimant bring the action in his individual name as a trustee in behalf of the State to recover compensation awarded; or

(3) Reserve its rights and do neither in the proposed action. If, as requested by the Attorney General, the claimant brings the action as trustee and recovers compensation awarded from the Crime Victims Compensation Fund, he may deduct from the compensation recovered in behalf of the State the reasonable expenses, including attorney fees, allocable by the court for that recovery.

(d) If a judgment or verdict separately indicates economic loss and noneconomic detriment, payments on the judgment shall be allocated between them in proportion to the amounts indicated. In an action in a court of this State arising out of criminally injurious conduct, the judge, on timely motion, shall direct the jury to return a special verdict, indicating separately the awards for noneconomic detriment, punitive damages, and economic loss.

(e) Any funds recovered by the Crime Victims Compensation Fund pursuant to this section shall be paid to the general fund.

(f) The Director may pursue any claim of the Crime Victim's Compensation Fund or the Commission set forth in this Chapter. At the request of the Director, or otherwise, the Attorney General is authorized to assert the rights of the Crime Victim's Compensation Fund or Commission before any administrative or judicial tribunal for purposes of enforcing a claim or right set forth in this Chapter. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1987, c. 819, s. 27; 1989, c. 679, s. 6; 1991, c. 301, s. 1.)

§ 15B-19. Subrogation by collateral sources prohibited.

Subrogation rights that a collateral source may have may not extend to a recovery from a claimant of all or any part of an award made under this Chapter. A collateral source may not apply in the name of a claimant or otherwise for an award of compensation based upon injury to a claimant to whose rights the collateral source may be subrogated. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1991, c. 301, s. 1.)

§ 15B-20. Publicity.

Law enforcement agencies responsible for investigating offenses committed in the State may provide information to victims of those offenses and to their dependents concerning the existence of the Crime Victims Compensation Fund and the source of applications for compensation from the Fund. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1987, c. 819, s. 28; 1991, c. 301, s. 1.)

§ 15B-21. Annual report.

The Commission shall, by March 15 each year, prepare and transmit to the Governor and the General Assembly a report of its activities in the prior fiscal year and the current fiscal year to date. The report shall include:

(1) The number of claims filed;
(2) The number of awards made;
(2a) The number of pending cases by year received;
(3) The amount of each award;
(4) A statistical summary of claims denied and awards made;
(5) The administrative costs of the Commission, including the compensation of commissioners;
(6) The current unencumbered balance of the North Carolina Crime Victims Compensation Fund;
(7) The amount of funds carried over from the prior fiscal year;
(8) The amount of funds received in the prior fiscal year from the Department of Correction and from the compensation fund established pursuant to the Victims Crime Act of 1984, 42 U.S.C. § 10601, et seq.; and
(9) The amount of funds expected to be received in the current fiscal year, as well as the amount actually received in the current fiscal year on the date of the report, from the Department of Correction and from the compensation fund established pursuant to the Victims Crime Act of 1984, 42 U.S.C. § 10601, et seq.

The Attorney General and State Auditor shall assist the Commission in the preparation of the report required by this section. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1987, c. 819, s. 29; 1991, c. 301, s. 1; 1999-237, s. 20.2; 2001-424, s. 26.5.)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2001-424, s. 1.2, provides: "This act shall be known as the 'Current Operations and Capital Improvements Appropriations Act of 2001'."

Session Laws 2001-424, s. 36.5 is a severability clause.

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-424, s. 26.5, effective July 1, 2001, added subdivision (2a).

§ 15B-22. Disbursements.

If compensation awarded under this Chapter cannot be paid due to insufficient funds in the Crime Victims Compensation Fund, payment shall be delayed until sufficient funds are available and no further awards of compensation shall be made until sufficient funds are available. (1983, c. 832, s. 1; 1987, c. 819, s. 31; 1991, c. 301, s. 1.)

§ 15B-23. Crime Victims Compensation Fund.

There is established the Crime Victims Compensation Fund. Revenue in the Crime Victims Compensation Fund includes amounts credited to the Fund under G.S. 148-2 and other funds. Any surplus in the Crime Victims Compensation Fund shall not revert. The Crime Victims Compensation Fund shall be kept on deposit with the State Treasurer, as in the case of other State funds, and may be invested by the State Treasurer in any lawful security for the investment of State money. The Crime Victims Compensation Fund is subject to the oversight of the State Auditor pursuant to Article 5A of Chapter 147 of the General Statutes. (1987, c. 819, s. 30; 1993 (Reg. Sess., 1994), c. 769, s. 21.5(b).)

Editor's Note. — Session Laws 2000-67, s. 1.1, provides: "This act shall be known as 'The Current Operations and Capital Improvements Appropriations Act of 2000'."

Session Laws 2000-67, s. 18.1, effective July 1, 2000, provides that, notwithstanding the provisions of G.S. 15B-23, the sum of $1,025,000 from the cash balance of the Crime Victims Compensation Fund is to revert to the General Fund on July 1, 2000, to be used for domestic violence programs, the rape victim assistance program, and other victims' assistance programs.

Session Laws 2000-67, s. 28.2, provides: "Except for statutory changes or other provisions that clearly indicate an intention to have effects beyond the 2000-2001 fiscal year, the textual provisions of this act apply only to funds appropriated for, and activities occurring during, the 2000-2001 fiscal year."

Session Laws 2000-67, s. 28.4, contains a severability clause.

§ 15B-24. Requiring defendant to pay restitution encouraged.

Pursuant to a Court's power to require restitution as a condition of probation, parole or work-release privileges, a Court may require a defendant to pay restitution to a victim, regardless of whether the victim receives compensation from the Crime Victims Compensation Fund, or to the Fund. It is the intent of the General Assembly that a victim's receipt of compensation from the Fund shall not discourage a Court from considering, where appropriate, payment of restitution by the defendant and alternatives to incarceration of the defendant. (1987, c. 819, s. 33.)

§ 15B-25. Compensation limits.

This Chapter shall not be construed to create a right to receive compensation. Compensation payable under Chapter 15B shall only be available to the extent that the General Assembly appropriates funds that purpose. (1987, c. 819, s. 36.)

Chapter 16.

Gaming Contracts and Futures.

Article 1.

Gaming Contracts.

§ 16-1. Gaming and betting contracts void.

All wagers, bets or stakes made to depend upon any race, or upon any gaming by lot or chance, or upon any lot, chance, casualty or unknown or contingent event whatever, shall be unlawful; and all contracts, judgments, conveyances and assurances for and on account of any money or property, or thing in action, so wagered, bet or staked, or to repay, or to secure any money, or property, or thing in action, lent or advanced for the purpose of such wagering, betting, or staking as aforesaid, shall be void. (1810, c. 796, P.R.; R.C., c. 51, ss. 1, 2; Code, ss. 2841, 2842; Rev., s. 1687; C.S., s. 2142.)

Cross References. — As to criminal laws regarding gambling, see § 14-289 et seq.

CASE NOTES

Liberal Construction. — This section is construed liberally. Turner v. Peacock, 13 N.C. 303 (1830).

Judgments in Invitum Not Included. — This section does not include judgments taken in invitum, but only such as are confessed or taken by consent. Teague v. Perry, 64 N.C. 39 (1870).

Gambling contracts are void, because they are so declared by this section. Morehead Banking Co. v. Tate, 122 N.C. 313, 30 S.E. 341 (1898).

Gaming debts incurred in this State are not enforceable in the courts of this State. MGM Desert Inn, Inc. v. Holz, 104 N.C. App. 717, 411 S.E.2d 399 (1991), cert. denied, 331 N.C. 384, 417 S.E.2d 384 (1992).

No Recovery Where Game Fair. — Money, or a horse, or a judgment, won at cards and actually paid and delivered, cannot be recovered back, the game being fairly played. Hodges v. Pitman, 4 N.C. 276 (1816); Hudspeth v. Wilson, 13 N.C. 372 (1830); Warden v. Plummer, 49 N.C. 524 (1857); Teague v. Perry, 64 N.C. 39 (1870).

Recovery Where Gaming Unfair. — Unfair gaming was not only illegal by force of the statute against gaming, but was unlawful at common law, so that the money, or thing won, if it had been paid, might be recovered back in an action at law. Webb v. Fulchire, 25 N.C. 485 (1843); Warden v. Plummer, 49 N.C. 524 (1857).

Where a man is cheated out of his money, though it is in playing at a game forbidden by law, he may recover back what he has paid from the person who practiced the fraud upon him. Webb v. Fulchire, 25 N.C. 485 (1843).

No Recovery on Bond Unfairly Won. — Where A., at a game of cards unfairly played, won a justice's judgment from B., and took from the defendants in the judgment a bond payable to himself for the amount, on which he brought suit, to which the statute against gaming was pleaded, it was held that he could not recover. Warden v. Plummer, 49 N.C. 524 (1857).

Money Lent for Gaming. — Money lent to play with at gaming, or to play at the time of loss, is not recoverable. Mooring v. Stanton, 1 N.C. 70 (1795).

Note given for a gambling debt is void and no action thereon can be maintained. Bullard v. Johnson, 264 N.C. 371, 141 S.E.2d 472 (1965).

Rights of Innocent Holder of Gambling Note. — This section, applicable to a note originally given for a gambling debt, renders this and all notes and contracts in like cases void. This being true, no action thereon can be sustained. The position as stated is undoubtedly the law in this jurisdiction, and is in accord with well-considered authorities elsewhere. This principle, however, is allowed to prevail only where the action is on the note to enforce its obligations, and does not affect or extend to suits by an innocent endorsee for value, and holder in due course, against the endorser on his contract of endorsement. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. v. Crafton, 181 N.C. 404, 107 S.E. 316 (1921).

Note Given for Item Won at Cards. — A note given subsequently, in purchase of a magistrate's judgment which had been won at cards by the payee from the maker, is not void under this section against gaming. Teague v. Perry, 64 N.C. 39 (1870).

Note Given in Foreign State in Consideration of Bet. — A note given in consideration of a bet won on a horse race cannot be enforced in this State although given in a state where wagering contracts are not invalid. Gooch v. Faucett, 122 N.C. 270, 29 S.E. 362 (1898); Burrus v. Witcover, 158 N.C. 384, 74 S.E. 11 (1912).

When Stakeholder Liable. — Where money is deposited with a stakeholder, to be delivered to the winner, and the stakeholder pays over the money, after notice from the loser not to do so, the loser may recover the money from the stakeholder. Wood v. Wood, 7 N.C. 172 (1819); Forrest v. Hart, 7 N.C. 458 (1819).

Cards a Game of Chance. — It is a matter of common knowledge that a game of cards is a game of chance. State v. Taylor, 111 N.C. 680, 16 S.E. 168 (1892).

Betting on Horse Race. — It was the intention of this section to make betting on horse races a criminal offense, since such wagering contracts had already been outlawed and the denouncement of the wager as unlawful came in by amendment at a later time. State v. Brown, 221 N.C. 301, 20 S.E.2d 286 (1942); State v. Felton, 239 N.C. 575, 80 S.E.2d 625 (1954).

Betting on dog races under a pari-mutuel system, having no other purpose than that of providing the facilities by means of tickets, machines, etc., for placing bets, calculating odds, determining winnings, if any, constitutes gambling within the meaning of the statutes presently codified as this section and §§ 16-2 and 14-292. State ex rel. Taylor v. Carolina Racing Ass'n, 241 N.C. 80, 84 S.E.2d 390 (1954).

The game of tenpins is not a game of chance. State v. Gupton, 30 N.C. 271 (1848); State v. King, 113 N.C. 631, 18 S.E. 169 (1893).

"Shuffleboard". — The keeping of a gaming table called "a shuffleboard" is not indictable, as the game is not one of chance, but of skill. State v. Bishop, 30 N.C. 266 (1848).

"Shooting for beef" and other similar trials of skill, for which the participants pay for the "chance" or privilege of shooting, is not a game of chance, there being no "chance" in the sense of the acts against gambling. State v. DeBoy, 117 N.C. 702, 23 S.E. 167 (1895).

Agreement to Purchase Out-of-State Lottery Tickets. — Where the parties entered into an agreement to purchase Virginia lottery tickets and purchased such tickets over a period of time the agreement was void as against North Carolina public policy, violated this section and was unenforceable in North Carolina. Cole v. Hughes, 114 N.C. App. 424, 442 S.E.2d 86 (1994), cert. denied, 336 N.C. 778, 447 S.E.2d 418 (1994).

§ 16-2. Players and betters competent witnesses.

No person shall be excused or incapacitated from confessing or testifying touching any money or property, or thing in action, so wagered, bet or staked, or lent for such purpose, by reason of his having won, played, bet or staked upon any game, lot or chance, casualty, or unknown or contingent event aforesaid; but the confession or testimony of such person shall not be used against him, in any criminal prosecution, on account of such betting, wagering or staking. (R.C., c. 51, s. 3; Code, s. 2843; Rev., s. 1688; C.S., s. 2143.)

Article 2.

Contracts for "Futures."

§ 16-3. Certain contracts as to "futures" void.

Every contract, whether in writing or not, whereby any person shall agree to sell and deliver any cotton, Indian corn, wheat, rye, oats, tobacco, meal, lard, bacon, salt pork, salt fish, beef, cattle, sugar, coffee, stocks, bonds, and chooses in action, at a place and at a time specified and agreed upon therein, to any other person, whether the person to whom such article is so agreed to be sold and delivered shall be a party to such contract or not, when, in fact, and notwithstanding the terms expressed of such contract, it is not intended by the parties thereto that the articles or things so agreed to be sold and delivered shall be actually delivered, or the value thereof paid, but it is intended and understood by them that money or other thing of value shall be paid to the one party by the other, or to a third party, the party to whom such payment of money or other thing of value shall be made to depend, and the amount of such money or other thing of value so to be paid to depend upon whether the market price or value of the article so agreed to be sold and delivered is greater or less at the time and place so specified than the price stipulated to be paid and received for the articles so to be sold and delivered, and every contract commonly called "futures" as to the several articles and things hereinbefore specified, or any of them, by whatever other name called, and every contract as to the said several articles and things, or any of them, whereby the parties thereto contemplate and intend no real transaction as to the article or thing agreed to be delivered, but only the payment of a sum of money or other thing of value, such payment and the amount thereof and the person to whom the same is to be paid to depend on whether or not the market price or value is greater or less than the price so agreed to be paid for the said article or thing at the time and place specified in such contract, shall be utterly null and void; and no action shall be maintained in any court to enforce any such contract, whether the same was made in or out of the State, or partly in and partly out of this State, and whether made by the parties thereto by themselves or by or through their agents, immediately or mediately; nor shall any party to any such contract, or any agent of any such party, directly or remotely connected with any such contract in any way whatever, have or maintain any action or cause of action on account of any money or other thing of value paid or advanced or hypothecated by him or them in connection with or on account of such contract and agency; nor shall the courts of this State have any jurisdiction to entertain any suit or action brought upon a judgment based upon any such contract. This section shall not be construed so as to apply to any person, firm or corporation, or his or their agents, engaged in the business of manufacturing or wholesale merchandising in the purchase and/or sale of the necessary commodities required in the ordinary course of their business; nor shall this section be construed so as to apply to any contract with respect to the purchase and/or sale for future delivery of any of the articles or things mentioned and referred to in this section, where such purchase and/or sale is made on any exchange on which any such article or things are regularly bought and sold, or contracts therefor regularly entered into, and the rules and regulations of such exchange are such that either party to such contract may require delivery thereof: Provided, such contract is made in accordance with such rules and regulations.

In addition, this Article shall not apply to any person, firm, corporation, or other entity, either as principal or agent, or to any contract, that is excluded or exempted under the Commodity Exchange Act, as provided in section 16(e)(2) of the Commodity Exchange Act, 7 U.S.C. § 16(e)(2), and, accordingly, each section of this Article shall be considered a "law that regulates or prohibits the operation of bucket shops" within the meaning of section 16(e)(2) of the Commodity Exchange Act. (1889, c. 221, s. 1; 1905, c. 538, s. 7; Rev., s. 1689; 1909, c. 853, s. 1; C.S., s. 2144; 1931, c. 236, s. 1; 2001-110, s. 1.)

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-110, s. 1, effective October 1, 2001, added the last paragraph.

CASE NOTES

I. General Consideration.
II. Practice and Procedure.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Section Constitutional. — This section is in furtherance of the declared public policy of North Carolina, and is constitutional and valid. Garseed v. Sternberger, 135 N.C. 501, 47 S.E. 603 (1904); State v. McGinnis, 138 N.C. 724, 51 S.E. 50 (1905); State v. Clayton, 138 N.C. 732, 60 S.E. 866 (1905); Rankin v. Mitchem, 141 N.C. 277, 53 S.E. 854 (1906); Randolph v. Heath, 171 N.C. 383, 88 S.E. 731 (1916).

The legislature can, in the exercise of the police power, prescribe when and under what circumstances and as to what offenses a certain act shall be prima facie evidence. Therefore, a provision that the purchase of commodities upon margin under certain circumstances shall raise a prima facie case that such purchases were void, and other circumstances shall not constitute such prima facie evidence, is not a discrimination forbidden by U.S. Const., Amend. 14. State v. McGinnis, 138 N.C. 724, 51 S.E. 50 (1905), decided under former § 2145 of the Consolidated Statutes.

Not Contrary to Federal Constitution. — When, in an action pending in the courts of this State to recover on a judgment in a sister state, the legislature amended this section by adding thereto: "nor shall the courts of this State have any jurisdiction to entertain any suit or action brought upon a judgment based upon any such contract," there can be no valid objection to such legislation on the ground that it impairs the obligation of contracts, and it would seem that no such objection can be made under U.S. Const., Art. IV, §§ 1 and 2, "the full faith and credit clause," if it is admitted or clearly appears that the judgment sued on was rendered on a transaction expressly forbidden by the statute on gaming, and that the question was not raised, investigated, or determined in the courts of the state in which the judgment was originally rendered. Mottu v. Davis, 151 N.C. 237, 65 S.E. 969 (1909).

The North Carolina statutes prohibiting gambling in futures and denying jurisdiction of the courts to suits on judgments based upon such contracts have been upheld as constituting an exception to the application of the full faith and credit clause of the Constitution, on the ground that the State had not provided a court with jurisdiction to entertain suit on such a judgment though properly rendered in another state. Lockman v. Lockman, 220 N.C. 95, 16 S.E.2d 670 (1941).

Section within Police Power. — This section, forbidding the business of running a "bucket shop," is clearly within the police power of the State. State v. McGinnis, 138 N.C. 724, 51 S.E. 50 (1905).

History of Section. — The act defining and declaring contracts in "futures" unlawful was passed in 1889, Chapter 221. In 1905, Chapter 538, the legislature enacted a law to suppress what is known, in popular phrase, as "bucket shops," and, having provided for this in §§ 1 and 2, the statute contains several additional sections relating to the statute of 1889, all of them having reference to the mode or quantum of proof which should be required in enforcement of that act. The law of 1905 then, in its closing section, provided: "This act shall not be construed so as to apply to any person, firm, or corporation, etc." This is the first time these words appear in legislation of the State on this subject, and, so far as they had reference to the law of 1889, it is clear the legislature, in the original statutes, only intended that they should affect questions of proof. See Rodgers, McCabe & Co. v. Bell, 156 N.C. 378, 72 S.E. 817 (1911).

Intent of last sentence of present first paragraph. — The last sentence of the present first paragraph was inserted "unnecessarily and out of abundance of caution" — and it does not confer any exclusive right or privilege upon manufacturers or wholesale merchants; nor does it authorize them to engage in any business prohibited by the section. It simply provides that the courts shall not construe the section to have the effect of preventing them from buying and selling for future delivery the necessary commodities required in their ordinary business. See State v. McGinnis, 138 N.C. 724, 51 S.E. 50 (1905); State v. Clayton, 138 N.C. 732, 50 S.E. 866 (1905); Rodgers, McCabe & Co. v. Bell, 156 N.C. 378, 72 S.E. 817 (1911).

The 1931 act amended the "Bucket Shop Act" of 1889, now this section, so as to exempt contracts with respect to purchase or sale where they are made in accordance with the regulations of any exchange, and where the rules of the exchange permit either party to require delivery. It was intended to remove the ban of illegality from transactions on legitimate exchanges, as distinguished from "an establishment nominally for the transaction of a stock exchange business, or business of a similar character, but really for the registration of lots or wagers, usually for small amounts, on the rise or fall of stock, grain, etc., there being no transfer or delivery of the stocks or things dealt with." Gatewood v. North Carolina, 203 U.S. 531, 27 S. Ct. 167, 51 L. Ed. 305 (1906).

This section clearly defines what is an illegal contract where there is no real sale, but merely an agreement for an adjustment upon the basis of differences in the prices of the commodity at the time fixed. Orvis Bros. & Co. v. Holt-Morgan Mills, 173 N.C. 231, 91 S.E. 948 (1917).

Example of "Margin". — A payment made on account by a customer to a stockbroker, under an agreement between the customer and the stockbroker in which the stockbroker agreed either to sell or to buy from the customer a certain number of shares of stock, but under which, in fact, no delivery or transfer of shares was contemplated, is known in stockbroker's parlance as a "margin." West v. Satterfield, 190 N.C. 89, 129 S.E. 177 (1925); McClain v. Fleshman, 106 F. 880 (3d Cir. Pa. 1901), decided under former § 2145 of the Consolidated Statutes.

"Bucket Shop" Defined. — A "bucket shop" has been defined as "an establishment nominally for the transaction of a stock exchange business, or business of a similar character, but really for the registration of lots or wagers, usually for small amounts, on the rise or fall of stock, grain, etc., there being no transfer or delivery of the stocks or things dealt with." Gatewood v. North Carolina, 203 U.S. 531, 27 S. Ct. 167, 51 L. Ed. 305 (1906).

For other definitions, see State v. McGinnis, 138 N.C. 724, 51 S.E. 50 (1905).

Test of Validity under Section. — The test of the validity of a contract for "futures" which this section requires is the "intention not to actually deliver" the articles bought or sold for future delivery. No matter how explicit the words in any contract which may require a delivery, if in fact there is no intention to deliver, but the real understanding is that on the stipulated date the losing party shall pay to the other the difference between the market price and the contract price, this is a gambling contract. State v. Clayton, 138 N.C. 732, 50 S.E. 866 (1905); Rodgers, McCabe & Co. v. Bell, 156 N.C. 378, 72 S.E. 817 (1911).

When there is no real transaction, no real contract for purchase or sale, but only a wager upon the rise or fall of the price of stock, or an article of merchandise in the exchange or market, one party agreeing to pay, if there is a rise, and the other party agreeing to pay if there is a fall in price, the agreement is a pure wager. No business is done — nothing is bought or sold or contracted for, there is only a bet. Orvis Bros. & Co. v. Holt-Morgan Mills, 173 N.C. 231, 91 S.E. 948 (1917).

Purchase and Sale on Margin. — This section does not render void a contract for the purchase and sale of stocks on margin when actual delivery of the stocks is made to the purchaser or to his agent, and the stocks are paid for in whole or in part. Cody v. Hovey, 216 N.C. 391, 5 S.E.2d 165 (1939).

Intention of Parties. — The true test of validity of a contract for future delivery is whether it can be settled only in money and in no other way, or whether the party selling can tender and compel acceptance of the particular commodity sold or the party buying can compel the delivery of the commodity purchased. The essential inquiry in every case is as to the necessary effect of the contract and the real intention of the parties. Williams v. Carr, 80 N.C. 295 (1879); State v. McGinnis, 138 N.C. 724, 51 S.E. 50 (1905); State v. Clayton, 138 N.C. 732, 50 S.E. 866 (1905); West v. Satterfield, 190 N.C. 89, 129 S.E. 177 (1925).

The contract, by its terms, not disclosing any gambling element, the matter is to be settled by ascertaining the true underlying purpose of the parties. Was it in the intention of both parties that the cotton should not be delivered, and did they conceal in the deceptive terms of a fair and lawful contract, a gambling agreement, by which they contemplated no real transaction as to the article contracted to be delivered? Rankin v. Mitchem, 141 N.C. 277, 53 S.E. 854 (1906); Burns v. Tomlinson, 147 N.C. 645, 61 S.E. 614 (1908); G.G. Edgerton & Son v. J.T.

Edgerton & Bros., 153 N.C. 167, 69 S.E. 53 (1910); L. Harvey & Son v. Pettaway, 156 N.C. 375, 72 S.E. 364 (1911); Rodgers, McCabe & Co. v. Bell, 156 N.C. 378, 72 S.E. 817 (1911); Hold v. Wellons, 163 N.C. 124, 79 S.E. 450 (1913).

The intent of the parties that the merchandise contracted for should not be actually delivered is the cardinal element of a "futures" contract made illegal by this section and the courts will disregard the form and ascertain whether the intent of the parties was to speculate in the rise and fall of the price of the commodity. Fenner v. Tucker, 213 N.C. 419, 196 S.E. 357 (1938).

Both Parties Must Have Intent. — It was never held that when an innocent party had made a contract valid in its terms, his rights acquired thereunder should be denied him by reason of an undisclosed purpose or intent of the other. To avoid the contract the vitiating purpose or understanding must be shared in by both. Rodgers, McCabe & Co. v. Bell, 156 N.C. 378, 72 S.E. 817 (1911).

Parties to Contract. — The owner of a draft which he knows to have been given in the unlawful purchase of cotton futures, or in maintaining or purchasing margins in contracts of that character, is a party to the prohibited contract, the consideration is illegal and he cannot recover from the payee in his action on the draft. Burrus v. Witcover, 158 N.C. 384, 74 S.E. 11 (1912).

Unauthorized Act of Agent. — A bona fide wholesale dealer who sues upon a contract for the future delivery of cotton, which is resisted on the ground that the contract was a wagering one and void under the provisions of this section, is bound by the acts and statements of his agent in negotiating and closing the trade, to the effect that actual delivery was not contemplated or required; and the plaintiff may not recover on the contract merely because he was a bona fide wholesale dealer in cotton and only authorized his agent to make a contract for actual delivery, if the agent at the time entered into a contract with the vendor which was condemned by the statute as being a wagering one. Alex. Sprunt & Sons v. May, 156 N.C. 388, 72 S.E. 821 (1911).

Agent's Right to Recover. — An agent for a principal to a contract made in violation of this section, as to "futures," cannot recover for any loss he may have sustained on account thereof, as such act of agency would be in violation of § 16-4, making it a misdemeanor. Burns v. Tomlinson, 147 N.C. 645, 61 S.E. 614 (1908).

Effect of Contract Made in Foreign State. — An action upon a wagering or "future contract" in cotton cannot be maintained in this State, though entered into in another state where it is lawful. Burrus v. Witcover, 158 N.C. 384, 74 S.E. 11 (1912).

Action upon judgment obtained in foreign state. See Cody v. Hovey, 217 N.C. 407, 8 S.E.2d 479 (1940).

Subsequent Promise to Repay Is Void. — A subsequent promise made by one of the contracting parties to the other to repay him for loss arising from a contract for "futures" is void. Burns v. Tomlinson, 147 N.C. 645, 61 S.E. 614 (1908).

Contracts Held Void. — Where the defendant has induced the plaintiff to purchase certain shares of stock, through himself, from his own broker, upon margin, the broker to carry the stock upon its hypothecation with him as collateral, and thereafter the defendant has his broker, unknown to the plaintiff, to sell the stock and place the proceeds to his own account, and uses the same and other moneys upon margin advanced from time to time by the plaintiff upon his representation that the price of this stock had decreased, it was held that the plaintiff may recover of the defendant in his action the moneys the defendant had thus converted to his own use; and this section, relating to gambling, etc., is not available to the defendant as a defense. Gladstone v. Swain, 187 N.C. 712, 122 S.E. 755 (1924).

A note given for margins upon an illegal contract for cotton futures, without intention of delivery of the cotton, cannot be collected by suit in the courts of North Carolina and the promisor's repeated promise to pay it cannot impart any validity to it. Garseed v. Sternberger, 135 N.C. 501, 47 S.E. 603 (1904); Burns v. Tomlinson, 147 N.C. 645, 61 S.E. 614 (1908); Burrus v. Witcover, 158 N.C. 384, 74 S.E. 11, 39 L.R.A. (n.s.) 1005 (1912); Cobb Bros. & Co. v. Guthrie, 160 N.C. 313, 76 S.E. 81 (1912); Orvis Bros. & Co. v. Holt-Morgan Mills, 173 N.C. 231, 91 S.E. 948 (1917).

Where there is evidence that contracts set up by certain defendants in an action by the receiver of a brokerage business were founded upon speculation and based upon "margins," and that no actual delivery of the stock was intended by the parties, the evidence is sufficient to support a finding that the contracts were void under this section and the finding is as conclusive as the verdict of a jury, and the judgment that such contracts were absolutely void will be sustained. Martin v. Bush, 199 N.C. 93, 154 S.E. 43 (1930).

A contract for "cotton futures" in which no actual delivery is intended or contemplated is void and no action may be maintained thereon. Bodie v. Horn, 211 N.C. 397, 190 S.E. 236 (1937).

Applied in Marx v. Maddrey, 94 F. Supp. 784 (E.D.N.C. 1951).

Stated in Royster v. Hancock, 235 N.C. 110, 69 S.E.2d 29 (1952).

Cited in Meyer v. Fenner, 196 N.C. 476, 146 S.E. 82 (1929); Bache Halsey Stuart, Inc. v.

Hunsucker, 38 N.C. App. 414, 248 S.E.2d 561 (1978).

II. PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

Burden of Proof. — Where in an action by an assignee and trustee under § 23-1, et seq., it is alleged that one of the defendants was a partner in the business of the assignor and liable for the debts of the firm, and the other defendants admit this allegation and set up and seek to recover of the plaintiff and the alleged partner on contract with the assignor, the alleged partner is a defendant in the action on the contracts and her answer setting up the defense that the contracts were void under this section, as gambling contracts, places the burden on the other defendants to prove that the contracts were lawful. Martin v. Bush, 199 N.C. 93, 154 S.E. 43 (1930).

When the defendant pleads in a verified answer that a contract, the subject of suit, for buying and selling cotton was void for being one for "futures," the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show that it was a lawful one, i.e., that actual delivery was intended by the parties, and not merely that either had the privilege of calling therefor. Burns v. Tomlinson, 147 N.C. 645, 61 S.E. 614 (1908), decided under former § 2146 of the Consolidated Statutes.

Burden Not upon Administrator. — Where an administrator paid certain notes and it was later alleged by the legatees that the notes were given for a gambling contract which should not have been paid, the burden of proving that the notes were given for a valid contract was not upon the administrator. Overman v. Lanier, 157 N.C. 544, 73 S.E. 192 (1911), decided under former § 2146 of the Consolidated Statutes.

Parol Evidence. — The section, rendering void and unenforceable a contract for the sale of futures upon margin covered by the purchaser, that does not contemplate the delivery of the thing bargained for, but only a payment to be made for the loss incurred or a profit to be received in accordance with the fall or rise of the market, looks to the substance of the contract and not to its form, and parol evidence is competent to show the intention of the parties entering therein. West v. Satterfield, 190 N.C. 89, 129 S.E. 177 (1925).

Evidence Sufficient. — The purchaser makes out a prima facie case upon evidence that the contract was founded upon a gambling or wagering consideration in violation of this section. West v. Satterfield, 190 N.C. 89, 129 S.E. 177 (1925), decided under former § 2145 of the Consolidated Statutes.

Where the plaintiff himself testified that he did not buy certain cotton in the ordinary course of his business as a cotton manufacturer for use in his mill, this was prima facie a "future contract." Burns v. Tomlinson, 147 N.C. 634, 61 S.E. 615 (1908), decided under former § 2145 of the Consolidated Statutes.

When Jury Question Presented. — Where the contract is not a gambling one on its face the underlying purpose and intent of the parties should be left to the jury. Harvey v. Pettaway, 156 N.C. 375, 72 S.E. 364 (1911).

Where there was evidence offered by the plaintiffs tending to show that they were wholesale dealers in cotton as a commodity, and that they purchased certain cotton as a commodity and sold it to manufacturers and exporters, and dealt in actual spot cotton and were in no wise dealers in futures, they were entitled to have this issue submitted to a jury. Eure v. Sabiston, 195 F. 721 (4th Cir. 1912).

Upon conflicting evidence as to whether or not the contract is a gambling contract, it becomes a question for the jury under proper instructions from the court. West v. Satterfield, 190 N.C. 89, 129 S.E. 177 (1925), decided under former § 2146 of the Consolidated Statutes.

Judgment by Default Void. — A judgment rendered by default of an answer upon notes regular and valid upon their face, but growing out of transactions in cotton futures made void by this section which also declares that actions thereon may not be maintained in the courts of this State, will be set aside as utterly void, irrespective of whether it was obtained through excusable neglect, etc. Randolph v. Heath, 171 N.C. 383, 88 S.E. 731 (1916).

§ 16-4. Entering into or aiding contract for "futures" misdemeanor.

If any person shall become a party to any contract declared void in this Article; or if any person shall be the agent, directly or indirectly, of any party in making or furthering or effectuating the same; or if any agent or officer of a corporation shall in any manner knowingly aid in making or furthering any such contract to which the corporation is a party, he shall be guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor.

If any person shall, while in this State, consent to become a party to any such contract made in another state, and if any person shall, as agent of any person or corporation, become a party to any such contract made in another state, or in this State do any act or in any way aid in the making or furthering of any such contract so made in another state, he shall be guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor. (1889, c. 221, ss. 3, 4; Rev., ss. 3823, 3824; C.S., s. 2147; 1993, c. 539, s. 304; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c).)

CASE NOTES

This Section Is Constitutional. — Garseed v. Sternberger, 135 N.C. 501, 47 S.E. 603 (1904); State v. McGinnis, 138 N.C. 724, 51 S.E. 50 (1905); State v. Clayton, 138 N.C. 732, 50 S.E. 866 (1905); Rankin v. Mitchem, 141 N.C. 277, 53 S.E. 854 (1906); Randolph v. Heath, 171 N.C. 383, 88 S.E. 731 (1916).

§ 16-5. Opening office for sales of "futures" misdemeanor.

If any person, corporation or other association of persons, either as principal or agent, shall establish or open an office or place of business in this State for the purpose of carrying on or engaging in making such contracts as are forbidden in this Article, he shall be guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor. (1905, c. 538, ss. 1, 2; Rev., s. 3825; C.S., s. 2148; 1993, c. 539, s. 305; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c).)

§ 16-6. Evidence in prosecutions under this Article.

No person shall be excused on any prosecution under the provisions of this Article from testifying touching anything done by himself or others contrary to the provisions thereof, but no discovery made by the witness upon such examination shall be used against him in any penal or criminal prosecution, and he shall be altogether pardoned of the offense so done or participated in by him. In all such prosecutions proof that the defendant was a party to a contract, as agent or principal, to sell and deliver any article, thing or property specified or named in this Article, or that he was the agent, directly or indirectly, of any party in making, furthering or effectuating the same, or that he was the agent or officer of any corporation or association or person in making, furthering or effectuating the same, and that the article, thing or property agreed to be sold and delivered was not actually delivered, and that settlement was made or agreed to be made upon the difference in value of said article, thing or property, shall constitute against such defendant prima facie evidence of guilt. Proof that any person, corporation or other association of persons, either as principal or agent, has established an office or place where are posted or published from information received the fluctuating prices of grain, cotton, provisions, stocks, bonds and other commodities, or of any one or more of the same, shall constitute prima facie evidence of being guilty of violating the provisions of this Article. (1905, c. 538, ss. 3, 4, 5; Rev., s. 3826; C.S., s. 2149.)

Chapter 17.

Habeas Corpus.

Article 1.

Constitutional Provisions.

§ 17-1. Remedy without delay for restraint of liberty.

Every person restrained of his liberty is entitled to a remedy to inquire into the lawfulness thereof, and to remove the same, if unlawful; and such remedy ought not to be denied or delayed. (Const., art. 1, s. 18; Rev., s. 1819; C.S., s. 2203.)

Cross References. — As to costs in habeas corpus, see § 6-21.

Legal Periodicals. — For survey of 1982 criminal law, see 61 N.C.L. Rev. 1060 (1983).

CASE NOTES

Purpose of this section and § 17-2 is to insure that a remedy is provided to inquire into the lawfulness of an inmate's restraint. Hoffman v. Edwards, 48 N.C. App. 559, 269 S.E.2d 311 (1980).

Habeas corpus is high prerogative writ. In re Burton, 257 N.C. 534, 126 S.E.2d 581 (1962).

Waiver. — A defendant may waive the benefit of this article by express consent, failure to assert it in apt time or by conduct inconsistent with a purpose to insist upon it. State v. Parks, 290 N.C. 748, 228 S.E.2d 248 (1976).

§ 17-2. Habeas corpus not to be suspended.

The privileges of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended. (Const., art. 1, s. 21; Rev., s. 1820; C.S., s. 2204.)

Cross References. — For constitutional provision, see N.C. Const., Art. I, § 21.

CASE NOTES

Purpose of § 17-1 and this section is to insure that a remedy is provided to inquire into the lawfulness of an inmate's restraint. Hoffman v. Edwards, 48 N.C. App. 559, 269 S.E.2d 311 (1980).

Section Cannot Be Abrogated. — This section is an express provision, and there is no rule of construction or principle of constitutional law by which an express provision can be abrogated and made of no force by an implication from any other provision of the instrument. The clauses should be construed so as to give effect to each, and prevent conflict. This is done by giving to N.C. Const., Art. XII, § 1, the effect of allowing military possession of a county to be taken, and the arrest of all suspected persons to be made by military authority, but requiring, by force of N.C. Const., Art. I, § 21, the persons arrested to be surrendered for trial to the civil authorities, on habeas corpus, should they not be delivered over without the writ. Ex parte Moore, 64 N.C. 802 (1870).

ARTICLE 2.

Application.

§ 17-3. Who may prosecute writ.

Every person imprisoned or restrained of his liberty within this State, for any criminal or supposed criminal matter, or on any pretense whatsoever, except in cases specified in G.S. 17-4, may prosecute a writ of habeas corpus, according to the provisions of this Chapter, to inquire into the cause of such imprisonment or restraint, and, if illegal, to be delivered therefrom. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 1; Code, s. 1623; Rev., s. 1821; C.S., s. 2205.)

CASE NOTES

Court Is Not Permitted to Act as One of Errors and Appeals. — In habeas corpus proceedings, the court is not permitted to act as one of errors and appeals, but the right to afford relief, on such hearings, arises only when the petitioner is held unlawfully or on a sentence manifestly entered by the court without power to impose it. In re Burton, 257 N.C. 534, 126 S.E.2d 581 (1962).

Habeas corpus is not available as a substitute for appeal. In re Burton, 257 N.C. 534, 126 S.E.2d 581 (1962).

Judgment must be void as distinguished from erroneous. In re Burton, 257 N.C. 534, 126 S.E.2d 581 (1962); Brown v. North Carolina, 341 F.2d 87 (4th Cir. 1965).

As Where Court Had No Jurisdiction or Judgment Was Not Authorized by Law. — In habeas corpus proceedings, the court has jurisdiction to discharge petitioner only when the record discloses that the court which imprisoned him did not have jurisdiction of the offense or of the person of defendant, or that the judgment was not authorized by law. In re Burton, 257 N.C. 534, 126 S.E.2d 581 (1962).

Habeas corpus relief may be obtained only on determination that the court which imprisoned the petitioner did not have jurisdiction of the offense or of the prisoner, or that judgment was not authorized by law. Brown v. North Carolina, 341 F.2d 87 (4th Cir. 1965).

The only questions open to inquiry are whether on the record the court which imposed the sentence had jurisdiction of the matter or had exceeded its powers. In re Burton, 257 N.C. 534, 126 S.E.2d 581 (1962).

The sole question for determination at habeas corpus hearing for alleged unlawful imprisonment is whether petitioner is then being unlawfully restrained of his liberty. In re Burton, 257 N.C. 534, 126 S.E.2d 581 (1962).

Where one is actually confined for a longer term of imprisonment than is legal, a writ of habeas corpus will issue to the end that a proper sentence may be imposed. State v. Green, 85 N.C. 600 (1881).

Prisoner Under Illegal Sentence. — Where a defendant, charged with the crime of burglary with intent to commit murder, consented to a mistrial and pleaded "guilty of larceny," and was sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary, a writ of habeas corpus will issue, in order that he may be taken from the penitentiary and held to answer the charge in the court below. State v. Queen, 91 N.C. 659 (1884).

One Imprisoned for Contempt. — Where a defendant punished for direct contempt contends that a legal right has been denied him, and it is made to appear that the court was without jurisdiction of the cause or power to impose the sentence, his remedy is by habeas corpus proceedings, taken to the Supreme Court, if necessary, by writ of certiorari. State v. Little, 175 N.C. 743, 94 S.E. 680 (1917).

Proceedings to obtain control of a minor child between persons with whom the child had been placed for adoption and welfare officers seeking to place the child with his family are not proceedings under this section, to set the infant free but are proceedings to fix and determine the right of custody. In re Thompson, 228 N.C. 74, 44 S.E.2d 475 (1947).

Relief of Soldier in Army. — A soldier actually and rightfully in the army can have no relief by the writ of habeas corpus against any abuse of military authority, and if he is wrongfully held as a soldier, he is not entitled to a habeas corpus while he is undergoing punishment or awaiting trial for a military offense. Cox v. Gee, 60 N.C. 516 (1864).

Cited in State v. Hamrick, 2 N.C. App. 227, 162 S.E.2d 567 (1968).

§ 17-4. When application denied.

Application to prosecute the writ shall be denied in the following cases:

(1) Where the persons are committed or detained by virtue of process issued by a court of the United States, or a judge thereof, in cases where such courts or judges have exclusive jurisdiction under the laws of the United States, or have acquired exclusive jurisdiction by the commencement of suits in such courts.

(2) Where persons are committed or detained by virtue of the final order, judgment or decree of a competent tribunal of civil or criminal jurisdiction, or by virtue of an execution issued upon such final order, judgment or decree.

(3) Where any person has willfully neglected, for the space of two whole sessions after his imprisonment, to apply for the writ to the superior court of the county in which he may be imprisoned, such person shall not have a habeas corpus in vacation time for his enlargement.

(4) Where no probable ground for relief is shown in the application. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 2; Code, s. 1624; Rev., s. 1822; C.S., s. 2206; 1971, c. 528, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

Cannot Be Used as Writ of Error. — The writ of habeas corpus cannot be used in the nature of a writ of error. State v. Dunn, 159 N.C. 470, 74 S.E. 1014 (1912).

Habeas corpus is in the nature of a writ of error to the extent of examining into the legality of a person's detention, but it is not available as a means of reviewing and correcting mere errors as distinguished from defects of jurisdiction. State v. Edwards, 192 N.C. 321, 135 S.E. 37 (1926); In re Chase, 193 N.C. 450, 137 S.E. 305 (1927), cert. denied, 278 U.S. 600, 49 S. Ct. 9, 73 L. Ed. 529 (1928).

Nor Substitute for Appeal. — The writ of habeas corpus may not be used as a substitute for appeal. In re Smith, 218 N.C. 462, 11 S.E.2d 317 (1940).

Administrative Discretion. — The difficult problems of when a person should be released and under what circumstances turn on analysis of internal correctional policy, and rightfully lie within the sole administrative jurisdiction of State governmental departments, and are not, barring a clear instance of constitutional infirmity, subjects appropriate for judicial scrutiny. In re Imprisonment of Stevens, 28 N.C. App. 471, 221 S.E.2d 839 (1976).

In practical terms, the questions of grade of conduct, privileges, disciplinary action and commendations are strictly administrative and not judicial matters. In re Imprisonment of Stevens, 28 N.C. App. 471, 221 S.E.2d 839 (1976).

Habeas corpus is inappropriate to test the validity of a trial which resulted in conviction and final judgment against petitioner, both by reason of established procedure and also by this section. In re Taylor, 229 N.C. 297, 49 S.E.2d 749 (1948).

Where one is imprisoned under the final process of a court of competent jurisdiction the writ of habeas corpus may not successfully be sued out since this section expressly forbids it. Ledford v. Emerson, 143 N.C. 527, 55 S.E. 969 (1906); In re Holley, 154 N.C. 163, 69 S.E. 872 (1910); Howie v. Spittle, 156 N.C. 180, 72 S.E. 207 (1911).

In a proceeding wherein there was no question of the superior court having jurisdiction of the offense and of the person of the defendant, and the power to render the judgment imposed, the defendant was not entitled to relief by habeas corpus on the ground that the record failed to show that a verdict was rendered in the case or that he had entered any plea, since any omissions in the minutes of the court with respect to procedure followed during the course of trial could be amended by the court. State v. Cannon, 244 N.C. 399, 94 S.E.2d 339 (1956).

In construing the term, "final judgment or decree of a competent tribunal," it has come to be well understood that the exception refers only to judgments warranted by the law applicable to the case in hand, and where it appears from an inspection of the record proper and the judgment itself that the court had no jurisdiction of the cause and was manifestly without power to enter the judgment or impose the sentence in question, in such case there would be no final sentence of a competent tribunal, and the exception established by the statute does not obtain. State v. Queen, 91 N.C. 659 (1884); In re Holley, 154 N.C. 163, 69 S.E. 872 (1910).

Meaning of "Competent Jurisdiction". — The term, "competent jurisdiction," used by this section in making an exception to the power of this court to review a judgment in habeas corpus proceedings, means that where a committed criminal is detained under a sentence not authorized by law, he is entitled to be heard, and where, though authorized in kind, it extends beyond what the law expressly permits, he may be relieved from further punishment after serving the lawful portion of the sentence; and a different construction would render the statute unconstitutional. In re Holley, 154 N.C. 163, 69 S.E. 872 (1910).

Presumption of Validity. — Proceedings before a court of competent jurisdiction will be presumed to be regular and valid, unless upon their face they plainly appear to be void; and when they do not so appear, they are not subject to review in habeas corpus proceedings. State v. Burnette, 173 N.C. 734, 91 S.E. 364 (1917).

Reason for Rule. — Without reference to the positive prohibition of this section, it is otherwise clear that the power cannot extend to cases where the person is confined on final process. For if so, this unseemly and discordant result would follow, that one superior court judge might try and sentence a person to death or the penitentiary, and another might issue the writ of habeas corpus and discharge the prisoner. Results so disgraceful and destructive to the orderly and harmonious administration of justice were never contemplated by the framers of our judicial system; on the contrary, they were carefully guarded against, both by the Constitution and legislation. In re Schenck, 74 N.C. 607 (1876).

Where Sentence Erroneous. — The application must be refused, even where it appears that the applicant is imprisoned in the State's prison, and the sentence of the court is erroneous, and the applicant, in default of appeal, must be left to his remedy by writ of certiorari when he is detained by virtue of a final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. In re

Schenck, 74 N.C. 607 (1876).

Indictment returned by a grand jury is sufficient ground to detain a defendant for trial, and the defendant is not entitled to his release in a habeas corpus proceeding. State v. Murphy, 10 N.C. App. 11, 177 S.E.2d 917 (1970), appeal dismissed, 277 N.C. 727, 178 S.E.2d 830, cert. denied, 278 N.C. 105, 179 S.E.2d 453 (1971).

Prior Writ of Habeas Corpus. — See In re Adams, 218 N.C. 379, 11 S.E.2d 163 (1940).

Conviction Based on Illegal Evidence Authorized by Unconstitutional Statute. — An indictment and judgment against the prisoner for an illegal sale of spirituous liquors alleged to have been based upon illegal evidence authorized by an unconstitutional statute, may not be passed upon in habeas corpus proceedings, for such would be to permit one superior court judge to examine into the proceedings before another judge, upon parol evidence, and review his action. State v. Dunn, 159 N.C. 470, 74 S.E. 1014 (1912).

Applied in In re Croom, 175 N.C. 455, 95 S.E. 903 (1918); State v. Hooker, 183 N.C. 763, 111 S.E. 351 (1922); In re Renfrow, 247 N.C. 55, 100 S.E.2d 315 (1957).

§ 17-5. By whom application is made.

Application for the writ may be made either by the party for whose relief it is intended or by any person in his behalf. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 3; Code, s. 1625; Rev., s. 1823; C.S., s. 2207.)

CASE NOTES

Application May Be Withdrawn. — One who has petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus may withdraw his application whenever he chooses. State v. Wiley, 64 N.C. 821 (1870).

Quoted in In re Thomas, 290 N.C. 410, 226 S.E.2d 371 (1976).

§ 17-6. To judge of appellate division or superior court in writing.

Application for the writ shall be made in writing, signed by the applicant —

(1) To any one of the justices or judges of the appellate division.

(2) To any one of the superior court judges, either during a session or in vacation. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 4; Code, s. 1626; Rev., s. 1824; C.S., s. 2208; 1969, c. 44, s. 41; 1971, c. 528, s. 2.)

CASE NOTES

Remedy May Be Demanded Before Judge of Any Court of Competent Jurisdiction. — The Constitution required the legislature to furnish an adequate remedy, and when it was declared that all such persons should have the right to "prosecute a writ of habeas corpus," it followed ex vi termini, that they were entitled to demand this remedy before any judge of any court of general jurisdiction in this country. The power of all judges to grant it was conceded before the Magna Charta, and was only reaffirmed, like many other cardinal principles, in that instrument and those that followed reaffirming it. Harkins v. Cathey, 119 N.C. 649, 26 S.E. 136 (1896).

Jurisdiction of Courts. — The courts of this State, as well as the individual judges, have jurisdiction to issue writs of habeas corpus, returnable to them in term time, and as a court. In re Bryan, 60 N.C. 1 (1863).

Source of Authority of State Judges. — It is to be observed that the authority of the state judges in cases of habeas corpus emanates from the several states, and not from the United States. In order to destroy their jurisdiction, therefore, it is necessary to show, not that the United States has given them jurisdiction, but that Congress possesses and has exercised the power of taking away that jurisdiction which the states have vested in their own judges. In re Bryan, 60 N.C. 1 (1863).

Jurisdiction Arises on Presentation of Petition. — Presenting a petition to a judge for a writ of habeas corpus gives him jurisdiction of the subject. State v. Edney, 60 N.C. 463 (1864).

Judges Mentioned Have Equal Powers. — A single judge of the Supreme Court has the same and no other jurisdiction to issue the writ than a judge of the superior court, and the same limitation of power to issue the writ in certain cases extends equally to the two classes of judges. In re Schenck, 74 N.C. 607 (1876).

Before Whom Writ Made Returnable. — The judge issuing the writ may make it returnable before himself, or, for convenience, before any other judge. In re Burton, 257 N.C. 534, 126 S.E.2d 581 (1962).

The particular judge before whom the writ is returnable need not be either the resident or presiding judge of any particular term of court. In re Burton, 257 N.C. 534, 126 S.E.2d 581 (1962).

Section 1-76 et seq., concerning venue, refers to "actions" and has no application to habeas corpus proceedings. McEachern v. McEachern, 210 N.C. 98, 185 S.E. 684 (1936).

Review of Discretionary Power of Judge as to Place Writ Is Returnable. — Since any judge of the superior court or justice of the Supreme Court has the power to issue a writ of habeas corpus at any time or any place, he has the discretionary power to make the writ returnable at such place as he may determine, which discretion will not be reviewed in the absence of a showing of abuse or failure to afford full opportunity to be heard, and therefore an exception to the refusal of a motion for change of venue of habeas corpus proceedings cannot be sustained. McEachern v. McEachern, 210 N.C. 98, 185 S.E. 684 (1936).

Applied in In re Cox, 24 N.C. App. 99, 210 S.E.2d 223 (1974).

§ 17-7. Contents of application.

The application must state, in substance, as follows:

(1) That the party, in whose behalf the writ is applied for, is imprisoned or restrained of his liberty, the place where, and the officer or person by whom he is imprisoned or restrained, naming both parties, if their names are known, or describing them if they are not known.

(2) The cause or pretense of such imprisonment or restraint, according to the knowledge or belief of the applicant.

(3) If the imprisonment is by virtue of any warrant or other process, a copy thereof shall be annexed, or it shall be made to appear that a copy thereof has been demanded and refused, or that for some sufficient reason a demand for such copy could not be made.

(4) If the imprisonment or restraint is alleged to be illegal, the application must state in what the alleged illegality consists; and that the legality of the imprisonment or restraint has not been already adjudged, upon a prior writ of habeas corpus, to the knowledge or belief of the applicant.

(5) The facts set forth in the application must be verified by the oath of the applicant, or by that of some other credible witness, which oath may be administered by any person authorized by law to take affidavits. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 5; Code, s. 1627; Rev., s. 1825; C.S., s. 2209.)

CASE NOTES

Allegation of Prior Writ. — A petition for habeas corpus must allege that the imprisonment has not been already adjudged upon a prior writ of habeas corpus. In re Brittain, 93 N.C. 587 (1885).

Prior Writ of Habeas Corpus. — See In re Adams, 218 N.C. 379, 11 S.E.2d 163 (1940).

Failure to Allege Prior Writ. — Where a defendant had not been tried when his writ of habeas corpus was filed, and he did not assert in the petition that the legality of his restraint had not been already adjudged upon a prior writ of habeas corpus, he did not comply with the provisions of this section, relating to the contents of a petition for the writ of habeas corpus. State v. Murphy, 10 N.C. App. 11, 177 S.E.2d 917 (1970), appeal dismissed, 277 N.C. 727, 178 S.E.2d 830, cert. denied, 278 N.C. 105, 179 S.E.2d 453 (1971).

Parties may waive all errors and dispense with all forms in the proceedings on the petition. State v. Edney, 60 N.C. 463 (1864).

Applied in Hoffman v. Edwards, 48 N.C. App. 559, 269 S.E.2d 311 (1980).

Stated in State v. Green, 2 N.C. App. 391, 163 S.E.2d 14 (1968).

§ 17-8. Issuance of writ without application.

When the appellate division or superior court division, or any judge of either division, has evidence from any judicial proceeding before such court or judge that any person within this State is illegally imprisoned or restrained of his liberty, it is the duty of said court or judge to issue a writ of habeas corpus for his relief, although no application be made for such writ. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 10; Code, s. 1632; Rev., s. 1826; C.S., s. 2210; 1969, c. 44, s. 42.)

CASE NOTES

When Illegal Imprisonment Appears on Appeal or Certiorari. — If a case comes before the Supreme Court by appeal, or by certiorari, and upon the trial it appears that the prisoner was suffering an illegal confinement in the penitentiary, it would be the duty of that court, by virtue of its supervisory power, and of this section, enacted to carry into effect this constitutional power of the Supreme Court, to issue the writ of habeas corpus, even of its own motion, and discharge the prisoner. In re Schenck, 74 N.C. 607 (1876).

ARTICLE 3.

Writ.

§ 17-9. Writ granted without delay.

Any court or judge empowered to grant the writ, to whom such applications may be presented, shall grant the writ without delay, unless it appear from the application itself or from the documents annexed that the person applying or for whose benefit it is intended is, by this Chapter, prohibited from prosecuting the writ. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 6; Code, s. 1628; Rev., s. 1827; C.S., s. 2211.)

CASE NOTES

Duty of Court to Issue. — There can be no doubt of the duty and power of the court to issue the writ of habeas corpus when applied for in accordance with statutory provisions. In re Boyett, 136 N.C. 415, 48 S.E. 789 (1904).

§ 17-10. Penalty for refusal to grant.

If any judge authorized by this Chapter to grant writs of habeas corpus refuses to grant such writ when legally applied for, every such judge shall forfeit to the party aggrieved two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500). (1868-9, c. 116, s. 9; Code, s. 1631; Rev., s. 1828; C.S., s. 2212.)

CASE NOTES

The writ of habeas corpus always issues when legally applied for, because this section subjects a judge who refuses to entertain the petition to a penalty of $2,500. In re Croom, 175 N.C. 455, 95 S.E. 903 (1918).

Cited in McEachern v. McEachern, 210 N.C. 98, 185 S.E. 684 (1936).

§ 17-11. Sufficiency of writ; defects of form immaterial.

No writ of habeas corpus shall be disobeyed on account of any defect of form. It shall be sufficient —

(1) If the person having the custody of the party imprisoned or restrained be designated either by his name of office, if he have any, or by his own name, or, if both such names be unknown or uncertain, he may be described by an assumed appellation, and anyone who may be served with the writ shall be deemed the person to whom it is directed, although it may be directed to him by a wrong name, or description, or to another person.

(2) If the person who is directed to be produced be designated by name, or if his name be uncertain or unknown, he may be described by an assumed appellation or in any other way, so as to designate the person intended. (1868-9, c. 116, ss. 7, 8; Code, ss. 1629, 1630; Rev., s. 1829; C.S., s. 2213.)

§ 17-12. Service of writ.

The writ of habeas corpus may be served by any qualified elector of this State thereto authorized by the court or judge allowing the same. It may be served by delivering the writ, or a copy thereof, to the person to whom it is directed; or, if such person cannot be found, by leaving it, or a copy, at the jail, or other place in which the party for whose relief it is intended is confined, with some under officer or other person of proper age; or, if none such can be found, or if the person attempting to serve the writ be refused admittance, by affixing a copy thereof in some conspicuous place on the outside, either of the dwelling house of the party to whom the writ is directed or of the place where the party is confined for whose relief it is sued out. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 32; Code, s. 1657; Rev., s. 1833; C.S., s. 2214.)

Article 4.

Return.

§ 17-13. When writ returnable.

Writs of habeas corpus may be made returnable at a certain time, or forthwith, as the case may require. If the writ be returnable at a certain time, such return shall be made and the party shall be produced at the time and place specified therein. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 31; Code, s. 1656; Rev., s. 1830; C.S., s. 2215.)

§ 17-14. Contents of return; verification.

The person or officer on whom the writ is served must make a return thereto in writing, and, except where such person is a sworn public officer and makes his return in his official capacity, it must be verified by his oath. The return must state plainly and unequivocally —

(1) Whether he has or has not the party in his custody or under his power or restraint.

(2) If he has the party in his custody or power, or under his restraint, the authority and the cause of such imprisonment or restraint, setting forth the same at large.

(3) If the party is detained by virtue of any writ, warrant, or other written authority, a copy thereof shall be annexed to the return; and the original shall be produced and exhibited on the return of the writ to the court or judge before whom the same is returnable.

(4) If the person or officer upon whom such writ is served has had the party in his power or custody, or under his restraint, at any time prior or subsequent to the date of the writ, but has transferred such custody or restraint to another, the return shall state particularly to whom, at what time, for what cause and by what authority such transfer took place. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 11; Code, s. 1633; Rev., s. 1831; C.S., s. 2216.)

§ 17-15. Production of body if required.

If the writ requires it, the officer or person on whom the same has been served shall also produce the body of the party in his custody or power, according to the command of the writ, except in the case of the sickness of such party, as hereinafter provided. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 14; Code, s. 1636; Rev., s. 1832; C.S., s. 2217.)

Article 5.

Enforcement of Writ.

§ 17-16. Attachment for failure to obey.

If the person or officer on whom any writ of habeas corpus has been duly served refuses or neglects to obey the same, by producing the body of the party named or described therein, and by making a full and explicit return thereto, within the time required, and no sufficient excuse is shown for such refusal or neglect, it is the duty of the court or judge before whom the writ has been made returnable, upon due proof of the service thereof, forthwith to issue an attachment against such person or officer, directed to the sheriff of any county within this State, and commanding him forthwith to apprehend such person or officer and bring him immediately before such court or judge. On being so brought such person or officer shall be committed to close custody in the jail of the county where such court or judge may be, without being allowed the liberties thereof, until such person or officer make return to such writ and comply with any order that may be made by such court or judge in relation to the party for whose relief the writ has been issued. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 15; Code, s. 1637; Rev., s. 1834; C.S., s. 2218.)

CASE NOTES

Section Intended to Compel Return and Not to Punish. — The attachment warranted by this section does not rest on the idea of punishing for a contempt of the judge, or court, but of compelling a return to the writ and a production of a body. It is a substitute for the provision in the old Habeas Corpus Act, which punished the officer or person refusing or neglecting to make due return, "upon conviction by indictment," with a fine of $500 for the first offense, and of $1,000, and incapacity to hold office, for the second. Ex parte Moore, 64 N.C. appx. 802 (1870). See also Ex parte Kerr, 64 N.C. appx. 816 (1870).

No Power to Arrest Governor. — Under the Habeas Corpus Act, a judge has no power to order the arrest of the Governor of the State. Ex parte Moore, 64 N.C. appx. 802 (1870).

Excuse for Refusal to Make Return. — Where a military officer detaining persons arrested in counties declared by the Governor to be in a state of insurrection, answered to a writ of habeas corpus, that he held them under the orders of the Governor, who had also ordered him not to obey the writ, it was held that such return was a sufficient excuse, under this section, and, therefore, that such officer was not liable to be attached. Ex parte Moore, 64 N.C. appx. 802 (1870).

Cited in Ocean Hill Joint Venture v. North Carolina Dep't of Environment, Health & Natural Resources, 333 N.C. 318, 426 S.E.2d 274 (1993).

§ 17-17. Liability of judge refusing attachment.

If any judge willfully refuses to grant the writ of attachment, as provided for in G.S. 17-16, he shall be liable to impeachment, and moreover shall forfeit to the party aggrieved twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500). (1870-1, c. 221, s. 2; Code, s. 1638; Rev., s. 1835; C.S., s. 2219.)

§ 17-18. Attachment against sheriff to be directed to coroner; procedure.

If a sheriff has neglected to return the writ agreeably to the command thereof, the attachment against him may be directed to the coroner or to any other person to be designated therein, who shall have power to execute the same, and such sheriff, upon being brought up, may be committed to the jail of any county other than his own. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 16; Code, s. 1639; Rev., s. 1836; C.S., s. 2220.)

Cross References. — As to requirement of coroner to act for sheriff in certain cases, see § 152-8.

§ 17-19. Precept to bring up party detained.

The court or judge by whom any such attachment may be issued may also at the same time, or afterwards, direct a precept to any sheriff, coroner, or other person to be designated therein, commanding him to bring forthwith before such court or judge the party, wherever to be found, for whose benefit the writ of habeas corpus has been granted. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 17; Code, s. 1640; Rev., s. 1837; C.S., s. 2221.)

§ 17-20. Liability of judge refusing precept.

If any judge refuses to grant the precept provided for in G.S. 17-19, he shall be liable to impeachment, and moreover shall forfeit to the party aggrieved twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500). (1870-1, c. 221, s. 3; Code, s. 1641; Rev., s. 1838; C.S., s. 2222.)

§ 17-21. Liability of judge conniving at insufficient return.

If any judge grants the attachment, or the precept, and gives the officer or other person charged with the execution of the same verbal or written instructions not to execute the same, or to make any evasive or insufficient return, or any return other than that provided by law; or shall connive at the failing to make any return or any evasive or insufficient return, or any return other than that provided by law, he shall be liable to impeachment, and moreover shall forfeit to the party aggrieved twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500). (1870-1, c. 221, s. 4; Code, s. 1642; Rev., s. 1839; C.S., s. 2223.)

§ 17-22. Power of county to aid service.

In the execution of any such attachment, precept or writ, the sheriff, coroner, or other person to whom it may be directed, may call to his aid the power of the county, as in other cases. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 18; Code, s. 1643; Rev., s. 1840; C.S., s. 2224.)

CASE NOTES

Posse comitatus discussed. — See Worth v. Commissioners of Craven County, 118 N.C. 112, 24 S.E. 778 (1896).

Power of the county, or "posse comitatus," means the men of the county in which the writ is to be executed. Ex parte Moore, 64 N.C. appx. 802 (1870).

§ 17-23. Obedience to order of discharge compelled.

Obedience to a judgment or order for the discharge of a prisoner or person restrained of his liberty, pursuant to the provisions of this Chapter, may be enforced by the court or judge by attachment in the same manner and with the same effect as for a neglect to make return to a writ of habeas corpus; and the person found guilty of such disobedience shall forfeit to the party aggrieved two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500), besides any special damages which such party may have sustained. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 24; Code, s. 1649; Rev., s. 1841; C.S., s. 2225.)

§ 17-24. No civil liability for obedience.

No officer or other person shall be liable to any civil action for obeying a judgment or order of discharge upon writ of habeas corpus. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 25; Code, s. 1650; Rev., s. 1842; C.S., s. 2226.)

§ 17-25. Recommittal after discharge; penalty.

If any person shall knowingly again imprison or detain one who has been set at large upon any writ of habeas corpus, for the same cause, other than by the legal process or order of the court wherein he is bound by recognizance to appear, or of any other court having jurisdiction in the case, he shall be guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 26; Code, s. 1651; Rev., s. 3581; C.S., s. 2227; 1993, c. 539, s. 306; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c).)

CASE NOTES

When Rearrest Valid. — A party, set at large by writ of habeas corpus, upon the ground that the judgment of imprisonment was void for want of jurisdiction in the court, may be again arrested for the same cause upon legal process of a court having jurisdiction. State ex rel. Barbee v. Weatherspoon, 88 N.C. 19 (1883).

§ 17-26. Disobedience to writ or refusing copy of process; penalty.

If any person to whom a writ of habeas corpus is directed shall neglect or refuse to make due return thereto, or to bring the body of the party detained according to the command of the writ without delay, or shall not, within six hours after demand made therefor, deliver a copy of the commitment or cause of detainer, such person shall, upon conviction on indictment, be fined one thousand dollars ($1,000), or imprisoned not exceeding 12 months, and if such person be an officer, shall moreover be removed from office. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 27; Code, s. 1652; Rev., s. 3597; C.S., s. 2228.)

§ 17-27. Penalty for false return.

If any person shall make a false return to a writ of habeas corpus, he shall be guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 28; Code, s. 1653; Rev., s. 3582; C.S., s. 2229; 1993, c. 539, s. 307; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c).)

§ 17-28. Penalty for concealing party entitled to writ.

If anyone having in his custody, or under his power, any party who, by law, would be entitled to a writ of habeas corpus, or for whose relief such writ shall have been issued, shall, with intent to elude the service of such writ, or to avoid the effect thereof, transfer the party to the custody, or put him under the power or control, of another, or shall conceal or change the place of his confinement, or shall knowingly aid or abet another in so doing, he shall be guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor. (1868-9, c. 116, ss. 29, 30; Code, ss. 1654, 1655; Rev., s. 3583; C.S., s. 2230; 1993, c. 539, s. 308; 1994, Ex. Sess., c. 24, s. 14(c).)

Article 6.

Proceedings and Judgment.

§ 17-29. Notice to interested parties.

When it appears from the return to the writ that the party named therein is in custody on any process, or by reason of any claim of right, under which any other person has an interest in continuing his imprisonment or restraint, no order shall be made for his discharge until it appears that the person so interested, or his attorney, if he have one, has had reasonable notice of the time and place at which such writ is returnable. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 12; 1870-1, c. 221, s. 1; Code, s. 1634; Rev., s. 1843; C.S., s. 2231.)

§ 17-30. Notice to district attorney.

When it appears from the return that such party is detained upon any criminal accusation, the court or judge may, if he thinks proper, make no order for the discharge of such party until sufficient notice of the time and place at which the writ has been returned, or is made returnable, is given to the district attorney of the district in which the person prosecuting the writ is detained. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 13; Code, s. 1635; Rev., s. 1844; C.S., s. 2232; 1973, c. 47, s. 2.)

CASE NOTES

Hearing May Be Continued. — If it appears from the return on a writ of habeas corpus that the petitioner is detained on a criminal charge, the court may continue the hearing for a reasonable time to give the solicitor (now district attorney) an opportunity to examine into the case. State v. Jones, 113 N.C. 669, 18 S.E. 249 (1893).

§ 17-31. Subpoenas to witnesses.

Any party to a proceeding on a writ of habeas corpus may procure the attendance of witnesses at the hearing, by subpoena, to be issued by the clerk of any superior court, under the same rules, regulations and penalties prescribed by law in other cases. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 34; Code, s. 1659; Rev., s. 1845; C.S., s. 2233.)

Cross References. — As to issuance of subpoenas, see §§ 7A-103 and 8-59.

§ 17-32. Proceedings on return; facts examined; summary hearing of issues.

The court or judge before whom the party is brought on a writ of habeas corpus shall, immediately after the return thereof, examine into the facts contained in such return, and into the cause of the confinement or restraint of such party, whether the same has been upon commitment for any criminal or supposed criminal matter or not; and if issue be taken upon the material facts in the return, or other facts are alleged to show that the imprisonment or detention is illegal, or that the party imprisoned is entitled to his discharge, the court or judge shall proceed, in a summary way, to hear the allegations and proofs on both sides, and to do what to justice appertains in delivering, bailing or remanding such party. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 19; Code, s. 1644; Rev., s. 1846; C.S., s. 2234.)

CASE NOTES

Proceedings Must Be Summary. — Proceedings under the writ of habeas corpus, which have for their principal object a release of a party from illegal restraint, must necessarily be summary and prompt to be useful, and if an action could be arrested by an appeal, they would lose many of their most beneficial results. State v. Miller, 97 N.C. 451, 1 S.E. 776 (1887).

Hearing Not Perfunctory. — The words of the section preclude the idea that such hearing shall be perfunctory and merely formal. In re Bailey, 203 N.C. 362, 166 S.E. 165 (1932), rev'd on other grounds, 289 U.S. 412, 53 S. Ct. 667, 77 L. Ed. 1292 (1933).

Discretion of Judge. — The quantum of evidence and the number of witnesses to be examined must necessarily be left also to the sound discretion of the judge who hears the writ, and his action in that regard cannot be reviewed. State v. Herndon, 107 N.C. 934, 12 S.E. 268 (1890); In re Bailey, 203 N.C. 362, 166 S.E. 165 (1932), rev'd on other grounds, 289 U.S. 412, 53 S. Ct. 667, 77 L. Ed. 1292 (1933).

Questions Open to Inquiry. — Where the petitioner in habeas corpus proceedings is held under a final sentence of a court, a commitment of contempt or other, the only questions open to inquiry at the hearing are whether on the record the court had jurisdiction of the matter and whether on the facts disclosed in the record and under the law applicable to the case in hand, the court has exceeded its powers in imposing the sentence whereof the petitioner complains. State v. Hooker, 183 N.C. 763, 111 S.E. 351 (1922).

Evidence Not Reviewable. — The Supreme Court cannot review the evidence or other matters in a criminal case in habeas corpus proceedings, but only the jurisdiction of the court and the validity of the judgment which is attacked. State v. Burnette, 173 N.C. 734, 91 S.E. 364 (1917).

When Question of Insanity Presented. — When the petitioner in habeas corpus has been adjudged insane and her detention is ordered by a court of lunacy of another state, the judge of the superior court in this State by whom the proceedings of habeas corpus are heard should determine the validity of the order of the adjudication of insanity when the same is properly presented to him, and this is the determinative question involved, and upon failure to have done so the case will be remanded. In re Chase, 193 N.C. 450, 137 S.E. 305 (1927), cert. denied, 278 U.S. 600, 49 S. Ct. 9, 73 L. Ed. 529 (1928).

Release of Person Committed to State Mental Institution. — A person committed to a State mental institution under Chapter 122 (see now Chapter 122C) was not entitled to invoke the provisions of former § 35-4 for a determination of the restoration of sanity by a jury trial as a condition precedent to his release, the proper remedy being habeas corpus under this section. In re Harris, 241 N.C. 179, 84 S.E.2d 808 (1954).

Hearing Confined to Record. — The hearing is confined to the record and judgment, and relief may be afforded only when on the record itself the judgment is one clearly and manifestly beyond the power of the court, a statement of the doctrine supported in numerous and authoritative decisions here and elsewhere. In re Schenck, 74 N.C. 607 (1876); Ex parte McCown, 139 N.C. 95, 51 S.E. 957 (1905); In re Croom, 175 N.C. 455, 95 S.E. 903 (1918).

Presumption of Innocence and Burden of Proof. — The presumption of innocence applies only on a trial, and does not avail to furnish a presumption that the detention of a party on regular process, when the committing officer has jurisdiction, is illegal; therefore, where, upon the return of a sheriff to a writ of habeas corpus, it appeared that the petitioners were in custody on a mittimus, regular in every way, from a justice of the peace, for failure to give bond for their appearances at the next term of the superior court to answer a criminal charge of which the court had jurisdiction, the detention, nothing else appearing, was clearly legal, and the burden was upon the petitioner to show wherein it was illegal, and not upon the State to show that they were lawfully in custody. State v. Jones, 113 N.C. 669, 18 S.E. 249 (1893).

Petitioner Serving Sentence under Void Judgment Is Entitled to Immediate Release. — Where upon habeas corpus it appears that petitioner is serving a sentence under a void judgment, petitioner is entitled to his immediate release. In re Burton, 257 N.C. 534, 126 S.E.2d 581 (1962).

Review of Denial of Writ. — In habeas corpus proceedings wherein upon the hearing are involved questions of law or legal inference, and judgment is a denial of a legal right, it may be reviewed by the Supreme Court by virtue of the N.C. Const., Art. IV, § 12, under the power given to the court to "issue any remedial writs necessary to give it general supervision and control over the proceedings of inferior courts." In re Holley, 154 N.C. 163, 69 S.E. 872 (1910).

Appeal to the Supreme Court will not lie from the refusal of a superior court judge to discharge the defendant from custody in proceedings in habeas corpus, the remedy being by a petition for a writ of certiorari which is addressed to the sound discretion of the Supreme Court. State v. Burnette, 173 N.C. 734, 91 S.E. 364 (1917); In re Croom, 175 N.C. 455, 95 S.E. 903 (1918).

Writ of Certiorari Proper Remedy. — Where it appears that, upon the return of the writ, the judge declined to hear evidence or investigate the charge, the writ of certiorari should issue. Walton v. Gatlin, 60 N.C. 310 (1864); Ex parte Biggs, 64 N.C. 202 (1870); State v. Jefferson, 66 N.C. 309 (1872); State v. Herndon, 107 N.C. 934, 12 S.E. 268 (1890).

The remedy given under the constitutional power conferred upon the Supreme Court to review a judgment in habeas corpus proceedings in matters not involving the care and custody of children, N.C. Const., Art. IV, § 12, shall only be exercised by certiorari. In re Holley, 154 N.C. 163, 69 S.E. 872 (1910).

When Writ of Certiorari Denied. — A petition for certiorari in the Supreme Court will be denied in habeas corpus proceedings when it appears therefrom that the prisoner is not entitled to his discharge. In re Croom, 175 N.C. 455, 95 S.E. 903 (1918).

If the judge, upon the investigation of the evidence on a petition for habeas corpus, adjudges that there is or is not probable cause, and admits or refuses to admit to bail, no appeal or certiorari lies, either in favor of the State or the petitioner. Walton v. Gatlin, 60 N.C. 310 (1864); State v. Miller, 97 N.C. 451, 1 S.E. 776 (1887); State v. Herndon, 107 N.C. 934, 12 S.E. 268 (1890).

In habeas corpus proceedings, where it appears from the application for certiorari in the Supreme Court, or the documents annexed thereto, that the petition is determined under a final judgment of a competent tribunal, the writ will be denied in the Supreme Court. In re Holley, 154 N.C. 163, 69 S.E. 872 (1910).

Proceeding Where Judgment Reversed. — If, upon certiorari, the court reverses and sets aside the judgment of the court below, and the proceedings are remanded, no procedendo issues to any particular judge, but the petitioner can exercise his statutory right to apply, de novo, to any judge authorized to grant the writ of habeas corpus. State v. Herndon, 107 N.C. 934, 12 S.E. 268 (1890).

Judicial Review of Questions of Law. — In deciding questions which arise under writs of habeas corpus the judiciary may review and control the action of the Governor in regard to points of law; but cannot interfere with such action in regard to any matter within the discretion of the Governor. In re Hughes, 61 N.C. 57 (1867).

§ 17-33. When party discharged.

If no legal cause is shown for such imprisonment or restraint, or for the continuance thereof, the court or judge shall discharge the party from the custody or restraint under which he is held. But if it appears on the return to the writ that the party is in custody by virtue of civil process from any court legally constituted, or issued by any officer in the course of judicial proceedings before him, authorized by law, such party can be discharged only in one of the following cases:

(1) Where the jurisdiction of such court or officer has been exceeded, either as to matter, place, sum or person.

(2) Where, though the original imprisonment was lawful, yet by some act, omission or event, which has taken place afterwards, the party has become entitled to be discharged.

(3) Where the process is defective in some matter of substance required by law, rendering such process void.

(4) Where the process, though in proper form, has been issued in a case not allowed by law.

(5) Where the person, having the custody of the party under such process, is not the person empowered by law to detain him.

(6) Where the process is not authorized by any judgment, order or decree of any court, nor by any provision of law. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 20; Code, s. 1645; Rev., s. 1847; C.S., s. 2235.)

CASE NOTES

Sentence Partly Void. — Where a prisoner is detained by virtue of a sentence in part valid and part otherwise, he may not be liberated on habeas corpus until he shall have served the valid portion of his sentence, and he shall be remanded when it appears that the time during which he may legally be detained has not expired. State v. Hooker, 183 N.C. 763, 11 S.E. 351 (1922).

Internal Correctional Policy Is Administrative Matter. — The difficult problems of when a person should be released and under what circumstances turn on analysis of internal correctional policy, and rightfully lie within the sole administrative jurisdiction of State governmental departments, and are not, barring a clear instance of constitutional infirmity, subjects appropriate for judicial scrutiny. In re Stevens, 28 N.C. App. 471, 221 S.E.2d 839 (1976).

In practical terms, the questions of grade of conduct, privileges, disciplinary action and commendations are strictly administrative and not judicial matters. In re Stevens, 28 N.C. App. 471, 221 S.E.2d 839 (1976).

Adverse Administrative Decision as to Correctional Status. — Where defendant, a youthful offender, was unsatisfied with an essentially administrative determination whereby his correctional status was affected adversely, diminishing his prospect for an early release, standing by itself, raises no habeas corpus question. In re Stevens, 28 N.C. App. 471, 221 S.E.2d 839 (1976).

Recovery from a mental disease after commitment to an institution would seem to be an event "which has taken place afterwards," within the meaning of subdivision (2) of this section, entitling an inmate to discharge under § 17-32. In re Harris, 241 N.C. 179, 84 S.E.2d 808 (1954).

Imprisonment for Contempt. — In a case of imprisonment for contempt, where the court states the facts upon which it proceeds, a reviewing tribunal may, on a habeas corpus, discharge the party if it appears plainly that the facts do not amount to a contempt. State v. Queen, 91 N.C. 659 (1884).

Petitioner's relief for rescission of his Mutual Agreement Parole Program (M.A.P.P.) contract had to come through administrative procedures before the Division of Prisons and the Parole Commission; habeas corpus was not appropriate for obtaining judicial review of the Parole Commission's decision, absent a clear violation of constitutional rights. Freeman v. Johnson, 92 N.C. App. 109, 373 S.E.2d 565 (1988).

State Cannot Appeal Order of Discharge. — The State cannot appeal from an order in habeas corpus proceedings discharging from imprisonment one convicted of crime. Proceedings in habeas corpus, the object of which is to release a person from illegal restraint, must necessarily be summary to be useful, and if action could be arrested by an appeal upon the part of the State, the great writ of liberty would be deprived of its most beneficial results. State v. Miller, 97 N.C. 451, 1 S.E. 776 (1887); In re Williams, 149 N.C. 436, 63 S.E. 108 (1908).

Quoted in Hoffman v. Edwards, 48 N.C. App. 559, 269 S.E.2d 311 (1980).

§ 17-34. When party remanded.

It is the duty of the court or judge forthwith to remand the party, if it appears that he is detained in custody, either —

(1) By virtue of process issued by any court or judge of the United States, in a case where such court or judge has exclusive jurisdiction.

(2) By virtue of the final judgment or decree of any competent court of civil or criminal jurisdiction, or of any execution issued upon such judgment or decree.

(3) For any contempt specially and plainly charged in the commitment by some court, officer or body having authority to commit for the contempt so charged.

(4) That the time during which such party may be legally detained has not expired. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 21; Code, s. 1646; Rev., s. 1848; C.S., s. 2236.)

CASE NOTES

Applied in In re Croom, 175 N.C. 455, 95 S.E. 903 (1918).

§ 17-35. When the party bailed or remanded.

If it appears that the party has been legally committed for any criminal offense, or if it appears by the testimony offered with the return of the writ, or upon the hearing thereof, that the party is guilty of such an offense, although the commitment is irregular, the court or judge shall proceed to let such party to bail, if the case is bailable and good bail is offered; if not, the court or judge shall forthwith remand such party to the custody or place him under the restraint from which he was taken, if the person or officer, under whose custody or restraint he was, is legally entitled thereto; if not so entitled, the court or judge shall commit such party to the custody of the officer or person legally entitled thereto. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 22; Code, s. 1647; Rev., s. 1849; C.S., s. 2237.)

CASE NOTES

When Person Admitted to Bail. — A prisoner may be admitted to bail in a habeas corpus proceeding if the trial judge determines that the prisoner is so entitled. State v. Parks, 290 N.C. 748, 228 S.E.2d 248 (1976).

No Discharge after Indictment. — Of course, after indictment found, the judge cannot absolutely discharge the prisoner in any case, however clear a case of innocence may be made out, but must require his appearance at the next term of court. State v. Herndon, 107 N.C. 934, 12 S.E. 268 (1890).

Judge May Admit Person Charged to Bail. — Any person charged (but not convicted) of any crime whatever may be admitted to bail if the judge, upon hearing the testimony upon a writ of habeas corpus, adjudges that, upon the facts developed, the petitioner is entitled to be released on bail. State v. Herndon, 107 N.C. 934, 12 S.E. 268 (1890).

Court May Hold Person to Bail Although Sentence Invalid. — Although a sentence is not valid the defendant may not be unconditionally released, as the court may hold him to bail. State v. Burnette, 173 N.C. 734, 91 S.E. 364 (1917).

§ 17-36. Party held in execution not to be discharged.

When a writ of habeas corpus cum causa issues and the sheriff or other officer to whom it is directed returns upon the same that the prisoner is condemned, by judgment given against him, and held in custody by virtue of an execution issued against him, the prisoner shall not be let to bail but shall be presently remanded, where he shall remain until discharged in due course of law. (2 Hen. V, c. 2; R.C., c. 31, s. 111; Code, s. 937; Rev., s. 1850; C.S., s. 2238.)

§ 17-37. When party ill, cause determined in his absence.

When, from the illness or infirmity of the person directed to be produced by a writ of habeas corpus, such person cannot, without danger, be brought before the court or judge where the writ is made returnable, the party in whose custody he is may state the fact in his return to the writ; and if the court or judge is satisfied of the truth of the allegation, and the return is otherwise sufficient, the court or judge shall proceed to decide on such return and to dispose of the matter in the same manner as if the body had been produced. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 23; Code, s. 1648; Rev., s. 1851; C.S., s. 2239.)

§ 17-38. No second committal after discharge; penalty.

No person who has been set at large upon any writ of habeas corpus shall be again imprisoned or detained for the same cause by any person whatsoever other than by the legal order or process of the court wherein he shall be bound by recognizance to appear or of any other court having jurisdiction in the case, under the penalty of two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500) to the party aggrieved thereby. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 26; Code, s. 1651; Rev., s. 1852; C.S., s. 2240.)

CASE NOTES

Surrender by Sureties. — Where the defendant was not originally liable to arrest and had been discharged upon habeas corpus, he cannot be held upon a surrender by his sureties. Ledford v. Emerson, 143 N.C. 527, 55 S.E. 969 (1906).

When Rearrest Permissible. — According to the express terms of this section, a party once discharged may be again arrested and imprisoned for the same cause, provided it be done by the legal order or process of a court of competent jurisdiction. State v. Weatherspoon, 88 N.C. 19 (1883).

Article 8.

Habeas Corpus Ad Testificandum.

§ 17-41. Authority to issue the writ.

Every court of record has power, upon the application of any party to any suit or proceeding, civil or criminal, pending in such court, to issue a writ of habeas corpus, for the purpose of bringing before the said court any prisoner who may be detained in any jail or prison within the State, for any cause, except a prisoner under sentence for a capital felony, to be examined as a witness in such suit or proceeding in behalf of the party making the application.

Such writ of habeas corpus may be issued by any magistrate or clerk of the superior court, upon application as provided in this section, to bring any person confined in the jail or prison of the same county where such magistrate or clerk may reside, to be examined as a witness before such magistrate or clerk.

In cases where the testimony of any prisoner is needed in a proceeding before a magistrate, or a clerk, and such person is confined in a county in which such magistrate or clerk does not reside, application for habeas corpus to testify may be made to any justice or judge of the General Court of Justice. (1868-9, c. 116, ss. 37, 38; Code, ss. 1663, 1664; Rev., ss. 1855, 1856; C.S., s. 2243; 1969, c. 44, s. 43; 1971, c. 528, s. 3.)

CASE NOTES

Inherent Power of Court. — The right to bring a person, whose presence is necessary, before a court for the exercise of its powers is inherent in every court of general jurisdiction, and its exercise is essential to the preservation of its power and dignity. State v. Hoskins, 77 N.C. 530 (1877); Harkins v. Cathey, 119 N.C. 649, 26 S.E. 136 (1896).

Section Inapplicable to State. — This section applies only to parties strictly so called, and not to the State. Ex parte Harris, 73 N.C. 65 (1875), citing State v. Adair, 68 N.C. 68 (1873).

Murderer Is Competent Witness. — One who has been convicted of murder, and is under sentence of death, is a competent witness; and the solicitor (now district attorney) for the State is entitled to a habeas corpus to bring such condemned prisoner into court for the purpose of testifying before the grand jury. Ex parte Harris, 73 N.C. 65 (1875).

Objection to Convicted Witness Untenable. — When the State has procured the attendance of a witness under sentence of death, the objection by the defendant that he could not be procured by writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum under this section is untenable, this not applying to the State; nor will objection avail that the time set for the execution had passed, and the witness, being dead in the eyes of the law, could not testify, the witness having been present and having testified. State v. Jones, 176 N.C. 702, 97 S.E. 32 (1918).

Applied in State v. Rankin, 312 N.C. 592, 324 S.E.2d 224 (1985).

§ 17-42. Contents of application.

The application for the writ shall be made by the party to the suit or proceeding in which the writ is required, or by his agent or attorney. It must be verified by the applicant; and shall state —

(1) The title and nature of the suit or proceeding in regard to which the testimony of such prisoner is desired.

(2) That the testimony of such prisoner is material and necessary to such party on the trial or hearing of such suit or proceeding, as he is advised by counsel and verily believes. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 39; Code, s. 1665; Rev., s. 1857; C.S., s. 2244.)

CASE NOTES

Applied in State v. Rankin, 312 N.C. 592, 324 S.E.2d 224 (1985).

§ 17-43. Service of writ.

The writ of habeas corpus to testify shall be served by the same person, and in like manner in all respects, and enforced by the court or officer issuing the same as prescribed in this Chapter for the service and enforcement of the writ of habeas corpus cum causa. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 40; Code, s. 1666; Rev., s. 1858; C.S., s. 2245.)

§ 17-44. Applicant to pay expenses and give bond to return.

The service of the writ shall not be complete, however, unless the applicant for the same tenders to the person in whose custody the prisoner may be, if such person is a sheriff, coroner, or marshal, the fees and expenses allowed by law for bringing such prisoner, nor unless he also gives bond, with sufficient security, to such sheriff, coroner, or marshal, as the case may be, conditioned that such applicant will pay the charges of carrying back such prisoner. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 41; Code, s. 1667; Rev., s. 1859; C.S., s. 2246; 1971, c. 528, s. 4.)

§ 17-45. Duty of officer to whom writ delivered or on whom served.

It is the duty of the officer to whom the writ is delivered or upon whom it is served, whether such writ is directed to him or not, upon payment or tender of the charges allowed by law, and the delivery or tender of the bond herein prescribed, to obey and return such writ according to the exigency thereof upon pain, on refusal or neglect, to forfeit to the party on whose application the same has been issued the sum of five hundred dollars ($500.00). (1868-9, c. 116, s. 42; Code, s. 1668; Rev., s. 1860; C.S., s. 2247.)

§ 17-46. Prisoner to be remanded.

After having testified, the prisoner shall be remanded to the prison from which he was taken. (1868-9, c. 116, s. 43; Code, s. 1669; Rev., s. 1861; C.S., s. 2248.)

Chapter 17C.

North Carolina Criminal Justice Education and Training Standards Commission.

§ 17C-1. Findings and policy.

The General Assembly finds that the administration of criminal justice is of statewide concern, and that proper administration is important to the health, safety and welfare of the people of the State and is of such nature as to require education and training of a professional nature. It is in the public interest that such education and training be made available to persons who seek to become criminal justice officers, persons who are serving as such officers in a temporary or probationary capacity, and persons already in regular service. (1971, c. 963, s. 1; 1979, c. 763, s. 1.)

Editor's Note. — This Chapter is Chapter 17A as rewritten by Session Laws 1979, c. 763, s. 1, effective January 1, 1979, and recodified. Where appropriate, the historical citations to the sections in the former Chapter have been added to corresponding sections in the Chapter as rewritten and recodified.

Session Laws 1983, c. 558, s. 6, provides that the provisions of Chapter 17C as they pertain to sheriffs and their deputies shall no longer apply. For provisions relating to the North Carolina Sheriffs' Education and Training Standards Commission, see now § 17E-1 et seq.

Certain Private Correctional Officers Authorized to Use Force and Make Arrests. —

Session Laws 2001-378, ss. 1 to 7, provide: "Section 1. Correctional officers and security supervisors employed at private correctional facilities pursuant to a contract between their employer and the Federal Bureau of Prisons may, in the course of their employment as correctional officers or security supervisors, use necessary force and make arrests consistent with the laws applicable to the North Carolina Department of Correction, which force shall not exceed that authorized to Department of Correction officers, provided that the Department of Correction determines that as of the effective date of this act, the employment policies of such private corporations meet the same minimum standards and practices followed by the Department of Correction in employing its correctional personnel, and if:

"(1) Those correctional officers and security supervisors have been certified as correctional officers as provided under Chapter 17C of the General Statutes; or

"(2) Those correctional officers and security supervisors employed by the private corporation at the facility have completed a training curriculum that the Department of Correction has determined meets or exceeds the standards required by the North Carolina Criminal Justice Education and Training Standards Commission for correctional personnel. The Department may require that it be notified of the names and positions of such persons prior to such persons beginning duties at the correctional facility, and the names and positions of those persons already employed at the correctional facility on the effective date of this act [August 18, 2001] and that the Department be notified when any such person is no longer employed in such duties at the correctional facility.

"Section 2. Any private corporation described in Section 1 of this act shall without limit defend, indemnify, and hold harmless the State, its officers, employees, and agents from any claims arising out of the operation of the private correctional facility, or the granting of the powers authorized under this act, including any attorneys' fees or other legal costs incurred by the State, its officers, employees, or agents as a result of such claims.

"Section 2.1. Any private corporation described in Section 1 of this act shall reimburse the State and any county or other law enforcement agency for the full cost of any additional expenses incurred by the State or the county or other law enforcement agency in connection with the pursuit and apprehension of an escaped inmate from the facility.

"In the event of an escape from the facility, any private corporation described in Section 1 of this act shall immediately notify the sheriff in the county in which the facility is located and shall notify the Department of Correction which shall cause an immediate entry into the State Bureau of Investigation Division of Criminal Information network. The sheriff of the county in which the facility is located shall be the lead law enforcement officer in connection with the pursuit and apprehension of an escaped inmate from the facility."

"Section 3. Any private corporation described in Section 1 of this act must maintain in force liability insurance to satisfy any final judgment rendered against the private corporation or the State, its officers, employees, and agents that arises out of the operation of the correctional facility or the indemnification requirements in Section 2 of this act. The minimum amount of liability insurance that will be required under this section is ten million dollars ($10,000,000) per occurrence, and twenty-five million dollars ($25,000,000) aggregate per occurrence. The private corporation shall ensure that its insurance company shall provide the Department of Correction with a current Certificate of Insurance evidencing compliance with the requirements of this section within 10 days of the effective date of this act [August 18, 2001] and annually thereafter.

"Section 4. The Department of Correction shall adopt rules to implement the provisions of this act.

"Section 5. The authority set forth in this act to use necessary force and make arrests shall be in addition to any existing authority set forth in the statutory or common law of the State, but shall not exceed the authority to use necessary force and make arrests set out in Section 1 of this act.

"Section 6. A private corporation described in Section 1 of this act shall bear the reasonable costs of services provided by the Department of Correction for the corporation. The amount of the costs shall be determined by the Secretary of the Department.

"Section 7. This act is effective when it becomes law [August 18, 2001], applies to private correctional facilities and the employees of those correctional facilities constructed and contracted to be operated by the effective date of this act [August 18, 2001], and expires two years after the effective date."

CASE NOTES

Legislative Intent. — The intent of the Legislature in enacting Chapter 17C was to enhance the criminal justice profession through mandated education, training and standards regarding character and moral fitness. Mullins v. North Carolina Criminal Justice Educ. & Training Stds. Comm'n, 125 N.C. App. 339, 481 S.E.2d 297 (1997).

Purpose and Intent. — To effectuate the legislative mandate of establishing qualifications for citizenship, good moral character, competence and reliability, the Commission considered what conduct it deemed unacceptable for criminal justice officers and those aspiring to join the criminal justice profession and incorporated the conduct deemed egregious by society by referencing the criminal laws in the administrative rules. Mullins v. North Carolina Criminal Justice Educ. & Training Stds. Comm'n, 125 N.C. App. 339, 481 S.E.2d 297 (1997).

Hearings. — The ability to hold hearings is a power that is reasonably necessary for the Commission to accomplish the purposes for which it was created. It is necessary for the Commission to have a means by which to gather evidence and investigate to determine if individuals are complying with the provisions of Chapter 17C. Mullins v. North Carolina Criminal Justice Educ. & Training Stds. Comm'n, 125 N.C. App. 339, 481 S.E.2d 297 (1997).

CASE NOTES

The ability to hold hearings is a power that is reasonably necessary for the Commission to accomplish the purposes for which it was created. It is necessary for the Commission to have a means by which to gather evidence and investigate to determine if individuals are complying with the provisions of Chapter 17C. Mullins v. North Carolina Criminal Justice Educ. & Training Stds. Comm'n, 125 N.C. App. 339, 481 S.E.2d 297 (1997).

(a) The Attorney General shall provide such staff assistance as the Commission shall require in the performance of its duties.

(b) The Attorney General shall have legal custody of all books, papers, documents, or other records and property of the Commission.

(c) Any papers, documents, or other records which become the property of the Commission that are placed in the criminal justice officer's personnel file maintained by the Commission shall be subject to the same disclosure requirements as set forth in Chapters 126, 153A, and 160A of the General Statutes regarding the privacy of personnel records. (1979, c. 763, s. 1; 1989, c. 757, s. 5.)

§ 17C-8. System established.

The North Carolina Criminal Justice Education and Training Standards Commission shall establish a North Carolina Criminal Justice Education and Training System. The system shall be a cooperative arrangement among criminal justice agencies, both State and local, and criminal justice education and youth development centers, both public and private, to provide education and training to the officers and employees of the criminal justice agencies of the State of North Carolina and its local governments. Members of the system shall include the North Carolina Justice Academy as well as such other public or private agencies or institutions within the State, that are engaged in criminal justice education and training, and desire to be affiliated with the system for the purpose of achieving greater coordination of criminal justice education and training efforts in North Carolina. (1979, c. 763, s. 1.)

§ 17C-9. Criminal Justice Standards Division of the Department of Justice established; appointment of director; duties.

(a) There is hereby established, within the Department of Justice, the Criminal Justice Standards Division, hereinafter called "the Division," which shall be organized and staffed in accordance with applicable laws and regulations and within the limits of authorized appropriations.

(b) The Attorney General shall appoint a director for the Division chosen from a list of three nominees submitted to him by the Commission who shall be responsible to and serve at the pleasure of the Attorney General and the Commission.

(c) The Division shall administer such programs as are assigned to it by the Commission. The Division shall also administer such additional related programs as may be assigned to it by the Attorney General or the General Assembly. Administrative duties and responsibilities shall include, but are not limited to, the following:

(1) Administering any and all programs assigned to the Division by the Commission and reporting any violations of or deviations from the rules and regulations of the Commission as the Commission may require;

(2) Compiling data, developing reports, identifying needs and performing research relevant to beneficial improvement of the criminal justice agencies;

(3) Developing new and revising existing programs for adoption consideration by the Commission;

(4) Monitoring and evaluating programs of the Commission;

(5) Providing technical assistance to relevant agencies of the criminal justice system to aid them in the discharge of program participation and responsibilities;

(6) Disseminating information on Commission programs to concerned agencies and/or individuals;

(7) Taking such other actions as may be deemed necessary or appropriate to carry out its assigned duties and responsibilities;

(8) The director may divulge any information in the Division's personnel file of a criminal justice officer or applicant for certification to the head of the criminal justice agency employing the officer or considering the applicant for employment when the director deems it necessary and essential to the retention or employment of said officer or applicant. The information may be divulged whether or not such information was contained in a personnel file maintained by a State or by a local government agency. (1979, c. 763, s. 1; 1983, c. 807, s. 4.)

§ 17C-10. Required standards.

(a) Criminal justice officers shall not be required to meet any requirement of subsections (b) and (c) of this section as a condition of continued employment, nor shall failure of any such criminal justice officer to fulfill such requirements make him ineligible for any promotional examination for which he is otherwise eligible if the criminal justice officer held a permanent appointment prior to June 1, 1986, and is an officer, supervisor or administrator of a local confinement facility; prior to March 15, 1973, and is a sworn law enforcement officer with power of arrest; prior to January 1, 1974, and is a State adult correctional officer; prior to July 1, 1975, and is a State probation/parole officer; prior to July 1, 1974, and is a State youth services officer; prior to January 15, 1980, and is a State probation/parole intake officer, prior to April 1, 1983, and is a State parole case analyst; prior to December 14, 1983, and is a State probation/parole officer-surveillance; or prior to February 1, 1987, and is a State probation/parole intensive officer.

The legislature finds, and it is declared to be the policy of this Chapter, that such criminal justice officers have satisfied such entry level requirements by their experience. It is the intent of the Chapter that all criminal justice officers employed at the entry level after the Commission has adopted the required standards shall meet the requirements of this Chapter. All criminal justice officers who are exempted from the required entry level standards by this subsection shall be subject thereafter to the requirements of subsections (b) and (c) of this section as well as the requirements of G.S. 17C-6(a) in order to retain certification.

If any criminal justice officer exempted from the required standards by this provision fails to serve as a criminal justice officer for a 12-month period, said officer shall be required to comply with the required entry level standards established by the Commission pursuant to the authority otherwise granted in this section and in G.S. 17C-6(a).

(b) The Commission shall provide, by regulation, for a period of probationary employment and certification for criminal justice officers. The Commission may prescribe such training requirements as are required for the award of either probationary or permanent certification of officers, in addition to the pre-employment requirements authorized in G.S. 17C-6(a). Any criminal justice officer appointed on a temporary or probationary basis who does not comply with the training provisions of this Chapter is not authorized to exercise the powers of a criminal justice officer to include the power of arrest. If, however, a criminal justice officer has enrolled in a Commission-approved preparatory program of training that concludes later than the end of the officer's probationary period, and the Commission does not require such training to be completed prior to the award of probationary certification, the Commission may extend, for good cause shown, the probationary period for a period not to exceed six months.

Upon separation of a criminal justice officer from a criminal justice agency within the prescribed period of temporary or probationary appointment, the officer's probationary certification shall be terminated by the Commission. Upon the reappointment to the same agency or appointment to another criminal justice agency of an officer who has separated from an agency within the probationary period, the officer shall be charged with the cumulative amount of time served during his initial or subsequent appointments and allowed the remainder of the probationary period to complete the Commission's requirements. Upon reappointment to the same agency or appointment to another agency of an officer who has separated from an agency within the probationary period and who has remained out of service for more than one year after the date of separation, the officer shall be allowed another probationary period to satisfy the Commission's requirements.

(c) In addition to the requirements of subsection (b) of this section, the Commission, by rules and regulations, shall fix other qualifications for the employment, training, and retention of criminal justice officers including minimum age, education, physical and mental standards, citizenship, good moral character, experience, and such other matters as relate to the competence and reliability of persons to assume and discharge the responsibilities of criminal justice officers, and the Commission shall prescribe the means for presenting evidence of fulfillment of these requirements.

Where minimum educational standards are not met, yet the individual shows potential and a willingness to achieve the standards by extra study, they may be waived by the Commission for the reasonable amount of time it will take to achieve the standards required. Such an educational waiver shall not exceed 12 months.

(d) The Commission may issue a certificate evidencing satisfaction of the requirements of subsections (b) and (c) of this section to any applicant who presents such evidence as may be required by its rules and regulations of satisfactory completion of a program or course of instruction in another jurisdiction equivalent in content and quality to that required by the Commission for approved criminal justice education and training programs in this State. (1971, c. 963, s. 1; 1979, c. 763, s. 1; 1981, c. 8; c. 400; 1983, c. 745, s. 3; 1989, c. 757, s. 6.)

CASE NOTES

Hearings. — The ability to hold hearings is a power that is reasonably necessary for the Commission to accomplish the purposes for which it was created. It is necessary for the Commission to have a means by which to gather evidence and investigate to determine if individuals are complying with the provisions of Chapter 17C. Mullins v. OPINIONS OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Salary Continuation Plan. — If an employee is in a position which (1) requires certification by the Criminal Justice Education and Training Standards Commission, and (2) is within a category listed in § 143-166.13 as defined by the Commission, the employee is covered by the Salary Continuation Plan covered by that section. Otherwise, the employee is not covered. See opinion of Attorney General to Mr. Gerald Hodnett, Personnel Director, Department of Correction, 57 N.C.A.G. 79 (1987).

§ 17C-11. Compliance; enforcement.

(a) Any criminal justice officer who the Commission determines does not comply with this Chapter or any rules adopted under this Chapter shall not exercise the powers of a criminal justice officer and shall not exercise the power of arrest unless the Commission waives that certification or deficiency. The Commission shall enforce this section by the entry of appropriate orders effective upon service on either the criminal justice agency or the criminal justice officer.

(b) Any person who desires to appeal the proposed denial, suspension, or revocation of any certification authorized to be issued by the Commission shall file a written appeal with the Commission not later than 30 days following notice of denial, suspension, or revocation.

(c) The Commission may appear in its own name and apply to courts having jurisdiction for injunctions to prevent violations of this Chapter or of rules issued pursuant thereto; specifically, the performance of criminal justice officer functions by officers or individuals who are not in compliance with the standards and requirements of G.S. 17C-6(a) and G.S. 17C-10. A single act of performance of a criminal justice officer function by an officer or individual who is performing such function in violation of this Chapter is sufficient, if shown, to invoke the injunctive relief of this section. (1979, c. 763, s. 1; 1989, c. 757, s. 7; 2001-490, s. 1.3.)

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-490, s. 1.3, effective June 30, 2001, rewrote the section catchline, which read: "Power of the Commission to seek injunction," added subsections (a) and (b), and inserted the subsection (c) designation.

§ 17C-12. Grants under the supervision of Commission and the State; donations and appropriations.

(a) The Commission may accept for any of its purposes and functions under this Chapter any and all donations, both real and personal, and grants of money from any governmental unit or public agency, or from any institution, person, firm or corporation, and may receive, utilize and dispose of the same. Any arrangements pursuant to this section shall be detailed in an annual report of the Commission. Such report shall include the identity of the donor, the nature of the transaction, and the conditions, if any. Any money received by the Commission pursuant to this section shall be deposited in the State Treasury to the account of the Commission.

(b) The Commission may authorize the reimbursement to each political subdivision of the State not exceeding sixty percent (60%) of the salary and of the allowable tuition, living and travel expenses incurred by the officers in attendance at approved training programs, providing said political subdivisions do in fact adhere to the selection and training standards established by the Commission.

(c) The Commission by rules and regulations, shall provide for administration of the grant program authorized by this section. In promulgating such rules, the Commission shall promote the most efficient and economical program of criminal justice training, including the maximum utilization of existing facilities and programs for the purpose of avoiding duplication.

(d) The Commission may provide grants as a reimbursement for actual expenses incurred by the State or political subdivision thereof for the provisions of training programs of officers from other jurisdictions within the State. (1971, c. 963, ss. 8, 9; 1979, c. 763, s. 1.)

§ 17C-13. Pardons.

When a person presents competent evidence that he has been granted an unconditional pardon for a crime in this State, any other state, or the United States, the Commission may not deny, suspend, or revoke that person's certification based solely on the commission of that crime or for an alleged lack of good moral character due to the commission of that crime. (1989, c. 757, s. 8.)

§ 17D-4. Application of State highway and motor vehicles laws at the academy; authority of Department of Justice to regulate traffic, etc.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, all of the provisions of Chapter 20 of the General Statutes relating to the use of highways of the State and the operation of vehicles thereon are applicable to all streets, alleys, driveways, and parking lots on academy property. Nothing in this section modifies any rights of ownership or control of academy property, now or hereafter vested in the State of North Carolina ex rel., Department of Justice.

(b) The Department of Justice may by ordinance prohibit, regulate, divert, control, and limit pedestrian or vehicular traffic and the parking of vehicles and other modes of conveyance on the campus. In fixing speed limits, the Department of Justice is not subject to G.S. 20-141(f) or (g), but may fix any speed limit reasonable and safe under the circumstances as conclusively determined by the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice may not regulate traffic on streets open to the public as of right, except as specifically provided in this section.

(c) The Department of Justice may by ordinance provide for the registration of vehicles maintained or operated on the campus by any student, faculty member, or employee of the academy and may fix fees for such registration. (d) The Department of Justice may by ordinance set aside parking lots on the campus for use by students, faculty, and employees of the academy and members of the general public attending schools, conferences, or meetings at the academy, visiting or making use of any academy facilities, or attending to official business with the academy. The Department of Justice may issue permits to park in these lots and may charge a fee therefor. The Department of Justice may also by ordinance make it unlawful for any person to park a vehicle in any lot or other parking facility without procuring the requisite permit and displaying it on the vehicle.

(e) The Department of Justice may by ordinance provide for the issuance of stickers, decals, permits or other indicia representing the registration of vehicles or the eligibility of vehicles to park on the campus and may by ordinance prohibit the forgery, counterfeiting, unauthorized transfer, or unauthorized use of such stickers, decals, permits or other indicia.

(3) If no academy parking permit has been issued for the vehicle and the vehicle is not registered with the academy, the person in whose name it is registered with the North Carolina Department of Motor Vehicles or the corresponding agency of another state or nation.

The rule of evidence established by this subsection applies only in civil, criminal, or administrative actions or proceedings concerning violations of ordinances of the Department of Justice. G.S. 20-162.1 does not apply to such actions or proceedings.

(j) The Department of Justice shall cause to be posted appropriate notice to the public of applicable traffic and parking restrictions.

(k) All ordinances adopted under this section shall be filed in the offices of the North Carolina Attorney General and the Secretary of State. The Department of Justice shall provide for printing and distributing copies of its traffic and parking ordinances.

Chapter 17E.

North Carolina Sheriffs' Education and Training Standards Commission.

§ 17E-1. Findings and policy.

The General Assembly finds and declares that the office of sheriff, the office of deputy sheriff and the other officers and employees of the sheriff of a county are unique among all of the law-enforcement offices of North Carolina. The administration of criminal justice has been declared by Chapter 17C of the General Statutes to be of statewide concern to the people of the State. The sheriff is the only officer of local government required by the Constitution. The sheriff, in addition to his criminal justice responsibilities, is the only officer who is also responsible for the courts of the State, and acting as their bailiff and marshall. The sheriff administers and executes criminal and civil justice and acts as the ex officio detention officer.

The deputy sheriff has been held by the Supreme Court of this State to hold an office of special trust and confidence, acting in the name of and with powers coterminous with his principal, the elected sheriff.

The offices of sheriff and deputy sheriff are therefore of special concern to the public health, safety, welfare and morals of the people of the State. The training and educational needs of such officers therefore require particularized and differential treatment from those of the criminal justice officers certified under Chapter 17C of the General Statutes. (1983, c. 558, s. 1; 1995, c. 103, s. 1.)

CASE NOTES

Termination for Political Reasons. — In North Carolina, deputy sheriffs may be lawfully terminated for political reasons; the office of deputy sheriff is that of policy maker, and the deputy sheriff is an alter ego of the sheriff generally. § 17E-2. Definitions.

Unless the context clearly requires otherwise, the following definitions apply to this Chapter:

(1) "Commission" means the North Carolina Sheriffs' Education and Training Standards Commission.

(2) "Office" or "department" means the sheriff of a county, his deputies, his employees and such equipment, space, provisions and quarters as are supplied for their use.

(3) "Justice officer" means:

a. A person who, through the special trust and confidence of the sheriff, has taken the oath of office prescribed by Chapter 11 of the General Statutes as a peace officer in the office of the sheriff. This term includes "deputy sheriffs", "reserve deputy sheriffs", and "special deputy sheriffs", but does not include clerical and support personnel not required to take an oath. The term "special deputy" means a person who, through appointment by the sheriff, becomes an unpaid criminal justice officer to perform a specific act directed by the sheriff; or

b. A person who, through the special trust and confidence of the sheriff, has been appointed as a detention officer by the sheriff; or

c. A person who is either the administrator or other custodial personnel of district confinement facilities as defined in G.S. 153A-219; however, nothing in this Chapter transfers any supervisory or administrative control over employees of district confinement facilities to the office of the sheriff; or

d. A person who, through the special trust and confidence of the sheriff, is under the direct supervision and control of the sheriff and serves as a telecommunicator, or who is presented to the Commission for appointment as a telecommunicator by an employing entity other than the sheriff for the purpose of obtaining certification from the Commission as a telecommunicator. (1983, c. 558, s. 1; c. 745, s. 1; 1991, c. 265, s. 1; 1995, c. 103, s. 2; 1997-443, s. 20.11(b).)

§ 17E-6. Justice Officers' Standards Division established; appointment of director; duties.

(a) There is hereby established, within the Department of Justice, the Justice Officers' Standards Division hereinafter called "the Division," which shall be organized and staffed in accordance with applicable laws and regulations and within the limits of authorized appropriations.

(b) The Attorney General shall appoint a director for the Division chosen from a list of nominees submitted to him by the Commission who shall be responsible to and serve at the pleasure of the Attorney General and the Commission.

(c) The Division shall administer such programs as are assigned to it by the Commission. Administrative duties and responsibilities shall include, but are not limited to, the following:

(1) Administering any and all programs assigned to the Division by the Commission and reporting any violations of or deviations from the rules and regulations of the Commission as the Commission may require;

The information may be divulged whether or not such information was contained in a personnel file maintained by a State or by a local government agency. (1983, c. 558, s. 1; 1995, c. 103, s. 6.)

§ 17E-7. Required standards.

(a) Justice officers, other than those set forth in subsection (c1) of this section, shall not be required to meet any requirements of subsections (b) and (c) of this section as a condition of continued employment, nor shall failure of a justice officer to fulfill such requirements make him ineligible for any promotional examination for which he is otherwise eligible if the officer held an appointment prior to July 1, 1983, and is a sworn law-enforcement officer with power of arrest. The legislature finds, and it is hereby declared to be the policy of this Chapter, that such officers have satisfied such requirements by their experience. It is the intent of the Chapter that all justice officers employed at the entry level after the Commission has adopted the required standards shall meet the requirements of this Chapter. All justice officers who are exempted from the required entry level standards by this subsection are subject to the requirements of subsections (b) and (c) of this section as well as the requirements of G.S. 17E-4(a) in order to retain certification.

(b) The Commission shall provide, by regulation, that no person may be appointed as a justice officer at entry level, except on a temporary or probationary basis, unless such person has satisfactorily completed an initial preparatory program of training at a school certified by the Commission or has been exempted from that requirement by the Commission pursuant to this Chapter. Upon separation of a justice officer from a sheriff's department within the temporary or probationary period of appointment, the probationary certification shall be terminated by the Commission. Upon the reappointment to the same department or appointment to another department of an officer who has separated from a department within the probationary period, the officer shall be charged with the amount of time served during his initial appointment and allowed the remainder of the probationary period to complete the basic training requirement. Upon the reappointment to the same department or appointment to another department of an officer who has separated from a department within the probationary period and who has remained out of service for more than one year from the date of separation, the officer shall be allowed another probationary period to complete such training as the Commission shall require by rule for an officer returning to service.

(c) In addition to the requirements of subsection (b) of this section, the Commission, by rules and regulations, may fix other qualifications for the employment and retention of justice officers including minimum age, education, physical and mental standards, citizenship, good moral character, experience, and such other matters as relate to the competence and reliability of persons to assume and discharge the responsibilities of the office, and the Commission shall prescribe the means for presenting evidence of fulfillment of these requirements.

Where minimum educational standards are not met, yet the individual shows potential and a willingness to achieve the standards by extra study, they may be waived by the Commission for the reasonable amount of time it will take to achieve the standards required. Upon petition from a sheriff, the Commission may grant a waiver of any provisions of this section (17E-7) for any justice officer serving that sheriff.

(c1) Any justice officer appointed as a telecommunicator at the entry level after March 1, 1998, shall meet all requirements of this Chapter. Any person employed in the capacity of a telecommunicator as defined by the Commission on or before March 1, 1998, shall not be required to meet any entry-level requirements as a condition of continued employment but shall be reported to the Commission for certification. All justice officers who are exempted from the required entry-level standards by this subsection are subject to the requirements of subsections (b) and (c) of this section as well as the requirements of G.S. 17E-4(a) in order to retain certification.

(d) The Commission may issue a certificate evidencing satisfaction of the requirements of subsections (b), (c), and (c1) of this section to any applicant who presents such evidence as may be required by its rules and regulations of satisfactory completion of a program or course of instruction in another jurisdiction. (1983, c. 558, s. 1; 1987, c. 783, s. 8; 1991, c. 265, s. 3; 1995, c. 103, s. 7; 1997-443, s. 20.11(c).)

§ 17E-8. Special requirements; authorizations.

(a) Nothing in this Chapter shall be construed as a condition precedent to the taking of the oath of office or the exercise of the powers, duties or privileges of the offices of sheriff or justice officer.

(b) Any sheriff or justice officer, who has taken the oath of office, or person who has received a special deputation for the purpose from the sheriff, acts validly, and his arrests, executions, levies and sales are valid, without regard to whether he has complied with this Chapter or the rules or regulations adopted under this Chapter, unless he has been ordered to cease and desist from such actions by the court, or pursuant to G.S. 17E-9. (1983, c. 558, s. 1; 1995, c. 103, s. 8.)

§ 17E-9. Compliance; enforcement.

(a) Any justice officer who the Commission determines does not comply with this Chapter or any rules adopted under this Chapter shall not exercise the powers of a justice officer and shall not exercise the power of arrest unless the Commission waives that certification or deficiency. The Commission shall enforce this section by the entry of appropriate orders effective upon service on either the department or the justice officer.

(b) Any person who desires to appeal the proposed denial, suspension, or revocation of any certification authorized to be issued by the Commission shall file a written appeal with the Commission not later than 30 days following notice of denial, suspension, or revocation.

(c) The Commission may appear in its own name and apply to courts having jurisdiction for injunctions to prevent violations of this Chapter or of rules issued pursuant thereto; specifically, the performance of justice officer functions by officers or individuals who are not in compliance with the standards and requirements of this Chapter or of rules issued pursuant thereto. A single act of performance of a justice officer function by an officer or individual who is performing such function in violation of this Chapter is sufficient, if shown, to invoke the injunctive relief of this section. (1983, c. 558, s. 1; 1995, c. 103, s. 9; 2001-490, s. 1.4.)

Effect of Amendments. — Session Laws 2001-490, s. 1.4, effective June 30, 2001, rewrote subsection (a), which formerly read: "Any justice officer who does not comply with the provisions of this Chapter shall not be authorized to exercise the powers of a justice officer and shall not be authorized to exercise the power of arrest unless such certification or deficiency has been waived by the Commission. The Commission shall enforce the provisions of this section by the entry of appropriate orders."

§ 17E-10. Donations to the Commission; grants and appropriations.

(a) The Commission may accept for any of its purposes and functions under this Chapter any and all donations, both real and personal, and grants of money from any governmental unit or public agency, or from any institution, person, firm or corporation, and may receive, utilize and dispose of same. Any arrangement pursuant to this section shall be detailed in a biennial report of the Commission to the General Assembly. Such report shall include the identity of the donor, the nature of the transaction, and the conditions, if any. Any money received by the Commission pursuant to this section shall be deposited in the State Treasury to the account of the Commission.

(b) The Commission may authorize grants pursuant to this section and consistent with the powers conferred upon the Commission under G.S. 17E-6.

(c) The Commission in providing for the administration of the grant program authorized by this section shall promote the most efficient and economical program of criminal justice education and training, including the maximum utilization of existing facilities and programs for the purpose of avoiding duplication.

(d) The Commission may provide grants as a reimbursement for actual expenses incurred by the State or any political subdivision thereof for the provision of training programs providing said political subdivisions and State law-enforcement agencies do adhere to the selection and training standards established by the Commission. (1983, c. 558, s. 1; 1991 (Reg. Sess., 1992), c. 1030, s. 9.)

§ 17E-11. Application and construction of Chapter.

(a) Nothing in this Chapter shall apply to the sheriff elected by the people.

(b) Nothing in this Chapter shall be construed as modifying the character of a sheriff from an elective office, or as modifying the character of the office of deputy sheriff from an appointive office.

(c) If a justice officer, or a criminal justice officer as defined in G.S. 17C-2(c), becomes sheriff, the justice officer is not required to maintain certification for the period served as sheriff. The Commission shall reinstate certification upon the conclusion of the period of service as sheriff and in conformance with the rules of the Commission for the application for certification. (1983, c. 558, s. 1; 1991, c. 265, s. 4.)

§ 17E-12. Pardons.

When a person presents competent evidence that the person has been granted an unconditional pardon of innocence for a crime in this State, any other state, or the United States, the Commission may not deny, suspend, or revoke that person's certification based solely on the commission of that crime or for alleged lack of good moral character due to the commission of that crime.
